I. Stravinsky and R. Craft: Conversations with Igor Stravinsky (New York and London, 1959), 47, 110–11
I. Stravinsky and R. Craft: Expositions and Developments (New York and London, 1962), 69ff, 75, 145, 148
B. Kochno: Diaghilev and the Ballets Russes (New York and Evanston,1970)
L. Garafola: Diaghilev's Ballets Russes (New York, 1989)

PAUL GRIFFITHS

Dial. American record company. Founded in 1946 by Ross Russell in Hollywood, it rapidly became one of the most important independent labels for bop; its first important musician was Charlie Parker, who took part in seven sessions for the company, which produced some of his best studio work. Other leading players were Dizzy Gillespie, Dexter Gordon and Erroll Garner. Dial also acquired valuable material by Art Tatum from Comet. In 1947 the company moved its premises to New York, where it enjoyed substantial and surprising success with Earl Coleman's Dark Shadows (1947) and records featuring Dexter Gordon and Wardell Gray, and Gordon and Teddy Edwards. The company also held a substantial catalogue of what it termed 'historical jazz' with recordings by Sidney Bechet, Earl Hines and Roy Eldridge. Dial was innovatory in releasing significant musical fragments (such as Charlie Parker's The Famous Alto Break, 1946) which would otherwise have been lost. In 1949, however, it ceased to record jazz, and concentrated instead on classical music. In 1955 Russell disposed of some of Dial's masters to the company Concert Hall and the catalogue was dispersed; parts of it were reissued on various labels until the mid-1960s. From 1968 to 1981, however, the material was re-released in coherent form on the Spotlite label. CD reissues appeared on Spotlite and Stash in the 1990s. Many of Russell's original masters are now in the University of Texas at Austin.

MARK GARDNER/BARRY KERNFELD

Dialogue (It. dialogo; Sp. diálogo; Ger. Dialog; Lat. dialogus). As applied to music, the term is used in two general senses: to denote the setting of a text involving conversational exchanges between two or more characters; and to describe a musical work (or part of a work) that uses devices such as alternation, echo or contrast in a way that seems analogous to spoken dialogue.

1. Introduction. 2. Early dialogues. 3. Secular: 16th century. 4. Secular: 17th century. 5. Sacred.

1. INTRODUCTION. In the second sense defined above 'dialogue' has been used as a title for certain instrumental works (particularly for organ) that exploit contrasts in tone colour. François Couperin's 'Dialogue sur les trompettes, clarion et tierce du g[rand] c[lavier] et le bourdon avec le larigot du positif' (Messe des paroisses, 1690), in which the 'dialogue' is between two organ manuals, is one example; another, in the sphere of orchestral music, is provided by Debussy's 'Dialogue du vent et de la mer' (the third movement of La mer, 1905). Since the Renaissance the term has also been loosely used as a designation for antiphonal vocal music, regardless of text form (e.g. Portinaro's setting of Petrarch's Dolci ire, dolci sdegni e dolci paci, 1557); in fact more than half of the dialogues in Gardano's anthology Dialoghi musicali (RISM 1590[11]) are echo or polychoral pieces rather than textual dialogues.

Used in its first sense, the term 'dialogue' is now most frequently encountered in connection with the dialogue of opera and other stage works. During the 16th and 17th centuries, however, with which this article is mainly concerned, the term was also used more specifically to denote the independent dialogue settings included in collections of madrigals, motets and cantatas; and it was for this type of setting that in the early 17th century G.B. Doni coined the phrase 'dialoghi fuor di scena'. This usage of the term can still be found in the 18th century, though by then it had largely been superseded by the more general designations CANTATA and ORATORIO.

2. EARLY DIALOGUES. The history of dialogue texts in musical setting can be traced to the late Middle Ages. Early examples include the dialogue tropes of the 10th and 11th centuries (e.g. Quem queritis and Hodie cantandus est; see MEDIEVAL DRAMA, §II and fig.1); the debates and competitions on amatory or political topics during the reunions of troubadour and trouvère guilds in 13th-century France (tenso, partimen, jeu parti); and some monophonic ballades in dialogue form such as the anonymous Douce dame debonnaire (HAM, i, 16), a humorous altercation between the suitor and his lady. The central problem of setting a textual dialogue in polyphony was to distinguish musically between the speakers. Although poems cast as dialogues are common in literary sources from Virgil's Eclogues onwards, few musical settings survive from before the advent of through composition in the 16th century, perhaps because the formes fixes of the Middle Ages and early Renaissance lacked sufficient elasticity to cope with the irregular word patterns and rapid shifts of speaker typical of most dialogues. Donato da Cascia's ballata Senti tu d'amor, donna? (ed. in PMFC, vii, 1971, p.62), for example, presents the words of both speakers simultaneously, following the form rather than the content of the text. A more realistic approach in which the suitor's lines are assigned to the upper voice and the lady's to the lower (an anomaly that may be an intentional caricature) is found in Niccolò da Perugia's ballata Donna, posso io sperare (ed. in PMFC, viii, 1972, p.128). Many later dialogues differentiated the conversational exchanges by contrasting high and low pairs of voices, as in Busnoys' Terrible dame, which also sets both parts of the conversation in first-inversion chords, or 'fauxbourdon', perhaps a punning (faux: 'false') commentary on the artificiality of courtly love.

3. SECULAR: 16TH CENTURY. A number of dialogue capitoli, barzellette, strambotti and sonnets survive among the works of the frottolists. In the capitolo, because only the upper voice was sung, the dialogue could be divided between the singers by an alternation scheme: the insertion of bar-lines marking off each change of speaker in the 1509 print of Tromboncino's Aqua, aqua, aiuto, al foco, and the addition of superscript letters above the singers' respective parts in a 1510 print of his Amor–che vuoi? suggest that two singers were intended. Another dialogue technique, used for barzellette, strambotti and sonnets, was to divide four fully texted voices into pairs representing now one, now the other speaker. Examples include Ruffino d'Assisi's Haymè amor (1521[6]), fra Pietro da Hostia's O Morte (1531[4]), and Bernardo Pisano's several settings of Lorenzo Strozzi's ballata dialogue Son io, donna (1520).

Verdelot appears to have been the first to write dialogues for five and six voices. His five-voice dialogues generally use varied textures to create an illusion of textual discourse (e.g. Pur troppo donn'in van tant'ho sperato and Quant'ahi lasso); but in the six-voice dialogues Quando nascesti Amore? (text by Sasso, ed. in Slim, 1972) and Chi bussa? (ed. in Harrán, 1968) the two upper voices are systematically contrasted with the lower four, producing a musical division that exactly follows that of the text. Willaert's seven-voice setting of Quando nascesti, Amor? (Musica nova, 1559), probably composed in the late 1530s, shows an expansion of Verdelot's dialogue methods in several ways. By adding a voice to Verdelot's two-versus-four scoring, Willaert could exploit contrasting ensembles of three high and four low voices to differentiate between the speakers of the dialogue. However, a rigid disposition of the voice groupings is never strictly maintained, as one of the voices from the lower choir is frequently added to the upper choir, producing a sham double-choir effect. If his portrayal of the speakers' gender by contrasting high and low voices was an orthodox imitation of nature, Willaert's innovatory use of varied textures, his immaculate word-setting and his perfectly controlled formal design set a standard that was truly new, a standard, furthermore, that was clearly discernible in the dialogues of his pupils Perissone Cambio, Baldassare Donato, Rore and Vicentino. Moreover, Willaert was the first to set for seven voices the three sonnet dialogues from Petrarch's Canzoniere (Liete e pensose, Che fai alma and Occhi piangete), thus establishing a musical as well as a textual precedent of far-reaching and lasting importance. In these dialogues the continual voice interchange between choirs is even more pronounced, to the extent that usually only the two highest voices of each group carry the complete words of the dialogue. This arrangement suggests that only two of the voices need be sung while the remainder could be played on instruments, a suggestion consistent with what is known of performing practice in Venetian academies, for whose use Musica nova is considered on firm evidence to have been composed.

In spite of an apparent similarity in style to sacred music for cori spezzati, early 16th-century dialogues for eight-part double choir can be shown to be a natural outgrowth in style and method of the seven-voice dialogue. In 1550 Cambio published several eight-voice dialogues in which one of the four-part choirs is often supported by a fifth voice drawn from the other choir; in the tutti sections only one of the bass parts actually supports the harmony, indicating that spatial separation of the choirs in performance was not intended (as it was in true cori spezzati music). Moreover, Vicentino distinguished between dialogues and other multiple-choir works, stating that because the dialogue was sung 'in a circle' (i.e. with the performers close together) it was permissible to use intervals between the bass parts that would be prohibited in double-choir style (L'antica musica ridotta alla moderna prattica, 1555, iv, chap.28, ff.85–6).

The subject matter of dialogues gradually changed from semi-obscene and humorous 'He–She' altercations (e.g. Verdelot's Chi bussa?, Janequin's Ouvrez moy l'huys, Encina's Pedro, y bien te quiero) to refined Petrarchistic texts as advocated by Bembo (e.g. the introspective sonnet dialogue between Cupid and the poet, Amor, se così dolce, set by Rore in 1557). The humanistic revival of texts and themes from classical antiquity is evident in Rore's eight-part setting in recitational style of Horace's ode Donec gratus eram tibi, also set by Portinaro in an Italian translation (Mentre m'havesti caro, 1554). Donato's seven-voice dialogue between shepherds and nymphs relating the rape of Proserpine, Ahi miserelle (1553), shows a fusion of pastoral and classical literary motifs. Infernal dialogues, usually depicting an encounter between Charon and the fiery soul of the rejected suitor, achieved lasting popularity. In particular, Serafino de' Ciminelli dall'Aquila's strambotto dialogue Crudo Caronte (and its variants, Caron, Caronte and Ferma, Caronte) enjoyed a remarkably widespread international vogue, first in Italy with settings by Portinaro (1560), Boyleau (1564), Alcarotto (1569), Sabino (1582) and Scaletta (1590), and later in France and England (see below). Similar in subject is Striggio's nine-voice dialogue O fer'aspro dolore (1584[4]), which exploits an exceptionally low tessitura suggestive of the depths of the underworld (sub-bass, bass, tenor and alto clefs). As the century progressed, the brooding melancholy of the Petrarchistic, introspective dialogue (in which the poet converses with his own eyes, heart or soul) gradually lost ground in favour of the joyfully extrovert but superficial pastorale like Gastoldi's 'baccanale' Tutti lieti honoriamo (1589) and Vecchi's 'boscareccia pastorale' Ecco rident'a noi (1590[11]), or scenes of imagined seduction in which the poet wreaks vicarious revenge on a formerly unobtainable lady, such as Alessandro Orologio's setting of Lucilla, io vo morire (1586).

As secular music on a grand scale the dialogue was eminently suited to court festivities requiring music that could convey, by reason of its volume of sound, its clear harmonic structure and its contrasting ensembles of voices, a sense of pomp and grandeur. The texts for these spectacles generally are emblematic dialogues between allegorical or mythological deities designed to flatter the princely patrons whose virtues they extol. Examples include Sperindio Bertoldo's eight-voice dialogue between the Muses, Chi è questo Alphonso, o muse (1562), written for Alfonso II d'Este's accession as Duke of Ferrara in 1559, Wert's brilliant virtuoso display piece for seven voices, In qual parte si ratto i vanni (1581) for Vincenzo Gonzaga's marriage to Margherita Farnese in 1581, and several dialogues by Vecchi for the 1587 nuptials of Marco Pio of Savoy and Clelia Farnese, one of which is a massive 'Battaglia d'Amor e Dispetto' for ten voices in four sections (Selva di varia ricreatione, 1590; ed. in RRMR, lxxii, 1987). Outside Italy H.L. Hassler set a pastoral dialogue for the wedding at Augsburg in 1589 of Christoph Fugger and Maria, Countess of Schwarzenburg, Donna de miei pensieri (ed. in DTB, xx, Jg.xi/1, 1910, no.30), in which the newly wedded couple are represented in the improbable guise of shepherds; and Schütz wrote an eight-voice dialogue, Vasto mar (1611), in praise of his patron, Moritz, Landgrave of Hesse. In Venice polychoral works in dialogue form were often commissioned for state occasions. Andrea Gabrieli's eight-voice

Felici d'Adria (1570), written for the visit to Venice in 1565 of Archduke Karl of Carinthia, his 12-voice Ecco Vineggia bella (1587[11]) and Vincenzo Bellavere's 12-voice Questo re glorioso (1584[4]), composed for Henri III of France's visit in 1574, exemplify the grand Venetian manner; this style culminated with Giovanni Gabrieli's Udite, chiari e generosi figli, a dialogue between tritons and sirens welcoming the 17th century, scored for 15 voices and basso seguente.

From the 1560s Florentine intermedi made increasing use of textual dialogue between onstage singers to extend the episodes and to lend a degree of continuity to the action, which was otherwise nearly static (see INTERMEDIO). Intermedio dialogues usually take the form of two or more separate compositions, performed successively as solo or ensemble pieces rather than in the rapid choral exchanges typical of the polychoral medium. An early example occurs in Striggio's music for the first intermedio performed with La cofanaria at Florence in 1565, which consisted of an eight-voice madrigal sung by Venus and her attendants, A me, che fatta son negletta e sola (1584[4]; ed. in Osthoff, 1969, ii, 122), answered by a five-voice madrigal performed by Cupid and his companions, Ecco, madre, andian noi. Structurally this dialogue is of the proposta–risposta type, containing only the barest elements of discourse, but it served as a prologue to the remaining five intermedi. An increasing trend towards multipartite episodes linked by dialogue is evident in later Florentine intermedi, most notably those performed with La vedova in 1569 and with L'amico fido in 1585, in which the alternation of stanzas between solo and chorus dominates the structure of each intermedio. The more traditional polychoral dialogue madrigal, with the possibility of separating the performers spatially (vertically or horizontally) on stage, was used occasionally to accommodate large groups of performers and to provide contrast and interplay enhanced by raising or lowering the performers with stage machinery. Notable examples include a 'bellissima canzone in modo di dialogo', Scendi, leggiadra schiera, performed by two vertically separated groups of deities who come together in a musical as well as a spatial sense to sing the final stanza in the sixth intermedio from La vedova, and Malvezzi's six-voice Dolcissime sirene, a triple-choir dialogue sung by the Fates and sirens during the first intermedio from La pellegrina, performed at Florence in 1589. Other entertainments in which dialogue madrigals were performed include several for eight voices: one by Ascanio Marri was performed at Siena before 1575 with the anonymous Cantata pastorale; Vecchi's eight-voice Ecco nuntio di gioia (1590) was pressed into service as the concluding item for the fourth intermedio performed with Illuminato Perazzoli's pastorale Filleno, given at Lugo (near Ferrara) in 1594 (with Gesualdo in the audience); and Vecchi's allegorical ten-voice 'Mascherata della Melanconia et Allegrezza' (Dialoghi, 1608; ed. in RRMR, lxxii, 1987) was performed by costumed singers and dancers in the streets of Modena in 1604.

In the second half of the 16th century an increasing interest in sonority for its own sake is apparent in the many dialogue madrigals composed for multiple choirs of contrasting ranges and asymmetrical voice groupings. The intent in these works was to furnish an essentially decorative setting of the text with little concern for its dramatic potential. This purely formal, constructive aspect of musical dialogue is epitomized in a number of Giovanni Gabrieli's dialogue madrigals, several of which, marked 'aria da sonar', take the form of the instrumental canzona francese. Of more seminal importance were settings of the newly fashionable erotic pastorale, mixing dialogue and narrative in the epigrammatic style popularized by Tasso, Guarini and Marino. By far the best known was Guarini's Tirsi morir volea, which received fine settings by Wert (1581) and Andrea Gabrieli (1587). Apart from distinguishing between the words of the nymph and Thyrsis in the usual double-choir manner, and setting the opening narrative in the rhythms of the anecdotal French chanson, Wert's largely homophonic setting assigns both the narrative and the role of Thyrsis to the lower choir. The problem of realistically distinguishing between narrative and dialogue was solved only in the early 17th century, when, with the addition of continuo to the polyphonic madrigal, it became possible to extract solo voices from the choir for the dialogue portions, leaving the narrative to be performed by the entire choir. Monteverdi's splendid seven-voice setting of Marino's Presso a un fiume tranquillo (1614), constructed in this manner, is only one of a number of pieces that mark at once the end of the polyphonic tradition and the first step towards the sectionalized, highly dramatic style of the cantata.

4. SECULAR: 17TH CENTURY. The adoption of the basso continuo as the basis of accompanied solo song provided 17th-century composers with the technical means to bring greater realism and expressive flexibility to their dialogue settings; and many of the volumes of monodies and concertato madrigals published in Italy during the first half of the century contain dialogues in which the roles are assigned to accompanied solo voices. In the main, these settings are for voices with continuo only. Some, however, such as Stefano Bernardi's Bellezze amant'oimè (1619) and Biagio Marini's Ninfa, non m'ami? (1649), include obbligato instrumental parts. The musical forms of early 17th-century settings parallel those of contemporary solo song. Most are through-composed madrigalian settings resembling short operatic scenes. Strophic dialogues are also found, however, such as Antonio Brunelli's Bella Licori, i tuoi dolori (1616) in which the two characters Drusilla and Licoris complain of the hardness of their lovers, singing two arias in alternation before joining in a final duet. A few settings, such as Nicolò Fontei's L'uccellatrice (Bizzarrie poetiche poste in musica, 1635), a dialogue between three wildfowlers, are cast in the form of strophic variations.

The earliest recitative-dialogues were published in Italy by D.M. Melli, who included two – Cara e vezzosa Filli (Thyrsis and Phyllis) and E quando cessarai? (Daphnis and Eurilla) – in his Le seconde musiche of 1602 (both represent amorous encounters between nymph and shepherd). Melli's settings, written in a style closer to Caccini's solo madrigals than to Peri's operatic recitative, comprise a series of alternating solos culminating in a short ensemble, a closed musical form characteristic of many early recitative-dialogues. His later setting of Marino's popular dialogue text Poich'a baciar n'invita (1609) exemplifies a different type, in which there is no ensemble writing. Such differences in musical approach were largely dictated by the form of the text, but occasionally a single text can be found set in both ways. Chiabrera's scherzo, Chi nudrisce tua speme, cor mio? (also incorporated into his libretto Polifemo geloso, 1615), for example, was set by Piero Benedetti (1611) as a series of alternating solos, but both Marco da Gagliano (1615) and D'India (1615) set the conclusion of the text as a duet. On a larger scale, Giovanni Valentini published in 1622 a setting of Act 2 scene vi, lines 1–136, of Guarini's Il pastor fido, in which he set lines 133–6 for six-part chorus, providing also an alternative two-part setting. Tarquinio Merula's rival setting of lines 1–169 (Satiro e Corisca, dialogo musicale, 1626), however, contains no ensembles.

During the first two decades of the 17th century, recitative-dialogues were published mainly by composers – among them Barbarino, Ghizzolo and Alessandro Grandi (i) – who worked outside Florence. The first volume devoted entirely to dialogues was, however, published by a Tuscan composer, Francesco Rasi, who issued his Dialoghi rappresentativi in 1620. The volume comprises four extended settings, all to texts by the composer himself and each involving three pastoral characters. For Rasi the 'representative style' did not simply mean declamatory recitative. His settings are varied by the introduction of duets (in dialogues nos.2 and 4) and passages of melodious arioso writing. Indeed, in the first and third dialogues he linked the opening speeches by arioso refrains. Each setting concludes with a strophic ensemble, that of the first dialogue being marked 'aria alla francese'.

The 1620s may be regarded as a watershed in the stylistic development of Italian dialogue settings, for while dialogues in a mainly declamatory style continued to appear (e.g. the two large-scale settings of texts from Virgil's Aeneid in Domenico Mazzocchi's Dialoghi, e sonetti, 1638), many of the settings written during the mid-17th century include extended passages of arioso writing. This stylistic development can be traced in the work of composers such as Luigi Rossi, Carissimi, Caproli and Cesti, whose dialogues are found in manuscript sources, but it is also evident in the through-composed dialogues published from 1629 by composers working at or near Venice. These Venetian dialogues are of particular interest since their composers – Rovetta, Sances, Fontei, Benedetto Ferrari and Filiberto Laurenzi – were among those who also contributed to the literature of early Venetian opera. For the most part these composers introduced arioso passages either for purposes of word-painting or as a response to more introspective passages in the text; and they drew for the style of their arioso writing on the new triple-time arias popularized at Venice by Grandi and Berti. In his dialogues Oh Dio, Tirsi and Lilla, se amor non fugga (both 1639) Fontei also used arioso passages to build rondo structures; and in the latter he also incorporated two independent canzonettas in duple time. Rovetta's large-scale pastoral dialogue La gelosia placata (1629), to a text by Giulio Strozzi depicting a lovers' quarrel, provides perhaps the most fascinating stylistic study of this group of settings. In addition to triple-time arioso, Rovetta drew on the 'walking-bass' idiom of the strophic-bass cantata; and his lively and varied recitative includes several passages in the genere concitato.

The problem of narration in dialogues received a variety of solutions in the 17th century. Like Monteverdi in the dialogues A Dio, Florida bella and Presso a un fiume tranquillo of his sixth book of madrigals (1614), Rovetta combined recitative dialogue with the traditions of the polyphonic madrigal, using a three-voice chorus for the narration at the opening and conclusion of La gelosia placata. Fontei, on the other hand, set the opening narration of his Dicea Clori a Fileno (1636) as a duet for the two singers who then take the roles of Chloris and Filenus. The latter solution was favoured by Carissimi, who used it in his most famous dialogue, I filosofi (written before 1650; ed. in L. Landshoff, Alte Meister des Bel Canto, i–ii, 1912), in which the contrast between laughter and weeping in a debate between the philosophers Democritus and Heraclitus is depicted by major and minor modes. Yet another solution was to use a third singer as narrator, as in Sances's setting of Tirsi morir volea (1633), where the narrator is given the name Festaurus. Use of a solo narrator was the usual approach adopted for settings of texts from epic verse. Mazzocchi called the narrator of his dialogue Poi chè il crudo Alandin (1638, from La Gerusalemme liberata) 'Tasso', thus acknowledging the author of the text. Monteverdi, however, in Il combattimento di Tancredi e Clorinda (1624) and Sances in his dialogue between Angelica and Ruggiero, Già dell'horrido mostro (1649), chose the more neutral designation testo from the contemporary usage in sacred dialogues. This designation is also found in other secular dialogues, for example in Marazzoli's Nel più fiorito April (in I-Rvat Q.VIII.179), for Lascivia, Virtù, Ercole and testo.

Most dialogue texts set during the early and mid-17th century were pastoral love-lyrics; but they also embraced subjects as diverse as reflective debates between a man and his soul (e.g. G.P. Bucchianti's Alma, che fai? Gioisco), commedia scenes (e.g. the settings of Il carro di Madama Lucia, 1628, and La Luciata, 1636, by G.B. Fasolo and Francesco Manelli respectively) and topical matters – for example, Rossi's Rugge quasi leon (I-Bc Q50), for Mustafà, Baiazet and testo, appears to deal with the murder in 1635 of Orchan and Baiazet, the brothers of Amurath IV of Turkey. Mythological characters also feature in a few settings: the infernal boatman Charon appears in Barbarino's Ferma, ferma, Caronte (1611); Grandi's O dolcissima morte (1615) is an amorous dialogue between Venus and Adonis with a shepherd as onlooker and commentator; Merula's La Tognada (1642) is a parody of the judgment of Paris.

The dialogues of Carissimi and Stradella seem to be among the last settings of Italian texts to be designated 'dialogo' in musical sources, for by the late 17th century the term had largely been displaced by the all-embracing designation 'cantata'. Nevertheless, a continuing tradition of Italian dialogue settings can be traced during the late 17th and early 18th centuries in the work of composers such as Perti and Alessandro Scarlatti, and it includes Handel's pastoral and mythological dialogue-cantatas, of which La terra è liberata (Apollo and Daphne) is perhaps the finest example.

In France and England, the dialogue was an important vehicle of stylistic change during the early 17th century. Guédron's polyphonic setting of Berger, que pensez vous faire? (1617), for example, contains the earliest evidence of continuo writing in France, while in their airs de cour composers such as Antoine Boësset and François Richard (probably the elder) adopted a quasi-operatic manner for dialogue settings. Richard's Cloris, attends un peu (1637), for example, is a short series of exchanges culminating in a duet. In England, similar examples can be found in the Ayres (1609) of Alfonso Ferrabosco (ii) (ed. in EL, xvi, 1927, nos.26–8). Although the accompaniment is in tablature and not yet a genuine continuo, the declamatory nature of the vocal line and the irregular alternation of the voices give the effect of recitative.

The later development of dialogue settings in France can be traced in the work of composers such as Michel de La Barre, Michel Lambert and Charpentier (e.g. Orphée descendant aux enfers) and in the collections of airs sérieux and cantatas that survive from the late 17th and early 18th centuries. Montéclair's Adieu de Tircis à Climène (1695[3]) already shows the clear division between recitative and air typical of the dialogue-cantata, while his Pyrame et Thisbé, published in his second book of cantatas (before 1728), is one of the most extended early 18th-century French dialogues. It is scored for soprano, countertenor, baritone (the 'historien', or narrator), violin and continuo and comprises four airs, two ariettes, ten recitatives and three duets. Among other subjects treated by French composers, the contrast of temperaments in Héraclite et Démocrite (1711) by the Italian-born composer J.-B. Stuck is worthy of note for its affinities with Carissimi's I filosofi. A similar subject, but with pastoral characters, was treated by Rameau in his cantata Les amants trahis (1721).

In England, composers such as Nicholas Lanier (ii), John Jenkins and Henry Lawes (see MB, xxxiii, 1971, nos.11, 19, 60) established a tradition of dialogue composition in the new recitative style which flourished until the death of Purcell. For the most part they chose texts that explore the conventional amorous exchanges between nymph and shepherd, but their settings lack the expressive flexibility of Italian recitative. The tradition of English pastoral dialogues, however, also includes such fine examples as Locke's setting of Marvell's When death shall part us (1679[7]). Two composers who worked outside court circles in the early 17th century, Robert Ramsey and John Hilton (ii), chose a more ambitious range of subjects. Ramsey's Howl not, you ghosts (ed. in MB, xxxiii, no.15), for example, depicts Orpheus's plea to Pluto and Proserpine for the release of Eurydice; Hilton's Rise, princely shepherd treats the judgment of Paris.

A popular subject in 17th-century England was the dialogue in which Charon (invariably a bass) is asked to ferry a soul across the Styx (see Chan, 1979). Examples include William Lawes's Charon, O Charon, hear a wretch oppressed (ed. in MB, xxxiii, no.86); Hilton's Charon, come hither, Charon (GB-Ob Don.c.57), a dialogue between Charon and Hobson, the Cambridge carrier who died in 1631; and Purcell's Haste, gentle Charon (ed. in Works, xxii), in which the soul is characterized as Orpheus. Purcell's output of independent dialogues includes some six other settings (all ed. in Works, xxii), all scored for soprano and bass. They range in style from the declamatory, as in Hence, fond deceiver (Despair and Love) and While you for me alone had charms (a dialogue between the poet and Lydia, based on the ninth ode of Horace), to the purely tuneful, as in Sit down, my dear Sylvia (Alexis and Sylvia). Purcell also wrote a number of dialogues intended as incidental music for plays, for example 'Behold the man' (ed. in Works, xxi) for Act 2 of The Richmond Heiress.

In Germany, a number of dialogues were printed in 17th-century song publications such as Heinrich Albert's Arien (1638; see GMB, no.193b). These are often simple strophic settings in which two singers perform alternate stanzas. Adam Krieger's posthumous Neue Arien (1667, enlarged 2/1676) includes a number of pastoral dialogues with interspersed ritornellos (ed. in DDT, xix, 1905, pp.35, 45, 89, 105).

Although the mainstream of Baroque dialogues involved dramatized settings for two or more voices, several examples survive from the 17th century of dialogue texts set for a solo voice with continuo. Two such are Giacomo Fornaci's Tirsi morir volea (1617) and Barbara Strozzi's Timore, e che sarà godremo? (1651), the latter actually being called 'dialogo a voce sola'. The tradition of setting dialogue texts for a solo singer can be traced down to the present day and includes such works as Schubert's Erlkönig, Brahms's Vergebliches Ständchen and, in the sphere of sacred music, Stravinsky's Abraham and Isaac.

5. Sacred. Dialogue texts drawn from biblical sources or representing dramatized spiritual discourses were also set to music during the 16th, 17th and 18th centuries, using techniques similar to those of secular dialogues. Indeed, a few sacred dialogues are contrafacta of secular models: for instance Stefano Bernardi's O quam suavis (1621) is modelled on his own dialogue Bellezze amant'oimè (1619). In Italy, the settings of both Latin and vernacular texts included in collections of motets, laude spirituali and spiritual madrigals played an important part in the early history of the oratorio as a musical form not only in Rome but also in Florence (see Hill, 1979). Among the comparatively few intended for performance at oratories are the dialogues in Animuccia's first and second books of laude (1563 and 1570), in the five collections of laude all apparently edited by Francisco Soto de Langa (1577 to 1598) and in the Tempio armonico of Giovenale Ancina (1599[6] and 1600[5]). (The text of Anima mia, che pensi? in Soto's first collection was later incorporated into Act 1 scene iv of the libretto of Cavalieri's Rappresentatione di Anima, et di Corpo, 1600.) The dramatic and narrative-dramatic laude in these early volumes are simple strophic settings in three or four parts in which no attempt is made to differentiate musically between the characters of the dialogue. During the 17th century, however, vernacular settings using the new monodic styles were issued in volumes of spiritual madrigals intended for private devotions and in publications, such as G.F. Anerio's Teatro armonico spirituale (1619), intended for use in oratories. Anerio's imposing volume (examples ed. in Smither, 1985) includes dialogues that treat the stories of Adam and Eve, the prodigal son and the conversion of St Paul. This last is an extended setting calling for four soloists (including a testo) as well as an eight-part chorus and instrumentalists.

The Latin recitative-dialogues included in early 17th-century collections of motets and other liturgical music represent a different, though not wholly independent, line of development, leading to Carissimi's oratorios. The earliest setting of this kind was published in 1600, when Gabriele Fattorini included a dialogue for two voices, Dic nobis Maria, depicting the discovery of the empty tomb (John, xx.1–18) in his Sacri concerti a due voci (ed. in Smither, 1985). Later examples include Viadana's three-voice Fili, quid fecisti?, depicting the finding of Jesus in the temple (Luke ii.48–9) in his Cento concerti ecclesiastici (1602; ed. in Smither, 1985) and G.F. Capello's Abraham (1615; ed. in GMB, no.180), one of four dialogues in Capello's book to include sinfonias, ritornellos and instrumental accompaniment to the solo voices. In this latter dialogue, the solo sections for Abraham (bass), an angel (tenor) and Isaac (soprano) are rounded off by a chorus, a device commonly used in dramatic and narrative-dramatic Latin dialogues. Like Viadana's dialogue, Capello's is based on a biblical text (Genesis xxii.1–13); in common with most early 17th-century Latin dialogues, neither has a narrator.

There is no evidence to suggest that Latin dialogues of the early 17th century were intended specifically for performance at oratories; indeed, it has been argued that some traditions of dialogue performance remained independent of the oratorian movement (see Kendrick, 1992). Although Latin dialogues present biblical and reflective texts in a dramatized form, they are essentially the descendants of Renaissance motets treating similar subjects; some, indeed, are settings of texts that had long been used for motets. In 1609, for example, Severo Bonini published a setting for two soloists and five-part chorus of Missus est Gabriel angelus (Il primo libro de motetti a 3 voci), a paraphrase of the Annunciation scene (Luke i.26–38). In its original form this text (which includes narrative) and dialogue between Mary and the Angel Gabriel, had been set twice by Josquin (ed. in Werke: Motetten, i, 82, and ii, 89), with no particular attempt to depict the dialogue, and as a six-part motet by Lassus (Sämtliche Werke, vii, 16). Lassus's setting, while not attempting character differentiation, separates passages of narrative from direct speech by clear cadences. Like the motets from which they were descended, most early 17th-century Latin dialogues probably had a semi-liturgical function in church services, though Lorenzo Ratti's four dialogues published in Sacrae modulationes (1628) are known to have served a specific function, as offertory substitutes, and two dialogues published by Milanuzzi in his Hortus sacer deliciarum (1636) are entitled 'Introductio ad Vesperas' for the feasts of S Stefano and S Carlo respectively.

Latin dialogues were the forerunners in form, though not in function, of Carissimi's Latin oratorios; and Carissimi's Jephte was itself described as a dialogue by Kircher (1650). Carissimi in turn influenced the development of the sacred dialogue in the second half of the 17th century, not only in Italy but also in France, Germany and, possibly, Denmark through the work of Kaspar Förster. Among the works of his pupil M.A. Charpentier are six dialogues for two characters, represented either by groups of voices or, as in the case of the Dialogus inter Magdalenam et Jesum (ed. in HAM, ii, no.226), by soloists. The expressive, yet rather stiff recitative of this setting is reminiscent of Carissimi's style.

In Germany, sacred dialogues were an important element in the development of the church cantata before Bach, and they served a similar liturgical function. There are numerous sacred dialogues by Schütz, Schein and Scheidt, including a setting by Scheidt of Kommt her, ihr Gesegneten (1634; ed. in Werke, ix, 20), a dialogue between Christ (bass), the Elect (soprano and bass) and the Damned (tenor and bass), in which the composer adopted a falsobordone style of declamation in his recitative writing. Bach used the term dialogus for several of his cantatas (e.g. BWV49, 57, 58, 60) and used dialogue techniques in many more. The tradition of sacred dialogue settings in German-speaking countries can be traced in the mid-17th century through works such as Hammerschmidt's Dialogi, oder Gespräche zwischen Gott und einer gläubigen Seelen, i (1645), J.R. Ahle's Geistlicher Dialogen, i (1648) and Bernhard's Geistliche Harmonien, i (1665). Most of Hammerschmidt's settings are reflective rather than dramatic in their presentation (see DTÖ, xvi, Jg.viii/1, 1901/R, and HAM, ii, no.213). Among the dialogues in Ahle's collection (DDT, v, 1901/R) is one (no.3) between Christ (bass) and Doubting Thomas (tenor), showing, as yet, no division of the music into the clearcut sections found in later works such as Bernhard's Easter dialogue between the Virgin Mary (soprano) and Christ (bass) (see EDM, 1st ser., lxv, 1972, no.15) or Matthias Weckmann's Annunciation dialogue Gegrüsset seyst du, holdselige (DDT, vi, 1901/R, no.5).

Some sacred dialogues from the first half of the 17th century by English composers survive in manuscript, among them The Judgment of Solomon by John Hilton (ii) and Saul and the Witch of Endor by Robert Ramsey (see EECM, vii, 1967, no.10). The popularity of the latter work in the 17th century may reflect its association with anti-Catholic sentiment. The same text ('In guilty night') was later set by Purcell; his work was published by Henry Playford in Harmonia sacra, ii (1693). Following a narrative three-voice 'chorus' to introduce the work, Saul (alto), the Witch (soprano) and the Ghost of Samuel (bass) vividly enact the biblical scene, singing in recitative throughout. There is also a moving envoi, in which, in contrast to the opening of the work, the three singers sustain their dramatic roles.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

AmbrosGM; AnthonyFB; EinsteinIM; KermanEM; PirrottaDO; PraetoriusSM, ii; ScheringGO; SchmitzG; SmitherHO, iii

G.B. Doni: Compendio del trattato de' generi e de' modi della musica (Rome, 1635); extract in A. Solerti: Le origini del melodramma (Turin, 1903/R), 224

A. Kircher: Musurgia universalis (Rome, 1650/R), i, 603, 673–4

D. Alaleona: Studi su la storia dell'oratorio musicale in Italia (Turin, 1908, 2/1945 as Storia dell'oratorio musicale in Italia)

T. Kroyer: 'Dialog und Echo in der alten Chormusik', JbMP 1909, 13–32

F. Blume: Das monodische Prinzip in der protestantischen Kirchenmusik (Leipzig, 1925/R)

H.J. Moser: Die mehrstimmige Vertonung des Evangeliums, i (Leipzig, 1931/R)

A. Adrio: Die Anfänge des geistlichen Konzerts (Berlin, 1935)

F. Torrefranca: Il segreto del Quattrocento (Milan, 1939)

H.-O. Hudemann: Die protestantische Dialogkomposition im 17. Jahrhundert (Freiburg, 1941)

A. Einstein: 'Andrea Antico's "Canzoni nove" of 1510', MQ, xxxvii (1951), 330–39

H.W. Hitchcock: 'The Latin Oratorios of Marc-Antoine Charpentier', MQ, xli (1955), 41–65

I. Spink: 'English Seventeenth-Century Dialogues', ML, xxxviii (1957), 155–63

C. Gallico: 'Un "Dialogo d'Amore" di Niccolò da Correggio musicato da Bartolomeo Tromboncino', SMw, xxv (1962), 205–13

H. Osthoff: 'Domenico Mazzocchis Vergil-Kompositionen', Festschrift Karl Gustav Fellerer zum sechzigsten Geburtstag, ed. H. Hüschen (Regensburg, 1962), 407–16

C. Gallico: 'Musicalità di Domenico Mazzocchi: "Olindo e Sofronia" dal Tasso', Chigiana, xxii (1965), 59–74

B. Smallman: 'Endor Revisited: English Biblical Dialogues of the Seventeenth Century', ML, xlvi (1965), 137–45

H.E. Smither: 'The Latin Dramatic Dialogue and the Nascent Oratorio', JAMS, xx (1967), 403–33 [see also JAMS, xxi (1968), 411–12]

A. Ziino: 'Pietro della Valle e la "musica erudita": nuovi documenti', AnMc, no.4 (1967), 97–111

D. Harrán: 'Chi bussa? Or the Case of the Anti-Madrigal', JAMS, xxi (1968), 85–93

H.E. Smither: 'Romano Micheli's "Dialogus Annuntiationis" (1625): a Twenty-Voice Canon with Thirty "Obblighi"', AnMc, no.5 (1968), 34–91
W. Osthoff: Theatergesang und darstellende Musik in der italienischen Renaissance (15. und 16. Jahrhundert) (Tutzing, 1969)
H.E. Smither: 'Narrative and Dramatic Elements in the Laude Filippine, 1563–1600', AcM, xli (1969), 186–99
W. Witzenmann: 'Autographe Marco Marazzolis in der Biblioteca Vaticana', AnMc, no.7 (1969), 36–86; no.9 (1970), 203–94
R. Chauvin: 'Six Gospel Dialogues for the Offertory by Lorenzo Ratti', AnMc, no.9 (1970), 64–77
D. Harrán: 'Towards a Definition of the Early Secular Dialogue', ML, li (1970), 37–50
J.C. Kliewer: The German Sacred Dialogues of the Seventeenth Century (diss., U. of Southern California, 1970)
W. Witzenmann: 'Domenico Mazzocchi, 1592–1665: Dokumente und Interpretationen', AnMc, no.8 (1970), 97–113, 142–156
W.C. Hobbs: Giovanni Francesco Anerio's 'Teatro armonico spirituale di madrigali': a Contribution to the Early History of the Oratorio (diss., Tulane U., 1971)
W. Blankenburg: 'Die Dialogkompositionen von Heinrich Schütz', Musik und Kirche, xlii (1972), 121–30
J. Höfler: 'Nekaj zgodnejših primerov italijanskega "dialoga": prispevek k vprašanju renesančnega večborja' [Some early examples of the Italian dialogo: a contribution to the study of Renaissance polychoral composition], MZ, viii (1972), 40–56 [with Eng. summary]
H.C. Slim: A Gift of Madrigals and Motets (Chicago, 1972)
H. Heier: 'Zur Chronologie der Musica Nova Adrian Willaerts', AnMc, no.12 (1973), 71–96
D. Tunley: The Eighteenth-Century French Cantata (London, 1974, 2/1997)
J. Forbes: The Nonliturgical Vocal Music of Johannes Hieronymous Kapsberger (1580–1651) (diss., U. of North Carolina, 1977)
J. Kurtzman: 'Giovanni Francesco Capello, an Avant-Gardist of the Early Seventeenth Century', MD, xxxi (1977), 155–82
K.D. Nienhuis: The Use of Dialogue in Early French Organ Music (diss., U. of Cincinnati, 1977)
D.A. Nutter: The Italian Polyphonic Dialogue of the Sixteenth Century (diss., U. of Nottingham, 1978)
M.E. Chan: 'Drolls, Drolleries and Mid-Seventeenth-Century Dramatic Music in England', RMARC, no.15 (1979), 117–73
J.W. Hill: 'Oratory Music in Florence', AcM, li (1979), 108–36, 246–67
J.C.B. Fogle: Seventeenth-Century English Vocal Music as Reflected in British Library Additional Manuscript 11608 (diss., U. of North Carolina, 1979)
D. Stevens: 'Claudio Monteverdi: Dramatic Madrigals and Dialogues', MR, xiv (1979), 1–13
D. Stevens: 'Renaissance Dialogue Techniques', Essays on Music for Charles Warren Fox, ed. J.C. Graue (Rochester, NY, 1979), 212–29
M. Chan: 'The Witch of Endor and Seventeenth-Century Propaganda', MD, xxxiv (1980), 205–14
J. Whenham: Duet and Dialogue in the Age of Monteverdi (Ann Arbor, 1982)
G. Dixon: 'Oratorio o motetto? alcune riflessioni sulla classificazione della musica sacra del Seicento', NRMI, xvii (1983), 203–22
L. and R. Steiger: 'Die theologische Bedeutung der Doppelchörigkeit in Johann Sebastian Bachs Matthäus-Passion', Bacchanalia et alia musicologica: Festschrift Alfred Dürr zum 65. Geburtstag, ed. W. Rehm (Kassel, 1983), 276–85
L. Callegari Hill: 'L'infortunio di Angelica nei "Capricci poetici" di Giovanni Felice Sances (1649)', Quadrivium, xxv/1 (1984), 139–55
J. Roche: North Italian Church Music in the Age of Monteverdi (Oxford, 1984)
K. Andrae: Ein römischer Kapellmeister im 17. Jahrhundert: Antonio Maria Abbatini (ca. 1600–1679): Studien zu Leben und Werk (diss., U. of Hamburg, 1985)
E. Ferrari Barassi: 'I "varij stromenti" della Luciata', La musica a Napoli durante il Seicento: Naples 1985, 325–44
G. Schuhmacher: 'Die mitteldeutsche Tradition des Dialogus und der Dialog der italienischen Oper', Dresdner Operntraditionen: Dresden 1985, 43–50
H.E. Smither: Introduction to Oratorios of the Italian Baroque, i: Antecedents of the Oratorio: Sacred Dramatic Dialogues, 1600–1630 (Laaber, 1985)
R.E. Englehart: Domenico Mazzocchi's 'Dialoghi e sonetti' and 'Madrigali a cinque voci' 1638: a Modern Edition with Bibliographical Commentary and New Archival Documents (diss., Kent State U., 1987)
T.R. Gaylard: Musical Dialogues in Seventeenth-Century England (diss., Columbia U., 1987)
B. Przybyszewska-Jarmińska: 'Tipi, forma e funzioni dei dialoghi latini di Kacper Förster junior', Tradizione e stile: Como 1987, 209–19
M.A. Balsano: 'Sofronia e Olindo: Tasso, Mazzocchi e Fiamengo', Tasso: la musica, i musicisti, ed. M.A. Balsano and T. Walker (Florence, 1988), 91–119
L.P. Grijp: 'Van spijlen en sporten: imitatie en emulatie in het 17e-eeuwse dialooglied', Harmonie en perspectief: voor Eduard Reeser, ed. A. Annegarn, L.P. Grijp and P. Op de Coul (Deventer, 1988), 163–79
B. Przybyszewska-Jarmińska: 'Ewangeliczna przypowieść o bogaczu i Łazarzu w dialogu Vanitas vanitatum Kacpra Förstera juniora' [Evangelical allegories on wealth and Lazarus in the Vanitas vanitatum dialogue of Kaspar Förster junior], Muzyka w Gdańsku wczoraj i dziś, ed. J. Krassowski (Gdańsk, 1988), 127–48
F.W. Riedel: 'Joseph Haydns Applausus und die Tradition des musikalischen Schultheaters in Österreich', Joseph Haydn und die Oper seiner Zeit: Eisenstadt 1988, 88–106
F. Luisi: '"Il Carro di Madama Lucia et una serenata in lingua lombarda": Note sull'attribuzione definitiva a Giovanni Battista Fasolo', Seicento inesplorato: Lenno, nr Como 1989, 483–91
I. Spink: Introduction to J. Playford: Choice Ayres, Songs and Dialogues, I, II (London, 1989)
F. Noske: 'Sacred Music as Miniature Drama: Two Dialogues by Carlo Donato Cossoni (1623–1700)', Festschrift Rudolf Bockholdt zum 60. Geburtstag, ed. N. Dubowy and S. Meyer-Eller (Pfaffenhofen, 1990), 161–82
G. Pittaresi: 'Rappresentazioni e dialoghi spirituali in Calabria nel secolo XVII', RIMS, xi (1990), 253–64
A. Morelli: "Il tempio armonico": musica nell'Oratorio dei Filippini in Roma 1575–1705, AnMc, no.27 (1991)
H. Benecke: 'Mutter–Tochter-Dialoge', Brahms als Liedkomponist: Studien zum Verhältnis von Text und Vertonung, ed. P. Jost (Stuttgart, 1992), 137–55
R.L. Kendrick: 'The Traditions of Milanese Convent Music and the Sacred Dialogues of Chiara Margarita Cozzolani', The Crannied Wall: Women, Religion, and the Arts in Early Modern Europe, ed. C. Monson (Ann Arbor, 1992), 211–33
B. Przybyszewska-Jarmińska: 'Tekst i muzyka w dialogach bibliojnych Kaspra Föstera jun.', Muzyka, xxxvii (1992), 75–80
F. Noske: Saints and Sinners: the Latin Musical Dialogue in the Seventeenth Century (Oxford, 1992)
J. Steinheuer: 'Zur musikdramatischen Umsetzung epischer Texte bei Monteverdi und seinen italienischen Zeitgenossen', Claudio Monteverdi und die Folgen: Detmold 1993, 191–213
M. Märker: Die protestantische Dialogkomposition in Deutschland zwischen Heinrich Schütz und Johann Sebastian Bach: eine stilkritische Studie (Cologne, 1995)
J.W. Hill: Roman Monody, Cantata, and Opera from the Circles around Cardinal Montalto (Oxford, 1997)

DAVID NUTTER, JOHN WHENHAM (1), DAVID NUTTER (2–3), JOHN WHENHAM (4–5)

Diamond (Cavanagh), Beverley (Anne) (b Kitchener, ON, 4 June 1948). Canadian ethnomusicologist. She studied the piano in Toronto and took the doctorate in ethnomusicology with Kolinski at the University of Toronto in 1979. She also studied Canadian music with John Beckwith. The emphasis on comparative stylistic and structural analysis in her early work on Inuit music in the Northwest Territories (Gjoa Haven, Spence Bay, and Pelly Bay), shows the influence of both historical musicology and her work with Kolinski. In the 1980s she conducted her fieldwork in the north-eastern Algonquin area, studying the Naskapi in northern Labrador and the Montagnais in northern Quebec. Since the 1980s she has focussed on issues of acculturation in relation to native hymn-singing traditions, ritual, and popular music, in addition to gender concerns. She was the driving force behind the project 'Sound-Producing Instruments in Native Communities', conducted in collaboration with M. Sam Cronk and Franziska von Rosen, which resulted in the book Visions of Sound (1995). Her interest in historiography and Canadian music led her to co-edit the collection of essays, Canadian Music: Issues of Hegemony and Identity (1994). Her writings, as well as her current research on regional models in Canadian music, display a capacity to integrate theory, fieldwork, and personal insight into local cultures.

WRITINGS

'Annotated Bibliography: Eskimo Music', EthM, xvi (1972), 487–97

Music of the Netsilik Eskimo: a Study of Stability and Change (diss., U. of Toronto, 1979; Ottawa, 1982)

'Les myths et la musique naskapis', Recherches amérindiennes au Québec, xv/4 (1985), 5–18

'Christian Hymns in Eastern Woodland Communities: Performance Contexts', Musical Repercussions of 1492: Washington DC 1988, 381–94

'The Transmission of Algonkian Indian Hymns: Between Orality and Literacy', Musical Canada: Words and Music Honouring Helmut Kallmann, ed. J. Beckwith and F.A. Hall (Toronto, 1988), 3–28

'Music and Gender in the Sub-Arctic Algonkian Area', Women in North American Indian Music: Six Essays, ed. R. Keeling (Bloomington, IN, 1989), 55–66

ed., with R. Witmer: Canadian Music: Issues of Hegemony and Identity (Toronto, 1994)

'Narratives in Canadian Music History', Taking a Stand: Essays in Honour of John Beckwith, ed. T.J. McGee (Toronto, 1995), 273–305

With M. Sam Cronk and F. von Rosen: Visions of Sound: Musical Instruments of First Nations Communities in Northeastern America (Chicago, 1995)

GORDON E. SMITH

Diamond, David (Leo) (b Rochester, NY, 9 July 1915). American composer. The son of Austrian and Polish emigrants, he taught himself to play the violin at an early age. While living with relatives in Cleveland (1927–9), he studied the violin and music theory with Ribaupierre at the Cleveland Institute of Music. Returning to Rochester in 1929, he attended the Eastman School of Music, where his teachers included Bernard Rogers. After one year (1933–4), however, he left Rochester for New York, where he became a scholarship student of Roger Sessions at the New Music School, and studied Dalcroze methods with Paul Boepple. In 1935 he was awarded the Elfrida Whiteman Scholarship, ensuring further study with Sessions, and enabling him to make his first trip to Paris. There he was encouraged by Maurice Ravel, Darius Milhaud, Albert Roussel and Charles Münch, as well as by writers André Gide and James Joyce. In the summer of 1937 he began studies with Boulanger, which, thanks to the first of his three Guggenheim Fellowships, continued until the outbreak of World War II in 1939.

Upon his return to the USA, Diamond was unable to find a teaching position. The decade of economic uncertainty that ensued, however, saw the creation of some of his best-known works, including his first four symphonies (1940–45). He won his second Guggenheim Fellowship (1941), the Prix de Rome (1942), the Paderewski Prize (1943) and a National Institute of Arts and Letters Grant (1944). For two years (1943–5) he played the violin in the weekly Carnegie Hall radio show Your Hit Parade, and in 1949 he was invited to Hollywood to compose a film score for Anna Lucasta at Columbia Pictures. That summer he became the first lecturer on American music at Schloss Leopoldskron in Salzburg.

In 1951 Diamond was appointed to a temporary Fulbright professorship at the University of Rome. At the conclusion of the appointment, he moved to Florence where he lived almost continuously until 1965, partly to escape the repressive atmosphere created by Senator Joseph McCarthy in the USA. He returned to the USA for one year during his mother's final illness (1956), during which time he played in the orchestra for Bernstein's Candide and was subpoenaed to testify before McCarthy's Un-American Activities Committee, and twice to assume the position of Slee Professor at SUNY, Buffalo (1961, 1963).

Diamond returned on a more permanent basis to the USA at the age of 50. In 1966 he conducted the première of his Piano Concerto (1949–50) with the New York PO in a concert that also featured the première of his Fifth Symphony (1951–64) conducted by Bernstein. He served as chair of the composition department at the Manhattan School of Music (1966–7), held several composer-in-residence positions (including a year at the American Academy in Rome, 1971) and was appointed professor of composition at the Juilliard School of Music (1973–86). After his retirement, he continued to teach at Juilliard until 1997. His many honours include the William Schuman Award (1985), the Gold Medal of the American Academy of Arts and Letters (1991), an Edward Macdowell Award (1991) and President Bill Clinton's National Medal of Arts (1995).

Diamond has eschewed serial, electronic and aleatory procedures, and prefers not to sort his compositional techniques into periods. The clearest analyses of his music can be found in his own writings and programme notes, and in interviews with him. Many of his works employ tonal or modal languages that admit enharmonic relationships. His early compositions are typically founded on wide dispositions of triads, an attribute that has led some to characterize his music as distinctly American. A number of works, particularly those that pay homage to Ravel and Satie, are consciously French in style. From 1951 his output is marked by increasing chromaticism, but not necessarily increasing dissonance, as chromatic elements are used to embellish long melodic lines and to intensify expressive gestures. Although 12-note melodies can be identified, sometimes occurring in retrograde, transposed or inverted forms in the same work (such as in The World of Paul Klee, 1957), Diamond has insisted that he has never written a 12-note piece. Classical form and procedures (i.e. sonata structures, concerto textures, variation forms, canonical and fugal entrances, stretto, etc.) are common, as is disciplined contrapuntal writing. Sensitive to the needs of his listeners, he provides varied repetition, or at least a semblance of order, where necessary to aid comprehension. His music is always marked by a strong rhythmic drive and a frequent use of displaced rhythmic patterns. He is a master of orchestration, both in his use of particular instruments and in his creation of ensembles. Rich sonic palettes are often created using spare means. His meticulous craftsmanship and his musical sensibility have assured his position as a 20th-century Romantic classicist.

David Diamond

WORKS

(selective list)

pubd unless otherwise stated

DRAMATIC

Ops: David (op, D.H. Lawrence), 1935, unfinished; Mirandolina (musical comedy, 4, P. Braun, after C. Goldoni), 1958, unpubd; The Golden Slippers (musical folk play, 2, S. Citron, after B. Pérez Galdós), 1965, New York, 5 Dec 1965; The Noblest Game (op, prol, 2, K. Louchheim), 1971–5

Ballets: A Myriologue (choreog. M. Graham), pf, 1935; Formal Dance (choreog. Graham), tpt, pf, 1935, unpubd; Dance of Liberations (choreog. L. Shapiro), 2 pf, 1936; Tom (e.e. cummings), 1936–7, unpubd; Icaro (after L. de Bosis, choreog. E. King), nar, cl, pf, perc, 1937, unpubd; The Dream of Audubon (G. Wescott), 1941, unpubd; Labyrinth (M. Marchowsky), 1946, unpubd

Film scores, radio scores, incid music

ORCHESTRAL

Large orch: A Sinfonietta Reflecting the Spirit of American Life, 1934–5; Hommage à Satie, 1934; Variations on a Theme by Erik Satie, 1935–6, unpubd; Psalm, 1936; Suite no.1, 1936 [from ballet Tom]; Vn Conc. no.1, 1936; Aria and Hymn, 1937; Ov. no.1, 1937, unpubd; Vc Conc., 1938; Concert Piece, 1939; Sym. no.1, 1940–41; Sym. no.2, 1942; Ov. to The Tempest, 1945; Sym. no.3, 1945; Sym. no.4, 1945; Music for Romeo and Juliet, 1947; Vn Conc. no.2, 1947; The Enormous Room, 1948 [after cummings]; Pf Conc., 1949–50; Timon of Athens, sym. portrait, 1949; Sym. no.5, 1951–64; Sym. no.6, 1951–4; Ahavah, sym. eulogy, nar, orch, 1954, unpubd; Sinfonia concertante, 1954–6; The World of Paul Klee, 1957; Sym. no.7, 1959; Sym. no.8, 1960; Pf Concertino, 1964–5; Vn Conc. no.3, 1967–8; Ov. no.2 'A Buoyant Music', 1970; Fl Conc., 1984–5; Sym. no.9 (Michelangelo), Bar, orch, 1985; Sym. no.10, 1985–; Kaddish, vc, orch, 1987–9; Tantivy, band, 1988; Hearts Music, band, 1989; Sinfonietta, 1989–90; Sym. no.11, 1989–92; Conc., str qt, orch, 1991; Ode, 1993

Small orch: Variations on an Original Theme, 1937; Elegy in Memory of Maurice Ravel, brass, hp, perc, 1938 [arr. str, perc, 1938–9]; Heroic Piece, 1938; Music for Str, Brass and Timp, 1938–9, rev. 1968; Conc. for Small Orch, 1940; Rounds, str, 1944; Ceremonial Fanfare, brass, perc, 1950; Diaphony, brass, pf, org, timp, 1955, unpubd; Elegies for Faulkner and cummings, fl, eng hn, str, 1962–3; Music for Chbr Orch, 1969–70; Festival Ov., 1988–9; Night Thoughts, 1995–6; 25 early works

Arrs., incl. works by Satie (Chorale hypocrite, Messe des pauvres, Passacaille, Gymnopédie no.2), Sessions (Scherzino), Schoenberg (op.19), Skryabin (Reverie)

VOCAL

Choral: A Lake Song (L. Untermeyer), 4 women's vv, 1935, unpubd; O May the Words, 1935, unpubd; This is the Garden (e.e. cummings), 1935; Vista (A. Kreymborg), 1935, unpubd; 3 Madrigals (J. Joyce), 1937; All in Green My Love Went Riding (cummings), 3 women's vv, 1940; The Glory is Fallen Out of the Sky (cummings), 3 women's vv, 1940; Longing for Jerusalem (J. Ha-Levi), T, chorus, org, 1943, unpubd; Ma-Tovu, T, chorus, org, 1944; Young Joseph (T. Mann), 3 women's vv, str/org/pf, 1944; Three Young Rats, 4-pt canon, 1946; Chorale (J. Agee), 8vv, 1949–50; Let Us All Take to Singing (H. Melville), men's vv, 1949–50; The Martyr (Melville), men's vv, 1950, rev. 1964; Mizmor L'David, sacred service, T, chorus, org, 1951; 2 Anthems (Diamond), 1955; Prayer for Peace, 1960; This Sacred Ground (A. Lincoln: Gettysburg Address), Bar, children's chorus, chorus, orch, 1962; To Music (J. Masefield, H.W. Longfellow), choral sym., T, B-Bar, chorus, orch, 1967; Warning (Agee), chorus, tubular bells; A Secular Cant. (Agee), T, Bar, chorus, small orch, 1976; Ode on the Morning of Christ's Nativity, 1981; A Song for Hope (E. Wiesel), 8 solo vv, chorus, small orch, 1986, unpubd; Why? (W. Blake), men's chorus, str orch, pf, timp, unpubd; Cradle Song (A. Crapsey), TTBB, unpubd

Song cycles: 4 Ladies (E. Pound), 1935, rev. 1962; 3 Epitaphs (S.T. Warner), 1938; 5 Songs from the Tempest (W. Shakespeare), 1944; L'âme de Claude Debussy (letters), 1949; The Midnight Meditation (E. Olson), 1951; We Two (Shakespeare: Sonnets), 1964; Hebrew Melodies (G. Byron), 1967–8; Love and Time (K. Louchheim), 1968; The Fall (Agee), 1970; The Gift, 1981, unpubd; 5 Japanese Songs, 1986, unpubd

Songs: Passover Night (E. Bockstein), 1936; A Flower Given to My Daughter (Joyce), 1940; Anniversary in a Country Cemetery (K.A. Porter), 1940; As life what is so sweet (17th-century), 1940; Four Uncles (cummings), 1940; For an Old Man (T.S. Eliot), 1943; Music, when soft voices die (P.B. Shelley), 1943; My Little Mother (K. Mansfield), 1943; On Death (J. Clare), 1943; Sister Jane (J. de la Fontaine), 1943; Souvent j'ai dit a mon mari (Mansfield), 1943; The Twisted Trinity (C. McCullers), 1943; Be Music, Night (K. Patchen), 1944; Billy in the Darbies (Melville), 1944; I have longed to move away (D. Thomas), 1944; The Lover as Mirror (E. Stringham), 1944; To Lucasta, On Going to the Wars (R. Lovelace), 1944; Epitaph on the Death of a Young Cavalryman (Melville), 1945; Let nothing disturb thee (St Teresa of Avila, trans. H.W. Longfellow), 1945; Monody (Melville), 1945; Brigid's Song (Joyce), 1946; Chatterton (J. Keats), 1946; The Epitaph (L.P. Smith), 1946; Even though the world keeps changing (R.M. Rilke), 1946; Lift not the painted veil (Shelley), 1946; My spirit will not haunt the mound (T. Hardy), 1946; A Portrait (Melville), 1946; The shepherd boy sings in the valley of humiliation (J. Bunyan), 1946; Somewhere (Smith), 1946; The Children of the Poor (V. Hugo), 1949–50; How it was with them (W. Whitman), 1949–50; If you can't (cummings), 1949–50; Love is More (cummings), 1949–50; Homage to Paul Klee (B. Deutsch), 1960; The Millennium (I. Dinesen), 1960; I shall imagine life (cummings), 1962; My Papa's Waltz (T. Roethke), 1964; Prayer (Roethke), 1964; Do I Love You? (J. Larson), theme and variations, 1968; Love and Time (K. Louchheim), 1968; Life and Death (C. Tichborn), 1971; Christmas Tree (cummings), 1972; I am Rose (G. Stein), 1973; Ode (A. O'Shaughnessy), 1973

Other vocal: 2 Elegies (C. Rossetti), S, str qt, 1935, unpubd; Vocalises, S, va, 1935, rev. 1956; The Mad Maid's Song (J. Herrick), S, fl, hpd/pf, 1937, rev. 1953; Death of Peter Whiffle (C. Van Vechten), Bar, small orch, 1993

CHAMBER AND SOLO INSTRUMENTAL

4 or more insts: Chbr Sym., cl, tpt, vn, va, pf, 1935–6, unpubd; 6 Pieces, str qt, 1935, unpubd; Conc., str qt, 1936; Qnt, fl, str qt, pf, 1937; Pf Qt, 1938, rev. 1967; Str Qt no.1, 1940; Str Qt no.2, 1943–4; Str Qt no.3, 1946; Cl Qnt, 1950; Str Qt no.4, 1951; Wind Qnt, 1958; Str Qt no.5, 1960; Night Music, str qt, accdn, 1961; Nonet, str, 1961–2; Str Qt no.6, 1962; Str Qt no.7, 1963–4; Str Qt no.8, 1964; Str Qt no.9, 1966; Str Qt no.10, 1966–8; Pf Qnt no.1, 1972, unpubd; Concert Piece, hn, str trio, 1978, unpubd; Concert Piece, gui, str qt, 1992, unpubd; Pf Qnt no.2, 1996, unpubd; Concert Piece, 6 hns 1997, unpubd

1–3 insts: Partita, ob, bn, pf, 1935; Sonata no.1, vc, pf, 1936, rev. 1938; Str Trio, 1937; Sonata no.1, vn, pf, 1943–6; Canticle, vn, pf, 1946; Perpetual Motion, vn, pf, 1946; Chaconne, vn, pf, 1948; Pf Trio, 1951; Sonata, vn, 1954–9; Sonata, vc, 1956–9; Sonatina, accdn, 1963; Introduction and Dance, accdn, 1966; Sonata no.2, vn, pf, 1981; Sonata, sax, pf, 1984; Kaddish, vc, pf, 1987–9; Sonata no.2, vc, pf, 1987; Sym., org, 1987; Concert Piece, fl, hp, 1989, unpubd; Trio, vn, cl, pf, 1993–4

Pf: 8 Pieces for Children, 1935; Sonatina no.1, 1935; 3 gymnopédies, 1937, unpubd; 52 Preludes and Fugues, 1939–40, unpubd; Conc., 2 pf, 1942–3; The Tomb of Melville, 1944–9; Album for the Young, 1946; Sonata no.1, 1947, unpubd; A Private World, 1954–9; Then and Now, 1962; Alone at the Piano, 3 vols., 1967; Gambit, 1967; Sonata no.2, 1972, unpubd; Prelude, Fantasy and Fugue, 1983; Sonatina no.2, 1987, unpubd; 2 Barcarolles, 1993, unpubd; many other pieces

Recorded interviews in US-NHoh

Principal publishers: Associated, Boosey & Hawkes, Elkan-Vogel, Eschig, Carl Fischer, Harms, Leeds, Mercury, Presser, Robbins, Salabert, E.C. Schirmer, G. Schirmer, Peer-Southern

BIBLIOGRAPHY

CC1(M. Harrison)

B. Lemmon: 'A New American Symphonist', The Etude, lx (1942), 724 only, 780 only

M. Goss: 'David Diamond', Modern Music Makers (New York, 1952), 448–55

J. Peyser: 'A Composer Who Defies Categorization', New York Times (6 July 1985)

V.J. Kimberling: David Diamond: a Bio-Bibliography (Metuchen, NJ, 1987)

M. di Palma: 'David Diamond: an American Treasure', Guitar Review, no.94, (1993), 1–23

M. Lehman: 'An Interview with David Diamond', Fi: the Magazine of Music and Sound, ii/4 (1997), 98–101, 103 only

R.R. Reilly: 'America's Greatest Living Composer', Crisis, xv/6 (1997), 40–44 [interview]

MARY WALLACE DAVIDSON

Diamond, Jody (b Pasadena, CA, 23 April 1953). American composer and ethnomusicologist. She studied at the University of California, Berkeley (BA 1977) and San Francisco State University (MA 1979) where she pursued interdisciplinary work in music, anthropology and education. She also studied Javanese music with Ki Wasitodiningrat, Nyai Tumenggung Mardusari and Nyi Supadmi. She has taught gamelan and world music at Mills and Goddard colleges, the University of California, Berkeley, and Dartmouth and Monash universities. Her honours include a Fulbright Senior Scholar Research Fellowship to Indonesia (1988–9) and an NEH Fellowship (1991). Founder and director of the American Gamelan Institute, she has also edited and published Balungan, a periodical devoted to Southeast Asian performing arts.

As a composer, Diamond has written extensively for the voice and gamelan instruments. Among her works are a series of Western folksong settings (In that Bright World, Hard Times, Sabbath Bride) treated with the performance practice of Central Java. Other compositions, such as Kenong and Pandhawa/Wali Sanga, apply contemporary process structures. Her work with contemporary Indonesian composers has resulted in the video documentary Karya and three recordings. She is the author of 'There is no They There' (Musicworks, no.47, 1990, 12–23) on the ethics of cross-cultural interaction.

WORKS
(selective list)

In that Bright World, gamelan, 1981 [based on Appalachian folksong]; Sabbath Bride, gamelan, 1982 [based on Hebrew melody]; Penguin Solo, 1983 [arr. of Balinese piece]; Hard Times, chorus, vn, mandocello, gamelan, 1984 [based on S. Foster song]; Pangkur N.Z., solo vv, Javanese gamelan, 1989; Kenong, *c*8 kettle gongs, 1990; Pandhawa/Wali Sanga, 5–9vv, 1996; We Taste the Spices of Arabia, But We Do Not Feel the Scorch(ing) Sun that Brings Them Forth (G. Mohamad), vv, melody insts, gui, pf, 1997

BARBARA BENARY

Dianda, Hilda (b Córdoba, Argentina, 13 April 1925). Argentine composer. She studied with Honorio Siccardi, Gian Francesco Malipiero and Hermann Scherchen. In 1958 she travelled to France on a French government scholarship and made contact with Pierre Schaeffer's Groupe de Recherches Musicales at the RTF in Paris. The following year she was one of a group of five composers (the others were Cage, Pousseur, Boucourechliev and Schönbach) to whom the RAI in Milan first opened the doors of its Studio di Fonologia Musicale, enabling her to gain experience of electronic music. The Dos estudios en oposición for tape, which date from this time, mark her out as one of the first Argentine composers to use electronic techniques and resources. She received scholarships to attend the Darmstadt summer courses between 1960 and 1963, and in 1966 worked at the San Fernando Valley State College in Northridge, California, where A 7 for cello and tape was written. Returning to Argentina in 1967, she was involved in an intensive schedule of teaching as a professor at the Universidad Nacional de Córdoba until 1971. After a period spent in Germany, she moved back to Argentina in 1976, composing … después el silencio for tape on her return.

There followed a seven-year break in her creative activity, after which she wrote the Requiem (1984). Dedicated 'to our dead' and based on the Latin Requiem texts (excluding the Dies irae, which, she felt, did not correspond to her intentions), the work has vocal and instrumental textures of great variety and complexity, each movement being differently orchestrated, though always in accordance with the demands of the text. By contrast, the Cántico of 1988 inhabits a totally different world; based on St Francis of Assisi's Cantico delle creature, this chamber-style piece, 'stereophonically' conceived, achieves its effect through a spatial disposition of voices and instruments.

Dianda has participated in numerous international festivals of contemporary music and several of her works have been included in the study programmes of various European and North American universities and other musical institutions as important examples of the contemporary composer's art. Among her many distinctions and awards are the Cultural Merit medal of the Italian government, Chevalier of the Ordre des Palmes Académiques of the French Republic, and official recognition of her work by the Fundación Alicia Moreau de Justo in Argentina. Dianda also devotes time to the educational and analytical aspects of contemporary music, writing in a number of publications and giving seminars, courses and lectures and has published La música argentina de hoy (Buenos Aires, 1966).

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Nucleos, str, 2 pf, vib, xyl, 8 perc, 1963; Resonancias 3, vc, orch, 1966; Ludus 1, 1969; Ludus 2, chbr orch, 1969; Impromptu, str, 1970; Canto, chbr orch, 1972; Va Conc., 1988; Mitos, perc, str, 1993

Vocal: Canciones (R. Alberti), S, gui, vib, 3 perc, 1962; Rituales, 1v + perc, pf + perc, 1962; Resonancias 5, 2 choruses, 1966–8; Requiem, B, chorus, orch, 1984; Cántico (Dianda, after St Francis of Assisi), chorus, chbr orch, 1988

Ens: Estructuras I–III, vc, pf, 1960; Qt III, str, 1963; Percusión 11, 11 perc, 1963; Resonancias 1, 5 hn, 1964; Divertimento a 6, 6 perc, 1969–70; Oda, 2 tpt, 3 trbn, 3 perc, 1974; Trío, cl, vc, pf, 1985; Cadencias, ww, perc, 1985; Cadencias 2, vn, pf, 1986; Paisaje (… sólo breves, fugaces colores …), 4 perc, 1992

Solo inst: Diedros, fl, 1962; Resonancias 2, pf, 1964; Ludus 3, org, 1969; Celebraciones, vc + perc, 1974; Rituales, mar, 1994

Tape: 2 estudios en oposición, 1959; A 7, vc, tape, 1966; … después el silencio …, 1976; Encantamientos, 1984

Principal publishers: EAC-Moeck, EAM, Ediciones Culturales Argentinas, Pan American Union, Peer International Corporation, Ricordi Americana, Schott

BIBLIOGRAPHY

RiemannL 12
J.C. Paz: Introducción a la música de nuestro tiempo (Buenos Aires, 1955)
J.C. Paz: 'Una nueva etapa creadora en la música de la Argentina', Revista musical mexicana (1963), 62–8
'Portrait of Hilda Dianda', Donaueschingen Festival 1969 [programme book]
R. Arizaga: Enciclopedia de la música argentina (Buenos Aires, 1971)
D. Grela: Catálogo de obras argentinas 1950–92 (Santa Fe, 1993), 32
M. Ficher, M. Furman Schleifer, J.M. Furman: Latin American Classical Composers: a Biographical Dictionary (Lanham, MD, and London, 1996)

RAQUEL C. DE ARIAS

Diapason (i). A term used by Greek theorists to designate an octave, either the interval or the scale. The English use of 'diapason' to denote the range or compass of a voice or instrument derives from this.

EDWIN M. RIPIN/MARTIN RENSHAW

Diapason (ii). In French the term has many meanings. It may refer to the scaling of a string or organ pipe; to the distance between the finger-holes of a wind instrument; it can mean simply pitch ('diapason normal' was established in 1858 as a′ = 435 at 59° F); by extension it can mean an A pitchpipe or tuning-fork.

EDWIN M. RIPIN/MARTIN RENSHAW

Diapason (iii). In classical British organ terminology, 'the diapasons' (Stopped and Open) form the foundation upon which the Great Organ flue choruses may be built (see ORGAN STOP).

EDWIN M. RIPIN/MARTIN RENSHAW

Diapason (iv). A piece of wood, also called 'rack', at the back of a keyboard in a clavichord or a harpsichord containing a vertical slot for each of the instrument's keys. A metal pin or a slip of wood or whalebone driven into the end of each key fits into the appropriate slot, guiding the key and preventing lateral motion as it moves up and down.

EDWIN M. RIPIN/MARTIN RENSHAW

Diapente (from Gk. dia pente: 'through five'). The ancient Greek and medieval name for the interval of a FIFTH. In medieval treatises and musical manuscripts the terms epidiapente ('5th above') and subdiapente (hypodiapente, '5th below') are used to designate canons at the upper and lower fifth respectively.

See also DIOXEIAN.

□

Diaphone. See under ORGAN STOP. See also ORGAN, §III, 4, and fig.21.

Diaphonia [dyaphonia] (Gk.: 'sounding apart'). In ancient Greek theory, dissonance, as opposed to symphonia (consonance). In 9th-century music theory, however, the term was used synonymously with organum and symphonia to mean 'polyphony in general', and retained that general meaning until the 12th century, even though the symphoniae were still, specifically, the consonances of octave, 5th and 4th. During the 12th century 'diaphonia' was replaced by its Latin equivalent, 'discantus'; 'organum' and 'discantus' then came to characterize different musical styles. Exceptionally, as late as 1321, Johannes de Muris (Ars novae musicae) used 'diaphonia' for organum, especially 'diaphonia basilica' for organum purum.

See also DISCANT, and ORGANUM.

NICKY LOSSEFF

Dias, Amílcar Vasques (b Badim, Monção, 7 March 1945). Portuguese composer and pianist. He studied the piano and composition with Manuel Faria (1957–66) and later attended the conservatories of Oporto and Braga, where (1970–74) he studied with Cândido Lima and Maria de Lurdes Ribeiro. In 1974 a grant from the Calouste Gulbenkian Foundation enabled him to go to the Netherlands, where at the Hague Conservatory he studied with Louis Andriessen, van Bergeijk and Schat (composition diploma, 1982). He also attended seminars with Emanuel Nunes, Stockhausen and Xenaxis and (1987–8) was a member of the artistic council of the municipality of Amsterdam. On his return to Portugal (1988) he taught at various schools of music and continued his training as a composer at the University of British Columbia, Vancouver, and other North American universities. He was appointed a teacher at the University of Evora in 1996. Much of his music is influenced by his stay in the Netherlands. Most of his pieces are short but intense, written for small and unusual groups, such as Serrana (1989–90), for ten accordions, vibraphone and string quartet. He has also set to music a great number of poems by 20th-century Portuguese poets.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Balada do amor militante, brass, pf, db, 1979–80; Pranto, brass, pf, db, 1981–2
Vocal: Dove la luce (G. Ungharetti), SATB, 1974; Requiem, 1v, pf, elecs, 1978; 3 canções (J. Afonso), 1v, pf, 1992; Vindimas (folk poetry), SATB, 1995; 4 canções (A. Gedeão), S, pf, 1997; 2 canções (Afonso), S, pf, 1997; Ode ao vinho (L. Carmelo), T, pf, 1997; Madrugada (R. de Castro and N. Torneol), 8 solo vv, 1998
Chbr and solo inst: Preludio, pf, 1974; 3 blocos, pf, 1975; Mara, gui, pf, vc, 1985; Prélude a l'après-midi des cigales, hpd, 1987; Serrana, 10 accdn, vib, str qt, opt. tape, 1989–90; Badim, 2 pf, 1992; Tojo I, tpt, pf, 1992; Veranda, fl, hp, pf, vn, vc, 1995; Glicínia, fl, 1997; Óis d'água, fl, pf, 1997; Rosmaninho, fl, 1997; Alecrim, pic, pf, 1998; Giesta, fl, cl, pf, 1998; Jasmim, pf, 1998; Linho, pf trio, 1998

Principal publishers: Donemus, Musicoteca

SÉRGIO AZEVEDO

Diaspora. Diaspora is one of the most ancient and most modern concepts of music's relation to time and space, to history and cultural geography. Diaspora situates music, musicians, and musical culture in places distinguished by placelessness, on musical landscapes different and apart from places of origin.

1. Concepts and definitions. 2. Diaspora in the historical imagination. 3. Music in diaspora. 4. Diasporic processes. 5. Diaspora, modernity and postmodernity.

1. CONCEPTS AND DEFINITIONS. The displacement of diasporic music cultures results primarily from two conditions. First, a group may have been forcibly expelled from a place of origin, often a place claimed for sacred or providential reasons; the classic case of this condition of dispersion is the Jewish diaspora. Second, a group may have no place of origin, hence the necessity to move across cultural landscapes belonging to others; the classic case is that of Roma and Sinti peoples, those cultures subsumed under the pejorative rubric, gypsy.

In diaspora, music contributes to the construction of identity in contrastive ways, shoring up the representation of self and negotiating interaction with otherness. Metaphors of Jewish music history, for example, have stressed the possibility of retaining the music culture prior to the expulsion of Jews from Palestine in 70 CE. In contrast, Roma music is falsely imagined to have no identity, but rather to assume the identity of any place Roma people inhabit.

There are four fundamental configurations of history and, accordingly, of music history that diaspora produces. First, myth or sacred journey ascribes a unique temporal framework to the group itself, whereby music stems from a time before history. The diasporic journey provides the historical path from one sacred world to another, passing through a sacred and temporally bounded world. The music of sacred journey emerges from and represents myth. The diasporic Beni Hilal of North Africa maintain musical traditions that represent their journey in this way (Slyomovics, 1987). The repertories of the Hindu Rāmāyaṇa and Mahābhārata pass themselves along sacred journey in South and South-east Asia, while absorbing metaphors of wandering. Second, diaspora also assumes the forms of secular history, often because a diasporic group's journeys provide them with no place to settle. Certain regions engender histories of journey, for example between different lands along the Mediterranean (Magrini, 1993). Diasporic history stems from responses to overpopulation or political repression, as in the emigrations to North and South America from the 17th century to the 20th (Todorov, 1984; Greenblatt, 1991). Third, conquest and colonialism are intentional forms of diaspora, whereby one group consciously imposes its culture on others, often with music as an active agent. The Age of Discovery produced numerous forms of colonial diaspora whose sacred forms are evident in missionary hymnody and the spread of musical instruments, such as the harmonium. Utopian communities, such as Mormons and the Amish, are versions of such diaspora. Fourth, transnationalism is the modern and postmodern historical framework for diaspora. Musical repertories and music cultures spread beyond political and national borders. Musicians themselves may form communities engaged in diaspora, for example blues musicians in North America (Baker, 1984), African popular musicians along Atlantic coastal regions (Gilroy, 1993), or the mendicant Bauls in Bengali-speaking areas of South Asia (Capwell, 1986).

2. DIASPORA IN THE HISTORICAL IMAGINATION. Western concepts of diaspora have traditionally derived from three models, each with a distinctive relation to the dialectic between myth and history. More than any other conceptual model, the Jewish diaspora relies primarily on mythical functions of music (Baer, 1936; Sachar, 1985). The metaphysics of Jewish music may even depend on the concept of diaspora, for example in the often hostile rejection of instrumental music until the return to Israel and the coming of the Messiah.

In the early modern era, the African diaspora provides a powerful historical trope (Lemelle and Kelley, 1994). African musical elements undergo diasporic displacement (Waterman, 1952), and African musicians engage in patterns of exchange across an Atlantic defined by African peoples (Harris, 1982; Gilroy, 1993). Moreover, music provides complex forms of historical evidence for the African diaspora, not only because of the spread of instruments, such as the banjo and xylophone, but also because of musical texts of transnational African religious movements, such as Rastafarianism and its music, reggae, and so-called Yoruba religions in South America. Within the larger African diaspora, local and regional music histories unfold through the dispersion of musical genres, such as the blues in the great southern-to-northern migration in the USA (Grossman, 1989). Historically, music in the African diaspora has suggested numerous links between the myths of African communal structures, of which dance and rhythm are parts, and the modern production and reproduction of global popular musics (Coplan, 1994).

At the end of the 20th century, massive shifts of global migration spawned new diasporas. Indian music, especially Hindustani classical and popular music, connects many communities of the South Asian diaspora, whether in the UK, North America, Trinidad, South Africa or Fiji (Myers, 1998). Competing nationalisms in eastern Europe or the Middle East, moreover, unleashed new diasporas, which realized their historical transformations with invention or reinvention of musical traditions, such as qasida in Bosnia or arabesk in Turkey (Stokes, 1994).

3. MUSIC IN DIASPORA. Music frequently provides a language for mapping out temporal and geographical spaces because music can represent the past in the present. The geography of a diasporic music can be both ancient and modern. Musical repertories in 20th-century Jewish anthologies, notably A.Z. Idelsohn's ten-volume Hebraïsch-orientalisches Melodienschatz (1914–32), were organized according to contemporary communities in the Jewish diaspora, all of which, however, stemmed from a common source, the music of ancient Israel. The music of the diaspora represented difference and divergence, but its historical trajectory was from unity back to unity. Similarly, Rastafarianism constructs a history of African diaspora, in which reggae functions as a transition from West African origins to East African (Ethiopian) consolidation. In these diasporas music symbolically constructs the historical path and return to origins.

Music in diaspora also retains traces of historical displacement. The spread of Hinduism in South-east Asia has left its imprint on musical systems even where it has largely been supplanted by other religions. Musical drama and ritual in Muslim Indonesia include Hindu myths, especially those associated with the Rāmāyana while also narrating the history of South Asian colonialism and trade in South-east Asia. The musical systems of South and South-east Asia differ from each other entirely, but they are connected by narratives of diaspora. The spread of Islam in the centuries after the death of the Prophet Muhammed also remains evident in common musical elements undergirding the transmission of Islam's sacred texts, not least among them the Qur'an, which, in theory, is recited in the same way throughout the Islamic world. Although the complex conceptualization of music within Islam makes it impossible to specify common diasporic elements, these emerge at historical moments in which it is necessary to evoke unity, in other words, a sense of diaspora, such as in the consolidation of nationalism in Bosnia-Hercegovina or fundamentalist solidarity among Muslim nations of the Middle East and Central Asia.

Consolidation of musical styles seems to undo the divergence and diversity of diaspora, but it more often creates a network of cultural contacts and solidarity across widely dispersed communities. The emergence of the pan-Plains musical style among Amerindians dispersed by rapid westward expansion in 19th-century North America consolidated not only the common elements among pre-existing Plains peoples, but created new contexts to represent an identity that resisted the hegemonic domination of white North Americans, for example the Ghost Dance religion in the 19th century and powwows in the 20th century (Herzog, 1935).

Musical instruments often communicate the material and ideological aspects of diaspora, the ability to change and to resist change. Xylophone-type instruments with metal or wood slabs played in complex polyphonic patterns are found throughout the African diaspora, especially along the Atlantic coastal regions. The metallophone orchestras of mainland and insular South-east Asia also demonstrate extensive dissemination. Diasporic instruments may also symbolize the contestation of regional and national cultures. In South-east Asia, for example, silk-and-bamboo ensembles brought by Chinese colonizers, settlers and merchants co-exist with metellophone orchestras (e.g. in Indonesia and Singapore), while signifying a resistance to acculturation. Instruments have a special ideological power in the diaspora of Celtic culture along the western coast of Europe, from Galicia in Spain to Scotland. Bagpipes and harps provide physical evidence for a culture of resistance to, and through, modern nationalism, that is, against the political hegemony of Spain, France and England. Bagpipes and harps, despite their long history of dispersion throughout Europe and the Mediterranean, consolidate a musical language for modern Celticness that has the power of an international ideological lingua franca (Chapman, 1994).

4. Diasporic processes. Diaspora dialectically opposes processes of musical change that are characterized by extended preservation and radical alterations. Musical change, furthermore, results from the disjunctures that these dialectical juxtapositions produce, whether in a mythical world of unbroken wandering or in a postmodern world of forceful and sometimes violent displacement (Clifford, 1992). In mythological diaspora it is oral traditions that metaphysically protects music from change, though oral transmission is itself the primary cause of musical change (Tworuschka, 1991). Music for utopian and religious diasporas, such as that of the Amish, situate music between written and oral traditions in order to engender processes of remembering that rely on the propensity to forget; each time an Amish hymn is sung, it performs the history of the 16th-century European martyrdom in the re-mythologized world of modern North America. The sacred repertories of Islam, not least among them the Qur'an, are particularly powerful in their performative juxtaposition of oral and written traditions that connect the timeless past to the time-bound present (Eickelman and Piscatori, 1990). Sacred journey also juxtaposes stability and change, using music as a metaphor that distances a religious group from disjuncture and therefore ensures its cohesiveness. Musical repertories as different as those practised by East Asian Buddhists (Banzai, 1973) and European Christian pilgrims (Eade and Sallnow, 1991) represent sacred journeys for those participants.

Diasporic musical traditions are invented to represent a group in flux (Klusen, 1969) or to use music as a means of bounding tradition in history (Hobsbawm and Ranger, 1983). Encounters between groups in diaspora may produce musical borders across exchange and adaptation, or they may unleash conflict that renders musical borders impermeable. In cases of exchange, new musical repertories and practices emerge, yielding processes of hybridization. In cases of conflict, music may underlie new forms of racism. The postmodern disjuncture of diaspora is most evident in the various forms of transnationalism. Music provides a language for cultural translation, and in mediated forms it is located beyond the borders of communities and cultures that create it. Diasporic musics also transgress those borders, resisting the nationalism that encumbers diaspora.

5. Diaspora, modernity and postmodernity. In the age of transnationalism that unfolded in the late 20th century, diaspora increasingly became a form of cultural, ethnic and national identity. The mass mediation of world musics not only transmitted diasporic musics throughout the world but also accelerated the ways they narrated the contestation of history and geography. On one hand, diaspora and diasporic music lent themselves to the definition of new nationalisms, for example Israel at mid-century and Bosnia-Hercegovina and Kurdistan at the end of the 20th century. The dispersion of musical instruments in eastern Europe (e.g. 'Slovak' bagpipes) symbolically challenged the nationalisms of modern Europe and raised questions about their survival in postmodern Europe. On the other hand, diaspora contested late 20th-century nationalism, representing cultural spaces beyond nationalism, for example the growing presence of Muslim peoples in central and western Europe, and the long history of Muslim presence in south-eastern Europe. Muslim diaspora in Europe, whether the sacred traditions of mosques or the popular-music programmes on Turkish-language television in European cities, conceptually redefine the contexts of Western music itself.

The counterpart to transnational musics in the diasporas at the end of the 20th century was sacred music, which was also employed in the struggle for new places in an international history and geography. At the end of the 20th century shared musical practices increasingly defined dispersed musical cultures; the sacred exhibited a very different presence in Muslim, African and South Asian diasporas, but it nonetheless provided a core around which identity could cohere. The sacred, therefore, differs from transnationalism as a motivation and language for diaspora, and it perpetuates the earliest forms assumed by diaspora. At the end of the 20th century there was no single form of diasporic music, but rather an increasingly complex and contested presence of music in the rapidly changing historical geography of postmodernity.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E.N. Adler: Von Ghetto zu Ghetto: Reisen und Beobachtungen (Stuttgart, 1909)
A.Z. Idelsohn: Hebräisch-orientalischer Melodienschatz, 10 vols. (Leipzig, 1914–32)
G. Herzog: 'Plains Ghost Dance and Great Basin Music', American Anthropologist, xxxvii (1935), 403–19
Y. Baer: Galut (Berlin, 1936)
R.A. Waterman: 'African Influence on the Music of the Americas', Acculturation in the Americas, ed. S. Tax (Chicago, 1952), 207–18
E. Klusen: Volkslied: Fund und Erfindung (Cologne, 1969)
A. Ages: The Diaspora Dimension (The Hague, 1973)
M. Banzai: A Pilgrimage to the 88 Temples in Shikoku Island (Tokyo, 1973)
J.E. Harris, ed.: Global Dimensions of the African Diaspora (Washington DC, 1982)
E. Hobsbawm and T. Ranger, eds.: The Invention of Tradition (Cambridge, 1983)

H.A. Baker jr.: Blues, Ideology, and Afro-American Literature: a Vernacular Theory (Chicago, 1984)
T. Todorov: The Conquest of America (New York, 1984)
H.M. Sachar: Diaspora: an Inquiry into the Contemporary Jewish World (New York, 1985)
C. Capwell: The Music of the Bauls of Bengal (Kent, OH, 1986)
S. Slyomovics: The Merchant of Art: an Egyptian Hilali Oral Epic Poet in Performance (Berkeley, 1987)
A.G. Gold: Fruitful Journeys: the Ways of Rajasthani Pilgrims (Berkeley, 1988)
J.R. Grossman: Land of Hope: Chicago, Black Southerners, and the Great Migration (Chicago, 1989)
M. Jackson: Paths toward a Clearing: Radical Empiricism and Ethnographic Inquiry (Bloomington, IN, 1989)
D.F. Eickelman and J. Piscatori, eds.: Muslim Travellers: Pilgrimage, Migration, and the Religious Imagination (Berkeley, 1990)
J. Eade and M.J. Sallnow, eds.: Contesting the Sacred: the Anthropology of Christian Pilgrimage (London, 1991)
S. Greenblatt: Marvellous Possessions: the Wonder of the New World (Oxford, 1991)
U. Tworuschka: Sucher–Pilger–Himmelsstürmer: Reisen im Disseits und Jenseits (Stuttgart, 1991)
J.T. Clifford: 'Travelling Cultures', Cultural Studies, ed. L. Grossberg and others (London, 1992)
P. Gilroy: The Black Atlantic: Modernity and Double Consciousness (Cambridge, MA, 1993)
T. Magrini, ed.: Antropologia della musica e culture mediterranee (Bologna, 1993)
E.W. Said: Culture and Imperialism (New York, 1993)
H.K. Bhabha: The Location of Culture (London, 1994)
M. Chapman: 'Thoughts on Celtic Music', Ethnicity, Identity and Music: the Musical Construction of Place, ed. M. Stokes (Oxford, 1994), 29–44
D.B. Coplan: In the Time of Cannibals: the Word Music of South Africa's Basotho Migrants (Chicago, 1994)
S.J. Lemelle and R.D.G. Kelley, eds.: Imagining Home: Class, Culture, and Nationalism in the African Diaspora (London, 1994)
J.M. Murphy: Working the Spirit: Ceremonies of the African Diaspora (Boston, 1994)
F.E. Peters: The Hajj: the Muslim Pilgrimage to Mecca and the Holy Places (Princeton, NJ, 1994)
M.H. Stokes: The Arabesk Debate: Music and Musicians in Modern Turkey (Oxford, 1994)
S. Segal: The Black Diaspora: Five Centuries of the Black Experience outside Africa (New York, 1995)
H. Myers: Music of Hindu Trinidad: Songs from the India Diaspora (Chicago, 1998)

PHILIP V. BOHLMAN

Diastematic (from Gk. diastēma: 'interval'). An adjective describing notation that indicates the pitch of notes by their vertical placing on the page. The term 'heighted' is a modern equivalent. Although the Latin adjective 'diastematicus' was used in the Western Middle Ages (meaning 'separated by an interval', usually of time) it does not seem to have been used then to describe notation. The term is usually applied to neumatic notations written in campo aperto (in a space without ruled horizontal lines) although, from its etymology, it could also be used to describe notation on dry-point, black or coloured lines. Many Western chant notations were imprecisely diastematic, that is, they indicated pitch in the above manner only vaguely; others, such as Aquitanian notation, were very precisely diastematic, and did not adopt the four-line staff until a relatively late date. A distinction is usually made here between stroke-neumes, which indicate the direction in which a melody moves but are not 'heighted' vertically on the page, and point-neumes, which are easily placed diastematically on the page (see NOTATION, §III, 1).

DAVID HILEY

Dias Velasco, Nicolao. See DOIZI DE VELASCO, NICOLÁS.

Diatessaron (from Gk. dia tessarōn: 'through four'). The ancient Greek and medieval name for the interval of a FOURTH. In medieval treatises and musical manuscripts the terms epidiatessaron ('4th above') and subdiatessaron (hypodiatessaron, '4th below') are used to designate canons at the upper and lower fourth respectively.

Diatonic (from Gk. dia tonos: 'proceeding by whole tones'). Based on or derivable from an octave of seven notes in a particular configuration, as opposed to CHROMATIC and other forms of SCALE. A seven-note scale is said to be diatonic when its octave span is filled by five tones and two semitones, with the semitones maximally separated, for example the major scale (T–T–S–T–T–T–S). The natural minor scale and the church modes (see MODE) are also diatonic.

An interval is said to be diatonic if it is available within a diatonic scale. The following intervals and their compounds are all diatonic: minor 2nd (S), major 2nd (T), minor 3rd (TS), major 3rd (TT), perfect 4th (TTS), perfect 5th (TTST), minor 6th (STTTS), major 6th (TTSTT), minor 7th (TSTTTS), major 7th (TTSTTT) and the octave itself. The TRITONE, in theory diatonic according to this definition, has traditionally been regarded as the alteration of a perfect interval, and hence chromatic; it may be either a semitone more than a perfect 4th (augmented 4th: TTT) or a semitone less than a perfect 5th (diminished 5th: STTS).

In the ancient Greek system (see TETRACHORD), the diatonic genus contains a semitone and two tones (STT). Although this does not amount to a complete octave species, it nevertheless retains the basic sequence of tones and semitones given above.

Similarly, each HEXACHORD in the medieval system as codified by Guido of Arezzo includes a semitone surrounded by two tones (TTSTT) and was therefore diatonic by the above definition. However, since it is built of overlapping hexachords on G, C and F, the Guidonian gamut includes several B♭s in addition to 'uninflected' notes from A to G, and so differs from the later diatonic system (see also MUSICA FICTA).

WILLIAM DRABKIN/R

Diaz, Alirio (b La Calendaria, Carora, 12 Nov 1923). Venezuelan guitarist. He learnt the native cuatro, then the guitar with Raúl Borges and Clement Pimentel in Caracas, where he gave his first recital in 1950 at the Biblioteca Nacional. He was awarded a government grant to study with Regino Sainz de la Maza in Madrid (1950–53), and with Segovia at the Accademia Chigiana, Siena (1951–8); he became Segovia's assistant in 1954 and succeeded him as professor in 1965. He made his débuts in Spain and Italy in 1952, Paris in 1954 and the USA in 1959, toured Germany with the Spanish National Orchestra under Frühbeck de Burgos in 1967, and played under Stokowski and Iturbi in the USA in 1968. He has given masterclasses in Europe and the USA, and has transcribed works by Corbetta and Scarlatti; his performances and editions of the music of Antonio Lauro have been particularly influential. Diaz's youthful experience as a popular musician has been an asset in his interpretation of folk-inspired pieces by such composers as Barrios, Lauro, Ponce and Villa-Lobos. His brilliant style and technique and the clarity and warmth of his performances have established him as one of the finest guitarists of the 20th century. He was awarded the Orden de Andrés Bello in 1963.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Wade: Traditions of the Classical Guitar (London, 1980)

C. Cooper: 'Alirio Diaz and the Segovia Connection', Classical Guitar, xii/7 (1993–4), 11–18

PETER SENSIER/GRAHAM WADE

Díaz, Félix Guerrero. See GUERRERO DÍAZ, FÉLIX.

Díaz, Gaspar. 17th-century singer and composer, sometimes confused with GABRIEL DÍAZ BESSÓN.

Diaz (González), Joaquin (b Zamora, 14 May 1947). Spanish ethnomusicologist. In 1951 his family settled in Valladolid, where he completed his schooling and entered the university to study philosophy and law. Yielding to his desire to collect, study and perform the traditional music of Spain, especially that of Castile and León, he abandoned his university studies. Possessing a fine voice and a talent for playing instruments, he began what was to develop into a remarkable career in performance, recording and television, including recitals and conferences at universities and cultural institutions throughout Spain, Portugal, Europe and the USA. In 1980 he created the Centro Castellano de Estudios Folklóricos (Valladolid) and established the monthly journal Revista de folklore. In 1982 he became a member of the Real Academia de Bellas Artes de la Purísima Concepción (Valladolid); he was vice-president of the Sociedad Ibérica de Etnomusicología (1993–4) and in 1993 became Catedrático honorario at the University of Valladolid. In 1985 the Centro Castellano became the Centro Etnográfico de Documentación, which bears his name and which he directs. The centre houses a library, sound archives and two museums, and sponsors lectures and performances of traditional music.

The material which has served as the basis for his long and successful career comes from traditional sources, most of which he has collected himself. His fieldwork, scholarly writings and his many recordings have earned him a prominent place among Spanish folklorists.

WRITINGS

with J.M. Iñigo: Música pop – música folk (Madrid, 1971)

Canciones tradicionales renovadas por Joaquín Díaz (Madrid, 1978–83) [6 vols.]

with L. Díaz and J. Defín Val: Catálogo folklórico de la provincia de Valladolid (Valladolid, 1978–82) [5 vols.]

Temas del romancero en Castilla y León (Valladolid, 1980)

Cancionero del norte de Palencia (Palencia, 1981–2)

with L. Díaz Viana: Romances tradicionales de Castilla y León (Madison, WI, 1981)

El Duque de Marlborough in la tradicional española (Valladolid, 1982) with J.L. Alonso Ponga: Autos de navidad en León y Castilla (León, 1983)

Romances, canciones y cuentos de Castilla y León (Valladolid, 1983)

'Melodías prototipo en el repertorio romancístico', AnM, xxxix–xl (1984–5), 97–105

Instrumentos musicales en Castilla y León (Zamora, 1986)

Instrumentos populares (Valladolid, 1986)

El folklore y la cultura popular (Madrid, 1987)

Danzas y bailes (Valladolid, 1988)

with J.L. Alonso Ponga: La pastorada (Valladolid, 1989)

'Instrumentos de la música popular en la región leonesa', Seminario sobre etnografía y folklore de las comarcas leonesas I: Astorga 1989 (Astorga, 1990), 11–25

'Recopilaciones de folklore musical en Castilla y León (1862–1939)', Revista de folklore, x/11 (1991), 68–72

'La música en los romances', Trabajos y actas de la Real Academía de la Lengua Vasca, xxxvi (1991), 869–78

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.B. Varela de Vega: Encuentros con la música – desde mi mesa (Valladolid, 1981), 55–74

A. Hernández: Joaquín Díaz (Valladolid, 1983)

R. García Mateo: Homenaje a Joaquín Díaz (Zaragoza, 1991)

C. García Matos: 'El Centro Etnográfico "Joaquín Díaz"', RdMc, xiv (1991), 629–30

ISRAEL J. KATZ

Díaz, Justino (b San Juan, Puerto Rico, 29 Jan 1940). American bass. His studies at the University of Puerto Rico and the New England Conservatory were followed by training with Friedrich Jagel. He first appeared with the New England Opera Theater in 1961, and made his Metropolitan Opera début in 1963. Appearances for the American Opera Society, Casals Festival (Puerto Rico) and Spoleto Festival followed. In 1966 his career was firmly established by his performances at the opening night of the new Metropolitan Opera at Lincoln Center as Antony in Barber's Antony and Cleopatra, and under Karajan at the Salzburg Festival as Escamillo. Subsequent appearances included La Scala and at Hamburg and the Vienna Staatsoper. He sang in the performance of Ginastera's Beatrix Cenci that inaugurated the Kennedy Center Opera House in Washington, DC (1971), and made his Covent Garden début as Escamillo in 1976. Díaz established himself as one of the leading basses of the Metropolitan, where his evenly produced, warm basso cantante was heard in a wide range of Italian roles. He subsequently took on baritone parts, singing Iago for Zeffirelli's cinema version of Otello and at Covent Garden in 1990, and becoming a noted Scarpia. His recordings include roles in Medea, La Wally, Lucia di Lammermoor and oratorios by Handel.

RICHARD BERNAS

Díaz [Díez] Bessón, Gabriel (b ? Alcalá de Henares, *c*1580; d Madrid, 6 Nov 1638). Spanish composer. He has been confused with Gaspar Díaz, a younger singer and composer who entered the Spanish royal chapel as a choirboy in 1605. It is difficult to establish Gabriel Díaz's biography with any certainty, precisely because he exemplifies the high degree of mobility enjoyed by Spanish musicians at the time. The earliest trace of him comes from the Christmas villancicos which he sent from Córdoba to the Spanish court when it was resident in Valladolid (1601–6). From 1 January 1606 until 1614 he was vicemaestro of the royal chapel in Madrid, a post which included giving music lessons to the choirboys, and from January or February 1615 to March 1619 (or later) he was maestro de capilla at the collegiate church of S Pedro at Lerma, under the protection of the Duke of Lerma, the favourite of Felipe III. On the founding of the Convento de la Encarnación in Madrid in 1616, Díaz was commissioned to write the music for the funeral of Queen Margarita of Austria, the monastery's patron, who had died five years earlier. His whereabouts after leaving Lerma in 1619 are unknown, but it is possible that he may have been again in Madrid, since Luis de Góngora, in a letter dated 28 September 1621, stated that he (Góngora) acted as mediator in Díaz's appointment as maestro de capilla at Córdoba Cathedral. It is clear from another of Góngora's letters that Díaz was already in this post on 9 October 1621, but in 1623 he was again in Madrid at the Encarnación, according to Lope de Vega's comedy Carlos Quinto en Francia (published that year and dedicated to the composer). According to Mitjana y Gordón, Díaz occupied his Córdoba post for a second time from 16 November 1624 to May 1637 (he was certainly there in 1626), but on 19 May 1636 he was appointed maestro de capilla at the Convento de las Descalzas Reales, Madrid, a post he held until his death.

Díaz wrote both secular and sacred works. His sacred music is characterized by the systematic use of basso continuo and polychoral writing for voices and instruments (he helped to consolidate the use of both techniques in Spain), and by a rich and varied interplay of textures. The library of João IV of Portugal, destroyed in the 1755 earthquake, contained 843 of his compositions (villancicos, motets, masses, psalms, canticles, antiphons, hymns, responsories, Te Deum settings, Passions, Lamentations and versetti) and a treatise, Compendio de música para los primeros rudimentos de los compositores.

WORKS

Editions: Cancionero musical y poético del siglo XVII, recogido por Claudio de la Sablonara, ed. J. Aroca (Madrid, 1918) [A]
El Cancionero de la Sablonara, ed. J. Etzion (London, 1996) [E]

4 Misa ferial, 4vv, 5vv, 6vv, 8vv; 2 San, 4vv, 6vv; Gloria laus, 4vv: P-VV

Beatus vir, 8vv, org, bc; Credidi, 8vv, org, bc; 3 Dixit Dominus, 8vv, 2 org, bc; Laetatus sum, 8vv, 2 org, bc; Laudate Dominum omnes gentes, 8vv, 2 org; Mag, 8vv, 2 org, bc; Mag, S, 8vv, 3 org: E-E

Cum invocarem, 12vv, 2 org, VAc, VAcp; Fratres sobrii estote, motet, 9vv, bc, V; Lauda Jerusalem, T, 7vv, cornett, sackbut, dulcian, org, M. Querol's private collection, Barcelona; ed. in MME, xli (1982); Laudate Dominum omnes gentes, 8vv, 2 org, V; Mag, 8vv, Mn; Salve regina, 5vv, harp, SA

2 tonos a lo divino, 4vv, Mn, inc.; 2 villancicos, 6vv, SEG, inc.

5 romances, 3 other secular works, 4–5vv, D-Mbs, E-Mmc, Mn; all ed. in A, E; 1 ed. in MME, xxxii (1970)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F. Pedrell: Los músicos españoles antiguos y modernos en sus libros o escritos sobre la música (Barcelona, 1888)
R. Mitjana y Gordón: 'Comentarios y apostillas al "Cancionero poético y musical del siglo XVII", recogido por Claudio de la Sablonara y publicado por D. Jesús Aroca', Revista de filología española, vi (1919), 14–56, 233–67, esp. 255–8
R.A. Pelinski: Die weltliche Vokalmusik Spaniens am Anfang des 17. Jahrhunderts: der Cancionero Claudio de la Sablonara (Tutzing, 1971), 31–2, 36–7, 39, 60–65, 84
J. López-Calo: Historia de la música española, iii: Siglo XVII (Madrid, 1983), 164–5

LUIS ROBLEDO

Dibák, Igor (b Spišská Nová Ves, 5 July 1947). Slovak composer. He studied composition at the Žilina Conservatory (1962–6) and with Cikker at the Bratislava Academy of Music and Dramatic Art (1966–71). From 1969 to 1979 he was music editor for state television in Bratislava, after which he was appointed chief music editor at Czechoslovak Radio and then at Czechoslovak Television where he had begun. Dibák's works reveal an in-depth knowledge of modern compositional techniques; besides Cikker he was influenced by Stravinsky, Prokofiev, Hindemith and other composers from the first half of the 20th century. Despite their diversity, the various sources he draws upon are skilfully unified and form convincing, internally coherent structures. With its sober expressivity and economy of means the character of the music is decidedly neo-classical. His greatest achievements are the instrumental works, particularly the chamber pieces (e.g. the Partita and Humoresky) and the concertos, all of which explore wide-ranging technical and timbral possibilities. His sense of tonality – which contains elements of modality as well as free 12-note writing – later includes clusters in works such as the Cello Concerto of 1985. Dibák has also produced pedagogical pieces which typically encourage ensemble playing among children, and for teaching improvisation he has divised his own methodology. His operas Svietnik ('The Candelabra') and Silvester ('New Year's Eve') take human frailties to task, while resembling Stravinsky's Mavra or Shostakovich's The Nose in their style of conversational comedy and closed musical scenes.

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: Svietnik [The Candelabra] (op, 1, Dibák, after A.P. Chekhov), op.15, 1975–6, Bratislava, 12 June 1977; Portrét (ballet, 1, Dibák and P. Štilicha, after N.V. Gogol), op.18, 1977, unstaged, version for TV broadcast 1979; Silvester (TV op, 1, P. Štrelinger and Dibák), 1986, Czechoslovak TV, 1988; Majstri speváci drakopevci [Dragon Mastersingers] (children's op, 1, Štilicha), op.49, 1992, unperf.; Prorok Rak [Crayfish the Prophet] (children's op, 1, R. Čižmárik, after P. Dobšinský), 1993, unperf.

Orch: Chbr Sym., op. 5, 1968; Variations on a Theme by Vítězslav Novák, op.7, 1969; Concertino, op.8, 2 vn, orch, 1971; Musica festiva, op.12, ov., 1972; Divertimento, op.16, str, 1976; Fantasia, op.21, va, orch, 1979; Poéma, op.28, 1983; Altajské nokturno [Altai Nocturne], op.30, eng hn, perc, str, 1983; Vc Conc., op.33, 1985; Concertino, op.42, ob, orch, 1989; Conc. da camera, op.51, vn, orch, 1992; Suite, op.56, 1994; Conc., op.60, perc, chbr orch, 1996; Accdn Conc., op.62, 1992

Vocal: Aj láska je ďaleko [Also Love is Far] (trad. Chin. poetry, V. Mihálik, J.W. von Goethe), song cycle, op.3, Bar, pf trio, 1968, rev. 1971; Chbr Cant. (E. Barret-Browning, M. Desbordes-Valmore, A.S. Pushkin), op.10, S, chbr orch, 1972; 4 Songs (Mihálik), op.17, Bar, pf, 1977; Clivoty [Nostalgia] (P. Štilicha, R. Čižmárik), song cycle, op.19, S, pf, 1978; 3 romance, op.38, B, pf, 1987; Lyrické piesne [Lyric Songs] (Slovak poets), op.61, 1v, pf, 1996

Chbr and solo inst: Suite no.1, op.1, pf, 1964; Trio, op.1b, fl, cl, pf, 1965; Musica da camera, op.2, fl, cl, bn, 1967; Suite no.2, op.4, pf, 1968; Moments musicaux no.1, op.6, pf trio, 1969; Canto spaventoso, op.6b, 2 vn, 1969; Partita, op.14, va, 1975, arr. for vc 1989; Suite no.3, op.13, pf, 1975; Moments musicaux no.2, op.20, str qt, 1978; Moments musicaux no.3, op.22, org, 1980; Partita no.2, op.26, wind qnt, 1982; Capricciá, op.34, vn, pf, 1985; Humoresky, op.39, ob, cl, bn, 1987; Rapsódia, op.41, b cl, accdn, 1988; Musica elegica, op.43, cl, perc, pf, 1990; Noveletty, opp. 48, 52, 1991–2; Akvarely [Watercolours], op. 50, cl, pf, 1992; Passacaglia, op.55, accdn, 1993; Prelúdiá, op.57, hp, 1994; La valse, op.57b, gui, 1995; Suite, op.59, perc, 1995

Pedagogical: Detský svet [Children's World] (R. Čižmárik), op.17c, children's chorus, 2 rec, 2 vn, vc, perc, 1977; Pastorále, op.25c, 3 rec, str orch, 1981; Z prírody [From Nature] (P. Országh Hviezdoslav), op.27b, children's chorus, perc, 1982; pf pieces, other choruses

Folksong arrs.

Principal publisher: Slovenský hudobný fond

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. Podracký: 'K Dibákovmu Moments musicaux II', Hudobný život, xii/12 (1980), 5
I. Vajda: Slovenská opera (Bratislava, 1988), 194–5
Ľ. Chalupka: 'Slovenská hudba 20. storočia: Vývoj po roku 1945' [Slovak music in the 20th century: development after 1945], Dejiny slovenskej hudby, ed. O. Elschek (Bratislava, 1996), 273–342, esp.318
Ľ. Chalupka: 'Igor Dibák', 100 Slovenských skladateľov, ed. M. Jurík and P. Zagar (Bratislava, 1988), 75–8

VLADIMÍR ZVARA

Di Bari, Marco (b Casoli, nr Chieti, 6 Sept 1958). Italian composer. He studied the piano with M. Fumo and Bruno Canino, and composition with Lombardi and Gentilucci. He took his diploma in electronic music composition at the Milan Conservatory and has taken courses in composition and conducting at the Hochschule für Musik in Vienna, as well as graduating in humanities from Chieti University. He teaches composition at the Parma Conservatory. He won the SIAE prize in 1991 for his opera L'Histoire de Saint-Julien l'hospitalier. From his earliest works, Di Bari has placed the perception of sound and its evocative power at the centre of his interests as a composer. In Dove più dolce il suon migra (1985) and Come il suono dell'ore il ricordo (1986), the way in which he reduces and condenses the sound and projects it in space arises from a natural, physiological approach to composition. The manifesto of this artistic approach is his Sei studi sul naturalismo integrale (1986), where the piano writing, which alludes to Debussy, is inspired, in its repetitive and modular procedures, by a world inhabited by fractal objects and the fractal theories of the mathematician Mandelbrot.

His naturalistic philosophy that relates awareness to sensation can thus range from mimicking the way the kinetics of bodies in space are perceived, as in his Primo studio sugli oggetti in movimento (1989) to the recent Bird's Fractal Voice (1996), where naturalistic and scientific inspirations combine, with an acknowlegement of Messiaen's musical world.

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: La foresta in cantata (concerto di fiabe, 7 fiabe abruzzesi, R. Garbetta, after I. Calvino), L'Aquila Abruzzo Music Festival, 23 August 1990; L'histoire de Saint-Julien l'hospitalier (op, 1, G. Manfridi, after G. Flaubert), Festival d'Avignon, Tinel de la Chartreuse, 11 July 1991

Orch: Eternally Present, 1983; Dove più dolce suono migra, 1985; Come il suono dell'ore il ricordo, str orch/11 solo str, 1986; Marcia postuma per le esequie di W.A. Mozart, 1991; Frammento spaziale, pf, orch, 1992

Chbr and solo inst: Dans le cycle du temps, cl, 1986; 6 studi sul naturalismo integrale, pf, 1986–88; Going Message Air, fl, 1987; Primo studio sugli oggetti in movimento, bar sax, pf, 1989–90; 6 studi nuovo-classici sulla fisiologia della percezione, pf, 1992–3; Prima sonata, pf, perc, 1994; Bird's Fractal Voice, cl, vc, pf, bird calls, 1996

Vocal: Frammento primo, S, pf, 1989

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Pozzi: 'Per una nuova architettura dei sensi', Marco Di Bari Works 1985, BMG Ricordi CRMCD 358172 (1990) [disc notes]

M. Di Bari: Fine della modernità: verso una nuova sensibilità tra arte e scienza (diss., U. of Chieti, 1995)

RAFFAELE POZZI

Dibdin, Charles (b Southampton, bap. 4 March 1745; d London, 25 July 1814). English composer, dramatist, poet, novelist, actor, singer and entertainer. Dibdin was the 12th child of a parish clerk and a sorely tried mother who produced at least 14 children. His own claim to have been educated at Winchester College is not supported by the school records, though he did have lessons from James Kent and Peter Fussell, successive cathedral organists there. As a composer he was self-taught; he himself thought that he had learnt to compose by scoring Corelli's concertos from the separate parts and from reading Rameau's Traité de l'harmonie in English, but he must have learnt mainly from his practical experience in the theatre. By the age of 15 he was singing occasionally in such Covent Garden operas as required a chorus, supplementing his income by working for the music publisher John Johnson. The variety of his talents was already astonishing. He was only 18 when he published, more or less in full score, A Collection of English Songs and Cantatas, and a year later John Beard, the manager of Covent Garden, accepted The Shepherd's Artifice, an all-sung pastoral for which Dibdin wrote both words and music; he sang the leading role himself.

As an opera singer Dibdin's career was brief. He lacked the figure for a hero's role, but his flair for accents made him well suited to character parts. His first great success was as Ralph, the farmer's son in Arnold's popular pastiche opera, The Maid of the Mill (1765), and no doubt he played it with a broad Hampshire accent. Three years later he was a sensation as Mungo, the black servant in his own afterpiece opera The Padlock; the part is written in 'coon' English.

At this period Dibdin seldom wrote his own librettos. From 1767 to 1772 he was lucky enough to have as his collaborator Isaac Bickerstaff (1733–*c*1808), an Irishman who had previously written Thomas and Sally and Love in a Village for Arne as well as The Maid of the Mill for Arnold. His characterization and dialogue are reminiscent of Sheridan, who was in fact a good deal influenced by Bickerstaff's Lionel and Clarissa. Bickerstaff went to France in 1772, to escape prosecution for a homosexual offence, but before then Dibdin and he had created comic operas of a promise that cannot be paralleled in 18th-century England. The first was Love in the City (1767), which has an unusual libretto about London tradesmen; the novelty of this theme deprived the opera of the success it deserved. For their second full-length opera, Lionel and Clarissa (1768), they turned to the foibles of the landed gentry, a safer subject. Beard did not at first trust Dibdin to compose such operas in their entirety, and in any case the huge success of Love in a Village had aroused a taste for pastiche; Dibdin composed no more than the finales and two or three songs for Love in the City. What Dibdin called the Boxing Trio in the Act 2 finale must have struck a new note in English opera, for the heroine, Priscilla Tomboy, had to sing while engaged in some spirited fisticuffs in the street. When he wrote this finale Dibdin had just been singing Robin, the gardener in The Accomplished Maid, an English version of Piccinni's influential La buona figliuola, and this too had 'action' finales in several sections. Dibdin was the only English composer before Storace to write dramatic ensembles of this kind, and he did so frequently, for instance in Lionel and Clarissa. For this opera Dibdin composed as much as half the score himself, the rest being borrowed mainly from recent Italian operas given in London. Dibdin's contribution is galant and italianate in style; at this period he never wrote strophic ballads for his operas. The Padlock (1768) was the first of many 'dialogue' operas for which he composed all the music.

Dibdin first showed his unfortunate capacity for irritation when he suddenly left Covent Garden in summer 1768 and signed on for a seven-year spell at Drury Lane. He was free to write trifles for other theatres in the summer, and to make what he could from publishing his operas. The only Dibdin opera to survive orchestrally is The Recruiting Sergeant (1770), though the published full score omits the wind parts in the songs (wind parts for two of them, however, are in GB-Lbl). This and The Ephesian Matron were written for Ranelagh Gardens, where for two summers Dibdin was in charge of the music. They were all-sung (spoken dialogue was illegal there), but only concert performances can have been given in the small Ranelagh bandstand, and there was room for only four singers. His next major work, The Wedding Ring (1773), the libretto of which derives from Goldoni's Il filosofo di campagna, was not a success. The splendid 'action' quartet at the end of Act 1 passed unnoticed because the audience was obsessed by the erroneous belief that the words were by the disgraced and despised Bickerstaff. Garrick was more tolerant and quietly accepted from Bickerstaff in France a play called The Sultan, for which Dibdin wrote some unpublished music (1775). He and Bickerstaff had already created one 'harem' opera, The Captive (1769), and Dibdin wrote another on his own, The Seraglio (1776); their influence on the librettos of Mozart's 'harem' operas has been debated, but inconclusively.

During the 1770s Dibdin composed a number of 'dialogues' for the entertainments at Sadler's Wells. These dialogues were all-sung operas on cockney themes, each lasting about 15 minutes; the first was The Brickdust Man (1772). Only six dialogues are known to have been published, and of these only four are extant. Dibdin also sang at Ranelagh Gardens. He published some of his Ranelagh songs and then, thinking well of them, wrote an afterpiece round the most successful, The Waterman (1774). The charming libretto about working-class Londoners was his own, and the result was a lasting success. No other operatic successes came his way, apart from The Quaker (1775); the rest of his career was a long decline, caused not, as might be thought, by writing his own librettos – he could always write natural, easy dialogue – but by his increasingly truculent and quarrelsome behaviour.

Many of his troubles were matrimonial. He was married in his teens, but soon abandoned his wife in favour of a pantomime dancer, Harriet Pitt, by whom he had two sons. He then left Harriet and took up with an indifferent Drury Lane singer called Anne Wyld. Garrick, godfather to one of Dibdin's sons, consequently refused to re-engage Dibdin when his seven years had expired. By summer 1776 Dibdin's debts had risen to £800; he fled to France to avoid imprisonment, taking Miss Wyld and their daughter with him, and spent most of the next two years in Nancy.

In France Dibdin made efforts to repay his debts. He wrote as prolifically as ever, sending by post a stream of dialogues to Thomas King (at Sadler's Wells), and an opera libretto (The Gipsies) to Samuel Arnold, who had completed The Seraglio for him when he made his escape. He also laid up a store of dialogue operas based on French librettos which he translated and reset. At Drury Lane Thomas Linley (i), now in charge of the music, made an unexpected success of The Quaker, whose single performance in Garrick's day had been unremarked in the confusion of Dibdin's perfidy and Garrick's imminent retirement. The Quaker contains a delightfully individual patter song, 'Women are Will o' the Wisps', and some experimental ensembles in which the dialogue flows at the speed of recitative, virtually no words being repeated. Nearly all the music is of interest, apart from the overture. Dibdin's overtures were always poor; his strength lay in his dramatically motivated vocal lines, always so easy to sing in character.

In 1778 Dibdin returned to London and was employed by Thomas Harris at Covent Garden. Dibdin tried the experiment of publishing his Covent Garden music, not opera by opera, but in monthly anthologies drawn from several works, calling them The Monthly Lyrist (later The Lyrist or Family Concert; 1780–81); both this series and the Lyric Remembrancer (1799) collapsed from lack of response. In 1781, already out of patience with Dibdin, Harris proposed an operatic version of Dryden's Amphitryon, to be called Jupiter and Alcmena. After a disagreement about payment, Dibdin left. From then on none of the playhouses would employ him, except to write the occasional afterpiece opera – six in the following 30 years, all of them worthless.

Dibdin then joined Charles Hughes, owner of a riding school, and together they persuaded a group of business men to put up £15,000 for the building of a new theatre, the Royal Circus, south of the Thames near St George's Circus. Entertainments alternated between riding displays and short all-sung operas and ballets performed mainly or entirely by children. Dibdin engaged and coached the children, and wrote the entire repertory, words and music; he also mismanaged the theatre's business arrangements. This, coupled with difficulties over getting the theatre licensed, landed the proprietors in debt. Dibdin, also in debt, chose this moment to ask the proprietors for a substantial loan. They sacked him, and by February 1784 he was in the King's Bench, the debtors' prison, and writing an angry little book about what had happened (The Royal Circus Epitomized).

In summer 1787 he decided to emigrate to India. To raise money for the voyage, he made a nine-month tour of English provincial towns, singing his own songs interspersed with spoken patter at the pause marks. He wrote a very readable book about his tour in the form of a series of letters, which contains a great deal of interesting, if not always reliable, information about his life, his music and his finances. But when he set out on his voyage he found the sea not at all to his liking, and disembarked at Torbay. It then occurred to him to present his one-man entertainments in London. He gave his 'Table Entertainments' (generally a mixture of narration and singing by a single person seated behind a table and facing an audience, but their title apparently had little significance in Dibdin's case) from January 1789 until the middle of 1805 when he retired, having been promised a pension; when the pension was cut off he returned to his table entertainments for a few more disconsolate seasons. He had started them in the King Street auction rooms, Covent Garden, to an audience of not much more than a dozen, but they soon became popular, and on 31 October 1791 he proudly opened a tiny theatre off the Strand, the Sans Souci, specially built to his own requirements. He even had enough money to start his own publishing 'warehouse', and in 1796 he moved both theatre and warehouse to his new Sans Souci Theatre in Leicester Square.

The songs he composed and published at this time run into hundreds. They celebrate such contemporary events as establishing a 'telegraph' across the Channel and a parachute descent in 1802, but the most popular ones were those in which Dibdin could parade his humorous accents and spoken patter. During this period he was also writing vast quantities of prose. In 1790 he ran a periodical called The Bystander which he published anonymously in book form; he is thought to have written almost all the material himself. He even achieved three novels; Hannah Hewit was based on fact (a shipwreck in South Africa) and Dibdin tried to turn it into an afterpiece. He also wrote an uninteresting Complete History of the English Stage, an autobiography greatly padded out with his own song lyrics, a textbook called Music Epitomized (which had reached its 12th edition by 1835), and, most remarkable of all, his Observations on a Tour through . . . England and . . . Scotland. He undertook this and other tours in order to present his table entertainments outside London, and the surprising aspect of this volume is that it is illustrated with sepia prints taken from paintings by Dibdin himself. Those of the Lake District and the Scottish mountains bear little resemblance to their alleged subjects; nevertheless Dibdin was skilled in painting as in so many other activities.

In 1842 George Hogarth (Charles Dickens's father-in-law) published a massive volume called The Songs of Charles Dibdin. It was impossible for him to include all the music, but he tried to include all the lyrics, and they fill 306 closely printed two-column pages. Few famous poets wrote as much, though quantity is no recompense for quality. Dibdin died in Camden Town, destitute and friendless. According to Hogarth, he had married Miss Wyld when his first wife died; she at least stayed by him, as did one of his daughters.

Since his split with Harriet Pitt in 1775 he had scarcely seen their two sons. Charles Isaac Mungo Dibdin (1768–1833) became manager of Sadler's Wells in 1800 and was its proprietor from 1803 to 1819. His Memoirs (1830) remained unpublished until 1966. His son Henry (1813–66) taught music in Edinburgh and published The Standard Psalm Tune Book and some keyboard pieces; Henry's son James (1856–1901) wrote Annals of the Edinburgh Stage (1888). Dibdin's other son, Thomas John Dibdin (1771–1841), ran away from his apprenticeship to an upholsterer to become a provincial actor. By 1798 he was writing Covent Garden opera librettos, which were set mainly by Attwood, and he continued to write ephemeral theatre pieces all his life. His published Reminiscences (1827) scarcely mention his father.

WORKS

performed in London unless otherwise stated; all printed works published in London; vocal scores and librettos published soon after first performance unless otherwise stated

LCG – Covent Garden
LDL – Drury Lane
LLH – Little Theatre in the Haymarket
LRC – Royal Circus
LRG – Ranelagh Gardens
LSW – Sadler's Wells
aft – afterpiece
a-s – all-sung
pan – pantomime

STAGE

The Shepherd's Artifice (aft, a-s, 2, Dibdin), LCG, 21 May 1764, 2 songs (1764)
Love in the City (comic op, 3, I. Bickerstaff), LCG, 21 Feb 1767 [incl. music by G. Cocchi, F.H. Barthélemon, Galuppi, Jommelli, Pergolesi]; 1 song pubd (Dibdin) (Dublin, n.d.); reduced (aft, 2) as The Romp, or A Cure for the Spleen by T. Lloyd, Dublin, Capel Street, 23 Jan 1771
The Village Wedding (aft, J. Love), Richmond, 18 July 1767
The Sailor's Reception (pan, Love), Richmond, 15 Sept 1767
Lionel and Clarissa, or A School for Fathers (comic op, 3, part pasticcio, Bickerstaff), LCG, 25 Feb 1768; rev. as A School for Fathers, LDL, 8 Feb 1770
The Padlock (aft, 2, Bickerstaff, after M. de Cervantes: El celoso extremeno), LDL, 3 Oct 1768, ov. (1768)
Damon and Phillida (aft, 2, Dibdin, after C. Cibber), LDL, 21 Dec 1768
The Ephesian Matron, or The Widow's Tears (aft, a-s, 1, Bickerstaff, after Petronius: Satyricon), LRG, 12 May 1769
The Captive (aft, 2, part pasticcio, Bickerstaff, after J. Dryden), LLH, 21 June 1769
The Jubilee (aft, 2, pts, part pasticcio, Bickerstaff and others, based on D. Garrick's Shakespeare entertainment at Stratford), LDL, 14 Oct 1769; vs contains cantata Queen Mab in full score
Interlude in Amphitryon, or The Two Sosias (a-s, J. Hawkesworth, after Dryden), LDL, 23 Nov 1769
The Maid the Mistress (aft, a-s, Bickerstaff, after G.A. Federico), LRG, 28 May 1770; rev. as He Wou'd if he Could, or An Old Fool Worse than Any (burletta, 2), LDL, 12 April 1771
The Recruiting Sergeant (aft, a-s, 1, Bickerstaff), LRG, 20 July 1770; wind pts for songs not in full score, some pts in GB-Lbl
The Institution of the Garter (aft, a-s, 1, Garrick, after G. West), LDL, 28 Oct 1771
Amelia (aft, 2, part pasticcio, R. Cumberland), LDL, 14 Dec 1771
The Pigmy Revels (pan, Messink), LDL, 26 Dec 1772; no lib
The Brickdust Man (dialogue, Bickerstaff), LSW, 1772; vs incl. ov.
The Palace of Mirth (dialogue, Dibdin), LSW, 1772; vs pubd, no copy known
The Wedding Ring (aft, 2, Dibdin, after C. Goldoni), LDL, 1 Feb 1773, ov. Lbl Add.30950
The Ladle (dialogue, Dibdin, after M. Prior), LSW, 12 April 1773
The Grenadier (dialogue, ?Garrick), LSW, 19 April 1773
The Vineyard Revels (dialogue pan), LSW, 3 May 1773; vs pubd, no copy known
The Mischance (dialogue, Dibdin, based on 'The Barber of Bagdat'), LSW, 12 July 1773
The Trip to Portmouth (aft, 1, G.A. Stevens), LLH, 11 Aug 1773; collab. T. Arne
The Deserter (aft, 2, Dibdin, after M.-J. Sedaine), LDL, 2 Nov 1773; Monsigny's opera with new music by Dibdin and 2 airs by Philidor
A Christmas Tale (entertainment, 5 pts, Garrick, after C.-S. Favart, Fletcher and Dryden), LDL, 27 Dec 1773
The Waterman, or The First of August (ballad op, 2, Dibdin), LLH, 8 Aug 1774
The Cobler, or A Wife of Ten Thousand (ballad op, 2, Dibdin, after Sedaine), LDL, 9 Dec 1774; no vs
The Quaker (aft, 2, Dibdin, after C. Shadwell), LDL, 3 May 1775, vs (1777); incl. song by T. Linley (i)
The Sultan, or A Peep into the Seraglio (aft, 2, Bickerstaff, after Favart), LDL, 12 Dec 1775; no vs
The Blackamoor Wash'd White (aft, 2, H. Bate Dudley), LDL, 1 Feb 1776, Act 1, vs (1776), ov. pubd in pts but no set known
The Metamorphoses (aft, 2, Dibdin, after Molière: Le sicilien and George Dandin), LLH, 26 Aug 1776; no vs
The Seraglio (aft, 2, Dibdin), LCG, 14 Nov 1776; completed by S. Arnold
Yo Yea, or The Friendly Tars (dialogue, Dibdin), LSW, 18 Aug 1777; 3 songs (1777)
Poor Vulcan (aft, burletta, a-s, 2, Dibdin, after P.A. Motteux), LCG, 4 Feb 1778; vs omits all recits. from Act 2 and some from Act 1
Rose and Colin (aft, 1, Dibdin, after Sedaine), LCG, 18 Sept 1778; no vs
The Wives Revenged (aft, 1, Dibdin, after Sedaine), LCG, 18 Sept 1778; no vs
Annette and Lubin (aft, 1, Dibdin, after Favart), LCG, 2 Oct 1778, finale Lbl Add.30955; no vs
The Medley (pan, Dibdin), LCG, 14 Oct 1778; rev. as The Mirror, or Harlequin Everywhere (3 pts), LCG, 30 Nov 1779
The Touchstone (pan, 2 pts, Dibdin), LCG, 4 Jan 1779; unusual for its spoken dialogue; vs (1779/*R*1990 in MLE, D1)
The Chelsea Pensioner (aft, 2, Dibdin, after J.F. Marmontel), LCG, 6 May 1779, ov. and 6 vocal items in The Lyrist; no vs
Plymouth in an Uproar (aft, 2, E. Neville), LCG, 20 Sept 1779, ov. and 1 song in The Lyrist; no vs
The Shepherdess of the Alps (3, Dibdin, after Marmontel), LCG, 18 Jan 1780; no vs
The Islanders (3, Dibdin, after G.F.P. Saint-Foix), LCG, 25 Nov 1780, ov. and 12 songs in The Lyrist (1780–81); only song texts pubd, no vs; shortened as The Marriage Act (aft, 2), LCG, 17 Sept 1781; no vs
Harlequin Freemason (pan, Dibdin), LCG, 29 Dec 1780, ov. and songs in The Lyrist; no vs
Jupiter and Alcmena (3, Dibdin, after Dryden: Amphitryon), LCG, 27 Oct 1781, MS lib US-SM, no vs
The Graces (1, Dibdin), LRC, 1782, lib pubd; no music known
The Talisman (of Orosmanes) (pan, Dibdin), also called The Magic of Orosmanes, LRC, 28 March 1783, 1 song (1783), another with recit. GB-Lbl Add.30951, lib. pubd
Robin Hood (pan, Dibdin), 9 June 1783, ov. and background music Lbl Add.30950
Pandora (pan, Dibdin), LRC, 14 July 1783, several MS items SOp (with other unidentified Dibdin music), 2 lyrics in Hogarth
The Long Odds (serenata, Dibdin), LRC, 27 Oct 1783, at least 7 songs Lbl Add.30951–3, MS lib Lbl Add.30964
The Lancashire Witches (pan, Dibdin), LRC, 27 Dec 1783, piece for woodwind Lbl Add.30952; song texts pubd, no copy known
The Cestus (serenata, 1, Dibdin), LRC, 1783, vs without linking recits. (1783)

The Saloon (interlude, Dibdin), LRC, 2 Feb 1784, 3 song texts in Hogarth
Liberty Hall (aft, 2, Dibdin), LDL, 8 Feb 1785, ov. Lbl Add.30950
The Life, Death, and Renovation of Tom Thumb (burletta, Dibdin), LRC, 28 March 1785, songs Lbl Add.30952, lib pubd
Clump and Cudden (interlude, Dibdin), LRC, May 1785; 1 song in Lyric Remembrancer (1799), others Lbl Add.30954–5, 4 song texts in Hogarth
The Benevolent Tar, or The Miller's Daughter (1, Dibdin), LRC, 1785, songs Lbl Add.30951–2, 30955 and in Hogarth, lib pubd
Harvest Home (aft, 2, Dibdin), LLH, 16 May 1787, songs, Lbl Add.30951 and 30955
The Provaction (ballet pan, J. Byrne), LCG, 4 Oct 1790
A Loyal Effusion in honour of His Majesty's Birthday (aft, 1, Dibdin), LCG, 4 June 1794, MS lib US-SM, no vs
Hannah Hewit, or The Female Crusoe (aft, 2, Dibdin), LDL, 7 May 1798, MS lib SM, no vs; only 1 perf.
The Broken Gold (ballad op, 2, Dibdin), LCG, 8 Feb 1806, MS lib GB-Lbl Add.30963, only song texts pubd
The Round Robin (aft, C.I.M. Dibdin), LLH, 21 June 1811, songs Lbl Add.30952–3

Other operas, inc. and unperf., incl. MS libs to Hassan and The Cake House, Lbl
Hogarth gives lyrics from the following Sadler's Wells dialogues of which no music survives: England against Italy, 1773; None so Blind as Those who Wont See, 1773; The Imposter, 1776; The Razor-Grinder, 21 April 1777; She is Mad for a Husband, 1777; The Old Woman of Eighty, 1777; other titles in The Musical Tour and Grove5, but nothing is known of these works
Other pieces, for the Royal Circus, from which nothing survives, listed in Dibdin's The Musical Tour, The Professional Life etc.

TABLE ENTERTAINMENTS

6 to 39 songs from each published separately

King's Street auction rooms: The Whim of the Moment, 23 Jan 1789
Lyceum: The Oddities, 7 Dec 1789; The Wags, 18 Oct 1790
Polygraphic Rooms: Private Theatricals, 31 Oct 1791; The Coalition, 4 Feb 1792, mostly from The Oddities and The Wags
Sans Souci: The Quizes, 13 Oct 1792; Castles in the Air, 12 Oct 1793; Nature in Nubibus, 18 March 1794; Great News, 11 Oct 1794; Will o' the Wisp, 10 Oct 1795; Christmas Gambols, 29 Dec 1795
New Sans Souci: The General Election, 8 Oct 1796; Valentine's Day, 14 Feb 1797; The Sphinx, 7 Oct 1797; King and Queen, 6 Jan 1798; A Tour to Land's End, 6 Oct 1798; Tom Wilkins, 5 Oct 1799; The Goose and the Gridiron, 18 Jan 1800; The Cake House, 11 Oct 1800; A Frisk, 3 Oct 1801; Most Votes Carry It, 9 Oct 1802; Britons Strike Home, 17 Sept 1803; The Frolic, 10 Oct 1804; A Trip to the Coast, 10 Oct 1804; The Election, Dec 1804; New Year's Gifts, 1 Jan 1805; Heads and Tails, 12 Feb 1805
Lyceum: Professional Volunteers, 1 March 1808; The Rent Day, 1808; Commodore Pennant, 16 Jan 1809, little new material

OTHER WORKS

A Collection of English Songs and Cantatas, op.1 (1763)
The Ballads sung by Mr Dibdin ... at Ranelagh (*c*1770)
Shakespear's Garland, or the Warwickshire Jubilee, 5 songs and 2 duets (1769); 12 Minuets (1769); 12 Country Dances and 6 Cotilions (1769); Queen Mab (cant.), S, full score (1770): all for Garrick's Stratford Jubilee, 1769
A Collection of Catches and Glees (1772)
Six Lessons, hpd/pf (*c*1772)
Vaux Hall Songs (1773)
The Monthly Lyrist, later The Lyrist or Family Concert (1780–81); periodical anthology of Dibdin's theatre music
Datchet Mead, serenata (1797); sung in shortened version of The General Election
The Lyric Remembrancer (1799); periodical anthology of Dibdin's theatre music
8 British War Songs, 1v, military band (1803–4); some sung in table entertainment Britons Strike Home
The Passions in a Series of Ten Songs (1806)
Numerous single songs and instrumental arrangements of his own and others' works (see RISM and BUCEM)

WRITINGS

published in London unless otherwise stated

MUSIC TEXTBOOKS

Music Epitomized (1804)
The Musical Mentor (1807)
The English Pythagoras, or Every Man his own Music Master (1808)

OTHER BOOKS

The Royal Circus Epitomized (1784)
The Musical Tour of Mr. Dibdin (Sheffield, 1788)
The Bystander, periodical (1789), book (1790)
Hannah Hewit, or The Female Crusoe, novel (1792)
The Younger Brother, novel (1793)
A Complete History of the English Stage (1797–1800)
Observations on a Tour through almost the Whole of England and a Considerable Part of Scotland (1801–2)
The Professional Life of Mr. Dibdin (1803, enlarged 2/1809)
Henry Hooka, novel (1807)
The Public Undeceived about his Pension (1807)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BDA; FiskeETM; LS
ABCdario Musico (London, 1780)
Charles Dibdin: a Collection of over One Hunderd Letters, Portraits, Manuscript, & Playbills relating to Charles Dibdin and his Family (US-CA, Theatre Collection)
W. Kitchener: The Sea Songs of Charles Dibdin: with a Memoir of his Life and Works (London, 1823)
G. Hogarth: The Songs of Charles Dibdin (London, 1842) [incl. memoir and notes, historical, bibliographical and critical]
E.M. Lockwood: 'Charles Dibdin's Musical Tour', ML, xiii (1932), 207–14
E.R. Dibdin: A Charles Dibdin Bibliography (Liverpool, 1937)
E.R. Dibdin: 'Charles Dibdin as a Writer', ML, xix (1938), 149–70
W. Partington: Charles Dibdin: the Man whose Songs helped to Win the Battle of Trafalgar and who did not allow the Nation to forget it, either (London, 1944) [incl. sale catalogue of Dibdiniana]
H.G. Sear: 'Charles Dibdin: 1745–1814', ML, xxvi (1945), 61–5
P.A. Tasch: The Dramatic Cobbler: the Life and Works of Isaac Bickerstaff (Lewisburg, PA, 1971)
R. Fahrner: The Theatre Career of Charles Dibdin the Elder (1745–1814) (New York, 1989) [incl. chronological list of Dibdin's staged works, 215–27]
I. Cholij: Review of C. Dibdin: The Touchstone, or Harlequin Traveller, MLE, D1 (London, 1990), ML, lxxii (1991), 327–9

ROGER FISKE/IRENA CHOLIJ

Dibelius, Ulrich (b Heidelberg, 14 Nov 1924). German critic and writer on music. He studied music in Frankfurt and Heidelberg (1942–7), concentrating on the cello, and qualified as a music teacher; later he also took courses in literature, art history and sociology at the universities of Frankfurt and Hamburg, where his teachers included Horkheimer, Adorno and Wolffheim (1951–4). He was an editor for newspapers in Hamburg and Frankfurt (1953–4) before becoming a Dramaturg and editor for North German Radio in Hamburg (1954–7) and music editor for Bavarian Radio in Munich (1957–87). After writing music reviews in the 1950s he began to publish longer essays dealing with the sociological aspects of modern and avant-garde music and modern Bavarian composers. His major publication, Moderne Musik (1966–88), is a critical and analytic account of the development of music since World War II.

WRITINGS

'Winfried Zillig', Musica, xii (1958), 651–5
'Henzes ästhetisches Selbstporträt', Melos, xxxii (1965), 69–74
Moderne Musik, i: 1945–1965 (Munich, 1966); ii: 1965–1985 (1988)
'Polnische Avantgarde', Melos, xxxiv (1967), 7–16
ed.: Musik auf der Flucht vor sich selbst (Munich, 1969) [incl. 'Die zerschlagene Leier des Orpheus', 116–32]
ed.: Verwaltete Musik: Analyse und Kritik eines Zustandes (Munich, 1971) [incl. 'Kritik als Reklame', 118–32]
Mozart-Aspekte (Munich, 1972, 2/1973)
ed.: Herausforderung Schönberg (Munich, 1974) [incl. 'Exposition eines Widerspruchs', 62–77]
'Ein Musiker der Unöffentlichkeit: Schubert und das soziale Klima seiner Klang-Erfindung', Franz Schubert, Musik-Konzepte (1979), 26–49 [special issue]
'Abfälle – Ausfälle: Notizen zum Musikbegriff bei Dieter Schnebel', Dieter Schnebel, Musik-Konzepte, no.16 (1980), 3–11

'"La Prise de Troie": doppelt bis dreifach', Jacques Offenbach, Musik-Konzepte, no.13 (1980), 17–36
'Abweichung – Gegensatz – Zusammenschluss: Beobachtungen an Béla Bartóks Streichquartetten', Béla Bartók, Musik-Konzepte, no.22 (1981), 39–54
'Werthierarchie und Negationslust: Kompositionpsychologische Aspekte bei Ligeti', György Ligeti: Personalstil - Avantgardismus - Popularität, Studien zur Wertungsforschung, xix, ed. O. Kolleritsch (Wien and Graz, 1987), 106–118
'Positionen – Reaktionen – Konfusionen: die zweite Welle der deutschen Musik nach 1945', Merkur: deutsche Zeitschrfit für europäisches Denken, Jg.45, nos.9–10 (1991), 915–27
'Wilhelm Killmayrs engagierte Privatheit', Der Komponist Wilhelm Killmayr, ed. S. Mauser (Mainz, 1992), 16–21
ed., with F. Schneider and E. Hansen: Neue Musik in geteilten Deutschland, i: Dokumente aus den fünfziger Jahre (Berlin, 1993); ii: Dokumente aus den sechziger Jahren (1995); iii: Dokumente aus den siebziger Jahren (1997); iv: Dokumente aus den achtziger Jahren (1999)
'Gefährdung und Bestätigung: warum ist unser Verhältnis zu Schubert so ambivalent?', Franz Schubert - heute?, ed. W. Loeckle and A. Roeseler (Regensburg, 1994), 77–118
György Ligeti: Eine Monographie in Essays (Mainz, 1994) with others: Karl Amadeus Hartmann (Tutzing, 1995) [incl. 'Hartmanns Idee einer Musica viva', 68–77]

HANSPETER KRELLMANN

Di Cataldo, Salvatore [Cataldo, Salvatore di] (fl Pietraperzia, Sicily, 1555). Italian composer. His only known work, Tutti i principi de' canti dell'Ariosto posti in musica (Venice, 1559), is an unusual collection of settings for four voices of the opening stanzas of all 46 cantos of Orlando furioso; the dedication to the Marchesa of Pietraperzia is dated 1 January 1555. The cantus part is punctuated by crotchet rests marking off phrases that can be sung in one breath; the melodic and harmonic style sometimes betrays its derivation from the traditional sung recitations of epic poetry. The conception of the work is similar to that of Laura Terracina's Discorso sopra il principio di tutti i canti d'Orlando furioso (Venice, 1550), which was reprinted at Venice in 1559. Di Cataldo may have known Terracina's work as some poems by her were set by Pietro Havente, who also served the Marchesa of Pietraperzia.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Einstein: The Italian Madrigal (Princeton, NJ, 1949/R), i, 206
L. Bianconi: 'Sussidi bibliografici per i musicisti siciliani del Cinque e Seicento', RIM, vii (1972), 3–38
M.A. Balsano, ed.: L'Ariosto: la musica, i musicisti (Florence, 1981)
M.A. Balsano: 'La Martoretta di Calabria e gli inizi della scuola polifonica siciliana', Polifonisti calabresi dei secoli XVI e XVII: Reggio Calabria 1981, 35–77
M.A. Balsano: 'Gli elisi siciliani della Martoretta di Calabria': introduction to Giandomenico Martoretta: Il secondo libro di Madrigali cromatici a 4 voci (1552), MRS, xi (1988)
P.E. Carapezza: 'Madrigalisti siciliani', Nuove effemeridi, no.11 (1990), 97–106

PAOLO EMILIO CARAPEZZA, GIUSEPPE COLLISANI

Dicey, William. English music publisher, successor to JOHN CLUER.

Dichord. See TRUMPET MARINE.

Dick, Robert (b New York, 4 Jan 1950). American flautist and composer. He studied composition and electronic music with Robert Morris, Bulant Ariel and Druckman and the flute with H. Henry Zlotnik, James Pappoutsakis, Julius Baker and Thomas Nyfenger, receiving the BA from Yale College in 1971 and an MM in composition from Yale School of Music in 1973. After a period in New York, during which he held a solo recitalist grant from the National Endowment for the Arts (1983) as well as two composer fellowships (1988, 1992) from the same body, he moved to Lucerne in 1992. He was awarded a Guggenheim Foundation fellowship in 1994.

His first flute work was Afterlight for flute solo (1973), published by Dick's own Multiple Breath Music company in 1984. Subsequently he has composed some 70 pieces for the instrument, often using other members of the family (piccolo, A♭ piccolo, alto flute and bass flutes in F and C) and providing ensemble partners including the vibraphone, vibraharp, electric guitar, drums, non-Western woodwind instruments and live electronics. He made his first solo recording of his own works in 1981 (Whispers and Landings, Lumina Records 007). Subsequent recordings have also included improvisations (Irrefragable Dreams, Random Acoustics RA 018, 1996), multi-track flutes, partnerships with other instruments such as shakuhachi and basurī, and works by other composers including Berio, Coltrane, Debussy, Dolphy, Hendrix, Rothenberg and Varèse. He is the author of a number of important treatises on contemporary extended flute techniques.

WORKS
(selective list)

Afterlight, fl, 1973 (1984); Flames Must Not Encircle Sides, fl, 1980 (1989); Flying Lessons: 6 Contemporary Concert Etudes (1983, 1987); Dorset Street, fl, 1988 (1990) [incl. in anthology: A Very Easy Twentieth-Century Album (London, 1990); Sun Shower, fl, 1988 (1990) [incl. in same anthology]; Lookout, fl, 1989 (1989); Conc., fl + b fl, str, perc, 1990 (1990); Eyewitness, 4 fl, 1990 (1991); Undercover, 2, fl, 1993 (1994) [incl. in anthology Flautando (Aarau, 1994)]; The Sea of Stories, fl with fl orch, 1993; All the Time, Anyway, fl, elec gui, drums, 1994; ReDugMeNot, b fl in F, elec gui, drums, 1994; Sea of Stories Remix, multiple voices, flutes (1 player/spkr), 1994; Steambird, pic, 1994; Quiet, Please fl/b fl, basurī fl, perc, 1995; Satan, Oscillate My Metallic Sonatas, amp b fl, 1995; 5 of the 10 Commandments of Modern Life and Love (collab. T. Kessler), flautist/spkr (fl, b fl in F, pic), live elecs, 1996; My Own Railroad, flautist/spkr (fl, b fl in F, pic), live elecs, 1996; Some of the Time, Perpetually, fl, vn, mar, elec b, drums, 1996; Tarradiddle, fl, pf, contrabass, 1996; Life Concert, fl, pf, 1997; New Truths, Not Vicious Pleasures, fl, a sax, tpt, 1997; Sic Bisquitus Disintegrat, b fl in F, elec gui, drums, 1997; Crinkum Crankum, contrabass fl, elec gui, drums, 1998; Felix on the Helix, fl with Dick 'glissando headjoint', 1998; Photosynthesis, fl, elec gui, drums, 1998; Flute Photosynthesis, fl, 1999; Thunder Tube, contrabass fl, 1999

Prinicipal publisher: Multiple Breath Music

WRITINGS

The Other Flute: a Performance Manual of Contemporary Techniques (London, 1975, 2/1989)
Tone Development through Extended Techniques (New York, 1986)
Circular Breathing for the Flutist (New York, 1987)

ARDAL POWELL

Dickens, Charles (b Portsmouth, 7 Feb 1812; d Gad's Hill, nr Rochester, 9 June 1870). English writer. He wrote the libretto for John Hullah's 'operatic burletta' The Village Coquettes, produced at St James's Theatre in December 1836, while his first novel, The Pickwick Papers, was appearing in monthly instalments. References to opera in his novels are infrequent, but he often attended performances at Covent Garden and Her Majesty's Theatre, and in letters praised Mario, Grisi, Lind and Viardot (especially as Fidès in Meyerbeer's Le prophète). In Paris he was moved to tears by a performance of Berlioz's version of Gluck's Orfeo in November 1862 (with Viardot in the title role) and, a few months later, by Gounod's Faust. As editor of the journals Household Words and, later, All the Year Round, he published articles about music from time to time, and in 1869 published in All the Year Round several attacks on Wagner, probably written by his friend Henry Fothergill Chorley.

Although there have been many dramatizations of Dickens, these have been principally in the form of stage plays or films, which give more obvious scope for his colourful and topical writing and especially his social commentary than opera can readily accommodate; there are no settings of his novels as operas from his own time, and not until the 20th century have composers shown an interest in using his works

WORKS SET TO MUSIC
all novels

The Pickwick Papers (1836–7): C. Wood, 1922, as A Scene from Pickwick; A. Coates, 1936, as Pickwick
Barnaby Rudge (1841): J. Edwards, 1901, as Dolly Varden
The Old Curiosity Shop (1841): L. Landi, 1916, as Nelly
A Christmas Carol (1843): B. Herrmann, 1954; J. Cikker, 1963, as Mr Scrooge; L. Liviabella, 1963, as Canto di Natale; T. Musgrave, 1979
Martin Chuzzlewit (1844): C. Wood, 1924, as The Family Party
The Cricket on the Hearth (1845): G. Gallignani, 1873, as Il grillo del focolare; K. Goldmark, 1896, as Das Heimchen am Herd; R. Zandonai, 1908, as Il grillo del focolare; A. Mackenzie, 1914
A Tale of Two Cities (1859): A. Benjamin, 1957

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.T. Lightwood: Charles Dickens and Music (London, 1912)
C. Cudworth: 'Dickens and Music', MT, cxi (1970), 588–90

ROBERT BLEDSOE

Dickerson, Roger Donald (b New Orleans, 24 Aug 1934). American composer and jazz pianist. He began piano lessons at the age of eight and also learnt to play brass instruments at a young age. A relative, Wallace Davenport, who played in the Lionel Hampton Band, furnished him with a basic knowledge of harmony, counterpoint and orchestration. He went on to study at Dillard University (BMus 1955) and Indiana University (MM 1957), where his teachers included Bernhard Heiden. During military service he continued to perform, compose and arrange music. A Fulbright Fellowship enabled him to pursue further study at the Vienna Academy of Music under Schiske and Uhl. In 1975 he co-founded the Creative Arts Alliance. He has taught at Southern University, New Orleans, and served as a consultant in the humanities for the Institute for Services to Education. Among his honours are a John Hay Whitney Fellowship and the Louis Armstrong Memorial Award. His works feature polyphonic textures, dissonant chordal structures and elements derived from jazz and the blues. He is the subject of the 1978 PBS documentary New Orleans Concerto.

WORKS

Orch: Concert Ov., 1957; Essay, band, 1958; Fugue 'n' Blues, jazz orch, 1959; A Musical Service for Louis, 1972; Orpheus an' His Slide Trombone (J. Greenberg), 1974–5; New Orleans Conc., pf, orch, 1976
Vocal: Fair Dillard (J.N. Barnum), SATB, 1955; Music I Heard (C. Aiken), S, pf, 1956; The Negro Speaks of Rivers (L. Hughes), S, pf, 1961; Ps xlix, SATB, timp, 1979; African-American Celebration (Dickerson), SATB, 1984; Beyond Silence (Dickerson), S, Bar, 3 tpt, 3 trbn, timp, org, 1986
Chbr and solo inst: Prekussion, perc ens, 1954; Music for Brass, 2 tpt, trbn, 1955; Ww Trio, 1955; Das neugeborne Kindelein, chorale prelude, org, 1956; Sonatina, pf, 1956; Str Qt, 1956; Music for Str Trio, 1957; Scene, hn, str qt, 1959; Movt, tpt, pf, 1960; Sonata, cl, pf, 1960; Wind Qnt, 1961; Concert Pieces for Beginning Str Players, 1972; Expressions, vn, pf, 1983; Incantation, vn, pf, 1983; Fanfare, 2 tpt, timp, 1991

Principal publishers: Peer-Southern, E.C. Schirmer

BIBLIOGRAPHY

SouthernB
A. Tischler: Fifteen Black American Composers: a Bibliography of their Works (Detroit, 1981)
L.R. Wyatt: 'Roger Dickerson, Composer', Black Music Research Newsletter, vi/2 (1984), 3–5

LUCIUS R. WYATT

Dickinson, Clarence (b Lafayette, IN, 7 May 1873; d New York, 2 Aug 1969). American organist and composer. He studied at Miami University, Oxford, Ohio, and at Northwestern University in Chicago. After further study in Berlin and in Paris with Moszkowski (piano), Guilmant (organ) and Pierné (composition), he went to St James's Episcopal Church in Chicago and then to the Brick Church (Presbyterian) in New York in 1909. In 1912 he became professor of church music at Union Theological Seminary, where in 1928 he established the School of Sacred Music. He was its director until he retired in 1945. With his wife Helen Adell (Snyder) Dickinson (1875–1957), a writer, he produced a steady stream of church anthems and other music that contributed significantly to the improvement of taste in local churches. In 1917 they published Excursions in Musical History, a book written in popular style reflecting their views on many aspects of music. He edited Historical Recitals for Organ in 50 numbers, a series that educated generations of organists, widening horizons and elevating taste. His most famous organ work was the Storm King Symphony for orchestra and organ (1921); In Joseph's Lovely Garden, an Easter carol, was his best-known anthem. His Technique and Art of Organ Playing (New York, 1922) went into many editions, and the hymnal that he edited in 1933 for the Presbyterian Church (USA) was widely used. In 1954 he and his wife edited an important series of 18th-century Moravian anthems. The Clarence Dickinson Memorial Library of Church Music has been established at William Carey College in Hattiesburg, Mississippi.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G.L. Knight: 'Clarence Dickinson, 1873–1969', American Organist, iii/10 (1969), 26–31, 59 only
W. Jenkins: 'Honoring Clarence Dickinson', Music: the AGO and RCCO Magazine, vii/7 (1973), 29 only

VERNON GOTWALS

Dickinson, Emily (b Amherst, MA, 10 Dec 1830; d Amherst, 15 May 1886). American poet. After attending Amherst Academy, she spent a year at Mount Holyoke Female Seminary before returning to Amherst, where she lived the rest of her life in increasing seclusion. In her later years the theme of music, particularly the music of nature, became an important motif in her poetry. She wrote nearly 1800 poems, although only a handful were published in her lifetime. Most of them use metres derived from English hymnody, particularly common or ballad metre. Of all American poets, Dickinson ranks behind only Longfellow and Whitman in the number of poems that have been set to music.

The earliest known settings are Have you got a brook in your little heart? (1896) by Etta Parker and Six Songs (1897) by Clarence Dickinson; most settings date from 1945 onwards. The innovative use of non-traditional rhymes, subtle metrical variations, concentrated images and predominantly first-person dramatic voice, as well as the simple yet often passionate style of her poems, make them well suited for musical setting.

Perhaps the best-known cycle of Dickinson poems is Copland's Twelve Poems by Emily Dickinson. Other cycles include Thirteen Poems of Emily Dickinson by George Perle, An Emily Dickinson Mosaic by Daniel Pinkham, Songs to Poems of Emily Dickinson by Otto Luening, Nature, Quiet Airs and From Emily's Diary by Ernst Bacon, Harmonium by John Adams and the melodrama Magic Prison by Ezra Laderman. Dorothy Gardner adapted her play Eastward in Eden: the Love Story of Emily Dickinson for opera, with music by Jan Meyerowitz. Other composers who have set Dickinson's poems include Rudolf Escher, Arthur Farwell, Leon Kirchner and Thomas Pasatieri.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveA (M. Hovland) [incl. further bibliography]
M.W. England: 'Emily Dickinson and Isaac Watts: Puritan Hymnodists', Bulletin of the New York Public Library, lxix (1965), 83–116; repr. in M.W. England and J. Sparrow: Hymns Unbidden: Donne, Herbert, Blake, Emily Dickinson and the Hymnographers (New York, 1966), 113–47
M.A. Hovland: Musical Settings of American Poetry: a Bibliography (Westport, CT, 1986)
C. Lowenberg: Musicians Wrestle Everywhere (Berkeley, 1992)
B. Soll and A. Dorr: 'Cyclical Implications in Aaron Copland's Twelve Poems of Emily Dickinson', College Music Symposium, xxxii (1992), 99–128
P. Dickinson: 'Emily Dickinson and Music', ML, lxxv (1994), 241–5

MICHAEL HOVLAND

Dickinson, George Sherman (b St Paul, MN, 9 Feb 1888; d Chapel Hill, NC, 6 Nov 1964). American music educationist. He studied at Oberlin College (BA 1909), Oberlin Conservatory (MusB 1910) and at Harvard (MA 1912); he became an associate of the American Guild of Organists (1910) and studied theory and composition in Berlin (1913–14). He worked as an organist and choirmaster in various churches (1902–21) and taught the organ and theory at Oberlin Conservatory (1914–16) before joining the faculty at Vassar (full professor 1922–53, music librarian 1927–53, chairman of the music department 1932–4). He made many study trips to Europe and lectured during the summers at several American universities. He was one of the principal founders of the American Musicological Society and its journal (JAMS), serving as chairman of its organizing committee (1934) and as president and chairman of the publication committee (1947–8) when JAMS was established. Oberlin College awarded him an honorary MusD in 1935. Dickinson was also active in the Music Library Association (president 1939–41). At Vassar he developed one of the best college music libraries in the country; his Classification of Musical Compositions (1938) is one of the bases of American music librarianship. Many of his other writings are concerned with musical style, the study of which he regarded as an essential part of music education.

WRITINGS

'Foretokens of the Tonal Principle', Vassar Mediaeval Studies, ed. C.F. Fiske (New Haven, CT, 1923), 431–77
The Growth and Use of Harmony (New York, 1927)
Classification of Musical Compositions: a Decimal-Symbol System (Poughkeepsie, NY, 1938)
The Pattern of Music (Poughkeepsie, NY, 1939)
'The Study and Style as the Clue to Higher Music Education', Music Teachers National Association: Proceedings, xxxviii (1944), 200–15
Music as a Literature: an Outline (Poughkeepsie, NY, 1953)
The Study of Music as a Liberal Art (Poughkeepsie, NY, 1953)
The Study of the History of Music in the Liberal Arts College (Poughkeepsie, NY, 1953)
'Aesthetic Pace in Music', Journal of Aesthetics and Art Criticism, xv (1956–7), 311–21
'Analogical Relations in Musical Pattern', Journal of Aesthetics and Art Criticism, xvii (1958–9), 77–84; repr. in JAMS, xiii (1960), 262–9
A Handbook of Style in Music (Poughkeepsie, NY, 1965)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Obituary, Notes, xxi (1964–5), 522 only
G. Haydon: 'George Sherman Dickinson 1888–1964', JAMS, xviii (1965), 219–21
C.J. Bradley: The Dickinson Classification: a Cataloguing & Classification Manual for Music (Carlisle, PA, 1968)
C.E. Steinzor: American Musicologists, c.1890–1945: a Bio-Bibliographical Sourcebook to the Formative Period (New York, 1989), 43–7

JON NEWSOM

Dickinson, Peter (b Lytham St Annes, 15 Nov 1934). English composer, pianist and musicologist. As organ scholar at Queens' College, Cambridge, he was a pupil of Philip Radcliffe. He also received advice and encouragement from Berkeley. In 1958 he was given a scholarship to the Juilliard School, where he studied with Bernard Wagenaar. While in the USA he encountered and was influenced by Cage, Cowell and Varèse, and worked as a pianist with the New York City Ballet and as a critic and lecturer. In 1962 at the College of St Mark and St John, Chelsea, he initiated classes in improvisation and experimental music. Following a lectureship at Birmingham (1966–70), he became in 1974 the first professor of music at Keele University, where he founded what has become one of the most important centres for the study of American music outside the USA. From 1991 to 1997 he was chair of music at Goldsmiths' College, University of London, and in 1996 was made Fellow and head of music at the Institute of United States Studies, London.

If his early work shows affinities with middle-period Stravinsky, the original application of simple material in the experimental and aleatory works of the 1970s recalls Ives and Satie, composers in whom Dickinson has a special interest and whose works he often performed with his sister, the mezzo-soprano Meriel Dickinson. He has also accompanied leading instrumentalists such as the violinist Ralph Holmes and oboist Sarah Francis, and given several international lecture-recital tours.

His prolific writings reflect his widespread interests within American music, from the 1964 series of articles on improvisation to more recent studies of postmodernism, for which he coined the term 'style modulation' to describe the interweaving of past and present or serious and popular musics. Such eclecticism also colours his compositional output, including the organ, piano and violin concertos, the trio Hymns, Rags and Blues and the variations for organ, Blue Rose (based on MacDowell's To a Wild Rose). These works, with their appealing, often witty, interplay of ragtime, jazz, serialism and tape-playback, affirm the distinctive and refreshing character of Dickinson's aesthetic. His published works include two collected editions of the music of Lord Berners (London, 1982).

WORKS
(selective list)

VOCAL

Stage: The Judas Tree (music theatre, T. Blackburn), actors, 2 T, chorus, brass, perc, str, 1965
Choral: 2 Motets (Blackburn): John, Mark, ATB, 1963, rev. SATB, 1990; Martin of Tours (Blackburn), T, Bar, chorus 2vv, chbr org, pf duet, 1966; The Dry Heart (A. Porter), SATB, 1967; Outcry (W. Blake, J. Clare, T. Hardy), A, SATB, orch, 1968; Late Afternoon in November (Dickinson), 16 solo vv, 1975; A Mass of the Apocalypse, SATB, spkr, perc, pf, 1984; Tiananmen 1989, double SATB, tubular bells, 1990

Solo vocal: A Dylan Thomas Cycle, Bar, pf, 1959; 3 Comic Songs (W.H. Auden), T, pf, 1960, rev. 1972; An e.e. cummings cycle, Mez, pf, 1965; Extravaganzas (G. Corso), Mez, pf, 1970; Winter Afternoons (E. Dickinson), 6 solo vv, db, 1971; Surrealist Landscape (Lord Berners), Ct/Mez, pf, tape; Lust (St Augustine, Dickinson), 6 solo vv, 1974; Schubert in Blue (W. Shakespeare), Mez, pf, 1977 [after F. Schubert]; The Unicorns (J. Heath-Stubbs), S, brass band, 1982; Stevie's Tunes (S. Smith), Mez, pf, 1984; Larkin's Jazz, spkr/v, fl + a fl, cl + b cl + E♭ cl, s sax, tpt, vc, pf, perc, 1989; Summoned by Mother (J. Betjeman), Mez, hp, 1991

INSTRUMENTAL

Orch: Transformations, 1970; Conc., str, perc, elec org, 1971; Org Conc., 1971; Pf Conc., 1984; The Unicorns, brass band, 1984 [arr. of vocal work]; Vn Conc., 1986; Jigsaws, chbr orch, 1988; Merseyside Echoes, 1988

Chbr and solo inst: Str Qt no.1, 1958; 3 Juilliard Dances, fl, cl, bn, tpt, trbn, perc, pf, vc, 1959; Fanfares and Elegies, 3 tpt, 3 trbn, org, 1967; Translations, rec, b viol, hpd, 1971; Rec Music, rec, tape, 1973; Str Qt no.2, with tape/pf, 1975; Solo, baryton, tape/b viol/baryton, 1976; American Trio (Hymns, Rags and Blues), vn, cl, pf, 1985; London Rags, 2 tpt, hn, trbn, tuba, 1986; Auden Studies, ob, pf, 1988; Cellars Clough Duo, 2 gui, 1988; 5 Explorations, gui, 1989; Suffolk Variations, gui, 1992; Swansongs, vc, pf, 1993

Kbd: Vitalitas Variations, pf, 1957, orchd for ballet, 1959; Paraphrase 1, org, 1967; Paraphrase 2, pf, 1967; Satie Transformations, pf, 1970; Suite for the Centenary of Lord Berners, clvd, 1972; Conc. Rag, pf, 1973, rev. 1984; Pf Blues, 1973; Quartet Rag, pf, 1975; Blue Rose, pf, 1979; Hymn-Tune Rag, pf, 1985; Wild Rose Rag, pf, 1985; Blue Rose Variations, org, 1985; Patriotic Rag, pf, 1986; Sonatas for Pf, pf, tape, 1987

Principal publisher: Novello

WRITINGS

'Charles Ives 1874–1954', MT, cv (1964), 347–9
'Improvisation', MT, cv (1964), 294–5, 377–8, 538–9, 612–13, 688–9, 766–7
'John Cage', Music and Musicians, xiv/3 (1965–6), 32–4, 54 only, 56 only
'Erik Satie (1866–1925)', MR, xxviii (1967), 139–46
'A New Perspective for Ives', MT, cxv (1974), 836–8
ed.: American Music: Keele 1975
ed.: Twenty British Composers (London, 1975) [incl. 'Transformations of Erik Satie', p.47]
'A Note on Some Recent Works', MT, cxviii (1977), 559 only [on Dickinson's works]
'Recent Research on American Musical Traditions', IMSCR XII: Berkeley 1977, 353–82
'The Achievement of Ragtime: an Introductory Study with some Implications for British Research in Popular Muisc', PRMA, cv (1978–9), 63–76
'Lord Berners, 1883–1950', MT, cxxiv (1983), 669–72
'William Schumann: an American Symphonist at 75', MT, cxxvi (1985), 457–8
'Stein, Satie, Cummings, Thomson, Berners, Cage: Toward a Context for the Music of Virgil Thomson', MQ, lxxii (1986), 394–409
'Directors of a Decade', MT, cxxviii (1987), 15–17
The Music of Lennox Berkeley (London, 1988)
'The American Concerto', A Companion to the Concerto, ed. R. Layton (New York, 1989), 305–25
'Style-Modulation: an Approach to Stylistic Pluralism', MT, cxxx (1989), 208–11
'Virgil Thomson (1896–1989)', MT, cxxxi (1990), 31 only
'Nationalism is Not Enough: a Composer's Perspective', Music and Nationalism in 20th-Century Great Britain and Finland, ed. T. Mäkelä (Hamburg, 1997), 27–34
Marigold: the Music of Billy Mayerl (Oxford, 1999)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

CC1 (B. Morton)
R. Norrington: 'Peter Dickinson', MT, cvi (1965), 109–10
A. Payne: 'Peter Dickinson', MT, cxii (1971), 755–6

HUGO COLE/MALCOLM MILLER

Dickman, Stephen (Allen) (b Chicago, IL, 2 March 1943). American composer. He studied theory and composition (with Druckman), cello (with Louis Garcia-Renard), and trumpet (with Emil Hauser) at Bard College (BA 1965), and theory and composition with Arthur Berger and Harold Shapero at Brandeis University (MFA 1968), and with Krenek at the Berkshire Music Center (1968). His student awards include the Joseph H. Bearns Prize (String Quartet, 1967) and two BMI Student Composer Awards (1968, 1969). In 1971 he won a Fulbright scholarship for study in Rome, with Petrassi (composition) and Giuseppe Selmi (cello). His a cappella opera, Real Magic in New York, is highly contrapuntal and uses generative rhythmic and melodic techniques.

During the early 1970s Dickman travelled widely in Europe and Asia, as documented in Musical Journeys I–IV (1972–6), and studied Indian music and the sāraṅgī, a bowed instrument with sympathetic strings, in London and Bombay (1973–4). Song Cycle (1975–80) shows the influence of traditional Turkish, Persian, and Indian music in its use of multiple repetitive rhythmic structures and melodic counterpoint, reminiscent of Indian rāga. From 1976 to 1981 Dickman taught at the Tape Music Center, Mills College. Since the mid-1980s, the majority of his works have been vocal or dramatic, such as the opera Tibetan Dreams (1987–90).

WORKS

Stage: Real Magic in New York (op, R. Foreman), 1971; Str Trio: Dance (V. Matthews), 1980; Tibetan Dreams (op, G. Glickman), 1987–90; Behold and Reflect, 1993; 7 Dancing Princesses, 1994; King Arthur, 1996; Cyrano, 1997

Vocal: The Snow Man (W. Stevens), S, ens, 1966; On Mere Being (Stevens), S, ens, 1968; Continual Conversations with a Silent Man (Stevens), S, 1969; Song Cycle, 3 S, 3 vn, 1975–80: The Song of the Reed (Jalalul-Din Rumi), Love the Hierophant (Rumi), My Love Makes me Lonely (Dickman), I am a Lover (Dickman), Song (Dickman), Davani Shems-I-Tabrizi (Rumi); 10 Not Long Songs (Dickman), 1v, 1977; Magic Circle (Dickman, E. Frank), chorus, ens, 1980; At Night (Dickman), S, 1981; Orch by the Sea (Dickman), 4 S, orch, 1983; 3 Songs (Dickman), 7vv, 7 str, 1984; Ps cxxxvii, chorus, perc, 1986; Maximus Song Cycle (C. Olson), S, vn, vc, pf, perc, 1987–8; Winter Song (Dickman), Bar, 2 vn, vc, perc, 1989; Words no more (Rumi), chorus, 1993; If there were no Birds (E. and N. Dickman-Frank), S, vn, 1994; Who says Words (Rumi), Bar, vc, 1994; Rabbi Nathan's Prayer, S, vn, 1995; 4 for Tom (Rumi, Milarepa), Bar, pf, 1997; The Music of Eric Zann, 1998

Chbr and solo inst: Str Trio no.1, 1965; Str Qt no.1, 1967; Damsel, 16 insts, 1968; Violoncello, 1969; 2 Violins, 1969; Str Trio no.2, 1970–71; Pf Piece, 1971; 4 Pf Pieces, 1971; Musical Journeys I–IV, unspecified insts, 1972–6; Str Qt no.2, 1978; Str Qt no.3, 1978; Str Qt no.4, On Themes by E.F., 1978; Influence of India, fl, vn, va, vc, pf, 1980; Everything and Everything, 3 tpt, str, 1982; Trees and Other Inclinations, pf, 1983; Indian Wells, pf, 1985; The Wheels of Ezekiel, chbr orch, 1985; Island, perc, 1988

Tape: Frei, 1966; Lacerations, 1966

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Jacobson: 'Try Humming a Bit of a Tibetan Drum', Newsday (15 Nov 1988)
A. Kozinn: '"Tibetan Dreams": New Stephen Dickman Opera', New York Times (22 Oct 1990)

STEPHEN RUPPENTHAL/DAVID PATTERSON

Dickson, (Katharine) Joan (Balfour) (b Edinburgh, 21 Dec 1921; d London, 9 Oct 1994). Scottish cellist and teacher. She started cello lessons at the age of nine, and at 13 led the cellos in the first performance in Edinburgh of Bach's St Matthew Passion. She gave a début recital in Edinburgh in 1942, after which she studied with Ivor James at the RCM (1947–9), and with Fournier in Paris. From this time she made several tours as a soloist and in chamber music with the Will Smit Trio. She was also a founder-member of André Mangeot's quartet (1948–50). She completed her studies with Mainardi in Rome, Salzburg and Lucerne (1950–53) and became one of his most distinguished pupils. She made her London recital début in 1953, and became a member of the Edinburgh Quartet (1953–8) and the Scottish Piano Trio (1958–69). She played in cello and piano duos with her sister Hester and with Joyce Rathbone. She was appointed to teach at the Royal Scottish Academy of Music in 1954 and became a professor at the RCM in 1967. As a player she possessed technical mastery and a tone of warmth and sweetness, and her interpretations reflected the integrity of her musical approach. Several composers including Kenneth Leighton (Sonata, 1967) dedicated works to her. Nonetheless, she felt that she had more to offer as a teacher, and as such became one of the most distinguished and sought-after in Britain.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

CampbellGC

M. Campbell: 'Joan Dickson', The Strad, ci (1990), 186–90

M. Campbell: Obituary, The Independent (12 Oct 1994)

M. Campbell: 'Standard Bearer for the Cello', The Strad, cvi (1995), 178–9 [obituary]

MARGARET CAMPBELL

Dictionaries and encyclopedias of music.

I. Introduction. II. Before the 18th century. III. From the 18th century to the present.

I. Introduction

In a charmingly ironic mixture of self-deprecation and pride, Samuel Johnson began the magnificent preface to his famous Dictionary (1755) with these words:

> It is the fate of those who toil at the lowest employments of life, to be rather driven by the fear of evil, than attracted by the prospects of good; to be exposed to censure, without hope of praise; to be disgraced by miscarriage, or punished for neglect, where success would have been without applause, and diligence without reward. Among these unhappy mortals is the writer of dictionaries . . .. Every other author may aspire to praise; the lexicographer can only hope to escape reproach, and even this negative recompense has been yet granted to very few.

As Johnson knew, there had been and would be many such unhappy mortals engaged in this particular lower employment of life. Some of their works, like his own, would achieve lasting fame and widespread importance; others would serve in more modest fashion people's day-to-day need to understand the ideas, words, facts and things by which they lived. All would be the result of a fierce natural urge to compile and compact the knowledge of the world or of a special interest into handy compendia in order to control it – an urge as old as civilization itself. The classical encyclopedias and dictionaries, from Nabnitu XXXII (18th century BCE) to Dasypodius's Lexikon (1573), though they resemble only slightly those of modern times, nevertheless sprang from the same compulsion, a central purpose not disguised by the various and often inexact names they bore: Vocabularium, Thesaurus, Etymologicum, Catholicon, Elucidarium, Bibliotheca, Glossarium and others. Such compendia were written by scholars for scholars, not specifically for musicians, and were mainly systematically arranged summae (i.e. collections of all knowledge).

Modern lexicography of music began in the 18th century, with the first large-scale dictionary of musical terms (Brossard, 1703) and the first music encyclopedia (Walther's Lexicon of 1732). Both compilers, along with the later historian Hawkins (1776) and bibliographers Forkel (1792), Lichtenthal (1826) and Becker (1836), indicate their dependence on many of the early summae, though rarely the degree of dependence. Little research has been done into the sources, particularly the classical ones, used by these and later writers, and it is therefore not possible to establish fully the extent to which modern music lexicography is based on those classical antecedents. There are several works which, in their own ways, exemplify the kinds of study needed and which may serve as models of methodology: Stig Walin's study of terms for musical instruments in early Swedish lexica, Thurston Dart's examination of musical terms in Cotgrave's 1611 Dictionarie, Padelford's work with old English glosses and vocabularies, Düring's study of Greek musical terminology, H.H. Eggebrecht's Handwörterbuch der musikalischen Terminologie and Srinivasan's examination of the sources for the Nāṭyaśātra.

The first sections of this article (§II, 1 and 2 below) discuss the precursors of Brossard and Walther and draw attention to the many outstanding research problems. Here and in §III, 1 and 2 a fairly strict chronological sequence has been followed and several of the more important general dictionaries and encyclopedias with musical sections have been included. In §III, 3, which is arranged chronologically by type, only specifically musical works are discussed.

II. Before the 18th century

1. To the 15th century. 2. 16th and 17th centuries: Reisch to Bayle.

1. TO THE 15TH CENTURY. The first known collection of musical terms is one of the oldest extant musical documents. Nabnitu ('Creature'), a compendium of the Old Babylonian period (*c*1800 BCE), treated all areas of human activity and is typical of Mesopotamian scribal instincts. Book XXXII, one of a small corpus of cuneiform musical texts, preserves intact the nine canonical string names and their arrangement, followed by a long and fragmentary list of tunings, instruments and instrument parts, most of which remain unidentified. Many of the Akkadian terms are given their Sumerian equivalents, implying a still older tradition of which Nabnitu XXXII was merely the codification. In fact, some of the Sumerian terms appear in musical contexts as early as the 24th century BCE. Besides the Nabnitu, which continued to be copied through the neo-Babylonian period (*c*300 BCE), the first important non-Western treatise is Bharata's Nāṭyaśāstra, a Sanskrit work giving a comprehensive account of dramaturgy in all its aspects, including music. In its present form, the Nāṭyaśāstra is generally agreed to date from the 2nd or 3rd century CE, but its jumbled inconsistency reveals the incorporation of much earlier material of indeterminate date and origin. The problem of chronology and sources plagues Sanskrit literature in general, not least the Dattilam of Dattila, a compendium of ancient Indian music first published in a translation by Wiersma-te Nijenhuis in 1970. Itself dating from around 700 CE, one of its verses attests the existence of earlier terminological dictionaries: 'One should understand the words from common practice with the help of manuals of terms and other [books]'.

The first two centuries of Greek musical literature, between the Peri mousikes of Lasus of Hermione (late 6th century BCE) and Aristoxenus' extant Elementa Harmonica, have been lost. In any case it was not until the 4th century BCE that the first true musicologists – Glaucus of Rhegium, Heraclides of Pontus, Phaenias of Eresus, and Aristoxenus himself – began to make systematic collections of Greek musical history. These treatises, now lost, were key sources for Imperial compilers such as Athenaeus and pseudo-Plutarch, and ultimately supplied much material for the late lexica. Such compilations reflect the Greek cosmopolitanism, with its more generalized forms of language, literature, art and music, which was the hallmark of the Hellenistic age.

In such a form Greek music and musical literature came at length to Rome, although it remained a somewhat exclusive art. Vitruvius, the master builder of Augustan Rome, warned that 'harmonike is a dark and difficult subject, especially for those who do not read Greek'. In Book V of De architectura Vitruvius reports and defines many Greek musical terms which are not strictly relevant to his theme; chapter IV in particular is, in effect, a detachable musical dictionary. Earlier still was Varro's Disciplinae (1st century BCE), a comprehensive textbook based on the Greek system of education. Although Varro was eccentric in defining nine subjects rather than the canonical seven of later antiquity – nothing remains of the section on music – the work was an important prototype of encyclopedic form in its organization of material into such broad categories. With the addition of voluminous notes, a practice apparently begun by Pliny the Elder in his encyclopedic Historia naturalis of *c*77 CE, the Trivium and Quadrivium provided the basic format for most encyclopedic works up to the 17th century.

Although Walther did not mention Pliny's work (which contains virtually no musical material), he gave a description of Julius Pollux's Greek lexicon, the Onomasticon (*c*180 CE), an excellent example of the format pioneered by Varro and Pliny. This work defines many musical terms relating to form and style, instruments, dances and drama; both it and Pliny's Historia were known to Brossard. Pollux's contemporary, Athenaeus, compiled the Deipnosophistae ('Learned Banqueteers', *c*200 CE), the most famous example of that curious genre in which arid stockpiles of trivia are made more palatable through being served as witty dinner conversation. Lichtenthal amplified Walther's description of the Deipnosophistae, noting the musical terms and topics which appear in it. This gastronomic glossary is of special interest for its origins in previous collections, particularly the huge lexicon of Pamphilus of Alexandria W (*c*50 CE), itself derived from many earlier sources now lost. Both the Deipnosophistae and the coeval De musica attributed to Plutarch, which features a less imaginative party of diners, are of still greater importance for preserving extensive fragments of the 4th-century musicologists; indeed, these works are little more than digests of Aristoxenus and his colleagues.

Some time between the 1st and 4th centuries CE, Aristides Quintilianus produced his De musica, the closest any ancient writer came to a comprehensive encyclopedia of music. The author begins by decrying earlier piecemeal discussions of music, then presents a systematic account of harmonics, metrics, composition, instruments, notation and acoustics, including extensive treatments of the physiological, psychological and cosmological aspects of the art. Some of this material may well go back to the Archaic period (6th century BCE). About 420 Martianus Capella, again borrowing freely from many predecessors, produced his curious De nuptiis Philologiae et Mercurii, an allegorical fantasia on the liberal arts. The ninth book ('De harmonia'), drawing heavily on Aristides, was printed in Marcus Meibom's Antiquae musicae auctores septem (1652) and Gerbert's Scriptores (1784). Walther will have known the work from his reading of Meibom. About CE 500 Stephanus of Byzantium compiled his De urbibus, noted by Forkel, Becker and Lichtenthal, and about the same time Boethius wrote his well-known De institutione musica. The latter exerted a great influence on Cassiodorus, compiler of the notable De artibus ac disciplinis liberalium litterarum of *c*560; chapter 5 of book 2, Institutiones musicae, is printed in Gerbert and was apparently well known to Walther.

One of the most authoritative reference books of medieval Christendom, the Etymologiae of Isidore of Seville, was completed about 600. Isidore was especially concerned with the words used by his clerical brethren, adding to his systematically arranged encyclopedia two dictionaries of terms, one alphabetical, one topical. Among the most widely-used books of the Middle Ages (there are about 1000 surviving manuscript copies, according to Collison, 1964), the Etymologiae became a source for countless subsequent lexicographers and exerted a profound influence on learning for a millennium. Eggebrecht ('Lexika der Musik', MGG1) believed that the 11th-century Vocabularium at Monte Cassino was an epitome of the work; Bartholomeus Anglicus in his 13th-century De proprietatibus rerum repeatedly stated that things were 'As Isyder sayth'; Walther and Brossard both noted it. In the Handwörterbuch der musikalischen Terminologie (1972–) it is cited as an authority for meanings; there are studies of its musical importance by Tello, Fontaine and Avenary; excerpts are translated in StrunkSR1.

The Myriobiblon, sive Bibliotheca librorum, written in the 9th century by Photius, a patriarch of Constantinople, is important even today for its extracts from and comments on the writings of nearly 300 authors whose works are otherwise lost. Such syntheses were often more popular, more frequently reproduced and more enduring than the originals from which they were drawn, a tendency already visible in the various anthologiae or florilegia of later antiquity. Also from the 9th century come two Chinese encyclopedias: the T'ung-tien ('Complete institutions') by Tu Yu (735–812), chapter 5 of which is devoted to music, and the Yüeh-fu tsa-lu ('Miscellaneous notes on music', *c*890–900) of Tuan An-chieh. The latter is a remarkable work made widely available in a translation and study by Gimm. Chapters 13–26 cover instruments and their masters, 27–40 individual compositions; chapter 41 is on theory and 42 on institutions, including floor plans for music schools.

The relationship of Arabic musical works to the Western classical tradition remains largely unexplored, involving both the adaptation of Greek authors and the later reintroduction of this material to the West via Spain and in Latin translation. From the 10th century come the Mafāhtīh al-'ulūm ('Keys to the sciences', 975–7) of al-Kwarizmī, with three chapters in book 2 devoted to music, and the compendious Kitāb al-aghānī al-kabīr ('Great book of songs') by al-Iṣfahānī, which includes biographies of musicians. The latter has been frequently translated and reprinted in whole or in part, but the place of both works in the history of music lexicography remains unclear.

Popular throughout the Middle Ages, the 11th-century Suidae lexicon circulated widely in manuscript before its first publication (Milan, 1499) and was still in use in the 17th century. It was exceptional in eschewing the conventional systematic arrangement of medieval encyclopedias, by book and chapter based on the seven liberal arts. Instead, it was arranged alphabetically, and its nearly 30,000 entries embrace proper names of people and places as well as terms. Although it draws mainly on Greek literature, some Roman scholarship is also included. Forkel, Lichtenthal, Becker and others remarked that it contained many musical terms and 'historical notices' about music, some of which are now seen to belong to pre-Aristoxenian musical traditions deriving ultimately from the lost works of the 5th century and even preserving traces of an oral theoria of the Archaic period. Hugh of St Victor, writing in about 1127, did employ the traditional categories of systematic arrangement in his Didascalion, adding new ones as well: ethics, crafts and physics. He avoided the catholic secularity of the Suidae lexicon, keeping to more monastic concepts and drawing heavily on Boethius, Augustine of Hippo, Cassiodorus, Plato and others.

Another widely known encyclopedia of the Middle Ages and Renaissance, and one of those most readily available to musicians because Hawkins reprinted it in his General History of Music (1776), was De proprietatibus rerum by the English Franciscan friar Bartholomeus Anglicus, who graciously acknowledged his indebtedness to Isidore. It was written about 1230 and translated frequently (into French, Spanish, Dutch and English in the 14th century) before the first edition was printed in 1472. An English translation made by John of Trevisa in 1397 appeared about 1495 and was republished frequently, several times in an edition enlarged by Stephen Batman. Brossard noted it among those works he would have liked to study; Walther provided a biography of Bartholomeus in his Lexicon, admitting that he saw the name in Brossard's list. Imitating Bartholomeus and also dependent on Isidore (to the point of obvious plagiarism) was Vincent de Beauvais' Speculum maius, compiled about 1244. In spite of its borrowings from Isidore (or perhaps because of them), it became one of the major encyclopedias of the Middle Ages, and now furnishes ideas about tastes, prejudices and intellectual concerns in the 13th century more clearly than many of its counterparts. Walther mentioned it, but apparently did not see it, although he does seem to have known Johannes Balbus's contemporary Catholicon, which, like the Suidae lexicon and many later works, included proper-name entries.

Brunetto Latini's Li livres dou trésor of about 1264 was probably the first major exception to the tradition of writing in Latin. His departure from it was more than just a change of language; it indicated a change of audience. This was the first encyclopedia compiled for laymen, and it became immensely popular. Between Guglielmo da Pastrengo's De originibus rerum libellus (*c*1350) and Johannes Tinctoris's Diffinitorium (*c*1495), there were few lexica of importance. Eggebrecht ('Lexika der Musik', MGG1) discussed several general terminological dictionaries, including Gerardus de Scheieren's Vocabularium (1477) and Wenceslaus Brack's Vocabularius rerum (1483), which, although unrelated to the work of Tinctoris, exemplify the growing demand for translations of Latin terms into other languages. These Latin–German dictionaries show clearly the derivative nature of most lexicographical work at the time; Brack, for example, derived most of the definitions for his 80 musical terms from Isidore via Hugh of St Victor (Eggebrecht, 'Lexika', RiemannL12).

Tinctoris's Terminorum musicae diffinitorium, published in the 1490s but written before 1475, is certainly the most important musical incunabulum. Nearly 300 terms from a wide range of musical matters are defined with almost cryptic conciseness. Parrish noted in the preface to his excellent translation (1963) that many of the definitions reappear verbatim in some of Tinctoris's later treatises. The sources that Tinctoris used for these definitions cannot be clearly determined. It is unlikely that he relied on any of the general encyclopedias then in circulation; nor does he appear to have used the 11th-century Vocabularium in Monte Cassino, with definitions (unlike Tinctoris's) derived mainly from Isidore. He may have relied solely on earlier music theorists, for the Diffinitorium includes only theoretical terms: there are no proper names, aesthetic considerations or descriptions of musical instruments. Although eight copies of the printed book and three early manuscripts (one from the 15th century and two from the 16th, with some 19th-century copies of them) survive, there is no evidence that the Diffinitorium had any impact on subsequent compendia, and most musicians continued to use the works of Pollux and Isidore, the Suidae lexicon and others.

2. 16TH AND 17TH CENTURIES: REISCH TO BAYLE. There is, however, a variety of evidence to show the much greater influence and fame of Gregor Reisch's Margarita philosophica (1503), with its 32 chapters on music largely derived from Boethius. It was known to a number of 16th-century German theorists; Brossard, Walther and Janovka cite it among their sources, and Zaccaria Tevo's famous treatise of 1706, Il musico testore, quotes extensively from it.

Less famous, but also cited by Janovka as one of his sources, was Calepino's Dictionarium (1502). Predominantly a dictionary of terms, though containing some proper names, it was a standard reference work for over 200 years, expanding through many editions to include several languages by 1573. The Lectionum antiquarum, published by Rhodiginus (Richerius) in 1516, contained a large number of musical terms scattered throughout its ten chapters. It was cited by Brossard and Walther, but none of the three 18th-century scholars seems to have known Valla's De expetendis, et fugiendis rebus opus (1497) or the interesting Polyanthea by Nani Mirabelli (1503), which was arranged alphabetically by subject with etymologies and quoted examples of word usage. Nor did they mention the various dictionaries by Robert Stephanus (Estienne) (1531 and 1539), by his son Henry (1572), by Erasmus Alberus (1540) or by Dasypodius (1573). They did, however, use the revised edition of Hadrianus Junius's Nomenclator (1567), in which music terms can be found in rubrics 243–51. The only separate dictionary of music terms from the 16th century and one of the few in manuscript is Giovanni del Lago's Sequitano alquante definitioni di musica, written in 1530 and apparently unknown until Edward Lowinsky mentioned it in 1956.

Although Brossard and Walther used a number of the works mentioned primarily for definitions of terms, the sources they used for biographical and bibliographical information were more numerous. These include Conrad Gesner's Bibliotheca universalis (1545) and Bibliotheca instituta et collecta (1574), though apparently not the proper-name dictionary Dictionarium historicum ac poeticum of 1554 by Charles Stephanus (Estienne), which Collison (1964) called the 'first indigenous French encyclopedia'. The last was a popular lexicon which grew out of Torrentinus's Elucidarius (1498) and, progressing through more than 20 editions by 1700, served as the basis for Louis Moréri's notable Le grand dictionnaire historique, first published in 1674. There is a similar wealth of English counterparts: Thomas Elyot's Dictionary (1538), which became the Bibliotheca Eliotae (1542) and was published under that title in many subsequent editions; Thomas Cooper's Thesaurus linguae Romanae et Britannicae (1565), the first dictionary to place proper names in a separate alphabet; and Thomas Thomas's Dictionarium linguae latinae et anglicanae of 1587.

Walther was more dependent than Brossard on the steadily increasing numbers of bibliothecae and bio-bibliographical dictionaries describing the lives and works of artists and writers that appeared throughout the 17th century. He examined and cited many of them as his sources – Gesner (1545), Sacredonius (1558), Poccianti (1589), Verdier (1585), Possevinus (1593) and Alberici (1605). Draudius's three Bibliothecae (1610 and the two in 1611) provided him with information for many of his biographical entries, although he also used many local biographical works, including John Bale's Illustriūm Maioris Britanniae scriptorum (1548), which, with a second edition covering 14 centuries, served as a major source of information about English musicians; the later Bibliotheca belgica of Andreae (1623); Sweertius's Athenae belgicae (1628); and many Italian sources, such as Picinelli (1670) and Oldoinus (Oldoini; 1676, 1678), all three books containing many notices of writers of the 16th and 17th centuries, Mandosio (1682), Cozzando (1685) and Mongitore (1707–14). Also frequently cited are König (1678), Lipenius (1682), Bayle (1697), Mencke, Schöttgen and Jacobi (1717), Jablonski (1721) and many lesser sources.

Neither Walther nor Brossard seems to have known the interesting collection Icones diversorum hominum by Boissard (1591), which, according to Becker, contains 35 portraits of 15th- and 16th-century musicians with biographical notices, nor the first edition of Allacci's invaluable Drammaturgia (1666), a dictionary of dramas that included many operas. They also seem to have overlooked some important terminological works, particularly John Rider's Bibliotheca scholastica: a Double Dictionarie (1589), which was widely used in England and which contained proper names as well as terms. Other major dictionaries with musical sections are Goldast's Almannicarum rerum scriptores and Nicot's valuable Thrésor de la langue francoise (both 1606), Cotgrave's Dictionarie (1611), Baldus's De verborum vitruvianorum (1612) and Goclenius's Lexicon philosophicum (1613).

Most of the terms that required definitions and explanations before 1800 derived from the consideration of music as a science, which as part of the Quadrivium it was; Tinctoris in his Diffinitorium needed to explain only denotative words, that is, those with categorical meanings. But by 1800 the musical vocabulary had been greatly enriched with connotative words more difficult to define and thus more open to varied interpretation. Terms such as 'adagio' resist precise, scientific description, and in the 16th and 17th centuries they were growing more numerous and richer in meaning. That growth, paralleling the growing sophistication of music and its practitioners, created a need for more specialized and detailed discussion of terms. As a result, dictionaries and glossaries became frequent appendages to books on music theory and introductory tutors, starting with Praetorius's Syntagma musicum, iii (1618), which includes a section on 'Italianische und andere Termini musici'. Robert Fludd's De templo musicae of 1617 contains an etymological dictionary in the first chapter of book 1. Nikolaus Gengenbach's small tutor Musica nova (1626) includes a list of 'Technilogicam' (cols.126–51). More extensive glossaries appear in the eighth (1632) and subsequent editions of Demantius's Isagoge artis musicae (1607). Shorter lists are found in many later works and incorporate terms of expression. Praetorius, Gengenbach, Demantius, Herbst and Ribovius, for example, all defined 'adagio', 'forte', 'lento', 'piano' and other connotative terms, as did Marin Mersenne and Athanasius Kircher in their two massive encyclopedic music treatises; the 'foible' of each of these authors, according to James Matthew, was 'omniscience'. Throughout their works they concerned themselves with the definition of words in common use. Mersenne's Harmonie universelle (1636–7) and Kircher's Musurgia universalis (1650) were widely accepted as authorities for definitions, and Janovka, Brossard and Walther all indicated their dependence on them.

A large number of useful general works appeared in the 17th century that were also cited by Brossard and Walther. The latter noted that Martinius's Lexicon philologicum (1623) contained many musical terms, and he also referred to the classic works by Ménage (1650), Du Cange (1678) and Furetière (1690); Brossard listed only the last. Neither mentions works by Sir Henry Spelman (1664), Corneille (the interesting Le dictionnaire des arts et des sciences, published in 1694, the same year as a supplement to the great Dictionnaire of the Académie Française, in opposition to Furetière's compendium) or Matthias Schacht, who compiled the first biographical dictionary devoted solely to musicians, Musicus danicus, in 1687, though it was not published until 1928.

These books are the classical antecedents of modern music lexicography, an era which began with Brossard's and Janovka's dictionaries of 1701 and Walther's encyclopedic Lexicon of 1732. The line of derivation stretching back from these three to Varro in the 1st century BCE had been interrupted only once, at the end of the 15th century by Tinctoris's Diffinitorium, which was in itself an anomaly because it was strictly terminological. None of its predecessors appears to be related to it in any way, and few if any later dictionaries seem to have been dependent on it, or even aware of its existence.

III. From the 18th century to the present

1. 1701–32. 2. 1732–1835. 3. After 1835: (i) Introduction (ii) Comprehensive works (iii) Terminological works (iv) Biographical works: (a) General (b) Regional and other specialized works.

1. 1701–32. Some 200 years after Tinctoris's Diffinitorium, two dictionaries appeared simultaneously: Brossard's Dictionaire des termes grecs, latins et italiens and Janovka's Clavis ad thesaurum. Of the two, the former has proved to be more important. Brossard had originally appended it as a glossary to a collection of his motets, the Prodromus musicalis (1695). The only copy of the 1701 version known to exist, an incomplete pre-edition, lacks important bibliographical features included in the 1703 work, which most scholars regard as the true first edition (see Heckmann, 1965). In particular, there is a 'Catalogue de plus de 900 auteurs qui ont écrit sur la musique', which, as Duckles's review (1967–8) of the facsimile reprint points out, is a pioneer effort in the realm of universal music bibliography; it also furnishes some knowledge of Brossard's sources. Brossard's contemporaries recognized its importance. Mattheson, for example, included a 'Zusatz zum brossardischen Register', a list of an additional 400-plus authors, in the second volume of his Critica musica of 1725. By 1710 three later editions of the dictionary had appeared.

Although Brossard noted in his 'Catalogue' some 100 books he had used, Janovka in the Clavis ad thesaurum cited very few, Kircher's Musurgia universalis (1650) and Reisch's Margarita philosophica (1503) among them, but the most frequently mentioned is Carissimi's Ars cantandi (1692). Brossard defined many more than Janovka's 170 terms, but the latter's work is arranged alphabetically by broad subjects; many of its entries are treatises that incorporate explanations of numerous other terms. 'Tactus' occupies 50 pages in his discussion of 'Stylus', and Janovka defined a variety of separate styles, including, in the 'Expressus' category alone, ecclesiasticus, canonicus, motectibus, phantasticus, madrigaliescus, melismaticus, hyporchematicus, symphoniacus and dramaticus. Words used in the definitions that are defined elsewhere were indicated by both Brossard and Janovka in ways analogous to the use of asterisks in the present-day Harvard Dictionary of Music: Brossard used underlining, Janovka italics. Detailed indexes to these and other lexica, such as Paterson and Ritori's study of Hidden Terms in the Harvard Dictionary (1973), would greatly aid use.

Cigler has suggested (1968) that Janovka's dictionary was to have been followed by a companion biographical volume, which would have produced in combination the first encyclopedia of music. Brossard had the same idea, and in the preface to his 'Catalogue' remarked that he had been collecting information for years for a similar biographical lexicon. Neither achieved his goal. Walther, on the other hand, before publishing his encyclopedia, had prepared a separate dictionary of terms. The manuscript (*c*1708; D-WRtl Q341*c*) is entitled Praecepta der musicalischen Composition, and it includes about 250 definitions of Greek, Latin, French and Italian musical terms. Among the explicit references to earlier authority in the definitions, there are five to Janovka and others to Praetorius, Printz and Kircher, as well as one mention of the Suidae lexicon.

In the next few years little of interest to musicians was published. The first English dictionary was called A Short Explication of Such Foreign Words, as are Made Use of in Musick Books (1724). Intended for 'Lovers of Musick', it provided brief, almost telegraphic definitions of several hundred musical terms, and appended to it was a 22-page Account of Printed Musick, probably works issued by the publisher J. Brotherton. Six years later, a 42-page Short Explication of Such Italian Words appeared both separately and as part of a Walsh publication entitled Rules, or A Short and Compleat Method for Attaining to Play a Thorough Bass.

The most important English publication between 1701 and 1732, however, was the first edition of Ephraim Chambers's Cyclopaedia: or, An Universal Dictionary (1728), which became the prototype for most later general encyclopedias, such as the Encyclopédie edited by Diderot and D'Alembert, the Encyclopaedia Britannica and many others. An encyclopedia is taken to be a comprehensive work encompassing terms, biographies and topics. The term itself appears to have been used first by Rabelais in Pantagruel (1532), where Thaumont says that Panurge has opened to him 'le vray puys et abysme de encyclopedie'. Paul Skalič was the first to use the term as part of the title for his dictionary, the Encyclopaedia, seu Orbis disciplinarium (1559), but none of the titles of the many works cited by Brossard and Walther contained it.

Like Brossard's Dictionaire, Walther's Musicalisches Lexikon, oder Musicalische Bibliothec (Leipzig, 1732) first appeared in a pre-edition, entitled Alte und neue musikalische Bibliothec and published in 1728 with entries only for 'A'. The complete work became the prototype for all comprehensive music encyclopedias that followed. Terms and persons were arranged in a single alphabet, and like J.H. Zedler's general encyclopedia, the Universal-Lexikon (begun in the same year), biographical coverage was not limited to the deceased but extended to living people as well. Zedler was also the first editor to employ associate editors to whom he could assign special areas.

Walther collected information by sending inquiries to various other authorities (he was probably the first music lexicographer to do so) but his primary authorities were books, hundreds of them, which he scrutinized page by page (many have been mentioned above). His choice of biographies was based on the '900 auteurs' listed by Brossard in his 'Catalogue', and for definitions of terms, Walther studied many distinguished music treatises, again including the Brossard dictionaries and Janovka's Clavis ad thesaurum. Eggebrecht (1957) examined in detail Walther's definitions and found that Mattheson, Niedt, Glarean, Zarlino, Kircher, Mersenne and Praetorius are the most frequently cited of the long list of writers serving as his authorities. A subsequent edition of the Lexicon with many corrections was planned but not accomplished, and some manuscript emendations gathered for it were eventually incorporated by Gerber into his Lexicon (1790–92). Though the one and only edition of Walther contains numerous errors, it remains a monumental work offering an otherwise unobtainable range of early 18th-century opinions, speculations and judgments on music.

2. 1732–1835. The arrival of the dictionaries of Brossard and Janovka and Walther's encyclopedia resulted in the rapid production of other music lexica. Within five years of Walther's publication of the first music encyclopedia (1732), a second appeared, the Kurzgefasstes musikalisches Lexicon, published in 1737 by Johann Christoph and Johann David Stössel in Chemnitz (some authorities, including Eitner, cite a 'Barnickel' as the compiler). The book was designed to be a compact Handlexikon for music lovers, and in many ways it was a popularization of Walther's work, though it also provided topical articles (e.g. 'Music der Hebräer'). Walther is lauded in the introduction, and the list of other authorities at the end cites treatises by a number of music theorists (two for Mattheson, seven for Printz, eight for Werckmeister, the Syntagma musicum by Praetorius and others), as well as such general compendia as the Myriobiblon (*c*858) and Jablonski's Allgemeines Lexicon der Künste (1721). Handel appears under 'Hendel'; the biography of Mattheson requires three pages, Bach's only three lines. It is a valuable work and historically interesting, not least because it is the first 'concise' music dictionary.

The first edition of James Grassineau's terminological A Musical Dictionary (London, 1740) is often said to be little more than a translation of Brossard, but it does not deserve such casual disregard. Although as Grassineau himself said, 'I have follow'd a French author in many points', worthwhile additions were taken from other writers (see Coover, 1971, and Shaw, 1973). When J. Robson reissued the dictionary in 1769, he added to it and also published separately a 52-page addendum of definitions drawn mainly from Rousseau's recently published Dictionnaire (1768), which he thought would improve the coverage and quality. Another lexicon published in 1740, Mattheson's curious Grundlage einer Ehren-Pforte, was a collection of 148 biographies in which German musicians of the later 17th century and the early 18th were prominent; most of the notices were written by the subjects themselves, and the book's importance, and much of its untrustworthiness, rest on that autobiographical content.

Between 1753 and 1776 appeared a cluster of French dictionaries of the theatre, all of which were published anonymously though their authors' identities were known. Together they constitute an intriguing appendage to the history of music lexicography. This unparalleled surge of interest produced a Histoire du théâtre de l'Opéra en France by Durey de Noinville and Louis-Antoine Travenol (1753), Antoine de Léris's Dictionnaire portatif des théâtres . . . de Paris (1754), Claude and François Parfaict's seven-volume Dictionnaire des théâtres de Paris (1756), La Vallière's Ballets, opéra et autres ouvrages lyriques (1760) and Joseph de Laporte and S.R.N. Chamfort's Dictionnaire dramatique (1776). Also in this period, according to Fétis and others, L.F. Beffara compiled five large dictionaries of opera, ballets, cantatas and other dramatic music totalling over 30 volumes in manuscript, none of which was ever published; some are apparently lost, but two survive in the Bibliothèque de l'Opéra in Paris (Rés.602 and 603). This group of theatre dictionaries, with very similar coverage and compiled within a span of 23 years seemingly without precedent or successors, warrants closer critical examination.

Several important general biographical dictionaries of the arts were published in the second half of the 18th century. These include the biographical Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexicon by Jöcher (1750–51, with continuations and additions by Adelung and others until 1897), Meusel's useful Teutsches Künstlerlexikon (1778), which includes many articles on musicians, and L.A. de Bonnefons' Dictionnaire des artistes (1776). The dictionaries of arts terminology from this same period show a continuing concern for definition and clarification of the terms of aesthetics. Clear evidence of this concern is the appearance of a number of dictionaries of the fine arts with strong musical coverage: Lacombe's Dictionnaire portatif des beaux-arts (1752); Sulzer's Allgemeine Theorie der schönen Künste (1771–4), a seminal work to which both Kirnberger and J.A.P. Schulz contributed several hundred music articles; and the later Kurzgefasstes Handwörterbuch über der schönen Künste (1794–5), with music articles by F.A. Baumbach.

Neither the increasing numbers of such works nor the earlier publication of separate works by Brossard, Walther, Grassineau and others changed the growing practice of appending lists of terms to music treatises and tutors. Among the more important and useful 18th-century examples are nine pages at the end of Spiess's Tractatus musicus (1746); 20 pages of 'A Musical Dictionary' in the magazine The Muses Delight (1754); the section on 'Musikalische Kunstwörter' in Leopold Mozart's Violinschule (1756); pp.393–482 and 586–99 of Adlung's respected and widely used Anleitung zu der musikalischen Gelahrtheit (1758); and an alphabetical Anhang to Kürzinger's Getreuer Unterricht (1763). Another group of appended lists, though interesting in part because they reflect what their compilers perceived as the needs of their audiences, are of little lexicographic significance. Tans'ur provided definitions for 1000 terms in editions of his New Musical Grammar (1746), and the second volume of G.B. Doni's posthumous Lyra Barberina (1763) included a nine-page 'Onomasticum, seu Synopsis musicarum' by G.B. Martini, which was actually an updated version of Doni's 'Synopsis musicarum, Graecarum atque obscuriorum vocum' that had appeared in book 3 of his De praestantia musicae veteris (1647). (Another dictionary by Martini, a Nomenclatura musicale . . . a guisa di dizionario, remains in manuscript in the library of the Bologna Liceo.) A 'Dictionnaire de musique' is included in Azaïs' Méthode (1776). The first such list in an American publication was William Billings's glossary of 140 words appended to his The Singing Master's Assistant (1778), and the first appearance in a Portuguese publication is the one in Solano's Exame instructivo sobre a música (1790). J.A. Hiller supplied a 'Kurzgefasstes Lexikon' in his Anweisung zum Violinspielen (1792), and two appended dictionaries appear in 18th-century Russian publications: a short list of Italian terms in the Russian translation (1773–4) of G.S. Löhlein's Clavier-Schule and a 'Muzïkal'nïy slovar'' in the first issue of the Karmannaya kniga dlya lyubiteley muzïki published by Gerstenberg in 1795. Many others probably exist without deserving widespread notice.

In the second half of the 18th century, general encyclopedias were much more significant than appended lists. It is important to note that compilers of general encyclopedias after about 1500 had been more concerned with the sciences, particularly the natural sciences, than with the Quadrivium. Music did not regain what might be thought to be its rightful place in such works until after 1750, most conspicuously with the publication of Diderot and D'Alembert's monumental and historic Encyclopédie, ou Dictionnaire raisonné des sciences, des arts et des métiers (1751–65) and Rees's 45-volume New Cyclopaedia, or Universal Dictionary (1802–20). (Parenthetically, the treatment of music in most general encyclopedias in the 20th century and the early 21st has once again been diminished, space being accorded more to practical matters, the greatly increased information on the pure sciences, and political events and ideas.) A vast literature has accumulated about Diderot and D'Alembert's famous venture, and a surprisingly large amount is concerned with its musical content. The goal of conventional encyclopedias has always been to present an objective summa of existing knowledge, but the unconventional Encyclopédie set out to guide opinion. Scholars and eminent literati made up its editors and contributors; after the much-respected musician Jean-Philippe Rameau had declined to prepare the music articles, the editors turned to a closer friend, the eloquent Jean-Jacques Rousseau, who accepted. In spite of complaining that he had little time to prepare his contributions, he eventually submitted nearly 400 entries, in many of which he graciously acknowledged an indebtedness to Rameau's works. Although Rousseau's haste engendered a sizable number of errors, it was on theoretical and philosophical grounds that Rameau attacked some of the articles, vigorously and almost immediately. The assault extended to Rousseau himself (for whom Rameau had little regard), to the Encyclopédie as a whole and to its editors. The course of the controversy can be traced elsewhere in this dictionary, in the articles on the two principal protagonists.

The terms in the Encyclopédie with whose definitions Rameau disagreed were 'Accompagnement', 'Accord', 'Cadence', 'Choeur', 'Chromatique' and 'Dissonance', none of them representing concepts easily or simply defined; from him, as from Rousseau, they elicited lengthy essays. From the outset Rousseau himself recognized shortcomings in many articles, and they added to his desire to prepare a separate terminological dictionary. His Dictionnaire de musique was completed in 1764 and published in 1768. It was the last of his major writings on music, a summing-up of all his thoughts, and for a man who was admittedly an amateur in many ways and a barely successful composer, it was a remarkable work. His ideas on the nature and meaning of music were all expressed in stylish and graceful prose, and the Dictionnaire immediately became, as Thomas Hunt said in his excellent study of the work, 'a vital force in determining musical thought in the second half of the century'. It thus had a great effect on the content of many subsequent dictionaries, appearing in at least 22 editions as part of Rousseau's collected Oeuvres. J. Robson included some of it in translation in his Appendix to Grassineau's dictionary in 1769; a complete (though poor) English translation by Waring appeared in 1771. Diderot and D'Alembert, in spite of their quarrel with Rousseau, borrowed 375 articles from the Dictionnaire for the supplement (1776–7) to the Encyclopédie. Meude-Monpas' Dictionnaire of 1787 contains more than 100 of Rousseau's articles without acknowledgment. The two volumes devoted to 'Musique' edited by Framery, Ginguené and Momigny for the Encyclopédie méthodique (1791–1818) include entries from Rousseau with corrections, additions and commentaries, and among the hundreds of articles written by Burney for Abraham Rees's New Cyclopaedia (1802–20), at least 85 include translations from Rousseau (with appropriate acknowledgment). The Dictionnaire de musique moderne by Castil-Blaze published in 1821 contains 385 articles plagiarized from Rousseau; while willing to 'borrow' from him to this extent, Castil-Blaze ungratefully abused him with invective. In the same year Turbri published an abridged version aimed at a wider market, and Ernst Ludwig Gerber, in his Neues historisch-biographisches Lexikon (1812–14), listed four translations into German then in progress, though apparently none was ever completed.

The Dictionnaire was less an alphabetical list of hard words with definitions in the classic mould than a list of topics on which Rousseau, like Janovka, was moved to write long thoughtful essays. Although aesthetics and the nature of music interested Rousseau far more than simple definitions of denotative terms, many of his topics were new to music dictionaries (e.g. those pertaining to traditional and ethnic musics, including that of the Amerindians), and many were accompanied by music transcriptions. Although the work still contained numerous factual errors, some carried over from his articles in the Encyclopédie, its most valuable material lay in these long essays. His handling of terms was clearly much more derivative. For Greek theoretical terms he simply borrowed, in many instances from Brossard, while, like Brossard and Walther, Rousseau cited Athenaeus, Julius Pollux, Boethius, Martianus and others. He also depended on many of the same music theorists, especially Mersenne and Kircher, and curiously (in spite of their quarrel years before) on Rameau. Instruments were not described in the Dictionnaire because they had been covered in the Encyclopédie.

In the years after Rousseau, dictionaries and encyclopedias appeared more frequently, partly, no doubt, because his Dictionnaire became a basic source for subsequent compilers. The Dictionarium musica by John Binns (issued under the pseudonym Hoyle; 1770), an uneven work of limited value even to its intended audience of amateurs, drew more heavily on Grassineau than on Rousseau, but the latter's influence was apparent. Thomas Busby's dictionary (*c*1783–6) was a more original, better-written work than Binns's, and it went through many editions, including an American one in 1827 (the first time a music lexicon was republished in the USA). A Musikalisches Handwörterbuch by J.G.L. von Wilke, published anonymously in 1786, was an indifferent work of no great interest, but G.F. Wolf's Kurzgefasstes musikalisches Lexikon of a year later was more substantial, perhaps because it was contrived mainly from Walther and Sulzer with help from Rousseau; it went through several editions and was translated into Danish in 1801. Verschuere-Reynvaan's Dutch Muzijkaal kunstwoordenboek, even though it covered only 'A–Muz', appeared in two editions, the first in 1789 (370 pages), the second in 1795 (618 pages, but still only 'A–Muz'). It owed much to Rousseau.

The next dictionary of terms was the first volume (vol.185, 1791) of two entitled 'Musique' prepared by N.E. Framery and P.L. Ginguené for the huge and unorthodox Encyclopédie méthodique published by Pancoucke and Agasse from 1782 to 1832 (196 vols. planned, 166 published, with 88 alphabetical sequences and 83 separate indexes). For the second 'Musique' volume (vol.186, 1818), J.J. de Momigny joined Framery and Ginguené as an editor. Because the Encyclopédie was essentially a recasting of the materials in Diderot and D'Alembert's encyclopedia into subject arrangement, it contains prodigious borrowings from the entries written for the earlier work by Rousseau, as well as from his own Dictionnaire. Nevertheless, some of the editorial additions and corrections were, rather ungraciously, harshly critical of his works.

John Wall Callcott's slight lexicon, An Explanation of the Notes, Marks, Words, &c. used in Music, first appeared in 1793. In 1798 he published a Plan of a Practical Dictionary of Music, an outline of a much more ambitious work that he hoped to issue in 1799 but did not, leaving 36 volumes of manuscript material collected between 1791 and 1807, as well as the resulting two-volume manuscript of the work (GB-Lbl Add.27649–50). The principal authorities for this compilation were Tinctoris, Brossard, Walther, Grassineau, Sulzer, Framery and Ginguené, Overend and Arnold. Some of Callcott's materials found their way into Burney's contributions to Rees's encyclopedia. Scholes, in his biography of Burney, noted letters written by Callcott to Burney in 1802–3 indicating his willingness to supply information already collected and to undertake further research if Burney so wished. Callcott's endeavours, to judge by the materials he collected and his assistance to Burney, were of above average calibre, and they deserve more study.

Only five biographical dictionaries of musicians were prepared in the 18th century: Mattheson's Grundlage einer Ehren-Pforte (1740) mentioned earlier, the ABC Dario Musico (1780), Hiller's Lebensbeschreibungen (1784), Mazza's Diccionario (1790) and Gerber's Lexikon (1790–92). Both Mattheson's and Hiller's works are more volumes of collected biography than dictionaries and are limited in scope to the authors' contemporaries. The ABC Dario Musico, the first biographical dictionary in English, presents only critical and satirical résumés, and Mazza's Diccionario, though it sets out valuable information on some 300 Portuguese musicians, remained in manuscript until annotated and published by José Alegria in 1944–5. The theatre lexica of Léris, Parfaict and others from about the middle of the century covered far more than biography. Only Gerber's Lexicon, published some 50 years after Walther's biographical coverage, remains important, standing as the first independent dictionary of musical biography and a model for many successors. Gerber relied on Walther's work, both the published Lexicon and the corrections collected in manuscript. This dependence was more marked in the first edition (1790–92) than in the second (1812–14), but even the first contained much original research and was surprisingly successful. Encouraged by the receipt of volunteered new information from correspondents and friends, Gerber undertook the greatly improved second edition. Both must be used together, for the second complemented rather than superseded the first. (The 1966–9 reprint of the two editions, edited by Othmar Wessely, includes various addenda and corrigenda as well as Gerber's own emendations which had, until the publication of this reprint, remained in manuscript.)

If works like Gerber's were few in number in this period, so too were separate music encyclopedias. They comprise a Kurzgefasstes musicalisches Lexicon published by Stössel (1737), a three-volume Dizionario by Pietro Gianelli (1801), Lichtenthal's Dizionario e bibliografia (1826) and La Borde's extraordinary Essai sur la musique ancienne et moderne (1780). This last work was strictly speaking a history, though parts of it, notably the first and second volumes, are encyclopedic in scope, defining terms and furnishing biographical data; the third volume is almost entirely a bio-bibliography of Greek and Roman poets, Greek and Roman writers on music, French and Italian composers and musicians (42 pages for Albinoni alone), classical and later writers on music (including Boethius, Mersenne, Guido and, strangely enough, Isaac Newton) and Italian poets and singers. La Borde cited some classical sources (Julius Pollux, Athanaeus, Isidore and the Suidae lexicon) but Fétis, who used the same ones, scorned La Borde's work, describing the Essai as 'un chef d'oeuvre d'ignorance, de désordre et d'incurie'.

Two important general encyclopedias deserve attention here: the third edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica (Edinburgh, 1790–97, 1803) and the Rees encyclopedia, published in London from 1802 to 1820. The first two editions of Britannica failed to include articles on music, but a sizable number, including some biographies of musicians, appeared in the third. The articles, prepared mainly by W.M. Morison, Dr Blacklock and John Robison, sometimes cite Burney as an authority, but he had otherwise nothing to do with the work. Had he, the contents would surely have been more informative, less narrowly 'English' in point of view, more graceful, and more entertaining. Burney's experience, knowledge and wit were put to good use a few years later, however, by Rees in his New Cyclopaedia. More than 2000 articles came from the aging Burney in his final years, and although some were repetitive, some flawed and some eccentric, they covered with great wisdom an enormous range of subjects: biographies of composers, performers and non-musical friends; detailed definitions of terms; dissertations on historical and theoretical topics and on musical instruments (including the acoustics of the 'Umbrella'), as well as essays on countries, cities, organizations and institutions visited by Burney in his travels. Some articles were but a single line in length, others so verbose they should have been trimmed mercilessly. Burney freely quoted from or summarized a number of sources and acknowledged all: articles by Rousseau in the Dictionnaire and for the Encyclopédie, Framery and Ginguené's 'Musique', La Borde's Essai and his own four-volume General History. Some of the information may have come from Callcott. Scholes's study The Great Doctor Burney includes a charming chapter with many details of this enterprise and Burney's extensive contributions.

In 1802 Koch's Musikalisches Lexikon appeared, an exemplary scholarly work with detailed scientific articles accompanied by an unusually large number of musical examples. Though it relied on Sulzer more than on Rousseau, it was also highly original. In 1826 it was translated into Danish, an abridged edition appeared in German in 1807, and a second edition of the original was republished as late as 1865.

A large number of terminological dictionaries survive from the first 30 years of the 19th century. Most are derived closely from Rousseau's work, without in any way approaching his importance. They include the dictionaries of Envallson (1802, the earliest Swedish music lexicon), Pilkington (1812, totally derivative), J.C. Röhner (1820, derived mainly from Verschuere-Reynvaan), Danneley (1825), Lichtenthal (1826, which includes the first Italian dictionary of musical terms), J.E. Häuser (1828), Andersch (1829), Jousse (1829), Schilling (the compiler of the massive and famous Encyclopädie, with his Musikalisches Handwörterbuch of 1830), Gollmick (1833) and William Smith Porter (1834, the second American dictionary of musical terms and an improvement on Pilkington's earlier work).

Biographical dictionaries from 1800 to 1835 are of two types: those offering international coverage, such as the still useful Dictionnaire by Choron and Fayolle (1810–11), and a new type offering biographies of musicians in a single country or region. Then, as now, many that professed an international perspective gave greater coverage to the musicians of the country in which the compiler or compilers lived and worked (this was true even of Choron and Fayolle). But in the early 19th century there were already traces of the specialization that has now become commonplace, and in 1811 Lipowsky published the first bio-bibliography restricted to the musicians of a single area, his Baierisches Musik-Lexikon.

A chronological survey of the next dozen years shows several biographical dictionaries with strong national bias. The first bio-bibliography of Italian musicians occupied pages 77 to 302 of Gervasoni's Nuova teoria di musica (1812); Bertini was much indebted to Gervasoni and to Choron and Fayolle when he began to publish his four-volume Dizionario two years later, although he gave most of the attention to Italian musicians. The first English biographical dictionary of musicians also came out in 1814 – Bingley's curious and less than scholarly Musical Biography, which was mostly concerned with English musicians – but it was not until 1824 that the first major biographical dictionary in English was published, Sainsbury's Dictionary of Musicians. This book was also heavily dependent on Choron and Fayolle (even the preface was a direct translation of theirs) and on Gerber as well. Bohumír Dlabač's Allgemeines historisches Künstler-Lexikon für Böhmen und zum Theil auch für Mähren und Schlesien (1815) remains an important source of information on early Czech music and musicians; the first biographical coverage of Polish musicians was Potočki's 'Mały słowniczek muzyczny', issued in 1818. A new edition of Castil-Blaze's Dictionnaire de musique moderne (1821) was published in 1828 with an appendix, a biographical dictionary of Flemish musicians compiled by J.-H. Mees.

In 1835 the first volumes of two great works, Schilling's Encyclopädie der gesammten musikalischen Wissenschaften and F.-J. Fétis's Biographie universelle des musiciens, started to appear. Not since the simultaneous publication of the dictionaries by Brossard and Janovka in 1701 had there been such a noteworthy coincidence of two important lexicographies. Schilling's comprehensive encyclopedia covered terms, topics and biographies in six volumes (1835–8) and a supplement (1841–2). It was a careful work, full of dependable information on a wide range of topics and people, some not discussed in any other lexica, not even in Fétis's monumental Biographie universelle. A concise one-volume edition of the work, compiled by F.S. Gassner, appeared in 1849. Schilling's energy appears to have been limitless, for he produced an astonishing amount of lexicographical work in a few years. He had already published a terminological dictionary, Musikalisches Handwörterbuch, five years before the Encyclopädie; another dictionary of terms, Der musikalische Sprachmeister, in 1840; the biographical dictionary Das musikalische Europa and a Musikalisches Conversations-Handlexikon (a two-volume abridgment, superior to Gassner's, of his Encylopädie) in 1842; and in 1849, an enlargement of his 1830 Handwörterbuch under a new title, Musikalisches Conversations-Handwörterbuch (2/1856).

Though Fétis's famous lexicon does not surpass Schilling's in reliability, it is memorable for the personality of its compiler. Fétis had strong opinions, some of them eccentric, and had little hesitation about displaying them in his articles. The eight-volume Biographie universelle (1835–44) was followed by a second enlarged and revised edition (1860–65) and many subsequent ones, as was a valuable two-volume supplement first published by Albert Pougin (1878–80). Several other writers published corrections and additions to both the first and second editions and to Pougin's supplement, clearly indicating the work's continued importance. Fétis's respect for classical antecedents is clear. The catalogue of his magnificent personal library (now in the Bibliothèque Albert Ier, Brussels) includes many of the works discussed above: Martianus Capella, Julius Pollux, Stephanus (three editions), Calepino, Bayle, Possevinus, Sweertius, Athenaeus, Oldoinus and two copies of the Suidae lexicon. Among the music encyclopedias and dictionaries listed are those by Walther, Brossard, Praetorius and Mattheson, and large numbers of important treatises (e.g. Kircher and Mersenne), histories, commentaries and biographies, and a profusion of works on organology. (This last is not surprising, for Fétis formed one of the finest collections of musical instruments, now in the Brussels Conservatory.) With this outstanding collection of books, scores and instruments readily available to him, it is no surprise that his Biographie universelle should prove to be an extraordinarily rich source of information on the lives and works of hundreds of musicians.

By the time of the second edition, the necessary dependence on Choron and Fayolle's Dictionnaire, Walther's Lexicon, Mattheson's Grundlage, Forkel's Allgemeine Litteratur, Gerber's Lexikon and the histories of Martini, Burney and Hawkins had considerably lessened as a result of Fétis's extensive travels and a voluminous correspondence with his biographees and other writers on music, such as the bibliographer C.F. Becker. In the long view of history, his methodology is much more significant than his personal biasses, for it achieved for the Biographie universelle a leading position in the tradition of scholarly music historiography.

The 'fierce natural urge' of the lexicographer mentioned earlier manifests itself in three forms, sometimes separately, often all together – bibliography, biography and terminology. Behind that urge rests a conviction that knowledge of people from their biographies, knowledge of what they wrote (assembling what G. Kubler in The Shape of Time called the 'grand catalogue of persons and works') and an understanding of the words they employed assures comprehension – and more importantly, control – of all knowledge. Examples from the 18th and early 19th centuries are plentiful: Brossard, unable to satisfy completely the impulse, lamented that he lacked the time to compile a biographical dictionary of the names in his 'Catalogue de plus de 900 auteurs'; Janovka is said to have planned a biographical complement to his Clavis ad thesaurum; Schilling published both terminological and biographical dictionaries as well as the combined Encyclopädie. In more recent times the same impulse has affected such lexicographers as Pulver, Pedrell, Pazdírek, Baker, Scholes, Slonimsky and others. Fétis, too, responded to that urge, and one year before the Biographie universelle began to appear, included in the second edition of his La musique mise à la portée de tout le monde a 'Dictionnaire des mots dont usage est habituel dans la musique' that ran to over 100 pages. Within a few years this extremely popular book had been translated into six European languages, and both the Portuguese translation by J. Almeida and the Italian by E. Predari included the dictionary, the latter adding a large biographical dictionary which may have been extracted from the Biographie universelle.

Fétis's contemporary August Gathy published a modest Musicalisches Conversations-Lexikon in 1835, and though it was understandably overshadowed by the works of Fétis and Schilling, it reached a sufficiently large audience to warrant two other editions. Moved by the same lexicographical impulse for total control, Gathy also produced three editions of his terminological dictionary, the Neues musikalisches Taschen-Fremdwörterbuch, between 1850 and about 1870.

Among the many general encyclopedias published during this period, few are of special interest to musicians. Perhaps the most valuable is Jeitteles's Aesthetisches Lexicon, which appeared in two volumes in 1835–7. The music articles were prepared by Freiherr von Lannoy, and it compares favourably with other dictionaries of the arts, such as Sulzer's Allgemeine Theorie (1771–4) and Lacombe's earlier Dictionnaire of 1752.

3. After 1835.

(i) Introduction. From 1835 the pace of publication quickened noticeably, from an average of eight new music dictionaries or revised editions each year in the 19th century to nearly 100 a year now. More significantly, changes were taking place in the nature of the dictionaries themselves, often to meet the needs of a rapidly growing and better-educated middle class and also as a result of the accelerating growth of scholarship. Although there was a large increase in derivative abridgments of earlier lexica, compilers who sought respect for their works had to demonstrate scholarship and sound research and had to furnish new information. Although Fétis was not the only scholar to achieve these aims, he perhaps more than anyone defined new goals and standards.

Even as the specialized dictionary became more common (see below), three distinct categories of music lexica remained clearly discernible, all derived from prototypes that had developed in the 18th century: the comprehensive work or encyclopedia (§3(ii) below), which included terms, biographies and topics (leading to the appearance towards the end of the 19th century of a large and almost separate genre, the concise encyclopedia or Handlexicon); the terminological dictionary (§3 (iii)), little changed from Brossard's day, but embracing by the end of the 19th century many so-called 'pronouncing dictionaries'; and the biographical dictionary (§3 (iv)) modelled on Gerber and Fétis. Two subgroups were relatively new in the early 19th century: the national or regional biographical dictionaries (§ (iv)(b)) and the various other specialized dictionaries devoted to a single subject, such as the organ, women musicians, modern music or instruments and instrument makers. These categories are rife with subdivisions, and many so-called dictionaries (e.g. those of scales, themes or gramophone records) stretch the definition of the word to cover what in earlier times would have been considered patent anomalies.

Specialized dictionaries – whether comprehensive, terminological or biographical – focus on specific topics in music. As such, they are usually aimed at audiences that are relatively sophisticated about such specialities, and they evolve when the accumulated information on any one topic grows to the point where it becomes effectively impossible to treat it adequately as only one of many topics within the conventional lexicon. They are generated too when a compiler decides that the accumulated information must be arranged in dictionary form for easy reference. Since about 1700 the number of such works has grown rapidly in all fields of study.

The first in music was Friedrich von Drieberg's Wörterbuch der griechischen Musik (Berlin, 1835). Although there are earlier works on broader subjects, containing important information for musicians, for instance Allacci's famous Drammaturgia (1666), which included operas; a so-called 'dictionary of modulations' in chart form by Geminiani (*c*1754); Wetzel's Hymnopoeographia (1718–28); the theatre dictionaries of Beffara (*c*1750), Durey de Noinville (1753), Léris (1754), Parfaict (1756), La Vallière (1760) and La Porte (1776); the Russian Dramaticheskiy slovar' ('Dictionary of the theatre'; 1787); and Compan's Dictionnaire de danse (1787), Drieberg's is the earliest to be devoted wholly and exclusively to a musical topic. Strangely enough, a work that almost became the first special music dictionary – it followed Drieberg's Wörterbuch only one year later – was the comic Dictionnaire aristocratique, démocratique et mistigorieux de musique (Paris, 1836).

In modern times, because of the amount of information that has become available and the constant need for fast retrieval of it, growing varieties and numbers of special music dictionaries have appeared, a large proportion of them devoted to popular music, jazz, the avant garde and ethnomusicology. That they have appeared far in advance of adequate coverage of those same topics in conventional music encyclopedias marks a change from earlier times when the topics of special dictionaries closely paralleled those in the comprehensive encyclopedias, such as church music, hymns, opera, instruments and their makers, and women (a topic, interestingly enough, on which dictionaries were published before 1900).

There also exists a large category of musical reference works, mostly of the nature of guides to the repertory, that are organized in ways very similar to a dictionary. Thus while a 'dictionary of opera' will list headwords pertaining to opera in alphabetical order, a 'dictionary of operas' will list simply operas themselves and is thus a guide rather than a dictionary. It is instructive to consider the different ways in which opera dictionaries, or rather opera guides (books of opera plots), may be constructed: some are organized first by period, then nationality, then by composer and finally by chronology (for example Kobbé's The Complete Opera Book); others are organized alphabetically by composer, then by chronology (the Viking Book of Opera); others are purely chronological (Loewenberg, Annals of Opera); and a few are purely alphabetical, by opera title (and thus eligible for description as a dictionary). Opera is the specialist area that received the most lavish treatment from lexicographers during the latter part of the 20th century, and the result of this was the publication of several major reference works devoted entirely to operatic and other musical works for the theatre. As well as the four-volume New Grove Dictionary of Opera, other dictionaries have treated the subject with a level of detail and exactitude which give them a lasting value. Notable among these are two German publications. Pipers Enzyklopädie des Musiktheaters: Oper, Operette, Musical, Ballett, which began publication in 1986 under the editorship of Carl Dahlhaus, not only includes important articles on composers and works but is also magnificently illustrated. From the last decades of the 19th century until the 1920s, the indefatigable Franz Stieger (1843–1938) compiled the information for his 11-volume Opernlexikon, originally planned for publication in the 1920s but not issued until 1975–83. This is an astonishingly full listing of operatic works by titles, by composers and by librettists, and it also includes some oratorios and ballets. In all Stieger lists about 60,000 works. The most recent attempt in the apparently irresistible quest for truly comprehensive documentation of opera is the Edwin Mellen Opera Reference Index (1986–), compiled by Charles H. Parsons. By the end of 1999, 21 volumes had appeared. These include catalogues of composers (vols.i–iv) and librettists (vols.v–vi), a geographical index of premières (vols.vii–viii), a list of opera subjects (vol.ix), a discography (vols.x–xii), indexes of casts for premières (vols.xiii–xiv) and for other performances (vols.xv–xvi), an opera bibliography (vols.xvii–xviii), a listing of reviews of premières and other significant performances (vol.xix), an opera 'videography' (vol.xx) and a listing of printed opera scores in American libraries (vol.xxi).

Other types of material considered in specialist dictionaries include hymns, psalmody, songs, film music, orchestral music generally, musicals and various kinds of chamber music as well as jazz and popular repertories. Popular music was a striking area of growth for lexicographers during the last years of the 20th century, with the publication of broad-ranging dictionaries and encyclopedias such as Peter Gammond's The Oxford Companion to Popular Music (1991) as well as more specific dictionaries devoted to jazz, country music, rock music, punk and heavy metal. These publications helped to fill the gaps left by otherwise authoritative dictionaries in which the coverage of popular music was felt not to have been a priority.

(ii) Comprehensive works. The number of comprehensive works and encyclopedias of music published after 1835 rapidly increased, balanced by a proportionate decrease in the number of good separate terminological and biographical dictionaries. Only a handful of distinguished dictionaries of musical terms were published in the 19th and 20th centuries, and few of them approached the worth or influence of Brossard's, Rousseau's or Koch's earlier efforts. Of the international bio-bibliographies compiled between 1835 and the present, probably only Eitner's Quellen-Lexikon (1900–04) and the several editions of Baker's A Biographical Dictionary (from 1900) possess the durable value of their forebears, Gerber, Choron and Fayolle, and Fétis.

The quality of comprehensive reference works, on the other hand, has been improving as their numbers grow. Though they tend to be derivative, many examples of original scholarship exist. A few are remarkable because of the sheer strength of their compiler's personality, as in the case of Scholes and Thompson; the saving grace of many others (it gives some of them their only value) is the extent to which they are chauvinistic.

To a great degree the list of entries in most encyclopedias is identical; few of them, published in any country, can afford to ignore Bach or Vivaldi, the term 'Sonata' or the subject of modes, or even to give little space to such articles. The range of entries has widened considerably since the day when Walther included only biographies and definitions of terms. An encyclopedia may now display an amazing variety of features, such as descriptions of compositions by individual title (e.g. 'Heldenleben'), title translation ('Hero's Life') or collective title ('Razumovsky Quartets'); histories of publishers and instrument makers; articles on institutions and organizations (Sacred Harmonic Society, Three Choirs Festival), as well as theatres, halls and libraries; the history of music in specific geographical areas (such as cities) and surveys of national musics; and most importantly, good cross-reference systems. The article on Bach in a German encyclopedia is apt to be more comprehensive than the article (perhaps by the same authority) in a dictionary published in Spain, and an article about the vihuela in that same Spanish dictionary will usually offer more information than is provided in a Swedish encyclopedia. But such chauvinism is normally modest.

There is, however, a conspicuous move towards more nationally biassed works. Since World War II music encyclopedias have been published in at least 12 countries for the first time. Nations with a long history of such works have produced more and better ones; in several cases these are more nationalistic, such as the Diccionario de la música by Torrellas and others (1927–9).

Music encyclopedias improve and grow larger, and the editorial responsibilities are frequently borne by a large group of editors. Most multi-volume works not only have several editors, but include articles from numerous authorities scattered around the world. The tradition of the one-man encyclopedia (of which notable examples were the personable works by Riemann, Scholes and Pratt) is represented by very few recent productions, and the later editions of many dictionaries that began as one man's accomplishment are now produced by many editors and contributors. In most cases the gain in factual accuracy has been balanced by the loss of a unique personality. Only a few are still referred to by a single compiler's name, such as Grove, Riemann and Scholes. More frequently, especially since the 1950s, they are recognized by their titles; the monumental Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart edited by Blume and commonly referred to as MGG is an example.

MGG appeared serially over a number of years, and its immense coverage served to emphasize the pressing need for a new work of comparable scope to be published in English. That MGG was a work of impressive and monumental scholarship was never in any doubt, but its densely packed columns also left some room for improvement in terms of the dictionary's physical appearance and its ease of use. The publication in 20 volumes of The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians in 1980, edited by Stanley Sadie, was an important landmark in musical lexicography: like MGG before it, The New Grove marked a great advance in the gathering together of detailed information and up-to-date research. Its preparation did much to generate new lexicographical and musicological work with a vastly more extensive range of articles than in any previous publication in English, and a rigorous editorial policy sought to ensure a consistency of presentation and a level of detail which established new international standards. Articles on composers were generally much more extended than in earlier editions of Grove, and many significant musicians who had escaped the attention of previous editions were included for the first time. Others had very much longer articles, sometimes as a result of critical re-evaluation (it is instructive to compare the length of the article on Rachmaninoff in Grove5 with that in The New Grove). Inevitably there were also some casualties: musicians who appeared in the fifth edition but who were not to have entries in The New Grove. Many of these were composers and performers who had enjoyed some minor celebrity but whose reputation had subsequently declined. This was a pragmatic solution to a besetting problem with publications of this scope: absolute comprehensiveness is something that can rarely if ever be achieved satisfactorily, and thus older editions of major dictionaries such as Grove continue to have their uses for their coverage of certain minor figures.

The growth of scholarly work in areas such as medieval music and musical analysis was reflected in the quality and scope of entries, and lists of works for composers – especially those for major figures – were particularly detailed and methodical. Another area in which The New Grove broke new ground was ethnomusicology, with an array of articles that presented important scholarly work on music about which information was otherwise difficult to find. This did much to emphasize the avowed quest for a dictionary of this size to have more outward-looking comprehensiveness than had previously been the case.

Written by a large team of experts, The New Grove aimed for a helpful consistency of presentation rather than for a numbing uniformity. The result was that it included many articles which belied the notion that stern objectivity was the only substitute for the more capricious work of single-author dictionaries. The range and number of illustrations were also greatly expanded. But the publication of this dictionary marked only the start of what was almost certainly the most sustained and productive lexicographical endeavour in music during the 20th century. The continuing process of revision and addition that followed the initial publication of The New Grove resulted in an important series of specialist dictionaries devoted to musical instruments (1984), to American music and musicians (1986), to jazz (1988), to opera (1992) and to women composers (1995). These were derived only in part from the parent dictionary, with a particularly high proportion of completely new entries commissioned for The New Grove Dictionary of Opera and The New Grove Dictionary of Women Composers. In turn, these specialized works fuelled the revision process for the greatly expanded coverage of the second edition of The New Grove. This continous process of revision, refinement and expansion has been an innovatory and certainly very fruitful one, drawing on the information-gathering resources and the editorial expertise of an encyclopedic music dictionary in order to produce more sharply focussed publications, which are then able to form part of the basis for the subsequent revision and enhancement of the larger work.

In 1994 publication started of a completely revised edition of MGG. Under the general editorship of Ludwig Finscher, the new edition was organized entirely differently from the first edition, not as a single alphabetical sequence, but along the more schematic lines of the Riemann Lexikon, with explicit divisions into a Sachteil (dealing with terms, concepts, places, institutions and the like) and a Personenteil (dealing with individuals). The number of entries was considerably increased from the first edition, the majority of articles were completely new or extensively revised, and the volumes were generously illustrated, including the use of colour plates. The work is an magnificent monument to musicological writing in German, and publication has ensured the continuing importance of the dictionary, which was partially eclipsed after publication of The New Grove. Moreover, the physical appearance is less forbidding than that of the original MGG, with the welcome result that the dictionary is also much easier to use. In 1978–9 the Brockhaus-Riemann-Musiklexikon appeared, edited by Carl Dahlhaus and H.H. Eggebrecht; it was followed by a second edition in 1995.

Italy and France, too, have remained important centres for musical lexicography. In Italy, the most important recent contribution is the eight-volume Dizionario enciclopedico universale della musica e dei musicisti (Turin, 1983–90), divided Riemann-like into two parts, 'Il lessico' and 'Le biografie'. In France, the most significant modern dictionary is the more compact Dictionnaire de la musique (1970, with later revisions), edited by Marc Honegger, which includes some interesting autobiographical entries such as that contributed by Messiaen on his life and works. This is an unusual feature, seldom encountered in recent dictionaries.

The rapid and bewildering growth of information technology has formidable implications for any major work of reference. It is probable that most current music dictionaries will be available on-line to subscribers in the near future (some, such as The New Grove Dictionary of Opera and the second edition of The New Grove are already accessible in this form), allowing for frequent updating as well as for various kinds of searches, some of them highly sophisticated. However, notwithstanding the considerable value of electronic publication, and the astonishing speed of development in this area, it had by 2000 not yet threatened to supplant the publication of reference works in hard covers, and reports of the demise of the printed book still seemed premature.

The work of the lone compiler has come more and more to be limited to the production of 'concise', 'brief' and 'pocket' encyclopedias, most of them highly derivative, distinguished mainly by their convenient size and price. The amount of information now available for inclusion in a music encyclopedia probably discourages heroic, single-handed compilations like those of Riemann, Scholes and Moser in the recent past, and of Walther, Rousseau, Gerber, Fétis and Burney in earlier times, although Slonimsky's revisions of Baker are notable (and often compellingly readable) exceptions. Scholes's great monument, The Oxford Companion to Music, was completely revised under the editorship of Denis Arnold and published in two volumes as The New Oxford Companion to Music in 1983. Scholes's original work remains an immensely entertaining source of information, full of delightful surprises, but the revised version is a scholarly multi-author dictionary which is still usefully compact. Oxford have continued to update their other music dictionaries, and the single-author tradition is gallantly maintained in the firm's list by Michael Kennedy's New Oxford Dictionary of Music.

(iii) Terminological works. Few among the modern works included in this category match the importance or influence of the illustrious dictionaries of terms published before 1835 by Tinctoris, Rousseau, Janovka, Brossard or Koch. Even the most distinguished among them are decidedly eclectic, remarkable primarily for their compiler's good sense in choosing worthy forebears and then paraphrasing them accurately, or elegantly.

Whatever their quality or lineage, they have been issued in great numbers and are widely used. In deference to their intended audiences, they differ greatly in size, coverage and detail. Some simple 'primers' offer little more than equivalents of foreign terms (Buck's New and Complete Dictionary of 1873 has the entry: 'Lieder. (Ger.) Songs'). Slightly more ambitious compilers attempt definitions of such terms: a paragraph is devoted to 'Lied' in the 1895 edition of Baker's A Dictionary of Musical Terms. Still others provide additional data: equivalents in several languages, pronunciation, definitions of the words in various contexts, historical changes of meaning, quoted examples of word usages and references to synonyms, antonyms or related words.

Except for the rudimentary primers, almost all furnish essays, long or short, on topics such as 'Opera', 'Acoustics' or 'Form'. Perhaps this is so because an entry for 'Opera' or 'Form' offers a compiler greater opportunity to mingle personal opinions with historical facts than do entries for 'Clausula', 'Langsam' or 'Fanfare'. Choices of subject and length of essay often shed light on the personality of the compiler. Stainer and Barrett, for example, in their Dictionary of 1876 devoted only eight columns to 'Opera' but 32 to 'Larynx' and another five to 'Laryngoscope'. Even in a dictionary such as this, the range of topics covers several subjects. The article on 'Larynx' in the Stainer and Barrett dictionary clearly deals with general science and anatomy, but the majority of articles, as in most dictionaries, are historical (e.g. 'Greek music', 'Discantus' and the like). Usually a sizable number are theoretical (e.g. their article on the 'Seventh, Chord of the'), and occasionally an article is a mixture of both history and theory (e.g. the ten columns they devote to 'Fingering'). Bibliographical treatments of subjects are plentiful, an excellent example being the article on 'Periodicals' in the Harvard Dictionary.

Until the mid-20th century surprisingly little interest was shown in the etymology of musical terms, their changing usage and, historically, the ideas that they connote. H.H. Eggebrecht's Studien zur musikalischen Terminologie (1955) is a pioneer work in this field, and his Handwörterbuch der musikalischen Terminologie (the first loose-leaf sections of which began appearing in 1972) is an apt reflection of the studies he has advocated. It may become the most important terminological lexicon of music since Rousseau's Dictionnaire of 1768, for each word is treated as an 'idea' and is the topic of a historical essay, with etymological details and evidence from early theorists and encyclopedists, many of whom are listed above. It harks back to Janovka's systematically arranged Clavis ad thesaurum (1701), where many terms were defined in essays on a small number of topics.

Even more like Janovka's work is the Harvard Dictionary of Music edited by Willi Apel and first published in 1944; entries are provided for broader subjects, while hundreds of familiar terms are given cross-references to a major article where the term is set in context (e.g. '"Recoupe", see under "Basse danse"', '"Dis, disis", see "Pitch Names"'). In 1986 an extensively revised edition of this work was published as The New Harvard Dictionary of Music and Musicians, edited by D.M. Randel.

Before 1835 most of the terminological dictionaries were similar in format and organization, and the works of Janovka, Brossard and Rousseau served as their models. But then some new types emerged, of which the most popular was the English-language 'pronouncing' dictionary. The need for aids to pronunciation had been recognized much earlier. Brossard included a one-page 'Table ou récapitulation des principales difficultez de la prononciation italienne' in the 1703 edition of his Dictionaire, but between the time of this guide and the flood of more ambitious works late in the 19th century, most dictionary compilers did not provide such assistance. The earliest pronouncing dictionary appears to have been Adcock's The Singer's Guide of 1873, and the popularity of this kind of work seems to have reached its height by about 1910, particularly in the USA. Since the end of World War II only a handful have been issued, suggesting clearly that the need has diminished. The same is not true for specialized dictionaries of terms (on jazz, the organ or music theory, for example). These, as well as the highly specialized 'polyglot' dictionaries of musical terms, have been increasing in numbers in recent years. The most important of the latter type is the Terminorum musicae index septem linguis redactus (1978), prepared under the supervision of Horst Leuchtmann to assist those working with or reporting to the offices of RISM and perhaps the first music dictionary compiled with the aid of computer.

(iv) Biographical works.

(a) General. In the history of music lexicography there have been only four general dictionaries of biography that can be considered monumental: those by Gerber and Fétis (discussed in §2 above), Eitner's Quellen-Lexikon and Baker's A Biographical Dictionary of Musicians (1900).

Of the astonishing number of important works written, compiled or edited by Robert Eitner, none remains more useful than his Quellen-Lexikon (1900–04). Though dependent on its forebears from Walther to Gerber and Fétis, it is a monumental accomplishment, and though corrected, amplified and in some ways superseded by MGG and RISM, it remains indispensable. The lists of works by major composers with locations of manuscripts are less valuable now than formerly, but those appended to biographical notices of many minor composers are often still useful. Some of Eitner's entries are not included in any other dictionary. Baker's one-volume work, published for the first time in 1900, has remained throughout its lifetime the best international biography of musicians in English, and reissues of it under the successive editorships of Gustave Reese and Nicolas Slonimsky have markedly improved each edition. It grows larger and more dependable, and with supplements appearing more frequently than in the past, it is kept surprisingly up to date.

There are others that are also extremely useful. As has been pointed out already, the most valuable feature of many dictionaries and encyclopedias is their emphasis on the music and musicians of the country in which they are published. This is equally true for general biographical works; thus Schmidl's excellent Dizionario universale (1887–90) is especially informative about the musicians of Italy, Ricart Matas's Diccionario (1956) about those of Spain. Even the four most important works named above display some nationalistic emphasis.

(b) Regional and other specialized works. After Fétis there was a pronounced trend away from the mammoth international biographical dictionary towards those limited to the musicians of one country or region. The first of this kind, F.J. Lipowsky's dictionary of Bavarian musicians, had already been published in 1811. Carl Kossmaly and C.H. Herzel's Schlesisches Tonkünstler-Lexikon (1846–7), J.H. Letzer's Muzikaal Nederland

(1850) and Wojciech Sowiński's Les musiciens polonais et slaves (1857) were the next important ones. These and similar books are now extremely valuable because they frequently offer information about less well-known musicians who have been excluded from newer compilations. Only about 20 such lexica were published in the whole of the 19th century, another 20 from 1900 to World War II.

One specialist music dictionary stands out as a sinister memorial of the war years: Theo Stengel and Herbert Gerigk's Lexikon der Juden in der Musik, mit einem Titelverzeichnis jüdischer Werke, first published in Berlin in 1940 under the auspices of the Nazi government as the second volume in the series Veröffentlichungen des Instituts der NSDAP zur Erforschung der Judenfrage. This is a very rare example of a musical dictionary issued with an explicitly gruesome purpose. By a ghastly irony, this grotesque (and sometimes inaccurate) dictionary still has a value today for those working on Jewish musicians in the first half of the 20th century. The war years also saw the publication of A. Vodarsky-Shiraeff's Russian Composers and Musicians (New York, 1940), the earliest biographical dictionary to provide worthwhile information in English about musicians in the Soviet Union; this was followed in 1943 by I.F. Belza's Handbook of Soviet Musicians, and both remain useful.

Since the war, the number of such dictionaries has greatly increased, which is only to be expected in view of the growth of the world's population and consequent increase in the number of the musicians about whom information is needed and the number of people needing such information. There have been a number of useful specialized dictionaries devoted to performers (with and without a particular national focus). Notable among these, for the welcome breadth of its coverage and for the inclusion of biographical information which is often hard to find elsewhere, is the Dictionnaire des interprètes et de l'interprétation musicale au XXe siècle edited by Alain Pâris, first published in 1982, with revised editions in 1989 and 1995. New musical cultures have developed and acquired their own reference material, while older ones have come to be scrutinized in ever more detail.

For a comprehensive list and index of DICTIONARIES AND ENCYCLOPEDIAS OF MUSIC see volume 28.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Grove5 (A.H. King); Grove6 (J.B. Coover); GroveA (D.O. Ota); MGG1 ('Janowka, Thomas Balthasar', M. Ruhnke; also 'Lexika der Musik', H.H. Eggebrecht); MGG2 ('Musiklexika', M. Bandur); RiemannL12 ('Lexika', H.H. Eggebrecht); StrunkSR

F.M. Padelford: Old English Musical Terms (Bonn, 1899/R)

G. Schad: Musik und Musikausdrücke in der mittel-englischen Litteratur (Frankfurt, 1911)

J. Bücher: Der Einfluss der Musik auf den englischen Wortschatz im 16. und 17. Jahrhundert (Düsseldorf, 1926)

M.M. Mathews: A Survey of English Dictionaries (London, 1933)

P.M. Riches: Analytical Bibliography of Universal Collected Biography (London, 1934)

M. Appel: Terminologie in den mittelalterlichen Musiktraktaten (Bottrop, 1935)

I. Düring: 'Studies in Musical Terminology in 5th Century Literature', Eranos, xliii (1945), 176–97

D.T. Starnes and G. Noyes: The English Dictionary from Cawdrey to Johnson (Chapel Hill, NC, 1946)

P. Scholes: The Great Dr. Burney (London, 1948/R)

S. Walin: 'Musikinstrumenttermer i äldre svenska lexikon', STMf, xxx (1948), 5–40; xxxi (1949), 5–82

S.H. Steinberg: 'Encyclopedias', Signature, new ser., no.12 (1951), 3

J.B. Coover: A Bibliography of Music Dictionaries (Denver, 1952, enlarged 3/1971 as Music Lexicography)

H.H. Eggebrecht: 'Aus der Werkstatt des terminologischen Handwörterbuchs', IMSCR V: Utrecht 1952, 155–64

D.T. Starnes: Renaissance Dictionaries (Austin, 1954)

H.H. Eggebrecht: Studien zur musikalischen Terminologie (Mainz, 1955, 2/1968)

D.T. Starnes and E.W. Talbert: Classical Myth and Legend in Renaissance Dictionaries (Chapel Hill, NC, 1955)

E. Lowinsky: 'Adrian Willaert's Chromatic "Duo" Re-Examined', TVNM, xviii/1 (1956), 1–36

H.H. Eggebrecht: 'Ein Musik-Lexikon von Christoph Demantius', Mf, x (1957), 48–60

H.H. Eggebrecht: 'Walthers Musikalisches Lexikon in seinen terminologischen Partien', AcM, xxix (1957), 10–27

J. Fontaine: Isidore de Seville et la culture classique dans l'Espagne (Paris, 1959)

H.P. Gysin: Studien zum Vokabular der Musiktheorie im Mittelalter (Zürich, 1959)

M.M. Keane: The Theoretical Writings of Jean-Philippe Rameau (Washington DC, 1961)

O. Wessely: 'Ein Musiklexikon von Francois Le Cocq', Hans Albrecht in memoriam, ed. W. Brennecke and H. Haase (Kassel, 1962), 101–8

R. Collison: Encyclopaedias: their History throughout the Ages (New York, 1964)

S.L. Jackson: 'What a History of the Encyclopedia could Show', Library Review, xix (1964), 398

A. Berger: 'New Linguistic Modes and the New Theory', PNM, iii/1 (1964–5), 1–9

E.T. Cone: 'A Budding Grove', PNM, iii/2 (1964–5), 38–46

S. Borris: Terminologie in der neuen Musik (Berlin, 1965)

H. Heckmann: 'Einleitung' to facs. of S. de Brossard: Dictionaire (Hilversum, 1965) [see also V. Duckles (1967–8)]

C.M. Winchell: Guide to Reference Books (Chicago, 8/1967, rev. 9/1976 by E.P. Sheehy)

T.W. Hunt: The Dictionnaire de musique of Jean-Jacques Rousseau (Denton, TX, 1967)

R.B. Slocum: Biographical Dictionaries and Related Works (Detroit, 1967, suppls., 1972–8)

F. Blume: 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart: a Postlude', Notes, xxiv (1967–8), 217–44

V. Duckles: Review of facs. of S. de Brossard: Dictionaire (Hilversum, 1965), Notes, xxiv (1967–8), 700–01 [see also H. Heckmann (1965)]

E. Jacobi: Rameau: Complete Theoretical Writings (Rome, 1967–72)

H. Avenary: 'Musikalische Analecta aus Isidors Etymologiae', Mf, xxi (1968), 38–9

R. Cigler: 'Notes on the History of Musical Lexicography in Czechoslovakia', SPFFBU, H3 (1968), 87–98

T. Dart: 'Music and Musical Instruments in Cotgrave's Dictionarie (1611)', GSJ, xxi (1968), 70–80

H.H. Eggebrecht and F. Reckow: 'Das Handwörterbuch der musikalischen Terminologie', AMw, xxv (1968), 241–77

R. Klein: 'MGG bei "ZY" angelangt', ÖMz, xxiii (1968), 430–31

E. de Freitas e Castro: 'Dicionários de música brasileiros', Revista brasileira de cultura, no.5 (1970), 9–20

J.A.H. Murray: The Evolution of English Lexicography (College Park, MD, 1970)

P.A. Scholes: 'Dictionaries of Music', The Oxford Companion to Music (London, 10/1970)

J. Subirá: 'Un panorama histórico de lexicografía musical', AnM, xxv (1970), 125–42

J. Leyerle: 'The Dictionary of Old English: a Progress Report', Computers and the Humanities, v (1970–1), 279–83

A.J. Aitken: 'Historical Dictionaries and the Computer', The Computer in Literary and Linguistic Research (Cambridge, 1971), 3

R. Collison: Dictionaries of English and Foreign Languages (New York, 2/1971)

V. Duckles: 'Some Observations on Music Lexicography', College Music Symposium, xi (1971), 115–22

SPFFBU, H6 (1971)

Zur Terminologie der Musik des 20. Jahrhunderts: Freiburg 1972

H.H. Eggebrecht, ed.: Handwörterbuch der musikalischen Terminologie (Wiesbaden, 1972–)

B. Huys and others: François-Joseph Fétis et la vie musicale de son temps: 1784–1871 (Brussels, 1972)

M. Paterson and S. Ritori: Hidden Terms in the Harvard Dictionary (diss., Kent State U., 1973)

P.J. Shaw: A Comparison of 18th century Music Dictionaries Published in England (Chapel Hill, NC, 1973)
N. Williams and P. Daub: 'Coover's Music Lexicography–Two Supplements', Notes, xxx (1973–4), 492–500
N. Findler and H. Vill: 'A Few Steps towards Computer Lexiconometry', American Journal of Computational Linguistics, i (1974), 169
R. Sajak: Sebastian de Brossard als Lexicograph (Bonn, 1974)
D. Sherman: 'A New Computer Format for Webster's Seventh Collegiate Dictionary', Computers and the Humanities, viii (1974), 21–6
A. Cohen: 'Musique in the Dictionnaire mathématique (1691) of Jacques Ozanam', MR, xxxvi (1975), 85–91
S. Sadie: 'The New Grove', Notes, xxxii (1975–6), 259–68
R. Lonsdale: 'Dr. Burney's "Dictionary of Music"', Musicology, v (1977), 159–71
H.W. Hitchcock: 'On the Path to the U.S. Grove', Notes, xli (1984–5), 467–70
D. Franković: 'Glazbena terminologija u Slovniku umjetnikah jugoslavenskih Ivana Kukuljevića Sakcinskog' [Musical terminology in Sakcinski's Slovniku umjetnikah jugoslavenskih], Arti musices, xvii/1 (1986), 3–74
V.H. Duckles and M.A. Keller: Music Reference and Research Materials (New York, 4/1988, rev.5/1997 by I. Reed)
M. André: 'Eine Quelle zur Entstehungsgeschichte von Ernst Ludwig Gerbers Neuem Tonkünstlerlexikon', Festschrift Klaus Hortschansky, ed. A. Beer and L. Lütteken (Tutzing, 1995), 325–7

JAMES B. COOVER/R (II, 1 with JOHN C. FRANKLIN)

Didacus a Portu. See PUERTO, DIEGO DEL.

Diddley bow. Single-string chordophone of the southern USA. It usually consists of a length of wire the ends of which are attached to a wall of a frame house, the house acting as resonator. A cotton reel is frequently used as a bridge. A more portable version has the wire attached to a length of fence picket. The instrument is played with a glass bottleneck or nail. Many blues guitarists, including Big Joe Williams and Muddy Waters, learnt to play first on the diddley bow. Lonnie Pitchford, a player from Mississippi, uses an electrically amplified version. The rock and roll singer Ellas McDaniel reversed the instrument name for his professional pseudonym, Bo Diddley. See D. Evans: 'Afro-American One-Stringed Instruments', Western Folklore, xxix (1970), 229–45.

PAUL OLIVER

Diderot, Denis (b Langres, 5 Oct 1713; d Paris, 31 July 1784). French philosopher, critic and writer. He is best known as principal editor of the Encyclopédie but was also an influential writer on music. Born into a bourgeois family and educated by Jesuits, he was a writer of immense knowledge, energy and determination, who was imprisoned briefly (in 1749) for his philosophical views yet showed a spirit of tolerance that set him apart from most of his friends and colleagues. As chief architect of the Encyclopédie, a task that occupied him for some 20 years, he had a strong impact on the musical thought of his own and subsequent times. Musical discussion is strewn throughout his voluminous writings on all subjects and in his fiction: scientific works on acoustics, sound production and sensory perception are complemented by aesthetic writings, by critical essays on drama, art and music, and by diverse literary texts (plays, novels, dialogues), pedagogical tracts and a rich correspondence.

An intimate of Friedrich Grimm and, initially, of Jean-Jacques Rousseau (their views later diverged), Diderot was at first a warm supporter of Rameau. The early satire, Les bijoux indiscrets (1748), contains a chapter on opera in which Lully ('Utmiutsol') is compared with Rameau ('Utremifasollasiututut'). The merits of both emerge although Diderot's preference is for Rameau, who is praised for his harmonic richness and fine sense of nuance in distinguishing between delicate shades of feeling. Diderot's later difficulties with Rameau were provoked first by the composer's refusal to write the music articles in the Encyclopédie – these subsequently passed to Rousseau, whom Rameau viewed with hostility – and then by the philosophe's siding with the coin de la reine in the Querelle des Bouffons (although Diderot remained one of the few sane voices in this dispute, never wholeheartedly rejecting the merits of French music). Rameau, though cited as the supreme authority in musical matters in the early volumes of the Encyclopédie, was enraged by the attacks on French music during the Querelle des Bouffons (by Grimm and Rousseau in particular), and responded with hostile criticism of the whole enterprise. Diderot, as editor-in-chief, was forced to rebut: he did so in the preface to the sixth volume (1756) but restrained his pen out of deference and respect for the composer.

Denis Diderot; portrait by Louis-Michel van Loo, 1767 (Musée du Louvre, Paris)

In the late 1750s Diderot turned his attention to the theatre and his ideas instigated various 'reforms' in declamation, realism and gesture which influenced Noverre, Algarotti, Jommelli, Traetta and Gluck among others. Two plays, Le fils naturel (1757) and Le père de famille (1758), were inspired by a belief that the theatre should become more social and less aristocratic in its orientation; they led to the birth of the drame bourgeois, a literary genre that influenced the style and subject matter of the nascent opéra comique and eventually produced a musical equivalent, the drame lyrique. Each play was accompanied by an essay ('Entretiens sur Le fils naturel' and 'De la poésie dramatique' respectively); these ranged over the need for reform in every aspect of the theatre, especially the lyric theatre and, with Diderot's next essay

Le neveu de Rameau, written shortly after 1760 (but not published until 'discovered' and translated by Goethe over 40 years later), represent the most coherent consideration of dramatic theory published in 18th-century France.

Drawing on innovations that had recently taken place on the English stage, particularly on the part of the celebrated actor David Garrick, Diderot's aim was to combat the lack of reality he perceived in French theatre. He criticized the 'déclamation maniérée, symétrisée et si éloignée de la vérité' that had been in vogue for many years ('De la poésie'). In Le neveu – presented as a dialogue between 'Le philosophe' and Rameau's disreputable nephew, a gifted but shallow performer of 'modern' (Italian) music – he advocated a more natural declamatory style where the melody was tailored closely to the accents of speech, imitating nature and speaking to the heart. He also argued for greater realism in the physical conduct of actors: 'C'est à l'acteur à convenir au rôle, et non pas au rôle à convenir à l'acteur' ('De la poésie'). Gesture, he believed, should play an important part in the dramatic development of a work, allowing the verbal element to be subordinated more frequently to the visual. Allied to this was the idea that stage decorations and costumes should reflect the subjects they portrayed: 'ce qui montre surtout combien nous sommes encore loin du bon goût et de la vérité, c'est la pauvreté et la fausseté des décorations, et le luxe des habits' ('De la poésie').

Diderot's desire to create a more realistic type of drama closely coordinating visual, aural and literary aspects meant that works needed to be represented, not simply 'read'. In focussing on characters drawn from the daily experience of his middle- and lower-class audiences rather than on stereotypes from the mythological or historical past, he was able to create effective outlets for the discussion of contemporary social, political and religious issues and, in this way, achieved another important objective in enlightening and educating the public he served. Most importantly, however, Diderot's reforms, which inspired many artists throughout Europe, radically altered the way in which stage works were conceived and represented since they called for a closer and more creative collaboration between composers, librettists and actors.

While Diderot modified his views during his lifetime – his indebtedness, for example, to Rameau's idea of the corps sonore in the Mémoires sur différens sujets de mathématiques (1748) was replaced by alternative views on harmony in the Leçons de clavecin (1771) – he showed nonetheless a remarkable ability to synthesize opposing strands of thought (hence his apparently impartial stance in the Querelle des Bouffons) and remained fundamentally intrigued by the indeterminate qualities of musical expression. The less precise nature of imitation in music set it apart from other artforms and, Diderot argued, enhanced its expressive powers. It was these he strived to clarify in his writings, with a passion and persistence that characterized his very individual personality.

WRITINGS

only those relating to music included

Edition: Oeuvres complètes de Diderot, ed. J. Assézat and M. Tourneux (Paris, 1875–7/*R*1966)

Les bijoux indiscrets (Paris, 1748)

Mémoires sur différens sujets de mathématiques (Paris, 1748) [incl. Principes généraux d'acoustique and Project d'un nouvel orgue]

Lettre sur les aveugles à l'usage de ceux qui volient (London, 1749)

ed., with J. d'Alembert: Encyclopédie, ou Dictionnaire raisonné des sciences, arts et metiers (Paris and Neuchâtel, 1751–65; suppls., Amsterdam, 1776–7) [Diderot's contributions listed in Oliver (1947)]

Lettre sur les sourds et les muets à l'usage de ceux qui entendent et qui parlent (Paris, 1751)

Arrêt rendu à l'amphithéâtre de l'Opéra (Paris, 1753) [also attrib. d'Holbach]

Au petit prophète de Boehmischbroda [Grimm] (Paris, 1753) [also attrib. d'Holbach]

Les trois chapitres ou La nuit du mardi-gras au mercredi des cendres (Paris, 1753) [also attrib. d'Holbach]

Pensées sur l'interprétation de la nature (1754)

Avertissement au Tome VI, Preface of the Encyclopédie, vi (Paris, 1756)

Le fils naturel, ou Les épreuves de la vertu (Paris, 1757) [incl. 'Entretiens sur le fils naturel']

Le père de famille (Paris, 1758) [incl. 'De la poésie dramatique']

Le neveu de Rameau (MS, *c*1760, US-NYpm) [ed. J. Fabre, Geneva, 1950, 2/1963; Ger. trans., 1805; Eng. trans., 1965]

Leçons de clavecin et principes d'harmonie, par M. Bemetzrieder (1771)

Observations sur un ouvrage intitulé 'Traité du mélodrame' (1771)

Paradoxe sur le comédien (1773)

Compte rendu du mémoire sur le fondement des systèmes de musique des anciens peuples grecs, chinois et égyptiens (1776) [in F.M. Grimm: Correspondance littéraire]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R.L. Evans: Diderot et la musique (diss., U. of Birmingham, 1932)

A.R. Oliver: The Encyclopedists as Critics of Music (New York, 1947)

J. Thomas: 'Diderot, les Encyclopédistes et le grand Rameau', Revue de synthèse, xxviii (1951), 46–67

R. Mortier: Diderot en Allemagne (Paris, 1954)

J. Doolittle: Rameau's Nephew: a Study of Diderot's 'Second Satire' (Paris, 1961)

H.G. Farmer: 'Diderot and Rameau', MR, xxii (1961), 181–8

D. Heartz: 'From Garrick to Gluck: the Reform of Theatre and Opera in the Mid-Eighteenth Century', PRMA, xciv (1967–8), 111–27

P.H. Lang: 'Diderot as Musician', Diderot Studies, x (1968), 95–107

S. Sacaluga: 'Diderot, Rousseau, et la querelle musicale de 1752: nouvelle mise au point', ibid., 133–71

E. Fubini, ed.: Gli illuministi e la musica (Milan, 1969)

D. Heartz: 'Les lumières: Voltaire and Metastasio; Goldoni, Favart and Diderot', IMSCR, xii: Berkeley 1977, 233–8

D. Heartz: 'Diderot et le Théâtre lyrique', RdM, lxiv (1978), 229–51

J. Kopp: The Drame Lyrique: a Study in the Esthetics of Opéra-Comique, 1762–1791(diss., U. of Pennsylvania, 1982)

J.-L. Filoche: 'Le Neveu de Rameau et la Querelle des Bouffons: un son de cloche inédit', Diderot Studies, xxi (1983), 95–109

E. Fubini: Les philosophes et la musique (Paris, 1983)

B. Didier: La musique des lumières (Paris, 1985)

Diderot: les beaux-arts et la musique [Aix-en-Provence 1984], ed. H. Coulet (Aix-en-Provence, 1986)

B. Durand-Sendrail, ed.: Denis Diderot: écrits sur la musique (Paris, 1987)

C. Verba: Music and the French Enlightenment (Oxford, 1993)

E. Cook: Duet and Ensemble in the Early Opéra-Comique (New York, 1995)

DANIEL HEARTZ/ELISABETH COOK

Didjeridu. Wooden drone pipe played with varying techniques in a number of Australian Aboriginal cultures. Often regarded as a pan-Aboriginal instrument, the didjeridu is probably indigenous only to certain cultural areas lying along the north coast of Australia, especially in Arnhem Land and other areas in the 'Top End' of the Northern Territory. A number of didjeridu-playing cultures in immediately adjacent areas (e.g. the Kimberleys) have received didjeridu-accompanied song genres from their Top End neighbours.

1. Traditional contexts. 2. Contemporary contexts.

1. TRADITIONAL CONTEXTS. Aboriginal mythology regards the didjeridu as a Dreamtime creation, while the historical origin of the instrument is uncertain. The earliest known depictions of the instrument in rock art suggest that its use might date back only to about 1000 CE, though some of the song genres which the didjeridu now accompanies clearly originate from a much earlier period.

The didjeridu is called by different names in the various cultures that use the instrument. One name for the instrument coined by the Yolngu people of northeast Arnhem Land, yidaki, has found widespread use owing to the success of the Yolngu rock band Yothu Yindi. Moyle suggests that the onomatopoeic English name 'didjeridu' may have been inspired by some of the sounds produced by the instrument in western Arnhem Land.

Didjeridus from Arnhem Land are wooden tubes with roughly conical bores fashioned from the termite-hollowed trunks or branches of any of a number of trees including stringybark (Eucalyptus tetradonta), woollybutt (Eucalyptus miniata) and red river gum (Eucalyptus camaldulensis). Traditional instruments may vary in length and diameter, but those commonly used in public performances range from about 1 to 1·5 metres long with internal bore sizes of 3 to 5·5 cm at the proximal end (the 'mouthpiece') and 5·5 to 8 cm (or larger) at the distal end. The lengths of instruments from western Arnhem Land tend to be shorter than those of northeast Arnhem Land.

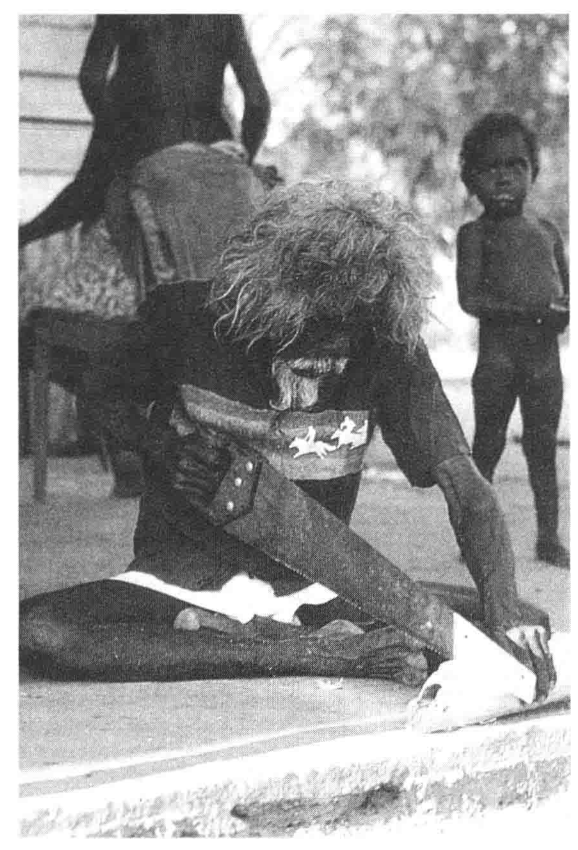
After first removing an appropriately-sized portion of the tree's trunk or branch, the instrument maker peels the bark off, next cutting away the outer layers of wood in order to produce a desirably 'light' sound (seeillustration). A knife is used to smooth out the inner surface of the blowing end. In some areas it is common to apply beeswax to the blowing end, both for comfort and to create a better seal. Decorative painting of the instrument (either in solid colours or in totemic-based designs) is an essential finishing touch for instruments intended for sale to outsiders, but instruments used in traditional performance are frequently unadorned.

The didjeridu is capable of producing a blown fundamental pitch as well as several harmonics above the fundamental. In practice, however, only the fundamental or the fundamental and first overtone are used. The fundamental pitch of Arnhem Land didjeridus varies from about B′ to G. In regions where the overtone is used, the interval forming between the two blown pitches is contingent on the exact dimensions of the instrument. In northeast Arnhem Land this interval often falls within the range of a 10th, but can vary anywhere from a slightly stretched octave to an 11th.

The use of specific playing techniques varies according to regional (as well as individual) style; however, the instrument is always used as a rhythmic drone marked by three distinctive features. The first of these is the production of a distinctively buzzy, formant-rich tone quality. Acoustical investigation has suggested that this characteristic timbre is not as dependent upon details of the instrument's design as upon the player's embouchure and basic blowing technique. Given a reasonably clear, conical bore and 'mouthpiece' diameter of sufficient size, the formant-rich sound is produced by a combination of high-amplitude, non-sinusoidal lip oscillation and high-frequency vocal tract resonance effected by the formation of a small cavity behind the teeth with the tongue.

The second ubiquitous feature of traditional performance is the technique of circular breathing, in which the player reserves small amounts of air in the cheeks or mouth while blowing. This allows the player to snatch frequent small breaths through the nose while simultaneously continuing the drone pitch by expelling the reserved air. The third idiomatic feature of traditional performance is that the drone is given rhythmic impetus through varying combination of three types of movement: patterned movement of the diaphragm, which occurs with each quick inspiration/expiration of air and tends to result in a slight, momentary rise in the blown pitch and increase of volume; rhythmic manipulation of the oral cavity by movement of the tongue, cheeks and/or throat; and rhythmic addition of vocal chord resonance or singing on top of the blown pitch, resulting in complexes of sum and difference frequencies. Each of these basic features of didjeridu performance contributes to sounds that challenge the distinctions between the traditional Western music-perceptual categories of rhythm, pitch and timbre.

Different regional-cultural traditions involve different combinations of these techniques. The Liverpool river serves as a rough dividing line between two different approaches to performance. Performance associated with cultures to the west of the Liverpool river is characterised by use of only the blown fundamental and by a regular correspondence between the didjeridu's fundamental and the singer's tonic. The rhythmic exploitation of added vocal resonance is especially prominent in this region.



By contrast, styles originating east of the Liverpool river are characterised by use of two blown pitches (the fundamental and the first overtone) and by a lack of a consistent tonal/structural correspondence between either of the didjeridu's two pitches and the singer's pitches (suggesting that the didjeridu's two blown pitches are perceived simply as 'low' and 'high' sounds).

The use of blown overtones and vocal sounds east of the Liverpool river can be further subdivided along regional lines. Performances in northeast Arnhem Land and Groote Eylandt are marked by use of both a relatively long 'hooted' overtone and a very subtly articulated 'lightly spat overtone'; by either simple or complex alterations between the two blown pitches; and by use of loud vocal shrieks and vocal imitations of various bird and animal sounds. In north central Arnhem Land, by contrast, the overtone pitch is produced only as a relatively long 'hoot'; rhythmic patterns forming from the alteration of the fundamental and overtones are fairly simple; and players generally do not make use of vocal shrieks or imitations of animal sounds.

In traditional contexts, the didjeridu is especially associated with public ceremonial genres such as the clan-owned manikay (bunggul) of northeastern and north central Arnhem Land, and the individually owned wangga and gunborgg (lirrga) of western Arnhem Land. These songs may be performed both at religious and secular occasions. Didjeridu also plays a major role in the purely recreational djatpangarri of northeast Arnhem Land. The instrument is specifically excluded from the madayin sacred genre of northeast Arnhem Land, but an unusually long (2m) version of the instrument plays an important representational role at certain points within djungguwan, a sacred regional genre of Eastern Arnhem Land.

In ceremonial contexts, the didjeridu is nearly always an accompanying instrument. It is played by a single male accompanying one or more male singers who also play pairs of hard wood clapsticks. In a number of genres the performance may also include dancing by women and/or men. The commensurate skills of many traditional players are well-appreciated within the community, but it is the song leader (ideally a well-respected elder male) who controls the choice of song subject, particular clapstick patterns, and (at times) specific rhythms to be used by the didjeridu player.

Manufacture of a didjeridu: (a) Larrtjannga fells a gadayka tree bored out by termites; (b) the ends of the instrument are levelled with a saw; (c) the outside of the blowing end is shaped with a file; (d) loose pieces of wood and debris left by the termites are knocked out with a wire rod

Players may perform either sitting or standing, the latter often occurring during processional movement of all performers from one place to another. Sitting postures vary in accordance with both regional and personal preferences. In western Arnhem Land, the shorter instruments are often supported on one foot or held just above the ground. In northeast Arnhem Land, the distal end is often laid directly on the ground or is placed in an external resonator to reflect the sound back to the player. Formerly a large conch shell provided the preferred resonator; though now any of a number of 'found objects' such as buckets or plastic food chests may be used for this purpose. Players sometimes keep time by tapping a fingernail or other object against the side of the instrument.

The didjeridu player's role in performance extends well beyond the supply of a constant drone. In many instances, the didjeridu rhythms provide the primary sense of 'groove' upon which other performers dance and sing. In central and eastern Arnhem Land the didjeridu player also has an important cueing role for the benefit of other performers, signalling changes of tempo and clapstick patterns within verses and also the point near the end of the verse where the clapsticks and didjeridu come to a coordinated halt. Many of the didjeridu's rhythms are formed by mouthing (and/or vocalizing) patterns of vocables. Spoken versions of these same vocables are used for explanatory or pedagogical purposes between didjeridu players or between a song leader and his accompanist.

There is no formal system of musical instruction in Arnhem Land. Young children play on small-scale instruments. In northeast Arnhem Land, boys nearing performing age practice both traditional patterns they have memorized and new patterns of their own making. They accompany young would-be singers and play in informal technical duels with other young didjeridu players. Talented performers may begin to play in ceremonies as teenagers; due to the physical demands of playing the instrument for several hours at a stretch, most of the better players are young men. Sheer technical ability and physical endurance aside, the true mark of the virtuoso players is their ability to memorize a very large number of rhythmic patterns and to know when to use each in accordance with the demands of particular performance contexts, song subjects, clapstick patterns and individual song leaders' aesthetic tastes.

Even within the constraints of the didjeridu's accompaniment role and in the generally conservative traditions of Arnhem Land performance there is room for innovation in the form of new rhythmic patterns and contemporary styles of vocal/didjeridu counterpoint. In northeast Arnhem Land such innovative tendencies are especially prominent in (though not limited to) the performance of yuta manikay ('newsong verse'), a type of contemporary re-composition of ancient songs which is incorporated within traditional ceremonial performance practice. In certain cases, contemporary styles of playing may embody influences from Western popular musics, though in ways which have not altered the basic function of the instrument within the vocal and choreographic ensemble.

In the very few Arnhem Land ceremonial contexts where women sing, the didjeridu is not used. The prohibition against women playing in ceremony seems to be based on social custom more than specific ancestral laws, although there are stories which account for this proscription within traditional culture. In a number of didjeridu-playing cultures women have (increasingly in recent years) played the instrument in accompanying non-ceremonial songs at informal social performances. A number of women are also active in the construction (and test-playing) of didjeridus intended for sale.

2. Contemporary contexts. The widespread dissemination of didjeridu performances on record, CD and film have led to the perception (and use) of its idiomatic sound as an easily recognizable icon of Aboriginal Australia. While some of these sounds derive from traditional sources, an ever-increasing proportion derives from non-traditional performance by Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal players alike, both within and outside Australia.

Over the past two generations contemporary bands which use didjeridu have been found in most of the larger settlements in Arnhem Land. Most successful of these has been the Yirrakala-based band Yothu Yindi, who during the 1990s have conducted frequent international tours and achieved considerable airplay both in Australia and abroad. One of this band's accommodations to Western pop aesthetics has been to tune their didjeridus to the tonic of the guitars and vocals; another has been to ensure that use of the blown overtone does not conflict with the sounds of deep-toned instruments such as the bass guitar. Traditional vocal shrieks are used, but usually in service of rhythmic patterns familiar to Western audiences (e.g. a standard Latin clave rhythm).

The didjeridu has also been taken up by Aboriginal performers across all of Australia, both in rock bands and in contemporary solo contexts, and this has served to legitimize the perception of the instrument as a pan-Aboriginal cultural symbol. Use of the instrument as a pan-Australian icon may be seen in its performance by a large number of contemporary non-Aboriginal Australian musicians. The instrument has also been used in chamber works by a number of contemporary Australian composers. To the extent that performance of these works often involves participation of Aboriginal didjeridu virtuoso players, there has been (in addition to the use of the instrument's unique sounds and iconicity) a desire for collaboration and/or reconciliation between indigenous and non-indigenous Australians.

On a global level the didjeridu has found significant use in culturally hybrid 'world music' groups, in new age performance (both in aesthetic-orientated and healing-orientated contexts) and in neo-tribal didjeridu circles that have sprung up in many urban areas. Most non-Aboriginal uses of the instrument (and virtually all new age examples) use adaptations of the drone-only technique associated with western Arnhem Land. Some non-Aboriginal players have made serious studies of traditional technique and rhythms; most players, however, have adapted the basic tone quality and circular breathing technique while otherwise applying rhythms, techniques and aesthetics which are unrelated to traditional Aboriginal performance. Some of the more utopian and mystical notions associated with the didjeridu in new age and other global contexts have little to do with conceptions of the instrument in traditional Aboriginal societies. Nonetheless, in many non-Aboriginal didjeridu performance practices, a prominent focus is ascribed to the ancient Aboriginal origin of the didjeridu, perhaps simultaneously out of respect for the instrument and as a way of bolstering the impression of 'authenticity' or spiritual value of the non-Aboriginal performer's activities.

BIBLIOGRAPHY
AND OTHER RESOURCES

GEWM, ix ('Didjeridus of Australia'; A. Marett)
A.P. Elkin and T.A. Jones: Arnhem Land Music (Sydney, 1958)
T.A. Jones: 'The Didjeridu: Some Comparisons of its Typology and Musical Functions with Similar Instruments Throughout the World', Studies in Music, i (1967), 23–55
Songs from the Northern Territory, coll. A.M. Moyle, Institute of Aboriginal Studies M001-5 (1967) [incl. notes]
T.A. Jones: 'The Yiraki (Didjeridu) in North-East Arnhem Land: Techniques and Styles', The Australian Aboriginal Heritage: An Introduction Through the Arts, ed. R.M. Berndt and E.S. Phillips (Sydney, 1973), 169–74
A.M. Moyle: North Australian Music: a Taxonomic Approach to the Study of Aboriginal Song Performances (diss., Monash U., 1974)
J. Stubington: Yolngu Manikay: Modern Performances of Australian Aboriginal Clan Songs (diss., Monash U., 1978)
A.M. Moyle: 'The Australian Didjeridu: a Late Musical Intrusion', World Archeology, xii (1981), 321–31
M. Clunies Ross and S.A. Wild, eds.: Djambidj: an Aboriginal Song Series from Northern Australia (Canberra, 1982) [incl. CD]
N.H. Fletcher: 'Acoustics of the Australian Didjeridu', Journal of Australian Aboriginal Studies, i (1983), 28–37
M. Clunies Ross and S.A. Wild: 'Formal Performance: the Relations of Music, Text and Dance in Arnhem Land Clan Songs', EthM, xxviii (1984), 209–35
J. Stubington: Review of Djambidj: an Aboriginal Song Series from Northern Australia, Australian Aboriginal Studies, i (1984), 68–76
G.C. Wiggins: 'The Physics of the Didgeridoo', Physics Bulletin, xxxix (1988), 266–7
G.D. Anderson: Mularra: a Clan Song Series from Central Arnhem Land (diss., U. of Sydney, 1992)
A.J. Marett: 'Variability and Stability in Wangga Songs of Northwest Australia', Music and Dance in Aboriginal Australia and the South Pacific: the Effects of Documentation on the Living Tradition, ed. A.M. Moyle (Sydney, 1992) 194–213
S. Knopoff: 'Yuta Manikay: Juxtaposition of Ancestral and Contemporary Elements in Performance of Yolngu Clan Songs', YTM, xxiv (1992), 138–53
Bunggridj-bunggridj: Wangga Songs by Alan Maralung, Smithsonian Folkways CD 40430 (1993) [incl. notes by A. Marett and L. Barwick]
K. Neuenfeldt: 'The Didjeridu and the Overdub', Perfect Beat, i/2 (1993), 60–77
K. Neuenfeldt: 'The Essentialistic, the Exotic, the Equivocal and the Absurd: the Cultural Production and Use of the Didjeridu in World Music', Perfect Beat, ii/1 (1994), 88–104
G. Anderson: 'Striking a Balance: Limited Variability in Performances of a Clan Song Series from Central Arnhem Land', The Essence of Singing and the Substance of Song: Recent Responses to the Aboriginal Performing Arts and Other Essays in Honour of Catherine Ellis, ed. L. Barwick, A. Marett and G. Tunstill (Sydney, 1995), 12–25
K. Neuenfeldt ed: The Didjeridu: from Arnhem Land to Internet (Sydney, 1997) [incl. P. Dunbar-Hall: 'Continuation, Dissemination and Innovation: The Didjeridu and Contemporary Aboriginal Popular Music Groups', 69–88; L. Barwick: 'Gender "Taboos" and Didjeridus', 89–98; S. Knopoff: 'Accompanying the Dreaming: Determinants of Didjeridu Style in Traditional and Popular Yolngu Song', 39–67; P. Sherwood: 'The Didjeridu and Alternative Lifestylers' Reconstruction of Social Reality', 139–53; F. Magowan: 'Out of Time Out of Place: a Comparison of Applications of the Didjeridu in Aboriginal Australia, Great Britain and Ireland', 161–83]
K. Neuenfeldt: 'Good Vibrations? The "Curious" Cases of the Diderjidu in Spectacle and Therapy in Australia', World of Music, i1/2 (1998), 29–52

STEVEN KNOPOFF

Didkovsky, Nicholas [Nick] (b Bronxville, NY, 22 Nov 1958). American guitarist and composer. After attending Dartmouth College (1976–8), he took the ScB in mathematics at Brown University (1980), where he also studied electronic music with Gerald Shapiro. He continued his studies at the Creative Music Studio (1981–2) with Baikida Carroll, Dave Holland and Pauline Oliveros, also serving as the Studio's audio engineer-in-residence, and at New York University (MA 1988). Founder, composer and guitarist of the contemporary music septet Doctor Nerve, he has also composed for and performed with the Fred Frith Guitar Quartet (from 1989). His other activities have included a collaboration with Phil Burk on the latter's Java programming language (JMSL), the successor to Burk's Hierarchical Music Specification Language (HMSL). His works have been commissioned by organizations including the Bang On a Can Festival, Meet the Composer, the Jerome Foundation and HarvestWorks. Didkovsky's work combines the furious energy of rock with intricate technique, some of which finds its origins in software systems of his own design. His non-didactic approach to combining human and machine creativity represents an attempt to push forward the boundaries of rock music, algorithmic composition and the formal systems of contemporary art music.

WORKS
(selective list)

MetaMusic/MetaText, 1v, 5 insts, cptr, MIDI pf, 1989; Lottery, any pfmrs, cptr, 1990; Antaeus, 4 gui, 1992; Amalia's Secret, cl, vc, elec gui, elec b gui, pf, perc, 1994; Plague, s sax, tpt, b cl, elec gui, elec b gui, vib/kbd, perc, 1994; Take Your Ears as the Bones of their Queen, s sax, tpt, b cl, elec gui, elec b gui, vib/kbd, perc, 1994; Their Eyes Bulged with Sparkling Pockets, chbr orch, 1995; To Laugh Uncleanly at the Nurse, 4 gui, 1995; Caught by the Sky with Wire, vc, perc, 1996, Ereia, 12 inst, 1997

Principal publisher: Frog Peak, Punos

Principal recording companies: Cuneiform, CRI

WRITINGS

with L. Polansky: 'Live Interactive Intelligent Computer Music: Notes on Pieces done in HMSL, 1984–91', International Computer Music Conference: Proceedings, ed. B. Alphonce and B. Pennycook (Montreal, 1991), 37–44
'Lottery: Toward a Unified Rational Strategy for Cooperative Music Making', Leonardo Music Journal, ii (1992), 3–12
'MetaMusic/MetaText: the Blurry Boundaries around Distributed Compositional Systems', Leonardo Music Journal, vii (1997)

MICHAEL C. FRENGEL

Di Domenica, Robert Anthony (b New York, 4 March 1927). American composer and flautist. He received the BS degree in music education from New York University (1951) and pursued private studies in composition with Riegger and Josef Schmid; his principal flute teacher was Harold Bennett. He joined the faculty of the New England Conservatory in 1969, serving as associate dean and dean (1973–6). Since that time he has taught composition there. As an orchestral flautist he has performed with the New York City Opera, New York PO and other orchestras; his ensemble work has included appearances with the Modern Jazz Quartet, Twentieth Century Innovations Composers' Forum, Bach Aria Group and the series Music in Our Time. He has also played in many Broadway shows. He has taught the flute for many years both privately and as a member of the faculties of the Greenwich House Music School and Henry Street Settlement in New York City (1950–69). Among his awards and commissions are a Guggenheim Fellowship in composition (1972) and a commission from the Goethe Institute (Boston, 1975).

A serial composer ever since his studies with Schmid (a pupil of Berg), Di Domenica combines these techniques with elements from the classical literature and, to a lesser extent, from jazz. His music possesses an innate lyricism, reflecting his love of opera, and in his piano works especially there are elements of fantasy, rhapsody, improvisation and sometimes programmatic description. The opera The Balcony (1972) is a highly organized, atonal composition: every scene has its own note row (each related to the next) and instrumental and tonal colour, with a progressively ascending tessitura and growing tension. In later works Di Domenica has attached special importance to texts, whether setting them for opera, solo voice, or using them as background inspiration for instrumental compositions. He is also drawn to writing for the piano and in this has received valuable assistance from his wife, Leona, a professional pianist. His music has been performed by leading opera companies, orchestras, ensembles and instrumentalists.

WORKS

Ops: The Balcony (2, after J. Genet), 1972; The Scarlet Letter (3, after N. Hawthorne), 1986; Beatrice Cenci (3, after A. Moravia), 1993; The Cenci (1, after P.B. Shelley), 1995; Francesco Cenci (2, after A. Artaud), 1996

Orch: Sym., 1963; Vn Conc., vn, chbr orch, 1962; Pf Conc. no.1, 1961; Conc., wind qnt, str, timp, 1964; Music for Fl and Str Orch, 1967; The Holy Colophon, S, T, chorus, orch, 1980; Variations on a Theme by Gunther Schuller, solo tuba, chbr ens, 1983; Dream Journeys, 1984; Variations and Soliloquies, 1988; Gone are the Rivers and Eagles (Variations on 2 songs by C. Ives), 1992

Chbr and solo inst: Sextet, ww qnt, pf, 1957; Sonata, fl, pf, 1957; Pf Sonatina, 1958; 4 Movts, pf, 1959; Qt, fl, hn, vn, pf, 1959; Qt, fl, vn, va, vc, 1960; Str Qt, 1960; Variations on a Tonal Theme, fl, 1961; Wind Qnt, S, ww qnt, 1963; Qnt, cl, str qt, 1965; Trio, fl, bn, pf, 1966; Sonata, vn, pf, 1966; Saeculum aureum, fl, pf, tape, 1967; Sonata, a sax, pf, 1968; 11 Short Pieces, pf, 1973; Improvisations, pf, 1974; Music for Stanzas, fl, cl, bn, hn, tape, 1981; The Art of the Row, pf, 1989

Songs: The First Kiss of Love (Byron), S, pf, 1960; 4 Short Songs (J. Bobrowski), S, chbr ens, 1975; Black Poems, Bar, pf, tape, 1976; Songs from Twelfth Night (W. Shakespeare), T, chbr ens, 1976; Sonata after Essays (Hawthorne: The Scarlet Letter), S, Bar, pf, fl + a fl, tape, 1977, arr. S, B, pf, chbr orch, tape, as Concord Revisited, 1978; Arrangements (J.W. von Goethe), S, chamber ens, tape, 1979; Hebrew Melodies, S, vn, pf, 1983

MSS in US-Wc

Principal publishers: Margun, E.B. Marks, MJQ, Edition Musicus

BARBARA A. PETERSEN/ELLEN BENDER

Didur, Adam [Adamo] (b Wola Sekowa, nr Sanok, 24 Dec 1874; d Katowice, 7 Jan 1946). Polish bass. He studied in Lemberg with Wysocki and in Milan with Emmerich. He made his début in 1894 in Rio de Janeiro, and sang at the Warsaw Opera, 1899–1903, taking such leading roles as the title part in Mefistofele, always a favourite of his. After appearances in Spain he sang at La Scala (1904–6) and in Russia (1909). In 1905 he made his Covent Garden début as Colline in La bohème, returning in 1914 to sing Baron Archibaldo in the British première of Montemezzi's L'amore dei tre re and, among other roles, Gounod's Méphistophélès. Having made his American début in 1907 at the Manhattan Opera House as Alvise (La Gioconda), he joined the Metropolitan Opera, where he was engaged for 25 seasons; he made his début there in 1908 as Ramfis, and sang Boris Godunov (1913), Baron Archibaldo (1915), Galitsky and Konchak in Prince Igor (1915), all American premières. He was again praised for his portrayals of Gounod's and Boito's devils, and sang such baritone roles as Tonio and Count Almaviva. Didur's voice had a black timbre of a certain biting quality and he was a splendid actor. On a number of early recordings the strength and character of his singing more than compensate for some technical infelicities.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. de Noskowski: 'Adamo Didur', Record Collector, xvi (1964–6), 4–23 [with discography by J. Dennis]

LEO RIEMENS, ALAN BLYTH

Didymus [Didymos ho mousikos] (fl ?2nd half of 1st century BCE). Greek music theorist. Fragments of his work survive in quotation by Porphyry and Ptolemy. Most musicological studies have hitherto tacitly assumed him to be identical with the Alexandrian grammarian and lexicographer Didymus, nicknamed 'Chalkenteros' (or 'Chalcenterus'; fl second half of 1st century BCE), who, according to Quintilian (i.8, 10) and Athenaeus (iv.139c), produced more than 3500 books on literary and antiquarian subjects; these included compilations of Hellenistic philology, much drawn on by later authors, although only a few fragments now survive. The qualification ho mousikos ('the musician'), almost invariably added to the name by Ptolemy and Porphyry, suggests, however, that this identification is incorrect. Classical scholars have proposed that Didymus was a younger man of the same name, a grammarian and musician at Rome in the time of Nero, probably the Didymus who wrote a work, now lost, cited by Clement of Alexandria (Strōmateis, i.26) as Concerning Pythagorean Philosophy. The latter work may have served Ptolemy as a source in the final chapters of his Harmonics (iii.3–13).

In the preface to his commentary on Ptolemy (ed. Düring, 3.13), PORPHYRY cited Didymus as a primary authority. He quotes a fragment (26.6–28.6) which, he said, was from Didymus's treatise Concerning the Difference between the Pythagorean and Aristoxenian Theories of Music (5.11ff; 25.4ff). This fragment, like that from a certain Ptolemaïs of Cyrene quoted immediately before (22.25–26.6), criticizes music theory according to the criteria of reason (logos) and perception through the senses (aisthēsis).

PTOLEMY (ii.13–14) discussed Didymus's doctrines of the division of the monochord and the divisions of the tetrachord. He sought to correct Didymus's theory of intervals and genera (ii.13), criticizing it as contrary to the findings of empirical observation. He tabulated the calculations of the divisions of the tetrachord made by Didymus and others, together with his own (ii.14–15). Those of Didymus are as follows: diatonic tetrachord – 9:8, 10:9, 16:15; chromatic tetrachord – 6:5, 25:24, 16:15; enharmonic tetrachord – 5:4, 31:30, 32:31.

Unlike his predecessor ERATOSTHENES, who had divided the diatonic tetrachord into two equal whole tones (each 9:8) and a limma (256:243), Didymus introduced a distinction in the diatonic tetrachord between a major and minor whole tone (respectively 9:8 and 10:9). The major and minor whole tone together constitute a major 3rd (5:4), previously found only in the enharmonic tetrachord of Archytas; and in including a major 3rd, the diatonic tetrachord of Didymus resembles the upper or lower tetrachord of the modern major scale (e.g. C–D–E–F, or G–A–B–c; see the table in MGG1, iii, 435–6). This tetrachord was adopted by Ptolemy, but with the positions of the major and minor whole tones reversed, as his 'tense' diatonic tetrachord. The difference between the major and minor tones (9:8 × 9:10 = 81:80) is known as the 'syntonic comma', or 'comma of Didymus'; this is also the difference between the Pythagorean major 3rd (81:64) and the pure major 3rd (5:4).

The chromatic tetrachord of Didymus, besides a harmonic minor 3rd (6:5) and the semitone of the diatonic tetrachord (16:15), contains another, rather small semitone (25:24) that was adopted by no other Greek theorist. His enharmonic tetrachord again includes a pure major 3rd (5:4), with the remaining diatonic semitone (16:15) divided into two quarter-tones that are almost equal (32:31, 31:30). In his tunings Didymus was thus able to achieve pure major and minor 3rds while adhering strictly to the principle of superparticularity (for an explanation of the latter concept see PTOLEMY).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Schmidt, ed.: Didymi Chalcenteri grammatici Alexandrini: fragmenta quae supersunt omnia (Leipzig, 1854/R)

H. Diels, ed.: Doxographi graeci (Berlin, 1879/R), 79–80

L. Cohn: 'Didymos (8), (11)', Paulys Real-Encyclopädie der classischen Alterthumswissenschaft, v (Stuttgart, 1905), 445–72, 473–4

S. Wantzloeben: Das Monochord als Instrument und als System entwicklungsgeschichtlich dargestellt (Halle, 1911)

L. Schönberger: Studien zum 1. Buch der Harmonik des Claudius Ptolemäus (Augsburg, 1914)

P. Tannéry: Mémoires scientifiques, iii (Toulouse and Paris, 1915), 68ff

R.P. Winnington-Ingram: 'Aristoxenus and the Intervals of Greek Music', Classical Quarterly, xxvi (1932), 195–208

I. Düring, ed. and trans.: Ptolemaios und Porphyrios über die Musik (Göteborg, 1934/R), 139, 145ff, 155ff, 267

W. Dupont: Geschichte der musikalischen Temperatur (Kassel, 1935)

J.M. Barbour: Tuning and Temperament: a Historical Survey (East Lansing, MI, 1951/R, 2/1953)

H. Husmann: Grundlagen der antiken und orientalischen Musikkultur (Berlin, 1961), esp. 15, 27, 33ff

L. Richter: Zur Wissenschaftslehre von der Musik bei Platon und Aristoteles (Berlin, 1961), 178–9

M. Vogel: Die Enharmonik der Griechen (Düsseldorf, 1963), i, esp. 33–4, 46

R. Pfeiffer: Geschichte der klassischen Philologie (Hamburg, 1970), 331ff

A. Barbera: 'Arithmetic and Geometric Divisions of the Tetrachord', JMT, xxii (1977), 294–323

A. Barker, ed.: Greek Musical Writings, ii: Harmonic and Acoustic Theory (Cambridge, 1989), 229–30, 242ff, 342ff

LUKAS RICHTER

Dieffopruchar [Dieffoprukhar]. See TIEFFENBRUCKER family.

Diemer, Emma Lou (b Kansas City, MO, 24 Nov 1927). American composer and organist. A prodigy, she wrote several piano concertos by the age of 13 and took composition lessons with Gardner Read during her high school years. She received degrees in composition at Yale Univeristy (BM 1949, MM 1950) and the Eastman School (PhD 1960) and studied also at the Berkshire Music Center (1954, 1955). Her principal teachers were Hindemith, Bernard Rogers, Hanson, Toch and Sessions. In addition to appointments as composer-in-residence and church organist (from the age of 13), Diemer was professor of theory and composition at the University of Maryland (1965–70) and the University of California, Santa Barbara (1971–91), where she founded an electronic music studio (1973). A recipient of numerous commissions and awards, including Fulbright and NEA fellowships, she was named 'Composer of the Year' by the American Guild of Organists in 1995.

Although Diemer is best known for the neo-classical and neo-romantic choral and keyboard works which use free tonality, her compositions encompass many styles: Declarations (1973) uses strict 12-note technique and serialized rhythm as well as extended techniques for organ; her piano Variations (1987) combine a 12-chord series (following Schoenberg's principles) with a harmonic language reminiscent of Ravel; and Homage to Cowell, Cage, Crumb and Czerny (1981), one of her most avant-garde works, employs note-clusters and techniques inside the piano. Diemer's interest in accessibility has led her to give particular attention to melody and formal unity, as in the choral works Three Poems by Alice Meynell (1976) and To Come So (1992). An accomplished keyboard player, she writes idiomatically and skilfully for her instruments. A search for greater timbral focus motivated both her initial involvement in electronic music during the early 1970s and her use of extended instrumental techniques (e.g. multiphonics, pitch-bending and flutter-tonguing, as in the Trio for flute, oboe, harpsichord and tape, 1973). Some works written in the 1990s feature slow-moving harmonic rhythm enlivened with melodic figuration (e.g. the concertos for piano and marimba) and might be viewed as an extension of techniques she used a decade earlier in Encore (for piano). She has written for both professional and amateur groups, aiming for accessibility in the music for school and church choirs through her use of simple vocal lines (often in unison or canon) with more challenging keyboard accompaniments.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Pf Conc., 1953; Sym. no.1, 1953; Suite, 1954; Hpd Conc., chbr orch, 1958; Pavane, str, 1959; Sym. no.2 (on Amerindian themes), 1959; Youth Ov., 1959; Festival Ov., 1961; Sym. no.3 'Antique', 1961; Fl Conc., 1963; Fairfax Festival Ov., pf, orch, 1967; Concert Piece, org, orch, 1977; Tpt Conc., 1983; Vn Conc., 1983; Suite of Homages, 1985; Serenade, str, 1988; Mar Conc., 1991; Pf Conc., 1991; Conc. in 1 Movt, org, chbr orch, 1995; Santa Barbara Ov., 1996

Choral: St Chrysostom Cant. (Bible), S, A, T, B, chorus, org, 1956; 4 Carols, SSA, 1960; 3 Madrigals (W. Shakespeare), mixed vv, pf/org, 1960; 3 Poems (O. Nash), TTB, pf, 1960; Dance, dance my heart (H. Kabir), chorus, pf/org, opt. perc, 1967; Choruses on Freedom, chorus, str, perc, pf, 1975; 3 Poems (A. Meynell), chorus, ww qnt, mar, vib, 4 perc, pf, org, 1976; Invocation (M. Sarton), chorus, orch/pf, 1985; The Sea, chorus, fl, cl, perc, pf, str, 1988; There is a morn unseen (E. Dickinson), S/T, chorus, orch/pf, 1991; To Come So (Sister Mary Virginia Micka), female chorus, mixed chorus, orch, 1992; Kyrie, chorus, pf 4 hands, org, 1993; Gloria, chorus, 2 pf, perc, 1996; over 100 other choral works

Other vocal: Songs of Reminiscence (D.D. Hendry), S, pf, 1958; The 4 Seasons (E. Spenser), S/T, pf, 1969; 4 Poems (A. Meynell), S/T, (2 fl + pic, 2 perc, vib, xyl, hp, hpd, pf, str qt)/pf, 1976; Who can find a virtuous woman? (Bible: Proverbs xxxi), medium high v, pf, 1989; And I saw a new heaven and a new earth (Bible: Revelation xxi), medium high v, tpt, org/pf, 1991; 2 Songs (W. Shakespeare, Hendry) (1995); *c*15 other vocal works

Kbd: Fantasie, org, 1958; Toccata, org, 1964; 7 Etudes, pf, 1965; Celebration, 7 hymn settings, org, 1970; Declarations, org, 1973; Toccata, pf, 1979; Encore, pf, 1981; Homage to Cowell, Cage, Crumb and Czerny, 2 pf, 1981; Elegy, org duo, 1982; Variations: Homage to Ravel, Schoenberg and May Aufderheide, pf 4 hands, 1987; Space Suite, pf, 1988; Toccata, hpd, 1992; 4 Biblical Settings, org, 1993; 4 Duets, org, pf, 1996; Poem for a New Millennium, pf, 1996; over 50 other kbd works

Chbr and other solo inst: Suite, fl, pf, 1948; Vn Sonata, 1949; Pf Qt, 1954; Toccata, mar, 1955; Sonata, fl, pf/hpd, 1958; Déclamation, 2 hn, 4 tpt, bar hn, 2 trbn, tuba, timp, perc, 1960; Ww Qnt, no.1, 1960; Sextet, pf, ww qnt, 1962; Toccata, pic, 2 fl, a fl, b fl, 1968; Music, fl, ob, cl, bn, 1972; Movt, fl, ob, org, 1974; Movt, fl, ob, cl, pf, 1976; Echospace, gui, 1980; Solotrio, xyl + vib + mar, 1980; Summer of 82, vc, pf, 1982; Str Qt no.1, 1987; There's a certain slant of light, winter afternoons … , fl, gui, 1989; A Quiet, Lovely Piece, cl, pf, 1991; Lovely Song, vn + va, pf, 1992; Sextet, fl, ob, cl, vn, vc, pf, 1992; Trio, fl, mar, vc, 1992

Tape: Trio, fl, ob, hpd, tape, 1973; Patchworks, tape, 1978; A Day in the Country, cl, tape, 1984; Church Rock, org, tape, 1986; *c*15 other tape pieces

Principal publishers: Boosey & Hawkes, Elkan-Vogel/T. Presser, C. Fisher, OUP, Plymouth, Sacred Music Press, Santa Barbara Music Publishing, Seesaw

Principal recording companies: Contemporary Record Society, Leonarda, Master Musicians Collective, North/South Recordings, Vienna Modern Masters

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. LePage: Women Composers, Conductors and Musicians of the Twentieth Century, i (Metuchen, NJ, 1981–88)
B. Grigsby: 'Women Composers of Electronic Music', The Musical Woman: an International Perspective, i: 1983, ed. J.L. Zaimont and others (Westport, CT, 1984), 151–3, 191–3
J. McCray: 'American Choral Music with Organ: the Music of Emma Lou Diemer', American Organist, xxi/11 (1987), 64–71
T. Naus: The Organ Works of Emma Lou Diemer (diss., Michigan State U., 1991)
J.K. Rediger: Videotaped Interview and Emma Lou Diemer: her Compositional and Personal Perspective (diss., Ball State U., 1994)
C.C. Brown: 'An Interview with Emma Lou Diemer', American Organist, xxix/11 (1995), 36–44
C.C. Brown: 'Emma Lou Diemer: Organ Works of the 1990s', American Organist, xxix/12 (1995), 62–3

J. MICHELE EDWARDS

Diémer, Louis(-Joseph) [Joseph-Louis] (b Paris, 14 Feb 1843; d Paris, 21 Dec 1919). French pianist and composer of Alsatian origin. In 1853 he entered the Paris Conservatoire where he enjoyed a particularly successful career, winning premiers prix in solfège (1855), piano (by unanimous decision, 1856), harmony and accompaniment (1859) and counterpoint and fugue (1861), as well as a second prix in organ (1861); his teachers included A.F. Marmontel (piano), Ambroise Thomas (composition) and François Benoist (organ). Financial difficulties prevented him from pursuing the Prix de Rome. From 1861 he gave piano lessons, and from 1863 performed regularly, both in Paris and in the provinces. He attended Rossini's soirées, played in the chamber concerts organized by Alard, and toured with Sarasate. Always popular with the public, he steadily gained a reputation as a virtuoso. In 1887 he succeeded Marmontel at the Conservatoire, where he exercised great influence on the next generation of French pianists; his pupils included Cortot, Risler and Robert Casadesus. The success of a series of harpsichord recitals which Diémer gave at the 1889 Exposition Universelle led to the founding (with van Waefelghem, Grillet and Delsart) of the Société des Instruments Anciens, and prompted him to dedicate considerable time to promoting early music. In 1902 he established a trust fund for a triennial competition, with a prize of 4000 francs, open to male pianists who had won a premier prix for piano in the preceding ten years. Diémer continued to teach and perform publicly until his death. He was named a Chevalier de la Légion d'Honneur in 1889.

Diémer's virtuoso playing had a reputation for extreme precision and purity, qualities that may be heard in his recording (*c*1904) of his Grande valse de concert op.37. A more complete sense of his musicianship may be perceived in his long-lined and tonally refined recording (*c*1904) of Chopin's Nocturne op.27 no.2. His compositions, primarily for the piano, were described by Fétis as graceful but not lacking in solidity; some of his songs enjoyed considerable success. He also edited piano music, transcribed symphonic movements and opera excerpts for the piano, and published a piano method.

WORKS
(selective list)

for fuller list see Grove6

all printed works published in Paris

Pf, orch: Concert piece, op.31; Conc., c, op.32
Vn, orch: Concert piece, op.33
Chbr: Hommage à Rossini [Souvenirs: Barbier–Moïse–Othello], pf, vn (1867), collab. Sarasate; sonata, vn, pf, op.20 (1874); sonata, vc, pf, op.22; Pf Trio no.2, op.23 (?1879); Romance, vc, pf, op.34 (1884); 2 pièces, ob, pf, op.35 (1884); Légende, ob, pf, op.52; Scherzo, ww, pf, arr. C. de Lausnay, 2 pf (1912); other works
Pedagogical works, incl. with L. Lévy and V. Staub: Méthode supérieure de piano (1907)
Other works: *c*70 pf works (incl. transcr.); *c*30 songs

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Pierre: Le Conservatoire national de musique et de déclamation: documents historiques et administratifs (Paris, 1900), 741
H. Imbert: Médaillons contemporains (Paris, 1903), 205–24
Obituary, Le ménestrel (26 Dec 1919)
I. Philipp: 'Louis Diémer', Le ménestrel (2 Jan 1920)
J. Methuen-Campbell: Catalogue of Recordings by Classical Pianists, i (Chipping Norton, 1984), 11

ELISABETH BERNARD/CHARLES TIMBRELL

Diepenbrock, Alphons (Johannes Maria) (b Amsterdam, 2 Sept 1862; d Amsterdam, 5 April 1921). Dutch composer.

1. LIFE. He grew up in a bourgeois Catholic family which had a fervent interest in literature and music. Music lessons formed a natural part of his upbringing, and as a child Diepenbrock was already a skilled player of the piano, organ and violin. His early ambition was to become a conductor and composer. However, his parents were wary of an uncertain future, and in 1880 he therefore opted to study classical languages, his other great passion, at the University of Amsterdam. In the meantime he acquired an understanding of the theory of music on his own initiative, and with a small choir of students performed works by Palestrina and Sweelinck, his favourite masters of polyphony. He added to his knowledge by making an intensive study of Wagner from piano reductions. During this period he also composed an Academische feestmarsch for wind orchestra (1882), various choral works and songs. After he was awarded his doctorate with distinction (1888) for a thesis on Seneca, he became a teacher of classics at the gymnasium in 's-Hertogenbosch. While there, he wrote a number of spiritual pieces for voice and organ, and the Missa in die festo for tenor solo, double male choir and organ (1890–94), a monumental work which represents a milestone in the history of Catholic church music in the Netherlands.

Diepenbrock married in 1895 and returned to Amsterdam, where he supported himself by giving private tuition in Latin and Greek and by writing articles on music, painting, literature, philology, cultural history and politics. These inspired essays bear witness to wide reading and great erudition (he was one of the first people in the Netherlands to have an in-depth knowledge of Nietzsche); they also show Diepenbrock's substantial literary talent. With his writings, he pitched himself into the midst of the debate on the direction in which art should follow in the coming century. He was filled with ideals, widely cherished at the time, of community life centred around a mystical religiosity, in which the arts would together provoke higher thoughts in the people. Such a work to bear these ideals out was the Missa, published in 1896 with accompanying multi-coloured vignettes, following a medieval example, by Antoon Der Kinderen, who shared Diepenbrock's aims. However, though the publication focussed attention on the composer, the piece was not heard until 20 years later. Instead, a major breakthrough came with the first performance, by Willem Mengelberg and the Amsterdam Concertgebouw Orchestra in 1900, of the two Hymnen an die Nacht for voice and orchestra. Following the première two years later of the grandiose Te Deum (1897), Diepenbrock came to be recognized as the leading Dutch composer of his time. His work was highly regarded by Mahler, who became friends with him during his first period as a guest conductor in Amsterdam (1903). This admiration was mutual: when the Concertgebouw Orchestra invited Diepenbrock to conduct a few concerts of his own compositions, he also took the opportunity to perform Mahler and Debussy, in his view the most significant innovators among his contemporaries.

In addition to many instrumentations of songs and revisions of earlier works, with regard to the clarification of orchestral sonorities, the years after 1905 brought forth a constant stream of new compositions, such as the impressive Im grossen Schweigen for baritone and orchestra (1906) based on an aphorism of Nietzsche, and the marvellous incidental music for the 'mythical comedy' Marsyas of De betooverde bron ('Marsyas or The Enchanted Well, 1909–10), which is rooted in a classical Greek legend. However, with the outbreak of World War I, Diepenbrock became so preoccupied that he did not feel able to begin a major work during its course. His commitment to the Allies (he was active in the Ligue des Pays Neutres) is expressed in a number of anti-German articles and songs such as Les poilus de l'Argonne and Belges, debout!. During the last few years of his life he composed incidental music to plays which mattered greatly to him: Aristophanes' The Birds, Goethe's Faust and Sophocles' Electra.

2. WORKS. Diepenbrock was inspired chiefly by poetry, and his output is dominated by vocal works, which are particularly fine in atmospheric evocation. His sources cover many centuries: classical antiquity, religious texts from the Middle Ages, old Dutch poems and choruses by Vondel, Goethe and the German Romantics, Verlaine and Baudelaire, to contemporary writers such as Gide and the young Dutch poets Jacques Perk, Lodewijk van Deyssel and Albert Verwey. His choice of text reflected his penchant for mysticism and spiritual rapture. Little satisfied with mundane reality and the development of society, he found himself peculiarly attracted to poems which exalted the night and her mysteries, e.g. Novalis's Hymnen an die Nacht and Hölderlin's Die Nacht; or which give an impression of the evening mood in which passion and grief are stilled and inner peace enters, e.g. Nietzsche's Im grossen Schweigen and Baudelaire's Recueillement. The melancholy of Verlaine and Caroline von Günderode is strikingly reproduced by Diepenbrock, but humour and brilliance, for instance in the overture to The Birds, are also displayed in his music. Various works show, too, a close attachment to historical Amsterdam (Gijsbreght van Aemstel, 1911–12).

Diepenbrock's music is passionate and sensitive, without falling into the excesses of late Romanticism. Most of his compositions end just as gently and modestly as they begin, with few major dynamic contrasts between, and a subtle andante tempo requiring a flexible rubato on the part of the performer predominates. Two elements are significant in his early works: the vocal polyphony of the Palestrina style and the chromatic harmony of Wagner. The quotation of the 'Tristan chord' at the beginning of Mignon is one indication of the Wagnerian intoxication which Diepenbrock experienced around his 20th birthday. In many early song accompaniments, the consistent four-voiced textures are also striking, perhaps related to Diepenbrock's love of Bach's Das wohltemperirte Clavier. During the course of the 1890s Diepenbrock's personal style developed, a characteristic feature being the construction of the melodies which could be considered 'Mediterranean' in their southern cantabile and natural diction. The predominance of 2nds ensures a flowing line, and the continual alternation between quavers and triplets provides a rhythmic flexibility tailored as much to the rhythm of the sentences as to the meaning of the words. Previous Wagnerian turns of phrase in the melody gradually disappeared, as did the ornateness of the harmony, while modality came to play a significant role. However, the independent voice-leading, resulting in true polymelody, remained.

About 1910, as a result of extensive study of the works of Debussy (Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune and Pelléas et Mélisande in particular), a clear stylistic change occurred. In Die Nacht, for mezzo-soprano and orchestra (1910–11), Diepenbrock achieved in masterly fashion his aim of transparency, which was coupled with greater differentiation of orchestral colour. This work belongs to his 'symphonic songs', which differ substantially from the orchestrated piano songs in that it is the orchestra – in particular in the extensive, purely instrumental preludes, interludes and postludes – which carries in sound most of the text's psychological and emotional weight. Diepenbrock had already tested this innovative musical form in the two Hymnen an die Nacht of 1899, thus anticipating the comparable conception of Mahler's Das Lied von der Erde. With the sombre, doom-laden music which he wrote for the classical drama Electra, Diepenbrock added an extra colour to his palette at the end of his life.

WORKS

CHORAL

With orch: Les elfes (Leconte de Lisle), S, Bar, female chorus, orch, 1887, rev. 1896; Rey van Clarissen, Rey van Amsterdamsche Maegden (J. van den Vondel), female chorus, orch, 1893–6; Rey van Edelingen (Vondel), mixed chorus, orch, 1895–6; Te Deum, S, A, T, B, double chorus, orch, 1897; Hymne aan Rembrandt (P.H. van Moerkerken), S, female chorus, orch, 1906; Kyrie and Gloria, S, A, T, B, mixed chorus, male chorus, orch, 1913 [from Missa in die festo]

Other acc.: Rouw om het jaar (A. Verwey), female chorus, pf, 1886; Missa in die festo, T, double chorus, org, 1890–94 [Kyrie and Gloria orchd 1913]; Tantum ergo (Thomas Aquinas), male chorus, org, 1901; Hymnus de spiritu sancto, male chorus, org, 1906

Unacc: Dämmerung (J.W. von Goethe), mixed chorus, 1884; Tibur (Matthison), male chorus, 1884; XVe eeuwsch bruyloftslied, mixed chorus, 1884; Stabat mater dolorosa (J. da Todi), male chorus, 1888; Rey van Burchtsaeten (Vondel), mixed chorus, 1892; Stabat mater dolorosa (Todi), mixed chorus, 1896; Stabat mater speciosa (Todi), mixed chorus, 1896; Caelestis urbs Jerusalem, mixed chorus, 1897; Chanson d'automne (P. Verlaine), mixed chorus, 1897; Carmen saeculare (Horace), mixed chorus, 1901; Oud paaschlied uit twente, mixed chorus, 1902; Veni creator spiritus, male chorus, 1906; Ecce quomodo moritur, male chorus, 1913

SOLO VOCAL

With orch, ens: Hymen an die Nacht (F. von Hardenberg [Novalis]), 1899: Gehoben ist der Stein, S, orch, Muss immer der Morgen wiederkommen, A, orch; Vondel's vaart naar Agrippine (J. Alberdingk Thijm), Bar, orch, 1903; Im grossen Schweigen (F. Nietzsche), Bar, orch, 1905–6; Die Nacht (F. Hölderlin), Mez, orch, 1910–11; Bruiloftslied (J. Beukers), S, A, ob, triangle, vn, va, 2 vc, 1912; Lydische Nacht (B. Verhagen), spkr, Bar, orch, 1913

Unacc. S, A, T, B: Den uil, 1902; De groote hond en de kleine kat (A. Verwey), 1903; Auf dem See (Goethe), 1908; Ergo bibamus (Goethe), 1908; Gleich zu gleich (Goethe), 1908; Wanderers Nachtlied (Goethe), 1908

1v, pf: Blauw, blauw bloemelijn (G. Antheunis), 1880; Entsagung (J. Uhland), T, pf, 1883; Der Abend kommt gezogen (H. Heine), 1884; Dämmernd liegt der Sommerabend (Heine), 1884; Der Fischer (Goethe), T, pf, 1884; Mignon (Goethe), 1884, orchd 1907; De klare dag (F. van Eeden), 1884; Avondzang (J. Perk), high v, pf, 1885, orchd 1903; Maanlicht (A. Verwey), high v, pf, 1885; Meinacht (H. Swarth), 1885; Der König in Thule (Goethe), 1886, orchd 1907; Mignons Verklärung (Goethe), 1886; Die Liebende schreibt (Goethe), Mez, pf, 1887; Es war ein alter König (Heine), Mez, pf, 1890; La chanson de l'hypertrophique (J. Laforgue), 1895; Hinüber wall' ich (Novalis), 1897, orchd 1907

Ecoutez la chanson bien douce (Verlaine), S, pf, 1898, orchd 1907; Ik ben in eenzaamheid niet meer alleen (L. van Deyssel), 1898, orchd 1906; La lune blanche luit dans les bois (Verlaine), high v, pf, 1898; Clair de lune (Verlaine), 1898, orchd 1907; Lied der Spinnerin (C. Brentano), S, pf, 1898, orchd 1906; Zij sluimert (Perk), 1900, orchd 1903; Kann ich im Busen heisse Wünsche tragen (C. von Günderode), Mez, pf, 1902; Ils ont fermé le monastère (C. Daniélou), 1903; Les chats (C. Baudelaire), 1906, orchd 1907; Recueillement (Baudelaire), S, pf, 1907, orchd; Der Abend (Brentano), S, pf, 1908, orchd 1908; Celebrität (Goethe), 1908; Liebesklage (Günderode), Mez, pf, 1908

Mandoline (Verlaine), medium v, pf, 1909; Puisque l'aube grandit (Verlaine), medium v, pf, 1909, orchd 1916; En sourdine (Verlaine), medium v, pf, 1910; Berceuse (C. van Lerberghe), 1912, arr. Mez, vc, pf, orchd 1918; Serenade (E. Diepenbrock), 1912; L'invitation au voyage (Baudelaire), 1913; Simeon's Lofzang (Vondel), 1914; Les poilus de l'Argonne (A. Rameau), 1915; Waak op, Nederland (B. Verhagen), 1915; Beiaard (Vada), 1916; Belges, debout! (F.H. de Puymaly), 1916; Incantation (Gide), 1916; Le vin de la revanche (Puymaly), 1916; Come raggio di sol, 1917, arr. S, ww qnt

1v, org: Ave Maria, 1889, version for 1v, pf; Jesu dulcis memoria (Bernard of Clairvaux), 1889, version for 1v, pf; O Jesu ego amo te (St Francis Xavier), 1893, version for 1v, pf; Wenn ich ihn nur habe (Novalis), 1898, orchd 1906, arr. S, ww qnt, db, 1915; Wenige wissen das Geheimnis der Liebe (Novalis), 1898, orchd 1902; Memorare (Bernard of Clairvaux), 1902, version with It. trans. Preghiera alla madonna, 1v, pf, 1917

INSTRUMENTAL

Academische feestmarsch, wind orch, 1882, lost, orchd for wind C.L. Walther Boer from pf score, also orchd C. Dopper; Hymne, vn, pf, 1898, orchd 1899, rev. 1905, 1910, 1917; Marsyas of De betooverde bron [Marsyas or The Enchanted Well], suite, orch, 1909–10 [from incid music]; Avondschemer, pf, 1915; Arr. C. Debussy: Berceuse héroïque, 1916; Zegeklanken, carillon, 1916

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

Marsyas of De betooverde bron (B. Verhagen), 1909–10; Gijsbreght van Aemstel (Vondel), 1911–12; De Vogels (Aristophanes, trans. C. Deknatel), 1917; Faust (Goethe), 1918; Electra (Sophocles, trans. P.C. Boutens), 1919–20

Principal publishers: Alphons Diepenbrock Fund, Donemus

BIBLIOGRAPHY
(selective list)

E. Adaïewsky: 'Le Te Deum d'Alfonse Diepenbrock', RMI, xix (1912), 738–56

J.A.S. van Schaik: De Mis van Diepenbrock (Utrecht, 1916)

B. Verhagen: Leven en werk van Alphons Diepenbrock ('s-Hertogenbosch, 1921)

E. Reeser: De muzikale handschriften van Alphons Diepenbrock (Amsterdam, 1933)

E. Reeser: Alphons Diepenbrock (Amsterdam, 1935)

E. Reeser: 'Diepenbrock's dichters', De Gids, cv/4 (1941), 96–115

E. Reeser, ed.: Verzamelde geschriften van Alphons Diepenbrock (Utrecht, 1950)

E. Reeser: 'Alphons Diepenbrock, ein holländischer Lyriker', Musica, xv (1961), 259–67

E. Reeser: 'Richard Strauss und Alphons Diepenbrock: ein Briefwechsel', Mitteilungen der Internationalen Richard-Strauss-Gesellschaft, xxxii (1962), 5–8

E. Reeser, ed.: Alphons Diepenbrock: brieven en documenten, i–iv (The Hague, 1962–74), v–ix (Amsterdam, 1981–98)

P. Op de Coul: 'Alphons Diepenbrock: im grossen Schweigen', Sonorum speculum, xlvii (1971), 15–26

E. Reeser: 'Some Melodic Patterns in the Music of Alphons Diepenbrock', Key Notes, iii (1976), 16–25

E. Reeser: Gustav Mahler und Holland (Vienna, 1980)

W. Paap: Alphons Diepenbrock: een componist in de cultuur van zijn tijd (Haarlem, 1980)

T. Braas: '"Ik heb nu eindelijk het orchestreeren zoowat geleerd": ontwikkeling van de instrumentatie bij Alphons Diepenbrock' ["I've finally learned to orchestrate": the development of Alphons Diepenbrock's instrumentation], Harmonie en perspectief: zevendertig bijdragen van Utrechtse musicologen voor Eduard Reeser, ed. A. Annegarn, L.P. Grijp and P. Op de Coul (Deventer, 1988), 46–61

T. Braas: 'The Verlaine Songs of Alphons Diepenbrock', Key Notes, xxx/4 (1996), 16–20

TON BRAAS

Dieren, Bernard (Hélène Joseph) van (b Rotterdam, 27 Dec 1887; d London, 24 April 1936). Dutch composer, active in England. Though his father's family was Dutch with Leiden connections going back to at least the 17th century, his mother's ancestry was French, and it was this influence that dominated his childhood. He learnt the violin as a child, and despite showing an interest in science in his teens, he took up music when he left school in 1908. His friendship with Frida Kindler (1879–1964), also from Rotterdam and a Busoni piano pupil, was crucial. He followed her to England in 1909 and they married on 1 January 1910 in London, where he wrote a quick succession of large-scale works culminating in the Toccata for piano and the String Quartet no.1 of 1912. While visiting Berlin as a music correspondent in 1911 and 1912, he became friendly with Busoni and Schoenberg who encouraged his creative work, though he remained self-taught.

In 1912 there were the first signs of the kidney complaint that was to plague the remainder of van Dieren's life, composition being curtailed for long spells. During World War I he remained in London and became the central figure in a group of artistic friends, including the sculptor Jacob Epstein, on whom he later wrote a book (Epstein, London, 1920), the painter Matthew Smith, the Sitwell brothers, Warlock, Cecil Gray and later Sorabji, Lambert and Walton. His astounding intellectual gifts and wide-ranging interests, together with his stoic endurance of pain revealed a personality of irresistible fascination. His devotion to Mediterranean culture and his witty questioning of accepted judgments appealed greatly to the group. He was, for example, one of the first to encourage a re-assessment of the work of Donizetti, Alkan and Meyerbeer. His book of essays Down Among the Dead Men (London, 1935) cleverly displays many of these enthusiasms. During the 1920s and 30s, thanks to the efforts of these friends, some of his music was performed and published, but it never received more than grudging admiration from the public. Consequently, on the early deaths of van Dieren and many of his circle, his music slipped into obscurity. However, a revival of interest began in the 1970s when Denis ApIvor produced and distributed a performing edition consisting mainly of hitherto unpublished scores. In the Netherlands too, performances were encouraged and manuscripts collected by Willem Noske (and later passed on to Musica Neerlandica).

Prominent in van Dieren's music is a complex, lyrical counterpoint and an abundance of chamber music textures. His harmonic language varies from Schoenbergian atonality – for example in the Toccata and First String Quartet – to melting Delian chords; especially noteworthy are the exquisite cadences. Thematic material is always economically employed, while, as Gray pointed out, each work demonstrates 'an entirely separate line of thought'. At the core of his output are the six string quartets which exhibit all these features. If the later ones, and his later music in general, show a lessening in complexity, there is no accompanying concession to the popular. Apart from the quartets and the collection of over 60 songs, little of Van Dieren's other music falls into familiar categories. He also shows a penchant for unusual instrumental combinations, as in his setting of Spenser's Sonetto vii, in which the tenor is accompanied by an ensemble that includes a basset-horn and a string group of two violins, two violas and double bass. In the Fourth String Quartet he substitutes a double bass for the cello; his interest in the double bass was related to the playing of Eugene Cruft, one of a number of first-rate instrumentalists whose skill inspired van Dieren in his later music.

Though some of his friends overstated his achievement (e.g. Gray's 'Van Dieren: the Modern Leonardo'), the more recent accusation of his having a baleful and indeed fatal effect on some is equally unjustified. His music may not have been of a uniformly high quality, but works such as the First String Quartet, the Chinese Symphony, and his settings of Spenser and Villon undoubtedly display an individual voice that formed an important and enriching link between the continental avant garde and British culture. His influence may be detected in particular in the music of his pupils Warlock and William Busch, of his friends Moeran and Lambert, and indeed of later composers as disparate as ApIvor and Stevenson.

WORKS

Stage: The Tailor (opera buffa, 3, R. Nichols and Dieren), 1917–30

Orch and ens: Elegy, vc obbl, orch, *c*1910; Sym. Epilogue to The Cenci, 1910 [after P.B. Shelley]; Ov., 16 insts, 1916; Introit to Les propous des beuveurs, 1921 [after F. Rabelais: Gargantua]; Serenade, 9 insts, *c*1923; Anjou Ov., 1935; Sym. in 3 Dance Movts, inc.

Choral: Sym. no.1 (Chinese Sym.) (Chin. poems, trans. H. Bethge), 5 solo vv, chorus, orch, 1914; Ave Maria a 4, *c*1917; Ave Maria a 5, 1921; Deus, Deus meus ad te luce vigilo, 1921

Solo vocal: Belsazar (H. Heine), Bar/unison male vv, orch, 1911; Diafonia (W. Shakespeare: Sonnets), Bar, 17 insts, 1916; 2 Poems (C. Baudelaire, F. Villon), spkr, str qt, 1917; 2 Songs (Shelley, T. de Quincey), Bar, str qt, 1917; Sonetto vii (E. Spenser: Amoretti), T, 11 insts, 1921; Marginalia in musica (de Quincey: Murder Considered as One of the Fine Arts), Bar, 4 solo vv, pf, lost; Hommages, T, 7 insts, 1931; Frammento di Zenobia (P. Metastasio), 1v, 8 insts, lost; over 60 songs for 1v, pf, incl. settings of T. Beddoes, J. von Goethe, J. Joyce, J. Keats, P. Verlaine and others

Str Qts: 1912, 1917, 1919, 1923, 1928, 1931

Other chbr: Impromptu Fantasiestück, vn (Leipzig, 1909); Canzonetta, vn, pf, *c*1909; 6 Sketches, pf, 1911; Toccata, pf, 1912; 13 Netherlands Melodies, pf, 1918; 3 Studies, pf, *c*1925; Sonatina Tyroica, vn, pf (London, 1927); Tema con variazione, pf, 1927; Sonata, vc, 1930; 2 estemporales, hp, 1931; Duettino, 2 vn, 1933; Piccolo pralinudettino fridato, pf, 1934; Sonata, vn (London, 1935)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Gray: 'Bernard van Dieren', A Survey of Contemporary Music (Oxford, 1924), 221–39

C. Gray: 'Van Dieren: the Modern Leonardo', Radio Times (2 April 1937)

W. Mellers: Music and Society (London, 1946), 159–60

F. Tomlinson: Warlock and van Dieren (London, 1978)

A. Chisholm: Bernard van Dieren: an Introduction (London, 1983)

D. ApIvor: 'Bernard van Dieren: Search and Rescue One Hundred Years On', MR, xlvii (1986–7), 253–66

H. Davies: 'Bernard van Dieren', MT, cxxviii (1987), 675–8

ALASTAIR CHISHOLM

Dies [Thies], Albert Christoph (b Hanover, bap. 11 Feb 1755; d Vienna, 29 Dec 1822). German painter, composer and writer. He learnt the trade of a painter and at the same time studied fine arts. He went to Rome in 1775, where he developed his skill as a landscape painter; later he became acquainted with Goethe (see the entry for 22 August 1787 in Goethe's Italienische Reise). During these years he also composed, though according to Thorn he later destroyed most of his works (those remaining have not been traced). In 1796 he worked in Salzburg and from 1797 in Vienna, where in 1806 he was appointed instructor in landscape painting at the Kaiserliche- und Königliche Akademie and court painter to Prince Esterházy. When lead poisoning impeded his work as a painter he turned more to music and to cultural and political writing (e.g. his essay in the Vaterländische Blätter für den Österreichischen Kaiser-Staat, January 1811). Esterházy sponsored the publication of his Biographische Nachrichten von Joseph Haydn (Vienna, 1810), for which Dies collected material from 30 conversations with the aged composer. Because of its factual tone and the typically Classical standpoint of its aesthetic judgments, this work occupies a significant position in early Haydn literature alongside Griesinger and Carpani; its neglect by later critical writers on Haydn was undeserved. Many Haydn documents appeared for the first time in the Nachrichten, and it contains a 'list of all the works Haydn composed in London', taken from the lost London notebook.

WRITINGS

Biographische Nachrichten von Joseph Haydn (Vienna, 1810); ed. H. Seeger (Berlin, 1959, 4/1976); Eng. trans. in V. Gotwals, ed.: Joseph Haydn: Eighteenth-Century Gentleman and Genius (Madison, WI, 1963, 2/1968 as Haydn: Two Contemporary Portraits), 67ff

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Thorn: 'Albert Dies: biographische Skizze', Archiv für Geschichte, Statistik, Literatur und Kunst, xvi (1825), 595–8

V. Gotwals: 'The Earliest Biographies of Haydn', MQ, xlv (1959), 436–59

H. Seeger: 'Zur musikhistorischen Bedeutung der Haydn-Biographie von Albert Christoph Dies (1810)', BMw, i/3 (1959), 24–37; abridged in Konferenz zum Andenken Joseph Haydns: Budapest 1959, 131–5

J. Neubacher: 'Haydns Aufenthalt in Wiesbaden: ein Dokumentarischer Beleg', Haydn-Studien, v/3 (1984), 190–91

A.P. Brown: 'Marianna Martines' Autobiography as a New Source for Haydn's Biography During the 1750s', Haydn-Studien, vi/1 (1986), 68–70

H.A. Schafer: 'A Wisely Ordered Phantasie': Joseph Haydn's Creative Process from the Sketches and Drafts for Instrumental Music (diss., Brandeis U., 1987)

C. Szabó-Knotik: 'Zur Bedeutung und Bewertung des Opernschaffens Joseph Haydns im Wandel der Haydn-Rezeption', Joseph Haydn und die Oper seiner Zeit: Eisenstadt 1988, 57–75

HORST SEEGER

Dièse (Fr.). See SHARP.

Diesineer [Diesener, Diesneer, Diesner, Diessener, Disineer, Dissner], Gerhard (b *c*1640; d after 1683). German composer and teacher, active in England. He was a choirboy at the Kassel court, where his father Christoph was a musician, and spent some time in Paris in the late 1650s, probably studying composition. He returned to Kassel in 1660, and may have worked there until he settled in London in or shortly before 1673; he contributed two pieces to Matthew Locke's Melothesia, published in that year. In the preface to his Instrumental Ayrs (1682) he stated that they were written 'for the Use and Practice of my Scholars, and the little Consort of Music I often have at my owne House, to entertaine my Friends'; a newspaper advertisement on 28 October of that year invited gentlemen to hear them on Wednesday nights at his house in Great Russell Street. He was paid in July 1684 for teaching the daughter of Sir Harbottle Grimston of Gorhambury, near St Albans. His keyboard music was also probably written for his pupils, including the lost Kitharapaideia, or A Book of Lessons for the harpsichord.

Two of Diesineer's consort pieces at Kassel are dated 1660 and 1661, and all four of them were probably written around then for the French violin band resident at the court. The 1682 collection consists of ten extended suites and seems to be only in three parts, despite being entitled Instrumental Ayrs in Three, and Four Parts, Two Trebbles, Tenor and Bass: no tenor part survives, and the collection was advertised as consisting of three books, 'Two Violins and a Base Viol'. Diesineer was over-praised by Ernst Meyer: he was a composer of limited technique and imagination, though on occasion he sometimes combined elements of the English Restoration style and the French orchestral idiom in an attractive way.

WORKS

Almain, jigg, C, kbd, 1673[6], ed. C. Hogwood, Melothesia (Oxford, 1987)
Instrumental Ayrs, 2 vn, b viol/bc (London, 1682) [10 suites, g, G, c, C, F, B♭, d, g, D, A]
Kitharapaideia, or A Book of Lessons, hpd (London, 1684), lost, advertised in London Gazette (27 Nov 1684)
2 sonatas, D-Kl: a 4, bc, 1660; a 6, bc, inc.
Branles nouveaux, B♭, a 4, 1661, ov., F, a 4, Kl, ed. J. d'Ecorcheville, Vingt suites d'orchestre du XVIIe siècle français (Paris, 1906/R)
Sonata, D, 2 vn, vc, bc, GB-Lbl
2 suites, c, B♭, 2 vn, b, US-NYp
Balletto, F, kbd, GB-Lbl
Ground, C, kbd, Och, ed. J.A. Fuller Maitland, The Contemporaries of Purcell, vi (London, 1921)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MeyerMS; MoserGV
E.H. Meyer: 'Gerhard Diessner', ZMw, xvi (1934), 405–13
C. Engelbrecht: Die Kasseler Hofkapelle im 17. Jahrhundert (Kassel, 1958)
M. Tilmouth: Chamber Music in England, 1675–1720 (diss., U. of Cambridge, 1959)
M. Tilmouth: 'A Calendar of References to Music in Newspapers Published in London and the Provinces (1660–1719)', RMARC, i (1961/R)
I. Spink, ed.: The Blackwell History of Music in Britain, iii: The Seventeenth Century (Oxford, 1992)

PETER HOLMAN

Dies irae (Lat.: 'day of wrath'). The sequence of the Mass for the Dead (LU, 1810).

1. General and history to 1700. 2. Settings since 1700.

1. GENERAL AND HISTORY TO 1700. The text of the Dies irae, attributed to Thomas of Celano (*d c*1250), is thought to have grown out of a rhymed trope of the responsory Libera me, of which the verse 'Dies illa, dies irae' begins with the same melodic phrase as the sequence (ex.1). Thomas's poem has 18 rhymed stanzas (17 tercets, one quatrain), to which a later anonymous author added the final unrhymed couplet with 'Amen'. Its musical form, which incorporates more repetition than the standard sequence (see SEQUENCE (i), §9), may be represented as follows: AABBCC/AABBCC/AABBCDEF. Since the second phrase of B is identical with the first phrase of A, and since the second phrases of D and E are the same, not to speak of other resemblances, the degree of melodic unity is high. The poem began to be included in the Requiem Mass in Italy from the 14th century and in French missals of the late 15th century. It was one of the four sequences retained by the Council of Trent (1543–63), but it was not incorporated into the Roman Missal until the papacy of Pius V (1570).

Before the Council of Trent the Dies irae was not normally set polyphonically; Antoine Brumel's Requiem was exceptional in containing such a setting. Ockeghem, at the end of his lament on the death of Binchois, Mort, tu as navré/Miserere, set a slight variant of the final couplet of the sequence to a paraphrase of the chant. There are also settings by Giammateo Asola, Orfeo Vecchi, G.F. Anerio and G.O. Pitoni in their requiem settings.

2. SETTINGS SINCE 1700. Whereas in the 16th century and often in the 17th polyphonic settings of the Requiem had the Dies irae sung to the plainchant melody, or alternated verses of plainchant with verses of polyphony, orchestral requiem settings written after 1700 almost invariably include the entire sequence. Indeed, there is a tendency for the Dies irae to assume a central position, partly because of its length but equally because of the dramatic possibilities it offers to the imaginative composer. Though influenced by Michael Haydn's Requiem composed in 1771 for Archbishop Schrattenbach of Salzburg, the Dies irae of Mozart's Requiem (1791) was perhaps the first to aim at a truly graphic representation of the text, effectively contrasting such sections as 'Rex tremendae' and 'Recordare'. Cherubini's C minor setting (1816), with its opening gong stroke, attempts the kind of dramatic expression which is best realized in the requiem settings of Verdi (1874) and Britten (1962). The settings by Fauré (1888) and Maurice Duruflé (1947) achieve a more devotional spirit by omitting from the Dies irae everything except the last line, which in each case is set as a separate movement following the Sanctus. Several composers (e.g. Giovanni Legrenzi, Antonio Lotti and J.C. Bach) have set the Dies irae as an independent piece.

Pizzetti's unaccompanied Requiem (1922) uses almost the entire plainchant melody for the sequence, but this is rare in post-Classical settings. The plainchant has, however, been much cultivated by composers of secular music, who have traded upon its association with Thomas of Celano's vivid portrayal of the Last Judgment and its ability to inspire listeners (at least in Catholic countries) with a feeling of terror appropriate to a particular context. Since Berlioz's Symphonie fantastique (1830), a rich and productive symbolism has grown up round the ancient melody, embracing not only death and the fear of death, but also the supernatural (Bantock's 'Witches' Dance' in Macbeth, 1926; Saint-Saëns's Danse macabre, 1874), political oppression (Dallapiccola's Canti di prigionia, 1938–41; Ronald Stevenson's Passacaglia on DSCH, 1960–62), and even ophidiophobia (Respighi's Impressioni brasiliane, 1928).

Ex.1 LU, 1810

Composers who have used the plainchant in this way have usually quoted only the first phrase and sometimes only the first four notes. For this reason it is not always certain whether a reference to the plainchant is intended, even where it is apt. Rachmaninoff, for example, in several of whose works the opening notes can be heard, may have intended its use only in the late Paganini Rhapsody and Symphonic Dances. Composers have also sometimes given the title 'Dies irae' to works that use neither the sequence text nor the plainchant melody, for example the second movement of Britten's Sinfonia da requiem (1940) and Penderecki's Dies irae (1967). The latter, written to commemorate those who died at Auschwitz during World War II, is a setting of words from the Bible, ancient Greek drama, and modern French and Greek poets.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Gregory: 'Dies irae', ML, xxxiv (1953), 133–9

F. Wanninger: Dies irae: its Use in Non-Liturgical Music from the Beginning of the Nineteenth Century (diss., Northwestern U., 1962)

M. Boyd: '"Dies irae": Some Recent Manifestations', ML, xlix (1968), 347–56

K. Vellekoop: Dies Ire Dies Illa: Studien zur Frühgeschichte einer Sequenz (Bilthoven, 1978)

J. de Clerck: 'Le Dies irae indépendent, du XVIe au XVIIIe siècle', Revue des archologues et historiens d'art de Louvain, xiii (1980), 108–26

JOHN CALDWELL (1), MALCOLM BOYD (2)

Diesis (i) (It.). See SHARP.

Diesis (ii) (Gk.: 'separation'). A term applied to various intervals from the time of Pythagoras.

According to Pythagorean theory, transmitted by Boethius (iii, 5, 8) from Philolaus (ed. Diels, Fragmente der Vorsokratiker, 44 A 26), it was a diatonic semitone equal to the amount that the 4th is in excess of the ditone or major 3rd. Later the term 'limma' was substituted to refer to the same interval.

According to Aristoxenus, the diesis was any interval smaller than a semitone. His theory provided for tetrachords that might include a 'hemitone', equal to half of a whole tone; a 'very small chromatic diesis', equal to a third of a whole tone; or a 'very small enharmonic diesis', equal to a quarter of a whole tone (Aristoxenus 21, ed. Meibom, p.46; see also Cleonides, ed. Jan, pp.190ff; Adrastus as quoted by Theon, ed. Hiller, p.55).

According to Marchetto da Padova, the diesis was equal to a fifth of a whole tone. If a melodic whole tone is divided chromatically by the insertion of a leading note (for instance, C–C✖–D) the first interval is, according to Marchetto, a 'chroma', and the second a 'diesis'. Later 14th- and 15th-century theorists (e.g. Nicolaus de Capua, ed. A. de la Fage, p.32) associated the sign ✖ with the term diesis, so that in Romance languages the modern SHARP sign came to be called by that name (It. diesis; Fr. dièse).

Many Renaissance and Baroque theorists used the term for intervals of about a quarter-tone which were too small to be used melodically even though they were available on keyboard instruments tuned to some form of meantone temperament with split black keys for G♯ and A♭ and for D♯ and E♭. According to the corresponding arithmetic of just intonation, the difference between four pure minor 3rds and an octave, known as the 'greater diesis', has the ratio 648:625, i.e. $(6:5)^4:(2:1)$, and amounts to 62.6 cents; and the difference between an octave and three pure major 3rds, known as the 'lesser diesis', has the ratio 128:125, i.e. $(2:1):(5:4)^3$, and amounts to 41.1 cents.

LUKAS RICHTER

Diesener [Diesener], Gerhard. See DIESINEER, GERHARD.

Diessener, Gerhard. See DIESINEER, GERHARD.

Dieter, Christian Ludwig (b Ludwigsburg, 13 June 1757; d Stuttgart, 15 May 1822). German composer and violinist. In 1770 he entered the military orphanage, which two years later became the military academy and in 1781 the Militär-Hochschule. Here Dieter received an excellent free education, but in return had to pledge his life to the service of the Duke of Württemberg. His initial training was in painting, but as his musical gifts became increasingly evident he was soon destined for a musical career. From members of the court orchestra he learnt various instruments, especially the violin but also the viola, flute and bassoon. He studied composition briefly with the court Kapellmeister Antonio Boroni, and later with his successor Agostino Poli. Duke Karl Eugen believed in the importance of a thorough general education, and Dieter's specialized musical studies were supplemented by history, geography, languages and other subjects. He was a diligent student, excelling as a violinist and composer and frequently winning prizes; in 1779 his first German opera, Der Schulze im Dorfe, was performed with great success in the presence of the duke. But he disliked the strict discipline of the court and tried to run away in the spring of 1780; for this he was imprisoned in Ludwigsburg, but was pardoned after declaring his acquiescence to the duke's wishes. On 25 July 1781 Dieter was appointed Hofmusicus as first violinist in the court orchestra. The stipend was meagre, and as he eventually had a family of 11 children, he remained poor to the end of his life. He retired in 1817.

Dieter began his career in Stuttgart ten years after the departure of Niccolò Jommelli, and although German Singspiel had by then begun to predominate over the Italian opera, Dieter's works show that he was familiar with Jommelli's operas as well as with Hiller's Singspiels. His librettos follow Hiller's, 'reflecting the Biedermeier quality of the time' (Hermann Abert); his music exhibits features of both styles, especially in Belmont und Constanze (whose popularity was said to have been responsible for the very late arrival of Mozart's Die Entführung aus dem Serail on the Stuttgart stage, in 1795). His most characteristic numbers are simple folklike songs, intimate or gay, which stand in marked contrast to the pathos of the bravura italianate arias given mostly to characters of high social standing. But Dieter's concern was not generally with dramatic characterization; he was particularly successful in the musical depiction of dramatic, and especially comic, situations, making use of varied orchestral colour in the manner of Jommelli. Abert has traced evidence of Mozart's influence in his later works.

Dieter's horizons and influence were limited to his native locality, where he enjoyed great popularity: in 1802 Stuttgart audiences still looked forward eagerly to the last of his dozen operas, Des Teufels Lustschloss. His instrumental works were likewise popular (a critic reviewing some pieces for the Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung described them as 'agreeable and jolly'), and his church works, though not notable, were performed throughout Württemberg. His importance lies in his having established the Singspiel in his part of Germany, and for the short period of his activity he gave the genre a picturesque quality that was characteristically his own.

WORKS

for detailed list see Haering (1925), 188ff

STAGE

first performed at Stuttgart by the Herzogliche Nationale Schaubühne and, unless otherwise stated, in the Kleines Schauspielhaus auf der Planie; music lost unless otherwise indicated

Der Schulze im Dorfe, oder Der verliebte Herr Doktor (komische Oper, 3, G.E. Heerman), Ducal, 10 May 1779
Der Irrwisch, oder Endlich fand er sie (Spl, 3, C.F. Bretzner), 23 Nov 1779; score, formerly D-DS [destroyed in World War II]
Laura Rosetti (Schauspiel mit Gesang, 3, B.C. d'Arien), 9 Feb 1781
Belmont und Constanze, oder Die Entführung aus dem Serail (komische Oper, 3, Bretzner), 27 Aug 1784; score, D-SWl (2 copies)
Der Rekruten-Aushub, oder Die Familien-Heirath (Operette, 2), 1785
Die Dorfdeputirten (komische Oper, 2, G.E. Heermann, after C. Goldoni: Il feudatorio), Oct 1786; lib pubd
Das Freyschiessen, oder Das glükliche Bauernmädchen (Operette, 2, J.A. Weppen), 31 Aug 1787
Glücklich zusammengelogen (Spl), 1787–8
Der Luftballon (Spl, E. Schikaneder), 1789
Der Eremit auf Formentera (Spl, 2, A. von Kotzebue), 10 Jan 1791
Elisinde (komische Oper, 3, C.A. Vulpius), 1794
Ines von Castro (ballet, C. Morelli), ?Stuttgart, 1796
Des Teufels Lustschloss (Spl, 2, Kotzebue), 1802
Other ballets for court choreographers Jobst, Tramb

INSTRUMENTAL

Orch: Concert, fl (Brunswick, *c*1796); Concerto concertant, 2 fl, no.3 (Zürich and Paris, n.d.); Conc., bn, no.1 (Zürich and Paris, n.d.), no.2 (Zürich, n.d.); Concerto concertant, 2 bn, no.2 (Zürich, n.d.), ed. R. Angermüller (Vienna, *c*1987); others, lost
Chbr: 6 [12] Duetten, 2 fl (Stuttgart, *c*1792); 6 duos progressifs, 2 bn, op.2 (Zürich and Paris, n.d.); 3 [6] sonates, bn, vc acc., op.3 (Zürich and Paris, n.d.); 6 duos, fl, vn (Leipzig, 1806); 3 [6] duos, fl, vn, opp.9–10 (Offenbach, *c*1808); 3 [6] duos, fl, vn, vc acc., opp.21–2 (Leipzig, *c*1807), op.21 lost; Petites pièces d'une difficulté progressive, 2 fl, opp.23–4 (Leipzig, *c*1807), lost; 12 petites pièces d'une difficulté progressive, 2 fl, op.25, cahier 3e (Leipzig, *c*1808), lost; 12 pièces concertantes, 3 fl, op.26 (Leipzig, 1808), nos.1–4 lost; Concertino, fl, str qt, no.2 (Zürich and Paris, n.d.), no.4 (Zürich and Paris, n.d.); Thèmes d'Haydn, 2 ob, bk 1 (Paris, n.d.), bk 2 (Zürich, n.d.); others, lost

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Abert: 'Die dramatische Musik', Herzog Karl Eugen von Württemberg und seine Zeit (Esslingen, 1907), 557–611
W. Preibisch: ' Quellenstudien zu Mozarts Entführung aus dem Serail', SIMG, x (1908–9), 430–76
K. Haering: Fünf schwäbische Liederkomponisten des 18. Jahrhunderts: Abeille, Dieter, Eidenbenz, Schwegler und Christmann (diss., U. of Tübingen, 1925)
K. Haering: ' Christian Ludwig Dieter, Hofmusiker und Singspielkomponist, 1757 bis 1822', Schwäbische Lebensbilder, i (1940), 98–104

ANNA AMALIE ABERT (with THOMAS BAUMAN)

Dieterich, Georg. See DIETRICH, GEORG.

Dietmar von Aist [Eist, Ast, Aste, de Agist] (fl 2nd half of the 12th century). German Minnesinger. The details of his life are unclear. Although he was previously thought to have died before 1171, it is now thought that he may have been a younger man. He might have come from a branch of a baronial family whose seat was near Mauthausen in upper Austria; otherwise he was possibly a minister to the barons of Aist. One of the earliest poets of German Minnesang, he wrote poems that are varied in both form and content, including both the simpler indigenous style and the more complex kinds of song influenced by the Romance poets. The difference between the two styles has given rise to much discussion as to whether there were several poets or whether one man had mastered the various techniques. No music has survived, but Aarburg identified one of his poems as a contrafactum and reconstructed the melody.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

NDB (A. Kuhn)
K. Lachmann and M. Haupt, eds.: Des Minnesangs Frühling (Leipzig, 1857, rev. 38/1988 by H. Moser and H. Tervooren), i, 56–69 [standard complete text edn]
U. Aarburg: 'Melodien zum frühen deutschen Minnesang', Der deutsche Minnesang: Aufsätze zu seiner Erforschung, ed. H. Fromm, i (Darmstadt, 1961), 378–421
H. Tervooren: 'Dietmar von Aist', Die deutsche Literatur des Mittelalters: Verfasserlexikon, ed. K. Ruh and others (Berlin, 2/1977–)
For further bibliography see MINNESANG.

BURKHARD KIPPENBERG/LORENZ WELKER

Dietrich, Albert (Hermann) (b Forsthaus Golk, nr Meissen, 28 Aug 1829; d Berlin, 20 Nov 1908). German conductor and composer. He attended the Dresden Kreuzschule from 1842 to 1847, studying the piano and composition with Julius Otto. He then studied with Ignaz Moscheles, Julius Rietz and Moritz Hauptmann at the Leipzig Conservatory and attended lectures at the university. In 1851 he went to Düsseldorf, where he was taken into Schumann's circle and became friendly with Brahms. In the autumn of 1853 he wrote the opening Allegro of the 'F–A–E' Violin Sonata (the other movements were composed by Brahms and Schumann) as a greeting for Joachim. Dietrich left Düsseldorf in 1854 and conducted the first performance of his Symphony in Leipzig on 9 December. He then worked in Bonn (1855–61), conducting the subscription concerts and acting as the city's music director, and at Oldenburg (1861–90), where he was court Kapellmeister and took over the musical education of the grand duchess. In 1890 he retired to Berlin, where he had been a member of the Akademie der Künste from 1888; he received the title of royal professor in 1899.

As a conductor Dietrich championed primarily the works of Bach, Schumann and Brahms and had little sympathy for the music of the New German School. As a composer he was a follower of Schumann, and his works enjoyed a considerable reputation during his lifetime; perhaps his greatest success was as a songwriter. Both his operas were performed in his lifetime; his incidental music to Cymbeline was played in England at the Lyceum revival in 1896. He also wrote a collection of memoirs of Brahms (Erinnerungen an Johannes Brahms in Briefen, besonders aus seiner Jugendzeit, Leipzig, 1898, 2/1899/R), which was translated into English the year after it first appeared.

WORKS

STAGE

Robin Hood (op, 3, R. Moser), op.34, Frankfurt, 1879, Cymbeline (incid music, 5, W. Shakespeare), op.38, *c*1880, London, Lyceum, 1896,
Das Sonntagskind (op, H. Bulthaupt), Bremen, 1886, unpubd

Die Braut vom Liebenstein (dramatic scena, K. von Noorden), unpubd

OTHER WORKS

Vocal: numerous songs 1v, pf; mixed and male choruses, some with solo vv, orch acc.

Orch: Sym., d, op.20; Normannenfahrt, ov., op.26; Introduction and Romance, hn/vc, orch, op.27; Vn Conc., d, op.30; Vc Conc., g, op.32; Ov., C, op.35

Cbr: 2 pf trios, C, op.9, A, op.14; Sonata, C, vn, pf, op.15; Allegro, a, 1853, from Sonata 'F–A–E', vn, pf, collab. Schumann and Brahms, ed. E. Valentin and O. Kobin (Magdeburg, 1935)

Pf: 10 solo pieces, 4 as op.2, 6 as op.6; Sonata, G, pf 4 hands, op.19

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Linnemann: Musikgeschichte der Stadt Oldenburg (Oldenburg,1956)

R. Sietz: 'Albert Hermann Dietrich', Rheinische Musiker, i, ed. K.G. Fellerer (Cologne, 1960), 81 [incl. complete list of works]

R. Pascall: 'Brahms und die Kleinmeister', Brahms und seine Zeit: Hamburg 1983 [HJbMw, vii (1984)]

A. Horstmann: Untersuchungen zur Brahms-Rezeption der Jahre 1860–80 (Hamburg, 1986)

R.J. PASCALL

Dietrich [Dieterich, Theodoricus], Georg (b Meissen, 1525; d Meissen, 3 Sept 1598). German theorist and composer. He spent his life at Meissen; he was educated at the municipal school where Johannes Reusch was Kantor from 1543 to 1547 and Rektor from 1548 to 1555, and from 1549 at the Fürstenschule directed by Georg Fabricius where Michael Vogt was Kantor from 1549 to 1551 and Wolfgang Figulus from 1551 to 1588. In 1553 Dietrich was himself appointed Kantor at the municipal school where he remained until in 1585 a stroke rendered him unfit for work. He received a pension until his death and in 1599 a single payment was made to his widow. His treatise Quaestiones musices brevissimae e variis authoribus excerptae (Görlitz, 1573) clearly shows the influence of Reusch and Figulus; its layout and wording are based closely on the Compendiolum by Reusch's teacher Heinrich Faber, but it includes more music examples. Dietrich reproduced anonymously, as an appendix, three metrical works for four voices to be sung before and after lessons at Meissen; his unacknowledged source for these was Melodiae scholasticae by Martin Agricola, Figulus's teacher. In his preface Dietrich referred to the value of the music and claimed that, whereas many textbooks were too longwinded, his material was presented in a truly methodical format. The 31 solo funeral songs of his Christliche Gesenge, lateinisch und deutsch, zum Begrebnuss der verstorbenen Christen (Nuremberg, 1569) are, with only one exception, taken from older sources (see ZahnM); one is a sectional Passion work. His Nun danket alle Gott, a nine-voice motet (formerly in D-PI), is now lost.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; ZahnM

P. Wackernagel: Bibliographie zur Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes im XVI. Jahrhundert (Frankfurt, 1855/R)

K. Benndorf: 'Eine musikalische Passionsandacht aus dem Meissener Gesangbuch', Monatsschrift für Gottesdienst und kirchliche Kunst, iii (1898)

K. Ameln: 'Ein Kantorenbuch aus Pommern', JbLH, vii (1962), 52–78, esp. 66

B.K.F. Wilson: Choral Pedagogy: Crossroads of Theory and Practice in Sixteenth-Century Germany (diss., Boston U., 1995)

MARTIN RUHNKE

Dietrich, Marlene [Maria Magdalene] (b Weimar, 27 Dec 1901; d Paris, 6 May 1992). American actress and singer of German birth. She studied the violin and piano first in Weimar then later at the Berlin Hochschule für Musik, but abandoned a career as a violinist to go on the stage, partly because of a wrist injury. After work as a chorus dancer and playing small parts, she entered Max Reinhardt's theatre school. In 1928 the composer Mischa Spoliansky cast her in a major role in his musical Es liegt in der Luft, in which she sang her first recorded song, 'Wenn die beste Freundin'. The following year Spoliansky's Zwei Kravatten brought her to the attention of the Austrian-American film director Josef von Sternberg who cast her as the cabaret singer Lola-Lola in Der blaue Engel, for which she sang four songs by Friedrich Hollaender, including 'Ich bin von Kopf bis Fuss aus Liebe eingestellt' ('Falling in Love Again'). Sternberg made six films with her in Hollywood (1930–35), now accepted as classics, but although Dietrich sang in several films at this time, it was not until she was reunited with Hollaender for Destry Rides Again (1939) that her vocal style came into its own. Including songs from that film ('See what the boys in the back room will have' and 'You've got that look'), she put together an act to entertain American and later Allied troops during World War II. The German song Lili Marlene in an English translation became one of her signature tunes.

After the war she returned to the stage and continued to perform in public until 1975. Although her singing voice was limited in its range, her musicality and the way she could invest lyrics with overtones of tragedy or irony made her one of the most influential and often-copied popular singers of the 20th century. Although decorated by the American and French governments for her work in the war, she later declared herself to be a pacifist and ended every recital with Pete Seeger's anti-war ballad Where have all the flowers gone?.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Dickens: The Films of Marlene Dietrich (New York, 1968, rev. 2/1992 by J. Vermilye as The Complete Films of Marlene Dietrich)

M. Dietrich: Nehmt nur mein Leben (Munich, 1979; Eng. trans. as My Life, London, 1989)

C. Zucker: The Idea of the Image: Josef von Sternberg's Dietrich Films (Toronto, 1988)

S. Bach: Dietrich (New York, 1992)

P. O'Connor: The Amazing Blonde Woman: Dietrich's Own Style (London, 1992)

PATRICK O'CONNOR

Dietrich [Dieterich, Theodericus, Theodorici], Sixt [Sixtus, Xistus] (b Augsburg, *c*1493; d St Gallen, 21 Oct 1548). German composer. From at least the beginning of 1504 he was a choirboy at Konstanz Cathedral. He left the choir on 21 August 1508 when his voice broke, and matriculated at Freiburg University. In 1517 he had to leave Freiburg because of debts, and stayed in Strasbourg for a short time with the cathedral chaplain and humanist, Johann Rudolphinger. In November 1517 the cathedral chapter in Konstanz made him informator choralium, with responsibility for teaching the cathedral choirboys grammar and singing. He gave up this post in 1519, probably after the death of his wife, and then took holy orders. In 1522 he was given an altar prebend in Konstanz Cathedral and was ordained priest. As he belonged to the choir, two of his duties were to help the succentors at choir practice and to lead the polyphony; he also wrote music for the choir. When in 1527 the Catholic clergy left Konstanz in the face of the Reformation's growing influence, Dietrich stayed behind and joined the new movement. Although his living was guaranteed, he suffered artistic isolation in a town that followed the principles of Zwingli (whose attitude to polyphonic church music was unfavourable) more closely than Luther's. The town council tried to keep him busy, first with clerical jobs and errands, and later with music lectures. He visited Basle, Strasbourg, Cologne and Wittenberg. In 1537 he planned to go to England, but the Basle humanist Bonifacius Amerbach dissuaded him. In 1541 he declined a permanent post at Wittenberg University; he was a guest lecturer in music in the winter term 1540–41 and probably also in 1544. In Wittenberg he met Luther, and often sang with him. Dietrich was friendly with numerous humanists and church reformers. After Konstanz was taken by the Catholic imperial troops at the beginning of August 1548, Dietrich, probably already very ill, took refuge in St Gallen with some fellow reformers, and died there.

Dietrich's work can be divided according to the different periods of his life: his student days, his time in the Konstanz Cathedral choir from 1518 to 1527, and finally his period as a free composer from 1527 to 1548. As a student, he seems to have composed mostly secular songs. His appointment in Konstanz required him to produce liturgical compositions for the cathedral choir. In his last period he wrote not only commissioned works for the early Protestant service, but also pieces for the Catholic imperial choir and secular songs; nearly all his printed works belong to this period.

The greater part of his work is church music. Important examples survive in collections of Magnificat settings, antiphons and hymns. Dietrich used contemporary compositional techniques from the Netherlands, but in a thoroughly individual manner. For example, the harmonic implications of the music are not always supported by the rhythms, which results in a characteristic restless sound. Its melodies are closely modelled on the style then current in the Netherlands. Most of his church music is based on a cantus prius factus, and the range of different ways in which he treated the tenor, and his variety of imitation techniques, is typical of music from the Low Countries. He was most fond of using canon. Dietrich's eight sacred songs in German are Tenorlied settings containing both chordal and imitative sections, sometimes with breves and semibreves note against note in the simplest manner. A larger collection of these songs seems to have been lost. Dietrich probably also composed some tunes for the Konstanz reformed songbook, which apparently first appeared in 1533 or 1534. Some of his secular songs are chordal, but most are polyphonic; the voices are occasionally treated imitatively at the openings of the two sections of a piece, but otherwise are not melodically related. Some years after Dietrich's death, Matthias Apiarius intended to print some of his unpublished works, but died before he could do so.

Dietrich is the most important early Protestant composer next to Johann Walter (i); Luscinius ranked him among Isaac, Senfl and Grefinger as one of the leading German composers of the time. He remained strictly traditional both in his thinking and in his works, and only his sacred songs in German reflect his early Protestant views in their slight tendency towards a more modern style.

WORKS

Epicedion Thomae Sporeri (Strasbourg, 1534)
Magnificat octo tonorum ... liber primus (Strasbourg, 1535), ed. M. Honegger and C. Meyer (Strasbourg and Stuttgart, 1992)
Novum ac insigne opus musicum 36 antiphonarum (Wittenberg, 1541), ed. W.E. Buszin (Kassel and St Louis, 1964)
Novum opus musicum tres tomos [122] sacrorum hymnorum (Wittenberg, 1545), ed, in EDM, 1st ser., xxiii (1942–60)
Laudate Dominum, 4vv (Augsburg, 1547) (canon; broadsheet)
20 Latin motets, 2–5, 7vv, 1538[6], 1542[8], 1545[2], 1545[3], 1545[5], 1545[6], 1545[7], 1547[1], 1568[7]; 5 ed. in PÄMw, xvi (1888)
8 sacred German songs, 4vv, 1544[21], ed. in DDT, xxxiv (1908/R)
13 secular German songs, 3, 4, 6vv, 1535[11], 1536[8], 1538[9], 1539[27], 1540[7], 1544[20], 2 ed. in EDM, 1st ser., xx (1942/R), 5 ed. H.J. Moser, 65 deutsche Lieder ... nach dem Liederbuch von Peter Schöffer und Mathias Apiarius (Wiesbaden, 1967)
Further vocal pieces in A-Wn, B-Bc, CH-Bu, SGs, D-ERu, Kl, LEt, Mbs, Mu, Rp, Z
Lute intabulations of vocal pieces in H. Judenkünig, Ain schone kunstliche Underweisung ... auf der Lautten und Geygen (Vienna, 1523); H. Gerle, Musica teutsch (Nuremberg, 1532); 1536[12], 1540[23], 1544[23], 1547[26]
Org intabulations of 3 vocal pieces in Amerbach MS, CH-Bu, ed. in SMd, vi/1 (1967), Hör MS, Zz, ed. in SMd, vi/2 (1970)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Zenck: Sixtus Dietrich (Leipzig, 1928/R)
M. van Crevel: Adrianus Petit Coclico (The Hague, 1940)
M. Schuler: 'Der Personalstatus der Konstanzer Domkantorei um 1500', AMw, xxi (1964), 255–86, esp. 272
M. Staehelin: 'Sixt Dietrich, ein deutscher Musiker der Reformationszeit', Kirche und Gesellschaft im Heiligen Römischen Reich des 15. und 16. Jahrhunderts, ed. H. Boockmann (Göttingen, 1994), 165–85

MANFRED SCHULER

Dietrichstein, Graf Moriz von (b Vienna, 19 Feb 1775; d Vienna, 27 Aug 1864). Austrian composer. After returning to Vienna from French captivity he began studying music with Maximilian Stadler. Besides many other positions he was Obersthofmeister of Napoleon's son in Vienna, the Duke of Reichstadt (from 1815), Hofmusikgraf (1819–26), and director of the court library (1826–45), where he founded the Musiksammlung. From his childhood he was in contact with many great artists of his time, including Beethoven, Albrechtsberger, Gyrowetz and Weigl, and he became an influential personality in Vienna. He greatly admired Schubert, and wrote for him a letter of recommendation in 1821, a gesture soon reciprocated by the dedication of Schubert's Erlkönig.

There is no evidence about the dates of Dietrichstein's compositions, but it seems (according to Nemecek) that most of the songs and dances were composed before 1811, while they were published between 1810 and 1825. Schubert was aware of the new Viennese editions – especially of songs – and was eager to surpass them. It is striking that between 1814 and 1816 Schubert set eight Goethe and four Hölty poems that appeared in Dietrichstein's settings in 1811 and 1812. Dietrichstein wrote about 76 songs (to a range of poets including Goethe, Hölty and A.F. von Steigentesch), some of which are through-composed, showing sensitivity in casting words to music and creating an appropriate mood and character.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F.C. Weidmann: Moriz, Graf von Dietrichstein: sein Leben und Wirken aus seinen hinterlassenen Papieren dargestellt (Vienna, 1867)
W. Nemecek: Moritz I, Graf von Dietrichstein (1775–1864): Hofbibliothekspräfekt (1826–1845) (diss., U. of Vienna, 1953)
T. Antonicek: Ignaz von Mosel (1772–1844): Biographie und Beziehung zu den Zeitgenossen (diss., U. of Vienna, 1962)

GEROLD W. GRUBER

Dietricus [Karlsruhe Anonymous] (fl mid-13th century). German theorist. His short treatise, Regule super discantum et ad discernendum ipsas notas discantus, appears only in the manuscript D-KAsp perg.29*a*, ff.7*v*–8*v*, with a note indicating that he was at least the copyist: 'qui me scribebat Dietricus nomen habebat'. It cannot be dated precisely because the chronology of contemporary mensural treatises has not been established, but in minor respects it would seem to antedate the work of Franco of Cologne: the ligature forms have certain ambiguities which Franco eliminated, and the alteration of breves is not mentioned.

Despite its title, the treatise is concerned only with mensural rhythmic notation and not with the intervals, consonances or counterpoint of discant. The six rhythmic modes, in the order generally accepted by modern authorities, are outlined, and the 4th is said not to be in current use. Mutation from one mode to another is recognized. In his discussion of note shapes and ligatures, Dietricus clearly distinguished symbols with plicae, introducing for these an oblique form of the square punctum, and referred to the proprietas (including proprietas opposita) but not to the perfectio of ligatures.

The principle is stated that a long before another long is perfect. The semibreve is also recognized; two semibreves are said to equal a recta breve, although this does not represent unequivocally a reference to binary rhythm since an unequal transcription in ternary rhythm (1–2) may legitimately reflect Dietricus's meaning. Rests of the value of one tempus (a breve), two tempora (an altered breve or imperfect long) and three tempora (a perfect long) are indicated clearly by strokes spanning one, two or three spaces of the stave.

Dietricus's system is thought to correspond very closely to that used in the Bamberg manuscript of 13th-century motets.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Müller: Eine Abhandlung über Mensuralmusik (Leipzig, 1886)
W. Apel: The Notation of Polyphonic Music, 900–1600 (Cambridge, MA, 1942, 5/1961; Ger. trans., rev., 1970)

ANDREW HUGHES

Dietsch [Dietch, Dietzch, Dietz], (Pierre-)Louis(-Philippe) (b Dijon, 17 March 1808; d Paris, 20 Feb 1865). French composer. According to Fétis, he was a choirboy at Dijon Cathedral and from 1822 a pupil at Choron's Institution Royale de Musique Classique et Religieuse in Paris. In 1830 he entered the Conservatoire, studying counterpoint with Reicha and the double bass with M.-P. Chenie (winning the premier prix in the same year). He was active in Parisian churches and orchestras and in 1840 became chorus master at the Opéra on Rossini's recommendation. He taught at the Ecole Niedermeyer (Choron's Institution revived) after 1853 until his death. He succeeded Girard as conductor at the Opéra in 1860 but left after three years when he (or an orchestra member) had a disagreement with Verdi during a rehearsal of Les vêpres siciliennes.

Dietsch was involved in several controversies. In 1842 he presented a four-voice Ave Maria 'by Arcadelt', which he was credited with having discovered until various scholars, noting the faulty prosody of the work, began to suspect that he had composed it. Later research has shown that the Ave Maria was actually Dietsch's arrangement of Arcadelt's three-voice chanson Nous voyons que les hommes. His opera Le vaisseau fantôme, ou Le maudit des mers (2, P. Foucher and H. Révoil; F-Po) was first performed on 9 November 1842 at the Opéra. Wagner's assumption that Foucher and Révoil based their libretto on his scenario for Der fliegende Holländer (recently sold to the Opéra) has gained common currency. In fact, Le vaisseau fantôme bears only a passing resemblance to the Holländer, and was based on a variety of sources including Captain Marryat's The Phantom Ship and Scott's The Pirate. In 1861 Dietsch conducted the infamous Paris première of Tannhäuser, provoking Wagner's wrath through his incompetence and unwillingness to accept help.

Dietsch's compositions, mostly sacred works, are well constructed but conservative and unimaginative. Berlioz found Le vaisseau fantôme excessively solemn; other reviewers considered it an admirable achievement, though somewhat academic. The work was criticized for its two-act structure, thought to be inadequate for so portentous a subject. Dietsch may have written a ballet for a performance of Weber's Der Freischütz in 1841.

WORKS
(selective list)

all printed works published in Paris

Stage: Le vaisseau fantôme, ou Le maudit des mers (op, 2, P. Foucher and H. Révoil), Paris, Opéra, 9 Nov 1842, F-Po; Ballet music for a perf. of Weber: Der Freischütz, 1841, doubtful

Sacred vocal: 25 masses (some for chorus, some for solo vv), orch/org (*c*1834–58), include 2 requiems (one in memory of A. Adam); Répertoire des maîtrises et des chapelles … depuis Palestrina jusqu'a nos jours, org acc. (1841–65); TeD, 5 solo vv, choir, orch (1844); Numerous cantiques, 1–4vv (1848–61); at least 32 motets, 1–3vv (1848–63); Répertoire de musique religieuse … de la Madeleine (1854–7), incl. works by others; other works

Org: Répertoire complet de l'organiste contenant des morceaux pour toutes les parties de l'office divin (1840); Accompagnement d'orgue … pour le graduel romain (*c*1855), collab. Abbé Tessier

Pf: transcrs. of works by Arbeau, Lully, Gluck, Clapisson

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB; MGG1 (E. Haraszti) [incl. detailed list of works]
L. Escudier: 'L'orchestre de l'Opéra', Art musical (23 July 1863)
G. Servières: Tannhäuser à l'Opéra en 1861 (Paris, 1895)
E. Newman: The Life of Richard Wagner, iii (London, 1945/R)
E. Haraszti: 'Pierre-Louis Dietsch und seine Opfer', Mf, viii (1955), 39–58
G. Leprince: 'The Flying Dutchman in the Setting by Philippe Dietch', MQ, l (1964), 307–20
B. Millington: '"The Flying Dutchman", "Le vaisseau fantôme" and other Nautical Yarns', MT, cxxvii (1986), 131–5
D.K. Holoman: 'The Emergence of the Orchestral Conductor in Paris in the 1830s', Music in Paris in the Eighteen-Thirties [Northampton, MA, 1982], ed. P.A. Bloom (Stuyvesant, NY, 1987), 374–430
B. Laroche: Der fliegende Holländer: Wirkung und Wandlung eines Motivs (Frankfurt, 1993)

JEFFREY COOPER, BARRY MILLINGTON

Diettenhofer, Joseph [Giuseppe] (b Vienna, *c*1743; d ? London, after 1799). Austrian teacher and composer. He studied in Vienna with G.C. Wagenseil (counterpoint) and J.A. Štěpán (keyboard). He toured Germany and France for many years, and taught in Paris before settling in London in 1780. In the London press of 1788 he caused some controversy as a self-styled champion of Haydn, who had been criticized for providing previously published symphonies to the Professional Concert organizers as new. Diettenhofer later met Haydn in London (1791). In the same year he left London for Vienna, and from 1797 he was active in Berlin. By 1799, however, he had returned to London and was again teaching the piano, thoroughbass, singing and composition. A review of 1784 praises Diettenhofer's sonatas and especially his didactic keyboard arrangements, and commends his musical skill, knowledge and judgment.

WORKS

all printed works published in London

INSTRUMENTAL

Kbd: 6 Sonatas, pf/hpd, vn obbl, op.1 (1781); 6 Sonatas, pf, vn obbl, op.2 (1781); 6 Sonatas, pf/hpd, vn obbl (n.d.), mentioned in GerberL; 3 fugues, org/pf, in A Set of 10 Miscellaneous Fugues (before 1803); Praeambulum, 5 fugues, finale, org, GB-Lbl

Arrs: attrib. W. Byrd: Non nobis, Domine, for 2 vn, va, b (*c*1780), org (*c*1785), 4vv, 2vn, va, vc (1795); J.A. Štěpán: Conc., 2 pf/2 hpd, orch ad lib (as J. Haydn, HXVIII:G2) (1782); L. Boccherini: 6 Sonatas, G25–30, pf/hpd, vn obbl (1783)

THEORETICAL WORKS

An Introduction to Musical Composition, or A Preparation for the Study of Counter-Point, through an Original Treatise on Thorough Bass (1799)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; FétisB; GerberL; GerberNL; LedeburTLB; MGG1 (O. Biba)

European Magazine and London Review, vi (1784), Aug, 134–6

H.C.R. Landon, ed.: The Collected Correspondence and London Notebooks of Joseph Haydn (London, 1959)

D. Bartha, ed.: Joseph Haydn: Gesammelte Briefe und Aufzeichnungen (Kassel, 1965)

C.B. Oldman: 'Haydn's Quarrel with the "Professionals" in 1788', Musik und Verlag: Karl Vötterle zum 65. Geburtstag, ed. R. Baum and W. Rehm (Kassel, 1968), 459–65

C. Roscoe: 'Haydn and London in the 1780s', ML, xlix (1968), 203–12

H.C.R. Landon: Haydn: Chronicle and Works, ii (London, 1978); iii (London, 1976)

HOWARD PICTON

Dietz [Dietzsch], Anton Ferdinand. See TITZ, ANTON FERDINAND.

Dietz, Johann Christian (i) (b Darmstadt, 1773; d Holland, 1849). German engineer and instrument maker. His first invention was a friction idiophone called a MÉLODION, designed in 1805 when he had established his business at Emmerich. Similar to E.F. Chladni's earlier KLAVIZYLINDER, it was in the form of a small square piano, measuring approximately 122 cm by 61 cm, and it had curved metal bars sounded by contact with a rotating metal cylinder. Dietz demonstrated the mélodion in Westphalia and the Netherlands in 1806. He had a factory in the Netherlands before he moved to Paris, where on 18 February 1814 he patented his best-known invention, the claviharpe (see HARP-PIANO). This was an attempt to produce characteristic harp tone by means of a keyboard. It had a six-octave keyboard that operated plectra, which gently plucked silk-covered strings sideways. It was 2·15 metres high and resembled a giraffe piano without a soundboard and outer case. It was reckoned that even the most careful listener could not detect the difference between it and an ordinary harp. A claviharpe that Dietz made in 1814 is at Brussels Conservatory.

Dietz's son, JOHANN CHRISTIAN DIETZ (ii), and grandson also made claviharpes up to about 1895, but they did not come into general use, not least because such an instrument would be extremely difficult to keep in tune and properly regulated. An article in the Harmonicon (1828) states 'M. Dietz succeeded in resolving a problem of considerable difficulty, that of graduating and modifying sounds at will, but not of sustaining them'. The same fate befell Dietz's other inventions, including the TROCHLÉON (1812), described in the Harmonicon (1828) as 'an instrument of round form, furnished with metal plates of different sizes, sounded by means of a circular bow, set in motion by a pedal'. No example of this instrument survives.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Description du clavibarpe, inventé par M. Dietz père et exécuté par M. Dietz fils (Paris, 1821)

V.C. Mahillon: Catalogue descriptif & analytique du Musée instrumental du Conservatoire royal de musique de Bruxelles (Ghent and Brussels, 1880–1922, repr. 1978 with addl material)

MARGARET CRANMER

Dietz, Johann Christian (ii) (b Emmerich, *c*1804; d Paris, 1888). German instrument maker, son of Johann Christian Dietz (i). He learnt his craft from his father, and made a claviharpe (an instrument invented by his father) for the exhibition at the Louvre in 1819. He continued the family tradition of invention and designed a grand piano with freely vibrating sides to the soundboard. He was awarded a medal at the 1827 exhibition in Paris, where he exhibited five different pianos. The one that received most approval was a grand with four strings to each note – the fourth undamped string increased the power of the instrument by providing sympathetic resonance. A few months later he invented the POLYPLECTRON, a bowed keyboard instrument (see SOSTENENTE PIANO); an account of it appeared in the Harmonicon (1828). To make the bow act on the strings like other string instruments, Dietz needed as many bows as notes. He dealt with this problem with 'numerous bows, composed of thin slips of leather', which circulated on a cylinder placed on the upper part of the instrument, and over pulleys in the lower part. The motion of the key brought the bow into contact with the string by means of a small, thin piece of copper. The sound could be varied a good deal according to the pressure used on the key. The instrument coped with fast passages very well and had the ability to sustain in a remarkable way, but it did not 'answer the expectations of those who wish to trace in it the sound of a Stradivarius or an Amati'. A panel of literary men and musicians who met in 1828, of whom Cherubini was a member, agreed however that Dietz had 'approached much nearer to perfection than any of his predecessors'.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Description du clavibarpe, inventé par M. Dietz père et exécuté par M. Dietz fils (Paris, 1821)

V.C. Mahillon: Catalogue descriptif & analytique du Musée instrumental du Conservatoire royal de musique de Bruxelles, ii (Ghent, 1896, 2/1909, repr. 1978 with addl material)

MARGARET CRANMER

Dietz [Dietzch], Louis. See DIETSCH, LOUIS.

Dieupart, Charles [François] (b ?after 1667; d *c*1740). French harpsichordist, violinist and composer, active mainly in England. He was known as Charles to his contemporaries and to Hawkins, the main source for the events of his life, but an autograph letter in French is signed F. Dieupart, (facs. in Six suittes, ed. P. Brunhold). A French notarial act published by Hardouin (1714) shows a François Dieupart, son of a Parisian candlemaker married in 1667, living in the parish of St James, Piccadilly, London. He was probably related to the French court wind player Nicolas Dieupart, the main copyist of an important manuscript of instrumental trios (US-NH Filmer MS 33), whose name appears in the accounts of the Ecurie Royale between 1667 and his death in 1700.

Dieupart's Six suittes (1701) are dedicated to the Countess of Sandwich, daughter of the Earl of Rochester, who went to France towards the turn of the century 'for her health'. The wording of the dedication suggests that she became his pupil at some time before her return to England. Dieupart is first heard of in England in an advertisement for a concert at Drury Lane, London, on 11 February 1703, when he accompanied Gasparo Visconti in some of Corelli's sonatas. He wrote instrumental music, now lost, for Peter Motteux's masque Britain's Happiness (Drury Lane, 22 February 1704) and the following year he collaborated with Thomas Clayton and N.F. Haym at the same theatre in the production of Arsinoe, Queen of Cyprus (16 January 1705) again perhaps supplying instrumental music. According to Hawkins, Dieupart played the harpsichord and Haym the cello in this and Bononcini's Il trionfo di Camilla (Drury Lane, 30 March 1706), and he wrote an overture and chaconne for Motteux's pasticcio Thomyris (Drury Lane, 1 April 1707). He was evidently a prominent member of the Drury Lane musical establishment, representing the soprano Catherine Tofts in disputes with the manager, Christopher Rich.

In the winter of 1707–8 Dieupart was among those involved in setting up a rival operatic project at the Queen's Theatre in the Haymarket, London, and wrote and arranged music for its first production, Motteux's pasticcio Love's Triumph (26 February 1708); Motteux wrote in the preface that any success 'will owe not a little to Mr Dieupart, for his share in the Contrivance of the Entertainments and his supplying what Recitative and other Music was necessary'. According to Hawkins, Dieupart played continuo with Haym in Alessandro Scarlatti's Pyrrhus and Demetrius (14 December 1708), and he played in the Haymarket orchestra until about 17 November 1710, when he was apparently dropped; on that day the viola player W. Armstrong refused to come to a rehearsal in the theatre, declaring 'I once gave my Word I wou'd not Play except our Old Master Mr Du Parr was in also'.

Instead, Dieupart planned with Clayton and Haym to put on 'musical entertainments' at York Buildings, advertising them in letters to The Spectator on 26 December 1711 and 18 January 1712. Hawkins wrote that 'this association continued but a short time', and that Dieupart subsequently 'betook himself wholly to teaching the harpsichord, and in the capacity of a master of that instrument, had admission into some of the best families in the kingdom'. Nevertheless, he did not entirely retire from concert life: concertos by him were performed at Drury Lane for 'Two Hautboys and Two Flutes' (14 March 1722), 'Little Flute' (11 May 1722), 'Hautboys, Flutes and Violins' (15 May 1723), as well as a trumpet sonata (14 May 1726). He was evidently a regular member of the orchestra, for his salary was reduced to 6s. 8d. a night on 9 September 1726.

Hawkins wrote that Dieupart 'grew negligent' towards the end of his life, 'and frequented concerts performed in ale-houses, in obscure parts of the town, and distinguished himself not more there, than he would have done in an assembly of the best judges, by his neat and elegant manner of playing the solos of Corelli'. His last known appearance was in Hampstead on 11 September 1724, when he played 'Violin Concertino' and was billed as 'Capt Dupar, Scholar to the late celebrated Signor Corelli, and late Musick Master to his present Highness the Prince of Orange'. The concert included 'several pieces of his own composing, for the Violin and Harpsichord'. He died, according to Hawkins, 'far advanced in years, and in very necessitated circumstances, about the year 1740'.

Dieupart is best known today for his Six suittes de clavessin, partly because J.S. Bach copied them out (D-F Mus. Hs. 1538), and was supposedly influenced by them in his English Suites. The suites are all seven-movement sequences of overture, allemande, courante, sarabande, gavotte, menuet or passepied and gigue, and mix elements of French orchestral music with an idiomatic harpsichord style. Dieupart's treatment of the suite as a form, with a fixed number of movements in a fixed order, was without precedent in French harpsichord music, as was the prefixing of an overture to each suite. Some of the suite movements are linked thematically. Roger published them in two versions, for keyboard and for violin or recorder (voice flute and fourth flute) and continuo, but sold them together and advertised them as 'Mises in Concert', which suggests they were intended to be played together, though the harmony does not always exactly correspond.

The rest of Dieupart's music has been neglected in modern times, though it also reveals a lively imagination and sophisticated command of harmony, and shows that he achieved an effective synthesis of the French, Italian and English idioms. He seems to have been the first Frenchman to write solo recorder sonatas and orchestral concertos. The five concertos at Dresden were probably written for Drury Lane in the 1720s, and have points of contact with the post-Purcellian English trumpet sonata, the recorder concertos written about 1720 by William Babell, John Baston and Robert Woodcock, and Handel's op.3 concertos.

WORKS

Edition: C. Dieupart: Collection, ed. P. Brunold (Paris, 1934) [B]

Six suittes de clavessin, A, D, b, e, F, f, vn, fl, basse de viole, archlute (Amsterdam, 1701) [kbd version]; B; rev. K. Gilbert (Monaco, 1979)

Six suittes, rec/vn, bc (Amsterdam, 1702) [inst version of the above]; ed. H. Ruf (Celle, 1966)

[13] Select Lessons for the Harpsichord or Spinnett (London, 1705/R) [selection from Six suittes]

Songs in the New Opera, Call'd Love's Triumph, The Symphonys or Instrumental Parts in the Opera Call'd Love's Triumph (London, 1708) [arr. and comp. Dieupart]

The Overture and Chaconne belonging to . . . the Opera of Thomyris (London, 1708), lost

Six Sonatas or Solos, G, a, e, B♭, g, F, rec, bc (London, 1717); ed. C. Devroop (London, 1996)

Sonata, d, ob, str, bc; Sonata [ov.], e, str, GB-Lbl

Concs., a, s rec/fl/ob, 2 ob, bn, str, bc; A, vn, 2 ob, bn, str, bc; B♭, 2 vn, 2 ob, bn, str, bc; e, 2 fl, 2 hn, str, bc, inc.; b, tpt, 2 ob, str, bc, D-Dl, ed. C. Moutier (forthcoming)

kbd pieces, GB-Lbl, Mp

33 songs, single sheet edns and The Merry Musician (London, 1716–33), A Pocket Companion for Gentlemen and Ladies, ii (London, *c*1725), The Musical Miscellany (London, 1729–31), The Harp (London, 1730), The British Musical Miscellany (1734–6), The Spinnet (London, 1750), ed. P. Brunhold (Paris, 1934); ed. in B

BIBLIOGRAPHY

AshbeeR, ii;; BDA; BurneyH; HawkinsH

P. Hardouin: 'Une adresse de Dieupart à Londres', RdM, xli (1958), 99

M. Tilmouth: 'A Calendar of References to Music in Newspapers Published in London and the Provinces (1600–1719)', RMARC, i (1961/R)

F. Lesure: Bibliographie des éditions musicales publiées par Estienne Roger et Michel-Charles Le Cène (Paris, 1969)

R. Ford: 'Nicolas Dieupart's Book of Trios', RMFC (1981), 45–71

J. Milhous and R.D.Hume, eds.: Vice Chamberlain Coke's Theatrical Papers 1706–1715 (Carbondale and Edwardsville, IL, 1982)

D. Fader: 'Let the Buyer Beware: Dieupart's Six Suittes de Clavessin and Arrangement Practices for the Recorder', Recorder Education Journal, ii (1995), 32–52

DAVID FULLER/PETER HOLMAN

Diez (Sp.). See under ORGAN STOP.

Díez, Consuelo (b Madrid, 6 Aug 1958). Spanish composer. She studied at the Madrid Conservatory, obtaining higher diplomas in piano and composition. She also graduated in the history of art from the Complutense University in Madrid. Between 1974 and 1984 she was in the USA, where she obtained an MA at the Hartt School of Music of the University of Hartford. She has received the following prizes: Real Art Ways (1986), Norman Bayles Memorial Award (1987) and II Panorama de Jovenes Compositores (1989). She was founder-director of the Laboratorio de Informática y Composición Electroacústica (1988–96) and has also been director of the de Ferraz Conservatory in Madrid (1992–6). Since 1997 she has been director of the Centro para la Difusión de la Música Contemporánea.

Díez was at first influenced by minimal and pop tendencies in American serious music, as can be seen in Naggareth (1986), Jungle City (1986) and Tu y yo (1987). Her careful formal elaboration is increasingly at the service of a personal intimacy of style, as can be seen in Sabor a cristal (1991–2), an ambitious electro-acoustic work which shows Díez's various expressive registers, and Saxo, mentiras y cinta de audio (1996), with its distant reminiscences of jazz.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Microformas, fl, str, 1981; Iliverir, 1983; Pasión cautiva, 1997

Vocal: 3 canciones que tratan de España (B. de Otero), S, pf, 1980; Libertad real (B. de Otero), mixed chorus, 1980; El Azul está prohibido, S, elec, 1990; Voz y sabor, es (E. Abad), mezzo, elec, tape, 1996

Chbr: Naggareth, 5 perc, 1986; Verde y negro, fl, pic, pf, 1988; Agua de la luna, 12 fl, mar, 1992; La flecha del tiempo, str qt, 1992–3; Iro, cl, va, gui, pf, tape, 1994; Magma, pf, elecs, tape, 1995

Solo inst: Endurance, pf, 1983; Sad, pf, 1983; Saxo, mentiras y cinta de audio, t sax, tape, 1996; Se ha parado el aire, pf, 1996; Sein und Zeit, pf, 1996

Tape: Jungle City, 1986; Tu y yo, 1987; S.Q., 1990; Sabor a cristal, 1991–2

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.R. Encinar, ed.: Música en Madrid (Madrid, 1992)

JOSÉ IGES

Dièze (Fr.). See SHARP.

Diez Nieto [Dieznieto], Alfredo (Anastasio) (b Havana, 25 Oct 1918). Cuban composer, teacher, conductor and pianist. He studied music in Havana, where his teachers included Jaime Prats, Pedro Sanjuan and Roldán, then in 1947 went to New York to the Juilliard School of Music and studied with Steuermann (piano), Bernard Wagenaar (composition) and Fritz Mahler (orchestral conducting). He began teaching in 1936 in the Havana conservatories; in 1959 he founded and directed the Alejandro García Caturla Conservatory, ran the School for Instructors in the Arts, and was responsible for organizing specialized teaching at the Seminary for Popular Music. He was professor of music for the Band of the Staff of the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Cuba, at the National School for the Arts and at the Higher Institute for the Arts. He has taught the piano, harmony, counterpoint and fugue, composition and orchestration, and his writings embrace music theory, harmony and education. In 1965 he founded the popular classical orchestra 'Gonzalo Roig' and also directed other symphonic groups in Cuba. As a composer he was influenced by Roldán, and his work has continued a national aesthetic tradition, using techniques of the 20th century. This is shown in the Sinfonia no.1 (1943) and Los Diablitos (1969), the latter a symphonic scene of great rhythmic force evoking a dance of the íremes ñañigos (a secret society of black Cubans), inspired by Roldán's piano piece El diablito baila. His works are formal with a diaphanous content, while showing continuity within one stylistic conception. The Sonata for violin (1971) and the Gran Sonata for piano (1978) are notable; both challenge the performer and display a contemporary sonority in which the harmonic tensions do not obscure the formal clarity and thematic definition.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Estampa no.1, 1943; Estampa no.2, 1943; Estampa no.3, 1943; Sinfonáa no.1, 1943; Elegía, str, 1962; Elegía, 1963; In memorian, 1967; Los diablitos, 1969; Danzón, pf, orch, 1981; Concertino, bn, orch, 1983, In memorian, 1992; Dos versiones, 1993

Band: 90 Aniversario, 1990; Evocaciones de España, 1990

Chbr: Estampa no.1, pf, 1938; Estampa no.2 pf, 1938; Estampa no.3, pf, 1938; Tocata, pf, 1947; Impresiones, pf, 1948; Qnt no.1, fl, ob, cl, bn, eng hn, 1960; Sueño fugitivo, fl, pf, 1967; Sonata, vn, 1971; Capricho no.2, cl, pf, 1973; Preludio, org, 1974; Trio, 2 cl, bn, 1974; Gran sonata, pf, 1978; Danzón centenario, 2 pf, 1982; Qnt no.2, fl, ob, cl, bn, eng hn, 1982; Sonata, fl, pf, 1984; Qt no.1, 1986; Sonata, guí, 1989; Capricho no.5, trbn, pf, 1989; Monólogo, fl, 1992

Vocal: Yo ta pedí guinaddo (Santos Ramírez), S, orch, 1968; Sudor y látigo (N. Guillén), Bar, orch, 1981; Caribe, 1v, pf, (Guillén), 1985; Guitarra, 1v, pf, (Guillén), 1985

Principal publisher: Editora Musical de Cuba

VICTORIA ELI RODRÍGUEZ

Di Fazio [Facio], Anselmo [Fatius, Anselmus] (b Enna, Sicily; fl 1589–1628). Italian composer, poet and sculptor. He was an Augustinian monk. His earliest work, Il primo libro de' madrigali a cinque voci (Messina, 1589, inc.), was dedicated from Enna, and his Sacrarum cantionum quinque vocibus liber primus (Palermo, 1596) from Palermo; the latter is prefaced by two sonnets and 12 elegiac couplets by various authors praising the composer as 'organist, musician and poet, as well as a fine sculptor'. In Il primo libro de' madrigali a sei voci (Venice, 1601, inc.) he set his own verse; in the dedication he wrote he had 'composed it with doubled efforts, in the poetic invention of the words and in the artful composition of the music'. The collection was dedicated from Venice to his young pupil Silvio Yaci, probably of Messina, where Di Fazio had established himself in the preceding months. Nothing further is known of him until 1628 when his Memoria artificiale di casi di coscienza, a short moral treatise, was published in Messina.

Di Fazio's music is characterized by expressive liveliness and great dramatic power, to which artifice is always subordinated. Together with his fellow citizen Tommaso Giglio, he is represented in a Nuremberg anthology, De fiori del giardino (RISM 1604[12]), by reprints of two six-voice madrigals (ed. in MRS, vi, 1991). Both composers are representative of the second phase of the seconda pratica, where the syntax and rhetoric of texts are absorbed into the harmonic structure, which then becomes logically and harmonically independent.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

PitoniN

A. Mongitore: Bibliotheca Sicula, i (Palermo, 1708/R), 40

O. Tiby: 'The Polyphonic School in Sicily of the 16th–17th Century', MD, v (1951), 203–11

O. Tiby: I polifonisti siciliani del XVI e XVII secolo (Palermo, 1969), 69–70

P.E. Carapezza: 'I duo della scuola siciliana': preface to Scuola polifonica siciliana: Musiche strumentali didatiche, MRS, ii (1971), pp.ix–li [with Eng. trans.]

L. Bianconi: 'Sussidi bibliografici per i musicisti siciliani del Cinque e Seicento', RIM, vii (1972), 3–38

P.E. Carapezza: 'Dialogo immaginario di Antonio Il Verso con il suo discepolo Giuseppe Palazzotto e Tagliavia nel giorno di Santo Natale dell'anno 1617 in Palermo', Madrigali siciliane in antologie transalpine, 1583–1616, MRS, vi (1991), pp.xxxix–li

F. Piperno: 'Polifonia italiana e mercati europei', ibid., pp.ix–xxxv, esp. xiii, xxiii–xxiv

PAOLO EMILIO CARAPEZZA, GIUSEPPE COLLISANI

Diferencia (i) [differencia] (Sp.). A term for 'variation' in 16th-century Spanish instrumental music. One of its earliest appearances was in Luys de Narváez's Los seys libros de delphín (1538). See VARIATIONS, §5.

Diferencia (ii) (Sp.). The term is used in the equivalent English sense of DIVISION – the subdividing of long notes into shorter ones.

Difference (Lat. differentia). In Latin monophonic psalmody, the formula with which a psalm tone may end (termination). See INFLECTION, (1) and PSALM, §II, 7(iv). See also MODE.

Difference tone. When two pure tones are sounded, a lower note of frequency equal to the difference of the frequencies of the two individual notes may be heard. This is the simple difference tone (also sometimes called the 'Tartini tone'). It is usually ascribed to non-linearities in the audio system producing the sounds or to non-linearities in the hearing mechanism, and is one of the combination tones with frequency f_2–f_1. Another combination tone with frequency $2f_1$–f_2, is also sometimes heard; this is the cubic difference tone. Difference tones are most frequently audible in a musical context when two instruments, e.g. flutes, are played together in the high register. See also SOUND and COMBINATION TONE.

CLIVE GREATED

Differentia (Lat.: 'difference'). In Latin monophonic psalmody, the formula with which a psalm tone may end (termination). See INFLECTION, (1) and PSALM, §II, 7(iv). See also MODE.

Di Giacomo, Salvatore (b Naples, 12 March 1860; d Naples, 5 April 1934). Italian poet, novelist, playwright, writer on music and theatre historian. In 1880 he gave up studying medicine to become a journalist, and contributed to the Corriere del mattino, Corriere di Napoli, Pungolo and Pro patria. Besides his work as director of the Lucchesi Theatre library and inspector of the library of S Pietro a Majella, Naples, he organized the Filippini Archives and indexed the Girolamini Music Archives; he was also artistic director of the Collezione Settecentesca, published by Sandron of Palermo. In 1929 he was awarded the title Accademico d'Italia.

Di Giacomo was an outstanding historian of Neapolitan vernacular culture, especially that part of it centred on the Piedigrotta district. In his musical research he concentrated on opera and particularly on musical life in Naples from the 16th century to the 18th; his book on the four Neapolitan conservatories remains a standard reference work. His literary writings, admired by Croce, are characterized by vivid realism and spontaneity of expression; they chiefly depict small-scale but highly emotional situations. Those that provided inspiration for musical settings include his collections of poems 'O funneco verde (1886), Ariette e sunette (1898) and Canzoni e ariette nuove (1916), his short stories Minuetto settecentesco (1883), Il voto (1889), Pipa e boccale (1893), Novelle napolitane (1914) and L'ignoto (1920) and his dramas Malavita (in collaboration with G. Cognetti, from the short story Il voto, 1889), A San Francisco (from a short poem of the same title, 1896), Assunta Spina (1909) and Quand l'amour meurt (1911). His poems have been set by Costa, Tosti, Pizzetti and many other Italian composers.

WRITINGS

only those on music

'Il Teatro Verdi a Napoli', Musica e musicisti, lviii (1903), 480–82

'Musicisti e librettisti: Salvatore Cammarano – il libretto del "Trovatore" e G. Verdi', Musica e musicisti, lix (1904), 81–92

'La Cantarina: Venezia al tempo di Goldoni', Musica e musicisti, lx (1905), 166–71

'Lablache al S. Carlino', Musica e musicisti, lx (1905), 639–43

'Paisiello e i suoi contemporanei', Musica e musicisti, lx (1905), 762–8; repr. in Napoli: figure e paesi (Naples, 1909)

'Musica e musicisti in Napoli dal XVI al XVIII secolo', RMI, xxii (1915), 483–519; xxiii (1916), 1–32

'Vincenzo Lavigna, maestro di G. Verdi', Idea nazionale (15 Dec 1915)

Catalogo delle opere musicali: Città di Napoli: Oratorio dei Filippini (Parma, 1918)

Musica antica a Napoli (Naples, 1918)

Maestri di cappella, musici & istromenti al Tesoro di San Gennaro nei secoli XVII & XVIII (Naples, 1920)

'Vita e morte e risurrezione del "Mercadante"', Il mezzogiorno (23 March 1921)

I quattro antichi conservatorii musicali di Napoli (Palermo, 1924–8)

ed. F. Flora and M. Vinciguerra: Opere di Salvatore di Giacomo (Milan, 1946) [repr. most of the above articles]

ed. G. Infusino: Lettere da Napoli (Naples, 1987) [correspondence]

LIBRETTOS

La fiera, N. D'Arienzo, Naples, 1887; with G. Cognetti: 'O voto (after Malavita), U. Giordano, Naples, 1892; A San Francisco, C. Sebastiani, Naples, 1896; Fantasia, E. De Leva, Naples, 1898; L'abate operetta, W. Borg, Naples, 1898; Giorgetta la merciaia, M. Forte, Naples, 1903; Rosaura rapita, V. Valente, Milan, 1904; 'O mese mariano, U. Giordano, Milan, 1910; 'O munasterio, P. Allen, Naples, 1913

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Croce: 'Salvatore di Giacomo', La critica (Bari, 1903), 401–25, 438–41

K. Vossler: Salvatore Di Giacomo: ein neapolitanischer Volksdichter in Wort, Bild und Musik (Heidelberg, 1908)

G.A. Borgese: 'Il teatro di Salvatore Di Giacomo', La vita e il libro, i (Turin, 1910, 2/1923), 119–24

F. Gaeta: Salvatore di Giacomo (Naples, 1911)

F.T. Marinetti: L'originalità napoletana del poeta Salvatore Di Giacomo (Naples, 1936)

A. Bellucci: Un furto digiacomiano nell'Archivio dei Girolamini (Naples, 1956)

FERRUCCIO TAMMARO

Di Giovanni, Edoardo. See JOHNSON, EDWARD (ii).

Dignum, Charles (b Rotherhithe, *c*1765; d London, 29 March 1827). English tenor and composer. As a boy he sang in a Roman Catholic chapel and was taught by Samuel Webbe and then Thomas Linley (i). He made a successful début as Young Meadows in the pasticcio Love in a Village at Drury Lane in 1784 and remained there, singing in many English stage works, until his retirement in 1812. His short, plump figure and abundant good nature fitted him for roles such as Tom Tug in Dibdin's The Waterman and Crop in Storace's No Song No Supper. He appeared at the London pleasure gardens and was a leading oratorio soloist, singing in the first English performance of Haydn's Creation (1800).

Dignum wrote tunes for sentimental and patriotic ballads, of which Fair Rosalie, and The Fight off Camperdown were particular favourites. His Vocal Music (1803) contained more than 70 songs, duets and glees; in it he thanked Webbe, Shield, Hook, Callcott, Arnold and others for providing the accompaniments. The volume was dedicated to the Prince of Wales and the subscribers included the cream of aristocratic, theatrical and musical London.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BDA; DNB (W.B. Squire); LS; SainsburyD
J. Roach: Authentic Memiors of the Green Room (London, 1796)
'Mr. Charles Dignum', European Magazine and London Review, xxxiv/Dec (1798), 363–4
C.H. Wilson: The Myrtle and Vine (London, 1802)
T. Gilliland: Dramatic Mirror, ii (London, 1808)
J. Boaden: Memoirs of the Life of John Philip Kemble, i (London, 1825)

OLIVE BALDWIN, THELMA WILSON

Dijk, Jan van (b Oostzaan, 4 June 1918). Dutch composer and teacher. He studied the piano with Jaap Callenbach and composition with Pijper (1936–46) at the Rotterdam Conservatory. A musical populist at heart, he has written copiously (nearly 1000 opus numbers) in virtually every genre. He was theory and composition teacher at the Brabant Conservatory, Tilburg (1955–83), and at the conservatories in Rotterdam and The Hague. He has devoted himself, through composition and performance, to the improvement of musical life in the southern Netherlands.

Despite sporadic use of serialism, van Dijk's music is prevailingly tonal; an adventurous use of counterpoint sometimes leads to pungent dissonances. He has written numerous occasional pieces and music for amateur instrumental groups. The Baroque instrumental suite is a preferred model, as in the three Suites da sonar and Suite alla francese. He is a proponent of 31-tone (microtonal) music, having composed works for the Teyler Museum organ in Haarlem and for other instruments (see MICROTONE). In addition, he has set texts by many of the Netherlands' major poets, provided music for Masonic rites (Musica Sacra I, II and III, linked with Pijper's 6 Adagios) and written a variety of concertos, some for unconventional instruments such as the accordion, pianola and carillon.

WORKS
(selective list)

STAGE

The Flying Dutchman (op), 1953; Protesilaus and Laodamia (op), 1968; De kikvorst [The Frog Prince] (ballet), 1978 (after the Brothers Grimm)

ORCHESTRAL

8 syms.: 1944–92
Other: Sinfonietta no.1, 1941; Concertino no.1, pf, orch, 1949; Sinfonietta no.2, 1952; Concertino no.2, pf, orch, 1953; Music for Org and Small Orch I, 1953; Suite da sonar, 1954; Cortège en rondeau, 1955; Suite da sonar no.2, 1955; Concertino, a sax, orch, 1956; Sinfonietta no.3, 1956; Suite da sonar no.3, 1958; Concertino, accdn, orch, 1960; Dance Suite, orch, jazz combo, 1961; Db Conc., 1962; Pf Conc., 4 hands, 1963; Salon symphonique, 1963; Contrasts, orch, jazz combo, 1964; Concertino no.3, pf, orch, 1966; Concertino no.4, pf, orch, 1966; Pianola Conc., 1978; Concertino, a sax, orch, 1985; Carillon Conc., 1989; Tpt Conc., str, 1989; 4 Higgajons, 1990–94; Conc. da camera, cl, str, 1990; Music for Org and Small Orch II, 1990; Vn Conc., 1995

CHORAL

By the Rivers of Babylon (Byron), SSAA, org, orch, 1944; Jaergetijde [The Season] (Vondel), SATB, band, 1949; 3 Vondel songs, SSAA, 1952; Zwartbaard (Slauerhoff), TTBB, orch, 1953; De kommandeur (Genestet), nar, boys' chorus, str qt, 1958; Dies irae, SSAA, brass, perc, 1961; Heer en knecht, S, SSAA, chbr orch, 1963; Pros Romaious, nar, T, B, SATB, orch, 1968; Gafdfad, S, SATB, org, orch, 1969; Pros Romaious II, Mez, orch, 1981; Chorocastra (Bijns), S, A, SATB, orch, 1985; Nijmegen, Nijmegen (van der Graft, de Moor), SATB, orch, 1985; Des Sängers Fluch (L. Uhland), nar, vv, SATB, orch, 1987; Coornhert (Jaspers), Bar, SSAATTBB, org, band, orch, 1989
Solo vocal: 10 Gezelle songs, A, pf, 1944, 5 orchd 1949; Het masker van het rooden dood (E.A. Poe), nar, chbr orch, 1952; 6 Liederen, A, ob, org, 1952; 11 Kurzlieder, S, pf, 1953 (M. Hausmann); Missa, S, orch, 1965

CHAMBER AND SOLO INSTRUMENTAL

6 str qts: 1940–94
18 pf sonatinas: 1944–74
Chbr and solo inst: Pf Sonata, 1942; Pf Trio, 1950; Septet, fl, cl, hn, vn, va, vc, db, 1950; Sonatina, a fl, 1952; Ordre, pf 4 hands, 1953, orchd 1954; Sonata, a sax, pf, 1953; Sonatina, vc, pf, 1953; Sonatina, vn, pf, 1953; Sérénade, tpt, hn, 1954; Au jardin, (rec, pf)/(pf 4 hands), 1956; Sonatina, pf 4 hands, 1956; Sonatina, 2 vc, 1956; Toccata, carillon, 1957; Canzon alla capriccio, ob, bn, pf, 1958; Serenade, ww, perc, pf, 1959; Sonata, fl, 1961; Sonatina, 2 vn, 1961; Sonata, fl, 1965; Musica Sacra I, 2 vn, va, org, 1966, orchd; Sonatina, rec, pf, 1967; Musica Sacra II, fl, vc, pf, 1968, orchd 1971; Sonata, vn, 1968; Qnt, mand, b cl, perc, org, pf, 1969; Suite alla francese, pf, 1969; Alba communis, pf, 1973; Musica Sacra III, cl, vn, pf, 1974–5, orchd; Qt, rec, sax, vn, elec org, 1982; Sonatina, vn, pf, 1982; Monumentum, a sax, pf, 1983; Qt, 4 cl, 1984; Str Trio, 1987; Divertimento, fl, ob, cl, 1988; Per aspera ad astra, insts, 1993

31-TONE MUSIC

8 Pieces for 31-Tone Org, 1948; Musica per organo trentunisono I, nos.1–5, org, insts, 1951; Musica per organo trentunisono II, org, 1957; Conc., trbn, vn, vc, 1961

Principal publishers: Donemus, Harmonia

BIBLIOGRAPHY

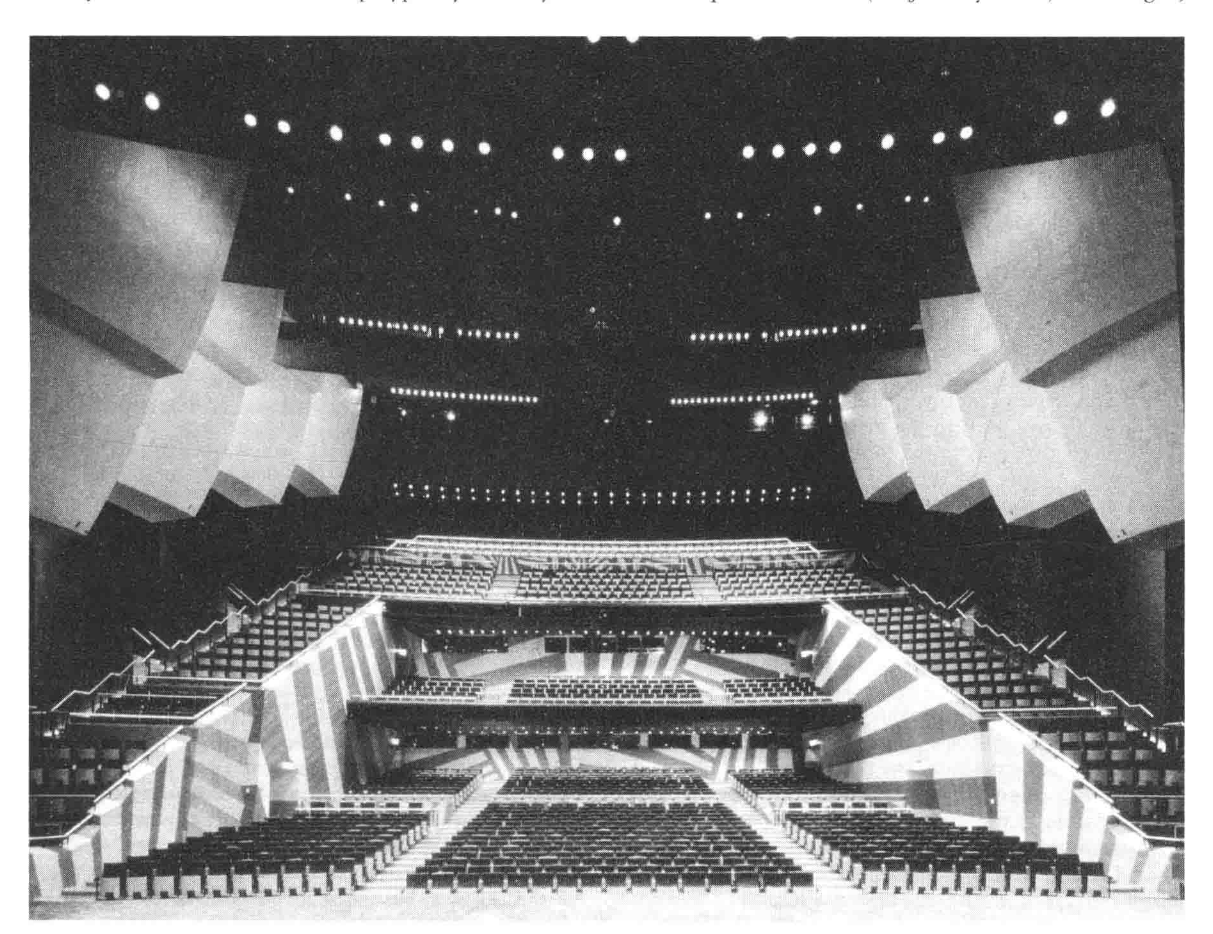
J. Kasander: 'Jan van Dijk (de altijd en overal actieve) 65 jaar', Mens en melodie, xxxviii (1983), 209–11

HARRISON RYKER

Dijon. Capital City of the Côte-d'Or, historically the principal city of BURGUNDY, France.

1. History. 2. Churches and sacred music. 3. Secular music.

1. HISTORY. The city was founded by the Romans as a military fortress, became the site of the Benedictine abbey of St Bénigne in the 6th century, came under the jurisdiction of the bishops of Langres in the 9th century, and in 1015 was ceded to the dukes of Burgundy of the house of Capet.



Under the Valois dukes of Burgundy (1364–1477) Dijon became one of the artistically important French provincial cities. The dukes attracted minstrels to their court, patronized native performers and supported the musical institutions of the local churches, particularly the choir of the Ste Chapelle. After the death of Charles the Bold in 1477 and the resulting annexation of the duchy to the French crown lands, the capital of Burgundy experienced two centuries of artistic decline, until the expansionist reign of Louis XIV when it enjoyed an economic and cultural revival. After the Revolution there was again a renewed growth of musical life which continued throughout the 19th century.

2. CHURCHES AND SACRED MUSIC. The musical life of the town was dominated during the 11th, 12th and 13th centuries by ecclesiastical institutions, St Bénigne being an important centre for teaching Gregorian chant and compiling plainsong manuscripts. Guillaume de Dijon (de Fécamp, de Volpiano; d 1031), 39th abbot of this monastery, 'so corrected and perfected the singing of antiphons, responsories and hymns that nowhere in the realm of the Roman church could chant be heard sung more correctly'. Eight Marian antiphons for Matins of the Assumption have been attributed to him. The famous Montpellier antiphonal (F-MOf H159), written in both neumatic and alphabetic notation, was copied at St Bénigne in the 11th century. The Ste Chapelle was founded in 1172 as a collegiate church for the Capetian dukes of Burgundy and received additional endowments from the Valois dukes during the 14th and 15th centuries. Philip the Bold gave six livres to the choirboys of St Etienne and of the Ste Chapelle, and to several minstrels who sang and played before him on Christmas Day 1371. In 1425 Duke Philip the Good endowed the Ste Chapelle to support four choirboys and a master who was 'to teach them the art of music including singing, counterpoint and discant'. In 1432 the Ste Chapelle became the chapel of the Order of the Golden Fleece, which established a weekly round of votive masses in polyphony in that year and engaged four singers 'well versed in the art of music' in the next. Between about 1438 and 1446 Philip's physician and astrologer, Henri Arnaut de Zwolle, a resident of Dijon, compiled the earliest treatise to describe in detail the construction of the harpischord, clavichord, organ and lute (F-Pn lat.7295).

In the mid-16th century the choirmaster of the Ste Chapelle was the composer and lutenist Richard de Renvoisy who was burnt at the stake for sodomy in 1586. A contract signed by Claude Derey (1670–1714) in 1691 shows that in that year the choirmaster was to compose '12 masses, motets, hymns or psalms for the major feast days of the year and 15 for ferial days'. He was also to instruct the choirboys in singing, plainsong, counterpoint, sight-reading and composition, and was encouraged to present one public concert each week.

When Dijon was made a bishopric in 1731 the ancient abbey of St Etienne, which had possessed a singing school (maîtrise) since the 14th century and an organ since the early 15th century, became the cathedral. Claude Rameau and the composer Claude Balbastre (1729–99) served successively as organists there from 1737 until 1750. The Swabian organ builder Karl Joseph Riepp (1710–75) settled at Dijon in about 1735 and installed a magnificent case at St Bénigne. The Revolution was a disaster for the Dijon churches: the chapters were dissolved, the choirs and singing schools disbanded, and the church organs sold at public auction (23 January 1793). St Bénigne, which became the cathedral of Dijon in 1801, reinstituted its singing school in 1810. It has 100 enrolled choristers and is one of the major choir schools in France.

Auditorium de Dijon (opened 1998) by architects Arquitectonica, Miami and Paris, with Artec Consultants Inc., New York

3. Secular music. Chansons and chanson texts by the 13th-century trouvères Guiot de Dijon and Jocelin de Dijon show that secular music was heard in the town in the Middle Ages. In the late Middle Ages the magistrates of Dijon employed a band of shawm players each evening during Advent to perform the dorauo, to sound their instruments while parading through the streets. This tradition was supplanted during the 16th century by the activities of the Mère-folle, a guild devoted to buffoonery whose members danced, sang, clowned and processed in town on holidays. After witnessing operatic productions by touring companies during the late 17th century, in 1717 the town council rented a local hall, the Tripot des Barres, installing a stage and billiard room; the stage became the first municipal theatre. In subsequent years companies from Paris were engaged to perform opéras comiques by Favart, Mouret, Rousseau, Duni, Philidor, Monsigny, Gossec, Grétry and others. Much of the music heard in Dijon in the early 18th century was provided by members of the Rameau family. Jean Rameau (d 1714), father of the composer and theorist, served successively as organist at St Michel, St Bénigne, St Etienne and Notre Dame. Jean-Philippe Rameau, born and educated in Dijon, was organist at Notre Dame in 1709; his younger brother Claude (d 1761) worked variously as organist at St Bénigne, the Ste Chapelle, Notre Dame and St Etienne, and in 1725 founded the Académie de Musique; serious operas, including Rameau's Hippolyte et Aricie (May 1734), and public concerts were performed under its aegis (to 1738), and later in the 18th century by the Concerts des Amateurs and the Société Dramatique d'Amateurs. Mozart, his sister Nannerl and father Leopold visited Dijon for 15 days in July 1766 and played in the old Hôtel de Ville. The accompanying performers, five violins, one viola, three cellos, two oboes and one bassoon, proved less than satisfactory; Leopold's evaluation of each of them varied from 'mediocre' to 'miserable'.

During the Revolution patriotic hymns, marches and songs replaced theatre productions and concert pieces as the musical staple of the town. The current Grand Théâtre (cap. *c*1000) was built to the plans of a local architect, Jacques Cellerier, next to the former palace of the dukes of Burgundy (now the Préfecture); building work was begun in 1810 but, owing to the political situation, not completed until 1828. Audiences there heard the standard operatic repertory during the 19th century and, in 1907, a production of Rameau's Dardanus directed by d'Indy. The Société Philharmonique (1832–50) gave 104 concerts there, Liszt and Thalberg gave recitals during the 1840s, and the Société Chorale (established 1870) performed works by Handel, Beethoven, Berlioz, Rossini and Gounod during the 1870s and 1880s. Performances by the Opéra de Dijon and the Orchestre de la Société des Concerts du Conservatoire have continued regularly since the mid-19th century. In the 1990s the opera company was the last in France to be run by an impresario under the concession system, with a municipal subsidy.

The Dijon Conservatoire, founded in 1869, offers courses in practical and theoretical music. The Bibliothèque Publique, situated next to the Conservatoire, has a rich collection of monastic manuscripts and incunabula, and two important 15th-century music manuscripts, MS 517 (the Dijon chansonnier; see Sources, ms, §IX, 8) and the fragmentary MS 2837, both of which may have emanated from the court of the dukes of Burgundy.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveO (C. Pitt); MGG2 (J. Gribenski)
C. Poisot: Essai sur les musiciens bourguignons (Dijon, 1854)
J. d'Arbaumont: Essai historique sur la Sainte-Chapelle (Dijon, 1863)
C. Rossignol and others, eds.: Inventaire sommaire des archives départementales de la Côte-d'Or (Dijon, 1863–1950)
L. de Gouvenain: Le théâtre à Dijon, 1422–1790 (Dijon, 1888)
P. Milsand: Notes et documents pour servir à l'histoire du théâtre de Dijon (Dijon, 1888)
J. Bresson: Histoire de l'église de Notre-Dame de Dijon(Dijon, 1891)
H. Chabeuf: Dijon: monuments et souvenirs (Dijon, 1894)
H. Chabeuf: Dijon à travers les âges (Dijon, 1897)
R. Garraud: Histoire de la maîtrise de la cathédrale de Dijon depuis le Concordat (Dijon, 1899)
B. Prost: Inventaires mobiliers et extraits des comptes des ducs de Bourgogne de la maison de Valois, 1363–1477 (Paris, 1902–13)
H. Chabeuf: 'Mozart à l'ancien Hôtel de ville de Dijon', Mémoires de l'Académie des sciences, arts et belles-lettres de Dijon (1903–4), pp.liii–lvi
E. Bélin: La Société chorale de Dijon de 1870 à 1900(Dijon, 1905)
L. Vallas: 'Dardanus à Dijon', Revue musicale de Lyon, v (1907), 297–301
E. Fyot: 'La maîtrise de la Sainte-Chapelle à Dijon', Revue de Bourgogne, viii (1920), 36–52
Bulletin de la Société Palestrina: Dijon (Dijon, 1920–39)
A. Cornereau: 'La première salle de spectacles de Dijon', Mémoires de l'Académie des sciences, arts et belles-lettres de Dijon (1923), 289–304
J. Chantavoine: 'Note sur le séjour de Mozart à Dijon', Revue de Bourgogne (1926), 722–3
E. Fyot: 'Mozart à Dijon', Mémoires de l'Académie des sciences, arts et belles-lettres de Dijon (1937), 23–7
R. Thiblot: 'Le séjour de Mozart à Dijon en 1766', ibid., 139–43
J. Marix: Histoire de la musique et des musiciens de la cour de Bourgogne sous le règne de Philippe le Bon (Strasbourg, 1939/R)
J. Gardien: L'orgue et les organistes en Bourgogne et en Franche-Comté au dix-huitième siècle (Paris, 1943)
M. Huglo: 'Le tonaire de Saint-Bénigne de Dijon (Montpellier H. 159)', AnnM, iv (1956), 7–18
D. Plamenac, ed.: Dijon, Bibliothèque publique, manuscrit 517, Publications of Mediaeval Musical Manuscripts, xii (Brooklyn, NY, 1970)
M. Lefevre: 'La musique sacrée et la maîtrise de la cathédrale de Dijon', Mémoires de l'Académie de Dijon, cxxii (1973–5), 353–62
C. Wright: 'A Fragmentary Manuscript of Early 15th-Century Music in Dijon', JAMS, xxvii (1974), 306–15
C. Wright: Music at the Court of Burgundy, 1364–1419: a Documentary History (Henryville, PA, 1979)
W.F. Prizer: 'Music and Ceremonial in the Low Countries: Philip the Fair and the Order of the Golden Fleece', EMH, v (1985), 113–53
A.E. Planchart: 'Guillaume Du Fay's Benefices and his Relationship to the Court of Burgundy', EMH, viii (1988), 117–71
M. Degroise and others, eds.: Mozart: le musicien voyageur, Palais des Etats, Salle des Etats de Bourgogne, 8–20 Nov 1991; Bureau des Elus de Bourgogne, 23 Nov 1991 – 1 Jan 1992 (Dijon, 1991) [exhibition catalogue]
B. Haggh: 'The Archives of the Order of the Golden Fleece and Music', JRMA, cxx (1995), 1–43

CRAIG WRIGHT/BARBARA H. HAGGH

Diktonius, Elmer (Rafael) (b Helsinki, 20 Jan 1896; d Nikkilä, 23 Sept 1961). Finnish poet, critic and composer. He studied composition with Furuhjelm and Melartin at the Helsinki Music Institute (1915–20). His début as a composer was at a students' concert in spring 1917 with a piano suite, described by a critic as 'extremely daring harmonically'. Critical reaction was frankly hostile after another concert (4 May 1920) when six songs by Diktonius were performed after much trouble with the musicians. The rigid conservatism of Finnish musical life led Diktonius to approach Schoenberg with a view to becoming a pupil, but Schoenberg declined, replying in a letter that he too was conservative. Diktonius found release in a poem published in his collection Hårda sånger ('Hard songs') beginning:

> One spring I went out into the world > to polish off Skryabin > send that ninny Debussy sprawling > rap the knuckles of Schoenberg

The harmony of Diktonius's songs is not very adventurous, but it is well suited to the Expressionist force of the texts. Partly as a result of the reception accorded his songs, he abandoned composition for poetry (often with musical themes, forms or metaphors) and criticism.

WRITINGS

Hårda sånger [Hard songs] (Helsinki, 1922) [verse]
Stark men mörk [Strong but dark] (Helsinki, 1930) [verse]
Opus 12 (Helsinki, 1933) [collection of criticism pubd in Arbeitarbladet and Nya argus; repr. in Meningar [Opinions], ed. O. Enckell (Helsinki, 1957)]
Gras och granit [Grass and granite] (Helsinki, 1936) [verse]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

O. Enckell: Den unge Diktonius (Helsinki, 1946)
M. Vainio: Diktonius: modernisti ja säveltäjä [Diktonius: a modernist and a composer] (Helsinki, 1976)

ERIK WAHLSTRÖM

Dīkṣitar, Muttusvāmi (b Tiruvarur, Tamil Nadu, 24 March 1776; d Ettayapuram, Tamil Nadu, 21 October 1835). South Indian composer and musician. He was a member of the Karnatak trimūrti ('trinity') of singer-saints (see also TYĀGARĀJA and ŚYĀMA ŚĀSTRI). Unlike the other two composers of the 'trinity', Muttusvāmi Dīkṣitar was born into a musical family. While he was still young his parents took him to Manali, an estate outside Madras, where his father, Rāmasvāmi Dīkṣitar, had been asked to perform. It was there that Muttusvāmi received his first training in vīṇā and vocal music from his father. At the age of 15 he accompanied a yogī on a pilgrimage to Varanasi, where he remained for five years. This period in the North is said to account for his long and serious compositions, which may be influenced by dhrupad. He is known as a bhakta of Devi and Subrahmanya, whose darśan as an old man inspired his first kriti 'Śrī nātadhi guruguha' in rāga Māyāmāḷavagauḷa (from which he took his mudrā, 'signature'). Like the other two members of the 'trinity' he refused to sing at court and, on occasion, he lived in poverty. His two brothers were also accomplished musicians, and the youngest, Balasvāmi Dīkṣitar, was the first to use the Western violin to perform Karnatak music. The musicologist Subbarāma Dīkṣitar, author of the Saṅgīta-sampradāya-pradarśinī, was the grandson of the second brother, Ciṇṇasvāmi.

Whereas Tyāgarāja's and Śyāma Śāstri's compositions were largely in Telugu, Muttusvāmi Dīkṣitar is noted for his Sanskrit texts. He composed at least 600 pieces, most of them kriti, and like Tyāgarāja used a great many different rāga. His frequent use of ornamentation, corresponding to that of the vīṇā, shows the influence of his early training on the instrument. Muttusvāmi Dīkṣitār's kriti display a virtuoso grasp of rāga, and two of them are famous as rāgamālikā, one containing 10, the other 14, sequences of different rāga. Other outstanding compositions include: the sequence of nine kriti, Navagraha, one to each of the nine planets; the group of 11 kriti known as Kamalāmbā navāvaraṇam, in praise of the goddess; and his eight kriti in praise of Śrī Tyāgarājasvāmi, sung at the temple in Tiruvarur.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Sambamurthy: Great Composers, i (Madras, 1962)
The Music Academy, Madras: Sri Muttuswami Dikshitar Bi-Centenary Conference [49th Conference Souvenir, 1975]
T.S. Parthasarathy, ed.: The Musical Heritage of Sri Muthuswami Dikshitar (Bombay and Baroda, 1976/R)

MARIA LORD

Diletsky [Dilezki], Nikolay [Nikolai] (Pavlovich) [Dylecki, Mikołaj] (d Moscow, after 1680). Ukrainian theorist and composer, active in Russia. He studied in Vilnius, where in 1675 he published Toga złota ('The golden toga'); now lost, it was probably a panegyrical pamphlet. He may have been associated with the important Jesuit academy in the city; the pamphlet, however, was published by the Franciscan press in Vilnius. He lived for some time in Smolensk, and then in Moscow. His compositions, which survive in collections in Ukraine and Russia (mainly in RUS-Mm), include four- and eight-part settings of the Divine Liturgy, an eight-part setting of the Easter kanōn and other liturgical works (some ed. N.O. Gerasimova-Persids'ka, Mikola Dilets'ky: Khorovi tvori [Diletsky: Choral works], Kiev, 1981).

Diletsky's Ukrainian origins are known through a brief remark by the theorist I.T. Korenev, who described him as a 'resident of the city of Kiev'; the two theorists appear to have worked together and their treatises are often paired in manuscript sources. Diletsky apparently moved from Ukraine to Vilnius, where his Toga złota was published. The work, now lost, was probably a panegyrical pamphlet. Diletsky may have been associated with the important Jesuit academy in Vilnius, although the pamphlet was published at the city's Franciscan press. Other biographical information comes from the three preserved versions of his theoretical treatise: Grammatika musikiyskago peniya ('A grammar of musical song' (Smolensk 1677)); Idea grammatiki musikiyskoy ('An idea of musical gramma' (Moscow, 1679)) and another version from Moscow, extant in variants from 1679 and 1681, Grammatika peniya musikiyskago ('A grammar of musical song'). These texts are in Russian; Diletsky apparently wrote a version of his treatise in Polish while in Vilnius although no source survives. Apart from the evidence of the treatise itself no independant data has been found on Diletsky's career in Moscow and it is often assumed that he died soon after completing the third version of his treatise in 1681. One of the later sources preserving the Grammatika is a Ukrainian-language version (based on the Smolensk text) written in St Petersburg in 1723. Some scholars suggest that this is an autograph source, pointing out that it is written in what was apparently Diletsky's native language; they interpret several passages as indicating that Diletsky was alive at the time the source was written and they note that the signature 'Mikolai Diletskii' is followed by a mark which they decipher as 'M' (manu propria). They therefore propose a much later date for Diletsky's death. Other scholars interpret the evidence differently, pointing to the many errors in the text (unlikely if this source is indeed an autograph), and noting that passages suggesting that the author was still living also appear in much later sources. They suggest that the 'MP' sign might also be interpreted as 'T' (in Cyrillic), indicating simply tvorets (author). Although it seems reasonable that Diletsky, along with many other Ukrainian singers, might have found a place in St Petersburg in the early 18th century, it is impossible to resolve this issue without a thorough archival investigation, a procedure no one has yet undertaken.

The Grammatika is a composition treatise, an introduction of the kontsert style to Russian-speaking students by an early master of kontsertï (polyphonic a cappella works created by means of a subtle interplay between contrasting elements such as rhythms, meter and texture, and unified by interwoven melodic and harmonic material). Diletsky's treatise uses hexachordal terminology and constructs to introduce the fundamentals of music, and teaches composition through a series of rules exploring the elements of the style. He provides many examples, citing his own works as well as those of other Russian and Polish composers, including Marcin Mielczewski and Jacek Różycki. One of his constructs is called a musical circle, in which a melody might pass through each of the major or minor keys at the interval of a 5th; it is introduced as a way of lengthening a composition and is presented on a circular staff. This is the first circle of fifths to appear in a theoretical treatise, antedating Western examples by several decades.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

S.V. Smolensky, ed.: Musikiyskaya grammatika Nikolaya Diletskogo, Obshchestvo lyubiteley drevney pis'mennosti, Izdaniya, cxxviii (St Petersburg, 1910)

V.V. Protopopov: 'Nikolay Diletskiy i yego russkiye sovremenniki' [Diletsky and his Russian contemporaries], SovM (1973), no.12, 82–93

O.S. Tsalay-Yakimenko, ed.: Mikola Dilets'ky: Gramatika muzikal'na: fotokopiya rukopisu 1723 roku [Diletsky: Musical Grammar: a facsimile of the manuscript of 1723] (Kiev, 1970)

V.V. Protopopov: 'K 300-letiyu Musikiyskoy Grammatiki Nikolaya Diletskogo' [On the 300th anniversary of Diletsky's Musical Grammar], SovM (1978), no.1, 102–7

V.V. Protopopov, ed.: Nikolay Diletskiy: idea grammatiki musikiyskoy, Pamyatniki russkogo muzïkal'nogo iskusstva, vii (Moscow, 1979)

Yu.V. Keldïsh: Istoriya russkoy muzïki, i: Drevnyaya Rus' XI–XVII veka [History of Russian music, i: Ancient Rus', 11th–17th centuries] (Moscow, 1983)

V.V. Protopopov: Russkaya mïsl' o muzïke v XVII veke [Russian thought about music in the 17th century] (Moscow, 1989)

C.R. Jensen: Nikolai Diletskii's 'Grammatika' (Grammar) and the Musical Culture of Seventeenth-Century Muscovy (diss., Princeton U., 1987)

C.R. Jensen: 'A Theoretical Work of Late Seventeenth-Century Muscovy: Nikolai Diletskii's Grammatika and the Earliest Circle of Fifths', JAMS, xviii (1992), 305–31

CLAUDIA R. JENSEN

Dille, Denijs (b Aarschot, 21 Feb 1904). Belgian musicologist. After studying philosophy and theology at Mechelen Seminary, he taught at Mol College, near Antwerp (1928–36), and at the Antwerp teachers' training college until 1961. Concurrently he undertook research in Romance philology and musicology, concentrating on contemporary music, particularly that of Bartók, whom he knew personally, and giving regular lectures on Belgian Radio. From 1961 until his retirement in 1971 he was director of the Bartók Archives, founded in Budapest (1961). In this capacity he did important work on Bartók's biography and on the source materials and publication of his early works; he also edited the series Documenta Bartókiana (1964–70) and a number of his early compositions including the Scherzo for orchestra and piano (1904), Kossuth (1903), the Violin Sonata (1903) and two volumes of early songs and piano pieces (Der junge Bartók, Mainz and Budapest, 1963–5).

WRITINGS

Béla Bartók (Antwerp, 1939)

Béla Bartók (Brussels, 1947)

'Les problèmes des recherches sur Bartók', Liszt-Bartók: Budapest 1961, 415–23

ed.: B. Bartók: Ethnomusikologische Schriften, i: Das ungarische Volkslied (Budapest, 1965); ii: Volksmusik der Rumänen von Maramures (Budapest, 1966); iii: Rumänische Volkslieder aus dem Komitat Bihar (Budapest, 1967); iv: Melodien der rumänischen Colinde (Weihnachtslieder) (Budapest, 1968) [facs. edn]

'Bartók, lecteur de Nietzsche et de La Rochefoucauld', SMH, x (1968), 209–28

'Bartók és Kodály első talalkozása' [The first meeting of Bartók and Kodály], Szabolcsi Bence 70. születésnapjára, ed. F. Bónis (Budapest, 1969), 317–22

'Bartókov pobyt v Grlici a jeho objavenie l'udovej piesne' [Bartók's stay at Grlica and his discovery of folksong], SH, xiii (1969), 116–21

Béla Barók (Antwerp, 1974)

Thematisches Verzeichnis der Jugendwerke Béla Bartóks (Kassel, 1974)

Généalogie sommaire de la famille Bartók (Antwerp, 1977)

Het werk van Béla Bartók (Antwerp, 1979)

Béla Bartók: regard sur le passé (Namur, 1990)

JÁNOS KÁRPÁTI/SYLVIE JANSSENS

Dilliger [Dillinger], Johann (b Eisfeld, Franconia, 30 Nov 1593; d Coburg, 28 Aug 1647). German composer, publisher and editor. He received his early academic and musical training at the Lateinschule in Eisfeld. When his formal studies were over he went, after a short stay in Naumburg, to Magdeburg, where he apparently became a student of Michael Praetorius from 1611 to 1616, as is indicated by an entry that Praetorius made in 1616 in an album kept by Dilliger (D-Cl M.49). The album also contains inscriptions by many local musicians, ministers and public officials that provide clues to the diversity of talent and widespread musical activity in Magdeburg at the time. Dilliger next moved to Wittenberg, in 1618, and matriculated at the university to study theology. He married following his appointment as Kantor at the Haupt- und Schlosskirche later that year. In 1623 he was granted the degree of Magister. Two years later he accepted a post as Kantor in Coburg, the city that became his home. The years 1625–33 were musically the most productive of his life, yielding some 30 collections, but in 1633 he entered the ministry. (His largest work, Thesaurus musicus novus, a collection of 136 pieces, had been lost in the destruction of Magdeburg in 1631 in the Thirty Years War.)

Dilliger's years in Coburg were filled with cares and sorrow. Devastation, famine and plague ravaged the land; death invaded his home, claiming his mother in 1635 and his wife Margaretha in 1641. But despite frequent severe illness he remained active in the ministry up to the final year of his life. Details of his life are summarized in the funeral address delivered by Archdeacon Georg Pfrüscher at his memorial service on 1 September 1647 and printed in Coburg in the same year.

Dilliger composed only sacred vocal works, but they exhibit the major musical trends in the Germany of his day: choral music for trained singers with and without accompaniment, and congregational song. They include over 100 contrapuntal motets, many based on chorales (some polychoral, showing the influence of Hieronymus Praetorius), some 200 homophonic songs for four and five voices and italianate concertos with affective text-setting for up to six voices with continuo. Dilliger wrote all these types of music up to 1633, but then, after his change from musician to minister, he concentrated on devotional songs for the layman.

Like similar works by Schein, Dilliger's motets for two and three voices form a bridge between the 16th-century contrapuntal style and the newer instrumentally accompanied vocal concerto in having the lowest voice simultaneously texted and figured. But he is most modern in his concertos, which demonstrate a keen interest in the stile nuovo, reflected also in the number of compositions by Italian composers that he included in his publications.

WORKS

COLLECTIONS CONTAINING ONLY WORKS BY DILLIGER published in Coburg

Musica votiva, Deo sacra, de Tempore, 18 pieces (16 Ger., 2 Lat.), 2–5vv, insts (1622)
Musica christiana cordialis domestica, 2–4vv (1630)
Musica poenitentiaria et consolatoris, 20 pieces, 3–5, 7, 8vv (1630)
Musica oratoria et laudatoris oder Bet- und Lobmusica, 30 pieces, 3–5vv (1630)
Musica Thanatobuleutica et excitatoria, 41 pieces, 3–6, 8vv (1631)
Flores musicales, sive musica ad epulum coeleste invitatoria, 48 pieces, 2–6vv (1631, 2/1633 as Musica invitatoria ad opulum coeleste, lost)
Musica christiana castrensis, 22 pieces, 4vv (1632)
Musica christiana rastrensis, 13 pieces, 1 of them by G. Finette adapted by Dilliger, 2–4vv (1633)
Prodromus musicae christianae scholasticae & academicae, 7 pieces, 4, 5vv (1633)
Jeremias poenitentiarius in 52 deutschen Busssprüchen, 2vv (1640), lost
Musica christiana valedictoria, 26 pieces, 3vv (1642), lost

COLLECTIONS INCLUDING WORKS BY OTHER COMPOSERS titles of individual compositions contained in the collections are given in Thümmler

Decas I. prodromi triciniorum sacrorum sive neue geistliche Liedlein, 3vv (Wittenberg, 1621), lost
11 pieces certainly and 5 others possibly by Dilliger, 3vv, in Decas triciniorum sacrorum altera, … sequuntur Concerti aliquot sacri clariss (Wittenberg, 1622), lost
9 pieces in Triciniorum sacrorum decas tertia (Magdeburg, 1623), lost
3 pieces in D.O.M.A. Exercitatio musica I, continens XIII selectissimos concertos (Magdeburg, 1624), lost
36 pieces, 2–4vv, bc (org), in Neues geistliches musicalisches Lustgärtlein … Concerten und Lobgesänglein (Coburg, 1626)
7 pieces, 1–6vv, insts, bc (org) in Musica concertiva (Coburg, 1632)

OTHER

Over 40 pieces in a variety of styles (polychoral, motets and devotional songs, 4–8vv, and concertos) composed for specific occasions: civic and academic functions, engagements, weddings, birthdays, seasonal church festivals and particularly funerals [detailed lists given by Adrio (MGG1), Eby and Thümmler]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (A. Adrio)
J.W. Krauss, ed.: Beyträge zur Erläuterung der Hochfürstl. Sachsen-Hildburghäusischen Kirchen-, Schul- und Landes-Historie (Greitz, 1750)
W. Gurlitt: Michael Praetorius (Creuzbergensis): sein Leben und seine Werke (Leipzig, 1915/R)
A. Adrio: Die Anfänge des geistlichen Konzerts (Berlin, 1935)
F. Peters-Marquardt: 'Johann Dilliger aus Eisfeld in Franken ("I.D.E.F.") als Chorpräfekt in Magdeburg von 1611 bis 1618', ZfM, Jg.104 (1937), 770–71
O. Riemer: Musik und Musiker in Magdeburg (Magdeburg, 1937)
H. Thümmler: Johann Dilliger (1593–1647), Kantor in Wittenberg und Coburg (diss., U. of Halle, 1941)
O. Wessely: 'Ein unbekannter Kasualgesang von Johann Dilliger', Mf, viii (1955), 320–22
G. Kirchner: Der Generalbass bei Heinrich Schütz (Kassel, 1960)
L.U. Abraham: Der Generalbass im Schaffen des Michael Praetorius und seine harmonischen Voraussetzungen (Berlin, 1961)
E. Gessner: Samuel Scheidts geistliche Konzerte: ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der Gattung (Berlin, 1961)
D. Krickeberg: Das protestantische Kantorat im 17. Jahrhundert (Berlin, 1965)
M. Eby: The Concerted Vocal Style in the Music of Johann Dilliger, 1593–1647 (diss., U. of Michigan, 1967) [contains edn of 8 vocal concs. by Dilliger]

MARGARETTE FINK EBY

Dillon, Fannie Charles (b Denver, CO, 16 March 1881; d Altadena, CA, 21 Feb 1947). American composer, pianist and teacher. After graduating from Pomona College, Claremont, California, she moved to Berlin where she studied the piano with Godowsky (1900–06) and composition with Kaun and Heinrich Urban; she later studied composition with Goldmark in New York. Dillon made her début as a pianist in Los Angeles in 1908 and subsequently gave concerts on the West and East coasts of the USA. On 9 February 1918 she played her own works at a piano recital for the Beethoven Society of New York. She was a member of the music faculty at Pomona College (1910–13) and from 1918 until her retirement in 1941 taught in Los Angeles public schools. In 1921, 1923 and 1933 she was in residence at the MacDowell Colony.

The musical language of Dillon's early works (chiefly piano music) owes much to late 19th-century Romanticism, but by the time of her Eight Descriptive Pieces (1917) her style had become more pictorial: the pieces are freer in form and Impressionist in character, with descriptive titles and texts. Dillon also wrote music for plays that were performed at the Woodland Theater she founded in Big Bear Lake, California.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Celebration of Victory, 1918; The Cloud, 1918; The Alps, 1920; A Western Saga, pf conc., 1945; In a Mission Garden; A Letter from the Southland
Pf: 6 Preludes (1908); 8 Descriptive Pieces (1917); Heroic Etude (1917); Bird Stories in Music (1922); Songs of the Seven Hills (1927); From the Chinese (1944)
Solo inst: Woodland Flute Call, fl (1953); A Medieval Minstrelsy (suite), pipe org
1v, pf: The Message of the Bells (1917); An April Day (1949); Saul (R. Browning)
Incid. music for pf: Prince Su Ming (W. Fao), 1935; Nevertheless: Old Glory!; Tahquitz (G. Holme: The Desert Play of Palm Springs, rev. Whiting and D. Belasco); The Desert Calls

BIBLIOGRAPHY

'California's Brilliant Composer-Pianist, Fannie Dillon', Musical Courier (16 Nov 1916), 45 only

CAROL NEULS-BATES

Dillon, James (b Glasgow, 29 Oct 1950). Scottish composer. His early musical experience involved pipe bands, and in his teens, rock bands. Apart from brief music studies at Keele University, and a year studying North Indian music, he is basically self-taught; greater stimulation came from tertiary studies of acoustics and linguistics, as well as private investigations of ancient hermetic philosophical and numerological traditions, reflected in an early group of vocal pieces setting Hebrew texts.

Dillon's inclusion at the beginning of the 1980s in the group of young composers associated with 'new complexity' was in many respects an accident of circumstance. The involved, meticulous rhythmic notation of their early works, the continuous textures, the technical demands, and even the performers associated with them suggested a common purpose which in reality had more to do with their distance from other British music of the period. However, Dillon's music had a mixture of ruggedness (... Once Upon a Time) and glittering nocturnal sensuality (Zone (... de azul)) which set him apart from other members of the group, and his approach to musical form had more in common with Varèse's (and Xenakis's) concept of sound-masses in a continual state of evolution than with the post-serial structuralism typical of the 'complexists'.

In the mid-1980s Dillon was attracted to aspects of the Parisian 'spectralist' movement (Grisey, Radulescu and others); in works such as Windows and Canopies, Überschreiten and helle Nacht, the harmony is extrapolated from the overtones of very low fundamentals. The ideas and images underlying these pieces, whether drawn from literature (Hölderlin, Rilke, Borges), nature, or the physical sciences, typically involve paradoxes (e.g. 'bright night') and polarities (opacity and transparency, or regularity and irregularity) which collide or interact to create broad formal processes.

The organization of works into sets and cycles is clearly important to Dillon (the 'German triptych' of Überschreiten, Blitzschlag and helle Nacht being an important example), though many major chamber works, including two string quartets and two works for string trio, are 'free-standing'. During the 1980s and early 1990s, Dillon's output was dominated by work on Nine Rivers, a 2½-hour cycle of nine pieces for very divergent forces including, in the later pieces, live electronics. The first eight, 'tributary' parts (all performable separately) finally converge in Oceanos, a highly impressive work which combines the forces of all the preceding pieces. Other works of the decade, notably the cycle L'évolution du vol, are more eclectic in style, while retaining the same creative preoccupations.

WORKS

† – included in Nine Rivers cycle

Orch: Überschreiten, chbr orch, 1986; Windows and Canopies, chbr orch, 1985, helle Nacht, 1987; Blitzschlag, fl, orch, 1988–96; ignis noster, 1992

Chbr: ...Once Upon a Time, a fl + pic, ob + eng hn, cl, bn, hn, tpt, trbn, db, 1980; East 11th St. NY 10003, 6 perc, 1982†; Zone (...de azul), cl, hn, tpt, pf, vn, va, vc, 1983; Le rivage, wind qnt, 1984; Str Qt, 1983; L'ECRAN parfum, 6 vn, 3 perc, 1988†; La femme invisible, fl + pic, a fl + b fl, ob, eng hn + ob, cl, b cl, 2 s sax, 3 perc, pf, 1989†; L'oeuvre au noir, b fl + a fl + pic, bn, t trbn + b trbn, 2 perc, hp, 2 vc, db, live elecs, 1990†; éileadh sguaibe, 2 hn, 2 tpt, t trbn + b trbn, b trbn, tuba, live elecs, 1990†; Introitus, 6 vn, 2 va, 2 vc, 2 db, tape, live elecs, 1990†; Str Qt no.2, 1991; Str Trio, 1991; Lumen naturae, str trio, 1992; Vernal Showers, vn, fl + pic + a fl, ob, perc, hpd, hp, mand, gui, va, vc, db, 1992; Redemption, cl, vn, pf, 1995; Todesengel, cl, vib, 1996

Vocal: Who do you love, 1v, fl + pic + b fl, cl, perc, vn + va, vc, 1980; Evening Rain, 1v, 1981; A Roaring Flame, female v, db, 1982; Come live with me, female v, fl + pic + a fl, ob + ob d'amour + eng hn, perc, pf, 1982; Time Lag Zero, female v, va, 1982; L'évolution du vol, female v, E♭-cl + b cl + cb cl, 2 perc, pf + hmn, db, 1993; Temp'est, female v, chbr orch, 1994; Viriditas, 4 S, 4 A, 4 T, 4 B, 1994†; Oceanos, 16 vv, orch, 1996†

Solo inst: Dillug-Kefitsah, pf, 1976; Crossing Over, cl, 1978; Ti.re-Ti.ke-Dha, perc, 1979; Spleen, pf, 1980; Parjanya-Vata, vc, 1981; Sgothan, fl, 1984; Diffraction, pic, 1984; Birl, hpd, 1986; Shrouded Mirrors, gui, 1988; Del cuarto elemento, vn, 1988; La coupure, perc, live elecs, 1989–97†; Siorram, va, 1992; black/nebulae, 2 pf, 1995; Traumwerk, 2 vn, 1995; The Book of Elements, i, pf, 1997

Principal publishers: C.F. Peters

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Wright: 'James Dillon', Contact, no.24 (1982), 20–23
J. Dillon: 'Les instruments spéculatifs', Le timbre, métaphore pour la composition: Paris 1985, 282–92
R. Toop: 'Four Facets of "The New Complexity"', Contact, no.32 (1988), 4–50
M. Alexander: 'The Changing States of James Dillon', CMR, xiii/1 (1995), 65–84

RICHARD TOOP

Di Lorenzo, Mariano (fl Noto, 1602–34). Italian composer. He was a priest and a canon, and was maestro di cappella of the city of Noto between 1611 and 1625. Rocco Pirri (Sicilia sacra, iii (Palermo, 1638), 256) stated that he had published many compositions, but Antonio Mongitore knew of only three publications, two of which are now lost, and one that is incomplete. The latter contains a missa brevis, nine psalms, a Magnificat, intonations in falsobordone on the eight psalm tones and the Te Deum intonation in falsobordone in the eighth tone.

WORKS

Primo libro di madrigali, 5 vv, con un dialogo a otto (Venice, 1602), lost, mentioned by Mongitore

1 madrigal, in Infidi lumi (Palermo, 1603), lost, mentioned by Mongitore and in VogelB

Salmi, magnificat, falsi bordoni e messa, 4vv, bc (org) (Palermo, 1624), copy in Malta Cathedral (2 partbooks only)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Mongitore: Bibliotheca Sicula, ii (Palermo, 1714/R), 43
O. Tiby: I polifonisti siciliani del XVI e del XVII secolo (Palermo, 1969), 53, 85, 97
L. Buono: 'Musica sacra in Val di Noto nel secolo XVII', I quaderni del conservatorio, i (Palermo, 1988), 165–72
D. Ficola: 'Stampe musicali siciliane a Malta', Musica sacra in Sicilia tra Rinascimento e Barocco, ed. D. Ficola (Palermo, 1988), 69–86, esp. 75
I. Macchiarella: Il falsobordone fra tradizione orale e tradizione scritta (Lucca, 1994), 224, 314

PAOLO EMILIO CARAPEZZA, GIUSEPPE COLLISANI

Dilthey, Wilhelm (Christian Ludwig) (b Biebrich, nr Wiesbaden, 19 Nov 1833; d Seis, nr Bozen [Bolzano], 1 Oct 1911). German philosopher and writer on music. He studied theology at Heidelberg for one year, then philosophy at the University of Berlin (Habilitation 1864), with the classical philologist P.A. Boeckh, the historian Leopold von Ranke and the philosopher F.A. Trendelenburg. He was professor of philosophy at the University of Basle (alongside Jakob Burkhardt, 1867–8), at Kiel (1868–71), Breslau (1871–82) and Berlin (1882–1905). Dilthey contributed to metaphysics, moral philosophy and the theory of knowledge; he wrote on the Renaissance, the Reformation, the German Enlightenment and German Idealism, and his studies of poetry influenced 20th-century literary criticism.

Whereas his writings on German composers and music are primarily of historical interest, his contributions to hermeneutics, including his essay 'On Understanding Music' (*c*1906), are highly significant for musicology. Moreover, the resistance to positivism in late 20th-century thought, not least in music, has its roots in Dilthey's general philosophy, making it of compelling interest today.

Dilthey fought against the ascendancy of the natural sciences in his time by asserting the independent existence of the 'human sciences' (Geisteswissenschaften), which included history and philosophy. These are based in the primacy of human experience. Whereas the laws of science are abstractions from objects, the ultimate ('primordial') reality consists of the 'lived experiences' (Erlebnisse) of objects within our consciousness. The theatre of operations of such experience is the 'life-nexus' (Lebenszusammenhang), within which our sense of the world interacts with our sense of self, and perceptions (in the context of self-awareness) become experiences. In the course of this discussion (Introduction to the Human Sciences, i, 1883) the duality of 'inner' and 'outer' becomes prominent. By 1867–8 Dilthey had begun to deploy a distinction between 'explanation' (Erklärung) and 'understanding' (Verstehen), appropriated from J.G. Droysen, which was to become the cornerstone of his hermeneutics: 'to explain' is to give an account of the effects of something (e.g. a physical force), whereas 'to understand' is to re-create it in one's psyche, to experience it, to compare it with other experiences and so to understand it (Selected Works, Princeton, 1985–, iv, 229–30). The former is the way of the natural sciences, the latter of the human sciences. The coordination of elementary acts of understanding to grasp a complex expression is called 'interpretation' (Auslegung) and its methodology is 'hermeneutics'.

In The Formation of the Historical World of the Human Sciences (1910), Dilthey conceived actions, texts, works of art and other 'manifestations of mental content' as 'expressions' (Ausdrücke); these distinguish the human sciences from the natural sciences. In the former, 'we experience human states, give expressions to them and understand these expressions' (Selected Writings, Cambridge, 1976, p.175). Connecting this to the idea of life-nexus, he remarks: 'Understanding of other people and their expressions is developed on the basis of experience and self-understanding and the constant interaction between them' (ibid., 218). Understanding a work of art involves exploring the artist's 'mental life and its relation to environment and circumstances': hence the relation between creation and creator (ibid., 223–4). The interpreter must be aware of the limitations of his own mental experience, and must transport himself into the work of art and its world and so 'relive' it. This bridging of the worlds of experience of artist and interpreter through empathy represents the highest form of the hermeneutic process.

Dilthey received early musical instruction from his grandfather, a court Kapellmeister, and enlarged his knowledge of music theory during his student years in Berlin. In the 1870s he wrote reviews of music and music books as well as a number of more extended articles on music. His sketch for an essay 'On Understanding Music' survived unpublished as part of the planned continuation of his Formation (1910). In it he robustly declares: 'No history of music has the slightest idea how experience is converted into music'. In music, there is 'no dualism of experience and music, no twin worlds, no transference from one to the other .... There is not even a prescribed path' (Gesammelte Schriften, Berlin and Leipzig, 1914–36, vii, 222). How a succession of notes and rhythms means something other than itself is, he says, an unfathomable mystery. For meaning operates not (as with the written word) between parallel surfaces (to use 20th-century terms) of 'signified and signifier' – that is, experience and expression – but between past and present in the stream of musical sound. He tries to articulate this by describing expression as 'an operation of the imagination wherein experience "shines into" the historically unfolding world of tones', inserting itself into the stream of musical sound like a beam of light and illuminating it from within.

If Kretzschmar's celebrated paper 'A Stimulus to Promote a Hermeneutics of Music' (1902, 1905) was prompted by Dilthey's work, then 'On Understanding Music' is perhaps a rejection of Kretzschmar's programme, for he states firmly: 'There is no psychological correlation between states of mind and a representation of them in the imagination: anyone who pursues this is barking up the wrong tree', concluding (ibid., 223):

> The edifice of music history as it stands today needs to be completed with a theory of musical meaning. This is the missing link which should connect the other theoretical branches of musicology with creativity, and ultimately with the life of the composer and the formation of musical schools – a relational system between the two, the site of the true secret of the musical imagination.

Whereas Dilthey contributed significantly to the critical literature on poetry, which for him exemplified the workings of the human sciences, he made no similar major contribution to music. Nevertheless, his writings on music are well informed, disciplined and deeply thought. The long essays on individuals take the personality of the composer, in the light of cultural and artistic milieu, and explore the nature of his creativity through a study of selected works: in Bach's case particular cantatas, oratorios and passions, in Mozart's case three late operas. As 'Beginnings of Great German Music' makes clear, Dilthey believed that with Bach and Handel mastery of the art of music had passed from the Italians and French to the Germans, where it had rested for more than two centuries in a steady development unrivalled by any of the other arts.

See also HERMENEUTICS and PHILOSOPHY OF MUSIC.

WRITINGS

(on music)

Lebenskämpfe und Lebensfriede, Westermann's Jb der illustrirten deutschen Monatshefte, xxii (1867), 241–65 [musical novella pubd under pseud. Friedrich Welden]

'Richard Wagner', Westermann's Jb der illustrirten deutschen Monatshefte, xxxix (1875–6), 421–32 [pubd under pseud. Karl Elkan]

'Die drei Epochen der modernen Aesthetik und ihre heutige Aufgabe', Deutsche Rundschau, lxxii (1892), 200–36

'Leibniz und sein Zeitalter', Wilhelm Diltheys gesammelte Schriften (Berlin and Leipzig, 1914–36), iii, 1–80 [incl. discussion of opera, sacred music and Schütz]

'Das musikalische Verstehen' (*c*1906), ibid., vii, 220–24; trans. in Music in European Thought 1851–1912, ed. B. Bujić (Cambridge, 1988), 370–74

'Die grosse deutsche Musik des 18. Jahrhunderts' (*c*1906–7), Von deutscher Dichtung und Musik: aus den Studien zur Geschichte des deutschen Geistes, ed. H. Nohl and G. Misch (Leipzig, 1933/R), 189–298 [comprising 'Die Anfänge der grossen deutschen Musik', 'Johann Sebastian Bach', 'Händel', 'Haydn', 'Mozart', 'Beethovens Fidelio und neunte Sinfonie']

Reviews [anon.] in Westermann's Jb der illustrirten deutschen Monatshefte, xxxvii (1874–5), 595 only [Rietz edn of Mendelssohn songs]; xli (1876–7), 335 only [letters of M. Hauptmann to Spohr, ed. F. Hiller; F. Hiller: Musikalisches und Persönliches]; xlii (1877), 370 only [H.A. Köstlin: Geschichte der Musik im Umriss]; xliii (1877–8), 557–8 [C.F. Pohl: Joseph Haydn, i; Mozart letters, ed. L. Nohl]; xliv (1878), 221–2 [A. von Dommer: Handbuch der Musikgeschichte]; xlvi (1879), 512–3 [W.J. von Wasielewski: Geschichte der Instrumentalmusik im XVI. Jahrhundert; F. Liszt: Chopin]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H.A. Hodges: Wilhelm Dilthey: an Introduction (Oxford, 1944)

H.A. Hodges: The Philosophy of Wilhelm Dilthey (London, 1952)

P.L. Frank: 'Wilhelm Dilthey's Contribution to the Aesthetics of Music', Journal of Aesthetics and Art Criticism, xv (1956–7), 477–80

H.P. Rickman: Dilthey Today: a Critical Appraisal of the Contemporary Relevance of his Work (New York, 1988)

I. Bent, ed.: Music Analysis in the Nineteenth Century (Cambridge, 1994), ii, 8–26

IAN D. BENT

Di Luca, Severo [Saverio]. See DE LUCA, SEVERO.

Diluendo (It., from diluere: 'to become weaker'). A performance instruction meaning almost the same as DIMINUENDO and MORENDO.

Dima, Gheorghe (b Braşov, 10 Oct 1847; d Cluj, 4 June 1925). Romanian composer, conductor and teacher. After schooling in Vienna, he studied at the polytechnic school in Karlsruhe, but then took musical instruction from Giehne in Baden, and subsequently in Vienna and Graz from Uffmann and Thierot. He concluded his training with a diploma at the Leipzig Conservatory under Jadassohn and Reinecke. As a baritone, he appeared in some Meyerbeer roles at the Klagenfurt Stadtheater (1868). He returned to his own country and began a diverse career successively in Sibiu, Braşov and Cluj. At first he gave song recitals in Bucharest, Iaşi and several Transylvanian cities, but later conducting and composition, even more than teaching, became his principal occupations.

As the head of various choral societies, with the Metropolitan Choir of Sibiu and in cooperation with the municipal orchestras, he performed oratorios of Handel, Haydn, Mendelssohn and Gade, and operas by Mascagni and Kreutzer. Through these activities he contributed to the development of the musical culture of the country. As a teacher, he worked in public schools, and in 1919 he founded in Cluj the State Conservatory that now bears his name. His own music is cast in a Romantic idiom, and he drew upon folk elements in his songs, ballads, romances and choruses. Some of his ballads are written for voices and orchestra, and one of them, Mama lui Stefan cel Mare ('The Mother of Stephen the Great'), is virtually an oratorio. With his songs to the poems of M. Eminescu he founded the tradition of modern Romanian songwriting. He was a founder member of the Society of Romanian Composers (1920).

WORKS
(selective list)

published in Vienna, before 1906, unless otherwise stated

SACRED

2 Liturgia sfîntului Ioan Gură-de-Aur [Liturgy of St John Chrysostom], 4vv Numerous other sacred choral pieces

SECULAR

Mama lui Stefan cel Mare [The Mother of Stephen the Great] (ballad, D. Bolintineanu), solo vv, 4vv, orch, 1884
Hora (V. Alecsandri), 4vv, orch
2 cants., solo v, 4vv, orch (Braşov, 1900; Vienna, 1902)
[30] Cîntece poporale şi melodii vechi românesti, 4vv; 18 others, male vv
Patru cîntece [4 songs], 4vv
Other MS choral works in RO-Ba
[16] Lieder und Gesänge (C.F. Kahnt), Ger., Rom., 1v, pf acc. (Leipzig, 1888)
[16] Lieder und Balladen, 1v, pf acc.
[12] Rumänische Volkslieder, 1v, pf acc.
Din lumea copiilor [Children's world], 1v, pf acc. (Craiova, 1930)

9 songs, 1v, pf acc.; 5 choruses, male vv; 8 choruses, 4vv; 2 choruses, 4vv, pf acc.: in Opere alese, ed. V. Cosma (Bucharest, 1958)

THEORETICAL WORKS

Curs elementar de cântare (Braşov, 1914)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Voileanu-Nicoară: Dima: viaţa şi opera (Bucharest, 1957)
V. Cosma: Muzicieni români: lexicon (Bucharest, 1970)
C. Zamfir: George Dima, muzician şi om de cultură (Bucharest, 1974)

ROMEO GHIRCOIAŞIU

Di Maggio, Francesco (b Castelvetrano, Sicily; d Castelvetrano, 1688). Italian composer. A priest of noble birth, he was a pupil of Giuseppe Palazzotto e Tagliavia and thus represents the fourth and last generation of the school of Sicilian polyphonists founded by Pietro Vinci. He may be identifiable with the Francesco Maggi who sang alto in the choir of the Chiesa della Madonna della Steccata in Parma from 22 May 1659 until after 12 February 1663. At his death he was a canon of the collegiate church of S Pietro, Castelvetrano. As a composer he is known only by his Sacra armonia di musicali concenti . . . con una messa a 5 concertata (Milan, 1670), for two to five voices and continuo, which in addition to the mass contains 15 motets. The splendid sonorities of the motets vividly portray the sense of the texts; sections of contrasting rhythm and harmony are linked through a free approach to form that is typical of Sicilian and Neapolitan music of the time.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; FétisB; GerberL; PitoniN, i, 311
A. Mongitore: Bibliotheca Sicula, i (Palermo, 1708/R), 217
G.B. Noto: Platea della palmosa città di Castelvetrano (MS, 1732, Castelvetrano, Biblioteca Comunale, 43.VI.14), f.363
A. de Sayve: Voyage en Sicile fait en 1820 et 1821 (Paris, 1882), ii, 330
G.B. Ferrigno: Castelvetrano (Palermo, 1908), 148
N. Pelicelli: 'Musicisti in Parma nel secolo XVII', NA, ix (1932), 217–46, esp. 241
L. Bianconi: 'Sussidi bibliografici per i musicisti siciliani del Cinque e Seicento', RIM, vii (1972), 3–38, esp. 28

PAOLO EMILIO CARAPEZZA, GIUSEPPE COLLISANI

Di Martinelli, Guillelmus-Carolus (b Ghent, bap. 12 June 1662; d Diest, bur. 9 Sept 1728). Flemish composer, active in the Netherlands. He moved to The Hague early in his life, where he married on 6 August 1682, and organized opera performances as a maître de musique. On 2 November 1682 he succeeded Carolus Hacquart as an organist of the Oud-Katholieke Gemeente. On 8 May 1695 he became schoolmaster and violin teacher to two choirboys in the town of Diest. He was attached to St Sulpitius there as a violinist and as choirmaster from 1720 to 1728. He established a music library and instrument collection, which were added to by his son Antonius (b The Hague, bap. 30 Aug 1687; d Diest, bur. 13 Aug 1748) and grandson Johannes-Antonius (b Diest, bap. 27 July 1730; d Diest, bur. 23 Dec 1818), both violinists and violin teachers at St Sulpitius (1729–48 and 1751/2–97 respectively). Antonius was probably the composer of Six simphonies en quatre parties (Paris, 1749) and a Simphonia a 4. Johannes-Antonius was a notary and treasurer of the Concertvolontairelijck.

A number of works by Guillelmus-Carolus Di Martinelli survive. Other anonymous works found among his papers may be by him. If this is the case, his compositional style followed European (especially Italian and French) trends closely, with expressive harmonizations, clear rhetorical effects, an original distribution of parts and concertante elements. A nine-part concerto grosso reveals the influence of Corelli.

Two other sons, Jacobus-Ludovicus (b The Hague, bap. 25 July 1686; d Leuven, bur. 16 Nov 1757) and Johannes (b ?The Hague, c1694; d ?Paris, after 1730) were also musicians, the first a bassoonist and singer at St Pieters, Leuven, the second possibly a composer.

WORKS
all in B-LVu

In te Domine speravi; Tantum ergo

Signed only 'ex chartis Di Martinelli': Aurae non me provocate; Hue me; Im omnibus quaecumque; Miserrime homo; O amantissime Jesu; O Deus; Quam pulder; Regina coeli; Veni in hortum 4 sonatas, a 3-6, 2 inc.

Doubtful: 5 masses, 20 motets, *c*20 sonatas, 1 intrada, 2 concerti grossi, some inc.

Lost: 1 motet, cited in a music inventory in Oudenaarde

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Vander StraetenMPB, i; VannesD
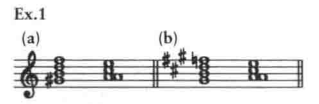
J. Scheerders: 'De familie Di Martinelli en de kruisheren te Diest', Clairlieu: Tijdschrift gewijd aan de geschiedenis der kruisheren, xxxiii (1975), 79–118
J. Huybens and E. Schreurs: Introduction to T'Haegelant: vier 18de-eeuwse muziekboekjes uit Diest (Leuven, 1995)
E. Schreurs and V. Verspeurt: 'Het Di Martinellifonds', Musica Antiqua, xiii (1996), 10–15
E. Schreurs: 'De muzikantenfamilie Di Martinelli, aktief in Gent, Den Haag en Diest', Yearbook of the Alamire Foundation, iv (1999)

EUGEEN SCHREURS

Di Micheli, Antonino [De Michaele, Antoninus] (b Tusa, Sicily; d Tusa, 1680). Italian guitarist and music editor. He was a priest. His only known publication is La nuova chitarra, di regole, dichiarationi e figure, con la regola della scala … con l'aggiunta d'arie siciliane, e sonate di vari autori (Palermo, 1680, 2/1698), a collection of dances and Sicilian songs for five-string guitar in Italian tablature. The music is preceded by rules for tuning the guitar and for obtaining five-note chords; each of 24 triads is indicated by a letter of the alphabet. The texts of the Sicilian songs are given below the letters of the tablature; appropriate numbers indicate the string in each chord that plays in unison with the voice, allowing the basic melody to be reconstructed. Rhythmic indications are added to the dances, 'included for those who know how the tune should be sung', to provide an accompaniment for familiar melodies. Di Micheli claimed to have taken the songs from other publications, where the vocal line was fully notated, in particular from works, now lost, by Mario Albioso, Silvestro Orlando and Pietro Renda.

BIBLIOGRAPHY



L. Bianconi: 'Sussidi bibliografici per i musicisti siciliani del Cinque e Seicento', RIM, vii (1972), 3–38, esp. 30
S.E. Failla: 'La nuova chitarra composta da don Antonino Di Micheli', AnMc, no.19 (1979), 244–71

PAOLO EMILIO CARAPEZZA/GIUSEPPE COLLISANI

Dimidietas (Lat.). A 15th-century term for that type of diminution which reduces the relative value of note shapes in the ratio 2:1, the proportio dupla of the system of PROPORTIONAL NOTATION of the late Middle Ages and the Renaissance. See also NOTATION, §III, 3(vii).

Diminished interval. A perfect or minor INTERVAL from which a chromatic semitone has been subtracted. The perfect 5th C–G is made into a diminished 5th by raising C or lowering G (i.e. C♯–G or C–G♭). The diminished 3rd (e.g. F♯–A♭) is the inversion of the augmented 6th. A doubly diminished interval is made by subtracting two chromatic semitones from a perfect or minor interval, for example G–F♭♭, G♯–F♭ and G𝄪–F are all doubly diminished 7ths derived from the minor 7th G–F.

Diminished seventh chord. A chord formed from a diminished triad with added diminished 7th, for example B–D–F–A♭; it thus contains two tritones (B–F and D–A♭) and is tonally unstable. It is typically found on the raised 7th degree of a minor key and functions, in its standard resolution to the tonic (ex.1*a*), like a dominant chord, the 7th (G♯ in ex.1*a*) rising by semitone to the tonic while the other notes fall; it is commonly borrowed for equivalent use in the major mode (ex.1*b*). Its root may be defined conventionally, as the lowest note when the chord is rearranged as a sequence of thirds (G♯ in ex.1*a* and b; see also ROOT, ex.1*a*); however, because of the manner of its resolution, the chord is sometimes interpreted as an incomplete dominant 9th with the root omitted (in ex.1*a* and b the 'missing root' would be E).

Because the four notes in the diminished 7th chord are a minor 3rd (or augmented 2nd) apart, the chord divides the octave into four equal segments (ex.2); as a result of this symmetry and of the phenomenon of enharmonic equivalence, the multiplicity of possible diminished 7th chords may be reduced to three distinct pitch collections (B–D–F–A♭, B♯–D♯–F♯–A and C♯–E–G–B♭), with all their respellings and inversions. By means of such reinterpretation, and by permitting resolutions in which the lowest note either falls by semitone or remains at the same pitch, any one of these pitch collections can resolve to a major or minor triad on any pitch. Ex.3 sets out 24 possible resolutions of the collection B–D–F–A♭: in ex.3*a* the lowest note rises by semitone, while in ex.3*b* it falls by semitone, and in ex.3*c* it stays constant. The existence of so many different possibilities for resolution gives the diminished 7th chord ambiguous tonal implications, making it an important tool in modulation (see J. Saslaw: 'Gottfried Weber and Multiple Meaning', Theoria, v (1990–91), 74–103).

JANNA SASLAW

Diminished triad. A chord built of two minor 3rds, for example B–D–F or C–E♭–G♭.

Diminuendo (It., from diminuire: 'to diminish', 'become softer'). A performance instruction sometimes abbreviated dim. and sometimes expressed by means of a 'hairpin' (for its history see CRESCENDO). Decrescendo (from decrescere: 'to decrease', 'wane'), sometimes abbreviated decresc., is virtually synonymous, but diminuendo is sometimes preferred as being more positive.

Diminuendo and decrescendo seem to have come into regular usage rather earlier than crescendo, since they represent an effect more fundamental to the nature of Western music – just as rallentando and ritardando have a longer and richer history than accelerando. The 12th-century Nibelungenlied, for instance, includes the description: 'Dô klungen sîne seiten daz al daz hûz erdôz . . . süezer unde senfter videlen er began' ('then his strings sounded so that all the house relaxed . . . and he began to fiddle more sweetly and more quietly'). In his Combattimento di Tancredi e Clorinda (1624) Monteverdi gave the direction 'questa ultima nota va in arcata morendo' ('this final note is played with a diminishing bowstroke'). In Purcell's verse anthem They that go down to the sea in ships the instruction 'soften the voice by degrees' is found in the alto solo where the word 'still' is held for 11 bars; yet the use of the 'hairpin' began extremely late, and in the final ritornello of 'Glory to God' in Messiah Handel denoted the effect of dying away with terraced dynamics – from f to p to pp.

Even when it became an accepted part of musical notation the 'hairpin' was liable to misunderstanding: Norman (1961) has shown how Schubert's scores before about 1819 were written so that the diminuendo and the horizontal accent were often indistinguishable, and how thereafter he often required a fast diminuendo in places (particularly on final chords) where one would be more likely to expect an accent. Macdonald (1969) found something very similar in Berlioz, as did Deathridge (1977) in Wagner, and the whole subject is complicated further by the lack of agreement among composers as to how heavily accented an accent should be: there are also examples of fp being used to denote a relatively fast diminuendo rather than the sudden one the sign would normally suggest (e.g. in Die Fledermaus, ed. H. Swarowsky, 1968, p.28).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Norman: 'The Interpretation of Schubert's descrescendo Markings and Accents', MR, xxii (1961), 108–11
H. Macdonald: 'Two Peculiarities of Berlioz's Notation', ML, l (1969), 25–36
J. Deathridge: 'Wagner's Sketches for the "Ring": some Recent Studies', MT, cxviii (1977), 383–9

See also TEMPO AND EXPRESSION MARKS.

DAVID FALLOWS

Diminution. (1) A term used in the context of improvised embellishment during the Renaissance and Baroque periods to describe a melodic figure that replaces a long note with notes of shorter value. Diminution is close in meaning to the English 'division', the Italian passaggio, the Spanish glosa, and the French double. Whereas specific graces such as trills or appoggiaturas were applied to single notes, diminutions served to decorate the transition from one note of a melody to the next with passage-work, giving scope for virtuoso display. 16th- and 17th-century instruction books provide tables of diminution formulae for the most used musical intervals, in various note values, which performers could learn by rote and apply to any piece of music. Written-out examples in musical works by leading performers of the time show that in practice diminutions were most often combined with specific graces to decorate the repeat of a phrase or section of a work, or verses of a strophic song after the first, giving the effect of a musical variation. By extension, a melody so embellished was sometimes called a 'diminution'. In the 17th century, diminution techniques were employed with particular sophistication in the French air de cour, air and air sérieux, and in the English DIVISION upon a ground. While by the end of the Baroque period French and German composers were notating much of the ornamentation they considered appropriate in their music, extempore diminutions were still required for a stylish interpretation of music in the Italian style, especially the slow movements of the sonata and concerto, and the repeat of the A section in the performance of da capo arias. See also IMPROVISATION, II, 1 and 2; ORNAMENTS; VARIATIONS; and VIOLA BASTARDA.

(2) The statement of a theme or melodic fragment in note values that are shorter (usually uniformly so) than those originally associated with it. Diminution is found in mensural notation, notably in isorhythmic motets and cantus firmus masses, and again in baroque and subsequent contrapuntal and especially canonic or fugal techniques (see FUGUE). In PROPORTIONAL NOTATION a range of signs is available for the purpose of reducing the value of note shapes in a variety of mathematical ratios. Diminution is the opposite of AUGMENTATION.

See also DIMINISHED INTERVAL.

GREER GARDEN (1), ROBERT DONINGTON/R (2)

Dimitrescu, Constantin (b Blejoi-Prahova, 19 March 1847; d Bucharest, 9 May 1928). Romanian composer, cellist, conductor and teacher. After studying in Bucharest with Alexander Flechtenmacher and Eduard Wachmann, he completed his education in Vienna with Schlessinger and in Paris with Franchomme. He was a cellist in the Romanian Philharmonic Society Orchestra and at the National Theatre. Later he conducted the orchestra of the Ministry of Public Instruction (the successor to the Philharmonic). Dimitrescu was also a moving spirit in chamber music as the founder of the first permanent quartet in Bucharest (1880). As teacher of cello at the Bucharest Conservatory, he helped to form a Romanian cello school. His music reflects these activities. The seven quartets and the three cello concertos, among other works, were the first of the genre in Romanian music. An opera and some operettas were written for the National Theatre and for other Bucharest opera companies.

WORKS
(selective list)

many MSS in RO-Ba

Stage: Sergentul Cartuş [Sergeant Cartouche] (operetta, 2, I. Apostolini), 1883; Renegatu [The Renegade] (op, 3, M. Dimitriade), 1886 (Bucharest, 1893); Sanda (comic op, 2), 1886; Nini (comic op, 3, D. Ionescu-Zane), 1897; Sînziana şi Pepelea (musical fairy play, 5, V. Alecsandri), 1899; other fairy plays, musical comedies and incid music

Orch: Preludio, 1880; 3 vc concs., no.1, A, op.45, 1889 (Bucharest, 1894), no.2, b, 1886 (Bucharest, n.d.), no.3, d, 1890 (Bucharest, n.d.); 2 ovs., 1885, 1907

Other works: 8 mélodies, pf, op.16; 7 str qts (Leipzig, n.d.), no.1, G, op.21, 1883, no.2, d, op.26, no.3, B, op.33, no.4, g, op.38, no.5, F, op.42, no.6, e, op.44, 1898, no.7, a, 1923; 3 choruses, male vv (Bucharest, 1899); pieces for vc, pf; songs

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W.G. Berger: Ghid pentru muzica instrumentală de cameră [A guide to instrumental chamber music] (Bucharest, 1965)
Z. Vancea: Creaţia muzicală românească, sec. XIX–XX, i (Bucharest, 1968–)
T. Moisescu and M. Păun: Opereta: Ghid (Bucharest, 1969)
V. Cosma: Muzicieni români: lexicon (Bucharest, 1970) [with list of works]

E. Dolinescu: Compozitorul Constantin Dimitrescu (Bucharest, 1977)
O.L. Cosma: Hronicul muzicii româneşti, viii (Bucharest, 1988); ix (Bucharest, 1991)

ROMEO GHIRCOIAŞIU

Dimitrov, Georgi (b Belogradchik, 2 May 1904; d Sofia, 12 March 1979). Bulgarian composer. He began his musical training at the Bucharest Conservatory of Music and in Lwów (1923–4) before attending the Warsaw Conservatory (1927–9) as a student in the education faculty. He worked as a music teacher and choral conductor in Warsaw until 1938. In 1939 he returned to Bulgaria and was made inspector of music at the Ministry of Education; he was artistic secretary to the Sofia National Opera (1940–48) and director of the Council for Creative and Interpretative Arts in Music (1948–58). Additionally, he was appointed lecturer in conducting at the Bulgarian State Music Academy in 1949, becoming professor in 1962. Dimitrov specialized in writing a cappella songs. Many of his 500 or so pieces have enjoyed considerable popularity in Bulgaria, and he showed a particular gift for humorous and children's choral songs. He wrote Besedi po vaprosa na khorovoto iskustvo ('Conversations on the question of choral art', Sofia, 1968).

WORKS
(selective list)

Vaspev na prirodata [Song of Praise to Nature], children's chorus, girls' chorus, male chorus, mixed chorus (1960); Na nashite buditeli [To our Enlightener] (K. Penev), chorus, 1961
Iszbrani khorovi pesni [Selected Choral Songs] (1968)
Many other choral songs, some solo songs

Principal publisher: Nauka i iskustvo (Sofia)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Balareva: Kompozitorut Georgi Dimitrov (Sofia, 1976) [with Ger. summary]

LADA BRASHOVANOVA/MARIYA KOSTAKEVA

Dimitrova, Ghena (b Beglej, Pleven, 6 May 1941). Bulgarian soprano. After studies at the Bulgarian State Conservatory, Sofia, she joined the National Opera and made her début as Abigaille (Nabucco) at Sofia in 1967. In 1970 success in an international competition in Sofia brought her engagements in Italy (including her La Scala début as Amelia in Ballo in maschera, 1973), France and Spain, five seasons at the Teatro Colón, Buenos Aires (from 1977), and her Vienna Staatsoper début (1978). Her American début was at Dallas in 1981 as Elvira (Ernani). She sang Turandot at La Scala in 1983 and made her Covent Garden début in the same role the following year. She sang Lady Macbeth on the Royal Opera tour to Greece in 1986, and Aida in the 'on-site' production at Luxor, 1987. In 1988 she made her début at the Metropolitan Opera, as Turandot, which she also sang with the company of La Scala in Korea and Japan that year. Dimitrova is a powerful lirico spinto soprano whose often thrilling singing compensates for an intermittent lack of dramatic involvement. Among her notable recordings are Abigaille, Amneris and Turandot, as well as discs of arias by Verdi, Puccini and Tchaikovsky.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H.E. Phillips: 'Crisis of Will', ON, lii/11 (1987–8), 27–9

NOËL GOODWIN

Dimmler [Dimler, Dümler], Franz Anton (b Mannheim, 14 Oct 1753; d Munich, 7 Feb 1827). German composer and instrumentalist. He was a horn pupil of Joseph Ziwini and from 1775 was taught composition by Georg Joseph Vogler in Mannheim. From 1766 until 1770, he was a supernumerary in the Mannheim orchestra, gaining a full position of horn player in 1771; the account lists record his salary in 1776 as 100 florins, but by 1778 it stood at 330 florins. In 1778, when the seat of the court moved to Munich, he was listed among the 'accompanying persons'. After 1784 he was a double bass player in the Munich orchestra.

As a composer Dimmler wrote mainly theatrical works, including several Singspiele for Munich in the late Mannheim tradition and a great many ballets which were well thought of in their time. Little has survived of these works, however, and his extant music is primarily instrumental: concertos for various instruments and several chamber pieces. His set of six string trios in two volumes, comprises simple domestic pieces, always in three movements, very short and not very original. The slow movements (mostly andantes) belong stylistically to the Empfindsamkeit; the finales are simple rondos.

Various other members of the Dimmler family were musicians active in Mannheim and Munich. Dimmler's brother Joseph Dimmler (b Mannheim, Feb 1761; d Munich, 13 Oct 1783), also a horn player, was a supernumerary in the Mannheim orchestra (1770–78) and then in Munich. Gerhard Dimmler, perhaps another brother of Franz Anton, appears as a flautist in the Munich orchestra lists from 1785, though according to a petition he addressed to the court in 1792 he appears to have been in the service of the Elector Palatine in Mannheim as early as 1777. He was dismissed on 24 December 1799 but returned in 1806 at the order of the Bavarian king, Maximilian I. He is last recorded in the orchestra lists in 1816. Dimmler's son Anton Dimmler (b Munich, 24 April 1783; d Munich, 22 Dec 1817) was a clarinettist in the Munich orchestra and a guitarist. According to Lipowsky he made his first public appearance in Munich on 14 May 1795, playing a concerto by his father. An unmarried female dancer named Dimmler is recorded on the lists of the Mannheim Hoftheater until 1777.

WORKS

STAGE

Singspiele: Der Guckkasten, Munich, Hof, 1797; Die Schatzgräber (Les fosseyeurs), Munich, Schloss Seefeld, 1798, F-Pc, D-Mbs; Das Hängeschloss, *Mbs [frag.]; Die Zobeljäger, mentioned in LipowskyB
Ritterliebe (incid. music), Munich, Hof, 1796
Ballets: *c*185, incl. Arlequin als armer Mann, Mbs; Les caprices amoureux, *c*1785, arr. hpd, DO; Le premier mort, 1787, arr. kbd, vn, va, vc, DO; others lost

OTHER WORKS

Welch erhabne Wonne (cant., F. von P. Labermayr), 1791, Mbs
Concs.: 2 for vn, 1793, D-Rp, F-Pc; 1 for cl, Pc, ed. G. Balassa and A. Fodor (Zürich, 1973); 1 for fl, S-L; others for fl, ob, hn, kbd
Chbr: 6 str trios as 3 angenehme und leichte Terzette, 2 vn, vc, i (Munich, 1802), ii (Munich, 1806), D-Mbs; 2 str qts, Mbs; 6 Menuette, orch, ed. A. Ott (Giebing, 1969)

12 allemandes, hpd, DO; pieces for solo gui

BIBLIOGRAPHY

LipowskyB
F. Walter: Geschichte des Theaters und der Musik am kurpfälzischen Hofe (Leipzig, 1898/R)
P. Legband: Münchener Bühne und Litteratur im achtzehnten Jahrhundert (Munich, 1904)
H. Riemann: Mannheimer Kammermusik des 18. Jahrhunderts, ii: Trios und Duos, DTB, xxviii, Jg.xvi/2 (1915)

P. and P. Mlakar: Unsterblicher Theatertanz: 300 Jahre Ballettgeschichte der Oper in München, i (Wilhelmshaven, 1992)
H. Schneider: Makarius Falter (1762–1843) und sein Münchner Musikverlag (1796–1827), i (Tutzing, 1993)

ROLAND WÜRTZ/ROBERT MÜNSTER

Dimov, Bojidar (b Lom, 31 Jan 1931). German composer of Bulgarian origin. He studied at the Sofia Conservatory with Mara Petkova (piano) and Vesselin Stojanov (composition), and completed his studies at the Vienna Music Acadamy, where his teachers included Karl Schiske, Friedrich Cerha and Hanns Jelinek. He also attended the Darmstadt summer courses, where he was influenced by Cage, Ligeti, Boulez and Stockhausen, and Kagel's class at the contemporary music courses in Cologne. In 1968 he moved to Cologne, where he founded the ensemble 'trial and error' (1970), which aimed to promote unconventional concepts of programming, collective improvisation and concert practice. He has taught at the Rheinische Musikschule (from 1970) and the Pädagogische Hochschule, Cologne (from 1972), and was appointed lecturer of composition at the Robert Schumann Hochschule, Düsseldorf (1995). He has received stipends and prizes from the Art Fund of Vienna and the Youth Cultural Week of Innsbruck, and numerous commissions from institutions including WDR, SWF, Radio Bremen, the Banque Lambert (Brussels), the Royan Festival and the Styrian Automn Festival (Graz), as well as from international ensembles and soloists.

As both a teacher and composer, Dimov initially concerned himself with experimental music, drafting a number of projects for artistic competitions; these include the Bonner Raumspiel (1971), Invocation (1971) and Kieler Signallandschaft (1972). After the mid-1970s traditional genres began to figure more prominently in his works. The dance opera Die Hochzeit von Susa (1973–), which explores the fusion of East and West, is one of his most important compositions.

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: Die Hochzeit von Susa (Tanzoper, 2, Dimov), 1973–; Auftrag für Baschandra (Jugendoper, 2, Dimov), 1984–7

Inst: Komposition III, wind qnt, 1967–8; Continuum II 'Trauerminuten für Dana Kozanovà', chbr orch, 1968–9; Bonner Raumspiel, 3 groups of variable forces, 1971; Invocation, 2 solo inst/2 grps of insts, 1971; Kieler Signallandschaft, variable forces, tape montage, 1972; Kontaktspiele, eng hn, cl, tpt, vc, gui, 1973–4; Zusammenklänge im Raum, ob/eng hn, cl/basset hn, tpt, vc, gui, pf, 1973; Bewegliche Signallandschaft, 12 insts, perc, 1975; Hauch der Nymphe, shakuhachi/fl, 1975 [rev. basset-hn]; Vereinigungen II, ob, cl, tpt, va, vc, db, perc, 1978; Pothos, ob, cl, hn, bn, vn, vc, va, db, 1979–80; Fuga, 3 orch, 1980; Zeichen, ob, cl, tpt, va, vc, db, 1980; Polyelei, orch, 1982; Largo carpaccioso, cl/vn, b cl/vc, pf, 1983 [after J.S. Bach]; Trio Rituals, cl, b cl, pf, 1983–; Rituals, str qt, 1984–9; Rituals, 2 cl, 1985–; Perc Rituals, 2 perc, 1986; Pf Rituals, 1986–; Witten Rituals, wind septet, 1988–9; Passion Camille, fl, gui, 1995 [arr. for spkr, fl, gui, glass harmonica, perc, opt. sextet, 1995–7]; Salomé, pf, 1997

Vocal: Incantationes II (Solomon, medieval texts), S, fl, tpt, 2 va, hp, perc, 3 loudspeakers/microphones, 1957; Raumspiel (Dimov), S, pf, fl, ob, cl, hn, tbn, vn, va, vc, db, 1969–70; Vereinigungen I (Socrates), 2 mixed choruses, 1975–6; Turandoht (Dimov), S, chbr orch, 1976–7; Milarepa (Dimov), B, chbr orch, 1976–7; Selbstbildnis mit Richard Wagner und anderen Erscheinungen des Tages und der Nacht (Dimov, Wagner, Nietzsche), spkr, S, T, ob, cl, tpt, perc, pf, va, vc, db, 1982–3; Hymnen der Sirene (Dimov, J. Joyce, R. Musil, J. Jonkor), 5vv, 2 cl, 1986; 3 poèmes (N. Liliev), 1v, pf, 1987–8; Anrufung (Dimov, after Wagner's Ring), S, ob, cl, tpt, perc, pf, va, vc, db, 1989; Balkan (Dimov), spkr, S, Bar, 10 insts, 1991–2; EINMAL und andere Liebesgesänge (R. Rilke, H. Hesse, H.-A. Heindrichs), S, vn, pf, 1992–3; Traum (Dimov), 4 female vv, pf, 1994; Kleitos (Dimov), Bar, pf, 1997

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Dohr, ed.: Werkverzeichnis Bojidar Dimov: Ausgabe aus Anlass seines 60. Geburtstags … (Cologne, 1995)
B. Dimov: 'Das Signal: Inhalt und formbildendes Element', fermate, Jg.15, no.1 (1996), 8–10; continued as 'Gegenwart der Musikgeschichte in neuer Musik', Jg.15, no.2 (1996), 33–6; continued as 'Auftrag für Baschandra', Jg.15, no.3 (1996), 33–5

MONIKA LICHTENFELD

Di Murska, Ilma. See MURSKA, ILMA DE.

D'India, Sigismondo (b Palermo, *c*1582; d ?Modena, before 19 April 1629). Italian composer and singer. He was perhaps second only to Monteverdi as the most distinguished composer of secular vocal music, especially monody, in early 17th-century Italy.

1. LIFE. Documentation on d'India is unusually scarce. The title-pages of his publications state that he was of noble Sicilian birth. He was probably a relation, possibly even the son, of Don Carlo d'India, a 'nobleman of Palermo' resident in Naples in 1592. Sigismondo may thus have spent his formative years in that city. In the preface to his Musiche of 1609 he stated that from 'learned men of music' he learnt 'how to compose for several voices and how to sing solo'. These mentors may have been part of the circle of composers in Naples affiliated with the academy of Don Fabrizio Gesualdo, the foremost of whom was Giovanni de Macque. D'India probably spent the years 1600–10 travelling about Italy, visiting various courts. A dedication (Le musiche e balli, 1621) to the former Maria de' Medici, Queen Mother of France, suggests that he was in Florence as early as 1600. He implied in the dedication of his first set of five-voice madrigals (1606) that in 1606 he was in Mantua, where he may have met Monteverdi. From the 1609 preface it is known that in 1608 he visited Florence, where his songs were performed and admired by Vittoria Archilei and Giulio Caccini, and later Rome, where Cardinal Farnese and 'the most famous musicians and singers' acclaimed his songs; he probably went to Naples too in that year, and he may also have been there some years earlier. In 1610 he was in the duchy of Parma and Piacenza and provided music for festivities there.

In 1611 d'India was appointed director of the chamber music at the court of Carlo Emanuele I, Duke of Savoy, in Turin, where he remained until 1623. Most of his publications date from this period: ten collections of secular music. The emphasis on secular music is a reflection not only of d'India's predilection for it but also of the tastes of the duke, who was a poet and painter and an enthusiastic admirer of the new monodic style. The malicious gossip of certain courtiers forced d'India to leave the court of Savoy in May 1623. After travelling about Italy for five months he settled temporarily at the Este court at Modena from October 1623 to April 1624. He then moved on to Rome to come under the patronage of Cardinal Maurizio of Savoy, his former master's son and another enlightened patron of the arts. In 1625 his sacred opera Sant' Eustachio was performed in Maurizio's palace, and in 1626 he wrote for Pope Urban VIII his Missa 'Domine, clamavi ad te', which was performed with great success in the Cappella Giulia. Early in the same year he took a permanent position at the Este court, and in the autumn he directed a mass of his own – possibly the one composed in Rome – for the funeral of Isabella d'Este. In April 1627 he was still in Modena. In the summer and autumn of 1627 he was competing for the commission of wedding music for the marriage of Duke Odoardo Farnese of Parma to the daughter of Cosimo de' Medici, a commission finally awarded to Monteverdi. There is further evidence that he was given an appointment at the court of Maximilian I of Bavaria, but it is not known if he went there. A document in Modena dated 19 April 1629 addressed to 'the heirs of Sig. d'India' suggests that he died there before that date.

2. Works. D'India's 84 chamber monodies are contained in the first and in the last three of his books of Musiche. They comprise every kind of song found in the early monodic repertory: strophic arias, strophic variations on stock basses, madrigals, laments, lettere amorose and formulae for singing ottavas and sonnets.

D'India's strophic arias comprise about a quarter of his monodic output. They are all either dance-songs or canzonettas: concise diatonic tunes set to light lyric verses by poets such as Chiabrera. The dance-songs are in the triple metre of correntes (3/2) and nizzardi (6/8), with symmetrical phrases and repeated rhythmic patterns and with the voice and bass in similar rhythmic motion. The canzonettas are in common time and have a more authentic monodic texture: a rapid syllabic melody over a more slowly moving bass. D'India's solo madrigals contain some of his most original and expressive music. They are typically through-composed settings of serious, sophisticated poetry (sonnets, ottavas and madrigals) by such poets as Rinuccini, Guarini and Marino. All are in an arioso style, but they nevertheless encompass several types of melodic writing. The lighter settings, whose texts are love-poems, are diatonic madrigals with melodies consisting of a blend of speech rhythms and somewhat more stylized motifs; such melodies tend towards some kind of formal unity. D'India's most characteristic madrigals are expressive chromatic settings of the anguished outpourings of rejected lovers. They are marked by gliding semitone steps in both voice and bass lines, unusual harmonic progressions, and sharp dissonances irregularly resolved. These formless chromatic madrigals are not unlike the polyphonic madrigals of Gesualdo, particularly in their juxtaposition of languid chromatic and lilting diatonic passages, as in ex.1. (Another solo madrigal is cited below as ex.3*b*.) D'India's written-out ornaments are a specially noteworthy feature of his solo madrigals: they have much more rhythmic variety than Caccini's and contain such unusual features as chromaticism and rests.

Although no theatre works by d'India have survived, the composer's mastery of dramatic monody is evident in his last three books of Musiche. The chromatic mannerism and vocal display of the first book's madrigals give way to more spare, declamatory sonnet-settings and to extended dramatic monologues in pure stile rappresentativo. Among the latter are the five laments, fashioned in the style of Monteverdi's Lamento d'Arianna. In these recitatives, the texts of which he wrote himself, he displays an outstanding dramatic sense, comparable with that of Monteverdi. He transcended the monotony of much early recitative by means of bold melodic contours and varied phrase lengths and by avoiding frequent cadences in favour of the long line and the calculated climax. Often several lines of text are united in one climactic musical span through melodic sequences and a carefully controlled rise and fall of the vocal melody (ex.2). An advance towards theatrical monody is also evident in the general plan of these later books, which all have a dramatically functional programme: each volume is comprised of a balanced succession of sonnet-settings in madrigal style, arias, and dramatic recitatives, framed by symbolic opening and closing pieces. The fifth book, for example, alternates the solemn ariosos of the goddesses Virtue and Diana, the dramatic recitatives of the heroes, Dido, Jason and Olympia, and the pastoral aria-canzonettas of the mortals.

Ex.1 O dolcezz'amarissime d'amore

Ex.2 from Infelice Didone

All but three of d'India's duets have continuo accompaniment. The continuo duets, comprising all of the second book of Musiche and a few pieces in the first and fourth books, are written for two sopranos or two tenors. They include recitative dialogues, and duets in metrical rhythm in which points of imitation and passages in block harmony alternate. The second book of Musiche contains both aria and madrigal duets, with elaborate ornamentation in some of the latter.

D'India's reputation has rested primarily on his monodies, but in the field of secular music he also composed eight books of polyphonic madrigals, three books of motets and two of villanellas (the sixth book of madrigals does not exist, but he may have regarded the Musiche e balli of 1621 as equivalent to it). From the 1590s until the 1630s a number of composers (e.g. Cifra, Marco da Gagliano and Domenico Mazzocchi) alternately endorsed monody and the older polyphonic forms, largely because they considered the former incapable of disclosing the complete art of the contrapuntist or his most advanced harmonic idiom. It is not surprising, then, that although d'India early established his reputation with a collection of monodies (1609) it had been preceded by a volume of madrigals in 1606, which shows that he was already thoroughly schooled in the techniques and expressive devices of the late Renaissance polyphonic madrigal. The appearance of a book of villanelle alla napolitana, printed in 1608 in Naples by Carlino, Gesualdo's principal publisher at this date, points to possible Neapolitan influence on d'India in his formative years, and the first volume of madrigals reinforces this suspicion. His setting there of Crud'Amarilli suggests that Artusi could have singled it out instead of Monteverdi's setting for its handling of dissonance. At the words 'io mi morrò tacendo' in the same piece, however, the harmonic language involving double chromatic inflection is decidedly more reminiscent of Gesualdo and some of his Neapolitan contemporaries.

Alfred Einstein has suggested that d'India was Gesualdo's 'most outspoken and unmistakable' successor, but this opinion appears to be based on a knowledge of the first volume alone. While there is evidence in the later books of this stylistic connection it is as intermittent as it is conspicuous. As late as the seventh book (1624), d'India's setting of a text used by Gesualdo, Ecco morirò dunque, is an open homage to Gesualdo. Earlier, in book 3 (1615), his setting of Mercè grido piangendo (ex.3*a*) invites a direct comparison with Gesualdo's setting of the same text, not because of chromaticism but because of the breathless phrasing of an essentially chordal style and the flagrant use at 'piangendo' of a momentarily isolated 6-4 chord – surely a direct challenge to Gesualdo's style. The descending line with repeated notes at 'ahi, lasso, io vengo meno' and the employment of a falling 7th at 'morrò dunque tacendo' anticipate d'India's monody on the same text in his third book of Musiche of 1618 (ex.3*b*) and emphasize the relationship between polyphonist and monodist.

As the title-page of d'India's third madrigal book (1615) makes clear, the continuo part, optional for the first 12 pieces in the volume, is obligatory for the last eight. But surprisingly there are no such pieces in his fourth, fifth and seventh books, and indeed the style of this music does not suggest a continuo part. Other characteristics, however, are endorsed in these volumes. Strana armonia d'amore (book 4), to a text by Marino, is one of d'India's most curious pieces. It displays a kinship through its conflicting key signatures with Rore's Crudele, acerba, inexorabil morte, and with Marenzio's O voi che sospirate through enharmonic progressions, but it promotes a language of consistently greater tension and expressive urgency.

In other madrigals in books 2–7 d'India variously proclaimed his relationship with Gesualdo, Marenzio, Wert and Monteverdi: Gesualdo largely in harmonic manner and in phraseology, Marenzio and Wert in texture, and Monteverdi in rhythmic and melodic figuration and in treatment of dissonance. The admixture is sometimes complete within a single madrigal. Other madrigals tend to develop one tendency or another, but from the third book Wert and Monteverdi – especially through their prominent use of declamatory repeated notes and textural dialogue – are evidently the prevailing influences.

It was in his eighth and last book (1624) that d'India simultaneously returned to the continuo madrigal and used Guarini's Il pastor fido for the most extended madrigal cycle he ever wrote. He followed the practice of other composers of the time in that he chose not to set the impressive extended choruses but turned instead to the soliloquies and narrative passages. In book 8 the concertato madrigal provides the ideal medium for such texts. In the concluding piece, Silvio, come son lassa, d'India adopted solo writing more conspicuously than in any other piece in the cycle. Not just a texture but a relationship between voice and character may be apprehended here. In the context of the continuo madrigal, monody and polyphony and verisimilitude of character and choral declamation are united: in fact this is a miniature operatic scene, unlike anything else that d'India – or Marenzio, Wert or Monteverdi for that matter – ever achieved in a Pastor fido setting. He enhanced his textures not only with the melodic freedom of his monodies but with a harmonic language born of his work as a polyphonic composer. The five-part opening of Ferir quel petto (ex.4) in the same cycle illustrates the astonishing music that occasionally results.

It is perhaps reasonable that d'India has been remembered mainly for his monodies, yet his compelling personality can be understood only by complementary appraisal of his ensemble madrigals, which in some respects are no less 'modern' than his monodies and also show, as does the output of, for example, Monteverdi, that the basso continuo could not totally replace the need for genuine polyphony or a precisely notated harmonic vocabulary. In the preface to his final publication, the 1627 volume of motets, d'India lamented that composers increasingly tended to delight in facile melodies rather than attempt the ingenious elaborations of genuine counterpoint. His three books of motets, which include works for two to six voices, illustrate the same range of textures as the madrigals, some with continuo, some without. Several of the motets illustrate his craftsmanship as well as his lyric gifts: his sacred output may be somewhat uneven in quality, but pieces such as Timor et tremor, Sub tuum praesidium and Dilectus meus are the work of a composer who had learnt much from both Venetian and Roman practice.

Ex.4 Ottavo libro de madrigali, 5vv (1624)

D'India's polyphonic works, and especially the madrigals, offer vivid proof that not all the most forceful and impressive music of early 17th-century Italy was produced in the genres of monody and opera. He demonstrated the stylistic compatibility of the styles of Marenzio, Wert, Gesualdo and Monteverdi and blended them more tellingly than did any other composer. In his work the seeming opposition of late mannerist gesture and early Baroque texture is laid bare as a myth, and subtle developments in style and taste are thereby illuminated.

WORKS

Editions: Sigismondo d'India, ed. J. Joyce and G. Watkins, MRS, ix, x, xv etc. (1980–) [J]

S. d'India: Madrigal a cinque voci, libro I, ed. F. Mompellio, CMI, x (1942) [M]

Sigismondo d'India: The First Five Books of Madrigals in Five Parts, ed. J. Steele and S. Court (New York, 1997–) [S]

SECULAR SONGS AND DUETS

all ed. in J ix

Le musiche, 1, 2vv, bc (hpd/chit/arpa doppia/other insts) (Milan, 1609) [1609]
Le musiche, 2vv, bc (Venice, 1615) [1615]
Le musiche ... libro III, 1, 2vv, bc (Milan, 1618) [1618]
Le musiche, con alcune arie, con l'alfabetto per la chitarra ... libro IV, 1, 2vv, bc (chit/hpd/arpa doppia/other insts) (Venice, 1621) [1621]
Le musiche, con alcune arie, con l'alfabetto per la chitarra ... libro, V, 1v, bc (chit/hpd/arpa doppia/other insts) (Venice, 1623) [1623]

for 1v

Ahi! chi fia che consoli, 1618; Amico, hai vinto (B. Tasso), 1621; Ancidetemi pur (d'India), 1623; Andate a mitigar, 1609; Apertamente dice la gente (Chiabrera), 1609; Arditi baci miei (Leoni), 1618; Bellissima Dori, 1609; Ben'è ver ch'ei pargoleggia (Chiabrera), 1609; Cara mia cetra andianne, 1609; Che farai, Meliseo? (Sannazaro), 1609; Che stringo? ah' dove sono? (d'India), 1621; Che veggio, ohimè, che miro? (d'India), 1621; Come'è soave cosa (Guarini), 1618; Crud'Amarilli, che col nome ancora (Guarini), 1609; Da l'onde del mio pianto, 1609; Di quel rosignuolo, 1621; Donna i' vorrei dir molto (Marino), 1609; Donna, mentr'io vi miro (Guarini), 1609; Donna, siam rei di morte (Marino), 1618

Ecco la luce (Chiabrera), 1609; E pur tu parti (Castellano), 1618; Ferma, ascolta, Licori, 1609; Ferma, Dorinda mia, 1609; Forsennata gridava (Tasso), 1609; Forse vien fuor l'aurora, 1609; Giunto a la tomba (Tasso), 1618; Hor che 'l ciel (Petrarch), 1618; Infelice Didone (d'India), 1623, inc. polyphonic version I-MOe; Intenerite voi, lagrime mie (Rinuccini), 1609; Io che del ciel, 1623; Io son del duol sì vinto (Pocaterra), 1609; Io veggio pur pietade ancora (Guarini), 1618; Io viddi in terra (Petrarch), 1609

Lagrimat'occhi miei (Villifranchi), 1618; Là tra le selve, 1609; Là tra 'l sangue (Tasso), 1609; Ma che? squallid'e oscuro (Tasso), 1609; Mentre che'l cor (Petrarch), 1621; Mercè grido piangendo, 1618; Mirate dal gran tronco (Marino), 1609; Misera me fia vero (d'India), 1623; Misera non credea (Tasso), 1609; Nelle guancie di rose, 1609; O bella destra (Tasso), 1618; O ben mio, dove sei? (Caccianemici), 1618; Occhi begli, et amorosi, 1609; Occhi, convien morire, 1618; O che gradita, 1623; O del cielo d'amor unico sole, 1623; O gioia de' mortali, 1623; Oh quanto in sua beltà, 1609; O primavera, gioventù dell'anno (O dolcezz'amarissime d'Amore, Ma se le mie speranze, Qui pur vedrolla, O lungamente sospirato) (Guarini), 1609; O se torna io mio sol, 1609

Pallidetta qual viola è (Ferranti), 1621; Piange, madonna (Marino), 1609; Pianget', occhi miei lassi (Petracci), 1609; Piangono al pianger mio (Rinuccini), 1609; Piansi e cantai (Bembo), 1621; Qual fiera si crudel (Sannazaro), 1609; Quell'infedele (Querini), 1621; Quella vermiglia rosa (Rinuccini), 1609; Questo dardo, quest'arco, 1623; Riede la primavera (Marino), 1609; Scherniscimi, crudele (Marino), 1618; Se bel rio (Chiabrera), 1609; Se 'n me donna movete, 1609; Sfere fermate, 1623; Son gli accenti ch'ascolto, 1609; Sovente all'hor (E diceva piangendo, Forse averrà) (Tasso), 1609; Sprezzami, bionda (Ferranti), 1621; Sù, sù, destati, Clori, 1623

Torna, dunque, deh torna (Marino), 1621; Torna il sereno zefiro, 1623; Tu mi lasci, o cruda (Bonardo), 1621; Tu parti, ahi lasso (Marino), 1609; Tutto il dì piango (Petrarch), 1618; Una placid'auretta, 1609; Un dì soletto (Chiabrera), 1609; Vaghe faville, 1609; Voglio il mio duol scoprir (Ferranti), 1621; Voi ch'ascoltate (Petrarch), 1618; Vorrei baciarti, o Filli (Marino), 1609; Vostro fui, vostro son (Tasso), 1609

for 2vv

Alla guerra d'amore (Marino), 1615; Ardo lassa o non ardo (Ma se non è piacer, Ma se quest'è pensier, Colpa mia fora ben, Amo o non amo, Io gelo, dunque io ardo, È gentil cosa Amor, Anzi amiamo) (Marino), 1615; Argo non vide mai (D'auro ha, Così qualhor, Hor dalla nube, Fa nove crespe l'aura, Stassi l'avaro sguardo, Dolce color, Ma nella bocca) (Tasso), 1615; Che fai, Tirsi gentile (Marino), 1609; Chi nudrisce tua speme (Chiabrera), 1615; Della nascente aurora, 1618; Dove potrò mai gir, 1609; Ecco Filli mia bella, 1615; Fresch'herbette novelle (Gualtierotti), 1609

La mia Filli crudel, 1615; Langue al vostro languir (Guarini), 1615; Occhi della mia vita, 1621; O leggiadr'occhi, 1615; Porto celato il mio nobil pensier (Nudrisco il mesto cor, Giamai l'alma respira, Così per ben amar), 1615; Questa mia Aurora, 1618; Soccors'ohimè ben mio, 1618; Sù, sù, prendi la cetra, 1615; Voi bacciatrici, 1615

MADRIGALS ETC.

Il primo libro de madrigali, 5vv (Milan, 1606) [1606]
Villanelle alla napolitana, libro I, 3–5vv (Naples, 1608, lost; 2/1610) [1610]
Libro secondo de madrigali, 5vv (Venice, 1611) [1611]
Libro secondo delle villanelle alla napolitana, 3–5vv (Venice, 1612) [1612]
Il terzo libro de madrigali con il suo basso continuo da sonar con diversi instromenti da corpo a beneplacito; ma necessariamente per gli 8 ultimi 5vv, bc, inst (Venice, 1615) [1615]
Il quarto libro de madrigali, 5vv (Venice, 1616) [1616a]
Il quinto libro de madrigali, 5vv (Venice, 1616) [1616b]
Le musiche e balli, 4vv, bc (Venice, 1621) [1621]
Settimo libro de madrigali, 5vv (Rome, 1624) [1624a]
Ottavo libro de madrigali, 5vv, bc (Rome, 1624) [1624b]

A Dio, Filli, ben mio, 1621; A gli amori, 3vv, 1612; Ah ch'io ardo a bei lumi, 1624a; Ah con che novi inganni, 1624a; Ahi Filli, non credevi, 3vv, 1610; Ahi per uscir di pene, 3vv, 1610; A le gemme, ai tesori, 1621; Alla bella cagion de' miei martiri, 3vv, 1612; Alme luci beate, 1624b, J x; Al nascer mio per sort'iniqu'e fella, 3vv, 1610; Al partir del mio sole (Guarini), 1606, S i, M; Al tuo vagho pallore, 1616a; Al vostro dolce azzurro (Tasso), 1616a; Amiam, Fillide, amiamo (Guarini), 1611, S ii; Amor fatto di neve, 1616b; Amorosi miei sol', 5vv, 1610; Andianne a premer latte (Manno), 1611, S ii; Anima del cor mio, 3vv, 1612; Ardemmo insieme, bella donna et io (Guarini), 1615, J xv, S iii; Aure placid'e volanti, 1621

Belle dive ai suoni, 4vv, 1612; Candidete viole, 1611, S ii; Care note amorose, 3vv, 1610; Chiari lumi del ciel, 3vv, 1612; Ch'io non t'ami (Guarini), 1606, S i, M; Chi per sentier alpestre (Lodovico d'Agliè), 1621; Chi vuol haver felice (Guarini), 1615, J xv, S iii; Cor mio, deh non languire (Guarini), 1606, S i, M; Crud Amarilli, che col nome ancora (Guarini), 1606, S ii, M; Crudel, perchè mi fuggi?, 1611, S ii; Crudel, se si m'odiate, 1611, S ii; Cura gelata e ria (Guarini), 1616b; Da che l'alba i poggi indora (d'Agliè), 1621; Da l'animata rosa, 1611, S ii; Da ria man al tuo sen, 1624a; Deh chi mi fa languire, 1615, J xv, S iii; Deh s'io v'ho dato, 1615, J xv, S iii; Dhe, poi ch'era nei fati (Guarini), 1616a; Dispietata pietate (Tasso), 1615, J xv, S iii; Dite del foco mio, 1624a; Dolci e bei fratelli amori, 3vv, 1612; Donna, longe da voi (Tasso), 1616a; Donna, quanto più a dentro (Tasso), 1615, J xv, S iii; Dorinda, ah dirò mia (Guarini), 1624b, J x; Dove, ah dove te n' vai?, 1615, J xv, S iii; Dove fuggi, crudel, 3vv, 1612; Dove misero mai (Chiabrera), 1616a; Dov'è quel sol, 1621; Dove son io?, 1615, J xv, S iii; Dovrò dunque morire, 1615, J xv, S iii

Ecco autunno, 1621; Ecco Cintia che torna, 1624b, J x, S iii; Ecco il sol che ne vien fuori, 1621; Ecco il sol, mirate homai, 1621; Ecco l'Aurora, 3vv, 1612; Ecco l'onde d'argento, 1616b; Ecco morirò dunque, 1624a; Ecco un legato d'amore, 1621; È partito il mio bene (Marino), 1615, J xv, S iii; Felice chi vi mira, 3vv, 1610; Felice chi vi mira (Guarini), 1606, S i, M; Felice primavera (Tasso), 1616b; Ferir quel petto Silvio (Guarini), 1624b, J x; Feritevi, ferite (Marino), 1611, S ii; Fiero Nume, 1621; Fillide mia, de la tua bianca mano, 3vv, 1610; Filli, mirando il cielo, 1606, S i, M; Filli, nel tuo partire, 3vv, 1610; Fiume, ch'a l'onde tue (Ongaro), 1606, S i, M; Foglio de' miei pensieri (Marino), 1611, S ii; Fronde e fiori novelli, 4vv, 1612; Fronde, tremole odorate, 1621; Fuggi, mio core (Marino), 1611, S ii; Fugg'io quel disleale, 1616b; Fuor d'amor non s'è vivo, 1611, S ii

Gioite, voi prole, 1621; Gite al ciel del mio amor, 3vv, 1612; Godea del sol, 1624b, J x; Guerrieri vestiti, 1621; Ha di serp'l velen, 1606, S i, M; Hoggi nacque ben mio (Guarini), 1616b; Hor ch'è giunto il partire, 1616a; Hor che lungi da voi (Chiabrera), 1611, S ii; Hor che per l'onde, 1621; Hor chi fia, 4vv, 1612; I forti scudi, 1621; Il sol d'honore, 1621; Indarno Febo il suo bell'oro (Chiabrera), 1615, J xv, S iii; Intenerite voi, lagrime mie (Rinuccini), 1606, S i, M; Interdette speranz'e van desio (Sannazaro), 1606, S i, M; Io ardo e l'ardor mio, 3vv, 1610; Io mi sento morir (Guarini), 1616b; Io mi son giovinett'e rido, 1615, J xv, S iii; Io moro, e consolato (Guarini), 1624a; Io parto, anima mia, 1624a; Io parto si ma parte meco (Marino), 1611, S ii; Ite, sospiri ardenti, 1624a; I vostri dolci sguardi, 3vv, 1610

Là dove sono i pargoletti amori (Tasso), 1616b; La giovinetta scorza (Tasso), 1616b; Langue l'anima mia, 1624a; Lasso, dicea Fileno, 1615, J xv, S iii; Le più belle citelle (Guarini), 1616b; Lidia, ti lasso

(Marino), 1624b, J x; Lilla, un bacio ti chiesi, 1624a; Lume di due serene e giovinette, amorose pupille (Chiabrera), 1616a; Ma che tardi, Mirtillo (Guarini), 1616a; Ma con chi parl', ahi lassa? (Guarini), 1606, S i, M; Madonna, udite (Guarini), 1616b; Ma se con la pietà (Guarini), 1624b, J x; Mercè grido piangendo, 1615, J xv, S iii; Messaggier di speranza, 1616a; Mirate nel cielo notturno (d'Agliè), 1621; Ne Amor sì acuti strali, 3vv, 1610; Nei vostri dolci baci (Tasso), 1616a; Ne le grotte, 1621; Non da l'Indiche vene, 1624a; Non è di gentil core, 1615, J xv, S iii; Non più nell'horide selve, 1621; Non più saette ardenti, 4vv, 1610; Non più veda, 1621; Non saettar più amore, 3vv, 1610

O aventurosi amanti, 1621; O begl'occhi, o pupilette, 1621; O bramato Arione, 1621; Occhi belli, occhi sereni, 5vv, 1610; Occhi de la mia vita, 1624a; Occhi, de' miei desiri, 3vv, 1612; O chiome errante (Marino), 1611, S ii; O com'è dolce il gioir, 1621; O dei alpi alteri numi, 3vv, 1612; O de numi altero Nume, 4vv, 1612; O de più fertil colle, 5vv, 1612; O di Pindo almo cantore, 3vv, 1612; O dolce e care spene, 3vv, 1612; O felice a sì bel lume, 1621; O fortunata rosa, 1616a; O fortunati miei dolci sospiri, 3vv, 1610; O fugace, o superba, 1615, J xv, S iii; O gioia de mortali, 5vv, 1612; Oh che luce, oh che gioia, 1611, S ii; Ombros'e care selve (Guarini), 1615, J xv, S iii; O piaggie selvaggie, 1621; O rimembranza amara (Rasi), 1615, J xv, S iii

Pallidetto mio sole (Marino), 1624b, J x; Pargoletta è colei (Marino), 1616a; Parlo, miser, o taccio? (Guarini), 1606, S i, M; Pensier che nato sei, 1624a; Perchè non mi mirate, 1615, J xv, S iii; Per lo soverchio affanno, 1614a; Presa fu l'alma al laccio, 3vv, 1610; Pur venisti, cor mio (Guarini), 1606, S i, M; Quale Amor mercede, 1621; Quando farai ritorno, 3vv, 1612; Quando mia cruda sorte (Guarini), 1616b; Quando quel bianco lino (Marino), 1616b; Quando tra le dorate, 1616b; Quasi tra rose e gigli, 1606, S i, M; Quel augellin che canta (Guarini), 1615, J xv, S iii; Quel neo, quel vago neo (Marino), 1616b; Qui fra l'herbette e i fior', 4vv, 1612; Ridono per li prati, 1624b

Scherzan qui leggiadri amori, 3vv, 1610; Schiera d'aspri martiri (Chiabrera), 1611, S ii; Se la doglia e 'l martire (Marino), 1616a; Sentiassi, Eurillo, 1611, S ii; Se tu felice sei, 1624a; Se tu, Silvio crudel, mi saettasti (Guarini), 1624b, J x; Silvio, come son lassa (Guarini), 1642b, J x; Son sì belle le rose, 4vv, 1610; Sospir che del bel petto (Marino), 1616b; Sovra le verdi chiome (Tasso), 1616b; Strana armonia d'amore (Marino), 1616a; Stringi'l forte amante, 1621; Sù, ninfe leggiadre (d'Agliè), 1621; Sù rapidi, correte, 1621; Tempesta di dolcezza (Marino), 1611, S ii; Tornate, o cari baci (Marino), 1611, S ii; Tosco, non foco (Marino), 1616a; Tu m'uccidi, cor mio, 3vv, 1612; Tu non miri, Coridon, 1621; Udite, lagrimosi spirti (Guarini), 1624a; Uscite a rimirar, ninfe e pastori, 3vv, 1610; Vagheggiate, ignote genti, 1621; Vago cielo d'amore, 1624a; Voi ché la morte mia negl'occhi havete (Marino), 1616a; Voi dissi e sospirando (Guarini), 1616b

SACRED

Novi concentus ecclesiastici, 2, 3vv, bc (Venice, 1610) [1610a]
Liber secundus sacrorum concentuum, 3–6vv (Venice, 1610) [1610b]
Liber primus motectorum, 4, 5vv, bc (Venice, 1627) [1627]
Missa 'Domine, clamavi ad te', 1626, lost

Ad te Domine levavi, 4vv, 1627; Angelus Domini, 4vv, 1627; Anima mea quam bonum, 2vv, 1610a; Assumpta est Maria, 4vv, 1627; Audite omnes gentes, 2vv, 1610a; Beata es Virgo Maria, 2vv, 1610a; Beati immaculati, 4vv, 1627; Circumdederunt me, 4vv, 1627; Clamavi ad te Domine, 3vv, 1610a; Deus meus, 4vv, 1627; Dilectus meus, 2vv, 1610a; Diligam te Domine, 2vv, 1610a; Domine Deus meus, clamavi, 2vv, 1610a; Domine Deus meus, in te speravi, 3vv, 1610a; Domine Deus vite mee, 4vv, 1627; Domine prevenisti, 4vv, 1627; Domine, probasti me, 5vv, 1610b

Ecce Sponsus venit, 2vv, 1610a; Ego sum panis vivus, 4vv, 1610b; Et vidi alterum angelum, 4vv, 1610b, 1627; Exaudi Deus orationem meam, 4vv, 1627; Exaudi Domine vocem meam, 4vv, 1627; Filiae Hierusalem, 3vv, 1610a; Gaude Maria, 4vv, 1627; Heu mihi Domine, 4vv, 1627; Hodie Christus, 4vv, 1627; In principio creavit Deus, 4vv, 1627, GB-Och; Iste cognovit, 4vv, 1627; Isti sunt duae olivae, 2vv, 1610a; Isti sunt duo viri, 2vv, 1610a; Isti sunt qui viventes, 2vv, 1610a; Isti sunt viri sancti, 2vv, 1610a; Istorum est, 4vv, 1627; Lauda anima mea, 6vv, 1610b; Legem pone mihi, 5vv, 1610b

Magnum haereditatis, 3vv, 1610b; Memento nostri Domine, 2vv, 1610a; O admirabile commercium, 2vv, 1610a; O altitudo, 3vv, 1610b; O anima mea, 2vv, 1610a; O bone Iesu quid fecesti, 2vv, 1610a; O dulcis Iesu quam amabilis, 2vv, 1610a; O patria mea, 2vv, 1610a; Osculare o beata peccatrix, 2vv, 1610a; Pacem relinquo vobis, 5vv, 1610b; Pastor egregie, 4vv, 1610b; Plorabitis et flebitis, 3vv, 1610a; Proba me Domine, 2vv, 1610a; Quatuor animalia, 6vv, 1610b; Qui coelorum contines, 5vv, 1610b

Salve o pia mater, 2vv, 1610a; Sancta Maria, ora pro nobis, 4vv, 1627; Sitivit in te, 2vv, 1610a; Sit tibi laus, 3vv, 1610b; Sub tuum praesidium, 3vv, 1610b; Super flumina Babylonis, 3vv, 1610a; Timor et tremor, 5vv, 1610b; Tradent enim, 4vv, 1627; Transfige Domine, 4vv, 1627; Tu es gloria mea, 4vv, 1610b; Tui recordatio nominis, 2vv, 1610a; Veniens de Libano, 2vv, 1610a; Veni sponsa Christi, 4vv, 1627; Venite exultemus, 3vv, 1610a; Vias tuas Domine, 3vv, 1610a; Videte miraculum, 3vv, 1610a

STAGE

Zalizura (pastoral, L. d'Agliè), inc., I-Tn; title and authorship doubtful, see Walker, 1990
Sant' Eustachio (sacred drama, L. d'Agliè), Rome, 1625, lost Canzonetta maritima (B. Morendo), Piacenza, 1610, possibly by d'India, according to MGG1

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EinsteinIM; FortuneISS; SchmitzG

G. Rua: 'Un episodio letteratura alla corte di Carlo Emanuele I', Giornale ligustico di archeologia, storia e letteratura, xx (1893), 321–63, 401–40

G. Rua: Poeti della corte di Carlo Emanuele I di Savoia (Turin, 1899)

A. Solerti: 'Feste musicali alla corte di Savoia nella prima metà del secolo XVII', RMI, xi (1904), 675–724

E. Schmitz: 'Zur Frühgeschichte der lyrischen Monodie Italiens im 17. Jahrhundert', JbMP 1911, 35–48

L. Torri: 'Il primo melodramma a Torino', RMI, xxvi (1919), 1–35

S. Cordero di Pamparato: 'I musici alla corte di Carlo Emanuele I di Savoia', Biblioteca della Società storica subalpina, cxxi (1930), 31–142

O. Tiby: 'The Polyphonic School in Sicily of the 16th–17th Century', MD, v (1951), 203–11

N. Fortune: 'Italian Secular Monody from 1600 to 1635: an Introductory Survey', MQ, xxxix (1953), 171–95

F. Mompellio: 'Sigismondo d'India e il suo primo libro di "Musiche da cantar solo"', CHM, i (1953), 113–34

N. Fortune: 'Sigismondo d'India: an Introduction to his Life and Works', PRMA, lxxxi (1954–5), 29–47

F. Mompellio: '"Opere recitative, balletti et inventioni" di Sigismondo d'India per la corte di Savoia', CHM, ii (1956–7), 291–6

F. Mompellio: Sigismondo d'India, musicista palermitano (Milan, 1957)

S. Reiner: 'Preparations in Parma, 1618, 1627–28', MR, xxv (1964), 273–301

J. Racek: Stilprobleme der italienischen Monodie (Prague, 1965)

S. Reiner: '"Vi sono molt'altre mezz'Arie … "', Studies in Music History: Essays for Oliver Strunk, ed. H. Powers (Princeton, NJ, 1968), 241–58

M. Bristiger: 'O duetach Sigismondo d'India (1609–1615)', Polsko-włoskie materiały muzyczne/Argomenti musicali polacco-italiani: Warsaw 1971 and Bardolino 1972 [Pagine, ii (1974)], 239–52

G. Watkins: 'Towards an Opus Ultimum', MRS, x (1980), p.ix–xxix

J. Joyce: The Monodies of Sigismondo d'India (Ann Arbor, 1981)

R. Lindell: 'Das Marcus Sitticus von Hohenems gewidmete dritte Madrigalbuch von Sigismondo d'India', Musik (1982), 67

D. Arnold: 'The Sacred Music of Sigismondo d'India', La musica sacra in Lombardia nella prima metà del Seicento: Como 1985, 129–43

C. Bongiovanni: 'Il terzo libro delle Musiche di Sigismondo d'India', NRMI, xxiii (1989), 303–24

Sigismondo d'India: Erice, Sicily, 1990 [incl. T. Walker: 'Apollo nelle Indie: Appunti sul "primo melodramma" alla corte dei Savoia', 175–98]

S. Schmalzriedt: 'Manierismus als "Kunst des Überbietens": Anmerkungen zu Monteverdis und D'Indias Madrigalen "Cruda Amarilli"', Festschrift Ulrich Siegele zum 60. Geburtstag, ed. R. Faber and others (Kassel, 1991), 51–66

G. Watkins: 'Sigismondo D'India and Marino: "Strano armonia d'amore"', The Sense of Marino: Literature, Fine Arts and Music of the Italian Baroque, ed. F. Guardiani (Ottawa, 1994), 487–504

W. Crannell: The Strophic Variation in the Monodies of Giulio Caccini, Jacopo Peri, and Sigismondo d'India (diss., U. of Missouri, 1995)

G. Watkins: 'D'India, the Peripatetic', Con Che Soavità: Studies in Italian Opera, Song and Dance, 1580–1740, ed. I. Fenlon and T. Carter (Oxford, 1995), 41–72

T. Carter: 'Intriguing Laments: Sigismondo d'India, Claudio Monteverdi, and Dido alla parmigiana (1628)', JAMS, xlix (1996), 32–69

JOHN JOYCE, GLENN WATKINS

D'Indy, Vincent. See INDY, VINCENT D'.

Dinescu, Violeta (b Bucharest, 13 July 1953). Romanian composer, active in Germany. After studying composition with Marbe at the Bucharest Academy (BMus 1977, MMus 1978), she taught at the George Enescu Lyceum (1978–82). In 1982 she received a grant to study in the Federal Republic of Germany and settled there. She taught at the Hochschule für Kirchenmusik in Heidelberg (1987–90), the Frankfurt Conservatory (1989–91) and the Hochschule für Kirchenmusik in Bayreuth (1990–96); in 1996 she became professor of applied composition at Oldenburg University. Her works have been performed worldwide and she has been awarded many commissions and prizes. She has lectured in Europe, South Africa and the USA.

Dinescu is receptive to new compositional techniques and systems without allowing her inspiration to become subservient to them. She achieved stylistic individuality during the post-serial period when Romanian composers asserted their avant-garde tendencies against the restrictive totalitarian ideology. Her time spent collecting and studying Romanian folk music (1972–8) has provided a vital reservoir of musical material, ranging from rhythmic characteristics such as rubato or a constantly varying pulse to improvisational development, heterophonic techniques and a rhapsodic quality of melody. Though this folk influence plays a central role it does not limit her compositional language, which is often complex, experimental and rich in virtuoso instrumental writing. Dinescu often employs mathematical operations in her works, notably in Anna Perenna (1979), in which numerical sequences and ratios generate the musical content and define the parameters of the work.

WORKS
(selective list)

Dramatic: Hunger und Durst (chbr op, 3 scenes, R. Haas, after E. Ionesco), 1985, Freiburg, 1 Feb 1986; Der Kreisel (ballet, O. Gööck, T. Schneider, G. Volz, after E. Mörike: Die Historie von der schönen Lau), 1984, Ulm, 26 May 1985; Der 35. Mai (children's op), 1986, Dresden, 30 Nov 1986; Tabu (score to 1931 film, dir. F.W. Murnau), 1988; Eréndira (chbr op, M. Rothmaier, after G.G. Márquez), 1991, Stuttgart, 18 March 1992

Orch: Transformations, 1977; Anna Perenna, 1979; Memories, str, 1980; Akrostichon, 1983; Joc [Dance], 1985; Map 67, chbr orch, 1987; Fresco, 1989; L'Ora X, 1990; Vortex – Wolken I–III, 1998

Chbr: Arabesques, fl, perc, 1980; Dialogo, fl, va, 1981; Alternanţe, wind qnt, 1982; Echos II, pf, perc, 1982; Nakris, sax qt, 1985; Quasar Paal 2, vc, Mutabor cptr-org, 1985; Scherzo da fantasia I–X, 2 str insts, 1985; Ostrov I, va qt, 1987; Terra Lonhdana, fl, pf qnt, 1987; Ostrov II, cl qt, 1989; Rand, cl, va, 1996

Solo inst: Echos I, pf, 1979; Satya, 1981: I vn, II bn, III db, IV cl; Echos III, org, 1982; Din cimpoiu [On the Bagpipe], va, 1984; New Rochelle, DX7 synth, 1987; Aretusa, vn, 1988; Cime lointaine, cl, 1994; Reversing Fields, cl, 1996

Vocal: Conc., 1v, orch, 1986; Spring Song, children's chorus, fls, perc, 1988; Concertino, 1v, orch, 1988; Pfingstoratorium (D. Koller), 5 solo vv, 2 choruses, orch, 1993; Ţara doinei, chorus; songs and chorus works

Principal publisher: Ricordi

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Sonntag: Violeta Dinescu (Kassel, 1984)

B. Schmalbrock: Violeta Dinescu: Persönlichkeit, Werk, Analysen (Essen, 1986)

OCTAVIAN COSMA

Ding Shande (b Kunshan, Jiangsu, 12 Nov 1911; d Shanghai, 8 Dec 1995). Chinese composer. He studied the piano with Boris Zakharov and composition with Huang Zi then Wolfgang Frankel at the Shanghai Conservatory. After studying with Noël Gallon, Aubin and Boulanger at the Paris Conservatoire, he returned to Shanghai in 1949 to work as a music teacher and eventually became deputy director of the Conservatory. Ding was an eminent composer, pianist, teacher and theorist in China; his Romantic piano miniatures, particularly those for children, are popular with the Chinese urban middle-class. One of his orchestral works, The Long March Symphony (1959–62), which depicts the pursuit of the Communist Army by Nationalist Army units in the mid-1930s, won him a gold record in Hong Kong. He wrote mainly for Western instruments in an idiom inspired by 19th-century and particularly Russian Romantic music; some of his late piano works are reminiscent of Skryabin. Though his career was interrupted in the early 1960s by political upheavals and the ensuing Cultural Revolution (1966–76), he resumed composing in 1978. His style was barely affected by the influx of contemporary Western music into China in the later years of his life.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

KdG (Naixiong Liao)

Mao Yurun and Zhao Jiagui: Dongfang de xuanlü: Zhongguo zhuming zuoqujia Ding Shande de yinyue shengya [Oriental melody: the musical career of China's famous composer Ding] (Hong Kong, 1983)

Zheng Biying, ed.: Ding Shande de yinyue chuangzuo: huiyi yu fenxi [The music of Ding: recollections and analyses] (Shanghai, 1986)

FRANK KOUWENHOVEN

Dinicu, Grigoraş (b Bucharest, 3 April 1889; d Bucharest, 28 March 1949). Romanian violinist and composer. He studied at the Bucharest Conservatory (1902–6) with Kiriac-Georgescu (theory and solfège), Rudolf Malcher, Gheorghe A. Dinicu and Carl Flesch (violin), Dimitrie A. Dinicu (chamber music) and Alfonso Castaldi (orchestra) and later with Cecilia Nitzulescu-Lupu and Vasile Filip (violin). He was a violinist in the orchestra of the Ministry of Public Instruction (1906–8) and solo violinist with the Bucharest PO, directed popular music concerts (1906–46) and was leader of the Bucharest Pro Musica (1938–40). In addition, he made tours abroad, collected and arranged Romanian popular melodies and composed several pieces for violin and piano. Among these Hora staccato (1906) has achieved particular popularity as a violin encore; others include Hora spiccato, Hora de concert, Improvisation à la Dinicu, Hora martisorului, Hora de la Chiţorani, Hora Expoziţiei de Paris, Orientale à la tzigane and Sirba lui Tanţi.

ANDREW LAMB

Dinis [Denis], Dom, King of Portugal (b 1261; ruled 1279–1325; d 1325). Portuguese ruler and troubadour. He was the grandson of Alfonso X of Castile and León, by whom he was knighted. He married Isabel of Aragon. His court was the last refuge of the Galician-Portuguese lyric tradition. Dom Dinis's extant literary output includes 137 compositions: 73 cantigas de amor, 51 cantigas de amigo, 10 satirical songs and 3 pastorelas. His poetry, written in Galician-Portuguese, was highly regarded in his own time and beyond; although rooted in the indigenous lyric tradition, it betrays direct influence from such troubadours as Bernart de Ventadorn and Jaufre

Rudel. The music survives only for the seven cantigas de amor in a fragmentary folio detached from a lost songbook written about 1300, found by Harvey Sharrer at the Arquivo Nacional da Torre do Tombo, Lisbon, in 1990. The melodies, whose range is close to an octave, are unusually dense: at the very beginning they tend to be syllabic, but neumatic articulation then becomes the norm; the songs have, on average, three notes per syllable. Some of them follow an inverted-arch contour rarely encountered in troubadour or trouvère sources, in spite of musical influence from both traditions. Influence from ecclesiastical chant seems to have been minimal. Conjunct progression and melodic unisons are predominant, but 3rds are given an important structural role. Most songs include some repetition of musical phrases; the musical forms seem to vacillate between the troubadour oda continua, the Iberian solo refrain forms and the northern French repetitive forms. The notation in the surviving source (derived from pre-Franconian notation, with Iberian traits) allows characterization of Dinis's rhythmic style as generally slow, florid and isosyllabic; this, together with the exalted status of their author and poetic genre, makes these songs unambiguous examples of cantus coronatus as it was adopted in Iberian troubadour circles.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M.P. Ferreira: 'Relatório preliminar sobre o conteúdo musical do fragmento Sharrer', IV Congresso da Associação hispânica de literatura medieval, i (Lisbon, 1991), 35–42

H.L. Sharrer: 'Fragmentos de sete Cantigas d'amor de D. Dinis, musicadas: uma descoberta', ibid, 13–29 [incl. illustration]

E. Gonçalves: 'Denis, Dom', Dicionário da literatura medieval galega e portuguesa, ed. G. Lanciani and G. Tavani (Lisbon, 1993)

M.P. Ferreira and H.L. Sharrer, eds.: Cantus coronatus (forthcoming) [bilingual edn of MS from P-Lant, with facs.]

MANUEL PEDRO FERREIRA

Diniz, Jaime (Cavalcanti) (b Água Preta, Pernambuco, 1 May 1924; d João Pessoa, Paraíba, 26 May 1989). Brazilian musicologist. He studied philosophy at the Olinda Seminary and theology at the Seminário Central do Ipiranga in São Paulo (1950–56), where he also studied the organ with Furio Franceschini and composition with Pedro Sinzig; in the late 1950s he studied the organ, sacred music, composition and musicology with Potiron and Bihan at the Institut Grégorien and the Conservatoire in Paris, and with Anglès at the Pontificio Istituto di Musica Sacra in Rome. On his return to Brazil he established the music department of the Federal University of Pernambuco (1960), where he became the conductor of the university madrigal choir and (from 1962) a lecturer in music history, music education and composition, while also working as a parish priest in Recife. In 1961 he was appointed a member of the Brazilian Academy of Music. His work as a musicologist has revealed hitherto unknown documents and music manuscripts of colonial church music from the states of Pernambuco and Bahia. His discovery in 1967 of the manuscript copy of the Te Deum by the 18th-century composer Luiz Álvares Pinto, one of the earliest extant works of colonial repertory, was an important contribution to the history of Brazilian colonial music. His later writings have concentrated on the music history of Recife and Bahia and the history of church music in Brazil.

WRITINGS

A sinfonia de A. Nepomuceno (Recife, 1954)

Nazareth: estudos analíticos (Recife, 1963)

'Revelação de um compositor brasileiro do século XVIII', YIAIMR, iv (1968), 82–97

Músicos pernambucanos do passado (Recife, 1969–79) [3 vols.]

O Recife e sua música (Recife, 1978)

'Breve notícia sobre música, teatro e dança no Recife', Revista do Instituto arqueológico, histórico e geográfico pernambucano, lii (1979), 9–46

Notas sobre o piano e seus compositores em Pernambuco (Recife, 1980)

'A presença de José Maurício na Irmandade de São Pedro', in J.C. de Andrade Muricy and others: Estudos mauricianos (Rio de Janeiro, 1983), 41–53

Um compositor italiano no Brasil: Joseph Fachinetti (Rio de Janeiro, 1986)

Organistas da Bahia, 1750–1850 (Rio de Janeiro, 1986)

'Gregorio de Souza e Gouvea', Encontro nacional de pesquisa em música III: Ouro Prêto 1987, 33–56

Mestres de capela da Misericórdia da Bahia, 1647–1810 (Salvador, 1993)

EDITIONS

L.Á. Pinto: Te Deum laudamus (Recife, 1968)

Arte de solfejar (Recife, 1977) [facs.; incl. introduction and commentary]

D.B. de Araújo: Memento baiano para côro e orquestra, Estudios baianos, ii (1970), 1–23

GERARD BÉHAGUE

D'Intino, Luciana (b San Vito al Tagliamento, nr Pordenone, 22 Aug 1959). Italian mezzo-soprano. She won attention as a prizewinner at Spoleto and the Maria Callas awards. A début as Azucena in Il trovatore was followed in 1984 with 'a dark-toned Rosina, rather lacking in sparkle' (Opera) at the Macerata Festival. Appearances in rare operatic revivals included the roles of Ernestina in Rossini's L'occasione fa il ladro and Pippo in La gazza ladra, both at Pesaro, and Phaethon in Jommelli's Fetonte at La Scala. She made her American début in 1989 as Fenena in a concert performance of Nabucco at Carnegie Hall in New York, appearing the following year at the Metropolitan as Federica in Luisa Miller. With a steadily broadening concert repertory, D'Intino gained the reputation of an exceptionally musical singer, and it was in this capacity rather than for great volume or opulence of tone that her Eboli won praise in the revival of Don Carlos at La Scala in 1993. Her voice was found rather too light for Dalila at Macerata and Amneris in Buenos Aires, but she has continued to impress in the bel canto repertory, such as I Capuleti e i Montecchi, which she sang at Genoa in 1996. Among her recordings, those of Don Carlos and La gazza ladra (as Lucia), both made 'live', testify to her fine powers of nuance as well as to the beauty of her well-mannered voice.

J.B. STEANE

Diomedes. See CATO, DIOMEDES.

Dionigi, Marco (b Poli, nr Rome; d probably at Parma, shortly before 4 May 1668). Italian music theorist. He settled at Parma, where until 1648 he was a priest at the Collegio di S Girolamo attached to S Pietro Apostolo. Before 1648 he was nominated apostolic prothonotary. On 13 February 1649 he was appointed guardiacoro of the third Office in Parma Cathedral; the cathedral records show that his successor was named on 4 May 1668 because of his death. He wrote a two-part treatise on plainsong, Li primi tuoni, overo Introduttione nel canto fermo (Parma, 1648, enlarged 2/1667). It is a manual for practical use, but it also includes a certain amount of theoretical discussion. The first part concentrates on psalm tones and recitation formulae, while the second, after a survey of the intervals, treats the eight modes in the 'pseudo-classical' tradition, by means of the interval species.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ

N. Pelicelli: 'Musicisti in Parma nel secolo XVII', NA, x (1933), 32–43, esp. 40

AGOSTINO ZIINO/R

Dionysiou. Monastery on MOUNT ATHOS.

Dionysius Trebellianus. See TREIBER, JOHANN PHILIPP.

Dionysus [Dionysos; Bacchus; Bakchos]. Ancient Greek god. He chiefly represents the unreasoning, irresistible life-force. His worship probably came into Greece from both Thrace and Phrygia. Among Homer's Olympians he is a newcomer, seldom mentioned; only one passage in the Iliad (vi.132–6) has any substance. During the 6th century BCE, this Hellenized Thraco-Phrygian deity appropriated the characteristics of Zagreus, a non-Olympian Zeus figure worshipped in Crete, and came under the refining influences of Orphic doctrine (see ORPHEUS), receiving a place of honour at Delphi in the religion of APOLLO. Although the syncretistic relationship to Zagreus suggests a measure of identity with Zeus (see Euripides: Nauck, frag.475), Dionysus was generally taken to be his son, born to Semele.

The mythic tradition concerning his birth, the one circumstantial Homeric reference and the three HOMERIC HYMNS to Dionysus (i, vii and xxvi) foreshadow later references in associating strangeness, violence and madness with him. They do not, however, link him with music; this link was given special prominence in modern thought by Nietzsche's assertion in The Birth of Tragedy that plastic art is the province of Apollo and music that of Dionysus. This has distorted the true picture: on the one hand, Apollo cannot be dissociated from music, and, on the other, the Attic festivals of Dionysus accorded only secondary – though real – importance to choral and instrumental performance (e.g. that of the DITHYRAMB).

The actual relationship between these two deities was complex, as one detailed example may show. Since the Hellenic age, the symbolic distinction – real or supposed – between the Apollonian lyre or kithara and the Dionysiac aulos has influenced the interpretation of Greek culture. The aulos was undeniably the instrument of Dionysus's followers and worshippers, yet in Greek art and literature the god himself is never represented playing it. The 7th-century poet ALCMAN, however, stated that Apollo was an aulos player (Edmonds, frag.83); this is an apparent transference to Apollo of a Dionysiac attribute. Eventually Plato (Laws, ii, 672c8–d3) was to link the two: he maintained that musical consciousness was given to men 'by the Muses, Apollo and Dionysus'. He nevertheless sought to banish the aulos from the god's liturgy (Republic, iii, 399d2–e3). At Athens, such worship had become a quiet and decorous affair; hence Plato tolerated the Phrygian mode (Republic, iii, 399a3–c4), although it was pre-eminently an aulos mode just as the Dorian was a kithara mode (Aristotle, Politics, viii, 1342b1–3). These affinities were an important aspect of the relationship between Apollo and Dionysus. For Aristotle (Politics, viii, 1341a18–1342b5), the festivals of Dionysus, with their emphasis upon drama, were apparently the only proper occasions for the 'exciting' music of the aulos.

Greek vase painters occasionally showed Dionysus, and often his followers, with the BARBITOS (see ALCAEUS).

Dionysus singing ecstatically to the accompaniment of his barbitos and attended by two satyrs playing crotala: detail from a cup attributed to the Brygos Painter, Attic Red-Figure style, c490 BCE (Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris)

The aulos, already discussed, was still more closely associated with the satyrs and maenads who attended him. Clappers (crotala), cymbals and double-headed drums originally had particular connections with his cult. Euripides used the actual metre of Dionysiac cult-hymns in the Bacchae when the maenads sing of their ecstasy, recalling the drums' deep rumble (156) and the clear tones of the aulos (127–8). All these instruments, together with the syrinx, are mentioned by later writers in descriptions of Dionysus's power (e.g. Ovid, Metamorphoses, iv.391–3, and Nonnus, Dionysiaca, xx.327–32; xxiv.151–4). The rhombos, or bullroarer, often associated with the rites of CYBELE, is a Dionysiac instrument in Euripides' Helen (1362–3).

The altar of Dionysus at Olympia was placed with that of the Muses (Pausanias, v.14.x); an inscription from Naxos even gives him Apollo's epithet 'Mousagetēs', 'leader of the Muses'. In Italy, where he was worshipped as Bacchus, music continued to have an important place in his liturgy (Livy, xxxix.8.5–6; Catullus, lxiv.261–4; and Ovid, Metamorphoses, xi.15–18 are representative sources). Roman artists frequently took for their subjects satyrs and maenads, in many instances holding or playing an instrument; the god himself rarely appears. Only upon Greek soil could his cult truly flourish, and it is by virtue of the religious sensibility and musical culture of Greece that we must reckon with Dionysus.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W.F. Otto: Dionysos: Mythos und Kultus (Frankfurt, 1933/R; Eng. trans., 1965)

W.K.C. Guthrie: Orpheus and Greek Religion (London, 1935, 2/1952/R), 110–18

M. Wegner: Das Musikleben der Griechen (Berlin, 1949), 19–22

W.K.C. Guthrie: The Greeks and their Gods (London, 1950, 2/1954/R), 145–82, 199–202

E.R. Dodds: The Greeks and the Irrational (Berkeley and Los Angeles, 1951)

H. Jeanmaire: Dionysos: histoire du culte de Bacchus (Paris, 1951, 2/1970)

G. Wille: Musica romana (Amsterdam, 1967), 53–66, 530–33

W. Burkert: Griechische Religion der archaischen und klassischen Epoche (Stuttgart, 1977; Eng. trans., 1985)
M. Maas and J.M.Snyder: Stringed Instruments of Ancient Greece (New Haven, CT, 1989)

WARREN ANDERSON/THOMAS J. MATHIESEN

Dioxeian (Gk.: 'through a higher [note]'). The earliest Greek name for the interval of a 5th, found in the writings of Philolaos of Crotona (6th–5th century BCE). By the time of Aristoxenos it had been replaced by the term diapente.

Di Paula [di Paula di Catanzaro], Innocentio (b ?Catanzaro, Calabria; fl 1615). Italian composer. He is known only by Libro primo delle canzone villanesche (Naples, 1615[19]), for three voices, which he dedicated from Catanzaro. Most of the pieces in it are settings of four or five four-line stanzas; all have two sections, which in about half the pieces cadence at the same pitch. The pieces are competently written and very short, with only touches of chromaticism and triple metre. The book also includes pieces by Francesca (one) and Fabio Mancuso (four) of Catanzaro, the latter of whom published a book of five-part motets (now lost) at Naples in 1615 (PitoniN).

KEITH A. LARSON

Direct (Fr. guidon; Ger. Wächter; It. guida; Lat. custos). The symbol placed at the end of a staff (or page) to indicate the first note of the next staff. It is found in musical sources from the 11th century onwards, in the earliest manuscripts sometimes as an alternative to using a clef on the next line. It is the equivalent of the 'catchword' in literary works. The direct is sometimes used nowadays without reference to pitch but merely as a sign of continuation, and may therefore be regarded as the musical equivalent of '&c.'. The direct may take one of several slightly varying forms based on the sign later used for the mordent.

RICHARD RASTALL

Direction (Fr.). See CONDUCTING.

Dire Straits. English rock group. Its original members were Mark Knopfler (b Glasgow, 12 Aug 1949; vocals and guitar) his brother David (b Glasgow, 27 Dec 1951; guitar), John Illsley (b Leicester, 24 June 1949; bass guitar) and Pick Withers (drums), but after various personnel changes in the early 1980s the nucleus became Mark Knopfler and Illsley. Their first hit song, Sultans of Swing (Vertigo, 1978), introduced Mark Knopfler's relaxed, drawling vocal style (influenced by Bob Dylan and the American singer-songwriter John Cale) and clipped, melodic guitar solos. The song affectionately described a pub-rock band and showed Knopfler to be a wry and observant lyricist. Subsequently he used these assets to build a reputation for Dire Straits as one of the best-known mainstream rock groups in the world, with multi-million sales for successive albums. The best of these was Brothers in Arms (Vertigo, 1985), which showed Knopfler's range as a writer, through the gently satirical Money for Nothing and the jaunty Walk of Life to the moving and compassionate title song. Knopfler has also had a prolific career as a composer of film soundtracks including Local Hero (Vertigo, 1983) and The Princess Bride (Vertigo, 1987). He was made an OBE in the New Year's Honours, 2000.

DAVE LAING

Direzione (It.). See CONDUCTING.

Dirge. A burial song or (less commonly) one sung in commemoration of the dead; a song of mourning or an instrumental piece expressive of similar sentiments. The word is a contraction of 'dirige', the first word of the first antiphon in the first nocturn at Matins in the Roman Office for the Dead ('Dirige, Domine Deus meus, in conspectu tuo viam meam'). When, as often happened, the invitatorium ('Venite, exsultemus Domino') was omitted, the office would begin directly with the antiphon, and so in late medieval English the word 'dirge' came to be used in reference to the service as a whole. However, as in the similar case of 'placebo' (the initial word at Vespers in the same Office for the Dead), it soon took on a more general meaning and could be used for any song in the vernacular sung at a burial. In this sense a dirge has much the same connotation as a THRENODY or a lament, though each term carries its own shade of meaning. The dirge has perhaps the most doleful character of them all; it is more specifically associated with the time of burial and often has a march-like tread, reminiscent of a funeral procession.

As a poetic form the dirge is peculiarly English, and most settings of dirges are therefore by British composers. The best-known of medieval dirges is the anonymous 15th-century Lyke-wake Dirge from the north of England, which has been set a number of times, notably by Stravinsky in his Cantata (1952) and by Britten in his Serenade (1943). Both settings employ exact repetition to achieve that sense of fateful monotony that might be considered a hallmark of the true dirge, but the two composers employ very different methods to avoid any tedium that might result from this. Stravinsky divided the poem's eight stanzas into four pairs, which he used to form a prelude, postlude and two interludes for other English lyrics, contrasted in mood. Britten's setting is a passacaglia in which the normal roles are reversed, the solo tenor continually repeating the melody, while the orchestral accompaniment changes for each strophe. Its processional character (the tempo marking is 'Alla marcia grave'), and its crescendo to a central climax followed by a gradual lessening of volume and intensity, recall Vaughan Williams's impressive setting of Whitman's Dirge for Two Veterans in his cantata Dona nobis pacem (1936).

Among Shakespearean dirges, that for Fidele in Cymbeline ('Fear no more the heat o' the sun') has attracted several composers. Vaughan Williams set it for two voices and piano in 1922, and Gerald Finzi's setting for baritone and piano (or string orchestra) was included in the cycle Let us Garlands Bring, dedicated to Vaughan Williams on his 70th birthday in 1942. Among purely instrumental dirges must be mentioned the dirge canons which precede and follow the setting of Thomas's Do not go gentle into that good night in Stravinsky's In memoriam Dylan Thomas (1954).

MALCOLM BOYD

Dirigieren (Ger.). See CONDUCTING.

Diringus, Richard. See DERING, RICHARD.

Diruta, Agostino (b *c*1595; d after 1647). Italian friar, organist and composer, nephew and pupil of Girolamo Diruta. In 1617 while still a friar and a student of theology he was organist at S Stefano, Venice. In the dedication of his Messe concertate (22 October 1622) he stated that he had been organist and choirmaster at Asola for two years.

He titled himself as a priest and bachelor of theology. In 1630 he identified himself on a title-page as organist and choirmaster of S Agostino, Rome, a position he still held in 1647, the date of his last known work.

WORKS

Sacrae cantiones, 1–4vv (Venice, 1617)
Davidis exultantis cantica, 1–3vv, op.2 (Venice, 1618)
Messe concertate, 5vv (Venice, 1622)
Compieta concertata, con l'antifone della BVM e con un Miserere, 5vv, bc, op.5 (Venice, 1623)
Sacri motetti a gloria di Giesu et ad honore di Maria, libro primo, 1–2vv, op.6 (Venice, 1630)
Sacri motetti, 1–3vv, bc (org), op.7 (Venice, 1630)
Messa e vespero, 5vv, bc (org), op.9 (Venice, 1630)
Sacrae modulationes Eremitici ordinis Divorum, 2–8vv, op.10 (Rome, 1630)
Salmi intieri per il vespero, 4vv, bc (org), op.12 (Rome, 1630)
Messe concertate, libro secondo, 5vv, bc (org), op.13 (Rome, 1631)
Viridarium marianum in quo Dei parae virginis letaniae et hymni, 4–6vv, bc (org), op.15 (Rome, 1631)
Psalmi vespertini, 3vv, op.16 (Rome, 1633)
Davidicae modulationes, 3vv, bc (org), op.18 (Venice, 1641, 2/1646 with added litanies)
Hymni pro vesperis, totius anni, 4–5vv, org, op.19 (Rome, 1646)
Poesie heroiche morali e sacre, 1–5vv, op.20 (n.p., n.d.) [ded. Rome, 15 Nov 1646]
Il secondo libro de' salmi che si cantano ne' vesperi, 4vv, op.21 (Rome, 1647)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GaspariC
A. Balsano, B. Brumana and M. Pascale: 'Bibliografia dei musicisti umbri del Cinque e Seicento', Arte e musica in Umbria tra Cinquecento e Seicento: Gubbio and Gualdo Tadino 1979, 349–475, esp. 455–6
B. Brumana and G. Ciliberti: Musica e musicisti nella cattedrale di S. Lorenzo a Perugia (XIV–XVIII secolo) (Florence, 1991)

CLAUDE V. PALISCA

Diruta [Mancini], Girolamo (b ?Deruta, nr Perugia, *c*1554; d after 25 March 1610). Italian organist, teacher and music theorist. He was the author of the first comprehensive treatise on organ playing, in the form of a dialogue under the title Il transilvano, published in two parts (Venice, 1593, 1609).

1. Life. In a letter dated 1 February 1602 from Chioggia to the magistrates of Deruta, Diruta pleaded that after 30 years of work he desired to return to his homeland. This would indicate that he began his career as an organist in about 1572. On 19 June 1574 he entered the Franciscan monastery of Correggio, near Reggio nell'Emilia, at the same time as Battista Capuani, who may have been his first teacher. He apparently went to Venice in about 1580: he acknowledged that he had as preceptors Zarlino, Costanzo Porta and Claudio Merulo (Il transilvano, seconda parte, iii, 11). Merulo left Venice in 1584, so Diruta must have studied with him before that. If he did study with Porta, a fellow Franciscan, it may have been when Porta was in Ravenna (1580–89). Merulo was more than satisfied with his pupil's accomplishments, for in a letter printed in Il transilvano (1593), he said: 'I take infinite pride that he was my product, because in this doctrine [of playing the organ] he has brought both to himself and to me singular honour, as may be expected of a person of much genius'.

In 1593, as revealed by the title-page of his book, Diruta was organist of Chioggia Cathedral. He was still there in 1602, as testified by the letter cited above, but the desire expressed in it must soon have been fulfilled, for in 1609 he identified himself as organist of Gubbio Cathedral.

On 10 April 1593 Diruta dedicated the first part of his dialogue to Zsigmond Báthory (1572–1613), Prince of Transylvania and nephew of the King of Poland. Diruta's link with this prince may have been through Istvan de Jósika, probably the 'Transilvano' who speaks in the dialogue. Jósika was sent to Italy in 1591 to negotiate the prince's marriage to Leonora Orsini, niece of Grand Duke Ferdinand I of Tuscany. The second part of the dialogue, though dated 1609 on the title-page, was dedicated on 25 March 1610 to her as Duchess Leonora Orsini Sforza, for the engagement to Báthory was broken off and she married Alexander VII Sforza in 1592. Another mission of Jósika in Italy was to engage musicians for the prince's court at Gyulafehérvár (now Alba Iulia, Romania), and it was probably in this connection that Diruta met him, for a fellow pupil of his teacher Merulo, Giovanni Battista Mosto, was choirmaster at Gyulafehérvár between 1589 and 1595, and Antonio Romanini, the prince's organist, was represented in Il transilvano by a 'Toccata dell'ottavo tuono'. In addition to the Transylvanian and Diruta, a third interlocutor figures briefly in the dialogue, the Venetian gentleman Cavaliere Melchior Michele, a papal legate, who was frequently sent to negotiate with Zsigmond Báthory, and who in the dialogue and probably in actual fact introduced Diruta to Jósika.

2. Works. Diruta's treatise on playing the organ, which he praises as the king of instruments, was published on the instigation of Merulo, who believed that certain rules were necessary for playing his own and similar compositions, and the treatise probably sums up Merulo's own teaching. Diruta concerned himself with a multitude of the organist's preoccupations: the position of the player at the instrument, fingering, diminutions and ornamentation, the application of the rules of counterpoint, the church modes and the most suitable registration for the character of each, transposition, the method of intabulating vocal music, and the method of accompanying, intoning and responding to the choir. The two parts of the work are accompanied by sample intabulations of vocal music and of original compositions for the organ by Diruta and by a number of other composers. In the Prima parte there are toccatas, chosen for their didactic value, by Merulo, Andrea Gabrieli, Giovanni Gabrieli, Luzzasco Luzzaschi, Antonio Romanini, Paolo Quagliati, Vincenzo Bellavere and Gioseffo Guami, and in the Seconda parte ricercares by Luzzaschi, Gabriele Fattorini and Adriano Banchieri.

Diruta's rules (f.4*v*) for the position of the body are concisely stated:

> The first is that the organist place himself so that he is in the middle of the keyboard. The second, that he not make gestures or movements but remain with the body straight and graceful. Third, he must make the arm lead the hand and see that the hand always goes out straight from the arm, neither higher nor lower than it, so that the ridge of the hand is held somewhat high, because thus the hand will be level with the arm. And what I say of one hand I mean also of the other. Fourth, that the fingers rest evenly on the keys, but somewhat arched; besides that the hand be held light and relaxed at the keyboard, for otherwise the fingers cannot be moved with agility and promptness. Finally, that the finger depress the key and not hit it, the finger rising with the key.

Diruta distinguished between the technique of the organist and that of the harpsichordist and between playing 'music' and 'balli'. Whereas the organ was played with 'l'armonia unita' or legato, quill instruments (istrumenti da penna) had to be played by hitting the keys to activate the jacks (saltarelli) and to make the dances lively. In the harpsichord, tremolos and accenti were necessary to give the illusion of sustained harmony. Striking as opposed to depressing the keys was allowed on the organ only when playing balli. Diruta classified certain fingers as 'good' and others as 'bad': in either hand the second (index) and fourth (ring) fingers were good, the others bad; the 'good' fingers were intended for the 'good' notes – mainly consonances on the downbeats – while the 'bad' fingers for the dissonances or upbeats. Ex.1 shows the proper fingering of (a) ascending and descending scales, (b) the groppo, (c) the tremolo, and (d) a falsobordone. The shows the last passage in the tablature prescribed by Diruta for polyphonic music, with a five-line staff for the soprano and contralto and an eight-line staff for tenor and bass, two semibreve measures to the bar (due battute per casa). Diruta used the same score-like arrangement for keyboard compositions.

In the Seconda parte Diruta clarified some of the rules of the first part. He gave, for example, parallel notations of pieces in vocal score and in keyboard tablature. He showed that there were five types of diminution used in keyboard tablature: minuta or divisions, groppi, tremolos, clamationi (ex.2*a*) and accenti (ex.2*b*).

Diruta added a useful section summarizing the rules of counterpoint as applied to keyboard composition. He formulated four principal rules of consonant progression or 'movimenti': contrary motion is obligatory in going from one perfect consonance to another; the movement is free in going from an imperfect consonance to another; likewise from a perfect consonance to an imperfect; contrary motion is obligatory from an imperfect consonance to a perfect. Almost every counterpoint theorist after Diruta adopted this set of movement rules. Diruta anticipated the species of Berardi and Fux in demonstrating by examples seven ways to make a counterpoint over a cantus firmus consisting of even semibreves: (1) note against note (contrapunto di nota contra nota), (2) minims (contrapunto di minime osservato), (3) consonant suspensions or syncopated minims (contrapunto di note ligate di consonanze), (4) dissonant suspensions (contrapunto di note ligate di dissonanze), (5) crotchets (contrapunto di note negre), (6) varied note values in contrapunto osservato, and (7) varied note values in contrapunto commune. The commune was much freer in that the only rigid rule was that two perfect consonances of the same species in succession were to be avoided, though not two such imperfect consonances. Rules requiring contrary motion and the progression from an imperfect consonance to the nearest perfect consonance were not observed in commune. Diruta considered the osservato style much more beautiful and elegant and essential to composed music, but the commune was adequate for playing 'di fantasia' or impromptu.

Tablature prescribed by Diruta for polyphonic music, with a five-line staff for soprano and alto, and an eight-line staff for tenor and bass, from his 'Il transilvano' (Venice, 1593)

Diruta's toccatas, written in contrapunto commune, consist entirely of passage-work in one hand against chords in the other, unlike those of his contemporaries Andrea Gabrieli and Merulo, who used this technique in alternation with chordal and sometimes imitative passages. Diruta's pieces are true études in that each exercises some specific technical device, such as conjunct figuration (di grado), figurations in which there is a leap from a strong to a weak beat (di salto cattivo), or in which the leap is from a weak beat toward a strong (di salto buono). His typical ricercares contain a fugal section on one or a succession of subjects followed by a triple-time chordal closing section. His 21 organ hymns and eight Magnificat settings – one for each tone – are uniformly 16 semibreve measures long and incorporate the intonation and termination of each chant in such a way that the organist can expand the central section by improvising. They all treat imitatively motifs drawn from the standard hymn melodies and Magnificat tones.

The only compositions by Diruta known separately from Il transilvano are a set of motets in five parts on cantus firmi from the antiphons of the principal feasts. Only the soprano and alto partbooks survive.

WRITINGS

Il transilvano dialogo sopra il vero modo di sonar organi, et istromenti da penna (Venice, 1593 and 1609/R); facs. with introduction, index, and notes by E.J. Soehnlen and M.C. Bradshaw (Buren, 1983), Eng. trans. by M.C. Bradshaw and E.J. Soehnlen (Henryville, PA, 1984), music ed. in Musica per la tastiera, iii (Budapest, 1981)

WORKS

Il primo libro de contrapunti sopra il canto fermo delle antifone delle feste principali de tutto l'anno, 5vv (Venice, 1580)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Krebs: 'Girolamo Dirutas Transilvano', VMw, viii (1892), 307–88

E. Haraszti: 'Sigismond Bathory, Prince de Transylvanie et la musique italienne d'après un manuscrit de 1595 de la Bibliothèque nationale de Paris', RdM, xii (1931), 190–213

E. Haraszti: 'Les rapports italo-transylvains de Il transilvano de Girolamo Diruta', Mélanges de musicologie offerts à M. Lionel de la Laurencie (Paris, 1933), 73–84

F. Briganti: 'Il primo libro dei contrapunti di Girolamo Diruta', Perusia (23 Sept 1950)

Z. Falvy: 'Diruta, Il Transilvano', SM, xi (1969), 123–31

E.J. Soehnlen: 'Diruta and his Contemporaries: Tradition and Innovation in the Art of Registration, circa 1610', Organ Yearbook, x (1979), 15–33

L. Berozovskaja: 'Traktat Dzirolamo Diruty "Transil'vanec" v svete istorii organnogo ispolnitel'stva' [Girolamo Diruta's treatise 'Il Transilvano' in light of the history of organ playing], Starinnaja muzyka v kontekste sovremennoj kul'tury, ed. T. Baranova (Moscow, 1989), 474–83

L. Lohmann: 'Zur Ornamentik in der Orgelmusik der Spätrenaissance und des Frühbarock', Musik und Kirche, lx (1990), 173–85

G. Wagner: 'Zur Bedeutung von buono und cattivo bei Girolamo Diruta', Mf, xliii (1990), 245–7

CLAUDE V. PALISCA

Dis. (Ger.) D♯; before the early 19th century also E♭. See PITCH NOMENCLATURE.

Discant [descant, descaunt(e), deschant, deschaunt(e), dyscant; verb: discanten] (Middle Eng., from Lat. discantus: 'singing apart'; verb: discantare; Old Fr. deschant, descant; verb: deschanter). A type of medieval polyphony having a plainchant tenor, characterized by essentially note-against-note, contrary movement between the voices and the interchange of the consonances octave, 5th and 4th. In the 12th and 13th centuries it was further characterized by the use of the RHYTHMIC MODES, by formally balanced phrase-shapes, and by the fact that the plainchant basis was melismatic. It was not itself a musical form but a technique – in origin a technique for the improvising of two-voice polyphony. In the written repertory it is found within organal plainchant settings and clausulas, and, by abandonment of the plainchant basis and principle of melismatic tenor, also in the conductus. Settings survive for two, three and four voices.

I. Discant in France, Spain and Germany. II. English discant.

I. Discant in France, Spain and Germany

1. Etymology, definition. 2. The distinction between organum and discant. 3. Organum and discant in the 'Magnus Liber' and its recensions. 4. Discant in three and four voices. 5. Later discant: England and Germany. 6. Later discant: France.

1. ETYMOLOGY, DEFINITION. The Latin word 'discantus' came into existence in the 12th century from the Greek diaphonia, either by direct translation or by analogous word-formation. From the beginning, the word carried the implication not merely of 'sounding apart' (i.e. the concept of interval and its measurement, as in the Greek term), but also, more concretely, of 'singing apart'. It thus implied polyphony, which was developed in the West as a method of performing plainchant. This second implication then reflected back upon the original Greek term. Hence in medieval treatises on music the terms 'organum', 'diaphonia' and 'discantus' frequently occurred as synonymous terms for 'polyphony'. 'Discantus', however, as the latest of the three terms, occurred much less often with this general meaning, as will be discussed below. In addition there is the erroneous definition occasionally encountered of 'discantus' as genuine biscantus (i.e. 'double cantus' or 'double-song'); this probably has its forerunners in the numerous (and often incorrect) etymologies in musical treatises – 'dyaphonia, a dya quod est duo' and 'diaphonia duplex cantus est' (see F. Reckow: 'Diaphonia' (1972), HMT, §111b).

The meanings of the term 'discantus' as it occurred between the 12th and 17th centuries are all intimately interconnected: (i) polyphony in general; (ii) a certain type of polyphony (either to be distinguished from organum, or to be understood as improvised polyphony as distinct from notated polyphony); (iii) the part that is added to the tenor – thus the part that brings this kind of polyphony into being; (iv) the highest part (usually sung by boys) of a polyphonic setting (therefore equivalent to cantus, superius and soprano); (v) the high register of chorally constructed instruments, e.g. recorders, cornets, viols and organ stops. Although polyphony can be seen as the basic factor of each of these categories, a simple historical link should not be presupposed without careful consideration. The first two definitions are the most closely connected and have the greatest historical significance; only these, and with them the third, are discussed here.

2. THE DISTINCTION BETWEEN ORGANUM AND DISCANT. It is necessary to establish initially whether the first definition is a case of the part standing for the whole, which would make the second definition the original; or conversely, whether the second is a narrowing-down of the first. In other words, was the word 'discantus' formed with the intention of providing a separate term for a new or specific type of polyphony? Current research seems to suggest that this was the case.

Despite this uncertainty, an issue possibly of greater importance has been clarified: the question of how the terms 'organum' (in the restricted sense) and 'discantus' – terms that are normally contrasted within the generic concept of organum (in its wider sense) – differ from one another. For Riemann it was a question of whether there was any difference in kind, or whether the two were simply separated in time. In his Geschichte der Musiktheorie (Leipzig, 1898, 2/1921) he tried to draw a sharp distinction between 'organum treatises' – those up to Johannes Cotto – and 'discant treatises' – those after him. He saw as real distinguishing features in the latter the rule of the contrary motion between the parts and the gradual increase in importance of the 3rd and the 6th. Against this, Steinhard (1921, p.220) argued that the treatises cited by Riemann did not represent a new style, but merely gave greater emphasis to the principle of contrary motion within the same style. However, this view rested no more than Riemann's on a thorough examination of all the surviving theoretical and practical sources. As usually happened with medieval concepts of this kind, when the concept as a whole went through a process of reformulation, its individual terms also underwent shifts of meaning and usage. Such shifts, however, do not happen in isolation: the things to which the terms refer also change, and these changes do not necessarily come about and become visible all at the same time. Moreover, in the case of 'discantus' it would scarcely be possible to undertake a definition without constant reference to organum – itself a considerably more complex concept.

Two different kinds of polyphony are intimated as early as Guido of Arezzo's Micrologus (*c*1026): one is characterized by parallel movement of the voices, the other admits changes in the interval between the voices. However, no further distinction is made, least of all a distinction of terminology. For this reason Eggebrecht has preferred to regard parallel organum, even in Guido's day, as a technique no longer practised. He sees it as a means of demonstration, or as a kind of technical preparation for the 'old organum' which was the first genuinely polyphonic organum (see Eggebrecht and Zaminer, 1970, p.25).

The basis of this improvised (therefore solo) style was a plainchant melody (or specific parts of one) most of whose notes lay above or between the added organal voices. From this stage of technical development there was a growing tendency after about 1100 to place the newly added organal voice or voices above the tenor. The real reason for this development should be sought in practical considerations of performance. Johannes Cotto's solution (see De musica cum tonario, ed. J. Smits van Waesberghe, CSM, i, 1950, p.157), which implies continual part-crossing and in which the organal voice 'alter per alienos sonos apte circueat', ought presumably to be seen not only as an injunction to avoid extending the total range too much and to assimilate the range of the new voice to that of the first voice, but also as an experiment in texture. However, this solution seems already to have been found unsatisfactory in France, although evidence of it is encountered in German traditions at a much later date; for, in a note-for-note setting the vox principalis and the vox organalis (i.e. the voice with the chant, and the added voice) can be heard only as an upper and a lower part. Ultimately the natural effect of the lower part as the supporter of the texture was soon realized and was exploited as such. In allotting this function to the most essential voice – the voice carrying the plainsong – the other voice, the one most modern in style, was automatically brought into the foreground of the texture. At any rate, the placing of the vox principalis at the bottom of the texture, as the 'tenor', became the rule by the mid-12th century at the very latest.

The most important writings about 1100, probably all of French origin (the so-called Milanese, Berlin, Bruges and Montpellier tracts), described post-Guidonian organum – the 'new organum' in its earliest form – in a thorough and rather technical way and mentioned only one form. It was still an improvisatory technique, and was characterized by the prescription of unison or octave at the beginning, and of unison alone at the end. It employed all the intervals designated as consonantiae (thus including the 5th and 4th), interchanging them according to certain prescribed rules that allowed for – indeed, required – both parallel and contrary motion. It also featured a free alternation between syllabic and more or less melismatic delivery, in other words, between the elementary harmonic framework and a practical, ornamented performance involving, inevitably, other intervals as well.

The difference between the syllabic and melismatic types became fully evident only a generation or so later when the ornamentation of the vox organalis developed from being an optional extra into an essential component part. It is no coincidence that there is a sudden increase in written documents containing this music, among them particularly the so-called St Martial and Calixtine manuscripts (F-Pn lat.1139, 3549, 3719, GB-Lbl Add.36881; E-SC; ex.1). The term 'organum' might remain as a generic concept, but it now became necessary to have separate names for the two different styles of performance. This was accomplished first in two anonymous treatises (ed. Schneider and La Fage), where clear distinctions are made between, on the one hand, 'organum' in the special sense in which tenor notes were long-sustained and the vox organalis had freedom to indulge in extensive melismas and, on the other hand, 'discantus' – a style that maintained 'equalitas punctorum', i.e. an approximately equal rate of movement in all the voices. Thus the distinction had nothing to do with contrary motion, a feature common to both; it was primarily a matter of sustained-note tenor combined with melismatic vox organalis as against note-for-note settings in two parts ('punctus contra punctum'), or, more generally, of the dissimilarity or similarity of the parts concerned. (Cf ex.1 and ORGANUM, ex.9.) Thus the very form that diverged further from previous usage continued to be referred to as 'organum', while that which owed much more to tradition was called by the new name, 'discantus'. This may be because 'organum' had lost its specific meaning, but may also be due to a certain 'belief in progress' that was characteristic of this period ('organum' was indeed initially the more significant term, although the relationship was later reversed).

The technical production of an organal voice and a discant voice was in principle very much the same. However, dependence on the movement of the tenor meant that in discant the choice of intervals and the way the voices combined with each other had to be very directly controlled. It was for this reason that the theorists always attached special importance to it.

The rules described earlier, derived as they were from improvisatory practices, now underwent certain modifications. First and foremost, as part of a general change in the status of consonances the 4th receded gradually into the background and was replaced by the 3rd and the 6th. These were at first used only when they moved directly by step to a perfect consonance, but with their gradual acceptance as consonances this rule ceased to be observed.

In the St Martial manuscripts organum and discant occur side by side, but organum was already predominant. A generation later, at the beginning of what is often called the Notre Dame period, it was quite patently the principal form. The balance was radically shifted when, in about 1180, modal rhythm was finally developed and systematized and began to permeate both forms of music (see RHYTHMIC MODES). The view that this new rhythm came to be linked in some way specially with discant, giving it a particular modernity, is a misleading one. The two must have been very closely associated right from the beginning, because the passing and intermediary notes of the old discantus must have played quite a significant part in the development of the first mode (from which the other five were only developed later, evidently on the basis of literary models).

3. ORGANUM AND DISCANT IN THE 'MAGNUS LIBER' AND ITS RECENSIONS. This development can be seen most clearly in the context of polyphonic plainchant settings. The most important collection of organa dupla, known as the Magnus liber organi, survives today only in versions dating from the 13th century. The original form of the cycle (1163–82), which is attributed to the 'optimus organista Leoninus' (Anonymus 4: CoussemakerS, i, 342), cannot now be reconstructed with any confidence as to detailed points of style; and yet (and this is the most important point) it cannot possibly have been wholly and exclusively in modal rhythm. In the surviving versions it is clear that through successive layers of reworking the melismatic organum sections became more and more repressed and were replaced by more modern modal-rhythmic sections. The result is that, far more than in earlier examples, the repertory of two-voice organum seems to consist of individual sections (see CLAUSULA) of differing structure. (Anonymus 4 ascribed this adaptation to the 'optimus discantor Perotinus', but he could only have been referring to the most important and not the sole adaptation; see MAGNUS LIBER, LEONINUS and PEROTINUS.)

In this process, of course, it was not just arbitrary sections of the organum that were revised but, rather, those that were particularly suitable: above all, melismatic passages in the plainchant, passages whose text invited emphasis, tenor sections with an essentially striking structure (i.e. symmetrical note-patterns or phrases with some kind of sequential organization), passages that could be transformed into discant-like structures with as few changes as possible, and sections that were traditionally used for this. In any case, the prevailing distinction between organum and discant, that of sustained notes and melisma as distinct from note-against-note, was heightened by the presence or absence of modal rhythm in the voices: this was given authority in the theoretical writings of Johannes de Garlandia and Franco of Cologne. With modal rhythm, the relative amount of movement in the various voices became standardized. (However, quite apart from modal rhythm, the setting of relatively few duplum notes against any one tenor note remained a basic constituent of the new type of discant; the traditional definition of discant as 'aliquorum diversorum cantuum concordantia' could still be justified.)

The fitting of such discant sections into pieces of organum was particularly popular, and this undoubtedly has much to do with the modernity of modal rhythm. There was at the same time a reversion to the much earlier principle of executing not a whole chant but only certain parts in polyphony (particular words, sections, especially tropes), and of interpolating these into the monophonic context of plainchant. In keeping with this principle there were sections ('clausulas sive puncta') that were, even by polyphonic standards, so often set in polyphony and so frequently incorporated into chant at the appropriate points, that they were assembled into special clausula-fascicles in manuscripts, ready for optional use in this way. Ludwig (1910) thus spoke of them as 'substitute sections' (Ersatzteilen).

Over and above this piecemeal interpolation of discant phrases, however, the incursion of modal rhythm also becomes noticeable in the two-voice Magnus liber. Gradually, too, the dupla sections with sustained-note tenor were transformed into modal rhythm or else were composed anew. It soon became essential to introduce a separate name for the intermediate form that occurred between the extremes of non-modal organum and modal-rhythmic discant; with Johannes de Garlandia this contingency came to be called copula (see COPULA, COPULATIO).

As a whole it may be said that the modal rhythm in this repertory initially permeated the upper part (duplum) and only subsequently the tenor – starting with phrases of plainchant that were especially suitable. The reason for this was presumably the inviolability of the plainchant tenor, though there were probably structural considerations as well. Also connected with the swift further development of rhythm, and particularly with the rapid breakthrough of the system of modes, is the fact that during the 13th century the organum sections too became interpretable in terms of measured rhythm (fractio modi,modi irregulares etc.) and that from this time monophonic plainchant (musica plana) can be distinguished from polyphony as a whole (musica mensurabilis).

However, the solving of the technical problems of notation (which have caused much misunderstanding in the study of these areas since the 19th century) was not the only prerequisite for this. Above all, there were the technical achievements in composition, developed in the most far-reaching way within the context of the numerous modal-rhythmic clausula compositions. Composers learnt to utilize the melodic line with its new rhythmic properties as a formal device and as a means of fashioning larger units. The frequent repetition of tenor cadences was linked primarily with an acceleration of tenor rhythm. The rational rhythmic arrangement of the tenor part progressed from groups of irregular longs and duplex longs, by way of regular sequences of single notes and ligatures, to complicated formulae lasting several groups of tones – a development that originated in a more basic artificial need, and one in which the roots of the later phenomenon of isorhythm with color and talea are to be found (ex.2). With their increasing command of the techniques of composition composers began to experiment with voice-exchange, imitation, retrogression, hocket and so on, as in ex.3.

Alongside this development – perhaps the first in the history of Western music to spring directly from a formal, constructional idea – there existed others including developments in subjective response, such as the increasing acceptability of the 3rd as a consonant interval and a complete change of melodic style. Yet the future of discant writing was seen not so much in the clausula itself as in the motet – a form that arose in connection with the clausula by the addition of new text to the upper parts, and which was by then very widely used. This turn of events can be explained not least as a result of the waning interest in plainchant setting as a whole in favour of forms containing repetition patterns.

4. Discant in three and four voices. Modal rhythm and discant setting were prerequisites for a progression from two-voice to real three- and four-voice compositions, a development that evidently occurred for the first time with Perotinus in about 1200. Only 'voices' that are fixed in an exact rhythm can be combined to form a shaped phrase. This is so even when, as was the case with Perotinus, the voices were composed not simultaneously in relation to each other, but either independently or each one in relation to the tenor alone – and even though, in the spirit of successive composition, some voices might be omitted from or added to existing compositions. These two factors for the first time undeniably produced 'compositions' in the modern sense.

Ex.2

Ex.3

Such compositions were designated tripla or quadrupla – terms that served as qualifying adjectives to the noun 'organa'. The fact that these discant compositions could be so designated merely according to the number of voices demonstrates once again the capacity of the term 'organum' to function both as an overall term for polyphony and hence as a specific term for the category of plainchant settings. This does not, however, alter the fact that from the structural point of view these are discant settings, at least as regards the upper voices. Moreover, as these developments proceeded a differentiation in terminology became evident between the style of setting or method of composition on the one hand, and the form or type of music on the other.

This distinction had, however, already emerged in a different way, for not only did discant develop within the context of organum, i.e. of liturgical plainchant setting; it also developed in combination with the early forms to produce the second great genre of composition in Parisian music around 1200 and after, the polyphonic Conductus. The conductus was independent of plainchant, newly used a composed text and tenor part and was used no more than paraliturgically. As well as the problems it has in common with clausula composition, there are specific notational problems arising out of the syllabic underlay of text and simultaneous declamation in all voices. For this very reason, however, conductus generally presents the 'purest' and most skilful discant setting of the period, making use of modal rhythm and adhering largely to note-for-note and melisma-for-melisma movement among voices. Significantly, conductus began to fade in France just at the time when it began to duplicate the motet in function and in content. The two differed only in the origin and style of the tenor, and partly in the language of the text.

5. Later discant: England and Germany. Outside the centres of development, and especially in England, conductus and the particular style associated with it proved considerably more durable, with the result that modern scholars (e.g. Handschin) have sometimes spoken of a 'conductus style'. As can be seen from the pieces in the 11th fascicle of D-W 677, which are almost certainly British, and the large group of pieces in the so-called Worcester Fragments, the sustained-note style was hardly ever adopted in England. Only discant technique was really ever cultivated. This was at least partly because improvised forms of discant perhaps had a longer and less interrupted history in England, the result being what is known as English discant (see §II below), and meant that the combining of parts to form harmony (in modern terms, the harmonic idiom) could develop more quickly and more concentratedly (ex.4). As a result this tradition was to play an important part in the development of the new sonority of the 15th century on the Continent as well. In German-speaking lands, on the other hand, both conductus and, to some extent, primitive note-against-note 'organa' remained derivative and peripheral, marking the end of a tradition.

Ex.4

6. Later discant: France. In France itself, after Parisian polyphony had ceased to flourish, discant technique was the only new method of composition to be pursued. Organum was still cultivated for some time as a traditional form, but interpreted mostly according to mensural rhythm, which had evolved meanwhile from further developments in modal rhythm. Thus, according to Franco (*c*1280), organum was already 'partim mensuratum', and at the beginning of the 14th century Odington called it a 'genus antiquissimum'. Otherwise it was rewritten entirely in mensural notation, with no new composition taking place whatsoever. All 13th-century liturgical pieces based on plainchant, including the rapidly increasing number of settings of the Ordinary of the Mass, adopted discant technique exclusively whether they were in the direct tradition of the Magnus liber or stemmed from peripheral or older traditions such as that of the Spanish Las Huelgas manuscript.

From the time of Franco to that of Philippe de Vitry the focal point of interest was the motet. Alongside this the secular song was beginning to develop (including in its sphere polyphonic settings of secular songs in the troubadour and trouvère traditions), and by the time of Machaut it had reached maturity and was at the centre of compositional activity. The first aspect of development in all areas was rhythm. After the modal system had become outdated, the shortest note value available was further subdivided several times over, and similarly the tempo of the basic value was several times decelerated. With the basic possibility of dividing each notational value into two or three, an unprecedented rhythmic diversity was achieved that was exploited to the full in those examples of the late 14th-century Ars Subtilior that today can be deciphered only with difficulty (ex.5). The syncopations, suspensions, anticipations and complementary and counter-rhythms naturally also affect the overall structure, and in particular the harmonic structure of a piece. Nevertheless, so full a use of the rhythmic possibilities did not occur in all the voices of a composition to the same extent; here too, it is evident that the practice was at first to differentiate between the relative movement of each voice, before the gradual equalization of movement set in during the 15th century as a result of influences from other techniques of composition, particularly from Italian canonic writing and English conductus techniques.

In another respect the development of discant followed the same pattern, though less dramatically. In the treatises of the Ars Nova the earlier advocacy of contrary motion took on the status of a general rule, to be relaxed only in the case of dissonances (imperfect consonances); these might occur in parallel movement, but with no more than four at a time in succession, and at first only in movement by step. In addition, they no longer had to be resolved on to the nearest consonance; they might now lead into a more remote consonance. Finally, one dissonance might follow another (Philipoctus Andreas, Antonius de Leno). Greatest emphasis was now laid (as it had previously been on the succession of (perfect) consonances), upon the carefully balanced succession of consonances and dissonances and their resolution. Dissonance on the penultimate note also became the rule, and when necessary was reinforced by accidentals to ensure the effect of leading note and cadence in the modern sense. (It should be noted that the nature of the phrase was obviously altered by such cadences.)

This particular use of accidentals, even more than the handling of dissonances, shows that composers were beginning to discover the intrinsic dynamic and harmonic potential. Although harmony continued to be the product of several independently moving parts, it now emerged more and more independently into the foreground. Together with this change in aspect of the tonal system came the fact that the Greek notions of interval were finally replaced by the Latin ones, that the distinction between major and minor 3rds became a less important factor than hitherto, and that the acceptability of the two as consonances was exchanged with that of the 4th.

Discant was also designated 'contrapunctus' for the first time as early as the treatises of the Vitry school and of Johannes de Muris. This designation, which had been developed from an earlier definition of 'discantus', soon became prevalent once the school of opinion gained ground that no longer construed musical style as the product of several 'voices' but viewed it rather as a combination of sound.

The rules governing successions of consonances in discant soon became transformed into the part-writing rules of counterpoint. Thus counterpoint now stood in the same relationship to discant as discant had done previously to organum. Finally, in the 15th century, counterpoint achieved dominance.

II. English discant

Discant against a 'cantus planus' ('playnsong') is reported, in more or less detail, in several 14th- and 15th-century English treatises. The various descriptions show that with respect to contrapuntal rules and procedures discant in England did not differ from the general European discant tradition of the time. It involved, in the main, note-against-note counterpoint, with the cantus firmus in the lower of the two voices, contrary motion as the basic condition, prohibition of dissonances and of parallel 5ths and octaves, and recommendation of imperfect consonances, of which the various English authors respectively allowed three, four or five in parallel succession. (While 'the old techyng was that a man shal never take none imperfite acord bot if he hade a perfite after him', the English with their traditional fondness for imperfect consonances welcomed the proliferation of 3rds and 6ths in discant with such remarks as 'the mo inperfite tones that a man synges in the trebull, the meriere it es', and 'this maner of singyng is mery to the synger and to the herer'.)

Three characteristics set the English tradition apart from that of the Continent: (i) the recognition, by the mid-14th century, of the possibility that the cantus firmus might be carried by the upper voice, to which the lower voice could fit a discant; (ii) the differentiation of voice ranges ('degrees') in which a discant above a cantus firmus could be accommodated, and the designation of the voices as mene, treble and quatreble (also referred to as 'degrees'); and (iii) the 'sight', which was a technical device applicable to the improvisation of a discant. The second of these features can be traced back to at least the third quarter of the 13th century in England, when Anonymus 4 differentiated three ranges for the discant above the tenor as 'ex propinquis', 'ex remortioribus' and 'ex remotissimus' (CoussemakerS, i, 357; F. Reckow, 1967, p. 75). The third feature emerged in the late 14th century.

John of Tewkesbury (CoussemakerS, iv, 294*a*; also iii, 360*b*), who wrote his treatise Quatuor principalia in 1351, and the approximately contemporaneous Anonymus 5 (CoussemakerS, i, 367–8), the anonymous Regula discantus (GB-Lbl Add.21455, ff.6-7) and the anonymous Circa modum discantandi GB-Lbl Add.21455, ff.9*v*-

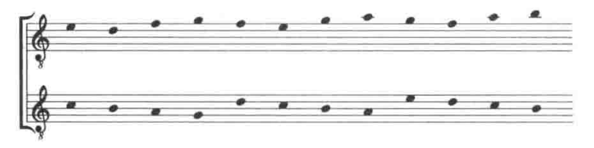
10*v*), all recognized that a discant could be sung below a cantus firmus. John pointed out succinctly that the same contrapuntal rules apply for this as govern the invention of a discant above the plainchant. The Regula sanctions this activity only in a discanting voice called 'counternote' that ranges around the tenor, sounding unisons, 3rds, 5ths, 6ths and octaves above and below, and on occasion reaching a 10th; this voice begins on a unison, 5th or octave above or below and cadences on one of the latter two intervals, also above or below. The far more detailed description by Pseudo-Chilston (see below) in essence demands the same contrapuntal procedure, except that he differentiated between two voices, countertenor and counter ('countir'). The former shares its range with the plainchant, so that, according to whether a passage of the cantus firmus lies high or low, the countertenor may correspondingly either descend as far as an octave below or ascend up to an octave above. The counter, on the other hand, lies below the plainchant; it may form a unison with it, but cannot cross it. 'Properli', the largest interval the counter can form under the cantus firmus is an octave; however, 'yf ye have a low voice, whan the plainsong gothe hye', the counter may also use the 10th, 12th, 13th and 15th.



The other two special features of discant in England are reported in the following treatises, all of which survive in English manuscripts datable from the first half of the 15th century, although some of the treatises were probably written in the later years of the 14th century: (1) Anonymous, GB-Lbl Add.21455, f.9; (2) Regula discantus and (3) Circa modum discantandi, in the same manuscript; (4) Richard Cutell (Opinio Ricardi Cutell de London), GB-Ob 842, ff.48*r*–48*v* (Cutell is documented as a member of the college at St Paul's in 1394 and as cardinal a year later); (5) Anonymous, GB-Ccc 410, II, ff.13*v*–15*v*; (6) Anonymous, GB-Lbl Lansdowne 763, ff.113*v*–116*v* (the so-called Pseudo-Chilston, who, in addition to his treatment of discant, countertenor and counter, and a passing reference to gymel, also discussed faburden); (7) Leonel Power, in the same manuscript, ff.105*v*–113.

The last two items of this list are part of the compilation of musical treatises made by John Wylde some years before 1450. The second and third treatises are in Latin; the Regula designated the ranges as 'primus gradus', 'secundus gradus' and 'tertius gradus', thus relating it to some later Italian discant theory, while Circa modum designated the discanting voice as 'medius', 'triplex' and 'quadruplex' respectively. All the other treatises are in English.

The three 'degrees' of discant are defined in terms of the consonant intervals each may form with the cantus firmus. For the mene these lie between unison and octave, for the quatreble ('this degre of descant longith to a childe to syng') between octave and 15th, while the treble is variously defined; chiefly, its intervallic range lies between 5th and 12th.

Although the rules of discant contained in the treatises address musicians generally, including composers ('for hem that wil be syngers, or makers, or techers', as Power put it in his first sentence), the sight system as an aid in the craft of improvising a discant (i.e. 'first-species' counterpoint) seems specifically applicable to singers and teachers. In order to enable a singer to improvise a proper discant supra librum it instructs him to visualize, in the staff on which the plainchant is written, the intervals he chooses to sing above the successive pitches of the cantus firmus. This is easily done in the case of Pseudo-Chilston's countertenor, but requires mental transposition (called 'fictus visus' in Circa modum) for all the other voices, since, as the author of the Latin treatise pointed out, the higher ranges of traditional discant, especially of a boy treble or quatreble, would otherwise force the performer to imagine a cumbersome staff of a great many lines (or leger lines). Power, who did not discuss the mene, stipulated mental downward transposition of an octave (see illustration and ex.6).

Ex.6 GB-Lbl Lansdowne 763, f.108*v* (first example)

In the other treatises, however, the transposition interval generally depends on the type of voice. For instance, the mene, whose range is a 5th above the tenor, has to 'ymagine' his part a 5th too low, so that the interval of the 5th, with which he must begin and end, appears in his mind's eye as a unison on the staff, while 'the 3de benethe in sighte is a 3de above in voise', and so on. In other words, in order to be able to operate within the given staff he applies a sort of double vision to it by visualizing a second clef two lines lower than the original. The same system applies to the other voices: the respective downward transposition intervals for the treble and quatreble are the octave and the 12th, while the counter imagines his part a 5th higher than it sounds (a 12th higher for the 13th and 15th, since 'ther is no sight benethe the plainsong within 4 rwlis and 4 spacis that will serve it, but yf ye chonge your sight').

Page from Leonel Power's treatise on discant, first half of the 15th century (GB-Lbl Lansdowne 763, f.108v)

Ex.7 GB-WO Add.68 (no.85 in Dittmer's edn., MSD, ii, 1957)

The term 'sight' (see SIGHT, SIGHTING) actually had several related meanings: (i) imaginary transposition; (ii) the range of a 'sighted' voice (both 'in sight' and 'in voice'); (iii) that voice; (iv) descant by means of 'sighting'. In the later 15th century Hothby and Guillelmus Monachus still reported the treble sight of English discant, calling it discantus visibilis and perfectio ocularis. Their testimony as well as that of Nicolaus Burtius shows that the practice not only continued in England, but had also been adopted on the Continent.

The English treatises have been misinterpreted repeatedly in two important respects: English discant has been said by Bukofzer first to involve two simultaneously discanting voices, which secondly combined with the plainchant in the lowest voice to form mostly parallel 6-3 chords. This view has been proved invalid (by Georgiades, 1937; Kenney, 1959; Sanders, 1965). The hypothesis that an unwritten tradition of such parallel discant existed in England before the 15th century is supported neither by factual evidence nor by probability. While in the 13th century 'discantus' was an umbrella term comprising the various species of polyphonic music (for two, three or four voices), in the course of the 14th century it became restricted to the meaning described in this article, i.e. one 'first-species' counterpoint above a cantus firmus. Only John of Tewkesbury, in Quatuor principalia (CoussemakerS, iv, 294; also iii, 361*a*), reported a type of discant polyphony consisting of more than two voices, i.e. cantus firmus, two (or three) higher voices paralleling it in 5ths, octaves (and 12ths) in ornamental fashion, and one discant. Yet, in effect, this passage clearly remains within the bounds of tradition by describing how one discant can be applied to a cantus firmus, amplified by old-fashioned doubling. As John pointed out, it sounds like a complex affair ('plures homines discantare apparent'), although 'in rei veritate' there is only one discantor. The remark of Anonymus 5 (CoussemakerS, i, 366*b*) that 'totus generalis modus cantandi consistat aut in octavo aut in sexto', which might be cited in support of 6-3 chord parallelism in discant, is not elaborated and remains inconclusive. All other authors restricted the use of parallel imperfect intervals (see above).

English composers of the 14th and early 15th centuries wrote a considerable number of discant compositions (res factae) that are sometimes mistakenly associated with the conductus. Most of these consist of three voices, with the cantus firmus allotted to the middle voice. (Editions of much of the repertory appear in PMFC, xiv-xvii and CMM, xliv, 1967.) In its simplest and least attractive aspect this style is nothing more than note-against-note discant (ex.7). But in most cases at least the top voice was given a somewhat livelier profile; subsequently, the bottom voice, too, often received more attention from the composers (ex.8). There is no question, however, but that almost invariably only minimal adornments of a strictly functional style are involved; the rarity of 6-3 chord parallelism corresponds to the restrictions placed by the treatises on the use of parallel imperfect consonances. The bottom voice of some of these settings was later extracted as a SQUARE.

Ex.8 GB-Lbl Add.57950 (CMM, xlvi, 1969–73, no.135)

The significance of these compositions is twofold. In the first place, the gradual expansion of the overall range brought with it the genesis of the counter, and allowed composers to turn more or less tentatively to designing bottom voices that had the quality of giving greater support than was possible by the generally conjunct style of Gregorian melodies. Secondly, since most of these compositions are settings of choral chants, both their stylistic modesty and their liturgical purpose indicate that such music was not solo polyphony (as in the preceding centuries), but was intended for a small chorus. The emergence of the latter as a new performing medium of cantus firmus polyphony obviously required a relatively simple repertory. The institution of the performance of ritual polyphony by balanced choral groups is a corollary of the expansion of the two-voice framework to two octaves. These various circumstances bear witness to the gradually increasing importance and musical expertise of the choirs of non-monastic institutions, such as collegiate churches, colleges and court chapels.

For bibliography see ORGANUM.

RUDOLF FLOTZINGER (I), ERNEST H. SANDERS/ PETER M. LEFFERTS (II)

Discantus (Lat.: 'singing apart'). See DISCANT, §I.

Discépolo, Enrique Santos [Discepolín] (b Buenos Aires, 27 Mar 1901; d Buenos Aires, 23 Dec 1951). Argentine tango songwriter. Orphaned at an early age, he was brought up by his elder brother Armando, a distinguished dramatist, who encouraged him in his theatrical ambitions. He made his acting début at 15 and worked in theatre and film for the rest of his life. His first tango songs, written in 1926–7, included Que vachaché and Esta noche me emborracho, the latter first performed by Azucena Maizani. The author of the most celebrated classics in the tango repertory, between 1928 and 1935 he produced his most important sequence: Chorra, Malevaje, Soy un arlequín, Yira yira (notably recorded by Carlos Gardel), Cambalache and others. These songs reveal a deeply disillusioned and cynical philosophy, superbly articulated in memorable language, both poetic and colloquial. With his partner Tania (Ana Devis) he made an extended visit to Europe (1934–6) and two visits to Mexico (1944 and 1946–7). The tensions that arose from his strong support for President Juan Domingo Perón after 1946 may have hastened his early death.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Ferrer and L.A. Sierra: Discepolín, poeta del hombre de Corrientes y Esmeralda (Buenos Aires, 1965)
Tania: Discepolín y yo (Buenos Aires, 1973)
S. Pujol: Discépolo, una biografía argentina (Buenos Aires, 1996)

SIMON COLLIER

Disco. A form of dance music that dominated popular music during the late-1970s. It features regular bass drum accents on every beat, the frequent use of orchestral instruments and synthesizers, Latin percussion, and simple lyrics oriented around dancing, romance and a party-led life style. The term derives from discothèque: venues that began playing pre-recorded dance music in the early 1960s.

1. Origins. 2. 1977 onwards.

1. ORIGINS. Disco emerged from clubs in New York City that catered primarily to African-American, Latino and gay subcultures. Based on the 'sweet' soul sounds popularized by the Motown and Philadelphia International recording companies, disco also included funk and Latin elements, and initially included a stylistically diverse range of songs. Its impact extended beyond musical style, challenging prevalent notions in popular music criticism about authorship and creativity. The central figure in this challenge was the DJ. Because DJs were responsible for selecting and sequencing songs, it was their taste that dictated disco's sense of style rather than the singers and instrumentalists of soul and rock musics; successful DJ's could acquire their own following in much the same way as a recording artist. In fact, the disco DJs predilection for reconfiguring existing recordings by fading out of one song and into another led to the recording industry's invention of the 12-inch single, designed for easier editing. DJs shared the creative locus of the disco scene with the audience itself, as the focus on dancing stressed social interaction.

Disco as a distinct musical genre began to coalesce in 1973 with the release of several 'sweet' soul recordings that featured simplified funk rhythms and lush orchestrations, including Harold Melvin and the Blue Notes The Love I Lost, Barry White's I'm gonna love you just a little more baby, and the Love Unlimited Orchestra's Love's Theme (produced by White, who became one of disco's first stars). By 1973 discos had become widespread enough so that popularity in the dance clubs could generate a pop hit, a crossover process that began with the dance funk classic Soul Makossa by Cameroonian Manu Dibango, followed in 1974 by The Hues Corporation's Rock the Boat and George McCrae's Rock your baby. Another important early disco recording, Van McCoy's The Hustle (1975), launched the most popular dance step of the era.

During 1975–6, disco began to concentrate on two main tendencies. Rhythm and blues disco derived more directly from previous styles of soul and funk, often retained gospel-oriented vocals and syncopated guitar and bass parts, and was sometimes recorded by self-contained bands associated with funk such as The Ohio Players, Kool and the Gang and the Commodores. Its early style was exemplified by K.C. and the Sunshine Band, whose massive hits Get down tonight and That's the way I like it established a new form of infectious Latin-influenced dance-funk, retaining the stratified interlocking of horns, bass and guitar of funk in a simplified form, but substituting repetitive verse-chorus structures for open-ended vamps, and reducing the lyric content to a few simple phrases. Eurodisco tended to feature simple, chanted vocals, less syncopated bass parts, thicker arrangements filled with orchestral instruments and synthesizers, and relied on a producer who directed anonymous studio musicians. Its songs often filled entire album sides and attempted to usurp some of the DJ's creative role by sequencing a series of contrasting episodes over an unvarying tempo. Eurodisco arrived in 1975 with Donna Summer's Love to love you, baby: producers Pete Bellote and Giorgio Moroder embedded Summer's suggestive moaning in a 17-minute, orchestrated epic in which sections of Summer's vocalizing alternated with through-composed instrumental sections (fig.1). The enormous success of this recording along with Silver Convention's Fly Robin Fly, also from 1975, established that a mass audience existed for Eurodisco.

1. Donna Summer

2. 1977 ONWARDS. Although references to discos in song lyrics and titles were common and the popularity of club hits increased in the pop charts throughout 1976, the genre did not fully emerge into mainstream American life until late in 1977. This was also when aspects of the musical style, largely culled from Eurodisco, consolidated into the form by which disco is now remembered. Textures were thickened with orchestral instruments and synthesizers, while the drums and bass grew steadily busier and less syncopated. The drums added frequent and regular off-beat accents on the hi-hat cymbal to the on-beat accents of the bass drum; and bass patterns frequently filled up every quaver beat, with fills played in alternating pitches an octave apart. The final transformation of disco from a genre associated with gays, blacks and Latinos, to one embraced by straight, white Americans occurred with the overwhelming success of the film Saturday Night Fever, released late in 1977. The soundtrack featured new songs by the Bee Gees, an Australian trio who had joined the disco bandwagon two years earlier to revive their dormant careers, and an assortment of songs from the preceding two years by the Bee Gees, Kool and the Gang, The Trammps and Walter Murphy. The soundtrack yielded four number one singles and became the best-selling disco album up to that time.

The years 1978–9 witnessed the saturation of the pop music market by disco. The sudden dominance of disco was partly helped by the complete abandonment by many radio stations of their former format for disco, and by increasingly standardized and centralized radio programming in the USA. Other rock stars followed the Bee Gees, and 1978 saw major hits by the Rolling Stones (I miss you) and Rod Stewart (Do ya think I'm sexy?), both firmly in the disco mould. The Eurodisco style had clearly superseded rhythm and blues disco in the public notion of what constituted the genre, although a few artists on the borderline between funk and disco continued to succeed. The most important of these was Chic (fig.2), whose last major hit, Good Times (1979), is notable for providing the musical basis for the first rap hit, Rapper's Delight by the Sugarhill Gang (1979).

The extreme and sudden popularity of disco rather quickly produced a backlash among both white rock fans, whose anti-disco hysteria was tinged with homophobia and racism, and fans of soul and funk, who resented disco for crowding out other forms of African-American dance music. This backlash contributed to the decline of disco, which ceased to dominate popular music after 1979. It has, however, continued to influence other forms of dance music. House music, in particular, owes much of its repetitive bass drum patterns to those found in disco; rap, hip hop, and techno gained some of their musical, and many of their performance, conventions from disco, particularly in the creative role of the DJ and the innovative use of technology. A performer such as Madonna owed much of her early success to popularity in dance clubs, and the music of even such crossover artists as Prince and the Jackson siblings is unimaginable without the immediate historic backdrop of disco.

2. Chic

BIBLIOGRAPHY

T. Smucker: 'Disco', The Rolling Stone Illustrated History of Rock & Roll, ed. A. DeCurtis and others (New York, 1976, 3/1992), 561–72

S. Holden: 'The Evolution of a Dance Craze', Rolling Stone (19 April 1979)

R. Dyer: 'In Defense of Disco', On Record: Rock, Pop, and the Written Word, ed. S. Frith and A. Goodwin (New York, 1990), 410–18

C. Krasnow: 'Fear and Loathing in the 70s: Race, Sexuality, and Disco', Stanford Humanities Review, iii/3 (1993), 37–45

D. and J. Breithaupt: Precious and Few: Pop Music in the Early '70s (New York, 1996)

R. Vincent: Funk (New York, 1996)

R. Garofalo: Rockin' Out: Popular Music in the USA (Boston, 1997)

DAVID BRACKETT

Discography. A systematic list of recordings. Despite its obvious association with the disc recording, the term is normally applied to lists of all types of recorded sound. Discography must be distinguished from cataloguing. Library catalogues describe the physical object, providing information found on the artefact and its accompanying printed material. Similarly, manufacturers' catalogues deal with the physical object offered for sale. The discographer goes beyond this information to establish all the facts that distinguish one recording from another or identify a recording issued in more than one format, and may also distinguish multiple recordings of a work by the same performer.

1. History. 2. Sources. 3. Classification.

1. HISTORY. The term seems to have first appeared in print in the Phonograph Monthly Review in January 1931, with 'A [Geraldine] Farrar Discography' by William Henry Seltsam. The list cited the singer's entire output of recordings by title, composer, manufacturer's issue number and (approximate) year of recording. Apart from the earliest recordings, made in Berlin in 1906, the list was divided into solos, duets, trios and quartets. In 1936 Charles Delaunay published Hot Discography, a list of jazz recordings arranged by performer, which appeared in several revised editions in Paris and New York up to 1948. The need for a systematic study of jazz recordings arose from the confusion caused by the reissue of recordings on various labels credited to different performers; the matrix number pressed into the shellac provided the key to establishing the identity of such discs.

The year 1936 also saw the publication of The Gramophone Shop Encyclopedia of Recorded Music, edited by R.D. Darrell, embracing composers of Western art music represented on electrical recordings since 1925 (a few acoustic recordings of unique interest were also included). A systematic arrangement and precise identification of each composer's work brought some order to the recorded repertory. In his preface, Darrell cited in detail the problems encountered in resolving the identification of certain composers and works not consistently identified on record labels. A second edition by George C. Leslie appeared in 1942 and a third by Robert H. Reid (with performer index) in 1948, but previously released records not available at the time of publication were omitted from all three.

In 1937 Roberto Bauer published Historical Records, a list of operatic singers and their output before 1909, and in 1946 James Dennis founded a monthly periodical, Record Collector, which from its first year included articles and discographies about singers. Other publications to appear during this period include Julian Morton Moses' Collectors' Guide to American Recordings, 1895–1925 (1949) and, from 1953, John Bennett's Voices of the Past, a series of label discographies with indexes, primarily devoted to classical vocal recordings. Some volumes of this series were limited to the pre-1925 acoustic period, but several embraced the entire 78 r.p.m era and included non-vocal entries.

The World's Encyclopaedia of Recorded Music, a compilation begun in 1940 and published in 1957, built on the foundation of Darrell's encyclopedia by listing most of the recordings of Western art music issued throughout the world from 1925 to 1950. This time current availability was not a criterion for inclusion. A bound-in supplement and two supplementary volumes continued the listings to early 1956. While the composers and titles of works were the subjects of extensive research, the performers were identified in abbreviated fashion, giving only surnames, and secondary participants were often omitted. The absence of dates eventually became a problem for users. The compilation of data continued on index cards at the National Sound Archive until 1987, but several efforts to arrange for the publication of additional volumes proved fruitless.

Early discographers were interested in performers; indeed, they focussed largely on performers of the past. Enrico Caruso was an early subject of discographic attention, both for his supreme celebrity in his own time and for the comparative ease with which discographies of recordings by his issuer, the Victor Talking Machine Company, could be made. As early as January 1934 Canon H.J. Drummond published a chronological list of Caruso's recordings in The Gramophone. Other discographers subsequently pursued the subject, but even the discographies of Aida Favia-Artsay in 1965 and John R. Bolig in 1973 (both books still indispensable) had still not resolved the dating of the handful of recordings made in Milan for the Gramophone and Typewriter Company and the Anglo-Italian Commerce Company.

From about 1951 many record review magazines began to publish discographies that focussed on individual composers, generally as part of a critical evaluation. Consequently, the lists were limited to recordings currently available in only one country. In the USA, High Fidelity and Stereo Review published critical discographies of many composers. Similarly, The Gramophone (Gramophone from March 1974) in the UK, Fono-Forum in Germany and Diapason in France have regularly published discographies of single works and individual performers.

From 1961 the British Institute of Recorded Sound (now the British Library National Sound Archive) published in its quarterly review, Recorded Sound, with many discographies devoted to individual modern British composers and performers, and, from 1966, the Danish Nationaldiskoteket and the Finnish Institute of Recorded Sound published series of discographies. From 1970 J.F. Weber edited the work of several contributors in the Discography Series, consisting of monographs devoted to composers. The ARSC Journal has published discographies of many types since 1973. In 1979 the Greenwood Press established a continuing hardcover series, Discographies, which considers labels, performers, composers and other categories of recorded sound. Some of the label discographies fill several volumes.

The inclusion of a discography as appendix to a book-length biography of a composer or performer was exceptional until the late 20th century. Among the few early examples were Cesar Saerchinger's biography of the pianist Artur Schnabel, which appeared in 1957 with a discography, albeit without dates, and Emile Vuillermoz's biography of Gabriel Fauré, published in the USA in 1969 with a complete discography compiled by Steven Smolian that included approximate dates.

As the number of published discographies grew, so too did the lack of uniformity in their content, accuracy and completeness. Some questioned whether a list of recordings that lacked label names and issue numbers could be called a discography at all. A number of attempts to define discographic standards evolved, and both David Hamilton and Steven Smolian wrote on the subject in the ARSC Journal. Two jazz symposia that included discussion of discographic requirements, in 1968 and 1969, were published in book form in 1971. Panel discussions were held at the annual conferences of the ARSC in 1971 and the IASA in 1975, and subsequent conferences of both organizations have continued to discuss the issues. A number of important articles on the subject have been published, such as those by J.F. Weber, Alan Kelly and others and William R. Monroe printed in Recorded Sound during 1975. Reviews in Notes, the ARSC Journal and elsewhere have pointed out the deficiencies of published discographies.

As discographies proliferated, bibliographic control emerged. Recorded Sound published a bibliography of discographies of classical music in 1962. Lewis Foreman supplemented it with Discographies in 1973, and this was followed in 1974 by David Cooper's International Bibliography of Discographies, which included classical music and jazz. The ARSC Journal began publication of a bibliography of current discographies of all types in the same year, eventually embracing the years from 1972 to 1985. It laid the groundwork for the three-volume Bibliography of Discographies (1977–83) and its supplement, Classical Music Discographies, 1976–1988 (1989). Vincent Duckles listed selected discographies in his Music Reference and Research Materials in 1974 and subsequent editions.

2. Sources. Sources of discographic information may be primary or secondary. Among primary sources the most valuable are the archives of record companies. Recording sessions are invariably documented in detail, dating back as far as May 1889 in the case of Edison, although some companies' files no longer exist. William R. Moran and Ted Fagan obtained access to the files of Victor and RCA Victor in order to compile a detailed discography based on the matrix numbers of every recording from 1900 to 1950, though only two volumes of this have been published.

A large quantity of recording logs of the EMI labels were microfilmed and deposited in the British Institute of Recorded Sound. Alan Kelly used them, as well as other files found at EMI's offices, to compile label discographies of His Master's Voice from 1898 to 1929. He arranged his work by issue number, however, rather than the more precise chronology of matrix numbers, which he also cited. His work supplanted John Bennett's series Voices of the Past, which was based on secondary sources.

Some performers have kept detailed accounts of their recording activities. These are particularly useful in the case of orchestras. The American Federation of Musicians and unions in other countries have kept files of contracts affecting their members. Discographies of the Philharmonia Orchestra, the LPO, the Cleveland Orchestra and the Cincinnati SO have been published using primary sources. Discographies have also been compiled for many other orchestras.

Secondary sources of information include catalogues published by the record companies, national catalogues and other publications. Even the record label and packaging constitute a secondary, if not entirely dependable, source. Victor De Sabata's Mozart Requiem, which provided the date and place of recording on its original issue, was reissued on Heliodor as an LP with those details printed incorrectly. Clemens Krauss's Schubert 'Great' C major Symphony was reissued on a Teldec CD with a stated recording date somewhat later than the published reviews of the original issue.

Before about 1955, the principal record firms published annual catalogues and monthly supplements. Several major record archives and libraries have sizable collections of these catalogues. Since then, company catalogues have been published less regularly, while the proliferation of record companies has complicated the task of collecting them. National catalogues published independently of any record company have become a principal source of information. The USA, the UK and Germany have seen continuous publication of such catalogues since the beginning of the LP era, while national catalogues for France, Italy, Spain, Japan and other countries have appeared more or less regularly. Like company catalogues, these catalogues list only records currently available.

Record reviews provide much more information than any catalogue. Monthly magazines have been published in all major countries, starting with The Gramophone in the UK in 1923 and Phonograph Monthly Review (continued by its successors) in the USA in 1926. Most magazines have annual indexes, while Gramophone, Disques, Diapason and Harmonie (the last three in France) have been indexed in the national catalogues published by each magazine. The Rekōdo-geijutsu and Stereo geijutsu, published monthly in Japanese, are a dependable source for detailed information on all new issues. K. Myers's Index to Record Reviews has indexed a large number of reviews of Western art music published in the USA and other countries; nine volumes were devoted to reviews from 1948 to 1997.

Similar to record reviews are buyers' guides, which evaluate the recorded repertory comprehensively. B.H. Haggin, David Hall and Irving Kolodin each compiled such a treatment of Western art music between 1938 and 1941, and each published several revised editions. By 1955 the publisher Knopf required three authors to cover the same repertory on LPs alone. Similarly in the UK, Edward Sackville-West and Desmond Shawe-Taylor compiled The Record Guide annually from 1951. Later Edward Greenfield and others compiled The Stereo Record Guide annually from 1960. Arthur Cohn in 1981 was the last compiler to attempt to organize the entire body of serious music into one critical survey.

3. Classification. There are three basic types of discography. One organizes a group of records by the intellectual content of the recorded sound. Composers and their works are a significant part of this type, but the content may be music, speech, public events or sounds of nature. Another type, the performer discography, organizes the records according to individuals and ensembles; a third is organized by record label. There are also general discographies.

From as early as the preface to R.D. Darrell's encyclopedia of 1936, the uniformity of citations has been recognized to be a problem, and an element as simple as the form and alphabetical listing of a composer's name can easily cause discrepancy. Josquin des Prez, for example, has been listed under the letters J, P and D, and Shostakovich will be found in French catalogues under C. It is the discographer's task to address these issues, as well as more common problems such as that of distinguishing between individuals who may have similar or identical names.

The titles of works, too, are not always cited uniformly. Certain symphonies by Haydn, Dvořák and Schubert, for example, have undergone a change of numbering systems since they were first recorded. As in the case of Schubert's lieder, some works have been identified incorrectly because the same texts were set more than once. Darrell aptly described the inconsistent ways in which operatic arias are identified on record labels. Some works, such as the Bruckner symphonies and Musorgsky's Boris Godunov, have been performed and recorded according to several different editions. Other works have been attributed to the wrong composer; the Toy Symphony once appeared in a Haydn list, though is now attributed to Leopold Mozart or to Angerer.

The second type of discography treats performers. The identification of performers was the first problem faced by jazz discographers, who found that recordings were sometimes reissued pseudonymously. Even the first issue of a recording may be pseudonymous; in such cases the performer may have been contracted to another firm, or the recording may have been issued without the performer's knowledge or consent. It is then, of course, necessary for the discographer to ascertain the performer's identity.

Another problem is the incomplete listing of performers. On early recordings, performers were not always identified by full name; and accompanying musicians, if mentioned at all, were often cited merely as 'piano' or 'orchestra', and the orchestra's conductor might not be mentioned. Subsequent citations in catalogues of various kinds may truncate the identification of the performers even further.

Two systems of arrangement have been followed in performer discography. A chronological listing of the recordings says much about the performer's career, but indexes, at least of composers or works, must be supplied. If the recordings fall into several categories, such as studio recordings and public performances, the compiler may decide to divide the recordings into several separate lists. Alternatively, a performer's work may be listed by composer and title, facilitating comparison where there is more than one recording of any single work. If precise dates are lacking, this may be a more manageable format.

The third type of discography focusses on the producing organization and its trademark label. Commercial record issues invariably bear a trademark on the label and an issue number. In the 78 r.p.m. era, a master disc was made from which all subsequent discs were pressed; after 1902, these were stamped with a matrix number between the label area and the grooves. If a performance was recorded more than once, a take number would be added to the matrix number (although a few firms used a different matrix number for each take). In some cases more than one take was issued. The combination of numbers, letters and signs that made up a matrix number varied greatly from one firm to the next. Victor continued the series of take numbers with the same matrix number even if the performer recorded the same work again many years later. The Gramophone Company assigned letters to each recording technician so as to distinguish his series of numbers from others. Apart from establishing the unique identity of a recording, matrix numbers as a series make up a code that can help to establish dates of recording.

Rarely, a mistake might be made in reading the matrix number; RCA Victor issued an album of Renaissance music in which one side was pressed containing a Wagner aria, the result of misreading a single digit in a six-digit matrix number. The take number might represent more than merely an alternative performance. After Sir Adrian Boult recorded Vaughan Williams's Sixth Symphony for the first time (1953), the composer revised the scherzo. HMV made a new recording of the two sides occupied by that movement and supplied the revised version of the scherzo in all subsequent pressings, but the different music was identified only by higher take numbers given to the same matrix numbers. Jazz recordings show distinct differences in improvisation between successive takes.

From about the beginning of the LP era, master recordings were made on tape, allowing an issued 'performance' to be edited from different takes. Consequently, although LPs bear tape transfer numbers in the same position on the disc as matrix numbers, these numbers do not necessarily identify unique performances. Luckily, this is not always the case: Argo recorded an album of music by Britten in 1964, but then recorded the work on one side, A Ceremony of Carols, again in 1966; the same issue number and sleeve design were retained, but the newly recorded side bore a higher tape transfer number.

A label discography organized by sessions or matrix numbers depends more heavily on primary sources than does a discography organized by issue numbers. One recording may appear on a variety of labels in various countries with issue numbers that may be the same or different. Over the years a recording may appear in various formats, including 78 r.p.m., 45 r.p.m., LP, CD, open-reel tape, cassette tape and others. Sometimes the issue number assigned to a new format will be a recognizable variant of the original number. Secondary sources often cite only the substantive part of an issue number, but the prefix is often necessary to distinguish one series from another on the same label.

The label name or trademark that appears on commercial records has been a source of confusion on two counts. One problem is the use of the same trademark by separate firms that have split from a parent company. For some decades the Columbia name and 'magic notes' trademark were divided worldwide among four firms that descended from the pioneer US firm. In 1987 Sony, successor to the US firm, bought out the rights of the other three companies. In the interim, collectors coined such terms as 'American Columbia' that did not appear on any record label.

The other problem is the changing or otherwise diverse identities of record firms. Copies of a single record, if kept on the market for long enough, might be found with labels such as Victor, Victrola and RCA Victor. Similarly, a single record, bearing a single number, might be found with the labels His Master's Voice, La Voix de son Maître, La Voce del Padrone and other translations, and even with the name Electrola and a trademark different from the celebrated dog listening to a gramophone. Collectors have referred to all of these as HMV, regardless of whether any such logo or trademark was ever printed on the label.

On most records the issue number consists of a prefix and a serial number; there is sometimes a suffix. The prefix and suffix may be alphanumeric. It is not uncommon for secondary sources to cite a record by the number alone, but the omission of the prefix and suffix may fail to distinguish it adequately. Unlike the matrix number, which is used for control in manufacturing, the issue number is used for marketing control. Whereas a series of matrix numbers, even if assigned in blocks, will in general correspond closely to chronological order, issue numbers will correspond less closely.

One of the most difficult aspects of discography lies in establishing dates of recording. A company's files are the ultimate source of this information, but until recent times this data was not published and the files were not open to researchers. About 1953 Deutsche Grammophon's Archiv Produktion began the first consistent effort to publish the precise date and place of recording on each issue, a practice that has become commonplace in the CD era for both new recordings and reissues.

Often classified separately, a general discography is simply a more comprehensive discography of one of the types already described. The Orchestra on Record, 1896–1926 by Claude Arnold, for example, is a general discography of orchestral music recorded by the acoustic process. It provides both recording and issue dates as far as they are available, as well as LP and CD reissue data. The Discopaedia of the Violin by James Creighton (especially in its greatly enlarged second edition) is an exhaustive treatment of violinists and their recordings, despite its omission of dates. General discographies are of great utility to specialist discographers, especially if they give details of primary sources such as matrix and take numbers.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BIBLIOGRAPHIES

M. Gray and G. Gibson: Bibliography of Discographies: Classical Music, 1925–1975 (New York, 1977)
D. Allen: Bibliography of Discographies: Jazz (New York, 1981)
M. Gray: Bibliography of Discographies: Popular Music (New York, 1983)
M. Gray: Classical Music Discographies, 1976–1988 (Westport, CT, 1989)

CRITICAL STUDIES

G. Stevenson: 'Discography: Scientific, Analytical, Historical and Systematic', Library Trends, xxi (1972), 101–35
L. Foreman: Systematic Discography (London, 1974)
J. Perkins, A. Kelly and J. Ward: 'On Gramophone Company Matrix Numbers, 1898 to 1921', Record Collector, xxiii (May 1976), 51–90
M. Gray: 'Discography: its Prospects and Problems', Notes, xxxv (1978–9), 578–92
G. Roig: 'M3–M6: Datons les disques de Chatou', Sonorités, no.17 (1987), 29–42; no.18 (1987), 61–70
D. Hall: 'Discography: a Chronological Survey', Modern Music Librarianship: Essays in Honor of Ruth Watanabe, ed. A. Mann (Stuyvesant, NY, 1989), 173–84
B. Kernfeld and H. Rye: 'Comprehensive Discographies of Jazz, Blues, and Gospel', Notes, li/2 (1994), 501–47, li/3 (1995), 865–91
J. Bowen, ed.: Guide to Discography (Berkeley, forthcoming)

COMPREHENSIVE DISCOGRAPHIES

R.D. Darrell: The Gramophone Shop Encyclopedia of Recorded Music, i (New York, 1936)
G. Leslie: The Gramophone Shop Encyclopedia of Recorded Music, ii (New York, 1942)
R. Reid: The Gramophone Shop Encyclopedia of Recorded Music, iii (New York, 1948)
F. Clough and G. Cuming: The World's Encyclopaedia of Recorded Music (London, 1957)
V. Girard and H. Barnes: Vertical-Cut Cylinders and Discs (London, 1964, 2/1971)
A. Koenigsberg: Edison Cylinder Records, 1889–1912 (New York, 1969)
F. Karlin: Edison Diamond Discs (Santa Monica, CA, 1972)
R. Wile: Edison Disc Recordings (Philadelphia, 1978)
B. Rust: Jazz Records: A–Z, 1897–1942 (New Rochelle, NY, 4/1978)
R. Spottswood: Ethnic Music on Records (1893–1942) (Urbana, IL, 1990)
J. Creighton: Discopaedia of the Violin (Burlington, ON, 2/1994)
R. Dixon, J. Godrich and H. Rye: Blues and Gospel Records, 1890–1943 (Oxford, 4/1997)
C. Arnold: The Orchestra on Record, 1896–1926 (Westport, CT, 1997)
K. Myers: Index to Record Reviews (Boston, 1978–89)
P. Cauthen and M. Palkovic: Index to CD and Record Reviews, 1987–1997 (Boston, 1999)

LABEL DISCOGRAPHIES

J.R. Bennett: A Catalogue of Vocal Recordings from the English Catalogues of the Gramophone Company (Lingfield, Surrey, 1955)
M. Smith: The H.M.V. 'D' and 'E' Catalogue (Lingfield, Surrey, 1961, 2/1971)
J.R. Bennett and E. Hughes: The International Red Label Catalogue of DB & DA His Master's Voice Recordings, 1924–56 (Lingfield, Surrey, 1961)
M. Smith and I. Cosens: Columbia Gramophone Company, Ltd.: English Celebrity Issues (Lingfield, Surrey, 1972)
M. Smith and F. Andrews: His Master's Voice Recordings, Plum Label 'C' Series (12 inch) (Lingfield, Surrey, 1974)
J.R. Bennett: A Catalogue of Vocal Recordings from the Russian Catalogues of the Gramophone Company Limited (Lingfield, Surrey, 1977)
T. Fagan and W. Moran: The Encyclopedic Discography of Victor Recordings (Westport, CT, 1984–6)
A. Kelly: His Master's Voice/La voce del padrone: the Italian Catalogue (Westport, CT, 1988)
A. Kelly: His Master's Voice/La voix de son maître: the French Catalogue (Westport, CT, 1990)
A. Kelly: His Master's Voice/Die Stimme seines Herrn; the German Catalogue (Westport, CT, 1994)
W. Shaman, W. Collins and C. Goodwin: EJS: Discography of the Edward J. Smith Recordings (Westport, CT, 1994)
R. Taylor: Columbia Twelve-Inch Records in the United Kingdom, 1906–1930 (East Barnet, Herts., 1994)
P. Charosh: Berliner Gramophone Records, American Issues, 1892–1900 (Westport, CT, 1995)
A. Kelly and J. Klöters: His Master's Voice/De stem van zijn Meester: the Dutch Catalogue (Westport, CT, 1997)
T. Brooks and B. Rust: The Columbia Master Book Discography, 1901–1934 (Westport, CT, 1999)
W. Shaman, W. Collins and C. Goodwin: More EJS: Discography of the Edward J. Smith Recordings (Westport, CT, 1999)

SUBJECT AND PERFORMER DISCOGRAPHIES for additional discographies see articles on individual performers

J. Coover and R. Colvig: Medieval and Renaissance Music on Long-Playing Records (Detroit, 1964–73)
A. Favia-Artsay: Caruso on Records (Valhalla, NY, 1965)
J. Smart: The Sousa Band: a Discography (Washington DC, 1971)
J. Bolig: The Recordings of Enrico Caruso (Dover, DE, 1973)
A. Jefferson: Richard Strauss Opera (Utica, NY, 1977)
R. Sears: V-Discs (Westport, CT, 1980–86)
T. Croucher: Early Music Discography: from Plainsong to the Sons of Bach (Phoenix, AZ, 1981)
S. Pettitt: Philharmonia Orchestra: Complete Discography, 1945–1987 (London, 1987)
T. Day: A Discography of Tudor Church Music (London, 1989)
J. Weber: A Gregorian Chant Discography (Utica, NY, 1990)
R. Shoaf: The Schoenberg Discography (Berkeley, 2/1994)
P. Fülöp: Mahler Discography (New York, 1995)
M. Gray: 'Discography: Commercial Recordings by Otto Klemperer', in P. Heyworth: Otto Klemperer: his Life and Times (Cambridge, 1996), i, 435–41; ii, 394–460
J. Hunt: The Furtwängler Sound (London, 5/1996)
P. Stuart: The London Philharmonic Discography (1997)

JEROME F. WEBER

Discordable [discordant, discordé] (Fr.). SCORDATURA.

Discordato. See SCORDATURA.

Disertori, Benvenuto (b Trent, 16 Feb 1887; d Milan, 22 Jan 1969). Italian engraver and musicologist. After studying music and art at Trent and the University of Vienna, he took the chair in engraving at the Accademia Brera, Milan (1931), and taught at the Scuola di Paleografia e Filologica Musicale at Cremona (1950–53). He was famous for his engravings and watercolours of Tuscany and Umbria, and also became known for his research in the history of instruments and instrumental tablature. His editions of frottolas by Bossinensis are important studies of the early history of accompanied song, as are his several introductory chapters.

WRITINGS

'Di alcuni strumenti di Stradivari tuttora esistenti in Italia', RMI, xli (1937), 300–05
'Il più antico esemplare esistente di strumento ad arco', RMI, xlii (1938), 294–308
'Un'aria di danza a ritmo ambiguo in un affresco del Cinquecento', RMI, xliv (1940), 31–3
'Pratica e tecnica della lira da braccio', RMI, xlv (1941), 150–75
'L'epistola all'Italia del Petrarca musicata nei Codici Tridentini', RMI, xlvi (1942), 65–78
'Un incunabolo di assolo per il violone (Il "recercar" di Felice sopra "Fortuna desperata")', RMI, xlvi (1942), 455–71
'Le canzoni strumentali da sonar a quattro di Claudio Merulo', RMI, xlvii (1943), 305–21
'Il manoscritto 1947–4 di Trento e la canzone "i'ay prins amours"', RMI, xlviii (1946), 1–29
'In margine all'"Odhecaton"', RMI, li (1949), 29–42
'La frottola nella storia della musica': introduction to: Le frottole nell'edizione principe di Ottaviano Petrucci, IMa, 1st ser., i (1954)
ed. M. Carrara : Intavolatura di liuto, 1585 (Florence, 1956)
'L'unica composizione sicuramente strumentale nei Codici Tridentini', CHM, ii (1956–7), 135–45
'Contradiction tonale dans la transcription d'un "strambotto" célèbre', Le luth et sa musique: Neuilly-sur-Seine 1957, 37–42
'Il liuto soprano', Le luth et sa musique: Neuilly-sur-Seine 1957, 231–8
'Remarques sur l'évolution du luth en Italie au XVe siècle et au XVIe', Le luth et sa musique: Neuilly-sur-Seine 1957, 19–24
'Il Domenichino pittore, trascrittore di musica e musicologo', Quadrivium, vii (1966), 57–78
La musica nei quadri antichi (Trent, 1978) [incl. list of Disertori's writings, 201–3]

EDITIONS

Franciscus Bossinensis: 20 recercari da sonar nel lauto (Milan, 1954)
Le frottole per canto e liuto intabulate da Franciscus Bossinensis, IMi, new ser., iii (1964)
Johannes Martini: Magnificat e messe, AMMM, xii (1964)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Maroni, ed.: Benvenuto Disertori, incisore e umanista (Trent, 1954) [incl. autobiographical note by Disertori, 7ff]
R. Maroni, ed.: Benvenuto Disertori: disegnatore e musicologo (Trent, 1960)
R. Maroni, ed.: Benvenuto Disertori: grafica minore (Trent, 1963)
G. Bernardi, ed.: Benvenuto Disertori: bibliografia (Trent, 1972)
M. Donà: 'Ricordo di Benvenuto Disertori', Studi trentini di scienze storiche, lviii (1979), 155–60

CAROLYN GIANTURCO/TERESA M. GIALDRONI

Disineer [Dissner], Gerhard. See DIESINEER, GERHARD.

Disis. (Ger.) D𝄪. See PITCH NOMENCLATURE.

Disjunct. A term applied to a melodic line that moves by leap (i.e. in intervals of more than a 2nd) rather than in conjunct motion (by step).

Disminución (Sp.). See DIMINUTION, (1) and ORNAMENTS, §2.

Disposition (i). The arrangement of different stops or registers among the keyboards or divisions of a harpsichord or organ. For example, a single unison register of a harpsichord is usually designated as 1 × 8′; an octave higher (the four foot) as 1 × 4′. A three-register harpsichord with two unisons and an octave would be designated 2 × 8′, 1 × 4′.

□

Disposition (ii). See SPECIFICATION.

Dissonance. The antonym to consonance, hence a discordant sounding together of two or more notes perceived as having 'roughness' or 'tonal tension'. In Pythagorean terms this meant that dissonances were intervals produced by string lengths in ratios formed from numbers greater than 4. For the subsequent development of this view by music theorists and for psychoacoustic explanations of the phenomenon of consonance and dissonance, see CONSONANCE.

See also FOURTH, RESOLUTION and SEPTIMAL SYSTEM.

Di Stefano, Giuseppe (b Motta Sant'Anastasia, nr Catania, 24 July 1921). Italian tenor. He studied in Milan with Luigi Montesanto. He made his début in 1946 at the Teatro Municipale, Reggio nell'Emilia, as Massenet's Des Grieux, and first sang at La Scala in 1947. He made his Metropolitan début in 1948 as the Duke in Rigoletto and continued to appear there until 1965. Until 1953 he sang lighter roles such as Wilhelm Meister (Mignon), Elvino (La sonnambula), Mascagni's Fritz and Nadir. His singing at that time was notable for its warm, sensual timbre and expressive, impassioned phrasing, which were enhanced by his generous, outgoing personality. As he began to take on heavier parts his singing became more rough-hewn. By 1957 he had added Don José, Canio, Turiddu, Radames, Don Alvaro (La forza del destino) and Osaka (Iris) to his repertory; thus, when he made his British début at Edinburgh in 1957, his Nemorino had less vocal charm than had been expected. He sang Cavaradossi at Covent Garden in 1961. Di Stefano made numerous recordings, many of them with Callas, notably Tosca (1953, under De Sabata) and Lucia di Lammermoor (1955, under Karajan); these show his passionate, exuberant style at its most winning. He published a book on opera singing, L'arte del canto (Milan, 1989).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Eggers: Giuseppe di Stefano (Berlin, 1967)
R. Bing: 5000 Nights at the Opera (London, 1972), 145ff
T.Semrau: 'Giuseppe di Stefano', Record Collector, xxxix (1994), 165–82
G. Gualerzi: 'Di Stefano and Corelli at 75', Opera, xlvii (1996), 1137–44

HAROLD ROSENTHAL/ALAN BLYTH

Distin. English family of brass instrument manufacturers, musicians, music sellers and publishers. They were active in England and the USA during the 19th century.

In 1833 John (Henry) Distin (b Plympton, Devon, 1798; d 1863) formed with his four sons a brass ensemble known as the Distin Family Quintet (see illustration), which toured from 1837. In 1844 the family went to Paris, where they tried the new instruments of ADOLPHE SAX and immediately adopted them for their quintet. In 1845 John Distin established a firm, Distin & Sons, to sell music at 31 Cranbourn Street, Leicester Square, London, and in the following year they became the British agents for the 'saxhorns'. John Distin's eldest son, George, died in 1848, and it was as a quartet that the family toured the USA in 1849.

Henry (John) Distin (b London, 22 July 1819; d Philadelphia, 11 Oct 1903), the second son, who had received his early training in music at the RAM, took over the family firm in 1850. In that year the firm began its own manufacture of brass instruments (which eventually led to a breach with Sax, who transferred his agency to the firm Rudall, Rose and Carte in 1853). Additional premises were opened about 1857 at 9 Great Newport Street, Long Acre, which became the principal place of business after 1859, when 31 Cranbourn Street was given up; the new premises were expanded in 1862 and again in 1866. The firm published much band music in the series Distin's Band Journal. Henry Distin's efforts at improving valved instruments were rewarded in 1867 with a prize medal at the Exposition Universelle in Paris. In 1868 he sold the firm to Boosey & Co., which continued it as Distin & Co. until 1874.

Distin subsequently lost most of his wealth in several unfortunate business endeavours and in 1877 emigrated to New York. He set up shop at 79 East 4th Street (then 285 and 355 Bowery), but most instruments of that period were made at 115–21 East 13th Street or in Moses Slater's factory in Cortland Street. They included 'echo' and 'Paris' cornets and the first 'melody horns' – instruments with crooks and an echo or muting valve intended as substitutes for French horns. By 1880 Distin was already importing instruments for J.W. Pepper of New York and Philadelphia, and in the summer of 1882 he moved to Philadelphia to help Pepper establish a factory. Pepper, however, wished to sell cheaply to a mass market, so Distin, whose interest was in high-quality instruments, formed a partnership with Senator Luther R. Keefer and other businessmen to establish the Henry Distin Manufacturing Co. (2 March 1886). The factory, in Williamsport, Pennsylvania, produced Distin instruments in substantial numbers until February 1909, when Brua C. Keefer sr purchased the company. Keefer replaced Distin's name with his own, but instruments modelled on Distin's were manufactured until about 1940. From 1884 to 1888 Distin published music and sold instruments in Philadelphia, first at 917 Filbert Street and then at 913 Arch Street. From 1889 he and his son William Henry, also an instrument maker, lived in Williamsport, but in 1890 Distin vested all rights with the company and retired to Philadelphia with a pension.

Distin Family Quintet: engraving from the 'Illustrated London News' (14 December 1844)

As a cornettist Distin spurred the growing popularity of early valved brass instruments, while as a manufacturer he improved their design and mechanism and the tools of their construction. His 'light piston valve' (patented in 1864) became the prototype for the modern cornet valve, and his 'center bore cornet' (patented in 1884), whose design freed the flow of air from abrupt bends in the tubing, became the standard of excellence in the USA. He also took out 19 patents for improvements in the design and manufacture of instruments, including several for percussion instruments and their accessories. Instruments designed by Distin are found in many American collections, notably the Shrine to Music Museum at the University of South Dakota and the Henry Ford Museum, Dearborn, Michigan.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

WaterhouseLangwillI

H. Distin: 'History of the Distin Family since 1798', New York Times (7 Aug 1881)

Obituary [H. Distin], Williamsport Gazette and Bulletin (13 Oct 1903)

A. Carse: 'Adolphe Sax and the Distin Family', MR, vi (1945), 193–201

P. Bate: The Trumpet and Trombone (London, 1966, 2/1970)

L.P. Farrar: 'Keeping-up with Keefer: Distinland not so distant', Newsletter of American Musical Instrument Society, x/3 (1981), 1–2; see also xi/3 (1982)

N. Groce: Musical Instrument Makers of New York (Stuyvesant, NY, 1991), 41

ROBERT E. ELIASON, LLOYD P. FARRAR

Distler, Hugo (b Nuremberg, 24 June 1908; d Berlin, 1 Nov 1942). German composer and organist. The illegitimate son of a manufacturer and a dressmaker, he went to school in Nuremberg, passing his final school examination at the Realgymnasium in 1927. During his school years he learnt to play the piano and had instruction in music history and theory. Distler began his studies at the Leipzig Conservatory in the conducting class, with piano as his secondary subject; however, after a short time Grabner advised him to abandon these courses to take up composition and the organ. Friendships that were to last throughout his life quickly developed between Distler and his teachers Grabner and Ramin. His studies with Grabner, in particular, grew into fruitful discussion, with the teacher learning from the pupil. Furthermore, Högner, who taught liturgical organ playing at the conservatory from 1929, exercised great influence on Distler. In this way he had contact with two of the leading figures in the Orgelbewegung, a movement directed to a return to the organ sound of the Baroque and pre-Baroque. Grabner's tuition stemmed from Riemann's counterpoint teaching, and so from the Protestant chorale; the religious and sensitive Distler avidly assimilated these various influences, and rapidly developed them. Performances by the Thomanerchor under Karl Straube made him thoroughly familiar with new works and with the music of the 16th and 17th centuries, and the Leipzig Bach tradition encouraged him to study the work of the former Kantor. Schütz's music was also an important stimulus.

Distler's first two works were published during his student days, but his most fruitful years began only after he became organist of the Jakobikirche, Lübeck, where he produced a quantity of vocal music, particularly in collaboration with Bruno Grusnick and his Lübecker Sing- und Spielkreis. It was at this time, when he directed a children's choir and also the choristers of the Jakobikirche, that most of his sacred works were composed. His work with the musical youth movement resulted in the Lübecker Singtage, first held in 1932, whose focal point was community singing with Fritz Jöde.

There was much hope that Protestant church music in Germany would be given more prominence once the National Socialists came to power. Distler, therefore, joined the NSDAP in 1933, together with many others; he could not have foreseen that his hopes would be unfulfilled and that party officials would make his future professional life very uneasy. (He refrained from composing party-affirmative pieces or songs for official purposes.) In October 1933 Distler was appointed head of the chamber music department at the Lübeck Conservatory, and at about the same time he began teaching at the Church Music School, Spandau, Berlin. The motets of the Geistliche Chormusik, modelled on Schütz, are particularly profound works of the period; the Totentanz from this collection is the most notable expression of Distler's individual style. The year 1935 was taken up with the restoration of the Jakobikirche's organs, since Distler himself controlled the collection of funds and the work, and when it was completed he published a book about the organs. Difficulties arose in increasing measure as a result of the hostility of the Nazis to church music and those who acknowledged the Church. Despite his honourable appointment to the Staatliche Hochschule für Musikerziehung und Kirchenmusik in Charlottenburg, Berlin, Distler decided in April 1937 to move to Stuttgart to teach at the Württemberg Hochschule für Musik.

In Stuttgart Distler had at first to counter state antagonism, which was resisted through the solidarity of the professors at the Hochschule. Gradually his duties increased; he assumed the direction of the Esslingen Singakademie and then began work with the Stuttgart Hochschule choir. At the same time government pressures grew, and only the intervention of Gerhard Maasz was able to avert the denunciation of Distler's work as 'degenerate art' at the music festival in Düsseldorf in 1938. Distler achieved his greatest public success when the Stuttgart Hochschule choir gave the première of sections from the Mörike-Chorliederbuch at the festival of German Choral Music in Graz in 1939; the event was regarded as the climax of the festival, but the dissemination of the work took place only after the war. Distler's Mörike-Chorliederbuch must now be recognized as the most important German secular a cappella collection of the 20th century.

Distler was made professor in Stuttgart in May 1940, and this freed him from immediate war service. On 1 October 1940 he was appointed by Fritz Stein to succeed Kurt Thomas as teacher of composition, organ and choral conducting at the Staatliche Akademische Hochschule für Musik in Charlottenburg, Berlin. There he was contented in his work, although major compositional projects proved abortive; the St John Passion soon had to be abandoned and the enormous oratorio Die Weltalter stagnated after the complete formulation of the text. The burden of increasing aerial attacks, the deaths of friends, professional strain (Distler was made director of the Berlin State and Cathedral Choir on 1 April 1942 in succession to Alfred Sittard) and finally, and in particular, the hostility of the authorities and the constant threat of recruitment into military service, all contributed to the overburdening of his physical resources and profound spiritual depression that led to his death.

The basis of Distler's work was the rediscovery of old forms and genres, and his highly effective word-painting evolved from the music of Schütz, but without imitating him. Distler's vocal music goes beyond its models in rhythmic and harmonic freedom, creating a quite individual style which was spread by choirs in Germany and abroad during the years after World War II, and which in turn stimulated further creative work. The organ pieces are similarly new in principle; something of their originality came from Distler's work with Baroque organs, primarily in north Germany. In both vocal and organ works the distinctive features of Distler's style are its pregnant rhythms and its harmonic boldness within a tonal setting.

WORKS

SACRED VOCAL

Allein zu dir, Herr Jesu Christ, motet, 4vv, 1928; Gloria in excelsis Deo, choral fugue, 3vv, 1928; Ave Maria zart, chorus 4 vv, 1928; Herzlich lieb hab ich dich, o Herr, op.2, 2 choruses 4vv, 1930; Nun ruhen alle Wälder, motet, chorus 4vv, 1930/31; Deutsche Choralmesse, op.3, chorus 6vv, 1931; Kleine Adventsmusik, op.4, spkr, children's chorus, fl, ob, vn, org/hpd, vc, 1931; Der Jahrkreis, 52 motets, op.5, chorus 2/3vv, some with insts, 1932–3; Christ, der du bist der helle Tag, op.6 no.1, chorus 3vv, 2 vn, bc, 1933; 3 kleine Choralmotetten, op.6 no.2, chorus 4vv, 1933; Choral-Passion, op.7, 2 solo vv, chorus 5vv, 1933; Die Weihnachtsgeschichte, op.10, 1933; Wo Gott zum Haus nit gibt sein Gunst, op.11 no.1, 4 solo vv ad lib, chorus 4vv, 2 ob, str, hpd/org/pf, 1933; Geistliche Chormusik, op.12, chorus 4vv, 1934–6, 1941: Singet deem Herrn ein neues Lied, Totentanz, Wach auf, du deutsches Reich, Singet frisch und wohlgemut, Ich wollt, dass ich daheime wär, Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme, In der Welt habt ihr Angst, Das ist je gewistlich war, Fürwahr, er trag unsere Krankheit; Nun danket all und bringet Ehr, op.11 no.2, S, T, chorus 4vv, str, org, 1941; Liturgische Sätze über altevangelische Kyrie- und Gloriaweisen, op.13, chorus 2–8vv, 1933–5; 3 geistliche Konzerte, op.17, S/T, org/hpd, 1937; St John Passion, inc.; many other motets etc.

SECULAR VOCAL

3 Lieder (P. Brockhaus), A, pf, 1931; Das Lied von der Glocke, op.9 no.1, solo vv, chorus, orch, 1933–4; An die Natur, op.9 no.2, S, chorus 4vv, str qt, 1934; Neues Chorliederbuch, op.16, 8 vols., chorus 4–8vv, 1936–8; Mörike-Chorliederbuch, op.19, 3 parts, 1938–9; Lied am Herde (F. Diettrich), op.21 no.1, Bar, pf/chbr orch, 1941; Kleine Sing- und Spielmusik, op.21 no.2, vv, insts, 1941; Kleine Sommerkantate, 2 S, str qt, 1942; Der Mond ist aufgegangen, female unison chorus, vn, va, ob; Wiegenlied, lv, pf; Die Weltalter, orat, inc.

INSTRUMENTAL

Kammermusik, fl, ob, pf qt, 1927; Kleine Sonate, pf, 1927; Konzertante Sonate, op.1, 2 pf, 1930; Chbr Conc., hpd, 11 insts, 1931; Partita: Nun komm, der Heiden Heiland, op.8 no.1, org, 1932; Partita: Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme, op.8 no.2, org, 1934–5; Kleine Orgelchoralbearbeitungen, op.8 no.3, 1935–8; Conc., op.14, hpd, str orch, 1935–6 [3rd movt withdrawn, pubd 1998]; Sonate über alte deutsche Volkslieder, op.15a, 2 vn, pf, 1935–6; 11 kleine Klavierstücke für die Jugend, op.15b, 1935–6; Konzertstück, pf, orch, 1937; 30 Spielstücke für die Kleinorgel, op.18 no.1, 1938; Org Sonata (Trio), op.18 no.2, 1938–9; Str Qt, op.20 no.1, a, 1939, arr. 2 pf as Konzertstück, op.20 no.2, 1940; Ritter Blaubart (incid music, L. Tieck), 1940, unperf.

MSS in D-LÜh

Principal publisher: Bärenreiter

WRITINGS

for detailed list see Hanheide (1997)

'Postulat eines neuen musikalischen Lebens- und Gestaltungsprinzips', Der Wagen (1933), 77–84

'Neue Unterrichtswege in der Berufsausbildung des praktischen Kirchenmusikers', Lübeckische Blätter, lxxvi (1934), 147–8 with E. Thienhaus: Die beiden Orgeln in St Jakobi zu Lübeck (Lübeck, 1935)

'Gedanken zum Problem der Registrierung alter, speziell Bachscher Orgelmusik', Musik und Kirche, xi (1939), 101–6

Funktionelle Harmonielehre (Kassel, 1941)

'Harmonielehre früher und jetzt', Zeitschrift für Hausmusik, x (1941), 41–6

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F. Stege: 'Musiker im Gespräch: Hugo Distler', ZfM, ci (1934), 1262–3

W. Schwinger: 'Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme: Hugo Distler', Kirchenmusik heute, ed. H. Böhm (Berlin, 1959), 42–52

U. von Rauchhaupt: Die vokale Kirchenmusik Hugo Distlers (Gütersloh, 1963)

B. Grusnick: 'Hugo Distler und Hermann Grabner', Musica, xviii (1964), 55–65

L. Palmer: Hugo Distler and his Church Music (St Louis and London, 1967)

W. Jennrich: Hugo Distler (Berlin, 1970)

U. Herrmann: Hugo Distler: Rufer and Mahner (Berlin, 1972)

S. Kruse: Das Werk Hugo Distlers: Probleme des Komponierens in der Zeit von 1920–1945 (Lübeck, 1978, 2/1988)

H.-J. Rewe: Musik nach Eduard Mörike (Hamburg, 1987)

H. Grabner and others: Hugo Distler, Komponisten in Bayern, xx (Tutzing, 1990)

D. Schuberth, ed.: Kirchenmusik im Nationalsozialismus: zehn Vorträge (Kassel, 1995)

Hugo Distler im Dritten Reich: Lübeck 1995, ed. S. Hanheide (Osnabrück, 1997) [incl. list of works and bibliography]

KLAUS L. NEUMANN

Distler, Johann Georg (b Vienna or nearby, 1760; d Vienna, 28 July 1799). Austrian composer and violinist. He was a favourite pupil of Haydn in the 1770s and also studied the violin. In 1781 he became a violinist in the Stuttgart court orchestra, and in 1790 was promoted to concert leader. In 1789 he was also named Kapelldirektor there and in 1791 music director. In 1796, because of mental illness, he returned to his family in Vienna, where he died. Two of his sisters, Franziska and Elisabeth, were singers, as was his sister-in-law, Christiane Marianne Regina Distler, wife of his brother Joseph Anton Thomas, an actor. The Mme Distler who sang in the Stuttgart opera in 1799–1800 was perhaps his widow Luise, who lived there.

Distler's two sets of three-movement string quartets opp.1–2 (Basle, 1791, 2/1795) were very popular, op.1 being republished in Augsburg, Paris and London. According to Schilling 'The facility and agreeableness of his ideas, along with his correct treatment of them, were probably the principal reasons for this'. A later set of six, op.6 (Augsburg, 1798), has mostly four movements, with a minuet as the second. Distler also published a popular violin concerto (Basle, 1791) and two trios for clarinet, violin and viola, op.7 (Augsburg, n.d.). A flute concerto is in autograph in the library of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, Vienna. Six string quintets were advertised by Traeg in 1797, but no copy is known.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; GerberNL; MGG1 (E.F. Schmid); SchillingE □

Distropha, tristropha [double apostrophe, bistropha; triple apostrophe]. In Western chant notations, groups of apostrophes (see APOSTROPHE), known collectively as strophicus, usually of the same pitch. They were distinguished from simple repeated virgae or puncta (see VIRGA and PUNCTUM) probably by the manner of their performance, although it is not certain what this may have entailed. Aurelian of Réôme spoke of a staccato reiteration (GS, i, 57), an interpretation favoured by most modern writers (for illustrations see NOTATION, §III, 1(ii), Table 1).

DAVID HILEY

Ditfurth, Franz Wilhelm Freiherr von (b Rinteln an der Weser, 7 Oct 1801; d Nuremberg, 25 May 1880). German folksong collector. After abandoning his law studies at the University of Marburg (1820–25), he made the acquaintance of Spohr in Kassel. This, together with his interest in published folksong collections, inspired him to devote himself to poetry and music and especially to collecting folksongs. He took theory lessons with Moritz Hauptmann in Leipzig and also studied the music of the 15th and 16th centuries. From 1858 he was director of the Department of Old Music at the Germanisches Nationalmuseum in Nuremberg. He collected folksongs from Franconia and historical songs from Germany and Austria from the period 1618–1871.

EDITIONS

Fränkische Volkslieder (Leipzig, 1855)
100 historische Volkslieder des preussischen Heeres von 1675 bis 1866 (Berlin, 1869)
Die historischen Volkslieder des bayerischen Heeres von 1620–1870 (Nördlingen, 1871)
Historische Volks- und volksthümliche Lieder des Krieges von 1870–71 (Berlin, 1871–2)
Die historischen Volkslieder des siebenjährigen Krieges (Berlin, 1871)
Die historischen Volkslieder der Freiheitskriege von Napoleons Rückzug aus Russland 1812 bis zu dessen Verbannung nach St Helena 1815 (Berlin, 1871)
Historische Volkslieder von 1756 bis 1871 (Berlin, 1871–2)
Die historischen Volkslieder von der Verbannung Napoleons nach Elba 1815 bis zur Gründung des Nordbundes 1866 (Berlin, 1872)
Die historischen Lieder vom Ende des siebenjährigen Krieges 1763 bis zum Brande in Moskau 1812 (Berlin, 1872)
Deutsche Volks- und Gesellschaftslieder des 17. und 18. Jahrhunderts (Nördlingen, 1872)
Die historischen Volkslieder des östreichischen Heeres von 1638–1849 (Vienna, 1874)
52 ungedruckte Balladen des 16., 17. und 18. Jahrhunderts (Stuttgart, 1874)
110 Volks- und Gesellschaftslieder des 16., 17. und 18. Jahrhunderts (Stuttgart, 1875)
100 unedierte Lieder des 16. und 17. Jahrhunderts (Stuttgart, 1876)
Alte Märlein und Schwänke (Heilbronn, 1877)
50 ungedruckte Balladen und Liebeslieder des XVI. Jahrhunderts (Heilbronn, 1877)
Die historischen Volkslieder vom Ende des dreissigjährigen Krieges bis zum Beginn des siebenjährigen (Heilbronn, 1877)
Die historisch-politischen Volkslieder des dreissigjährigen Krieges, ed. K. Bartsch (Heidelberg, 1882)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

T. von Ditfurth: Geschichte des Geschlechts von Ditfurth (Quedlinburg, 1889–94)
L. von Ditfurth: 'Zur Lebensgeschichte des Volksliedforschers Franz Wilhelm von Ditfurth', Das deutsche Volkslied, ii (1900), 101
F.W. von Ditfurth: Autobiographical notes in Das deutsche Volkslied, iii (1901), 7
W. Schwinn: Studien zur Sammlung 'Fränkische Volkslieder' von Franz Wilhelm von Ditfurth (Munich, 1939)
E. Zachmeier: 'Die Volksliedersammlung des Freiherrn F.W. von Ditfurth', Volksmusik - Forschung und - Pflege in Bayern: Schwarzbach am Main 1984, 119–41
H. Steinmetz: 'Der Würzburger Ditfurth-Nachlass', Liedstudien: Wolfgang Osthoff zum 60. Geburtstag (Tutzing, 1989)

HORST LEUCHTMANN

Dithyramb (Gk. dithurambos). Name for Dionysus and hence primarily a song in his honour (cf PAEAN). Though probably older, the term first appears in a text of Archilochus (fl early 7th century BCE), where it is suggested that one of a group of revellers or celebrants leads the rest in singing a dithyramb (West, frag.120). With ARION of Methymna (*c*600 BCE), the dithyramb became more literary and a more practised public choral production. According to Herodotus (Histories, 1.23), Arion was the first known composer to produce a type of choral song that he called 'dithyramb'. LASUS OF HERMIONE (6th century BCE), who introduced dithyrambic contests between the Athenian tribes, seems also to have brought innovations to the musical style of the dithyramb (see Pseudo-Plutarch, On Music, 1141c). Prominent 5th-century dithyrambic poets include Simonides, PINDAR and BACCHYLIDES. Starting in the mid-5th century BCE, MELANIPPIDES, TIMOTHEUS of Miletus and other avant-garde composers introduced more radical stylistic changes, such as more intricate scales, a more prominent aulos accompaniment, and solos, including the ANABOLĒ. This development continued into the 4th century CE (Plato, Laws, iii.700d), and the dithyramb subsequently diminished in importance, though surviving at Athens until at least *c*200 CE.

The term has generally been revived when an evocation of the wild and vehement qualities of Dionysus (Bacchus) is intended, even though such attributes were not always evident in ancient dithyrambs. Tomášek in the early 19th century adopted the term for certain of his piano pieces opp.52 and 65 (1815, 1818); these are sectional works, often in ternary form, with alternating stormy and lyrical episodes, but despite the occasional use of double octaves in syncopated rhythms, the limited idiom of the time and the composer's own restricted harmonic vocabulary prevent any real expression of Bacchic frenzy. Schubert, who certainly knew Tomášek's pieces, gave the title 'Dithyrambe' to one of his own songs (D801, 1824), a setting of the Schiller poem Der Besuch, which evokes the gods of Greece; in it Bacchus leads the procession of Olympians, and Schubert conceived the song as a stormy and passionate bacchanal. 20th-century examples include the last movement of Stravinsky's Duo concertant for violin and piano (1931–2), whose 'effect is that of an exalted threnody' (E.W. White: Stravinsky: the Composer and his Works, London, 1966, p.335); the central movement of Henze's Symphony no.3 (1949–50) and the same composer's Drei Dithyramben (1958) for chamber orchestra; and Dithyramb I and II (1972) by Edwin Roxburgh.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Pickard-Cambridge: Dithyramb, Tragedy and Comedy (Oxford, 1927, rev. 2/1962 by T.B.L. Webster), 1–59
A. Pickard-Cambridge: The Dramatic Festivals of Athens (Oxford, 1953, rev. 2/1968 by J. Gould and D.M. Lewis)
H. Froning: Dithyrambos und Vasenmalerei in Athen (Würzburg, 1971)
B. Zimmermann: Dithyrambos: Geschichte einer Gattung (Göttingen, 1992)
B. Zimmermann: 'Das Lied der Polis: zur Geschichte des Dithyrambos', Tragedy, Comedy and the Polis: Nottingham 1990, ed. A.H. Sommerstein and others (Bari, 1993), 39–54

MAURICE J.E. BROWN/DENISE DAVIDSON GREAVES

Ditonus (Lat., from Gk. ditonos). The INTERVAL equal to the sum of two whole tones, usually perceived as a major 3rd. The term is found mainly in ancient medieval treatises on music, though some modern writers use the word 'ditone' for the interval of a major 3rd in equal temperament. The pentatonic scale C–E–F–G–B–C (or any transposition thereof) is sometimes called the 'ditonic scale' because the largest interval in it (C–E and G–B) is the ditonus. □

Ditson, Oliver. American firm of music publishers. They were pre-eminent in the USA in the second half of the 19th century. Oliver Ditson (b Boston, 20 Oct 1811; d Boston, 21 Dec 1888) served as an apprentice, beginning in 1826, to Samuel H. Parker, then to other publishers. In 1835 he began his own music publishing firm in the same building as Parker, and in 1836 the two became partners in the firm of Parker & Ditson. When the partnership was dissolved in 1842, Ditson acquired the remaining interest in the publishing company. Three years later John C. Haynes joined Ditson, becoming a partner when Oliver Ditson & Co. was formed in 1857. Ditson's pre-eminence among the nation's music publishers is reflected in his service as the first president (1856) of the Board of Music Trade, established in June 1855 to address problems of piracy and underpricing. Other publishers claimed more memorable editions in the 1850s and 60s, notably those of Stephen Foster and of the music of the Civil War. But Ditson, who had quietly assembled a solid catalogue of relatively nondescript sentimental parlour songs during these years, was well off at the war's end.

A period of vast expansion followed, during which the company bought up other publishers, at first minor firms, then in 1867 Firth, Son & Co. of New York. By the time of the Board of Music Trade's massive Complete Catalogue (1871), just under half of its 100,000 titles identified Ditson as publisher. In 1873 Ditson acquired Miller & Beacham of Baltimore; in 1875 Wm. Hall & Son of New York and Lee & Walker of Philadelphia; in 1877 G.D. Russell & Co. of Boston and J.L. Peters of New York; in 1879 G. André of Philadelphia; and in 1890 F.A. North & Co. of Philadelphia. Through these firms Ditson inherited the catalogues of earlier firms, along with the settings for branches to be operated by his sons, Charles H. Ditson in New York in 1867 and James Edward Ditson in Philadelphia in 1875. Other important firms were begun with Ditson's financial investment, among them John Church, Jr. in Cincinnati in 1860 and Lyon & Healy in Chicago in 1864. Ditson had also been a supporter of local musical institutions and publisher of Dwight's Journal of Music for much of its life (1858–78). By 1900 the firm was clearly the country's largest music publisher, with a catalogue of some 45,000 vocal works, 4000 octavos, 48,000 instrumental editions and 3000 books – over 100,000 titles in all. Working through the Music Publishers' Association (distinct from the Board of Music Trade), Ditson led the battle against international coverage in the US copyright law. Following the negative judgment on 6 February 1894, other firms slowly withdrew from the Board of Music Trade, often in deference to the burgeoning musical instrument market as well. Meanwhile, Ditson moved to larger quarters in 1891, 1904 and 1917.

About 1900 Ditson was criticized for neglecting ambitious music. The copyright confrontations of 1891 and the movement for musical nationalism called attention to European publishers and such American firms as Arthur P. Schmidt, who had been issuing the serious music of native composers. Under the guidance of William Arms Fisher (1861–1948), who in 1897 became editor and director of publications, Ditson's programme came to favour an increasingly eclectic repertory of art music packaged not as sheet music but in anthologies. The success of Ditson and Co.'s Musical Record (begun in 1878, renamed Musical Record in 1879 and Musical Record and Review in 1900) led in 1903 to acquisition of and merger into The Musician, founded in Philadelphia in 1896 and devoted to 'educational interests'. A cultivation of music teachers is reflected in subsequent Ditson publications: The Music Students Library (begun in 1897); Albert G. Mitchell's instrumental class methods (1912–23); the Music Students Piano Course(including The School Credit Piano Course, 1918–22); and A Study Course in Music Understanding (4 vols., 1924–6) for amateur listeners. Theory and pedagogy monographs were prepared by Clarence G. Hamilton, Percy Goetschius and Will Earhart. The Half-Dollar Music Series (1905–10) contained graded teaching music for a popular market, in contrast to Ditson's most impressive series, The Musicians Library (1903–28), consisting of 68 anthologies of songs and piano solos, edited by various authorities and printed by Daniel Berkeley Updike at the Merrymount Press. Fisher himself edited several Americana sets; foreign editors included Granville Bantock for folk and national songs (1911–14), Cecil Sharp for English folksongs (1916), Ernest Newman for modern Russian songs (1921) and Vincent d'Indy for Franck's piano music (1922). Other collections of classics were edited by such critics and writers as William Foster Apthorp, Henry T. Finck (i), Philip Hale, W.J. Henderson, Rupert Hughes, James Gibbons Huneker and H.E. Krehbiel. In 1931 the firm was absorbed by Presser.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W.A. Fisher: Notes on Music in Old Boston (Boston, 1918/R)
W.A. Fisher: One Hundred and Fifty Years of Music Publishing in the United States: an Historical Study with Special Reference to the Pioneer Publisher, Oliver Ditson Co., 1783–1933 (Boston, MA, 1933/R)
C.M. Ayars: Contributions to the Art of Music in America by the Music Industries of Boston, 1640 to 1936 (New York, 1937/R)
D.J. Epstein: Introduction to Board of Music Trade: Complete Catalogue of Sheet Music and Musical Works, 1870 (New York, 1973)
D.J. Epstein: 'Music Publishing in the Age of Piracy: the Board of Music Trade and its Catalogue', Notes, xxxi (1974–5), 7–29

W. THOMAS MARROCCO, MARK JACOBS/DONALD W. KRUMMEL

Dittersdorf, Carl Ditters von [Ditters, Carl] (b Vienna, 2 Nov 1739; d Neuhof [now Nový Dvůr], nr Soběslav, Bohemia, 24 Oct 1799). Austrian composer and violinist.

After promising early success in Vienna, he settled for a modest career as a provincial Kapellmeister and administrator. He composed voluminously despite the official responsibilities that occupied him for much of his life, and his generally high standard of craftsmanship earned him recognition as a leading figure of the Viennese Classical school.

1. LIFE. Born to Paul Ditters, costumier at the imperial court and theatre in Vienna, and his wife Anna (née Vandelin), Ditters enjoyed the benefits of a Jesuit school education, private tutoring and, from the age of seven, violin lessons. About 1750 he began studies with the violinist J.P. Ziegler, and before long he was accepted into the orchestra of the Schottenkirche. Soon afterwards he was recruited as a Kammerknabe by Prince Joseph Friedrich von Sachsen-Hildburghausen, whose Kapelle was one of the best in Vienna; from 1 March 1751 he played in the orchestra, performed menial duties, and was instructed in music and other subjects. With the violinist Trani he learnt Italian works and was groomed as a soloist, while Giuseppe Bonno taught him Fuxian counterpoint and composition. By the late 1750s Ditters had earned a reputation as a composer of instrumental music and had begun to receive commissions for symphonies and concertos.

When the prince left Vienna in 1761 to assume the regency in Hildburghausen, he found employment for most of his musicians with Count Giacomo Durazzo, imperial theatre director. Durazzo employed Ditters until 1764 as a soloist and orchestral musician at the Burgtheater and at court. Ditters, by now a recognized virtuoso and composer, played his own violin concertos in more than 20 solo appearances at Burgtheater concerts, where his symphonies and wind concertos were also performed. Accompanying Gluck to Italy in 1763, he gave well-received performances, and in 1764 he was commissioned to write the mass for the Frankfurt coronation of Archduke Joseph (later Emperor Joseph II) as King of the Romans. That year his contract expired, and during difficult negotiations with Count Wenzel Sporck, Durazzo's successor, Ditters accepted the post of Kapellmeister to Adam Patachich, Bishop of Grosswardein (now Oradea, Romania), in succession to Michael Haydn. After recruiting other musicians, he arrived in Grosswardein in April 1765. His duties included the preparation of concerts, sacred music and, after a small theatre was built at his recommendation, operas and other theatre pieces.

The rich musical life there came to an abrupt end in 1769 when Patachich, denounced at the imperial court for alleged excesses, dismissed most of his performers. Ditters, though asked to stay, found a new position with Count Philipp Gotthard von Schaffgotsch, Prince-Bishop of Breslau (now Wrocław), who lived in exile in the castle of Johannisberg (Jánský Vrch), near Jauernig (Javorník). Planning a concert tour, he initially agreed to stay only from 1 November 1769 to 31 May 1770, but Schaffgotsch persuaded him to remain. Early in 1770, Ditters learnt that he had been named Knight of the Golden Spur through Schaffgotsch's initiatives, and later that year he abandoned his travel plans when Schaffgotsch, unable to afford a Kapellmeister, secured for him lifetime employment as Forstmeister of the principality of Neisse (Nysa) and the reversion of the post of Amtshauptmann of Freiwaldau (Jeseník), which would require his ennoblement. As de facto Kapellmeister at Johannisberg, Ditters undertook to improve the orchestra and to recruit singers. Schaffgotsch, in accordance with his proposal, had a small theatre completed in 1771 in a tower adjoining the castle, for which Ditters wrote a series of Italian operas. On 3 March 1772 Ditters married Nicolina Trink, a Hungarian soprano at the court who had formerly sung at Grosswardein. The next year, on 5 June, Empress Maria Theresa granted him a patent of nobility, by which he acquired the additional surname 'von Dittersdorf'. In December he conducted two performances in Vienna of his oratorio Esther, commissioned for the Tonkünstler-Societät by the imperial Kapellmeister, F.L. Gassmann. Dittersdorf later claimed in his autobiography that he was offered Gassmann's post when Gassmann died early in 1774 but refused it because his earnings were higher at Johannisberg.

Concerts and theatre productions continued at Johannisberg until Schaffgotsch closed the theatre in 1776; later that year Dittersdorf offered several operas for sale to Prince Esterházy. During the War of the Bavarian Succession (1778–9), Schaffgotsch dismissed his performers and fled to Brünn (Brno), leaving Dittersdorf to fulfil his administrative duties at Freiwaldau. The musical establishment was later reconstituted, but the theatre never reopened, and in 1785 Joseph II transferred administrative control of the bishopric to Baron A.V. von Kaschnitz, who drastically curtailed incomes and activities at Johannisberg.

Meanwhile, new opportunities beckoned in Vienna. On an extended sojourn there, 1786–7, Dittersdorf conducted a well-received performance of his new oratorio Giob for the benefit of the Tonkünstler-Societät. He also enjoyed financial success with his 12 symphonies based on Ovid's Metamorphoses and profited from the triumphant première of his German comic opera Der Apotheker und der Doktor, which led to three further stage commissions.

Carl Ditters von Dittersdorf: lithograph by Heinrich E. von Winther, 1816

Apparently reluctant to resume work at Johannisberg, Dittersdorf sent a petition for employment to a long-standing supporter, Friedrich Wilhelm II of Prussia, on 24 November 1786, but this was rejected. He returned to Johannisberg early in 1787 to find that the highly paid performers had been replaced by amateurs; yet he managed to establish a self-supporting theatre on the outskirts of Jauernig. He was officially dismissed from his post as Amtshauptmann by an order dated 17 July 1788 but other documents indicate that he continued to serve until 1795. Meanwhile the Prussian king invited Dittersdorf to Berlin after hearing performances of his works in Breslau in the autumn of 1788; around this time Dittersdorf began to suffer from gout. His visit in 1789 saw performances of new symphonies, a staging of the now-famous Apotheker, and a lucrative performance of Giob for Dittersdorf's own benefit, but no offer of employment.

When Emperor Leopold II came to power in 1790, circumstances at Johannisberg improved, enabling Schaffgotsch to grant Dittersdorf two new administrative positions; but in 1794 the composer's enemies at Johannisberg reportedly persuaded Schaffgotsch to ban him from the castle and revoke these posts, and when Schaffgotsch died in January 1795 Dittersdorf received only a meagre pension. Despite poor health, Dittersdorf in his last five years composed numerous works, including symphonies, many keyboard pieces and a Missa solemnis in C dedicated to Schaffgotsch's successor (1797). He also wrote stage works for the new theatre of Duke Friedrich August von Braunschweig-Oels at Oels (Oleśnica). In May 1797, ill and impoverished, he accepted lodgings at Baron Ignaz von Stillfried's castle of Roth Lhota (Červená Lhota) in Bohemia, and he spent his final months at Neuhof, another castle owned by Stillfried. Two days before his death he finished dictating his autobiography to one of his sons.

2. Works. Dittersdorf's works span nearly the entire development of the Viennese Classical style and include substantial contributions to most of the popular genres of his day. Accessible and engaging, they appealed to contemporary tastes, and many were widely disseminated. The authenticity of many works attributed to him has, however, as yet been impossible to verify, and the available data must be regarded as provisional. This is especially true in the case of the symphonies (see Grave, 1977).

As Dittersdorf noted in his autobiography, his theatrical experience at Grosswardein laid the foundation for his later operatic successes, and the surviving comic operas that he wrote for Johannisberg amply demonstrate his adeptness with current opera buffa style. The acclaim that greeted his first German comic opera for Vienna, Der Apotheker und der Doktor (1786), propelled him to fame, but his late German works for Oels earned him scarcely more than local recognition. Collectively, Dittersdorf's German operas feature striking tonal contrasts, orchestral effects and a range of styles that includes both florid Italian melody and the simplicity of traditional German song. They are important for their decisive role in enriching the hitherto humble genre of Singspiel with elements of opera buffa; especially significant are the extended finales, whose multi-sectional designs, involving numerous changes of key, metre and tempo, furnished a prototype for the German operas of contemporaries and successors.

Of the masses attributed to Dittersdorf, only relatively few have been studied (see MacIntyre). These incorporate traditional elements, such as long fugues and vocal coloratura, but favour progressive traits, with some structures resembling sonata form. The orchestration features obbligato writing, such as the elaborate violin and bassoon solos in the Benedictus of the Mass in C K327. If, as is believed, this is the coronation mass of 1764 for Archduke Joseph, then Dittersdorf himself was the violin soloist. Contemporary articles praising Dittersdorf's masses may have been written by the composer himself (see Heartz, pp.443–6).

Dittersdorf's symphonies span virtually his entire career, and his changing approach to the genre mirrors recognized patterns of evolution in 18th-century Viennese instrumental music. Apart from a group of early three-movement works, almost all are in four movements. While the earliest symphonies have small proportions, nervous energy and modest instrumentation, the later ones tend towards more extended structures, simpler themes, richer harmony and more elaborate orchestration. Most of the opening allegro movements exhibit sonata form procedures, whereas the binary forms common in the early slow movements and the various forms in the early finales give way in many later works to rondo designs. In one remarkable late finale, in the Symphony in A GA-11/A-16, K119, designated 'recapitulante', the rondo principle serves as a framework for recalling themes from earlier movements.

Of approximately 43 concertos likely to be authentic, 18 are for violin. Most of these probably date from Dittersdorf's performances at Burgtheater concerts in the early 1760s, whereas many of the others were probably composed for musicians at Grosswardein. Superficially similar to the violin concertos of Joseph Haydn, Dittersdorf's concertos are almost all in major keys and in three movements, with the middle movement in the subdominant or dominant. Their fast movements each have four tuttis and three solo sections with recapitulation, while the middle movements mostly exhibit a binary plan of three tuttis and two solos. Rondo form is rare but appears in the finale of the A major harpsichord concerto LA32 of 1779.

Dittersdorf's chamber music reflects a wide variety of contemporary genres, forms and instrumentations, and includes compositions in two, three, four and five movements (the last with two minuets) and also various suite-like designs. The string quartets and quintets favour a three-movement scheme, and more than half have a minuet as the middle movement. In a letter written to the publisher Artaria in 1788, Dittersdorf claims to have spent more than a year on his quartets K191–6, which he says, with his characteristic lack of inhibition, surpass those of Pleyel and Haydn. These works feature varied textures, subtle dynamics, and melodies suited to dialogue; they resemble Haydn's in their use of long pedals, motivic constructions and sudden but well-timed shifts to remote keys.

In Dittersdorf's famous interview with Joseph II, recounted in the autobiography, his music is likened to 'an ample and finely served meal. The dishes are all savoury, and one can take a good helping of each without risking indigestion'. Alas, though appealing, his music proved vulnerable to audiences' fickle taste, and few works were destined for enduring favour, however enthusiastic their initial reception.

WORKS

data approximate; of many works authenticity not established

Editions: Carl Ditters von Dittersdorf: Ausgewählte Orchesterwerke, ed. J. Liebeskind (Leipzig, 1899–1904/R) [L]

Carl Ditters von Dittersdorf: Six Symphonies, ed. E. Badura-Skoda, The Symphony 1720–1840, ser. B, i (New York, 1985) [B]

Thematic catalogues: Krebs (1900) [K], Grave (1977; 1985, in B) [G; symphonies], Lane (1997) [LA; concertos] and MacIntyre (1986) [M; masses]. Numbers in Grave 1985 precede those in Grave 1977; some works have two or more Krebs numbers, which are separated by slashes.

DRAMATIC

all premières in Johannisberg given at the Turm-Theater, all those in Oels at the Herzogliches Hoftheater; see Horsley (1988)

A farce with little songs, Grosswardein, lost, mentioned in autobiography

A theatre piece based on Frau Sybilla trinkt keinen Wein and Das Reich der Toten, Grosswardein, ? 1767, lost, mentioned in autobiography

L'amore in musica (dg, 3, C. Goldoni), Grosswardein, 1768, lost, mentioned in autobiography, see Unverricht (1997), p.111

Monsieur Petiton (int, 2 pts, A. Palomba), Grosswardein, 1768, lost, see Unverricht chb (1997), p.111

Il viaggiatore americano in Joannesberg (farce, 2, S.I. Pinto.), Johannisberg, 1 May 1771, lost mentioned in autobiography, see Horsley (1998), p.287

L'amore disprezzato (Pancrazio) (operetta buffa, 2 pts), ?Johannisberg, 1771, A-Wgm

Il tutore e la pupilla (dg, 3, Goldoni), Johannisberg, 1 May 1773, H-Bn

Lo sposo burlato (operetta giocosa, 2, G.B. Cesti), Johannisberg, 1773/1775, D-WRdn, H-Bn; as Der gefoppte Bräutigam, ? Vienna, Kärntnertor, Sept 1783; as Der betrogene Bräutigam, Breslau, Wäsersches, ?1783

Il tribunale di Giove (serenade with prol, 1, A. Landi), 1774, ? first perf. Berlin, 27 Jan 1775, GB-Lcm

Il maniscalco (operetta giocosa, 2, after A.F. Quétant, Le maréchal ferrant), Johannisberg, 1 May 1775, H-Bn; as Der Hufschmied (Der gelehrte Hufschmied) (trans. J.C. Kaffka), Breslau, 13 May 1785

La contadina fedele (2), Johannisberg, 20 Feb 1776, Bn

La moda, o sia Gli scompigli domestici (dg, 3, P. Cipretti), Johannisberg, 1 May 1776, Bn

Il finto pazzo per amore (operetta giocosa, 2, T. Mariani), by 1776, ? first perf. Eszterháza, 1776, Bn

Il barone di rocca antica (operetta giocosa, 2, G. Petrosellini), by aut. 1776, ? first perf. Eszterháza, aut. 1776, Bn

L'Arcifanfano, re de' matti (op giocosa, 3, Goldoni), by Dec 1776, ? first perf. Eszterháza, aut. 1777, Bn, ov. ed. P. Laki (Budapest, 1982)

I visionari, by Dec 1776, ?unperf., lost, mentioned in Dittersdorf letter, 16 Dec 1776, see Bartha-Somfai (1960), pp.66–7

Der Apotheker und der Doktor (Doktor und Apotheker) (komisches Spl, 2, G. Stephanie the younger, after 'Graf von N': L'apoticaire de Murcie), Vienna, Burg, 11 July 1786, A-Wgm, Wn, B-Bc, CH-Zz, D-Bsb, Dl, DO, DT, RUl (Act 2 only), SWl, WRdn, DK-Kk, Tv, H-Bn; vs (Vienna, 1787), vs ed. E. Fischer and S. Gessner (Berlin, 1943)

Der Betrug durch Aberglauben, oder Die Schatzgräber (Der glückliche Betrug, oder Die dienstbaren Geister) (komisches Spl, 2, F. Eberl), Vienna, Kärntnertor, 3 Oct 1786, A-Sca, Wn, CH-BEl, D-Bsb, BDk, Dl, Mbs, MEIr, WRdn, DK-Kk; vs, excerpts (Berlin, n.d.)

Democrito corretto (op giocosa, 2, G. Brunati, after J.F. Regnard: Démocrite), Vienna, Burg, 24 Jan 1787, A-Wgm, Wn, D-Bsb, Mbs; Ger. versions incl.: Silene (trans. ?Dittersdorf); Demokrit, and other titles (trans. H.G. Schmieder), Mainz, 1790; Demokrit der Zweyte (Schmieder, rev. ? F.L. Schröder), Hamburg, Gänsemarkt, 27 July 1791

Die Liebe im Narrenhause (komische Oper, 2, Stephanie the younger), Vienna, Kärntnertor, 12 April 1787, A-Wgm, Wn, D-Bsb (facs. in GOB, xv, 1986), DO (Act 2 only), Mbs, ?Rp, DK-Kk, GB-Lbl, PL-WRu; vs (Mainz, 1790); as Orpheus der Zweyte (rev. Schröder), music rev. F.L. Hönicke, Hamburg, Gänsemarkt, 8 Dec 1788

Die Hochzeit des Figaro (komisches Spl, 2, Dittersdorf, after P.-A. Beaumarchais), Brno, Jan 1789, lost, lib US-Wc

Hieronymus Knicker (Lucius Knicker; Chrisostomus Knicker) (komisches Spl, 2, ?Dittersdorf), Vienna, Leopoldstadt, 7 July 1789, A-Wgm, CH-Zz, D-Bsb, Dl, DO, Mbs, SWl, WRdn, US-Wc; vs (Leipzig, 1792); (rev. C.A. Vulpius), Weimar, Hof, 1791; as Hokus Pokus, oder Die Lebensessenz (rev. A.F. von Hofmann) Salzburg, 1792

Das rothe Käppchen, oder Hilft's nicht, so schadt's nicht (Die rote Kappe; Das Rotkäppchen) (komisches Spl, 2 (orig. ?3), Dittersdorf, after F. Livigni: Giannina e Bernardone), ? first perf. Breslau, Wäsersches, 26 May 1790, A-Wgm, CH-BEl, D-Bsb, DO, Hmb, LÜh (Act 1 only), Mbs, MEIr, RUl, WRdn, DK-Kk; vs (Mainz, 1792); (rev. Vulpius), Weimar, Hof, 7 June 1791

Hokus Pokus, oder Das Gaukelspiel (komisches Spl, 2, Dittersdorf), ? first perf. Breslau, Wäsersches, 4 Nov 1790, A-Wdo, D-Dl, F, WRdn; (rev. Vulpius)

Der Schiffspatron, oder Der neue Gutsherr (Der Gutsherr, oder Gürge und Hannchen; further variants) (Spl, 2, J.F. Jünger, after G.F.W. Grossmann), ? first perf. Vienna, Wieden, 2 March 1791, D-Dl, DO, Mbs, WRdn; vs (Leipzig, 1793)

Das Gespenst mit der Trommel (deutsches komisches Spl, 2, Dittersdorf, after Goldoni: Il conte Caramella), Oels, 16 Aug 1794, A-Wgm, D-Bsb, Dl

Don Quixot der Zweyte (komisches Spl, 2, Dittersdorf, after M. de Cervantes), Oels, 4 Feb 1795, Dl, US-Wc

Gott Mars und Der Hauptmann von Bärenzahn (Gott Mars, oder Der eiserne Mann; Der Wechsel Gott Mars) (komisches Spl, 2, Dittersdorf), Oels, 30 May 1795, D-Dl (dated 1791)

Der Schach von Schiras (orientalisches komisches Spl, 2, Dittersdorf, after A. von Kotzebue: Sultan Wampum), Oels, 15 Sept 1795, Dl

Zum (Der) Teufel, ein Hydraulikus (songs for a Lustspiel, 3, J.F.E. Albrecht, after P. Weidmann: Der Bettelstudent), ? first perf. Oels, 17 Oct 1795 or ? Grätz, 1790, Dl

Die befreyten Gwelfen (Die Gwelfen) (prol, 1), Oels, 29 Oct 1795, Dl

Ugolino (ernsthaftes Spl, 2, Dittersdorf and Duke F.A. von Braunschweig-Oels, after Dante Alighieri: Commedia, and H.W. von Gerstenberg), Oels, 11 June 1796, Dl

Die lustigen Weiber von Windsor (komisches Spl, 2, G.C. Römer, rev. Dittersdorf, after W. Shakespeare), Oels, 25 June 1796, Dl, US-Wc

Der schöne Herbsttag (Dialog, 1, after P. Metastasio: Il vero omaggio), Oels, 29 Oct 1796, D-Dl

Der Durchmarsch (?Dittersdorf, after F.X. Girzik: Die christliche Judenbraut), *c*1796, ?unperf., lost, listed in AMZ i (1798–9), Intelligenz-Blatt, no.5

Der terno secco (Der Ternengewinnst), oder Der gedemütigte Stolz (komisches Spl, 2, Dittersdorf), Oels, 11 Feb 1797, Dl

Der Mädchenmarkt (komisches Spl, 3, C.A. Herklots, after G.F. Poullain de Saint-Foix: La colonie), Oels, 18 April 1797, Dl; as Il mercato delle ragazze, Oels, 1798

Die Opera buffa (komisches Spl, 2, C.F. Bretzner), *c*1798, ?unperf., A-Wn

Don Coribaldi, o sia L'usurpata prepotenza (drama, 2), *c*1798, ?unperf., lost, listed in AMZ i (1798–9), Intelligenz-Blatt, no.5

Music adapted for: F.A. Pitterlin, Der Fürst und sein Volk (pasticcio, G.C. Claudius), Leipzig, ? 5 March 1791, lost, lib US-Wc

OTHER VOCAL

Orats: Isacco, figura del redentore (Metastasio, trans. A. Patachich), K316, Grosswardein, ? Dec 1766, lost, mentioned in autobiography; Il Davide nella valle di Terebintho (? Davide e Gionathan) (Pinto), K317, Johannisberg, 1771, DK-Kk; La liberatrice del popolo giudaico nella Persia, o sia l'Ester (Esther) (Pinto), K318, Vienna, 19 Dec 1773, A-Wn (facs. in IO, xxiv, 1987), CH-BEl, D-Bsb, DK-Kk; Giob (Giobbe; Hiob) (Pinto), K319, Vienna, 8 April 1786, A-Wgm

Masses and mass movts (some probably spurious; most for chorus, orch, org, some with solo vv): C, K327, M16 ? 1764 A-Wn [? for coronation of Archduke Joseph]; C, K326, M15, by 1773, A-GÖ, KR, LA, MB (attrib. M. Haydn), TU, VOR, Wm (2 copies, 1 attrib. M. Haydn), Wn, CH-E, EN, SO, CZ-Bm, CB, Pnm, Psj, D-Dl, HR, Mbs, Tl, H-Efko, P, I-Fc (attrib. J. Haydn, H XXII:C35); D, K328, M17, by 1777, A-GÖ, KR, SL, VOR, Wm, Wn, CZ-Bm, CB, Pnm, Psj, D-Bsb, BGD, H-Efko; Missa solemnis, C, by 1782, CZ-CB, Psj; Messa sul stile de Francescani, D, ?1788, CZ-Pnm, SK-BRnm; Missa solemnis, C, with grad., off, all, 1797, CZ-OP; Missa, C, by 1797, SK-BRnm; C, A-WIL; C, Wlic, CZ-Pnm (attrib. 'Haydn', HXXII:C22); C, Pnm, Psj; C, H-P; D, CZ-CB; D,

CB; B♭, H-P, PH (attrib J. Haydn, HXXII:B13); Missa a 4 voci, D [Kyrie and Gloria], CH-BEl; Missa gratiosa, C, K329, ?PL-WRk; Missa per la solemnita di St. Padre Benedetto, C, CZ-Pnm, H-P; Missa solemnis, C, D-OB; Missa solemnis longior, C, A-VOR; Missa solemnis sanctae annae parenti Virginis di Iparae Votiva, D, CH-BEl; Ky, Gl, C, K330, D-Bsb, ?PL-WRk Requiem, c, K337, CZ-Pnm, D-OB, PL-Wu, vs ed. R. Walter (Bad Schwalbach, 1990)

Lits etc.: Vesperae solemnes de Dominica, by 1758, CZ-Pnm; Litaniae laurentanae, C, CZ-CB; Litaniae laurentanae, C, SK-BRnm; Litaniae de nomine Jesu, C, CZ-KU; Litaniae de sancte nomine Jesu, C, KU; Litaniae 'in A', D, SK-NM; c3 other lits

Other Lat. sacred (incl. contrafacta of Dittersdorf's stage works, ?some arr. Dittersdorf): XII. Arie, seu Offertoria (Augsburg, 1795); Ad hoc festum prosperate, C, K333, ?PL-WRk; Ah sponse mi dilecte, F, A-FB, MS, Waf; Ave Maria, C, K334, ?PL-WRk; Lauda Sion, E♭, A-FB, KR, CH-SO, D-Bsb; Manifestavi nomen tuum, C, K331, CZ-LIT; Motetto in C pro festo Corporis Xti (Ave Maria), E♭, OP; Motetto pro Offertorio in honorem S. Joanis Nepomuceni, D, K335, ?PL-WRk; O beata gaudia, D, A-MS, CZ-Pnm, D-Bsb; O beata perquam data, F, A-MS, CH-SO, D-Bsb; Pastoritium de nativitate, C, A-Ed, ed. O. Biba (Altötting, 1980); Plaude turba angelica, C, K332, ?PL-WRk; Regina caeli, C, several versions, A-RB, SL, Wsfl, CZ-LIT, POa, SK-BRnm, ed. R. Walter (Altötting, 1982); Salve regina, F, CZ-CB, Pnm; over 80 other works, many in CZ-Pnm, D-Bsb

Cants.: choral cant. (V. Pichl), K321, solo cant. (Metastasio, arr. Dittersdorf), K320, both perf. Grosswardein, ? Dec 1765, lost, mentioned in autobiography; Clori e Nice, K322, Silenzio o muse, K323, both lost, listed in Breitkopf suppl., 1778; Cantate auf das glorreichste Geburts-Fest seiner Majestät des Königs, K325, perf. Berlin, 1781, lost, lib ?D-Bsb; Er ist nicht mehr der Völker Ruhm (Cantate auf die Erhebung Leopolds zum deutschen Kaiser), 1791, WFe; Erhebt, erhebt in süsser Wonne (Cantate zur. . .Geburts-Feyer. . .des. . .Herzogs von Braunschweig-Oels), 29 Oct 1796, lost, lib Dl; Betet an lasst uns lobsingen, Bsb; Kommt lasst uns Gott lobsingen, GBR; Die Religion (Segelbach), Bsb

Arias: Bell contento qui ragiri, CZ-Pnm; Di fiume turgido il flutto, BER; D'un innocente cor ascolta, D-HR; Io non so perchè mi palpiti, K339, Bsb; Quanto mai felici siete, K341, Bsb; Se alla fiera il cor, CZ-Pnm; S'è ver' che m'ami, K340, D-Dl; S'il volto ridente, S-Skma; Va insigando amore, CZ-Pnm

SYMPHONIES

Printed sets (incl. some doubtful works):
6 simphonies à 8, op.1 (Amsterdam, n.d.) [Amsterdam]
6 simphonies à 8, op.4 (Paris, c1765–9) [Paris 1]
3 simphonies à 4, op.5 (Paris, by 1769) [Paris 2]
3 simphonies à 4, [op.6, ? recte op.11] (Paris, c1772) [Paris 3]
4 sinfonie, op.7 (Paris, by 1773) [Paris 4]
6 sinfonies à grande orchestre, op.13 (Paris, by 1781) [Paris 5]
3 simphonies, exprimant 3 métamorphoses d'Ovide (Vienna, 1791) [Vienna]

Authentic or probably authentic:

largest collections: A-KR, Ssp, CZ-Bm, KRa, Pnm, D-Bsb (incl. 8 autographs), Dl (incl. 4 autographs), Rtt

C: G C1/C-1, K26, by 1766 [Amsterdam]; GC2/C-3, K108, by 1778; G Q:C2/C-4, K116;G C3/C-5, K60, by 1768; G C4/C-6, K117;G C5/C-7, K32, by 1770 (London, by 1782), ed. A. Badley (Wellington, 1998); G C6/C-10, by 1773; G C7/C-11, by 1782; G C8/C-12, K90, 1789; G C9/C-15, K2, by 1763 [Amsterdam]; GC10/C-16, K19, by 1767 (Paris, 1767/8); G C11/C-17, by 1763; G C12/C-18, K66/114, by 1778; GC13/C-19, K93, ed. H. Kretschmar (Leipzig, 1896/R);G C14/C-20, K85, 1788, B; G C15/C-9, K1, by 1766 [Amsterdam, Paris 1] (Amsterdam, 1770), ed. in DTÖ, lxxxi, Jg.xliii/2 (Vienna, 1936/R); G C16/C-14, K7, by 1767 [Paris 1]; G C17/C-23, K73, Les quatre âges du monde (Metamorphoses i), c1781 [Vienna], L i and ed. in Diletto musicale, no.117 (Vienna, 1969)

D: G D1/D-1, K74, La chûte de Phaèton (Metamorphoses ii), c1781 [Vienna], L ii; G D2/D-2, K106, ed. A. Badley (Wellington, 1998); G D3/D-3, by 1779; G D4/D-4, K63, by 1778, ed. in DTÖ, lxxxi, Jg.xliii/2 (Vienna, 1936/R); GD5/D-5, K39/109, by 1771 [Paris 3]; G D6/D-6,K118, 1788, ed. A. Badley (Wellington, 1998); G D7/D-8, K89, 1789; GD8/D-14; G D9/D-15, K62, by 1778 (Paris, by 1782), B; G D10/D-16, ?1791, ed. R. Murányi (Budapest, 1981); G D11/D-17, K67, by 1779–80; GD12/D-18, K104, by 1771 [Paris 5]; G D13/D-19, K21, by 1769; G D14/D-20, K92, ?1793; G D15/D-24 (Paris, by 1782); G D17/D-26, K51, by 1775; G D18/D-27, K127, ed. W. Altman as sinfonia concertante (Hofheim, 1938/R); G D19/D-32, by 1776;G D20/D-34, K5/43, by 1766 [Paris 4]; G D21/D-36;G D22/D-37, by 1777; G D23/D-38, K44/112, by 1766 [Paris 4]; G D24/D-39, by 1772; G D25/D-40,K107; G D26/D-41, by c1770; G D27/D-43;G D28/D-44; G D29/D-47, by c1772, ed. W. Lebermann (Mainz, 1970); G D30/D-48; by 1765; G D31/D-49;G D33/D-50, by 1762; G D34/D-53, K77, Phinée avec ses amis changés en rochers (Metamorphoses v), c1781 [Vienna], L v

E♭: G E♭1/E♭-2, K99, by 1782; GE♭2/E♭-3, K13, by 1766; G E♭3/E♭-6,K6, by 1766 [Amsterdam] (Amsterdam, 1770), B; G E♭4/E♭-8,K126; G E♭5/E♭-10, K124, by 1763;G E♭6/E♭-13, K91, 1789; G E♭7/E♭-14,K61, by 1778; G E♭8/E♭-15, K24/96, by 1769 [Paris 5], L viii; G E♭9/E♭-19, K125, ed. A. Badley (Wellington, 1998); G E♭10/E♭-22, K69, by 1781; G E♭11/E♭-24,K23, by 1768, A-VOR

E: G E1/E-1, K22, by 1761, ed. A. Badley (Wellington, 1998); G E2/E-3,K17, by 1768 [Paris 2, Amsterdam], B

F: G F1/F-3, K25, by 1770 [Amsterdam]; GF2/F-5, K28, by 1766 [Paris 2]; G F3/F-8, K76, Andromède sauvée par Persée (Metamorphoses iv), c1781 [Vienna], L iv; G F4/F-9, K10, by 1767, ed. R. Lück (Bad Schwalbach, 1990); G F5/F-12, K31, by 1770; GF6/F-14, K9, by 1763; G F7/F-15, K4, by 1766, ed. A. Badley (Wellington, 1996); G F8/F-16, K101;G Q:F9/F-17, K121; G F9/F-18, K70, by 1779 (Paris, by 1782), L vii; G F10/F-24, K71/113, by 1781; G F11/F-25, K34 (Amsterdam, 1771); GF12/F-27, K35, by 1772 [Paris 5]

G: G G1/G-1, K111; G G2/G-5, by 1774;G G3/G-6, K59, by 1766; G G4/G-7, K12, by 1766 [Paris 5], (Amsterdam, n.d.); G G5/G-8, K110;G G6/G-9, K20, by 1769; G G7/G-12; GG8/G-14, K72, by 1782–4; G G9/G-15, K3, by 1766; G G10/G-16, K86, 1788; G G11/G-17, by 1761; G G12/G-22, K52, by 1763; G G13/G-23,K65, by 1778; G G14/G-24, K64, by 1778; GG15/G-26, K75, Actéon changé en cerf (Metamorphoses iii), c1781 [Vienna], L iii

A: G A1/A-1, K103; G A2/A-2, by 1763;G A3/A-4, by c1770; G A4/A-5, K36, by 1772; G A5/A-6, K16, by 1768; G A6/A-7,K56, by c1770 ed. A. Badley (Wellington, 1998); G A7/A-8, K50, by 1775; GA8/A-9, K55, by 1776–7; G A9/A-10, K78, Les paysans changés en grenouilles (Metamorphoses vi), 1781/2 [Vienna], L vi; G A10/A-12, K18, Sinfonia nazionale nel gusto di cinque nazioni (Paris, 1767), B, ed. A. Badley (Wellington, 1996);G A11/A-16, K119, 1788; G A12/A-19, K120;G A13/A-20, by 1770

B♭: G B♭1/B♭-1, K88, 1789; GB♭2/B♭-2, K48/123, by 1768, ed. W. Höckner (Hamburg, 1963); G B♭3/B♭-3, K15, by 1766 (Amsterdam, n.d.), (Paris, c1770–75); G B♭4/B♭-6,K47/49, by 1774 [Paris 5]; G B♭5/B♭-9,K29/40/98, by 1770 [Paris 3], ed. A. Badley (Wellington, 1998); G B♭6/B♭-11,K11, by 1767 [Paris 1], (Amsterdam, 1770); G B♭7/B♭-13,K14/53/122, by 1768 (Offenbach, c1775)

a: G a1/a-1, K95, ed. in DTÖ, lxxxi, Jg.xliii/2 (Vienna, 1936/R); G a2/a-2, K68, Il delirio delli compositori, ossia Il gusto d'oggidi, by 1779–80, ed. A. Badley (Wellington, 1996)

d: G d1/d-2, ed. A. Badley (Wellington, 1996)

e: G e1/e-1, by 1769, B

g: G g1/g-1, K33/97, by 1768, ed. A. Badley (Wellington, 1996)

Lost: Jason qui enlève la toison d'or, K79, Le siège de Mégare, K80, Hercule changé en Dieu, K81, Orphée et Euridice, K82, Midas élu pour juge entre Pan et Apollon, K83, Ajax et Ulisse qui se disputent les armes d'Achille, K84, all from Metamorphoses (vii–xii), K79, K81,K84 known in Dittersdorf's kbd arrs., rediscovered at CH-BEl*; ? not incl. above: 6 syms., listed in AMZ, i (1798–9), Intelligenz-Blatt, no.5

Doubtful spurious and indeterminate:
G Q:D3/D-10, K115 (London, c1790s); G Q:E♭6/E♭-11, K41 [Paris 4], probably by V. Pichl, also attrib. J.B. Vanhal; G Q:E♭9/E♭-17, K30 [Paris 3], (Amsterdam, 1770), also attrib. F.X. Dušek, C.J. Toeschi D-BE; G Q:E♭13/E♭-23, K42 [Paris 4], by M. Haydn (Perger I:1, Sherman-Thomas 35), also attrib. J. Haydn; G Q:F2/F-4 [Paris 1], by F.L. Gassmann; G Q:F7/F-11 [Paris 1]; G Q:F8/F-13 [Paris 1], probably by J.A. Schmittbaur, also attrib. J.F.X. Sterkel; G Q:G7/G-18 [Paris 5], probably by Vanhal; G Q:A7/A-18, K27 [Paris 2], also attrib. Vanhal, Sandel; more than 80 others

CONCERTOS

authentic or probably authentic unless otherwise stated; MSS at D-Rtt may be corrupted or spurious

Fl: e, LA33, by 1760, Rtt, ed. H.-D. Sonntag (Wolfenbüttel, 1959); G, LA19, lost, listed in Breitkopf suppl., 1771

Ob: C, LA24, K176, by 1775, Rtt, ed. W. Höckner (Hamburg, 1964); D, LA25b, Rtt, ? = C, LA25a,K177, by 1775; B♭, LA26, K178, lost, listed in Breitkopf suppl., 1775; C, LA39, Rtt; C, LA40, Rtt (2 versions); G, LA41, Rtt; G, LA42, CZ-K, ed. G. Rhau (Leipzig, 1960)

Ob d'amore: A, LA43, D-Rtt (2 versions)

Hpd: F, LA20, K173, lost, listed in Breitkopf suppl., 1772; C, LA21, K174, lost listed in Breitkopf suppl., 1773; B♭, LA22, K175, by 1773 (Berlin and Amsterdam, 1775), ed. G. Hauer (Leipzig, 1964); A, LA32, 1779, D-Bsb, ed. W. Upmeyer, NM, xli (1929/R)

Hn: LA1, by 1762, lost, listed by P. Gumpenhuber: see Heartz (1995), pp.50–55

Vn: G, LA3, K159, by 1764, CZ-Bm; C, LA8,K157, by 1766, A-SCH, ed. W. Lebermann (Mainz, 1970); C, LA9, K158, by 1766, CZ-K, KRa, S-Skma, ed. W. Lebermann (Wilhelmshaven, 1963); D, LA6, K154, by 1766, A-SEI, H-Bn; D, LA7, K156, lost, listed in Breitkopf suppl., 1766; G, LA10, K160, by 1767, A-Wgm, CZ-Pnm, S-Skma, ed. W. Lebermann (Wolfenbüttel, 1963); A, LA12, by 1767, A-Wgm, CZ-K; B♭, LA11, K161, by 1767, A-M, CZ-K, Pnm, S-Skma; A, LA13, by 1768, CZ-Pnm; D, LA14, K167, by 1770, A-GÖ, M, CZ-K, ed. E. Major (Budapest, 1967); C, LA18, K165, lost, listed in Breitkopf suppl., 1771; D, LA15, K162, lost, listed in Breitkopf suppl., 1771; G, LA16, K163, by 1771, KRa, Pnm; G, LA17, K164, by 1771, PL-Wu; B♭, LA23, K166, lost, listed in Breitkopf suppl., 1774; D, LA34; D-Eu; A, LA36, A-M; B♭, CZ-Pu

Va: E♭, LA29, K170, lost, listed in Breitkopf suppl., 1776; F, LA27, K168, by 1776, S-L, ed. W. Lebermann (Mainz, 1966); G, LA28, K169, lost, listed in Breitkopf suppl., 1776

Vc: D, LA44, CZ-Pnm, ed. S. Apolín (Adliswil, 1994)

Db: E♭, LA30, K171, E♭, LA31, K172, ?by 1767, D-SWl, ed. R. Slatford (London, 1978)

2 vn: D, LA2, K155, by 1764, DK-Kk; C, LA4, by 1766, A-M, DK-Kk, ed. W. Lebermann (Mainz, 1964); G, LA37, CZ-K

9 soloists: C, LA5, K153, outer movts 1766, D-Rtt

*c*5 others, doutful

OTHER ORCHESTRAL

Il combattimento delle umane passioni, G D16, K46/133, by 1771 (Amsterdam, n.d.), ed. A. Badley (Wellington, 1995); Quartetto accompagnato, B♭, str qt, orch, K197, 1793, *Dl; 12 minuets and 12 Ger. dances for the Redoutensaal, K138, 1794, lost; mentioned in A.W. Thayer, Thayer's Life of Beethoven, rev. and ed. E. Forbes (Princeton, 1967), p.177 (? = kbd arr. by 'G. Hayda' at A-Wgm); Musique pour un petit ballet en forme d'une contre-danse, K135, 1795, D-Dl, L ix; Le carneval, ou La redoute (Il ridotto; Il carnevale), G D32, K94, L xi; Sinfonia concertante, F, 2 hn, 2 ob, bn, str, K87, Bsb; Quartetto, D, str qt, orch, K198, Dl, ed. F. Schroeder as Sinfonia concertante (Leipzig, 1971); Concertino, F, CZ-Pnm; Etliche Pas de deux für die Turchi und den Paganino, K137, ?lost, mentioned in autobiography, ? = Ballet turc, A-LA; other works, incl. sets of dances arr. from stage works

CHAMBER

Mixed ens (titles and keys vary in some MSS): Serenata, F, 2 hn, 2 vn, 2 va, b, K129, by 1767, A-Wgm, LA, M, SCH, CZ-K, Pnm, ?D-Bsb; Cassationa seconda, D, 2 hn, vn, va, b, K134 (Paris, 1768); Divertimento, F, ob, 2 hn, vn, 2 va, b, K132, listed in Breitkopf suppl., 1769, ?lost, or ?pubd as Cassationa (Paris, *c*1768); Serenata, F, 2 hn, vn, 2 va, b, K128, by 1774, A-Gd, Ssp, CZ-Bm, D-Bsb, Dl, ed. in DTÖ, lxxxi, Jg.xliii/2 (1936/R); 2 serenatas, 2 hn, 2 vn, va, b, 1 ed. R. Walter (Bad Schwalbach, 1985), 1 in CZ-K, Pnm; Serenata, D, 2 hn, vn, 2 va, b, K130, A-LA, CZ-Pnm, D-Bsb; Serenata, E♭, 2 hn, 2 vn, va, vc, A-Ssp; Serenata, G, 2 hn, 2 vn, va, b, CZ-BER; Divertimento, D, 2 hn, vn, 2 va, b, CZ-Pnm; Cassation, C, fl, 2 hn, 2 vn, va, b, Pnm; Parthia, F, 2 eng hn, 2 hn, bn, 2 vn, A-KR; Sonata, C, hpd, vn, vc, D-Bsb; *c*8 other works

Wind (titles and scorings vary in some sources): 3 parthias, F, D, A, 2 ob, 2 hn, bn, ed. in Collegium musicum, ci (Wiesbaden, 1948); Parthia, C, 2 ob, 2 eng hn, 2 hn, 2 bn, A-KR; Parthia, D, 2 ob, 2 hn, bn, GB-Lbl (London, 1958); Parthia, E♭, 2 ob, 2 hn, 2 bn, D-DO, Rtt; Parthia, B♭, 2 ob, 2 hn, bn, K136, Dl, ed. U. Muller (Regensburg, 1997); Parthia, B♭, 2 ob, 2 hn, bn, CZ-BER; Parthia, B♭, 2 ob, 2 cl, bn, A-Wgm, ed. J. Wojciechowski (Hamburg, 1954); Cassatio, D, 4 fl, CZ-Pnm, DK-Kk, ed. in Diletto musicale, no.543 (Vienna, 1977); many other works for 2 ob, 2 hn, 2 bn and 2 ob, 2 hn, bn, according to O. Pulkert

Str qnts: 6 qnts, 2 vn, va, vc, db, hns non obbl, K179–84, 1782, *?D-Bsb; 6 qnts, 2 vn, va, 2 vc, K185–90, 1789, *?Bsb, *Dl, K185 ed. in Unbekannte Werke der Klassik und Romantik, no.188 (Munich, 1992), K187 ed. W. Höckner (Leipzig, 1948), K190 ed. W. Altmann (Körn, 1936/R)

Str qts: 6 quartetti, 2 vn, va, vc (Vienna, 1789), K191–6, K191 ed. W. Höckner (Wilhelmshaven, 1963), K192 ed. W. Altmann (London, 1937/R), K193 ed. W. Lyman (New York, 1965), K194 ed. W. Höckner (Locarno, 1965), K195 ed. W. Altmann (London, 1938/R), K196 pubd (Leipzig, *c*1880/R); Serenata "in F", D, 2 vn, va, b, CZ-Pnm

Str trios: 6 sonate a tre, 2 vn, b, op.1, K200–05 (Paris, 1767), ed. in HM, xcii (1952, 2/1963); 6 trios, 2 vn, b, K206–11, listed in Breitkopf suppl., 1771, K207 attrib. Piazza at S-Skma, others lost; 6 sonates, 2 vn, va, op.2, K212–17 (Amsterdam, n.d.), ed. Y. Morgan (Winterthur, 1994); 12 divertimentos, 2 vn, vc, K140–52, lost, listed in GerberNL; Divertimento, D, vn, va, vc, K131, ?D-Bsb, ed. J. Pasquier (New York, 1950); Divertimento, E, 2 vn, b, A-Wn; Divertimento, G, vn, va, b, CZ-Pnm; Divertimento B♭, vn, vc, b, Pu

Str duos: Duo, vn, vc, K218, lost, listed in GerberNL; Duet, E♭, va, db, K219, A-Wgm, D-SWl, ed. F. Beyer (New York, 1974/R); Duet, D, 2 vn, A-SEI; 8 solos, vn, bc, K220–27, some lost, listed in Breitkopf suppl., 1769, K225, 227, A-Wgm, ed. G. Balla and G. Szeredi-Saupe (Budapest, 1984), K226 attrib. Pugnani at S-Skma; 6 solos, vn, bc, K228–33, listed in Breitkopf suppl., 1771, K233 at B-Bc, CZ-BER, attrib. A. Lolli at S-V; Sonata, B♭, vn, bc, K234, A-Wgm, ed. G. Balla and G. Szeredi-Saupe (Budapest, 1984); Sonata, C, vn, bc, CZ-BER; other works

KEYBOARD

Sonata, A, K238, 1799, US-Wc, ed. in Diletto musicale, no.1196 (Vienna, 1997); Sonata, A, 4 hands, ed. R. Walter (Bad Schwalbach, 1987); Sonata, D, 4 hands, PL-Wn; 6 sonatas, 4 hands, K254–9, arr. from syms. K79–84, K254, 256, 259 at CH-BEl, others lost, listed in AMZ, i (1798–9), Intelligenz-Blatt, no.5; 12 sonatas, K242–53, 1796–7, based on qts and trios, 12 sonatas, 4 hands, K260–71, 1796–7, 12 sets of variations on lieder, romances and arias, K272–83, 72 preludes, K284, all lost, listed in AMZ, i (1798–9), Intelligenz-Blatt, no.5; other works, also arr. (?by Dittersdorf), ?lost

WRITINGS

'Von dem wienerischen Geschmack in der Musik', Wiener Diarium, no.84, suppl. no.26 (18 Oct 1766) [attrib. Dittersdorf]

'Korrespondenz des Herrn v. Dittersdorf mit einem Freunde über musik. Gegenstände', AMZ, i (1798–9), 138–41 [on the heroic and the comic in opera], 201–5 [on the setting of It. texts]

Karl von Dittersdorfs Lebensbeschreibung, seinem Sohne in die Feder diktiert (Leipzig, 1801; Eng. trans., 1896/R); ed. N. Miller (Munich, 1967)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GerberNL; GroveO (T. Bauman)

C. Krebs: Dittersdorfiana (Berlin, 1900/R)

L. Riedinger: 'Karl von Dittersdorf als Opernkomponist', SMw, ii (1914), 212–349

G. Rigler: 'Die Kammermusik Dittersdorfs', SMw, xiv (1927), 179–212

D. Bartha and L. Somfai: Haydn als Opernkapellmeister: die Haydn-Dokumente der Esterházy-Opernsammlung (Budapest, 1960)

I. Kecskeméti: 'Die Dittersdorf-Handschriften in der Széchényi Nationalbibliothek, Budapest', Beiträge zur Musikdokumentation: Franz Grasberger zum 60. Geburtstag, ed. G. Brosche (Tutzing, 1975), 155–92

M. Grave: Dittersdorf's First-Movement Form as a Measure of his Symphonic Development (diss., New York U., 1977)

R. Ghircoiaşiu: 'Das Musikleben in Grosswardein (Oradea) im 18. Jahrhundert', Haydn Yearbook 1978, 45–55

O. Biba: 'Ein Porträt von Carl Ditters von Dittersdorf', Haydn Yearbook 1982, 228–30

T. Bauman: North German Opera in the Age of Goethe (Cambridge, 1985)

M. Grave: thematic index, Carl Ditters von Dittersdorf: Six Symphonies, ed. E. Badura-Skoda, The Symphony 1720–1840, ser. B, i (New York, 1985)

B. MacIntyre: The Viennese Concerted Mass of the Early Classic Period (Ann Arbor, 1986)
E. Badura-Skoda: 'Dittersdorf über Haydns und Mozarts Quartette', Collectanea mozartiana, ed. C. Roleff (Tutzing, 1988), 41–50
P.J. Horsley: Dittersdorf and the Finale in Late-Eighteenth-Century German Comic Opera (diss., Cornell U., 1988)
D. Heartz: 'Ditters, Gluck und der Artikel "Von dem wienerischen Geschmack in der Musik"', Gluck in Wien: Vienna 1987, ed. G. Kroll and M. Woitas (Kassel, 1989), 78–80
H. Unverricht and others, eds.: Carl Ditters von Dittersdorf, 1739–1799, i: Mozarts Rivale in der Oper (Würzburg, 1989); ii: Der schlesische Opernkomponist (Würzburg, 1991); iii: Sein Wirken in Österreichisch-Schlesien und seine letzten Jahre in Böhmen (Würzburg, 1993) [exhibition catalogues with articles, incl. further bibliography]
S. Tsai: The Viennese Singspiele of Karl Ditters von Dittersdorf (diss., U. of Kansas, 1990)
H. Unverricht: 'Dittersdorfs Metamorphosen-Sinfonien', Musik des Ostens, xii (1992), 267–71
D. Heartz: Haydn, Mozart, and the Viennese School, 1740–1780 (New York, 1995)
J. Lane: The Concertos of Carl Ditters von Dittersdorf (diss., Yale U., 1997)
H. Unverricht, ed.: Carl Ditters von Dittersdorf: Eichstätt 1989 (Tutzing, 1997)
H. Unverricht: 'Carl Ditters von Dittersdorf als Quartettkomponist: ein Konkurrent Haydns, Mozarts und Pleyels', Haydn-Studien, vii/3–4 (1998), 315–27

MARGARET GRAVE, JAY LANE

Dittmer, Luther A(lbert) (b Brooklyn, NY, 8 April 1927). American musicologist of Swiss descent. He took the AB in 1947 and the AM at Columbia University in 1949; he also took courses at the Juilliard School of Music and under Kinkeldey at Harvard. In 1949 he began studies at the University of Basle, where he was taught by Handschin (musicology), Wilhelm Altwegg (Germanic studies) and Albert Bruckner (Latin palaeography); he received the doctorate at Basle in 1952 with a dissertation on the Worcester Fragments. He taught at Wagner College (1953–4), Adelphi University (1954–9) and the Manhattan School of Music (1957–9). In 1957 he joined the faculty of CUNY and from 1976 to 1994 he taught at the music department at the University of Ottawa; he also taught at the University of Vienna, 1996–7. He is director of the Institute of Mediaeval Music, which he founded in 1959.

Dittmer has written on French and English polyphonic music of the 13th and 14th centuries and 16th-century Huguenot music, and as director of the Institute of Mediaeval Music he has provided scholars with facsimiles of manuscripts including the major Notre Dame sources and translations of theoretical writings; these publications, which appear in the series Publications of Mediaeval Musical Manuscripts, often include introductions on their subject. He has also compiled a complex catalogue of the Worcester Fragments with transcriptions of as many of the polyphonic pieces as could be deciphered. His translations of theorists also contain writings on the Notre Dame School and on mensural notation. He has been honoured with the Festschrift Beyond the Moon: Festschrift Luther Dittmer (ed. B. Gillingham and P. Merkley, Ottawa, 1990).

WRITINGS

Auszug aus 'The Worcester Music-Fragments' (diss., U. of Basle, 1952 (Brooklyn, NY, 1955))
'Binary Rhythm, Musical Theory and the Worcester Fragments', MD, vii (1953), 39–57
'An English Discantuum Volumen', MD, viii (1954), 19–58
'The Ligatures of the Montpellier Manuscript', MD, ix (1955), 35–51
'The Dating and the Notation of the Worcester Fragments', MD, xi (1957), 5–11
'Beiträge zum Studien der Worcester-Fragmente', Mf, x (1957), 29–39
ed. and trans.: Anonymous IV (Brooklyn, NY, 1959)
'Änderung der Grundrhythmen in den Notre-Dame-Handschriften', Mf, xii (1959), 392–405
ed. and trans.: Robert de Handlo: Rules (Brooklyn, NY, 1959)
'Language and the Musicologist', in L.B. Spiess: Historical Musicology (Brooklyn, NY, 1963), 186–233
ed. F. Ludwig: Repertorium organorum recentioris et motetorum vetustissimi stili (Brooklyn, 2/1964–78)
'The Lost Fragments of a Notre Dame Manuscript in Johannes Wolf's Library', Aspects of Medieval and Renaissance Music: a Birthday Offering to Gustave Reese, ed. J. LaRue and others (New York, 1966/R), 122–33
'Eine zerlegte dreistimmige Klausel', Speculum musicae artis: Festgabe für Heinrich Husmann, ed. H. Becker and R. Gerlach (Munich, 1970), 93–102
Gordon Athol Anderson, 1929–81, in memoriam (Henryville, PA, 1984) [incl. 'Ludwigs Nachträge zum zweiten Bande des Repertoriums', 87–96]

EDITIONS

The Worcester Fragments: a Catalogue Raisonné and Transcription, MSD, ii (1957) with P. Pidoux: Claude Goudimel: Oeuvres complètes (New York, 1967–83)

PAULA MORGAN

Dittrich, Paul-Heinz (b Gornsdorf-Erzgebirge, 4 Dec 1930). German composer. He studied at the Leipzig Musikhochschule (1951–6) and at the Berlin Akademie der Künste with Wagner-Régeny (1958–60), among others. He has taught at the Hanns Eisler Musikhochschule in Berlin (1960–76, professor from 1979), led composition seminars at the Gera summer courses (1976–86), the Cologne Musikhochschule and the Fédération Internationale des Jeunesses Musicales, and served as visiting professor at the Freiburg Musikhochschule, UCLA, the Arnold-Schoenberg Institute, IRCAM and the Sorbonne. He has worked at electronic studios including those of Künstlerhaus Boswil, Radio Polska Warsaw, IRCAM and various German radio stations. In 1991 he founded the Brandenburgisches Colloquium für Neue Musik (BCNM) in Zeuthen, near Berlin. His honours include memberships in the Berlin Akademie der Künste (committee member and secretary from 1990) and the Sächsische Akademie der Künste, Dresden (from 1998).

Dittrich's compositional style, which developed under the influence of serialism and electronics, has been shaped by literary parameters. Most of his instrumental works are based on poems by Paul Celan, Heiner Müller, Arthur Rimbaud and others; the texts, which are usually neither sung nor spoken, provide the musical structure through their linguistic sounds, meanings or numerical relationships. His works for the theatre, on texts by Franz Kafka, James Joyce, Samuel Beckett and Heiner Müller, are anti-traditional and written in response to commercial opera; their ideal is a multi-layered, non-linear theatre of poetry. He has experimented with new combinations of instrumental, vocal and electronic forces in series of works entitled Concert avec plusieurs instruments and Kammermusik.

WORKS
(selective list)

SERIES

Cantus: I, orch, 1975 [after J.S. Bach: BWV 60]; II (P. Eluard, R. Winkler), S, vc, orch, tape, live elecs, 1977
Concert avec plusieurs insts: I, hpd, 7 insts, 1976; II, va, vc, 2 orch, 1978; III, fl, ob, orch, 1979; IV, pf, orch, 1983; VI

'Sprachlandschat', ob, 17 insts, 1985 [after P. Garnier]; VII 'Leipziger Konzert', 4 spkr, ob, trbn, vc, ens, 1989; VIII (P. Celan), 3 S, vc, orch, 1992

Kammermusik: I, 4 ww, pf, tape, 1970; II, ob, vc, pf, tape, 1973; III (P. Neruda, F. Hölderlin), Bar, wind qnt, 1974; IV 'Engführung' (Celan), S, 7 insts, live elecs, 1977; V, wind qnt, live elecs, 1977; VI 'Klangtexte', ob, eng hn, trbn, va, vc, db, pf, perc, 1980 [after C.F. Claus]; VII 'Die Blinden' (M. Maeterlinck), 5 spkr, wind qnt, hpd, 1986; VIII, ob, vc, pf, 1988 [after Garnier: Journal des oiseaux]; IX 'Und ihr gedenket meiner' (after Hölderlin, J. Teboul), fl, cl, vc, hpd, perc, tape, 1988; X 'Journal des Pierres', fl, b cl, pf, 1989 [after O. Mandelstam]; XI 'Journal des poèmes', S, vc, 6 insts, 1990; XIII 'Journal d'images', ob, vc, pf, 1997 [after H. Müller]

Klaviermusik: I, 1966–8; II, 1984; III 'Stehen, im Schatten', 1990 [after Celan]; IV–V, 1995–6

Singbarer Rest: I, cl, 1987 [after Celan]; II, S, 1989; III, ob, 1989

OTHER WORKS

Stage: Die Verwandlung (szenische Kammermusik, after F. Kafka: Pantomime), spkr, 5vv, vn, vc, b cl, 1982; Die Braut von Messina (incid music, J.C.F. Schiller, dir. R. Berghaus), 1989; Zerbrochene Bilder (incid music, H. Müller), 6vv, 10 insts, tape, live elecs, 1998

Orch: 9 Orchstücke, 1960; Conc., ob, chbr orch, 1973; Vc Conc., 1975; Illuminations, orch, 1976 [after A. Rimbaud]; Concertino, pf, chbr orch, 1977; ETYM, 1981–2 [after A. Schmidt: Zettels Traum]; Hymnischer Entwurf (Hölderlin), spkr, orch, 1987

Choral (7 or more vv): Fabeln und Parabeln zu singen mit den Schnabeln, 1957; Vom Baum des Lebens (H. Hesse), 1959; Trinklied (L. Fürnberg), chorus, 2 pf, perc, 1964; Stabiles und mobiles, 12vv, orch, 1969; Memento vitae (B. Brecht), Bar, 12vv, 4 choral ens, 9 perc, 1971–3; Areae sonantes, vv, insts, orch, 1972; Vokalblätter (Bible, J. Joyce, Brecht, J.W. von Goethe), S, 12vv, 1972; Laudatio pacis (J.A. Comenius), spkr, S, A, T, B, SATB, vv, orch, 1975, collab. S. Gubaidulina, M. Kopelent; Hohes Lied (Bible, Hölderlin, R.M. Rilke), S, 16vv, vn, 1982; Abwärts wend ich mich (Novalis), 7 female vv, chbr orch, 1990; Menetekel (Bible, Celan), spkr, S, T, 8vv, 4 brass, perc, tape, 1993; Dies irae, solo vv, chorus, orch, 1994–5 [movt 3 of Requiem der Versöhnung, collab. Berio, Cerha, Kurtág and others]

Other vocal: Irische Harfe (W.B. Yeats and others), 3 songs, Bar, chbr orch, 1965; 3 Lieder (Y. Yevtushenko), T, 2 fl, 4 trbn, vc, 2 db, pf, 1965; 3 Lieder (J. Bobrowski), S, 2 fl, 4 trbn, 4 vc, 2 db, gui, 1967; Les fleurs de Baudelaire, 3 S, 10 insts, 1969; Unum necessarium, 1v, 7 insts, live elecs, 1977; 4 Lieder (Yevtushenko, S. Yesenin), 1v, pf, 1979; Engführung, S, solo insts, orch, tape, live elecs, 1981; Abschied von Kochberg (J.M.R. Lenz), A, pf, 1986; Spiel (S. Beckett), 3 spkr, 3vv, 9 insts, live elecs, 1986; Fahlstimmig (Celan), S, 3 female vv, 7 insts, 1994–5; Glückloser Engel, S, ens, 1996; Pierre de coeur, 3vv, 12 insts, 1996–7; Voix intérieure (Celan), S, fl, 1996; see also Chbr [Qua-sie, 1971] and Orch [Hymnischer Entwurf, 1987]

Chbr and solo inst: Sonata, vn, pf, 1954; Kleine Bläsermusik, fl, cl, hn, bn, 1957; Sextet, wind qnt, gui, tape, 1959; Str Qt, 1959; Pentaculum, wind qnt, 1960; Begegnung, 9 insts, 1970; Qua-sie, 2 spkr, cl, vc, pf, tape, 1971; Schlagzeilen, 2 pf, 2 perc, tape, 1971; Str Qt no.1, str qt, live elecs, 1971; Die anonyme Stimme, ob, trbn, tape, 1972 [after Beckett]; Dialoge, fl, db, 1973; Rondo à la Rossini über den Ton D wie Dittrich, vc, db, 1974; Aktion-Reaktion, ob, synth, tape, 1975; Voix intérieure, 2 vc, 1979 [after Rilke, A. Rodin]; Motette, 2 gui, elec, 1980; Str Qt no.2, 1982; Them, bn, live elecs, 1982 [after e.e. cummings]; Recit and Aria, fl, 7 vc, 1984 [after C. Baudelaire: Receuillement]; Bruch-Stücke, trbn, tape, 1986–9 [after Baudelaire, Rilke, G. Ungaretti, Char]; Str Qt no.3 'Nacht-Musik', 1987 [after Novalis]; Str Qt no.4, 1991–2; Str Trio, 1994

Solo inst: Tierporträts, pf, 1958; 9 kleine Klavierstücke, pf, 1960; Cello-Einsatz, vc, 1975 [after Celan]; Rondeau, fl, 1977; Va Solo, 1979 [pt of a collaborative composition in honour of P. Dessau's 85th birthday]; Un coup d'aile, va, 1984 [after G. Apollinaire]; Assisi, perc, 1985 [after Celan]

Other: Poesien (H. Müller, A. Schmidt), musical-literary project, 1987–91

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F. Schneider: Momentaufnahme (Leipzig, 1979)

GERHARD MÜLLER

Divall, Richard (b Sydney, 9 Sept 1945). Australian conductor. He studied with Charles Mackerras, Vilem Tausky and Joseph Post. He was director of the Young Opera Company of Sydney, 1968–72, and music director of the Queensland Opera Company, 1971–2. In 1972 he became inaugural music director of the Victoria State Opera, and was appointed its principal guest conductor in 1995. He conducted Don Carlos, the first opera performed in the State Theatre of the Victorian Arts Centre, Melbourne, on 1 August 1984, and the world première of the 1841 version of Der fliegende Holländer in the new Schott edition at that theatre in 1987. Divall has long been active in the editing and performance of Australian colonial music and of the operas of Handel, Rameau, Gluck and Verdi. He has also edited the complete works of Carl Linger and the complete symphonies of Samuel Wesley. His large repertory includes all the Monteverdi and Mozart operas and many Australian operas. He has conducted the Netherlands Opera, in Germany, Italy, China, New Zealand and at the Hong Kong Festival. In Australia he has conducted opera at the Adelaide Festival and is a regular guest conductor for the ABC and the Australian Ballet. In 1996 he was appointed principal resident conductor for Opera Australia (previously Australian Opera). In 1981 Divall was awarded the OBE and in 1989 a Commendatore al Merito of the Order of Malta. He became an associate professor of music at the University of Melbourne in 1990, and in 1993 was appointed chairman of the Marshall-Hall Trust, set up by the grandson of the composer G.W.L. Marshall-Hall to publish early Australian music.

THÉRÈSE RADIC

Divertimento (It.: 'diversion', 'recreation', 'enjoyment'; Eng. and Ger. by usage; Fr. divertissement). A musical genre, prominent in the Classical period.

1. The term. 2. Form. 3. History.

1. THE TERM. Following its original Italian meaning, 'divertimento' is generally understood, first, to denote a work primarily designed for the entertainment of the listeners and the players, without excluding the possibility of high artistic achievement, such as is found in divertimentos by Haydn, Boccherini and Mozart. Second, a divertimento could serve as background music for some social gathering such as a conversazione or a banquet. H.C. Koch (1802) defined the divertimento as follows: it normally had solo instrumentation; it was neither polyphonic nor extensively developed like the sonata; it was intended to please the ear rather than express different shades of emotion; historically it stood between the parthia and the quartet or quintet. This meaning seems to have crystallized about 1780; before then the term was more variously applied, but almost exclusively to music for solo instruments. Historically, then, it denoted 'a solo work' rather than 'a diverting work'.

Various other forms of outdoor music or table music (see SERENADE, CASSATION, FINALMUSIK, NOTTURNO, NACHTMUSIK, PARTITA, FELDPARTHIE, FELDMUSIK, TAFELMUSIK (i)) are related to the divertimento; the titles all have different shades of meaning, but the categories often overlap. Some scholars have regarded 'divertimento' as a generic term for all such outdoor music; others have regarded it as simply the most generally applicable collective term; still others view each form as a separate entity (Hausswald, for example, in his work on Mozart, treats the serenade as the most general category).

The inexactitude with which titles were applied, by composers, copyists and publishers, makes it still harder to differentiate between the various types of work allied to the divertimento (or to divertimento-like music in general). Titles were freely interchanged; a work described by any of those listed in the preceding paragraph might equally appear in other sources as 'sinfonia', 'sonata', 'trio', 'trattenimento' or 'allettamento'. The form, number of instruments used, function, place or even hour of performance might affect the title chosen. Sometimes titles were coupled to provide clearer definition (e.g. Mozart's Serenata notturna K239). One title did not necessarily exclude another but might suggest a different emphasis. 'Divertimento' often replaced 'sonata' in southern German music in 1760–75, and was common in the Latin countries; the frequency of the term's use helped it to become regarded as a comprehensive one. From 1780 onwards the title 'divertimento' was the commonest among those applied to music of a light character. The ways in which the various related titles have been applied, and their individual meanings, are discussed in separate entries under the headings concerned.

2. FORM. Studies of the divertimento – and this applies equally to the serenade and the notturno – were often confined to Mozart's works and did not examine the genre in wider contexts; nor has the significance of the divertimento's normal cyclic structure been fully recognized. It may comprise from one to nine movements, and occasionally as many as 13; its larger manifestations are thus suite-like in movement structure.

From the time of Wagenseil the Austrian divertimento for harpsichord usually had three movements, Allegro–Andante–Allegro, or Allegro–Minuet–Presto or Allegro; this is the form used by Haydn in his youth. In his keyboard pieces of the 1750s or 60s the title 'partita' can be found alongside that of 'divertimento', though other Austrian composers preferred the term 'divertimento'. Earlier divertimentos, with a more polyphonic texture (such as those by Porsile, J.C. Mann, Wagenseil and Asplmayr), often followed this three-movement plan, but composers also varied the choice and arrangement of movements by including dance-like ones as in the earlier suite. Their divertimentos have up to nine movements. While Haydn retained the three-movement plan in his keyboard divertimentos, Divertimenti a tre and notturni for orchestral performance, he favoured a five-movement divertimento form for the Divertimento a quattro, a cinque etc.; this was widely used by his contemporaries and may have influenced Mozart, who generally preferred the divertimento in five or more movements (though his divertimentos for wind alone are mostly in four). Not all the titles are by Mozart himself. A five-movement structure, consisting of Allegro first and last movements, minuets second and fourth, and a central Andante, was almost a norm during the 1760s.

The form of the typical divertimento first movement is characteristically galant. It follows the structure usually described as 'rudimentary sonata form': the movement is binary (with repeats of both sections), reaching the dominant (relative major in the rare minor-key movements) at the end of the first, with the principal subject reappearing immediately after the double bar (less often the second subject), and a shortened reprise after a modulating passage. (This avoidance of thematic or motivic elaboration no doubt led to the use of the term 'divertimento' for free interludes in fugues.) In its cyclical formation and in the structure of its first movement the divertimento may form a historical link between the suite or partita and the sonata; it may also be used at the beginning of a Classical sonata or sinfonia.

3. HISTORY. The earliest known use of the term 'divertimento' as a title is in Bargaglia's Trattenimenti ossia divertimenti da suonare (1567). The title of Carlo Grossi's Il divertimento de' Grandi: musiche da camera, ò per servizio di tavola (1681) makes clear the closeness of the divertimento to banqueting music, a relationship maintained to some degree during much of the 18th century. The term was applied to instrumental music in Giorgio Buoni's Divertimenti per camera for two violins and continuo op.1 (1693) and (in its French form) by Johann Fischer in his Musicalisches Divertissement, a collection of overtures and suites (1699–1700). (The term 'divertissement' had been used in France from the late 15th century; it was extensively applied in the 17th and 18th centuries to a 'diverting' interpolation within a larger stage work. See DIVERTISSEMENT.) During the early 18th century terms like 'trattenimento', 'allettamento' and 'ballo' were often used by Italian composers for sonatas of a lighter kind, rather than 'divertimento'; Francesco Durante, however, wrote Sei sonate divisi in studii e divertimenti for keyboard (published *c*1732).

In the pre-Classical and early Classical periods the divertimento was much cultivated, particularly at the courts, large and small, of southern Germany, Austria, Bohemia and to some extent northern Italy, and encompassed all types of music for solo instruments. The forces employed vary a great deal, as is to be expected in a repertory largely created for occasional use. Three main types of instrumentation are found: for keyboard, with or without accompanying instruments; for wind ensemble (commonly based on two oboes, two bassoons and two horns); and for strings (trio, quartet or quintet), often augmented by two horns, sometimes flute, oboe or both.

The divertimento for keyboard was closely akin to the sonata. Among those who wrote solo keyboard divertimentos are Wagenseil, Haydn and Joseph Schuster; the more popular accompanied form was used by Georg Benda, Leopold Hofmann, Rosetti, Piccinni (according to the Breitkopf catalogue), F.X. Richter, Vanhal, Haydn and Mozart (K254). The wind repertory includes several six-part divertimentos by Mozart and three by Haydn; Mozart also wrote divertimentos for less usual wind combinations, notably a set for clarinets and basset-horns and others for two each of oboes, english horns, clarinets, bassoons and horns. Wagenseil composed divertimentos for two each of oboes, english horns, bassoons and horns, which also exist as 'Suites de pièces' for obbligato piano with two clarinets, two bassoons and two horns. The divertimento for strings, with or without other instruments, is the most important category; it may be that in some cases composers had orchestral rather than solo performance in mind. Among those who wrote divertimentos for strings, sometimes with one or more of flutes, oboes and horns, are Asplmayr, Dittersdorf, Hofmann, Holzbauer, Kammel, Mann, Monn, Pichl, Vanhal, Gassmann (a large number for trio and quartet), Jommelli (a set for quartet), Boccherini (sets for quartet and for flute with string quintet) and several Mannheim composers, including Johann and Carl Stamitz and G. Toeschi, as well as Michael and Joseph Haydn and Leopold and Wolfgang Mozart. Joseph Haydn wrote several divertimentos including the baryton, some for string quartet and quintet, a number with flute, oboe and strings and a small group of late works for two flutes and cello; a set of six published as his op.31 (HX:12), for flute, horns and strings, are largely arrangements. Mozart's most important divertimentos are those for strings and two horns, K247, 287/271*b* and 334/320*b*, substantial, six-movement works though generally in a light vein; they were composed for various Salzburg families. Mozart's string trio K563, a piece of orthodox chamber music, is entitled 'divertimento' presumably because of its six-movement form. There are very few divertimentos from northern Germany (C.P.E. Bach made no contribution to the genre) and a small number from France, where the title 'divertissement' was sometimes used for sonata-like works of a light character.

Many of the divertimentos of the period 1760–80 have the lowest part marked simply 'basso', a term that designated the lowest part and was not an instrumental specification. Webster has shown that many four-part works probably reckoned on a cello playing the bass part, while Bär and Somfai suggest that this part, even in string quartets, was played not only on a cello but also on a double bass, and perhaps by a bassoon as well. For early string quintets, especially those composed outside Vienna, the bass part was frequently played by solo violone (Eisen, 1994). In works performed in the open air the part was normally played on a double bass alone or with bassoon (a bassoon is specified with the 'basso' of Mozart's K205/173*a*, with violin, viola and two horns). But it is unlikely that a double bass was used to double or replace the cello in string quartets written after 1770.

Changing attitudes to music and changing social conditions brought about the end of the divertimento's existence in the last years of the 18th century. Neither Beethoven nor Schubert wrote divertimentos, though Beethoven's op.25 Serenade is one in all but name and Schubert was among the composers (who also include Steibelt, Moscheles and Kuhlau) to use the term 'divertissement' for light and brilliant works for the piano. In the 20th century several composers applied the title to music of a comparatively easy-going, diverting character: they include Busoni (for flute and orchestra, op.52, 1920), Bartók (for strings, 1939), Berkeley (for chamber orchestra, op.18, 1943), Stravinsky (a concert suite, 1949, from his ballet The Fairy's Kiss) and Henze (for two pianos, 1964).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BrookB; MGG1 ('Divertimento, Cassation, Serenade'; H. Engel); MGG2 (H. Unverricht)
H.C. Koch: Musikalisches Lexikon (Frankfurt, 1802/R)
A. Sandberger: 'Zur Geschichte des Haydn'schen Streichquartetts', Altbayerische Monatsschrift, ii (1900), 41; rev. in Ausgewählte Aufsätze zur Musikgeschichte (Munich, 1921/R), 224–65
W. Fischer: 'Zur Entwicklungsgeschichte des Wiener klassischen Stils', SMw, iii (1915), 24–84
K. Strom: Beiträge zur Entwicklungsgeschichte des Marsches in der Kunstmusik bis Beethoven (diss., U. of Munich, 1926; Suhl, 1926)
G. Rigler: 'Die Kammermusik Dittersdorfs', SMw, xiv (1927), 179–212, pp.xi–xiii
H. Hoffmann: 'Über die Mozartschen Serenaden und Divertimenti', Mozart-Jb 1929, 59–80
W.O. Strunk: 'Haydn's Divertimenti for Baryton, Viola, and Bass', MQ, xviii (1932), 216–51
M.E. Bader: Studien zu den Streichquartetten Op.1–33 von Joseph Haydn (diss., U. of Göttingen, 1945)
G. Hausswald: Mozarts Serenaden (Leipzig, 1951/R)
G. Hausswald: 'Der Divertimento-Begriff bei Georg Christoph Wagenseil', AMw, ix (1952), 45–50
R. Engländer: Die Dresdner Instrumentalmusik in der Zeit der Wiener Klassik (Uppsala, 1956)
G. Tauschek: Die Formenbezeichnungen der Musiksprache im Italienischen und Französischen (diss., U. of Vienna, 1956)
C. Bär: 'Die "Musique vom Robinig"', MISM, ix/3–4 (1960), 6–11
O.L. Gibson: The Serenades and Divertimenti of Mozart (diss., North Texas State U., 1960)
L. Somfai: 'A klasszikus kvartetthangzás megszületése Haydn vonósnégyeseiben' [The emergence of the Classical quartet sound in the string quartets of Haydn], ZT, viii (1960), 295–420 [with Ger. summary]
C. Bär: 'Zum Begriff des "Basso" in Mozarts Serenaden', MJb 1960–61, 133–55
E. Fruchtman: 'The Baryton: its History and its Music Re-examined', AcM, xxxiv (1962), 2–17
R. Hess: Serenade, Cassation, Notturno und Divertimento bei Michael Haydn (diss., U. of Mainz, 1963)
G.A. Henrotte: The Ensemble Divertimento in Pre-Classic Vienna (diss., U. of North Carolina, 1967)
H. Zehetmair: Johann Michael Haydns Kammermusikwerke a quattro und a cinque (diss., U. of Innsbruck, 1967)
E.R. Meyer: 'The Viennese Divertimento', MR, xxix (1968), 165–71
H. Unverricht: Geschichte des Streichtrios (Tutzing, 1969)
A. Meier: Konzertante Musik für Kontrabass in der Wiener Klassik: mit Beiträgen zur Geschichte des Kontrabassbaues in Österreich (Prien, 1969, 2/1979)
G. Hausswald: Die Orchesterserenade, Mw, xxxiv (1970; Eng. trans., 1970)
H. Scholz-Michelitsch: Das Orchester- und Kammermusikwerk von Georg Christoph Wagenseil (Vienna, 1972)
H. Unverricht: Die Kammermusik, Mw, xlvi (1972; Eng. trans., 1975)
J. Webster: 'Towards a History of Viennese Chamber Music in the Early Classical Period', JAMS, xxvii (1974), 212–47
L. Finscher: Studien zur Geschichte des Streichquartetts, i (Kassel, 1974)
R. Leavis: 'Mozart's Divertimentos for Mixed Consort', MT, cxxi (1980), 372–3
M. Fillion: 'Scoring and Genre in Haydn's Divertimenti Hob.XIV', Joseph Haydn: Vienna 1982, 435–43
Kontrabass und Bassfunction: Innsbruck 1984
Zur Entwicklung der Kammermusik in der zweiten Hälfte des 18. Jahrhunderts: Blankenburg, Harz, 1985
W. Ruf: 'Divertimento' (1985–6), HMT
Gesellschaftsgebundene instrumentale Unterhaltungsmusik des 18. Jahrhunderts: Eichstätt 1988
C. Eisen: 'Mozart and the Viennese String Quintet', Mozarts Streichquintette: Beiträge zum musikalischen Satz, zum Gattungskontext und zu Quellenfragen, ed. C. Eisen and W.-D. Seiffert (Stuttgart, 1994), 127–51

HUBERT UNVERRICHT/CLIFF EISEN

Divertissement (Fr.). A term used since the 17th century, partly as an equivalent of the Italian DIVERTIMENTO but also in a wider sense for music, usually with spectacle, intended for entertainment or diversion. In the 17th and 18th centuries it could apply to a simple pastorale or to an entire month's entertainment of which the pastorale was but one modest part; a chamber cantata might be subtitled 'divertissement' (for example Bernier's fifth book of cantatas 'en manière de divertissements'), and all six volumes of the music composed by Mouret for the Nouveau Théâtre Italien are grouped generically as 'divertissements'. The term was also used in 18th-century French instrumental music.

In French opera of the 17th, 18th and 19th centuries two broad categories of divertissement may be distinguished. The first, which flourished particularly during the reign of Louis XIV, was a self-contained musical entertainment, usually in one act, in which ballet often played a prominent role. The second, and more important, was a collection of vocal solos, ensembles and dances that formed an integral part of a larger stage work.

During Louis XIV's reign the term 'divertissement' was used in its first sense to describe a wide variety of entertainments. The duties of the Petits Violons, for example, included performing 'in all the divertissements of His Majesty such as the sérénades, bals, balets, comédies, opéra, appartemens and other special concerts performed for the souper du roy and in all the fêtes magnifiques given on the water or in the gardens of the royal houses' (Etat de la France, 1702). Court divertissements at Versailles for important occasions (such as royal births, marriages, visits, victories and so on; see Schneider, MGG2) evolved into spectacular events called grands divertissements, the grandest of which were those given in 1664, 1668 and 1674, in which homage and celebration were scarcely more important than a politic display of the king's power at the apogee of his reign. The grand divertissement of 1664 in honour of the queen mother and queen (Marie-Thérèse), its central theme based on an episode from Ariosto's Orlando furioso, generated two new comédies-ballets by Molière and Lully: Les plaisirs de l'île enchantée and La princesse d'Elide. The grand divertissement of 1668 celebrating the Peace of Aix-la-Chapelle took place on 18 July; entitled Fête de Versailles, it featured the comédie-ballet George Dandin by Molière and Lully. The grand divertissement given by the king in 1674 to celebrate the victory of the Franche-Comté campaign lasted from 4 July to 31 August and included Lully and Quinault's Alceste (4 July) and La grotte de Versailles (11 July), Molière's Le malade imaginaire (19 July) and Lully's Les festes de l'Amour et de Bacchus (28 July).

These elaborate court divertissements declined during the last years of Louis XIV's reign, when there were fewer military victories to celebrate and the king's entertainment came increasingly under the control of his wife, the pious Mme de Maintenon. As the centre of gravity shifted from Versailles to Parisian town houses and country châteaux, musical patronage shifted from king to noblemen and to the wealthy middle classes. New entertainments developed, many dominated by pastoral, mythological and allegorical themes, such as Campra's divertissement of 1697, commissioned by the Duke of Sully and performed at the Hôtel de Sully in Paris in honour of the Duke of Chartres; Campra's Vénus, feste galante, performed in 1698 at the home of the Duchess of La Ferté; Charpentier's many divertissements composed in the 1680s for the Duchess of Guise; and the famous 'Grandes Nuits' of the Duchess of Maine, performed at her château at Sceaux, for which Matho, Mouret, Bernier, Marchand, Bourgeois and Collin de Blamont composed a series of divertissements in 1714 and 1715. Divertissements were also composed for the Comédie-Française and the Théâtre Italien, notably by Charpentier, who provided the Comédie-Française with divertissements, intermèdes and incidental music for plays by Pierre and Thomas Corneille, Molière, De Visé, Poisson, Brécourt, Baron and Dancourt. Divertissements were an important part of the plays, ballets and operas performed at the Jesuit Collège Louis-le-Grand as part of the annual ceremony marking the end of a year's work. Much of the music composed for the college by Collasse, Campra, Charpentier, Oudot, Foliot, Clérambault, Lalande and Royer is lost.

The second and more important type of divertissement, consisting of songs, vocal ensembles, choruses and dances, formed a separate scene within a larger stage work. These divertissements could occur within pastorales, tragédies lyriques, opéras-ballets, parodies and opéras comiques, and were often (but not exclusively) ancillary to the main action. The term 'divertissement' did not come into general use in this context until 1700, when Campra introduced it in the livret of his tragédie lyrique Hésione, although some authors insisted that it should be reserved for opéra-ballet alone (e.g. Compan, Dictionnaire de danse, 1787). Most 18th-century definitions of this kind of divertissement stress the importance of its close relation to the dramatic action (Cahusac).

Lully and Quinault gave the divertissements in their tragédies lyriques two mutually exclusive functions: first, as a pleasing but non-essential, dramatically neutral ornament; and, secondly, as a decorative and integral part of the dramatic action itself. Both functions shared the panoply of spectacle: dance, chorus, songs, costumes and machines. A notable example of this dual function is the village wedding divertissement in Act 4 of Roland (scenes iii–v). During the wedding, Roland overhears confirmation of Angélique's betrayal and learns the identity of his rival. The contrast between the mounting anger of the distraught hero and the bucolic levity of the fête is heightened in scene v, where the chorus 'Bénissons l'amour d'Angélique, Bénissons l'amour de Médor' is interrupted by Roland's cries, 'Taisez-vous, malheureux'. The pastoral mood is shattered, and the end of the divertissement elides with Roland's vengeance air 'Je suis trahis' (scene vi). Even Lully's tonal scheme emphasizes the conflict of mood: the act opens in C major and shifts in scene iv, the dramatic and harmonic pivot, through G minor to close in B♭ major.

Divertissements frequently sustain a single prevailing mood rather than contrast opposing moods. This is seen in the bellicose divertissements of Thésée, Bellérophon and Amadis, the 'sommeil' from Atys and the 'pompe funèbre' of Alceste. They could occur anywhere in an act; Lully often used a divertissement to conclude his operas in a blaze of spectacle and sound, although this practice was not universally admired: Le Cerf de la Viéville characterized as 'unfortunate' such operas as Amadis, Persée, Atys and Acis et Galathée that end with a divertissement. By contrast, Le Cerf singled out the final act of Armide: 'there is nothing so perfect. It is an Opera in itself. The divertissement occurs at mid-point and leaves the listener free for the events that follow' (Comparaison de la musique italienne et de la musique françoise, 1725). The importance Lully allotted to the divertissement may be inferred from Le Cerf's comment that Lully composed the airs of divertissements first, before passing the music to Quinault, who added the words (this contrasted with Lully's usual method of setting Quinault's given text to music).

The divertissement assumed a central importance during the préramiste period. Campra was accused of 'completely drowning the subject [of Achille et Déidame] in divertissements'. Other divertissements of this period merged with chaotic events taking place within the same scene (e.g. the tempest in Act 2 scene vii of Collasse's Thétis et Pélée and that in Act 4 scene iii of Rameau's Hippolyte et Aricie).

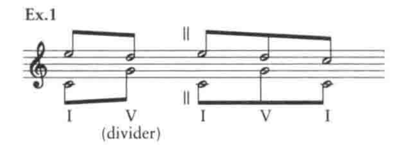
By the time of Rameau, divertissements, as dramatically static scenes, were placed at or near the ends of acts, and virtually every act had a substantial one – so much so that, in the opinion of some critics, the drama was overshadowed, though others found (and spectators agreed) that they were of great interest, combining the best that the French lyric stage had to offer. Both sides noted the increased emphasis on the divertissement. The connections between divertissements and the main action was sometimes slight. To the elements found in Lully were added italianate ariettes, showing off the virtuosity of the singer. Rameau's Castor et Pollux (1737) is representative: the entire prologue is virtually a divertissement, and much of the opera's action takes place in divertissements in which Castor, though present, is a passive observer.

Partly in reaction to late Baroque opera, Gluck and other late 18th-century composers sought to restore primacy to the drama; however, they did not ignore the potential contribution of divertissements but insisted that they serve dramatic ends. Spectacle became much shorter and more fully integrated. The joyous fête to welcome Iphigenia contrasts ironically with the reality (Agamemnon has already been informed that he must sacrifice her) and with the heroine's vague feelings of foreboding (Gluck's Iphigénie en Aulide, 1774). In Gluck's Iphigénie en Tauride (1779), Spontini's La Vestale (1807) and numerous other works, spectacle was used to establish a pseudo-religious atmosphere. In nearly all operas of the Classical period, the only substantial divertissement was the final one, after the conclusion of the dramatic action – an arrangement that permitted composers and librettists to conform to their artistic credo and yet meet their audience's expectations for pageantry.

With the rise of grand opéra, composers and librettists sought to use spectacle in innovatory and melodramatic ways. Meyerbeer and Scribe were masters of the art: examples include the ghostly nuns' orgy and seemingly successful seduction of the hero in Robert le diable (1831) and the innocent pastimes of the peasant skaters, sharply contrasted with the bloodthirsty Anabaptists, in Le prophète (1849). Since tragic endings were generally preferred, the conventional placement for the main divertissement was the third act, although there was some flexibility and additional ones might appear elsewhere. (To credit the fiasco of the Parisian version of Wagner's Tannhäuser in 1861 principally to the composer's failure to meet audience expectations for a third-act ballet is to oversimplify a complex social and political, as well as musical, event.)

'Divertissement' was also used to describe a short work in which dance featured prominently and whose main theme was rejoicing. It was thus a favourite choice for pièces de circonstance. It could take the form of an opéra (Lully's Eglogue de Versailles, 1685; Gossec's Le triomphe de la République, 1793), an opéra comique (e.g. Propiac's Les trois déesses rivales, to a libretto by J. de Piis, 1788), a work in vaudevilles (Le mai des jeunes filles, ou Un passage de militaires by P.-I. Barré, J.-B. Radet and N. Desfontaines, 1807) or a ballet (R. Kreutzer's La fête de Mars, choreography by Gardel, 1809).

The operatic divertissement influenced collections of chamber music and keyboard music in 18th-century France. In the Apothéose ... de Lully (1725), François Couperin revisited a divertissement by Lully and re-created in trio texture a 'Vol de Mercure aux Champs-Elysées' and a 'Descente d'Apollon'. Typical of keyboard collections is J.-F. Dandrieu's Premier livre de pièces de clavecin (1724), whose subtitle states 'contenant plusieurs divertissements dont les principaux sont les caractères de la guerre, ceux de la chasse et la fête de Village'. L.-C. Daquin's Premier livre (1735) contains one divertissement, Les plaisirs de la chasse, for 'hunting horns, oboes, violins, flutes, musettes and vielles'. The vogue for keyboard divertissements continued throughout the century, reaching a nadir with Michel Corrette's Divertissements pour le clavecin ou le forte piano contenant les échos de Boston et la victoire d'un combat naval (1779), in which the sounds of battle are colourfully portrayed.



BIBLIOGRAPHY

AnthonyFB; MGG2 (H. Schneider)
A. Félibien: Les divertissements de Versailles (Paris, 1676)
C.F. Ménestrier: Des représentations en musique anciennes et modernes (Paris, 1681/R)
L. de Cahusac: 'Divertissement', Encyclopédie, ou Dictionnaire raisonné des sciences, des arts et des métiers, ed. D. Diderot and others (Paris, 1751–80)
Castil-Blaze: Dictionnaire de musique moderne (Paris, 1821, rev. 3/1828 by J.H. Mees)
P.-M. Masson: L'opéra de Rameau (Paris, 1930/R)
R. Viollier: 'Les divertissements de Jean-Joseph Mouret pour la "Comédie italienne" à Paris', RdM, xx (1939), 65–71
R. Viollier: 'La musique à la cour de la Duchesse du Maine', ReM, nos.192–4 (1939), 96–105, 133–8
M. Barthélemy: 'Les divertissements de J.-J. Mouret pour les comédies de Dancourt', RBM, vii (1953), 47–51
M. Barthélemy: 'Le premier divertissement connu d'André Campra', RBM, xi (1957), 51–3
M.-F. Christout: Le ballet de cour de Louis XIV, 1643–1672 (Paris, 1967)
H.W. Hitchcock: 'Marc-Antoine Charpentier and the Comédie-Française', JAMS, xxiv (1971), 255–81
R.M. Isherwood: Music in the Service of the King: France in the Seventeenth Century (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1973)
H. Schneider: 'Die Funktion des Divertissements und des Ballet de cour in der höfischen Ideologie', IMSCR XIII: Strasbourg 1982, 433–63
N. Lecomte: 'Les divertissements exotiques dans les opéras de Rameau', Jean-Philippe Rameau: Dijon 1983, 551–63
M.-C. Moine: Les fêtes à la cour du Roi Soleil (1653–1715) (Paris, 1984)
T. Betzwieser: 'Die Türkenszenen in Le sicilien und Le bourgeois gentilhomme im Kontext der Türkenoper und des musikalischen Exotismus', Jean-Baptiste Lully: Saint Germain-en-Laye and Heidelberg 1987, 51–63
M.-F. Christout: Le ballet de cour au XVIIe siècle (Geneva, 1987) [in Fr. and Eng.]
P. Russo: 'L'isola di Alcina: funzioni drammaturgiche del "divertissement" nella "tragédie lyrique" (1691–1735)', NRMI, xxi (1987), 1–15
R. Harris-Warrick: 'Magnificence in Motion: Stage Music in Lully's Ballets and Operas', COJ, vi (1994), 189–203
M.-F. Christout: '1664–1674: les plaisirs de Versailles', Le concert des muses, ed. J. Lionnet (Paris, 1997), 51–6
R. Harris-Warrick: 'Recovering the Lullian divertissement', Dance and Music in French Baroque Theatre (forthcoming)
J.S. Powell: '"Pourquoi toujours les bergers?" Molière, Lully and the Pastoral divertissement', Lully Studies (Cambridge, forthcoming)

JAMES R. ANTHONY, M. ELIZABETH C. BARTLET

Divider (Ger. Teiler). In Schenkerian analysis (see ANALYSIS, §II, 4), the first occurrence of the dominant in a complete tonal statement, such as a symmetrical period, that marks a temporary resting point en route to a full close; hence also 'dividing fifth' (Quintteiler), 'divider at the upper fifth' (Oberquintteiler) and, most precisely, 'dividing dominant (teilende Dominante).

The concept of divider is closely connected with INTERRUPTION: it supports the first $\hat{2}$ of an interrupted URLINIE descent (see ex.1).

By extension, it can be extended to any dominant whose position is analogous to the final chord of what is conventionally called an 'imperfect cadence' (Ger. Halbschluss, a term Schenker disapproved of because it misleadingly implies closure; see Der freie Satz, 1935, §89). Thus, for example, the dominant that marks the end of a harmonically 'open' first group in a sonata form movement is clearly of a lower order than the dominant that affirms the (foreground) tonality of the second group; that the first of these dominants divides the exposition into two parts is illustrated by Schenker's analyses of C major sonata movements by Mozart (K279/189*d*) and Beethoven (op.2 no.3): see Der freie Satz, fig.154/1–2.

In his early analyses, Schenker often used the term Oberquintteiler for 'secondary dominant'; one occasionally finds Unterquintteiler for a subdominant of special significance.

WILLIAM DRABKIN

Divine Liturgy (Byzantine) (Gk. hē theia leitourgia). The Eucharist in the Eastern Christian rites, corresponding to the Mass of the Roman rite. In the strict sense the term 'liturgy' is confined to the anaphora, or consecration prayers, followed by the communion and dismissal rites. The Greek rite, unlike the Roman, has three liturgies in normal use; other Eastern rites, especially the Syriac, use dozens of early anaphoras. Of the three Byzantine liturgies, two are regularly used and contain anaphoral prayers attributed to St Basil and St John Chrysostom respectively; the St Basil liturgy was predominant until about 1000, after which it was celebrated only at major feasts. Except for their anaphoras, these two rites are practically identical in content and structure; they are thus treated together in this article. The third liturgy, that of the Presanctified ('previously consecrated') Host, represents the ceremonial for days in Lent when no consecration takes place.

Most of the music for these liturgies is transmitted in the AKOLOUTHIAI manuscripts dating from the 14th century onwards, but notated melodies also survive in the Constantinopolitan asmatikon and psaltikon (respectively, the choirbook and soloist's book containing florid chants) as well as in other early chant collections. The following account concerns the musical content of the Byzantine liturgies in the late Middle Ages.

See also BYZANTINE CHANT.

1. Liturgies of St Basil and St John Chrysostom. 2. Liturgy of the Presanctified.

1. LITURGY OF ST BASIL AND ST JOHN CHRYSOSTOM. The chants occurring in the first part of the Divine Liturgy, the Mass of the Catechumens, are as follows:

(i) Three opening antiphons or three typika ('typical' psalms). The former consist of selections from the Psalter, normally Psalms xci, xcii and xciv, and the latter of Psalms cii and cxlv together with the hymn Ho monogenēs huios ('O only-begotten Son') and the Beatitudes. The following procession with the Gospel lectionary (the Little Entrance – hē mikra eisodos) is accompanied by the Ordinary eisodikon (invitatory formula), 'O come let us worship', from Psalm xciv.

(ii) A Proper TROPARION, or a series of troparia, of the feast and/or saint of the day and the proem of a KONTAKION.

(iii) The Ordinary Eis polla ta etē acclamations at the entrance of the celebrant. During the Byzantine Empire imperial acclamations naming members of the ruling house were also sung.

(iv) The TRISAGION and its two substitutes: Hagios ho Theos, the Ordinary Trisagion (cf the Western Improperia); Hosoi eis Christon ('Who in Christ is baptized), sung on feasts of the Saviour; and Ton stauron sou proskynoumen ('The Cross do we adore'), sung on feasts of the Holy Cross. Originally a processional troparion, the Trisagion was first introduced in the Constantinopolitan liturgy in the 6th century.

(v) Chants before the Epistle: the announcement Psalmos tō Dauïd, and the florid responsorial PROKEIMENON (corresponding to the Roman gradual or the Ambrosian psalmellus), whose text is drawn from the Psalter. A yearly cycle of Proper prokeimena is found in the old Constantinopolitan psaltikon; choral refrains (dochai) for the 'great' prokeimena are contained in the asmatikon; and series of Ordinary prokeimena are found in the akolouthiai manuscripts.

(vi) Chants before the Gospel: the announcement Allēlouïa, psalmos tō Dauïd; and the alleluia and florid responsorial verse, the allēlouïarion (corresponding to that of the Roman and Ambrosian rites). A yearly cycle of some 60 chants is found in the psaltikon.

(vii) Dismissal of the catechumens and invocation of the faithful, Hosoi katechoumenoi proelthete, corresponding to Latin formulae such as 'Si quis catechumenus est'.

The Mass of the Faithful follows:

(viii) Offertory – the Cheroubikon and its substitutes (sung at the Great Entrance): Hoi ta cherubim ('We who mystically represent the cherubs'), the Ordinary CHEROUBIKON; Sigēsatō pasa sarx ('Let all mortal flesh keep silence'), for Holy Saturday and a few other occasions; and Tou deipnou sou tou mystikou ('Of thy mystical supper'), sung on Maundy Thursday.

(ix) The Creed. It was added to the liturgy in the 5th century, but after the Iconoclastic period (*c*725–842) seems only to have been spoken. Nevertheless, Greco-Latin creeds found in 9th- and 10th-century Western manuscripts may indicate that it could have been sung earlier in the East. The 'Nicean' and 'Constantinopolitan' creeds were sung to simple music (notated in 11th-century ekphonetic neumes) in association with annual commemorations of the Acts of ecumenical councils. A setting of the Creed by Mark of Corinth, in the plagal mode on E, dates from the mid-15th century; an anonymous, 'new', late 15th-century melody is in the authentic mode on G. The Creed is sometimes preceded (at the Kiss of Peace) by Patera huion kai hagion pneuma ('Father, Son and Holy Spirit').

(x) Chants with the anaphora. The anaphora of St Basil may be preceded by a sung introduction, Axion kai dikaion estin ('It is worthy and right'). Hagios, hagios, hagios (the Sanctus) is the chief anaphoral chant in both East and West, but unlike the Western version the Eastern exists in a single, main melodic tradition, occasionally elaborated in a florid manner in manuscripts from southern Italy in the 13th century and from the Byzantine Empire in the 14th and 15th. Elaborated melodies for the Hagios, hagios, hagios are used with the liturgy of St Basil, whereas the simpler, traditional music is sung for the 'Amen' responses following the words of Institution and for Se hymnoumen se eulogoumen ('We praise thee, we bless thee'), the hymn at the anamnesis. Hymns in honour of the Virgin may also be inserted: Epi soi chairei Kecharitōmenē pasa hē ktisis ('All creation rejoices in thee'), in the liturgy of St Basil; and Axion estin hōs alēthōs ('It is very meet to bless thee'), in the liturgy of St John Chrysostom.

(xi) Communion chants (see KOINŌNIKON). An early cycle of some 30 Proper koinōnika for the year occurs in the moderately florid style of the asmatikon. This Constantinopolitan collection also transmits sets of melodies in each of the eight modes for two Ordinary koinōnika: one for Saturdays, based on Psalm xxxii.1, and one for Sundays, based on Psalm cxlviii.1. The koinōnika were incorporated in the akolouthiai manuscripts at the beginning of the 14th century.

(xii) Post-communion hymns, sacerdotal benediction and incidental hymns. The Ordinary post-communion, Plērōthētō to stoma hēmōn ('Let our mouth be filled'), exists in settings from the 13th century. The benediction, Eie to onoma Kyriou (Psalm cxii.2) is also sung, as is another early hymn, Eidomen to phōs to alēthinon ('We have seen the true light'). Incidental hymns sung at the dismissal are the Trisagion; the Proper troparion (apolytikion, 'dismissal hymn'); the Proper kontakion; and the 9th ōdē of the Good Friday kanōn, Tēn timioteran tōn cherubim ('You who are more honourable than the cherubim').

2. LITURGY OF THE PRESANCTIFIED. The third Byzantine liturgy is attributed in some Byzantine sources to 'St Gregory the Dialogist', that is, St Gregory the Great. Its framework differs in a number of respects (besides the absence in it of a consecration prayer) from that outlined above; there are links with HESPERINOS (Vespers), and although the origin of this liturgy is usually considered to be late, its theme of light reflects the early rite of Lucernarium and gives it an archaic aspect.

Five Ordinary chants particularly distinguish this liturgy. The Hesperinos hymn Phōs hilaron ('O gladsome light') is sung at the Entrance and follows the opening set of Hesperinos psalms. The Lenten Ordinary PROKEIMENON Kateuthynētō hē proseuchē mou ('Let my prayer be set forth', Psalm cxl.2) precedes the Epistle. There are Ordinary Lenten versions also of the Cheroubikon (Nyn hai dynameis tōn ouranōn, 'Now the celestial powers') and the archaic koinōnikon Geusasthe kai idete ('O taste and see', Psalm xxxiii.8). The oldest settings of the latter chant are in the plagal mode on E; the asmatikon also transmits an early cycle of settings in each of the eight modes. Finally, there is a distinctive post-communion, Eulogēsō ton Kyrion ('I will bless the Lord at all times', Psalm xxxiii.1).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F.E. Brightman: Liturgies Eastern and Western, i (Oxford, 1896/R)
J.M. Hanssens: Institutiones liturgicae de ritibus orientalibus, ii–iii: De missa rituum orientalium (Rome, 1930–32)
P.N. Trempelas: Hai treis leitourgiai (Athens, 1935)
A. Raes: Introductio in liturgiam orientalem (Rome, 1947)
D.A. Moraïtēs: Hē leitourgia tōn proēgiasmenōn [The Liturgy of the Presanctified] (Thessaloniki, 1955)
K. Levy: 'The Byzantine Sanctus and its Modal Tradition in East and West', AnnM, vi (1958–63), 7–67
K. Levy: 'A Hymn for Thursday in Holy Week', JAMS, xvi (1963), 127–75
J.Mateos: 'Evolution historique de la liturgie de Saint Jean Chrysostome', Proche-orient chrétien, xvii (1967), 141–76
M.P. Dragoumis: 'The Survival of Byzantine Chant in the Monophonic Music of the Modern Greek Church', Studies in Eastern Chant, i, ed. M. Velimirović (London, 1966), 29–36
C. Thodberg: Der byzantinische Alleluiarionzyklus, MMB, Subsidia, viii (1966)
K. Levy: 'Three Byzantine Acclamations', Studies in Music History: Essays for Oliver Strunk, ed. H. Powers (Princeton, NJ, 1968/R), 43–57
S. Harris: 'The Communion Chants in Thirteenth-Century Byzantine Musical Manuscripts', Studies in Eastern Chant, ii, ed. M. Velimirović (London, 1971), 51–67
J. Mateos: La célébration de la parole dans la liturgie byzantine (Rome, 1971)
O. Strunk: 'Die Gesänge der byzantinisch-griechischen Liturgie', Geschichte der katholischen Kirchenmusik, ed. K.G. Fellerer, (Kassel, 1972), 128–47
H. Breslich-Erickson: 'The Communion Hymn of the Byzantine Liturgy of the Presanctified Gifts', Studies in Eastern Chant, iii, ed. M. Velimirović (London, 1973), 51–73
D. Conomos: Byzantine Trisagia and Cheroubika of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Centuries (Thessaloniki, 1974)
N.K. Moran, ed.: The Ordinary Chants of the Byzantine Mass, i–ii (Hamburg, 1975)
R. Taft: The Great Entrance: a History of the Transfer of Gifts and Other Preanaphoral Rites of the Liturgy of St John (Rome, 1975)
N.K. Moran: 'Zwei Herrscherakklamationen in einer griechischen Handschrift aus Süditalien (Codex Messina gr. 161)', Mf, xxx (1977), 3–13
N.K. Moran: 'The Musical Gestaltung of the Great Entrance Ceremony in the Twelfth Century in Accordance with the Rite of Hagia Sophia', Jb der österreichischen Byzantinistik, xxviii (1979), 167–93
D.E. Conomos: 'Communion Chants in Magna Graecia and Byzantium', JAMS, xxxiii (1980), 241–63
H.-J. Schulz: Die byzantinische Liturgie: Glaubenszeugnis und Symbolgestalt (Trier, 1980)
D. Conomos: The Late Byzantine and Slavonic Communion Cycle: Liturgy and Music (Washington DC, 1985)
W. Hugh: The Orthodox Liturgy: the Development of the Eucharistic Liturgy in the Byzantine Rite (London, 1989)
R. Taft: A History of the Liturgy of St. John Chrysostom, iv: The Diptychs (Rome, 1991)
C. Troelsgård: 'The Prokeimena in Byzantine Rite: Performance and Tradition', Cantus Planus VI: Éger 1993, 65–77
M. Dimitrova: 'Prokimenitevav vizantiyskite muzikalni rakopisi ot XIV i XV vek' [The prokeimena in 14th- and 15th-century Byzantine music MSS], Balgarsko muzikoznanie, xvii/4 (1994), 39–53
S. Harris: 'The Byzantine Prokeimena', PMM, iii (1994), 133–47

KENNETH LEVY/CHRISTIAN TROELSGÅRD

Divine Office. A series of worship services performed in the course of each day and night in the Roman Catholic Church. After discussion of the Office's early origins, this article describes the Divine Office as it is presented in manuscripts of the Middle Ages; for information on its structure and content after the reform of the breviary called for by the Council of Trent and completed in 1568 under Pius V, and that of Pius X (1911), see Righetti and Pascher. Vatican Council II called for a fundamental renewal of the Divine Office; the Latin text to implement this was published in 1972 under the title Liturgia horarum (see LITURGY OF THE HOURS).

1. EARLY HISTORY. The origins of the Divine Office may be traced back to early Christian customs of praying at regular times of the day. These times included the early morning and late evening, and sometimes the third, sixth and ninth hours. Such prayer, though probably private in the earliest centuries, became public no later than the emancipation of Christianity under Constantine (313). The Divine Office already existed in a variety of forms and with differing customs by the end of the 4th century, and services may have retained a certain looseness of structure for as much as a hundred years after this.

Examination of the early history of these services enables a distinction to be made, especially with regard to the distribution of psalms throughout the liturgical day, between a 'cathedral' Office held in secular churches and a monastic Office celebrated by monks and nuns: the cathedral tradition prescribed particular psalms for each service, among them Psalm lxii for the morning and Psalm cxl for the evening, whereas the monastic Office required the recitation of large parts of the Psalter in numerical order. The later development of these two traditions was influenced by the rapid transplanting to urban centres of the characteristic psalmody of the desert monastic communities of Upper and Lower Egypt, Palestine and Syria. Urban monastic psalmody was increasingly organized into daily or weekly cycles, and was also adopted by the secular churches in a variety of hybrid Offices. A divided morning Office – a vigil service held shortly before cock-crow separated from a later morning service – was a characteristic of these hybrid Offices; the two services, predecessors of medieval Vigils (or Matins) and Lauds, derived, respectively, from the monastic and cathedral traditions. Prayer at the third, sixth and ninth hours, precursors of Terce, Sext and None, took an almost exclusively monastic form. The evening service, or Vespers as it came to be known, contained elements derived from both traditions.

Elements of the cathedral Office also found their way into the urban monastic Office, surviving there until well beyond the Middle Ages. An enduring characteristic of the early Eastern cathedral Office was the inclusion from an early date of certain fixed chants in the morning and evening services, for example, the canticle Benedicite and the Gloria in excelsis at Lauds. The medieval Byzantine Office preserved a particularly wide variety of such elements in its two main services, Orthros (Lauds) and Hesperinos (Vespers), until the 13th century. In Western Europe, on the other hand, monastic traditions predominated and determined much of the Office's development until well into the Middle Ages. Many early writers on the Western Office prescribed the singing of hymns in several services. With the Rule of St Benedict (*c*535), composed for the monks of Monte Cassino, the Western monastic Office achieved a form that was to serve as a model for centuries afterwards. The cathedral Office always retained something of its specific identity, particularly in the form of Matins, but it also continued to absorb elements from the monastic tradition throughout the Middle Ages. The selection of Proper chants, particularly the antiphons and responsories sung with the psalms, was never as strictly established in the cathedral tradition as it was in the monastic and tended to vary, sometimes drastically, from place to place.

2. THE STRUCTURE OF THE MEDIEVAL OFFICE. The Divine Office consists of eight services, each traditionally associated with a particular time of day: Matins, a long service, originally called Vigils, beginning after midnight (often about 3 a.m.); Lauds, at daybreak; Prime, at 6 a.m.; Terce, at 9 a.m.; Sext, at noon; None, at 3 p.m.; Vespers, at twilight; Compline, before retiring. Prime, Terce, Sext and None are often referred to together as the LITTLE HOURS. The services in the Divine Office are composed of psalms and canticles with antiphons, lessons followed by responsories, hymns, versicles with responses and prayers. The arrangement of these in the Office in the course of the day and year follows a fixed pattern, referred to as the cursus. There are two somewhat different cursus: the Roman cursus, followed in churches, which was not given a precise description until Amalarius of Metz (*c*830); and the monastic cursus, followed in monasteries, for which there is an outline in the Rule of St Benedict.

Of the material in the Divine Office, some is unchanging: for example, the canticle Benedictus Dominus Deus Israel is always chanted near the end of Lauds, and the Magnificat near the end of Vespers. Some of it changes through the course of the week according to a regular pattern: each week all of the psalms are chanted, with some assigned to each day. This arrangement is shown more or less explicitly in the liturgical psalter, breviary, antiphoner or ordinal of a particular church, monastery or religious order. The psalms in the weekly cycle are sung with antiphons; other sung texts that change from one day of the week to the next in a regular scheme include the Lauds canticles and their antiphons, the antiphons for the Benedictus at Lauds and the Magnificat at Vespers, the antiphons for the invitatory of Matins, and (in some later sources of the Roman cursus, and in the monastic cursus) the hymns for various services of the Divine Office. The whole of this may be referred to as the 'Sunday and ferial Office'; an annual series of Matins lessons that covers the whole Bible (at least in principle) is combined with it.

From time to time a Proper Office is substituted for the Office of the feria, either of the Proper of the Time (the cycle which includes Christmas, Easter and Pentecost, with the Sundays that lead towards or away from these feasts), or of the Proper of the Saints (the latter alternative increased in importance during the Middle Ages). Although a Proper Office usually replaces the ferial Office of the day on which it falls, in early times one was sometimes added to the other: both the Ordo romanus XII (*c*800) and Amalarius of Metz described the performance of ferial Matins in addition to the Matins of the feast in the early hours of Christmas at Rome. Ordinarily, however, the ferial Office is replaced to some extent by material specifically selected or composed for the celebration of the feast. In consequence, parts of the book of Psalms are not chanted, and some ferial antiphons and hymns are not sung in some weeks.

The principal source of texts for the sung parts of the Divine Office is the Bible, from which the texts of antiphons and responsories are often adapted or centonized (put together by juxtaposing excerpts from scattered passages), when they are not taken verbatim. Another important source is the lives of the saints; on a particular saint's day the texts for the antiphons and responsories for the Office are likely to come from the vita (the traditionally accepted account of the saint's life), as are the lessons of Matins. Freely composed texts are found in hymns, in occasional antiphons and responsories, and in the relatively late category of the VERSIFIED OFFICE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

PRIMARY SOURCES

J.-M. Hanssens, ed.: Amalarii episcopi opera liturgica omnia (Vatican City, 1948–50)

R.-J. Hesbert, ed.: Corpus antiphonalium offici, i–iv (Rome, 1963–70)

La prière des églises de rite byzantin, iii: Dimanche: Office selon les huit tons – Oktoechos (Chevetogne, 1968)

J. Wilkinson, ed.: Egeria's Travels (London, 1971)

La prière des églises de rite byzantin, i: La prière des heures: Horologion (Chevetogne, 1975)

HANDBOOKS

M. Righetti: Manuale di storia liturgica, i (Milan, 1945, 3/1964); ii (1955, 3/1969)

J. Pascher: Das Stundengebet der römischen Kirche (Munich, 1954)

A. Hughes: Medieval Manuscripts for Mass and Office: a Guide to their Organization and Terminology (Toronto, 1982)

D. Hiley: Western Plainchant: a Handbook (Oxford, 1993)

ENCYCLOPEDIAS

In each of the encyclopedias, the article on the Divine Office provides the headings under which the individual services are discussed.

FasquelleE; MGG1 ('Offizium'; W. Irtenkauf)

H. Leclercq: 'Office divin', Dictionnaire d'archéologie chrétienne et de liturgie, ed. F. Cabrol and H. Leclerq (Paris, 1903–53)

F. Cabrol: 'Office', The Catholic Encyclopedia (New York, 1907–12)

S. da Romallo and P. Siffrin: 'Uffizio divino', Enciclopedia cattolica, xii (Rome, 1954)

P. Salmon: 'Divine Office, Roman', New Catholic Encyclopedia (New York, 1967)

OTHER LITERATURE

C. Vogel: Introduction aux sources de l'histoire du culte chrétien au Moyen Age (1966/R; Eng. trans., rev. by W.G. Storey and N.K. Paucker as Medieval Liturgy: an Introduction to the Sources, Washington DC, 1986)

P. Bradshaw: Daily Prayer in the Early Church (London, 1981)

R. Taft: The Liturgy of the Hours in East and West: the Origins of the Divine Office and its Meaning for Today (Collegeville, MN, 1986), 2/1993

T. Kohlhase and G.M. Paucker: Bibliographie Gregorianischer Choral, Beiträge zur Gregorianik, ix–x (1990), 411–484

W.J. Grisbrooke: 'Cathedral and Monastic Offices', The Study of Liturgy, ed. C. Jones and others (Oxford, 2/1992), 403–20

T. Kohlhase and G.M. Paucker: Bibliographie Gregorianischer Choral: Addenda I, Beiträge zur Gregorianik, xv–xvi (1993–4)

J.W. McKinnon: 'Desert Monasticism and the Later Fourth-Century Psalmodic Movement', ML, lxxv (1994), 505–21

See also the bibliographies in Revue bénedictine, and the journals Ephemerides liturgicae, Sacris erudiri, Archiv für Liturgiewissenschaft, Etudes grégoriennes, Jb für Liturgik und Hymnologie

RUTH STEINER/KEITH FALCONER

Divisi (It.: 'divided'). An instruction for one section, particularly a string section, of the orchestra to divide itself into two or more, taking separate parts that are often notated on the same staff. The cancelling instruction is tutti or all'unisono. The abbreviation div. is common. Verdi sometimes called for small sections of the chorus by metà (half) or soli quattro soprani (four sopranos alone). The German geteilt (or getheilt), abbreviated get., is the exact equivalent; the cancellation is normally zusammen, abbreviated zus. Some late Romantic scores make extensive use of more detailed work within the string sections with such directions as die eine Hälfte/die andere Hälfte ('one half/the other half').

DAVID FALLOWS

Division. A term used in England during the 17th century for a technique of improvised variation in which the notes of a cantus firmus, or GROUND, are divided into shorter ones, usually not of the same pitch, and chosen with regard to clearly delineated rules of musical composition. Division playing, especially on the DIVISION VIOL,

Ex.1 from Christopher Simpson: The Divison-violist (London, 1659), p.30

Ex.2 ibid

Descant

Ground

achieved a high degree of excellence during the second half of the 17th century. It may be viewed as part of the long tradition in Western music of variation and embellishment practices both as spontaneously performed improvisations and as formal compositions.

Earlier terms referring to similar practices of division in the 16th and early 17th centuries (particulary in Italy, England and Spain) are DIMINUTION (It. diminuire), diferencia (Sp.) and breaking (as in 'breaking bass'): these are fully discussed in IMPROVISATION, §II and VARIATIONS, §6. In England this tradition was practised by singers as well as by players of keyboard, wind and string instruments. During this period these instruments relied on pre-existing vocal or dance music as a basis for variations, but by the time Simpson codified the principles of division playing, instrumental divisions were evolving idioms of their own and were changing from an adornment of what was divided into the actual musical substance itself.

The best source of information concerning English division playing is Christopher Simpson's The Division-Violist; or An Introduction to the Playing upon a Ground (1659, 2/1667 [dated 1665]/R as Chelys: minuritionem artificio exornata/The Division-Viol, or, The Art of Playing 'Ex tempore' upon a Ground). According to Simpson, division can be separated into three categories: breaking the ground, in which the ground bass itself is ornamented (ex.1); descant, which consists of dividing imagined melodies above the ground (ex.2); and mixed division, which is a mixture of the first two and 'presents unto our Eares, the Sounds of two, or more Parts moving together'. The latter may be performed in two ways, 'either in Single-Notes, by hitting first upon one Part, and then upon Another [ex.3*a*]; or in Double-Notes, by touching Two, or More Strings at once with the Bow [ex.3*b*]'.

Ex.3 ibid

Roger L'Estrange, in his preface to the second edition of The Division-Viol, cites Simpson's instructions that descant and 'diminutions upon a ground' are useful 'in all sorts of Musick whatsoever'. Mixed division is not mentioned in this context, however, since it produces a texture particularly suited to the technique of the viol.

During the first half of the 17th century in England divisions were played on the consort bass and especially the LYRA VIOL. Tobias Hume included a ground in the form of a galliard with divisions for bass viol in The First Part of Ayres (1605), as well as an early reference to division (but not to division viol); examples for lyra viol may be found in William Corkine's Second Booke of Ayres (1612), such as a set of variations on the song Walsingham. By about 1650, however, a special instrument, mid-way in size between the consort bass and the lyra viol, was developed specially for division playing. The DIVISION VIOL, described both by Simpson, and by John Playford in the 1664 edition of A Brief Introduction to the Skill of Music, was heir to both the linear style of the continental VIOLA BASTARDA and the harmonic style of the English lyra viol.

The art of division playing was primarily an extemporaneous one. According to Simpson, the ability to play thus was > a guift of Nature ... He, that hath it not, in so high a Measure, as to Play Ex tempore to a Ground; may, Notwithstanding, give both himself, and hearers, sufficient satisfaction, in Playing such Divisions, as Himself, or Others, have made for that purpose.

Simpson recommended as worthy of study and imitation composed divisions for one viol to a ground by Henry Butler and Daniel Norcombe. (Works attributed to them are included in US-NYp Drexel 3551, which is bound with a copy of Simpson's first edition.) His own collection, modestly titled 'Divisions for the practice of Learners', makes up the final section of his treatise and contains many beautiful compositions. Another didactic treatise on viol playing, including a noteworthy collection of compositions exemplifying the improvisational practices of 16th-century Italy, is Diego Ortiz's Trattado de glosas (Rome, 1553). Mentioning both treble and bass instruments, Simpson discussed compositions for two and three dividing viols and praised such works by 'the ever Famous, and most Excellent Composer, in all Sorts of Modern Musick, Mr. John Jenkins'. A number of dances by Jenkins with fine simultaneous treble and bass divisions for the repeats of each strain are extant (in GB-Ob Mus. Sch.C.88; ex.4). An interesting point concerning divisions for more than two dividing instruments is that they > are not usually made upon Grounds; but rather Composed in the way of Fancy: beginning with some Fuge; then falling into Points of Division; answering One Another; sometimes Two answering One, and sometimes, All joyning Together in Division; But commonly, Ending in Grave, and Harmonious Musick.

There are four-part fantasias by John Jenkins that fit this description (MB, xxvi, nos.33*a*, 34*a*).

Ex.4 John Jenkins, The Pleasing Slumber, GB-Ob Mus.Sch.C.88 (for treble viol, bass viol, lyra viol and harpisichord).

Understanding the structural aspects of composed divisions is not the same as understanding how to extemporize a musical performance, and Simpson provided valuable information on this:

A Ground, Subject, or Basse, (call it which you please,) is prickt down in two severall Papers: One, for him who is to Play the Ground (upon an Organ, Harpsecord, or what other Instrument may be apt for that Purpose;) the Other, for him who Playes upon the Viol: who, having the said Ground before his Eye; (as his Theme, or Subject;) Playes such Variety of Descant, and Division, thereupon; as his Skill, and present Invention, do then suggest unto him.

These instructions are elaborated on in language addressed directly to the prospective performer:

I would have you First Play over, the Ground it self; for these Reasons. (1) That Others may heare what Notes you divide upon. (2) That your self may be better possessed of the Ayre of the Ground, in case you know it not before. (3) That he who Playes the Ground unto you may better perceive your Time, or Measure.

Simpson's description of how divisions can be extemporized by two viols over a ground is most informative. The actual number of repetitions of the ground is not established. In two places the performers are instructed to carry out particular procedures 'so long as they think fit', or 'so long as they please'. The performance is separated roughly into three sections by the keyboard player who at two places '(if he have Ability of Hand,) may, upon a Signe given him, put in his Strain of Division'. The relationship of the viols to each other begins as accompaniment and solo – one playing the ground bass while the other improvises descant division. These roles are exchanged at each repetition. After the first strain of keyboard divisions, however, the viols introduce two other more complicated procedures. One is the simultaneous extemporizing of descant and ground-bass divisions; specific instructions are given according to which the viols may 'move a whole Strain together, in Extemporary Division, without any remarkable clashing in 5ths or 8ths'. The second is strikingly similar to a procedure known as 'fours' in jazz improvisation where each improviser relinquishes the solo to another after every four bars; one violist calls out the word 'breve', 'semibreve' or 'minim', signifying his intention to play a figure that will lend itself to sequential treatment and is as long as the duration he has named. Each viol then passes the division to the other after every breve, semibreve or minim. To end the performance they may 'joyn together in a Thundering Strain of Quick Division ... or else, with a Strain of Slow, and Sweet Notes; according as may best suit the circumstance, of Time, and Place'.

Divisions might be written down for two purposes: to provide didactic lessons for persons wishing to cultivate the skill of improvisations or to provide compositions reflecting the excitement of sudden inspiration for persons who, though skilful performers, nonetheless lack the particular talent required for spontaneous division making. Many examples from both these categories are significant compositions whose beauty is evident in the growing list of modern published editions and recorded performances. Few sets of divisions for viols were published although there is a large corpus of them in manuscript, and division techniques were used in music for voice and for all kinds of instruments. In the Italian diminution practice of the previous century this was made most clear in the title of G. Dalla Casa's treatise Il vero modo di diminuir, con tutte le sorti di stromenti di fiato, et di corda, et di voce humana (Venice, 1584). Notable English examples of published sets for other instruments include The Division-Violin (London: J. Playford, 1684, later editions up to *c*1730), The Division Flute (London: J. Walsh, 1706–8) and Humphrey Salter's The Genteel Companion: being Exact Directions for the Recorder: with a Collection of the Best and Newest Grounds Extant (London, 1683).

The rewards of this kind of music-making are not those introspective ones that performers shared in consort playing in the first half of the 17th century. On the contrary, this was music intended to dazzle the non-performing listener. Through skilful and clever extemporization, 'a Man [might] shew, the dexterity, and excellency, both, of his Hand, and Invention; to the Delight, and Admiration, of those that hear him'. The division violist of Simpson's time provides a historical context in which to view the growth of virtuoso improvisation during the next century.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

V. Duckles: 'Florid Embellishment in English Song of the Late 16th and Early 17th Centuries', AnnM, v (1957), 329–98
E.T. Ferand: Improvisation in Nine Centuries of Western Music: an Anthology with a Historical Introduction (Cologne, 1961)
J.M. Richards: A Study of Music for Bass Viol Written in England in the Seventeenth Century (diss., U. of Oxford, 1961)
R. Donington: The Interpretation of Early Music (London, 1963, 4/1989)
R. Erig and V. Gutmann, eds.: Italienische Diminutionen: die zwischen 1553 und 1638 mehrmals bearbeiten Sätze (Zürich, 1979)
V. Gutmann: Die Improvisation auf der Viola da gamba in England im 17. Jahrhundert und ihre Wurzeln im 16. Jahrhundert (Tutzing, 1979)
J. Paras: The Music for Viola Bastarda (Bloomington, IN, 1986)
E.V. Phillips, ed.: Henry Butler: Collected Works (Madison, WI, 1991)
F. Traficante, ed.: John Jenkins: the Lyra Viol Consorts (Madison, WI, 1992)
P. Connelley, ed.: Daniel Norcombe: Nine Divisions for Bass Viol (Albany, CA, 1996)

FRANK TRAFICANTE

Division viol. An English form of bass viola da gamba, smaller in size than a consort bass VIOL but larger than a LYRA VIOL. John Playford described it thus in A Brief Introduction, 1667. As its English name suggests, it was used for the performance of free ornamentation or IMPROVISATION by way of varying given melodies (see DIVISION). Since its compass was large (a good performer could use more than three octaves) it was not limited in its divisions to any one line of a polyphonic vocal composition, but could encompass them all. Its tuning was D–G–c–e–a–d'.

The division viol seems to have come into being in England around the middle of the 17th century. Its performing style is essentially linear (although often with lyra viol-like chordal passages interspersed), improvisatory or quasi-improvisatory, featuring much rapid passagework and marked (unlike music for lyra viol) by the use of staff, rather than tablature, notation in written sources. In terms of its musical function and style, it is possible that the division viol may have a lineal connection with the continental VIOLA BASTARDA of the late 16th and early 17th centuries.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Simpson: The Division-Violist, or An Introduction to the Playing upon a Ground (London, 1659, 2/1667 [dated 1665]/R as Chelys: minuritionem artificio exornata/The Division-Viol, 3/1712)
A. Otterstedt: Die Gambe: Kulturgeschichte und praktischer Ratgeber (Kassel, 1994)

FRANK TRAFICANTE

Divitis, Antonius [Rycke, Anthonius; Le Riche, Anthoine] (b Leuven, *c*1470; d *c*1530). South Netherlandish composer. His name was 'Rycke' or 'de Rycke', but in documents it is often gallicized as 'Le Riche' or latinized as 'Divitis' ('of the rich'); his music is inscribed with the latter, presumably the name by which he preferred to be known. In June 1501 'Anthonius Rycke, native of Leuven and cleric of the diocese of Liège' was engaged at the church of St Donatian in Bruges to instruct the choirboys in singing. Later that month he was installed in the residence of the late choirmaster and in July was confirmed by the chapter as succentor. In December he was ordained a priest, celebrating his first Mass in April 1502. In April 1504 he was appointed 'master of song or succentor and master of the choirboys' at St Rombout's in Mechelen. There Divitis was pursued by creditors and in the summer of 1505 he suddenly departed. In October 1505 'Messire Anthoine Le Riche' was enrolled in the household of Philip the Fair at Brussels, and in the following month he was listed among the singers of Philip's chapel, joining the company of such eminent musicians as Alexander Agricola, Pierre de La Rue, Marbrianus de Orto and Henry Bredemers. Early in 1506 he travelled with the court to Spain, where in September Philip unexpectedly died. The court, including the chapel, was maintained by Philip's widow Juana until it was disbanded in 1508. Its members returned to the Netherlands or, like Divitis, sought their fortunes elsewhere.

Divitis's next known appointment was as master of the chapel of Anne of Brittany, wife of the French king Louis XII (1510). After her death in 1514 he passed to the royal chapel and was among the chapel singers who participated in the king's funeral in 1515 along with such illustrious court musicians as Jean Mouton and Claudin de Sermisy. Further evidence of his presence at court is his inclusion among the musicians called upon to sing praise to King François I and Queen Claude in Pierre Moulu's ceremonial motet Mater floreat florescat. He continued in François' service until the king's defeat and capture at Pavia in 1525. Knowledge of his activities after that date is uncertain; attempts have been made to identify him with an 'Ant. Richardus' who was a singer at S Pietro, Rome, in 1526. The manuscript B-Br IV.922, copied before 1534, contains a 'Missa pro fidelibus defunctis Anthonius Divitiis pie memorie', which suggests that Divitis had died before the source was copied. However, the same mass is attributed in other sources to Antoine de Févin, who died in 1512, and the scribe may have confused the two Antoines.

Divitis's works include three parody masses, two mass sections, three Magnificat settings, eight motets (three of them incomplete) and one chanson. Some of these works were printed during his lifetime and publication continued well into the 16th century. First to appear in print was the motet Desolatorum consolator in Petrucci's Motetti de la corona, libro primo (1514). His most famous composition, Missa 'Quem dicunt homines', was printed by Giunta in Missarum decem ... liber primus (1522), almost certainly a reprint of a lost Petrucci book of 1515. Two impressive canonic motets appeared in 1520 and 1521. A Magnificat quinti toni, printed under Divitis's name by Attaingnant in 1534, was assigned to Richafort in Scotto's edition of 1542 and subsequently reprinted by Rhau (1544), Moderne (1550) and Gardano (1562). Attaingnant's chronological priority and greater authority lend weight to his ascription, which is reinforced by the similarity of the work to other Magnificat settings by Divitis (including his customary chordal emphasis of the word 'divites' in the 'Esurientes' verse). On the other hand, Missa 'Dictes moy toutes voz pensées', assigned to Divitis in I-Rvat C.G.XII.2, is attributed to Antoine de Févin in the earlier C.S.16 and its status must be regarded as doubtful.

Divitis belonged to the generation between the towering Josquin and the younger Willaert that included Mouton, Richafort and Févin. His mastery of traditional polyphonic techniques is demonstrated by his five-part Salve regina constructed on the popular melody Adieu mes amours, and his large-scale cantus firmus setting of the superius of Ockeghem's Fors seulement, as well as his canonic motets Ista est speciosa and Per lignum crucis. Except in his parody masses, which are for four voices, Divitis showed a marked predilection for five- and six-part writing. His duos attracted the attention of later musicians; three movements from his Missa 'Quem dicunt homines', two from his Magnificat secundi toni and the 'Pleni' of the Missa super 'Si dedero' (the last with the contrafact text Semper eris pauper) were printed in didactic collections of two-voice pieces such as Il primo libro a due voci (Venice, 1543) and Diphona amoena et florida (Nuremberg, 1549).

Divitis's most significant works are his parody masses. His Missa super 'Si dedero', based on Agricola's song-motet, possibly dates from his association with Agricola in 1505–6, when both were members of the chapel of Philip the Fair. The Missa 'Quem dicunt homines', based on a motet by Richafort, may have been written in competition with a similar mass by Mouton when they were in the French royal chapel. His Missa 'Gaude Barbara', based on a motet attributed to Mouton, could have been written in homage to his colleague. All three masses illustrate the chief feature of parody technique (see PARODY (i)), still novel at the beginning of the 16th century: the basing of a new work on the principal motifs, and not merely on a theme or single voice, of an older one. Divitis, along with Mouton and other musicians of the French royal chapel, played an important role in the shaping of this technique, which was to dominate mass composition in the 16th century.

WORKS

Edition: Antonius Divitis: Collected Works, ed. B.A. Nugent, RRMR, xciv (1993) [N]

MASSES AND MASS SECTIONS

Missa 'Gaude Barbara', 4vv, N (on Mouton's motet)
Missa 'Quem dicunt homines', 4vv, N (on Richafort's motet)
Missa super 'Si dedero', 4vv, N (on Agricola's song-motet)
Credo, 6vv, N
Pleni sunt coeli (?fragment), 3vv, N

MAGNIFICAT

Magnificat secundi toni, 4vv, N
Magnificat quinti toni, 4vv, N (probably by Divitis; also attrib. Richafort)
Magnificat octavi toni, 4vv, N

MOTETS

Ave Maria, 3vv, inc., lacks S, 1565[3]
Da pacem, Domine, inc., A only, GB-Lbl Add.19583
Desolatorum consolator, 4vv, N
Gloria, laus et honor, 5vv, N
Ista est speciosa, 5vv, N
Per lignum crucis, 5vv, N
Salve regina/Adieu mes amours, 5vv, N
Si ambulavero, 3vv, inc., lacks S, 1565[2]

SECULAR

Fors seulement, 5vv, N (A = S of Ockeghem's chanson)

DOUBTFUL WORKS

Missa 'Dictes moy', 4vv, I-Bc Q19 (Févin), Rvat C.G.XII.2 (Divitis), C.S.16 (Févin), ed. in E. Clinkscale: Antoine de Févin: Collected Works, ii (1993), 37–79 (on Compère's chanson)

Missa pro fidelibus defunctis, 3–4vv, A-Wn Mus.15497 (Févin), B-Br IV.922 (Divitis), D-Ju 5 (Févin), ed. in E. Clinkscale: Antoine de Févin: Collected Works, i (1980), 1–32

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Vander StraetenMPB, vii

G. van Doorslaer: 'Antonius Divitis', TVNM, xiii (1929), 1–16

G. van Doorslaer: 'La chapelle musicale de Philippe le Beau', Revue belge d'archéologie et d'histoire de l'art, iv (1934), 139–65

W. Rubsamen: 'Some First Elaborations of Masses from Motets', BAMS, iv (1940), 6–9

P. Kast: 'Remarques sur la musique et les musiciens de la chapelle de François Ier au Camp du Drap d'Or', Fêtes et cérémonies au temps de Charles Quint: Brussels, Antwerp, Ghent and Liège 1957, 135–46

L. Lockwood: 'A View of the Early Sixteenth-Century Parody Mass', Queens College Twenty-Fifth Anniversary Festschrift, ed. A. Mell (New York, 1964), 53–77

E.E. Lowinsky: The Medici Codex of 1518: Introduction and Commentary, MRM, iii (Chicago, 1968), 188–93

H. Hewitt: 'Fors seulement and the Cantus Firmus Technique of the Fifteenth Century', Essays in Musicology in Honor of Dragan Plamenac, ed. G. Reese and R.J. Snow (Pittsburgh, 1969/R), 91–126

M. Duggan: 'Queen Joanna and her Musicians', MD, xxx (1976), 73–92

R. Sherr: 'The Membership of the Chapels of Louis XII and Anne de Bretagne', JM, vi (1988), 60–82

MARTIN PICKER

Divoto (It.: 'dedicated', 'devoted'). An expression mark defined in the anonymous A Short Explication of 1724 as signifying 'a grave, serious manner, or way of playing, or singing, proper to inspire devotion'.

For bibliography see TEMPO AND EXPRESSION MARKS.

Dix, Aureus [Aurius, Audius, Aureo] (b 1668 or 1669; d Prague, 7 July 1719). Bohemian lutenist and composer. He was a friend and possibly a pupil of Count Jan Antonín Losy. His death certificate states that he died of consumption and that he was then 50.

Dix had a high reputation in his day and both Baron and Walther mention him with approval. He also had some repute as a teacher. Dlabačz described a lute tutor by Dix, but this has not been located. Nor have two sonatas for two lutes listed in a Breitkopf catalogue of 1761.

For a long time it was believed that no compositions by Dix had survived, but in 1955 two suites were found (in CZ-Bm), and since then seven more pieces have come to light. While it is difficult to generalize from so few sources, one can say that his pieces, all in the standard dance forms of the time, are in a squarer, less ornamented style than those of his contemporaries. The suites are melodically attractive and exploit the lute well, showing that Dix deserved his title of 'supreme Prague lutenist'.

WORKS

FOR LUTE

2 suites, A, g, in Hudba ceských loutnovych tabulatur, ed. J. Tichota (Prague, 1968)

Allemanda Aurej, d, CZ-Pnm

6 pieces: Allemande, Courante, Gavotte, Menuet, Gigue, d, and Ballo en rondeau, a: all PL-Wn

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DlabačžKL; WaltherML

E.G. Baron: Historisch-theoretisch und practische Untersuchung des Instruments der Lauten (Nuremberg, 1727/R; Eng. trans., 1976, as Study of the Lute)

J. Pohanka: 'Loutnové tabulatury z rajhradského kláštera' [Lute tablatures from the Rajhrad monastery], ČMw, xl (1955), 193–203

E. Vogl: 'Aureus Dix und Antoni Eckstein, zwei Prager Lautenisten', Mf, xvii (1964), 41–5

E. Vogl: 'Loutnová hudba v Čechach' [Lute music of Bohemia], Časopis Národního musea, cxxxiii (1964), 11–20 [with Ger. summary]

ADRIENNE SIMPSON

Dixieland jazz. A term applied to the jazz played by white musicians of the early New Orleans school, but sometimes also to New Orleans jazz as a whole and often to the post-1940 revival of this music (also known as traditional jazz). Owing to the absence of recorded evidence, the stylistic differences between early black jazz in New Orleans and its white counterpart played by groups such as Papa Jack Laine's and others is impossible to document. However, early commentators and observers are fairly unanimous in pointing out that white musicians were slower to grasp the rhythmic swing and blues inflections essential to jazz, though at the same time they made important contributions to its repertory and harmonic and melodic vocabulary. The name 'dixieland' derives from the Original Dixieland Jazz Band, a white New Orleans group which became internationally successful through its tours and recordings from 1917; it played a bowdlerized form of jazz decorated with colouristic and novelty effects borrowed from black jazz. As later white jazz groups, such as the New Orleans Rhythm Kings, showed a fuller understanding of black jazz, it became less necessary to distinguish between the New Orleans and dixieland styles. From the 1950s, during the revival of New Orleans jazz, a number of older dixieland musicians were recorded, notably under the auspices of the New Orleans Jazz Club.

J. BRADFORD ROBINSON

Dixième (Fr.). See TENTH.

Dixon, (Charles) Dean (b New York, 10 Jan 1915; d Zug, Switzerland, 4 Nov 1976). American conductor. He studied at the Juilliard School and Columbia University in New York, made his conducting début at Town Hall, New York, in 1938, and founded the New York Chamber Orchestra the same year. In a sense Dixon's career as a black American conductor paralleled Marian Anderson's as a singer: he opened several important doors to black musicians, being the first to appear as guest conductor of Toscanini's NBC SO (1941), of the New York PO (1942) and of the Philadelphia Orchestra (1943). In 1944 he founded the American Youth Orchestra and appeared for the first time with the Boston SO, and in 1948 he received Columbia University's Alice M. Ditson Award for outstanding contributions to modern American music. In 1949 he moved to Europe, holding appointments as principal conductor of the Göteborg SO in Sweden (1953–60), and from 1961 to 1974 as principal conductor of the RSO, Frankfurt, where he made his home; he was also principal conductor of the Sydney SO (1964–7). His London début was with the BBC SO in 1963. In 1970 he began to unite the two strands of his career, adding a series of engagements with the leading American orchestras to his European commitments. Dixon's repertory combined an enthusiasm for American music with a taste for the main European tradition of Beethoven, Brahms and Bruckner. His interpretations tended towards an engaging if occasionally wayward warmth rather than brilliance.

BERNARD JACOBSON

Dixon, George (1870–1950). English organ designer and writer on organs, who collaborated with the firm of HARRISON & HARRISON.

Dixon, George Washington (b 1808; d New Orleans, 1861). American minstrel performer. He was most famous for his entr'acte performances of Coal Black Rose, the first blackface comic lovesong, and Long Tailed Blue, the first song of the black dandy; both of these song types later became standard in the minstrel show, and both songs are in a simple musical style that was thought (mistakenly) to represent African American music. Dixon claimed authorship of these songs (and, less credibly, of Zip Coon), and is credited as the first to perform them; he presented Coal Black Rose as early as 1827 in Albany and in 1828 brought it to New York, where he became highly popular. Capitalizing on this success, in 1829 he expanded the song into two comic skits (an interlude and an afterpiece), The Lottery Ticket and Love in a Cloud; the latter has been cited as the first 'negro play'. Dixon performed throughout the 1830s, but by the 1840s he had been eclipsed by other minstrel performers; he went on to gain notoriety as a filibuster in Yucatán and as the editor of a New York scandal sheet. (See MINSTRELSY, AMERICAN.)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G.C.D. Odell: Annals of the New York Stage, iii, iv (New York, 1928)
C. Wittke: Tambo and Bones: a History of the American Minstrel Stage (Durham, NC, 1930)
S.F. Damon: Series of Old American Songs (Providence, RI, 1936)
C. Hamm: Yesterdays: Popular Song in America (New York, 1979)

ROBERT B. WINANS

Dixon, Reginald (Herbert) (b Sheffield, 16 Oct 1904; d Blackpool, 9 May 1985). English theatre organist. After early piano tuition he turned to the organ and, following several church appointments, was employed at various cinemas during the 1920s before becoming resident organist at the Tower Ballroom, Blackpool, in March 1930. He made a special study of playing for dancing and developed a unique rhythmic style, which established him as the country's most popular theatre organist and made him instantly recognizable to radio listeners. He was responsible for the specification of the Tower Ballroom's Wurlitzer organ, installed in 1935 and still in daily use. Dixon made over 300 records and gave thousands of broadcasts, continuing these for a further 11 years after his retirement from the Tower in 1970. During the 1930s he regularly broadcast live in the middle of the night to various parts of the Empire, while at the peak of his popularity the audience for his weekly half-hour radio programmes averaged six million.

NIGEL OGDEN

Dizdari, Limos (b Rusan, south-western Albania, 7 Feb 1942). Albanian composer. He began his studies at the Jordan Misja Art Lyceum, Tirana, where his teachers included Lola Gjoka (piano), Albert Paparisto (harmony) and Ramadan Sokoli (folk music), before transferring in 1962 to the newly opened Tirana Conservatory. There he continued his studies with Paparisto and Gjoka, and studied composition with Zadeja. On graduating he was appointed musical director at Shën Saranda, south-western Albania (1966–70), where he also worked as a composer (1970–74). From 1974 to 1982 he was the Albanian film industry's head of music, and during his period of induction to the Party he directed the artistic ensemble of the Enver Hoxha tractor factory (1982–5). He worked as a 'free professional composer' salaried by the state (1983–7) before becoming artistic director of the State Ensemble of Folksongs and Dances (1987–93). In 1993 he founded the arts society and publishing house Dea, and in 1997 he was elected a socialist MP for the district of Tirana.

Dizdari's reputation is as a melodist who excels equally in art and popular songs. Many of his compositions in the latter category were destined originally for soundtracks, Dizdari being among the finest Albanian composers for film. Most of his works employ melodic ideas originating in folksong, and he is endowed with a harmonic instinct and an aural sensibility that gives both his choral and instrumental writing a striking luminosity and transparency, evident especially in his first two piano trios (1975 and 1980) and his piano concerto (1977). Traumatized by the social upheavals of 1991 Dizdari temporarily stopped composing, becoming active again in 1996.

WORKS

(selective list)

DRAMATIC

Ballet: Peshkatarët [Fishermen] (ballet, choreog. R.H. Bogdani), Pogradec, 1974

Choreographic scenes (all first perf. Tirana): Gëzoijnë femijet [Rejoice the Children] (choreog. A. Metuli), 1970; Fluturat [Butterflies] (choreog. Bogdani), 1973; Potpuri vallesh arbëreshe [Pot-pourri of Arbëresh Dances] (choreog. Bogdani), 1984; Mbi hapësirat e atdheut [In Fatherland's Heavens] (E. Muça), 1987; Lulezo pranverë [Spring in Blossom] (choreog. P. Kanaçi), 1989

17 Film scores: Malet me blerim mbuluar [Mountains Covered with Green] (dir. D. Anagnosti), 1971; Rrugë të bardha [Roads Covered with Snow] (dir. V. Gjika and B. Curri), 1974; Beni ecën vetë [Beni Walks on his Own] (dir. Xh. Keko), 1976; Koncert në vitin 1936 [A Concert in 1936] (dir. S. Kumbaro), 1979; Mësonjëtorja [The Girl's School] (dir. M. Fejzo), 1980; Qortimet e vjeshtës [Reprimands in Autumn] (dir. K. Dhamo), 1982; Vitet e pritjes [Years of Expectation] (dir. E. Mysliu), 1989; 4 TV scores, music for cartoon films

VOCAL

Choral-orch: transcrs. of folksongs on heroes of the Resistance, chorus, orch: Kosta Çavo, 1968, Lejla Malo, 1968/1969, Lefter Talo, 1969, Sinan Ballaci, 1969; Ëndra e tyre [Their Dreams] (E. Ballauri), 1v, mixed chorus, orch, 1982; Artistët në shpirtin e popullit [Artists in the Spirit of the People], mixed chorus, orch, 1984–5; Poemë e blinduar [The Armoured Poem] (orat, I. Kadare), S, T, Bar, B, mixed chorus, orch, 1985; Balladë e shkronjave të arta [The Ballad of the Golden Cyphers] (Xh. Spahiu), nar, mixed chorus, orch, 1987; Lutje [Prayer] (Migjeni), female chorus, str, pf, 1996

Solo vocal with orch: O e mirë, o motërzo [O Gentle, O Little Sister] (trad.), vocal trio, ?orch, 1977; Do këndoj, po m'u zu gryka/Ritu-o në vide dielli [I Want to Sing but my Throat has Closed/Growing under the Sun Rays] (ballad, trad., X. Spahiu), T, orch, 1979–80; Kënga e kovaçit [The Song of the Blacksmith] (G. Apostoli), B, orch, 1983; Atdheu im, o zemër-o [My Fatherland, My Heart] (A. Duka), 1v, orch, 1986; Balladë për Partinë [Ballad for the Party], female v, orch, 1987; several other works (T, orch)

Songs (1v, pf unless otherwise stated): 3 Songs (N. Mjeda), 1967–71; Elegji për Luigi Gurakuqin (F. Noli), 1974; Lulezo, kopështi im [Blossom, My Garden], 1976; Këputa një gjethe dafine [I Cut a Leaf of Laurel] (Spahiu), 1979; 2 Songs (N. Frashëri), 1980; Poesia [Poetry] (D. Agolli), 1987; Harald në Shqipëri [Harold in Albania] (Lord Byron, trans. J. Papingji), 1998; children's songs

Other vocal: Pranvera e vajzave të luftes [The Spring of the Maidens of the Resistance], choral poem, mixed chorus, 1977; Poradeci (L. Poradeci), mixed chorus, pf, 1984, arr. mixed chorus, str, pf, 1997; Këngë për rininë [A Song for Youth] (P. Zogaj), mixed chorus, 1986

INSTRUMENTAL

Orch: Sym., b, 1969; Uvertura heroike, 1971; Lirikë fshatare [Village Lyric], vn/fl, orch, 1975–6; Pf Conc., f♯, 1977; Pjesë lirike [Lyric Piece], pf, orch, 1980 [based on film scores Horizonte të hapura, Montatorja]; Concertino, pf, orch, 1982–5; Ov., ?1986; Capriccio, vn, ens, 1988

Chbr: Variations, pf, ?1963; Sonata, pf, 1966; 2 Trios, vn, va, gui: ?no.1, after 1974 [based on film score Rrugë të bardha], ?no.2 'Peïsazh' [Landscape]; Kënget e tokës [The Songs of the Earth], 5 pf trios, 1975–88; Pjesë, fl, gui, 1982; Romanca, vn, pf, before 1983; Pjesë, 4 gui, 1983; [24] Variations and Fugue, pf, 1987 [based on film score Rrugë të bardha]; Sonata, G, vn, pf, 1987–90, ?inc.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

S. Kalemi: Arritjet e artit tonë muzikor: vepra dhe krijues të musikës Shqiptare [Achievements of our musical art: creations and creators of Albanian music] (Tirana, 1982)

Historia e muzikës Shqiptare [A history of Albanian music] (Tirana, 1984–5)

R.H. Bogdani: Koreografi & art i kultivuar [Choreography and cultivated art] (Tirana, 1998)

GEORGE LEOTSAKOS

Dizi, François Joseph (b Namur, 14 Jan 1780; d Paris, Nov 1847). Flemish harpist and composer. He was the son of a music teacher, from whom he received his first violin lessons. However he was self-taught on the harp, and it was in order to obtain lessons to improve his technique that at the age of 16 he decided to go to England. He embarked, and after an incident while the ship was in harbour he arrived in London penniless and unable to speak any English (according to Fétis Dizi dived overboard to rescue a sailor who had fallen into the water; the ship went on without him, taking with it all his belongings). He somehow found his way to the London house of Sébastien Erard, the celebrated maker of harps and pianos. Erard introduced him to Clementi who, perceiving his talent, helped him to establish himself; before long he came to be regarded as the most renowned harpist in London, a reputation he maintained for the next 30 years. He was equally highly regarded as a composer and teacher and among his many pupils was Elias Parish-Alvars.

With Robert Bochsa, Dizi contributed to the enormous popularity of the harp in England during the first quarter of the 19th century: when, in 1820, he was engaged to lead a band of 12 pedal-harp players conducted by Henry Bishop at the Covent Garden oratorios, Bochsa was immediately commissioned by Drury Lane to lead 13 players conducted by George Smart. Dizi also developed a number of improvements to the pedal-action harp, which he patented: these included the 'perpendicular harp' in which the strings maintained a vertical line irrespective of pedalling, but none of his inventions achieved permanence.

In 1830 Dizi left London for Paris where, with the firm of Pleyel, he planned to found an establishment for the manufacture of harps but this came to nothing. He did, however, become teacher of the harp to the daughters of Louis-Philippe, and one of Dizi's harps, used at these lessons, is now in the museum of the Brussels Conservatory. His most important work for the harp was a series of 48 studies which are still used; they are musical and melodious as well as technically valuable.

WORKS
(selective list)

published in London unless otherwise stated

La danse, divertimento, hp, pf (1803); duet, 2 hp/hp, pf (1803); Sonata, hp (*c*1805); 3 airs with variations, hp (1809); Les pensées d'amour, with 6 variations, hp, fl (*c*1810); Sul margine d'un rio with 6 variations, hp, fl (*c*1815); Un bacio tenero with variations, hp (1819); 6 French Romances, arr. hp, bks 1–3 (1820); Le gentil hussard, an Hungarian air with variations, hp, fl (1822); Introduction and variations on Benedetta sia la madre, hp, fl (1822); L'Irlandaise, introduction and Irish air, arr. hp (1822); Introduction and variations on The yellow haired laddie, hp, fl (1823); Gavotte in Achille et Deidamio with variations, hp (?1825); Ecole de harpe, a complete treatise on the harp (1827); 48 études pour la harpe, ed. A. Hasselmans (Paris, 1886)

JOHN LADE/R

DJ [Disc jockey] (i). A term first used in the early 1950s to describe those presenters who played and helped select the popular hits of the day for broadcast. The rise to prominence of the disc jockey went together with the growth in the early 1950s of a teen-based market in the USA for first 'race' then 'rock-n-roll'. One of the most influential disc jockeys of this period was the entrepreneur Alan Freed, whose radio show 'Moondog's Rock'n'roll Party', begun in 1951, helped introduce black rhythm and blues to a mainstream white audience. Not only did Freed play the records but he put forward a definite identity of his own, so beginning the era of 'personality radio'. Disc jockeys such as Bob 'Wolfman Jack' Smith in the 1950s, Emperor Rosko in the 1960s and John Peel in the 1970s became performer-presenters, the latter becoming a sort of mordant anti-hero. From the 1950s onwards disc jockeys began to invent their own slang and catch-phrases, and became vital factors in the promotion of new industry product. Their power was apparent from the beginning, as the 'payola' or 'pay for play' scandal of 1959–60 showed. This practice involved influential DJs being given a co-writing credit in exchange for playing the record on their shows. Although deemed illegal, 'payola' had the advantage of popularizing records from small independent labels. The industry later developed a network of legitimate promoters to push records from individual labels on to radio playlists. In the 1980s and 90s the pre-eminence of the DJ was challenged by the VJ (Video Jockey), the presenters on cable and satellite music shows such as Music Television (MTV), a medium which borrowed heavily from the successful format of pop radio.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

S. Barnard: On The Radio: Music Radio in Britain (Milton Keynes, 1989)

R. Shuker: Understanding Popular Music (London, 1994)

B. Longhurst: Popular Music and Society (Oxford, 1995)

DAVID BUCKLEY

DJ (ii). A performer in dance clubs who creates continuous music for dancing through the manipulation by mixing and joining of pre-recorded tracks. The DJ came to the fore in the USA in the late 1970s and early 80s, at block parties, where two turntables and a mixer were used to create a seamless blend of beats, riffs and hooks as a backdrop for early rappers. Some of the most unlikely sources of breaks – most notably 1950s and 60s rock and roll – and instrumentals were played and cut into early hip hop. One of the most innovative musical art forms to arise from these techniques was SCRATCHING, while breakdancers incorporated dancing with mixing records in visually impressive pavement displays. More than three decks can be used and much skill is needed to keep the records synchronized; notable examples of this are in the early work of the English DJ, Carl Cox. With house music, DJ performance developed further with beat-mixing, which created a lengthy and seamless mix between records (usually specially remixed versions) by adjusting the speed of each turntable by about ± 8%. By the mid-1990s, leading DJs performing at clubs drew comparable audiences to those of traditional concerts, often commanding higher fees and dominating the album charts with DJ-mixed compilations.

IAN PEEL

Djaelani, Yoesbar (b Payakumbuh, Sumatra, 1952). Indonesian composer and conductor. After piano studies from the age of 13, he specialised in the cello at the Indonesian Music Academy in Yogyakarta. Djaelani became acquainted with European and American contemporary music during his composition studies with Jack Body in 1976. He won a composition contest organized by the Indonesian Arts Council in Jakarta in 1976 and 1977. His early works were experimental and tended to take a theatrical form, for example Unanswered Question IV (1982), in which he used expressions of human emotion such as laughing, crying, screaming and shouting as the basic sound elements of his composition. In 1993, Djaelani returned to Sumatra to teach at the Academy for the Indonesian Performing Arts in Padangpanjang. This institution's dual emphasis on traditional and Western music greatly influenced him, prompting him to explore elements of the music and literature of the Minangkabau culture in his subsequent compositions. An example is Performance without Pictures (1994), first performed at the Semarang Music Forum. Djaelani is also active as an orchestral conductor.

FRANKI RADEN

Djamin, Yazeed (b Jakarta, 1952). Indonesian composer, conductor and pianist. After early piano lessons he entered the YPM music school at the age of nine, then studied composition and the piano with Sutarno Sutikno and Frans Haryadi at the Jakarta Institute of the Arts. In 1972 and 1974 Djamin won the Electone Festival championship. He lived in the USA between 1974 and 1988, initially studying composition and the piano at the Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore, and also studying conducting. In 1988 he obtained the doctorate in piano performance from the Catholic University of America. His American awards include the Otto Ortman Award for composition (1975, 1976) and the Peabody Concerto Competition for piano performance. In Indonesia Djamin has been active as a composer, conductor and pianist. He established the highly regarded Nusantara Chamber Orchestra in 1988; in 1994 he became composer-in-residence and supervisor of the National Symphony Orchestra of Malaysia.

Djamin's compositions frequently use the pentatonic scales of gamelan music as a foundation from which to develop the melody, while their harmonic development is greatly influenced by jazz. Several of his orchestral works use traditional gamelan instruments in the orchestra, for example Nyi Ronggeng, which won first prize at the International Music Festival in Sydney. Djamin is one of the few Indonesian musicians who has simultaneously made a reputation in the fields of composition, conducting and piano performance.

FRANKI RADEN

Djemil, Enyss [Demillac, Francis-Paul] (b Paris, 20 May 1917). French composer and teacher. He has been known since 24 March 1973 as Francis-Paul Demillac. He studied in Paris at the Conservatoire and other institutions, his teachers including Firmin Touche for the violin, Ion Constantinesco and Bigot for conducting, and Aubert and Ropartz for harmony and composition. Before World War II he appeared as a violinist in the Orchestre Symphonique de Paris, the Société des Concerts du Conservatoire, and was the second violin of the Quatuor Maurice Hewitt. Thereafter he gave his attention to teaching, serving at the Baghdad Fine Arts Academy (1947–8) and the Paris International Conservatory (1948–51), and directing the conservatories of St Brieuc (1951–60), Le Mans (1960–68), Clermont-Ferrand (1968–76) and St Etienne (1976–81).

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Le jardin des caresses, 1952; Suite bretonne à danser, 1954; L'horloger-poète (ballet), 1957; Fêtes bretonnes, wind, orchd D. Dondeyne; Conc., 4 sax, large orch, 1974; Conc., gui, small orch, 1974; Pavane, Sensées et Saltarelle, va, str, 1977; Concertino, fl, str, 1980; Conc., musical saw, str, 1980; Conc., vib, str, 1980; Rhapsodie, cl, str, 1980; Conc., ob, str, 1982; 3 pièces, db, str, 1982; Petite Suite Provençale, galoubet/pic, str, 1983; Suite, hunting hns, orch/org; incid scores

Chbr: Petite suite médiévale, fl, gui, 1939; Sonata, F♯, vn, pf, 1955; Suite pour binious et bombardes, 1956; 5 miniatures briochines, vn, pf, 1957; Progressions, pf, perc, 1972; Petite Suite Forézienne, vn, pf, 1982; Jeux de vagues, sax, pf, 1983; Sicilienne et Saltarelle, sax, pf, 1983; Triptique, vn, org, 1983; educational pieces

Solo inst: 2 esquisses, pf, 1945; 3 petits préludes, pf, 1945; Sonata, pf, 1947; Petite suite briochine, pf, 1957; Evocation, accdn, 1966; Caprice, complainte et ronde, gui, 1967; Arvernia, accdn, 1972; Le tombeau de Bernard de Ventadour, gui, 1973; Eveil, berceuse et promenade, gui, 1978; Veillée d'Auvergne, 12 pieces, pf, 1980; Récit et danses, gui, 1982; Demande, réponse et certitude, org, 1984; Méditation, org, 1984; Parcours, org, 1985

Vocal: Je suis venu (P. Verlaine), Bar, pf, 1940; Vers elles (Verlaine), Bar, pf, 1948; Transparence matutinale (M. Rousseau), Mez, pf, 1968; Journal intime, Bar, orch, 1968–70; 5 rondels de Charles d'Orléans, chorus, 1975; 3 Prières, S/T, pf/orch, 1980; Sur 5 poèmes de Baudelaire, Bar, pf/orch, 1982; Alternances (J. Aubert), Bar, pf, 1986; Tristesses verlainiennes (Verlaine), bar, pf, 1986; Armor (T. Corbière), Bar, pf

Principal publishers: Benda, Combre, Djemil, Gras, Hortensia, Leduc, Lemoine, Margueritat, Philippo

WRITINGS

J. Guy Ropartz ou la recherche d'une vocation: l'oeuvre littéraire du maître et ses résonances musicales (diss., U. of Rennes, 1967; Paris, 1967)

La théorie musicale par la pratique des textes (1979)

Articles and collections of verse

GUY BOURLIGUEUX

Djibouti. Country located in the Horn of Africa. Djibouti came under French rule in 1863 as Côte Française des Somalis and later as Territoire Français des Afars et des Issas. It became independent in 1977 and has since been a member of the League of Arab States. The population is approximately 590,000, consisting primarily of Afars (also called Danakils by Arabs), a nomadic people who live in the northern part of the country, with the town of Tadjoura as their main centre; of Somalis, also nomads, previously known as Issas, who are scattered in the southern part of the country; and of Arabs of Yemenite descent who settled in the urban coastal towns, mostly in the capital, Djibouti. Islam is the official religion.

The musical activities of the peoples of Djibouti, mostly nomadic and living in the desert, did not attract much attention in the past. Before the establishment of French authority in the port of Djibouti in the 1860s, the country was regarded as only a road linking the coast to the interior. Observations on musical activity can be found in the writings of the British traveller Richard Burton, mostly on dances (1856), and later by the German explorer Philipp Paulitschke, the first to describe musical instruments of the area, which he considered poor and 'primitive'. Later the German Wilhelm Heinitz in 1920 and the Italian Gustavo Pesenti in 1929 worked on Somali culture in the area, with Heinitz confirming for the first time the existence of the dhikr Islamic ritual among Somalis.

Musical activities consist mainly of collective dance and song: war songs, praisesongs, cattle songs, genealogical songs, work songs and children's songs. Among the most famous dances are the hari madé (Somali), which encourages warriors with males and females divided in two opposing lines, the hogwayn (Somali), a dance of seduction, the urban zayla'i dance from the town of Zelai (Somali), the horra war dance (Afar), and the hafat malabo dance of the town of Tadjoura. In certain dances the dancers carry a knife in their right hand. Collective song dominates Djibouti culture, performed either responsorially or, more rarely, antiphonally.

Instruments are generally played separately, and they remain functional. There are only exceptionally musical activities for entertainment. Among the instruments the Afar fodima sâré flute and the Somali foodhin flute are both used to accompany the movement of animals, such as when camels go to the river to drink. The tanbūra lyre is decorated with many small mirrors and is used for the zar possession cult due to its magical power. The kettledrums known locally as dinkara symbolize the power of the Sultan of Tadjoura. Upon his death, the skin of the kettledrum is torn, and the instrument is buried. The Arab 'ūd, a short-necked lute, has now superseded the older Yemenite qanbūṣ short-necked lute, and the instrument is now one of the most popular instruments used for entertainment. Abdel Kader Bamakharma, a noted 'ūd player, is among the outstanding Djiboutian-Arab singers.

In 1955 the local radio station known as Radio-France d'Outremer was launched, becoming Radio Djibouti after independence. TV began programming in the 1980s, and one result of such modernization was the development of solo song. In 1982 a music festival known as 'Forum Culturel' was launched. Many new ensembles were founded in the capital, estimated at nine ensembles in a report commissioned in 1987 by the Arab Academy of Music in Baghdad, some of them borrowing instruments from abroad, such as electric guitar, saxophone and electronic keyboards. The labels 'Djibouti music' and 'Djiboutian song' were introduced around 1990.

Djiboutians such as Mohamaed Ahmed Rirache conducted field research in their own country, and the results of such investigations have been published in the local daily newspaper, Réveil National, since 1984. However, the fight between traditional music and newer musics continues. Many traditional songs are forbidden to be broadcast after the death of their owners, according to a local custom that dictates ownership belongs to the performer. Thus, a polemic arises with the songs of the outstanding traditional Afar singer Cheikh Ahmed, considered a legend in his country. Many wonder what will become of his songs after his death.

BIBLIOGRAPHY
AND OTHER RESOURCES

R. Burton: First Footsteps in East Africa or an Exploration of Harar (London, 1856)
P. Paulitschke: Ethnographie Nordost-Afrikas: die Materielle Cultur der Danâkil, Galla und Somâl (Berlin, 1893)
P. Paulitschke: Ethnographie Nordost-Afrikas: die Gestige Cultur der Danâkil, Galla und Somâl (Berlin, 1896)
F. Jousseaume: Impressions de voyage en Apharras (Paris, 1914)
J. Laurioz: 'Notes sur les pratiques relatives au génies "zâr" en T.F.A.I.', Pount Bulletin de la Société d'Etudes de l'Afrique Orientale, ii/7 (1969), 5–12
Musique de Djibouti, ACCT 38212 (1982) [incl. disc notes]
C. Nourrit and W. Pruitt, eds.: Musique traditionnelle de l'afrique noire: Discographie Djibouti (Paris, 1983)
C. Poché: 'Introduction à la musique traditionnelle de Djibouti', ibid.
A.H. Soule: 'Le rituel de la préparation du dinkara', Pount Bulletin de la Société d'Etudes de l'Afrique Orientale, xvii (1986), 10–11

CHRISTIAN POCHÉ

Djurić-Klajn, Stana. See ĐURIĆ-KLAJN, STANA.

Dlabač, Bohumír [Godefridus] Jan [Dlabacž, Gottfried Johann] (b Cerhenice, nr Český Brod, 17 July 1758; d Strahov, Prague, 4 Feb 1820). Czech lexicographer. He studied music at school in Český Brod and Dobřichov, and became a chorister at the Benedictine Břevnov Abbey near Prague (1771) and later at Strahov Premonstratensian monastery (1773). After studying philosophy at Prague University he entered the latter order in 1778, taking the monastic name Godefridus (in Czech Bohumír, in German Gottfried). During his theological studies at the Premonstratensian seminary of St Norbert in Prague he was choirmaster to the collegiate church of St Benedict (1782–5). After returning to Strahov, in 1786 he was appointed second librarian (first librarian from 1801) and later succeeded Oehlschlägel as choirmaster (1788–1807). He also served as archivist (1805–9) and annalist (from 1804).

Dlabač was a man of manifold interests. Prominently involved in the cultivation of the Czech language during the 'Czech national revival' (see Haubelt), he wrote Czech verses, translated into Czech such works as Francis Bacon's Nova Atlantis (1798), and initiated the study of journalistic writing as an aspect of Czech literary history (see his Nachricht); for his literary activities he was elected in 1793 to the Learned Society of Lusatia, and in 1796 to the Royal Bohemian Society of Sciences, which he later served as director (1813–18). As choirmaster at Strahov he conducted the Prague première of Haydn's The Creation (23 April 1800). Dlabač's primary contribution to music, however, was his Allgemeines historisches Künstler-Lexikon (1815/R), the first encyclopedic survey of Bohemian cultural history. Based on authentic source material and direct accounts from contemporary artists (the preface describes his working methods), the work remains an invaluable aid to the study of Czech music, literature and fine arts. It yields much detail on the domestic cultivation of music, in addition to the statistical information that can be extracted on the education and employment of musicians (see Pilková).

Many music manuscripts copied by Dlabač for the Strahov church choir are in the Národní Muzeum in Prague, and his papers and inheritance are housed at the Památník Národního Písemnictví (formerly Strahov monastery). He probably did not compose; he wrote only the words to the printed song attributed to him in RISM (music by J. Kuchař).

WRITINGS

'Versuch eines Verzeichnisses der vorzüglichern Tonkünstler in oder aus Böhmen', Materialien zur alten und neuen Statistik von Böhmen, ed. J.A. Riegger, vii (Leipzig and Prague, 1788), 133–62; xii (Leipzig and Prague, 1794), 225–98

'Abhandlung von den Schicksalen der Künste in Böhmen', Neuere Abhandlungen der Königlichen Böhmischen Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften, iii (Prague, 1798), 107–39

Nachricht von den in böhmischen Sprache verfassten ... Zeitungen (Prague, 1803)

Historische Darstellung des Ursprungs und der Schicksale des königlichen Stiftes Strahow (Prague, 1805–7)

Allgemeines historisches Künstler-Lexikon für Böhmen und zum Theil auch für Mähren und Schlesien (Prague, 1815/R)

Biographie des ... M. Johann Campanus (Prague, 1819)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C.A. Straka: 'Bohumír Jan Dlabač jako regenschori', HR, xiii (1920), 139–40, 211–14

R.R. Perlík: 'Bohumír Jan Dlabač', Cyril, xlvii (1921), 1–5, 22–3 [with list of compositions acquired by Dlabač for the Strahov church choir]

R. Mužíková: 'Bohumír Jan Dlabač', MMC, no.3 (1957), 11–44

B. Pražáková: 'Bohumír Jan Dlabač ve Strahovské knihovně' [Dlabač in the Strahov library], Strahovska knihovna sborník Pamatniku narodního písemnictví, i (1966), 133–71 [with list of writings]

J. Fukač: 'Die musiklexikographische Methode B.J. Dlabačs und ihre kunstgeschichtlichen Hintergründe', SPFFBU, H6 (1971), 63–86

M. Germer: 'Dlabač's Dictionary and its Place in the Literature', FAM, xxviii (1981), 307–12

J. Haubelt: České osvícenství [The Czech Enlightenment] (Prague, 1986), 416–17

Z. Pilková: 'Doba osvícenského absolutismus (1740–1810)' [The time of enlightened absolutism] Hudba v českých dějinách od středověku do nové doby (Prague, 2/1989), 219–93

MILAN POŠTOLKA/MARK GERMER

D la sol. The pitch d″ in the HEXACHORD system.

D la sol re. The pitch d′ in the HEXACHORD system.

Długoraj, Wojciech [Albertus] (b 1557 or 1558; d probably after *c*1619). Polish lutenist and composer. 'Gostinensis', indicating his birthplace, can refer to many places in different parts of Poland. He was in the service of the Polish nobleman Samuel Zborowski, an important political figure, who had him educated for the position of lutenist at his court but alienated him by his notorious brutality. In 1579 Długoraj fled from his master and entered the Observants' monastery at Kraków, but he was expelled in 1581 because of his improper mode of life. He then became lutenist to an unknown master, but Zborowski sought him out and compelled him to return to his service. In 1583 Długoraj revealed politically compromising letters to King Stefan Batory, thereby contributing to the execution of Zborowski and the banishment of his brother Krzysztof. From 15 September 1583 to December 1586 he was a lutenist at the royal court. He then apparently left Poland after the king's death for fear of the Zborowski family's vengeance and went to Germany, possibly to Stuttgart or Leipzig. The compilation of the great Leipzig lutebook of about 1619 (D-LEm II.6.15) is attributed to him. Literary sources refer to him as an eminent virtuoso. His art most probably lay in skilful improvisation, as may be inferred from the comparatively small number of extant pieces by him and from the improvisational nature of his three most 'personal' compositions, two fantasias and a fugue. His surviving pieces indicate a marked interest in folkdances, both Polish and Italian (as in the villanellas); one of his fantasias also includes certain dance elements. The 'finale' is a series of three variations on a cantus firmus.

WORKS

all for lute

Fantasia, finale, 6 villanellas, 1603[15]; ed. in WDMP, xxiii (1953, rev. 2/1964); 5 pieces ed. in MAP, ii/5 (1994)

Fantasia, prelude, villanella, I-Gu (after 1603)

Pol. dance, D-W (dated 1603–4); ed. in ZHMP, ii (1962)

2 villanellas, 2 Pol. dances, fantasia, fugue, volta, LEm (dated 1619, works attrib. 'A.D.', probably by Długoraj); 2 Pol. dances ed. in ZHMP, ii (1962); fantasia and 2 villanellas ed. Z. Stęszewska in H. Feicht: Muzyka staropolska (Kraków, 1966)

Other anon. works probably by Długoraj, LEm II.6.15

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Z. Stęszewska: Introduction to Tańce polskie z tabulatur lutniowych, i, ZHMP, ii (1962)

P. Poźniak: Introduction to Fantazje i wilanele na lutnię, WDMP, xxiii (2/1964)

PIOTR POŹNIAK

Dlugoszewski, Lucia (b Detroit, 16 June 1931; d New York, 11 April 2000). American composer, poet and choreographer. The daughter of Polish emigrant labour union organizers, she received her early musical education at the Detroit Conservatory. After training in chemistry at Wayne State University, she was awarded a scholarship to study the piano with Grete Sultan in New York; she also studied analysis with Salzer at the Mannes School of Music and composition with Varèse (1953). Championed by members of the New York School, she participated in several concerts and panel discussions at The Club. Haiku, oriental philosophy and the writings of F.S.C. Northrop inspired her to seek poetic immediacy in sound. In her compositions, many of which are evocatively titled, she aimed to capture the essence of each moment and to turn each gesture into a discovery. She performed primarily on invented instruments, including her own 'timbre piano', a conventional piano played by striking, bowing or plucking the strings, and the many percussion instruments created for her by sculptor Ralph Dorazio.

Composer-in-residence for the Erich Hawkins Dance Ensemble from 1957 to 1968, Dlugoszewski was best known for her dance scores. Her longstanding collaboration with Hawkins, her late husband, resulted in such works as Journey of a Poet for Mikhail Barïshnikov. Other projects included Taking Time to be Vulnerable, a dance score for Pascal Denichou, and music for the landmark beat film Guns of the Trees (1962). The first woman recipient of the Koussevitzky International Recording Award (for Fire Fragile Flight), she also received the Tompkins Literary Award for poetry (1947) and an award from the National Institute of Arts and Letters (1966).

WORKS

(selective list)

DRAMATIC

Ops: Tiny Op, 1953; The Heidi Songs (J. Ashbery), 1972–

Dance scores: Openings of the (Eye), fl, timbre, pf, perc, 1952–3; Here and Now with Watchers, 1954–7; Suchness Concert, 100 invented perc insts, 1958–60; 5 Radiant Grounds, timbre pf, 1961; 4 Attention Spans, 1964; Geography of Noon, 100 invented perc insts, 1964; To Everyone Out There, chbr orch, 1964; Balance Naked Flung, cl, tpt, b trbn, vn, perc, 1966; The Suchness of 9 Concs., cl, vn, 2 perc, timbre pf, 1969–70; Tight Rope, chbr orch, 1969; Tender Theatre Flight Nageire, brass sextet, perc, 1971, rev. 1978; Densities: Nova, Corona, Clear Core, brss qnt, 1972; Avanti, 7 insts, 1983; 4 Attention Spans, 8 insts, pf, orch/pf, perc, 1988; Journey of a Poet, collab. E. Hawkins, solo dancer, timbre pf, 1994; Taking Time to be Vulnerable, solo dancer, timbre pf, 1998

Film scores: Visual Variations of Noguchi, 1956; Guns of the Trees, 1962; A Zen in Ryoko-in, 1971

OTHER WORKS

Archaic Music, timbre pf, 1953–6; Naked Wabin, fl, cl, timbre pf, perc, vn, db, 1956; Flower Music for Left Ear in a Small Room, 8 insts, 1958; Skylark Cicada, vn, timbre pf, 1964; Kiregi: Spring and Tender Speed, chbr orch, 1972; Naked Point Abyss, timbre pf, 1972–; Abyss and Caress, tpt, orch, 1973–5; Fire Fragile Flight, 17 insts, 1974

Naked Leaping, str orch, 2 tpt, 2 fl, 1977–; Amor Elusive April Pierce, chbr orch, 1980; Wilderness, Elegant Tilt, 11 insts, 1981–; Radical, Strange, Quidditas, Dew Tear, Duende, 1987–; Quidditas for an Unborn Baby, 100 invented perc insts, 1991; Radical Suchness Concert, fl, cl, tpt, trbn, vn, db, 1991; Austere Suchness Concert ... Outrageous Quod Libet Rims of Many Silences, 1993

Principal publisher: Margun

BIBLIOGRAPHY

CC1 (P. Collins); GroveW (J. Highwater, S. Jobin)

L. Dlugoszewski: 'What is Sound to Music?', Main Currents in Modern Thought, xxx/1 (1973), 3–11

A.I. Cohen: International Encyclopedia of Women Composers (New York, 1981, 2/1987)

C. Gagne: Soundpieces: Interview with American Composers, ii (Metuchen, NJ, 1993), 55–83

OLIVIA MATTIS (WITH J. HIGHWATHER, SARA JOBIN)

Dłuski, Erazm (b Szczuczyńce, Podolia, 1857; d Otwock, nr Warsaw, 26 Feb 1923). Polish pianist, composer, conductor and teacher. At the St Petersburg Conservatory he studied the piano with Anton Rubinstein and composition with Nicholas Solovyev, and later orchestration with Rimsky-Korsakov. In 1891 he won first prize in the conservatory's annual Rubinstein Composers' Competition for his cantata Wieża goryjska ('The Gorian tower'). While still a student, he organized and conducted the concerts of the St Petersburg Amateur Music Group, and on graduating he became the director of a local orchestra, also working as an accompanist and singing teacher. He moved to Warsaw in 1919 and co-directed the opera class at the conservatory with Antoni Różański from 1920. Dłuski was also made an honorary professor of the Brussels Conservatory.

Dłuski's two piano sonatas were particularly successful, and were performed by Rubinstein. However, Dłuski's main interest was in operatic and vocal music. He composed five operas, of which only one (Urwasi, after Kalidasa) was performed in its entirety (Lwów, 25 February 1902; a concert performance had been given there in June 1901); the opera was characterized by many orientalisms and rich orchestration influenced by Rimsky-Korsakov. It was well received in St Petersburg (25 March 1902). Another opera, Kobieta z kindżałem ('The woman with a dagger'), was scheduled for performance in St Petersburg during the 1903–4 season, but no information is available on whether or not it was given; the earlier opera Romano was staged in 1890 before its completion (1895). His compositions were published mainly in Russia.

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: Romano (op, 4), completed 1895, perf., inc., 1890, lost; Urwasi (2, after Kalidas: Vikrama and Urvasi), 1900, Lwów, 25 Feb 1902, vs (Lwów, n.d.); Madame Sans Gêne (after V. Sardou), *c*1898, unperf.; Narzeczona z Koryntu [The Bride of Corinth], unperf.; Kobieta z kindżałem [The Woman with a Dagger] (1, after Schnitzler), 1902, ?St Petersburg, 1903–4

Other works: Wieża goryjska [The Gorian Tower] (cant.), before 1891; Slovenian Rhapsody, orch; Str Qt; Pf Trio; 2 pf sonatas; works for vn and for vc; *c*60 songs

BIBLIOGRAPHY

PSB (W. Poźniak); SMP

L.T. Błaszczyk: Dyrygenci polscy i obcy w Polsce działający w XIX i XX wieku [Polish and foreign conductors working in Poland in the 19th and 20th centuries] (Kraków, 1964)

W. Poźniak: 'Opera po Moniuszce' [Opera after Moniuszko], Z dziejów polskiej kultury muzycznej, ii, ed. A. Nowak-Romanowicz and others (Kraków, 1966), 265–328, esp. 301–2

ZOFIA CHECHLIŃSKA

Dmitriyev, Georgy Petrovich (b Krasnodar, 29 Oct 1942). Russian composer. From 1958 to 1961 he studied the piano and music theory at the Krasnodar music school. At the recommendation of Shostakovich he studied composition under Kabalevsky at the Moscow Conservatory (1961–6), where he later took a postgraduate course. From 1969 he taught composition, counterpoint and instrumentation at the Gnesin Music Institute. During 1988–92 he led the Moscow Composers' Organization, which operated independently from the Composers' Union (under Khrennikov's directorship) and from VAAP (the All-Union Agency for Authors' Rights). Several festivals were organized at Dmitriyev's initiative: Moskovskaya vesna [The Moscow Spring], Naslediye [Heritage], Panorama and Soglasiye [Consent]. The premières of many previously banned works – such as Roslavets's First Violin Concerto – took place at these festivals. Dmitriyev has won composition prizes at Budapest (1988) and Trento (1991); his works have been played at festivals in Russia, France, Italy, Germany, Hungary and the USA. In 1990 he joined the ASM [Association for Contemporary Music], and since 1992 he has directed the Russian Musical Association. In 1994 he became professor of composition at the Russian Academy of Choir Art, and since 1997 he has been a member of the Central Council of the All-Russian Public Movement 'Orthodox Russia'.

Dmitriyev's work has been inspired by cosmic ideas of Russian philosophers (N. Fyodorov, V. Solov'yov, K. Tsiolkovsky etc.); compositionally, his style displays modern elements such as dodecaphonic, aleatory and sonoristic techniques. He strives to combine freely various compositional means, all of which are subordinated to a single concept. His output, though dominated by his free interpretions of large-scale traditional genres such as symphony, concerto, mass and oratorio, is also noted for its experimental compositions for chamber ensembles. In his later works he eschewed his earlier experimental style. This change coincided with his gaining increasingly responsible official positions within the Composers' Union and his growing criticism of his erstwhile modernist colleagues.

WORKS
(selective list)

Op.: Lyubimaya i poteryannaya [Beloved and Lost] (G. Dmitriyev, after M. Callaghan), 1973–5

Orch: Sym. no.1, 1966; Sym. no.2 'Na pole Kulikovom' [On the Kulikovo Field] (after A. Blok), 1979; Stsena [Scene], conc., hpd, db, str qt, chbr orch, 1980; Vn conc., 1981; Kiev, simfonicheskaya khronika [Kiev, a Symphonic Chronicle], 1981; Ledostav – Ledokhod [Freezing Over – Drifting of Ice], perc ens, 2 str orch, 1983; Sivilla [Sibyl], fl, chbr orch, 1983; Sym. no.3 'Misterioso', 1989; Epizodi v kharactere freski [Episodes in the Style of Frescoes], vn, orch, 1992; Labirint [Labyrinth], conc., a sax, orch, 1992

Vocal-inst: Iz bolgarskoy narodnoy poezii [From Bulgarian Folk Poetry], S, cl, pf, 1974; Pamyati Aleksandra Sergeyevicha Pushkina [In Memory of Aleksandr Sergeyevich Pushkin] (conc. sym., A. Pushkin, A. Dement'yev), coloratura S, A, Bar, perc, kbd insts, str, 1979; Golosa skripok [Voices of the Violins] (Blok), T, perc, vn, 1982; Iz 'Povesti vremennikh let' [From 'The Russian Primary

Chronicle'] (orat), T, B, choir, chbr orch, 1983; Santana, muzikal'noye dvizheniye v 2 stadiyakh [Santana, Musical Movement in 2 Stages] 2 conds., solo insts, inst ens, chorus, orch groups, 1983; Kosmicheskaya Rossiya [Cosmic Russia] (K. Tsiolkovsky, Yu. Gagarin, M. Lomonosov, A. Fet, V. Mayakovsky, folk text), solo vv, recit, chorus, orch, tape, 1984–5; Entre elle et moi (chbr cant., French poems by Pushkin, M. Lermontov, F. Tyutchev), T, inst ens, 1985; Posledniy shmel' [The Last Bumble-Bee] (I. Bunin), T, vn, va, vc, 1985; Stabat mater dolorosa (cant., A. Akhmatova), Mez, 2 choruses, org, gui, perc, 1988; Yasnïy svet [Clear Light] (Blok), female vv, fl, 1988; Sten'ka Razin (cant., M. Tsvetaeva), Mez, Bar, perc ens, tape, 1989; R, O, S . . . (V. Nabokov), Bar, brass qnt, 1991

Choral: Pesni bezvremen'ya [Songs of Hard Times] (I. Nikitin, M. Mikhaylov, N. Nekrasov), 1975; 4 stikhotvoreniya Innokentiya Annenskogo [4 Poems by Innokenty Annensky], 1980; Apostol pravdï [The Apostle of the Truth] (T. Shevchenko), 1983; Starorusskie skazaniya [The Old Russian Legends] (I. Bunin), sym.-conc., 1987; Vsenoshchnoye bdeniye [All-Night Vigil], 1990, rev. 1997; V chest' Petra Il'icha Chaykovskogo i na den' otkrïtiya obshchestva yego imeni [In Honour of Pyotr Il'ich Tchaikovsky and for the Opening of the Society Named in his Honour] (V. Lazarev), 1991; Mass, D, 1994; Pravednaya Rus' [Righteous Russia] (14th-century anon., S. Bakhteyev, M. Voloshin, Yu. Kublanovsky, Yu. Kuznetsov), sym., 2 vv, male chorus, 1995; Zaveshchaniye Nikolaya Vasil'yevicha Gogolya [Nikolay Vasil'yevich Gogol's Testament] (N. Gogol', liturgical texts), recit., chorus, 1997

Inst: 5 P'yes [5 Pieces], pf, 1961; Sonata, va, 1962; Concertino, tpt, pf, 1963; Piano Sonata no.1, 1963; Rapsodiya [Rhapsody], pf, 1964; Sonatina, vn, pf, 1964; Sonatina no.1, pf, 1966; Str Qt no.1, 1967; Str Qt no.2, 1970; Concertino, brass qnt, 1972; Str Qt no.3, 1975; Sonatina no.2, pf, 1976; 6 ėtyudov [6 Etudes], pf, 1976; Concerto, cl, 1977; Obliki dvizheniy [Images of Movements], conc. panorama, fl, 1977; Persussionata, perc, 1978; Piano sonata no.2, pf, 1978, Str Qt no.4, 12 pritchakh [12 parables], 1980; 3 kontsertnïye p'yesï [3 Concert Pieces], 2 pf, 1980; Vitrazhi [Stained-Glass Windows], ob, cl, a sax, bn, 1981; Nicolo, quasi-romanticheskaya fantaziya [Nicolo, a Quasi-Romantic Fantasy], vn, pf, 1982; Varshavskaya fantaziya [Warsaw Fantasia], vn, pf, 1983; Dona nobis pacem, chbr conc., vc, inst ens, 1984; V kharaktere Germana Gesse [In Hermann Hesse's Manner], sax qt, 1986; 12 ėtyudov k obrazu [12 Etudes to an Image], mar, 1987; Obelisk, pf, 1988; Portret yakobintsa [Portrait of an Jacobin], bn, 1988; I uvidel ya novoye nebo i novuyu zemlyu [And I Saw a New Heaven and a New Earth], sax qt, 1990; Syuita preobrazheniy [A Suite of Transfigurations], vc, 1991; Str Qt no.5, 1996

Song cycles for 1v, pf, after L. Hughes, Pushkin, N. Yazïkov, Lermontov,

N. Rubtsov, Akhmatova

Elec music: Adagio for Upic, 1990

Film scores

Principal publishers: Muzïka, Sovetskiy kompozitor, C.F. Peters, Le Chant du Monde, Schirmer, Sikorski

WRITINGS

Udarnïye instrumenti: traktovka i sovremennoye sostoyaniye [Percussion instruments: their treatment and their present state] (Moscow, 1973)

O dramaturgicheskoy virazitel'nosti orkestrovskogo pis'ma [On the dramaturgical expressivity of orchestral writing] (Moscow, 1981)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Minosian: 'Georgiy Dmitriyev: obrazï, naveyannïye istoriey' [Georgy Dmitriyev: images inspired by history], Kniga i iskusstvo v SSSR (1984), no.3, p.58

M. Lobanova: 'Georgiy Dmitriyev', Muzïka v SSSR (1988), no.3, pp.66–7

L. Rimsky: 'Oshchushcheniye vremeni (zvukovïye freski Georgiya Dmitriyeva)' [Sense of time (sound frescoes by Georgy Dmitriyev)], Melodiya (1988), no.4, pp.13–14

Ye. Tarakanova: 'Sdelat' muzïku govoryashchey' [To make music conversational], Muzikal'naya zhizn' (1988), no.19, p.14

T. Zhurbinskaya: 'Georgiy Dmitriyev', Kompozitorï Moskvi, iii (Moscow, 1988), 40–65

MARINA LOBANOVA

Do (It., Sp.). C. See PITCH NOMENCLATURE.

Doane, William H(oward) (b Preston, CT, 3 Feb 1832; d South Orange, NJ, 24 Dec 1915). American composer and compiler of Sunday-school and gospel hymnbooks. He was also a successful manufacturer of woodworking machinery and an inventor. He was well trained in music, and conducted the Norwich (Connecticut) Harmonic Society from 1852 to 1854. About 1864 Doane began to compose melodies for Sunday-school hymns, producing over 1000 tunes to texts by Fanny Crosby, and as many more to other authors' words; he also collaborated with Robert Lowry in the compilation of popular Sunday-school collections, and edited The Baptist Hymnal (1883). His best-known tunes include those of the hymns Jesus, keep me near the cross (1869), More love to Thee, O Christ (1870), Pass me not, O gentle Saviour (1870), Take the name of Jesus with you (1871), Draw me nearer (1875) and To God be the glory (1875). Doane was a generous contributor to the YMCA, Denison University, and the Cincinnati Art Museum, which houses his collection of musical instruments.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.H. Hall: Biography of Gospel Song and Hymn Writers (New York, 1914/R)

M.R. Wilhoit: A Guide to the Principal Authors and Composers of Gospel Song in the Nineteenth Century (diss., Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, 1982)

MEL R. WILHOIT

Dobiáš, Václav (b Radčice, nr Semily, Bohemia, 22 Sept 1909; d Prague, 18 May 1978). Czech composer. After embarking upon a career as a teacher, he later became a student of composition with Foerster (1930–31), going on to attend Novák's master class at the Prague Conservatory (1937–9), and the quarter-tone classes of Hába. His first compositions, dating from the late 1930s and early 40s, such as Říkadla ('Nursery Rhymes') for nonet (1938), show his coming to terms with the works of Hindemith, Bartók and Stravinsky in relation to the use of harmonic material and rhythm. A key to his personality is to be found in the period of the Nazi occupation of Czechoslovakia (1939–45), when he showed his ability to forge a strong contact with his audience. Works from this period include his Chamber Symphony (1939), String Quartet no.4 (1942), Symphony no.1 (1943, given its first performance by the Czech PO under Kubelík), Pastoral Wind Quintet (1934) and a number of choral works. After the liberation of Czechoslovakia, Dobiáš made his mark in topical forms of the day with his songs for mass singing, the most popular being his Vyhrňme si rukávy ('Let's Roll Up Our Sleeves'), as well as his cantatas Stalingrad (1945), Stalinův rozkaz číslo 368 z 9.5.1945 ('Stalin's Order no.368 of 9 May 1945', 1946) and Buduj vlast, posílíš mír ('Build your Country, Strengthen Peace', 1947–51). A work of synthesis and lasting value is his Sonata for piano, wind quintet, strings and timpani (1947). In the 1950s Dobías̆ took an active part in the work of the Composers' Union and in cultural politics. He was a Member of Parliament as well as being professor of composition at the Academy of Musical Arts in Prague. His creative energies were gradually weakening and he concentrated more and more on teaching. His pupils included Dvořáček, Rybář, Kruz, Riedlbauch, Smolka and Stivín while, from 1970, he presided over the Prague Spring Festival. He was made National Artist in 1976.

Among his works which caused some discussion are the nonet: O rodné zemí ('About the Native Land', 1952), with its mixture of novelty and tradition, and his Symphony no.2 (1956–7). Further works which complete his creative profile are the song cycle Sny ('Dreams', 1956), Písně o lásce ('Songs of Love', 1959) and Praho jediná ('Prague, my Prague', 1960–61). From the 1960s onwards he composed only occasionally. Dobiáš was one of the heirs of traditional village musicianship. His small-scale compositions for a specific purpose, especially those for dancing and singing, form the most valuable part of his output. He strove for an intelligible, simple language, to which end he often bent all other aspects of his work.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Chbr Sym., 1939; Vn Concertino, ¼-tone, 1941; Sym. no.1, 1943; Symfonietta, 1946; Sonata, pf, wind qnt, timp, str, 1947; Sym. no.2, 1956–7, Festive Ov., 1966; numerous marches and fanfares

Cants.: Stalingrad, 1945; Stalinův vrozkaz číslo 368 z 9.5.1945 [Stalin's Order no.368 of 9 May 1945], 1946; Československá polka, 1947, rev. 1950–51 as Buduj vlast, posílíš mír [Build your Country, Strengthen Peace]; Praho jediná [Prague, my Prague] (M. Pujmanová), 1960–61

Chbr: Str Qt no.1, 1931; Sonata, vn, pf, 1936; Str Qt no.2, 1936; Říkadla [Nursery Rhymes], nonet, 1938; Str Qt no.3, 1938; Sonata, vc, pf, 1939; Lento, 3 hp, ¼-tone, 1940: Str Qt no.4, 1942; Pastorální dechový kvintet [Pastoral Wind Qnt], 1943; Balada, vn, pf, 1944; Malá suita [Little Suite], vc, pf, 1944; 4 nocturna, vc, pf, 1944: Quartettino, str qt, 1944; Tanec [Dance], vc, pf, 1946; Taneční fantasie [Dance Fantasy], nonet, 1948; O rodné zemí [About the Native Land], nonet, 1952; many other pieces

Pf: Sonata, 1931; Suite, ¼-tone, 1939; Sonata, 1940; 3 toccaty, 1941; 3 sonatinas, 1945–6; 3 poetické polky, 1950; many other pieces

Songs: Cigánské melodie [Gypsy Melodies] (A. Heyduk), 1926; 3 písně (K. Toman), 1935; Přelud (J. Urbánková), 1937; Lidické písně [Love Songs], 1948; Sny [Dreams], song cycle, 1956; Písně o lásce [Songs of Love] (I. Skala, J. Vrchlický, O. Fischer, Chin. trad.),1959; many others

Other works: mass songs incl. Vyhrňme si rukávy [Let's Roll Up Our Sleeves], choruses, incid music, film scores

Principal publishers: Český hudební fond, Hudební matice, Panton

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Sychra: 'Novátorství a tradice: k diskusi o nonetu Václava Dobiáše "O rodné zemí"' [Novelty and tradition: a contribution to the discussion of Václav Dobiáš's nonet 'About the Native Land'], HRo, v/10 (1952), 7–19

M. Ladmanová: Václav Dobiáš (diss., U. of Prague, 1953)

M. Koubková and M. Příhoda: Václav Dobiáš (Prague, 1961)

V. Yegorova: Václav Dobiáš (Moscow, 1966)

J. Štílec: Václav Dobiáš (Prague, 1985)

JIŘÍ ŠTÍLEC

Doblados (Sp.). See DOPPIONI.

Doblinger. Austrian firm of music publishers. Friedrich Mainzer opened a music lending library in Vienna on 1 August 1817 which from 1825 also sold antiquarian music. Ludwig Doblinger acquired this business on 12 July 1857. On 1 August 1876 it passed to Bernhard Herzmansky (1852–1921) whose son, also Bernhard Herzmansky (1888–1954), managed it until his death, when his nephew Christian Wolf assumed ownership and took over as business manager.

Doblinger expanded the business to include music publishing; in 1874 he obtained the publishing rights of J.P. Gotthard. Under Herzmansky the undertaking had considerable success, particularly with the publication of music by Bruckner (including first editions of his symphonies nos.1, 2, 5, 6 and 9) and other leading composers of the period, among them Ernő Dohnányi and Mahler (Fourth Symphony). At the turn of the century the publishing output was reorganized: many publications were transferred to the newly founded Universal Edition (of which Herzmansky was a co-founder) and the emphasis placed on contemporary operetta. In 1906 Herzmansky published an operetta rejected by Josef Weinberger and Karczag & Wallner, Lehár's Die lustige Witwe, which was to bring the firm its most spectacular and enduring success. Doblinger subsequently published Lehár's Das Fürstenkind, Eva and Die Ideale Gattin as well as operettas by Straus, Fall, Nedbal, Eysler, Benatzky and many others. Between the wars light music and Viennese songs were prominent in the firm's output; after 1945 it began to foster the interests of music research and to encourage contemporary composers. Its popular house concerts and the series Diletto musicale (1958–), which includes Viennese music from the pre-Classical period to Brahms, give Doblinger a prominent place in Austrian musical life.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

WeinmannWM

B. Herzmansky: Verzeichnis sämtlicher im Druck erschienenen Werke von Anton Bruckner (Vienna, 1903)

1876–1926: Ludwig Doblinger (Bernhard Herzmansky), Musikalienhandlung, Verlag, Antiquariat und Leihanstalt, Wien-Leipzig (Vienna, 1926); partial Eng. trans., 1976, as Profile of a Publishing House

H.-M. Plesske: 'Bibliographie des Schrifttums zur Geschichte deutscher und österreichischer Musikverlage', Beiträge zur Geschichte des Buchwesens, iii (1968), 135–222

Das Doblinger-Katalog von 1951: Faksimile und Reminiszenz (Vienna, 1981)

ALEXANDER WEINMANN/NIGEL SIMEONE

Döbricht, Johanna Elisabeth (b Weissenfels, 16 Sept 1692; d Darmstadt, 23 Feb 1786). German soprano. She was the youngest daughter of the opera singer Daniel Döbricht (1650–94) and the singer Katharina Elisabeth Grosse. After training at Weimar under Christoph Alt, she went to Wolfenbüttel around 1708 together with her sister Elisabeth Christiane (who was engaged there as court singer until 1737 and married the violinist Johann Wilhelm Simonetti) and worked at the Leipzig opera. On 17 February 1711 she sang as guest in Graupner's Telemach at the newly opened opera house in Darmstadt, and was engaged there on 3 July to sing at the court and the church. On 6 September 1713 she married the composer and gamba player Ernst Christian Hesse. 'Die Döbrichtin' was considered the finest German female singer of her day; Quantz praised her 'beautiful, euphonious high register and the genuine womanliness of her acting'. She undertook various concert tours, and in 1740 was granted a pension, though she still often sang. A portrait of her in old age by J.C. Fiedler was formerly in a private collection in Munich.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Pasqué: 'Geschichte der Musik und des Theaters am Hofe zu Darmstadt', Die Muse, ii (Darmstadt, 1854)

F. Chrysander: 'Geschichte der Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttelschen Capelle und Oper vom 16. bis zum 18. Jahrhundert', Jb für musikalische Wissenschaft, i (1863), 147–286, esp. 260

M. Högg: Die Gesangskunst der Faustina Hasse und das Sängerinnenwesen ihrer Zeit in Deutschland (diss., U. of Berlin, 1931)

W. Kahl: Selbstbiographien deutscher Musiker des XVIII. Jahrhunderts (Cologne, 1948/R) [under 'Quantz' and 'Heinichen']

H. Kaiser: Barocktheater in Darmstadt (Darmstadt, 1951)

E. Noack: Musikgeschichte Darmstadts vom Mittelalter bis zur Goethezeit (Mainz, 1967)

ELISABETH NOACK/DOROTHEA SCHRÖDER

Dobro. See RESONATOR GUITAR.

Dobronić, Antun (b Jelsa, Hvar Island, 2 April 1878; d Zagreb, 12 Dec 1955). Croatian composer. After working for 14 years as a teacher, he studied composition with Vítězslav Novák and others at the conservatory in Prague (1910–12), and from 1922 to 1940 was professor at the Academy of Music in Zagreb.

Dobronić's studies in Prague had a decisive influence on his aesthetic views, and he became one of the most prominent representatives of the so-called national style between the two world wars. He sought to realize his ideas not only in his compositions but also through writings and polemics. Believing that the fulfilment of the national style lay in a synthesis of the sophistication of western European art music with the primitiveness and strength of the national folk idiom, he developed a technique based on a predominantly polyphonic treatment of melodies, many of them of folk origin or style; his instrumental works, as as well as those for the stage, are often monothematic.

A prolific composer, Dobronić left a large body of works in all genres but uneven in quality. Opera was an outdated form in his opinion; he searched for original solutions to the problems of content and form in each work, in most cases defining the genre with a subtitle. Among his orchestral pieces, one of the most notable is Jelšonski tonci ('Dances from Jelsa', 1938).

WORKS
(selective list)

STAGE
for full list see GroveO

Dubrovaćgi diptihon [The Dubrovnik Diptych] (scenic sym., 2 pts): 1 Suton [The Dusk] (1, after I. Vojnović), 1917; 2 Novela od Stanca [The Joke about Stanac] (1, after M. Držić), 1920, Zagreb, 24 March 1925
Udovica Rošlinka [The Widow Rošlinka] (musical comedy, 3, after C. Golar), 1931; Zagreb, 23 May 1934
Rkač (musical-scenic lyrics, 3, after P. Petrović: Rkač), 1935; Zagreb, 1 Dec 1938; later retitled Goran
Pokladna noć [Carnival Night] (mono-op for Bar, musical-scenic satire, 3, after Z. Veljačić), 1945; Rijeka, 19 Feb 1955
5 ballets, incid music

OTHER

8 syms.: no.1 'Vigorosa', 1937; no.2 'Cantabile', 1941; no.3 'Dolorosa', 1943; no.4 'Vittoriosa', 1945; no.5 'Enfatica', 1949; no.6 'Maestosa', 1952; no.7 'Priča' [The Tale], 1953; no.8 'Funebre e trionfale', 1954
Other orch: Karneval, 1913; Concertino, vn, orch, 1926; Sinfonietta gioccosa, 1938; Jelšonski tonci [Dances from Jelsa], str, 1938; 8 suites, programmatic works
Choral and solo vocal: Sumorni akordi [Sombre Chords], 1v, pf, 1910; Slavenska misa [Slavonic Mass], male chorus, org, 1933; Hajduk [The Highwayman], song cycle, Bar, orch, 1937; 2 chbr cants., 1v, male chorus, pf; other songs, cantatas
Chbr and solo inst: Sonata rustica e giocosa, vn, pf, 1935; Sonata, bn, pf, 1949; 5 str qts, 11 suites, pf

Principal publisher: Hrvatsko drustor shlodatelja (Zagreb)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

K. Kovačević: Hrvatski kompozitori i njihova djela [Croatian composers and their works] (Zagreb, 1960)
J. Andreis: Music in Croatia (Zagreb, 1974, enlarged 2/1982)
M. Miletić: 'Antun Dobronić, 1878–1955', Zvuk (1979), no.3, pp.50–58
Antun Dobronić: zbornik radova povodom 40. obljetnice smrti [Collection of studies on the occasion of the 40th anniversary of his death], ed. P. Palaversić (Jelsa, 1995) [incl. work-list]
S. Majer-Bobetko: 'Neke glazbenoestetske koncepcije mladoga Dobronića' [Some musical-aesthetic ideas of the young Dobronić], Arti musices, xiii/1 (1982), 55–67

KORALJKA KOS

Dobroven, Issay Aleksandrovich [Barabeichik, Ishok Israelevich] (b Nizhniy Novgorod, 27 Feb 1891; d Oslo, 9 Dec 1953). Norwegian conductor of Russian birth. He made his début as a pianist when he was five years old, and at the age of nine entered the Moscow Conservatory, where he studied piano with Igumnov and composition with Taneyev. After further study in Vienna with Leopold Godowsky, he began teaching in Moscow and conducting at the opera, but left after the Revolution to work in Germany, and in 1922 conducted Boris Godunov at the Dresden Staatsoper. He held opera and concert appointments at Berlin and Dresden (from 1924), the Sofia National Opera (1927–8), San Francisco (1930–34, with Basil Cameron) and the Hungarian State Opera (1936–9). He was also guest conductor of the Minneapolis SO, New York PO and Philadelphia Orchestra. In each centre he made Russian music his calling card. At the outbreak of war Dobroven moved to Oslo and took Norwegian citizenship; in 1940 he went to Sweden, where he took engagements at the Swedish Royal Opera and the Göteborg SO. In 1949 he initiated a notable series of Russian operas at La Scala, putting into practice his long-standing concern for the integration of music and drama by producing as well as conducting. His last operatic engagement was a revival of Boris Godunov at Covent Garden (December 1952–January 1953). He composed several piano concertos, numerous solo piano works and other chamber works.

NOËL GOODWIN/CHARLES BARBER

Dobrowolski, Andrzej (b Lwów, 9 Sept 1921; d Graz, 8 Aug 1990). Polish composer. He studied the organ with Rutkowski, singing with Belina-Skupiewski and the clarinet with Kurkiewicz; from 1945 to 1951 he studied composition with Malawski and theory with Łobaczewska. In 1947 he was appointed to teach at the State Higher School for Music (now Academy of Music) in Kraków before becoming reader in theory and composition at the State Higher School (now Academy) in Warsaw. In 1976 he moved to Graz as professor of composition at the Hochschule für Musik. He was general secretary of the Polish Composers' Union for many years, and played a key role in the Polish Radio electronic music studio in Warsaw.

Dobrowolski's early works such as the Trio (1956) show that he had fully absorbed the rhythmic style and harmonic language of neo-classical composers, and his Suita dziecięca ('Children's Suite', 1953) for piano duet uses superimposed bitonal triads and modal harmony as well as folk rhythms typical of the period. With the influx of avant-garde ideas into Poland after the cultural thaw of 1956, Dobrowolski rapidly developed an interest in serial theories, in block sonorities and in the spatial distribution of instruments; he explored these with logic and intellectual rigour, qualities he also demonstrated as a teacher and encouraged in his students. The titles of his works may seem rather stiff (for example, Music for Strings, Two Groups of Wind Instruments and Two Loudspeakers, 1967), but the anagrammatic title of the chamber work Krabogapa of 1969 (based on the players' initials) reveals a deep-rooted playfulness and humour. These attributes can best be seen in the entertaining Music for Three Accordions, Harmonica and Three Percussion, operating within a sound-world which, as in many of his compositions, owes much to his work in the electronic studio and to his admiration of Stockhausen's works from the electronic studio of WDR, Cologne. This interest in electronic and computer music continued throughout Dobrowolski's career.

The predominant structural process in Dobrowolski's orchestral music of the 1960s and 70s was that of abrupt juxtapositions of textural blocks of sustained homogenous sonority or agitated, brittle figurations (as in Music for Orchestra no.3, 1973). The outbursts of rapid, screaming wind, shimmering percussion and brutalistic clusters are qualities he shares with other Polish composers, but he is rarely as uninhibited as Serocki or as adventurous as Lutosławski. Rather, within his chosen gestural types, he was concerned to explore pitch collections and, within a highly schematized use of the 12 notes, he was fond of tight but expressive chromatic bundles and arabesques in the manner of a permutated B–A–C–H motif. Rather surprisingly, he was also fond of illuminating the triadic possibilities inherent in his system. The passacaglia became a favourite form for Dobrowolski and his Music for Orchestra no.5 (1979) amply demonstrates his mature handling of pitch organization and form. His later works became more personal and inwardly expressive, as in the Music for Orchestra and Oboe Solo (1985), a dark and urgent work in which the earlier abstract use of sound has given way to something more profound and dramatic.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Wariacje symfoniczne, 1949; Ov., 1951; Bn Conc., 1953; Sym. no.1, 1955; Music for Str and 4 Groups of Wind Insts, 1964; Music for Str, 2 Groups of Wind Insts and 2 Loudspeakers, 1967; Music for Orch, no.1, 1968, no.2 'Amar', 1970, no.3, 1973, no.4 'A–La', 1974, no.5 'Passacaglia', 1979, no.6, 1982; Music for Chbr Orch, 1983; Music for Orch and Ob Solo, 1985; Fluchten (Music for Chbr Orch and Spkr), 1986; Music for Orch, no.7, 1987

Vocal: Suita ludowa [Folk Suite], chorus, orch, 1950; 3 pieśni ludowe [3 Folksongs], Mez, orch, 1950; many other folk pieces, songs

Inst: Pf Sonata, 1949; Suita dziecięca [Children's Suite], pf duet, 1953; Trio, ob, cl, bn, 1956; 8 studiów, ob, bn, tpt, db, 1959; Krabogapa, cl, trbn, vc, pf, 1969; Music for Tuba Solo, 1972; Music for 3 Accordions, Harmonica and 3 Perc, 1977; Music for Graz Wind Ens, brass, 1984

With tape: Passacaglia, tape, 1960; Music for Tape no.1, 1962; Music for Tape and Ob, 1965, and Pf, 1972, and Db, 1977, and b cl, 1980; S for S, study for synth, 1973

Incid music

Principal publishers: Moeck, PWM

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Neunteufl: 'Gespräche mit steirischen Komponisten: Andrzej Dobrowolski', Mitteilungen des steirischen Tonkünstlerbundes, lxxxviii (1985), 206–14 [interview]

T. Zielinski: 'Passacaglia i Muzyka nr 6 Andrzeja Dobrowolskiego', [Passacaglia and Muzyka nr 6 by Dobrowolski], RM, xxix/15 (1985), 3–4

K. Baculewski: Polska twórczosc kompozvtorska 1945–1984 [Polish composers' output 1945–84] (Krakow, 1987)

K. Jaraczewska-Mockallo, ed.: Andrzej Dobrowolski: Katalog twórczosci i bibliografia [Dobrowolski: catalogue of his works and bibliography] (Warsaw, 1996)

JOHN CASKEN

Dobrski, Julian (b Nowe, 31 Dec 1811 or 1812; d Warsaw, 2 May 1886). Polish tenor. He studied in Warsaw with C.E. Soliva. After making his début in Il barbiere di Siviglia at the Wielki Theatre, Warsaw, on 20 September 1832, he performed there in operas by Bellini, Donizetti, Meyerbeer, Weber, Hérold, Auber, Halévy and Verdi. He sang in Turin and Genoa (1846–8) and was forced to leave his native country after taking part in the spring revolution of 1848. On 1 January 1858 he created Jontek in the revised Halka at the Wielki; Moniuszko transformed a melody in mazurka rhythm into the Act 4 aria 'Szumią jodły' ('Fir trees sway') specially for him. He captivated audiences by the beauty of his tone as well as the dramatic power of his performances. On 25 February 1858, after a performance of Ernani, he received in tribute to his 25 years on the stage a solid gold diamond-encrusted wreath, engraved with the titles of all the operas in which he had appeared. In 1861 he again incurred the displeasure of the authorities for his patriotic attitude and was prematurely dismissed from the Wielki Theatre. However, in 1865 he returned to Warsaw to sing and gave his last operatic performance there that year, in Halévy's La Juive. He had taught since 1861, and later he held important teaching posts in Warsaw. He was also editor of Echo, a collection of songs by foreign composers, which was begun in 1861.

IRENA PONIATOWSKA

Dobrzyński, Ignacy Feliks (b Romanów, Volhynia, 25 Feb 1807; d Warsaw, 9 Oct 1867). Polish composer and pianist. He studied with his father, a musician at the court of Count Józef Iliński, and with Józef Elsner at the Warsaw Conservatory, where Chopin was a fellow student. Unlike Chopin, he remained in Poland following the 1830 insurrection, earning his living principally as a performer and teacher, and playing a valuable (but not lucrative) role in the promotion of concert life in Warsaw. There were short-lived periods of more permanent employment, at the Instytut Wychowania Panień (1841–3) and as director of the Wielki Theatre (1852–3). He was dismissed from the latter post, apparently unable to accept the constraints imposed on his role as director. In 1835 his Second Symphony was awarded a prize at a Viennese competition, ensuring a measure of wider recognition that was consolidated by a major tour of German cities between 1845 and 1847. This was devoted to concerts, negotiations with publishers and (unsuccessful) attempts to arrange a staging of his opera Monbar, czyli Flibustierowie ('Monbar, or The Freebooters'); it was eventually staged in Warsaw in 1863.

While Dobrzyński undoubtedly regarded Monbar as his magnum opus, posterity has favoured the instrumental music – symphonies, orchestral concert pieces and chamber works in a post-Classical rather than a Romantic idiom, and salon piano pieces which at times aspire towards a Polish national style. Like Moniuszko, Dobrzyński greatly admired Chopin's achievement, but he tailored his own music to the modest needs of a musical public whose tastes were necessarily insular and conservative. Only in some of his later piano works, from the Rhapsody op.51 and the Nocturne op.52 onwards, are there signs of a more sophisticated idiom which, had it been developed, might have transcended the provincial tone of most of his music. His principal works were frequently performed in Warsaw right through to the early 20th century, but have since been consigned to relative obscurity.

WORKS
(selective list)

STAGE

Monbar, czyli Flibustierowie [Monbar, or The Freebooters] (op, 3, L. Paprocki and S. Duchińska-Pruszakowa, after K. van der Velde: Der Flibustier), op.30, 1838, Warsaw, 10 Jan 1863, PL-Wtm, pf 4 hands (Warsaw, 1860), vs, pf 4 hands (Warsaw, 1950)

Obrazek muzyczny [Musical Picture-Book] (op, 1), 1856, Warsaw, 18 Nov 1856 (Warsaw, 1856)

Burgrafowie [The Burgraves] (incid music, 3, K. Kaszewski, after V. Hugo), op.69, 1860, inc., Warsaw, 22 Sept 1860, Wtm, ov., arr. pf 4 hands (Warsaw, 1880)
Konrad Wallenrod (drama, 3, Kaszewski and J. Królikowski, after A. Mickiewicz), op.70, 1859, inc., Warsaw, 19 June 1859, Wtm, excerpts, ed. (Kraków, 1963)

VOCAL

Sacred choral: Cant., op.34, chorus, orch; Święty Boże [Holy Lord], op.61, 4 solo vv, chorus, orch (Leipzig, 1860); Lamentacja nad grobem Chrystusa Pana [Lamentations at the Tomb of Christ], chorus, orch, op.62; Benedictus, unacc.; Mass; Modlitwa pańska [People's Prayer], unacc.; Modlitwa polaków [Polish Prayer], unacc.; Ojcze nasze [Our Father], chorus, org; O Sanctissima, unacc.; Pieśń do N. Marii Panny [Songs to the Virgin] (Warsaw, 1862); Veni Creator, 4 solo vv, insts (Warsaw, 1867)
Secular choral: Introduction and Mazurka (Warsaw, 1831); Śpiewka o ponczu z Schillera [Schiller Songs], op.16; Cant., op.44; Introduction and Funeral March on the Death of Chopin, op.66 (Warsaw, 1861); Kantata na cześć walecznych obrońców ojczyzny [Cant. in Commemoration of the Heroic Defence of the Fatherland]; Kantata na imieniny H. Lubieńskiego [Cant. on the Christening of H. Lubieński]
Songs, 1v, pf; Pieśni sielskie [Country Songs], op.23 (Warsaw, 1843); Nie mogę być twoją [I Cannot be Yours], op.50 (Warsaw, 1862); Chlopek [The Peasant], op.67 (Warsaw, 1858); Cyganeczka [The Gypsy Girl]; Do matki polki [To a Polish Mother] (Mickiewicz) (Poznań, 1845); Dumka hetmana Kosińskiego [Elegy for Commander Kosiński]; Ładna Kujawianka [Pretty Kujawian] (Warsaw, 1829); 2 pieśni [2 Songs] (M. Ossaria) (Warsaw, 1844); 2 pieśni [2 Songs] (P. Potocki) (Warsaw, 1830); 6 pieśni ludowych [Folk Songs] (Poznań, 1845); Pieśń narodowa [National Song] (Warsaw, 1830); Piosnka Aliny [Alina's Song]; Rojenia wiosenne [Dreams of Spring]; Szklaneczka z winem [A Small Glass of Wine] (Warsaw, 1830)

INSTRUMENTAL

Orch: Concert Ov., op.1, 1824, PL-Wtm; Rondo alla polacca, pf, orch, op.6 (Leipzig, 1836); Sym. no.1, op.11, 1829, arr. pf 4 hands (Warsaw, 1880), Wtm; Sym. no.2, op.15, 1834, arr. pf 4 hands (Warsaw, 1862), Wtm; Fantaisie sur un thème original, bn, orch, op.28, 1834; 2 Polonaises, op.31, 1835; Tpt Fantasy, op.35, Wtm; Hommage à Beethoven: marche funèbre, op.38, 1840, arr. pf (Berlin, 1845); Andante and Rondo, fl, orch, op.42, 1864, ed. P.A. Janowicz (Kraków, 1953); Introduction and Variations, trbn, orch, op.45, 1845; Umoresca capriciosa sur un thème italien, op.53, 1847; Grand Fantasy, vn, orch; Marsz wojenny [Military March]
Chbr: Str Qt, e, op.7, 1827–8, ed. A. Nowak-Romanowicz (Kraków, 1957); Str Qt, d, op.8, 1829, PL-Wtm; Introduction and Variations, vn, pf, op.9, 1829; Concert Variations on a Favourite Mazurka, pf, str qnt, fl, op.12, 1830; Str Qt, E, op.13, 1830; Pf Trio, op.17, 1831 (Leipzig, 1835); Introduction and Variations, fl, pf, op.18, 1831 (Leipzig, 1836); Qnt, F, 2 vn, va, 2 vc, op.20 (Leipzig, 1836); Fantasy, vn, pf, op.32, Wtm; Str Sextet, E♭, op.39 (Leipzig, 1841); Qnt, a, 2 vn, va, 2 vc, op.40 (Leipzig, 1841); Les larmes, vn, pf, op.41 (Mainz, 1843); Elegy, vc, pf, op.42, 1843; Nocturn, vc, pf, op.46, 1845; Duo, cl, pf, op.47, 1853, ed. L. Kurkiewicz (Kraków, 1953); Study on an Original Theme in Double Counterpoint, op.62, 1867, Wtm; 6 harmonies sur le célèbre thème 'God Save the King', str qt; Romans, ob, vn, vc, db; Souvenir de Dresde, ob, vc, pf, 1846
Pf: Polonaise, op.3, ed. (Warsaw, 1881); Introduction and Variations, op.4, 1824; Fantaisie quasi fugue sur une mazurek favorite, op.10, 1828 (Leipzig, 1835); Fantaisie et variations sur une mazure (kujawiaka), op.14, 1834 (Leipzig, *c*1850); 3 nocturnes, op.21 (Leipzig, 1836); 3 mazurkas, op.16 (Leipzig, 1839); Souvenir: 2 mazurkas, op.25 (Leipzig, 1846); 3 mazurkas, op.27, 1834 (Paris, 1846); 2 mazurkas, op.37, 1840 (Berlin, 1847); Resignation, op.48 (Berlin, 1846); Ricordanza, op.49 (Leipzig, 1846); Nocturne on a Polish Theme, op.52 (Berlin, 1846); Impromptu, op.54 (Berlin, 1847); Primavera, op.55 (Berlin, 1846); Scherzo, op.56 (Leipzig, 1849); Hommage à Mozart, op.59 (Berlin, 1850); Mouvement et repos: grande étude, op.60 (Berlin, 1847); Tarantella, op.61 (Berlin, 1847); Grande étude chromatique, op.62; Grande valse: Rétablissement, op.63 (Warsaw, 1853); Danse napolitaine, op.65 (Warsaw, 1856); Melancholy Polonaise (Warsaw, 1829); other polonaises, mazurkas, waltzes

PEDAGOGICAL WORKS

Szkoła na fortepian [Piano method] (Warsaw, 1845)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EMuz (A. Nowak-Romanowicz)
M.A. Szulc: 'Dobrzyński', Oredownik naukowy, vi (Warsaw, 1845), nos.8, 10, 11
O. Kolberg: 'Ignacy Feliks Dobrzyński', Noworocznik (kalendarz) ilustrowany dla Polek, iii (Warsaw, 1863), 299–307
B. Dobrzyński: Ignacy Dobrzyński w zakresie działalności dążącej do postępu muzyki w współczesnej jemu epoce [Dobrzyński's role in the development of contemporary music of his time] (Warsaw, 1893)
A. Poliński: 'Dobrzyński', Wielki encyklopedia powszechna ilustrowana, ed. Sikorski (Warsaw, 1895)
Z. Jachimecki: 'Monbar czyli Flibustierowie, zapomniana opera I.F. Dobrzyńskiego' [Monbar, Dobrzyński's forgotten opera], Pamiętnik teatralnego, i/2–3 (1952), 200–19
K. Baculewski: 'Zawikłane dzieje koncertu fortepianowego Ignacego Feliksa Dobrzyńskiego' [The complicated history of Dobrzyński's Piano Concerto], Ruch muzyczny, xxxiii/5 (1989), 3–7
W. Smialek: Ignacy Feliks Dobrzyński and Musical Life in Nineteenth-Century Poland (New York, 1991)

JIM SAMSON

Dobson, Lynn A. (b Carroll, IA, 8 Aug 1949). American organ builder. A graduate of Wayne State College, Nebraska, he built his first organ in 1971. After working for a few years for Charles Hendrickson in Minnesota, he opened his own workshop in Lake City, Iowa, in 1974. Dobson builds mechanical-action organs of eclectic tonal design, often employing electrically operated stop and combination action in larger organs. Among his significant instruments are those in St Michael's Church, Stillwater, Minnesota (1983), Calvin College, Grand Rapids, Michigan (1989), St Luke's Episcopal Church, Kalamazoo, Michigan (1992), and the First Methodist Churches at Mesa, Arizona (1993) and Akton, Ohio (1997).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Waters: 'An Interview with Lynn Dobson', American Organist, xviii/1 (1984), 42–3
L.A. Dobson: 'Organ Reform Reconsidered', American Organist, xxix/12 (1995), 64–5

BARBARA OWEN

Dobszay, László (b Szeged, 2 Feb 1935). Hungarian musicologist. He studied composition with János Viski, folk music with Kodály and music history with Bence Szabolcsi at the Budapest Music Academy (1947–57), and Hungarian literature at the University (1955–9). He taught music literature and chamber music at the Budapest Music School Organization (1956–68). He joined the musicology department of the Music Academy (1966), holding the chair in church music (from 1990) and became professor in 1992. He was a research fellow of the Folk Music Research Group at the Institute of Musicology of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1966–73), and took the kandidátus degree (1975) with a dissertation on the 'lament' style in Hungarian folk music and music history. He is co-director (with Janka Szendrei) of the Schola Hungarica, president of the Hungarian Sacred Music Society, and series editor of Musicalia Danubiana. He was awarded the Erkel Prize (1984) and the Musica Omnium Prize (1992).

Dobszay is a leading personality in Hungarian musicology. His main areas of research are the Gregorian tradition, folk music, and Hungarian music history up to the end of the 18th century. His parallel activities in folk music and Gregorian research have helped to forge a musical approach and style that rely equally on living tradition and surviving written sources. The adaptation of the methodology used in folk music research is similarly evident in the systematic publication of the complete antiphon repertory for the Divine Office collected from Hungarian sources (Corpus Antiphonalium Officii). He also designed, in collaboration with Szendrei, a new system of classification for the Academy's folk music collection and published comparative analyses between folk music creation and the European written tradition. Alongside his research activities, his educational volumes have become essential literature in Hungarian music teaching.

WRITINGS

'A Kodály-módszer és zenei alapjai' [The Kodály method and its musical basis], Parlando [Budapest], xii/11 (1970), 15–26; Eng. trans. in SMH, xiv (1972), 15–33
'"Dies est leticie"', Acta ethnographica, xx (1971), 387–410
'Der Weg einer sapphischen Melodie in die Volksmusik', SMH, xiii (1971), 203–13
'Comparative Research into an "Old Style" of Hungarian Folk Music', SMH, xv (1973), 15–78 with L. Vargyas and J. Szendrei: 'Balladáink kapcsolatai a népénekkel' [Relationships between Hungarian ballads and folk anthems], Ethnographia, lxxxiv (1973), 430–61 [with tables]
A sirató-stílus népzenénkben és zenetörténetünkben [The 'lament' style in Hungarian folk music and music history] (CSc diss., Hungarian Academy of Sciences, 1975)
'Prozódia és stílus' [Prosody and style], Zeneelmélet, stíluselemzés: a Bárdos Lajos 75. születésnapja alkalmából tartott zenetuományi konferencia anyaga (Budapest, 1977), 125–41 with J. Szendrei: '"Szivárvány havasán": a magyar népzene régi rétegének harmadik stílus-csoportja' [The 'psalmodic style': the third stylistic group of Old Hungarian folksongs], Népzene és zenetörténet, iii, ed. L. Vargyas (Budapest, 1977), 5–101, 257–62
'Der Begriff "Typus" in der ungarischen Volksmusikforschung', SMH, xx (1978), 227–43
'Dallammintàk a verses Szent Imre-zsolozsmához' [The melodic models of the rhymed office of St Emeric], Zenetudományi dolgozatok 1979, 71–84 with J. Szendrei and B. Rajeczky: XVI.–XVII. századi dallamaink a népi emlékezetben [Melodies of the 16th and 17th centuries in the living tradition] (Budapest, 1979) with J. Szendrei and B. Rajeczky: Magyar gregoriánum: cantus gregorianus ex Hungaria (Budapest, 1981)
'The Absorption of Folksong in Bartók's Composition', SMH, xxiv (1982), 303–13
'Egy epikus stílus maradványai népzenénkben' [The remnants of an epic style in Hungarian folk music], Zenetudományi dolgozatok 1982, 39–55
'A magyar graduál-irodalom első emléke' [The first documents of the vernacular Hungarian graduals], Magyar könyvszemle 1982, 100–12
'"Missa mundi"', Magyar zene, xxiii (1982), 21–36
A siratóstílus dallamköre zenetörténetünkben és népzenénkben [The melodic sphere of the lament style in Hungarian music history and folk music] (Budapest, 1983)
A magyar dal könyve [An anthology of Hungarian songs] (Budapest, 1984)
Magyar zenetörténet [Hungarian music history] (Budapest, 1984); Eng. trans., 1993
'Adatok az úgynevezett volta-ritmus történetéhez' [On the history of the 'volta' rhythm], Magyar zene, xxv (1984), 14–22
'A középkori magyar temetés maradványai az erdélyi néphagyományban' [Remnants of the medieval Hungarian folk music tradition in Transylvanian folk tradition], Tanulmányok a népi vallásosság köréből, ed. G. Tüskés (Budapest, 1986), 189–210
'Az Omagyar Mária-siralom zenei vonatkozásai' [The musical aspects of the Old Hungarian 'Planctus Mariae'], Zenetudományi dolgozatok 1988, 9–20
ed., with others: Cantus Planus III: Tihány 1988 [incl. 'Experiences in the Musical Classification of Antiphons', 143–56] with J. Szendrei: A Magyar Népdaltípusok Katalógusa, stílusok szerint rendezve, i: Budapest (Zenetudományi Intézet) [The catalogue of Hungarian folksong types, arranged according to their styles, i: Budapest (Institute of Musicology)] (Budapest, 1989)
A gregorián ének kézikönyve [Handbook of the Gregorian chant] (Budapest, 1993)
ed., with others: Cantus Planus VI: Éger 1993 [incl. 'Muta vocem in evangelium', 573–84]
'Az egyházzene tiszta eszméje' [The pure concept of sacred music], 'A gregorián mozgalom harminc éve Magyarországon' [30 years of the plainchant singing movement in Hungary], Magyar egyházzene, i (1993–4), 12–17, 387–97
A magyar népének [The history of the congregational hymns in Hungary] (Veszprém, 1995)
Az antifona [The antiphon] (Budapest, 1995)
ed.: Cantus Planus VII: Sopron 1995

ZSUZSANNA DOMOKOS

Doçaine (Fr.). See DOLZAINA.

Doche, Joseph Denis (b Paris, 22 Aug 1766; d Soissons, 20 July 1825). French composer. He received his musical education as a choirboy at Meaux Cathedral and became in 1785 maître de chapelle at Coutances Cathedral, Normandy. In 1791 he went to Paris, in 1794 he entered the orchestra of the Théâtre du Vaudeville, playing viola, cello and double bass, and in 1810 became conductor, a post he held until 1823, when he retired to Soissons.

From 1799 onwards Doche wrote new airs for a great number of vaudevilles produced at his theatre, starting with Le maréchal ferrant de la ville d'Anvers (12 May 1799). His collected vaudeville airs were published in 1822, with a supplement in 1823. Doche also wrote some comic operas, a mass, piano pieces and romances of which several collections were published.

Doche's son, Alexandre Pierre Joseph (1799–1849), was conductor at the Vaudeville theatre from 1828 to 1848 and wrote two one-act works for the Opéra-Comique: Le veuf du Malabar (27 May 1846) and Alix (13 March 1847). He died in St Petersburg.

WORKS
(selective list)
all first performed in Paris

Adèle et Didier, 1791
La haine aux femmes (vaudeville, J.N. Bouilly and M.J. Pain), 1800
Point de bruit (opéretta, 2, Tournay), Porte-St-Martin, 25 Oct 1802, B-Bc
Fanchon la vielleuse (vaudeville, 3, Bouilly and Pain), Vaudeville, 19 March 1803, vs (Paris, *c*1803)
Les deux sentinelles (oc, 1, Henrion), Gaîté, 26 Sept 1803
Le poète satirique (vaudeville, 1, Bouilly), Vaudeville, 30 Nov 1803
Lantara (mélodrame, P.Y. Barré and others), Vaudeville, 2 Oct 1809
La belle au bois dormant (féerie, 2, Bouilly and T.M. Dumersan), 1811
Les trois Derville, 1818 (oc); Les deux Edouard (mélodrame), unperf.
La musette du vaudeville, ou Recueil complet des [428] airs de Mr Doche, 1–3vv (Paris, 1822)
Songs and romances in many contemporary collections, incl. Les diners du vaudeville (Paris, 1796–1801) and La lyre d'Anacréon (Paris, 1799–1812)

ALFRED LOEWENBERG/BRUCE CARR

Docke (Ger.). See JACK.

Docker, Robert (b London, 5 June 1918; d Suffolk, 9 May 1992). English arranger, composer and pianist. He studied at the RAM, then, as a pianist, began broadcasting in 1946, latterly in a duo with Edward Rubach. He was perhaps best known on radio as an arranger of folk and popular tunes, film and musical comedy themes for orchestra, sometimes with chorus. He was skilled at finding novel approaches to his arrangements for such BBC radio programmes as 'Melodies for You' and the long-running 'Friday Night is Music Night', and also for his own sextet and trio. Some are so inventive as to straddle the boundary between arrangement and composition, like the London Rhapsody for piano and orchestra and the 'kindergarten fresco' Ourselves When Young.

Among his own compositions are the entertainment pieces for brass band, Cornet Cascade and Jolly Roger, and a suite in the manner of Coates, Scènes du ballet. Legend and Pastiche Variations illustrate his admiration for Rachmaninoff, while the brief Tabarinage shows French influence.

Docker's relatively serious last work Opus 40, posthumously performed, was commissioned for the 40th anniversary of the BBC Concert Orchestra for which he had done so much. His work is discussed in P.L. Scowcroft: British Light Music: a Personal Gallery of Twentieth-Century Composers.

WORKS
(selective list)

Pf and orch: London Rhapsody, 1974; Legend; Pastiche Variations
Orch: Pizzicato Minuet, 1949; Scènes du ballet, suite, 1958; Opus 40, 1992; Commemoration; Fairy Dance Reel; Ourselves When Young, kindergarten fresco; Penny Whistle Tune; Scènes du bal; Tabarinage; West Indian Dance
Many arrs. for orch and orch with chorus
Brass band: Cornet Cascade, 1972; Jolly Roger, 1982
Chbr: Air and Jig, vn, vlc, pf, 1964; many others incl. arrs. for trio and sextet

PHILIP L. SCOWCROFT

Doctrine of musical figures. See FIGURES, THEORY OF MUSICAL.

Doctrine of the Affections. See AFFECTS, THEORY OF THE.

Documentatie in Nederland voor Muziek. See DONEMUS FOUNDATION.

Dodart, Denis (b Paris, 1634; d Paris, 5 Nov 1707). French physician and academician. He trained at the Faculty of Medicine in Paris, where he received his doctorate in 1660 and accepted a chair in pharmacy in 1666. He served as personal physician to the Dowager Princess of Conti and other members of that house before being named medical adviser to Louis XIV. In 1673 he was named a member of the Académie des Sciences and in 1699 was appointed pensionary botanist. He carried out research in a variety of subjects, notably botany and medicine, and published his findings. His principal contribution to music is his 'Mémoire sur les causes de la voix de l'homme, et de ses différens tons', published in the Mémoires de l'Académie royale des sciences (1700; pp.244–93); it was later issued separately (Paris, 1703), and he published 'suppléments' in the Mémoires for 1706 (pp.136–48, 388–410) and 1707 (pp.66–81). Dodart dealt in this essay with the physical characteristics and formation of the human voice and its quality of expression; he intended it to form part of a projected history of music, which he did not complete.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DBF ('Les Dodart'; R. d'Amat); FétisB
B. le Bouvier de Fontenelle: 'Eloge de M. Dodart', Histoire de l'Académie des sciences (1707), 182–92
M.-L. Puech-Milhau: 'An Interview on Canada with La Salle in 1678', Canadian Historical Review, xviii (1937), 164–5
A. Cohen: Music in the French Royal Academy of Sciences (Princeton, NJ, 1981), 20–21

ALBERT COHEN

Dodd (i). English family of bowmakers and instrument sellers.

(1) Edward Dodd (i) (b ?Simonburn, Northumberland, April 1705; d London, 1 April 1810). He is first recorded in city directories as a bowmaker at 11 Paradise Road, Lambeth, from 1802 to 1807; he then moved to the parish of St Bride's, Fleet Street, whose archives record his death at the age of 105. Most 18th-century English bows are or have been attributed to him although it is unlikely that he made bows prior to his arrival in London by the early 1780s. Enough bowsticks exist to show that English bows of the period 1700–1760 were often of very high quality. They can be dated approximately by the presence or lack of the tightening screw and later by the names of familiar instrument makers branded on them, such as Wamsley and T. Smith. About 1760 the bow began to evolve towards its modern form, which it attained rather after 1800 in England (and about 20 years earlier in France). The later transitional bows in England (see BOW, fig.12*c*) were also often stamped with such makers' or dealers' names as Forster, Banks, Betts and Norris & Barnes. Most 18th-century English bows were not marked with any name, and they varied enormously in quality, from the finest Pernambuco sticks mounted with ivory down to 'meatwood' and other cheaper material quite unsuited to bow making. Sandys and Forster (1864) cast doubt on Dodd's having made any, let alone most, of these bows.

Besides his two sons discussed below – (2) John Dodd and (3) Thomas Dodd – he had another son, James Dodd (i) (b ?Wooler, Northumberland, *c*1761; d Lambeth, Surrey, 20 Aug 1833), who worked with him in Lambeth and who was the father of (4) James Dodd (ii) and Edward Dodd (ii).

(2) John (Kew) Dodd (b ?Simonburn, Northumberland, 28 Dec 1752; d Richmond, Surrey, 4 Oct 1839). Son of (1) Edward Dodd (i). He was the greatest English bowmaker before Tubbs. According to Sandys and Forster (chap.26), he was a gunlock fitter and then a money-scale maker before turning to bows; he is said to have lived in Southwark, then in Lambeth near his family, then in Kew for several years after 1800, and finally at Richmond. Morris (1904) added that he was excessively fond of drink and indeed he finished his days in Richmond Workhouse. It seems probable that he began to make bows by the 1780s, a time when in England, at least, the evolution of the modern bow was far from complete. Bow heads then were of two quite different types, the modern bow head being in a sense a compromise between them: the tall, often graceful 'swan' head type, with the hair towards the point considerably separated from the stick, and the more squat 'hammer' head, in use in Italy and France before its introduction in England. As continental makers quite often made the 'swan' as well as the 'hammer', there were probably players everywhere who had a distinct preference one way or the other. It seems clear that John Dodd made both, but whereas hammer-head bows are often branded DODD, the violin makers and dealers who applied their own names usually favoured the swan.

The great improvements in bow construction which occurred in France well before 1800 – the Tourte-pattern head and the metal ferrule where the hair meets the frog – seem to have arrived in England much later, perhaps only after the end of the war in 1815. Even then such makers as Thomas Tubbs and Louis Panormo more often than not omitted the ferrule, probably for the sake of speed and cost rather than at the players' request. The octagonally shaped stick was another novelty from the Continent. The last period of Dodd's work incorporated all the innovations, but many of the earlier sticks have also survived, having been modernized later, their plain ivory mountings either adapted or jettisoned. The choice of Pernambuco wood available to Dodd must have been an enviable one, for many of the sticks have a wonderful feel and appearance. A common 19th-century theory has it that the wood was exported to England not as material for dye-making but in the form of barrels; certainly it is common to find traces of nailholes grazing or even passing straight through a stick.

Players with a standard 20th-century technique usually found Dodd's violin and viola bows to be too short; Tourte and his French followers were considered to have achieved the ideal. Dodd's cello bows, however, are usually found to be the perfect length, and the considerable number of comparatively heavy sticks suit modern players better than many French makes. At all times he was capable of giving perfection of form and finish to his work, signs of haste being visible only where the stick itself was of poor quality and the remuneration presumably inadequate.

(3) Thomas Dodd (b c1764; d London, 8 Feb 1834). Son of (1) Edward Dodd (i). He first appeared in insurance records in 1784 as a 'fiddlestick maker' on Mint Street, Southwark, and appears in city directories as a music seller beginning in 1794, maintaining a music shop at 11 New Street, Covent Garden. From 1809 to 1826 the shop was at 92 St Martin's Lane, closing, most likely, on Thomas's retirement; his son (5) Edward Dodd (iii) opened a second branch at 3 Berners Street in about 1819 which lasted until his death in 1843. Thomas is variously described as a music seller, a violin maker and bowmaker, piano maker and finally as a harp maker. As a dealer he rivalled the shops of Betts and Forster.

Most of the instruments made in Dodd's shop were of excellent quality, modelled after Stradivari and constructed, it is believed, by Bernhard Fendt and Lott senior. Richard Tobin also appears to have worked for Dodd. Dodd himself was an enthusiastic experimenter with varnish, and probably varnished his assistants' work. It is likely that he followed a contemporary trend of branding the bows that he sold with the name of the shop rather than the name of the individual maker. He doubtless sold bows made by his brother (2) John Dodd and James Dodd (i), and perhaps those of other makers as well: Thomas Tubbs is one whose bows often have the Dodd brand. Unfortunately thousands of German bows from the end of the 19th century are also so branded. Many of them are quite good copies, though made of inferior wood; others are almost worthless.

(4) James Dodd (ii) (b Islington, London, 7 May 1792; d Clerkenwell, London, 19 Dec 1865). Grandson of (1) Edward Dodd (i). He worked as a bowmaker with his brother Edward Dodd (ii) (b Lambeth, Surrey, 25 Dec 1797; d Lambeth, Surrey, 20 Aug 1851), who after 1833 appears to have concentrated on violin strings; he himself is known still to have been a bowmaker in 1864. Many if not most of his bows were probably made for the trade, including the firm of Betts. His early work, perhaps influenced by John, was his best, particularly the cello bows. Later he developed certain eccentricities and inaccuracies in his method. He used the brand J. DODD for many of his productions. The brothers both won awards at the London Expositions of 1851 and 1862, James for his bows and Edward for his strings.

(5) Edward Dodd (iii) (b London, 1792; d Stepney, London, 27 April 1843). Son of (3) Thomas Dodd. His primary interest was in keyboard instruments, for which he held three patents for improvements, and it was probably his leadership which led the business into pianos and harps after the death of his older brother, Thomas, 1818. He does not appear to have experienced great success at these endeavours, that side of the business going into bankruptcy in February 1838. He did, however, command great respect in the most prominent musical circles, and after his untimely death artists such as Sivori and Dreyschock performed in a concert to raise money for the destitute family.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

VannesE

W. Sandys and S.A. Forster: The History of the Violin (London, 1864)

W.M. Morris: British Violin-Makers, Classical and Modern (London, 1904, 2/1920)

J. Roda: Bows for Musical Instruments of the Violin Family (Chicago, 1959)

W.C. Retford: Bows and BowMakers (London, 1964)

CHARLES BEARE/PHILIP J. KASS

Dodd (ii). Australian firm of organ builders. Josiah Eustace Dodd (b Melbourne, 16 Aug 1856; d Adelaide, 30 Jan 1952) was apprenticed to George Fincham of Melbourne in 1869. In 1881 Fincham established a new firm in Adelaide in partnership with one of his former apprentices, Arthur Hobday. Already considered one of the best tradesmen in Australia, Dodd was appointed co-manager of this venture, which traded as Fincham & Hobday (see FINCHAM & SONS). He became sole manager following Hobday's return to Melbourne in 1888 and in 1894 he purchased the business for £1200. Dodd established an office in Perth in 1903. It was managed by his elder son, Ebenezer, and in the same year it began reconstruction and enlargement of the notable organ in St George's Cathedral, Perth. Agencies were also established at Auckland (1908) and Melbourne (1920). At times Dodd had agents in London and Sydney. The firm had been repairing pianos and reed organs from about 1896 and in 1918 it began installing Wurlitzer theatre organs. This work was supervised by Dodd's younger son, Eustace, who had been apprenticed to his father. Although originally part of the firm, he had separated from it entirely by 1930. The organ installed in 1919 in the Majestic Theatre, Melbourne, was recorded as being exceptionally successful.

Contracts became difficult to obtain throughout the Depression and in 1935 three of Dodd's employees, Gordon and Sydney Gunn and William A. Starling, founded their own enterprise, Gunstar Organ Works. Their aim was to build cheaper organs by use of extension techniques. In 1910 Dodd had employed some 20 expert tradesmen but after the departure of the Gunn brothers and Starling, the firm appears to have consisted principally of Dodd himself and his tuner William (Bill) Binding. Materials and contracts were in short supply after the outbreak of World War II. An astute businessman, Dodd overcame these problems by amalgamating with the Gunstar firm in July 1942. He was the major partner, and the firm traded as J.E. Dodd & Sons, Gunstar Organ Works. The original Dodd company constructed at least 80 new organs and undertook many rebuilding contracts. Vestiges of the firm continued until 1980, when, because of the ill health of Sydney Gunn, it was taken over by George Stephens.

Representative examples of the firm's work in South Australia include organs built for St Bartholomew's Anglican Church, Norwood (1896), Clayton Congregational Church, Norwood (1897), St Ignatius, Norwood (1897), St Peter's, Glenelg (by Fincham & Hobday, 1881, enlarged by Dodd, 1897–9), Kent Town Methodist Church (1898), Epworth Uniting Church, Parkside (*c*1912), the Baptist Church, Parkside (1912), Manthorpe Memorial Uniting Church, Unley (1922), St Francis Xavier's Cathedral, Adelaide (1926), Our Lady of Victories, Glenelg (1927) and the reconstruction in 1904 of a Bachmann organ imported by Reimann, in Bethlehem Lutheran Church, Adelaide. Other notable organs were built for St John's Cathedral, Napier, New Zealand (1910), the cathedral of the Immaculate Conception (now St Mary's Cathedral), Perth (1910), Paterson Street Methodist Church, Launceston (1911), and Munro Memorial Presbyterian Church, Quirindi, New South Wales (1921).

Dodd was an energetic and innovative builder and promoter and he did not favour the importation of organs. Most of the early Dodd organs had mechanical action but pneumatic action was more frequently used after 1909. Dodd's designs differed markedly from those of his main competitor, Fincham, and he preferred to purchase his pipes from Michell or Alfred Palmer & Sons of London. His consoles were made to his specifications in Germany by Laukhuff of Weikersheim.

Instruments built by the Dodd company were usually of a very high quality and those few that survive relatively intact are still held in high repute. The original organ built by Dodd in 1901 for the Elder Conservatorium Hall, Adelaide, was played by Edwin H. Lemare when on tour in Australia in 1903 and evoked the statement that it was superior to any American instrument. Considering Lemare's love of organs by Ernest M. Skinner and the quality of these instruments, this was very high praise. The designs of Dodd and Skinner seem to have been similar in that they preferred a preponderance of quasi-orchestral colours and their tonal schemes were colourful and exciting, being inspired by Romantic symphonic organ ideals and the use of the organ to perform arrangements of orchestral compositions. Additionally, both builders had a profound interest in the use of the latest technological and tonal developments in their instruments. Dodd's proposals for carillon and harp stops for the Adelaide Town Hall organ suggest that he kept in touch with foreign trends and developments. The best example of Dodd's work was almost certainly the three-manual, 38-stop organ built in 1912 for St Carthage's Cathedral, Lismore, New South Wales.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H.T. Burgess, ed.: The Cyclopedia of South Australia: an Historical and Commercial Review (Adelaide, 1907–9)

E.N. Matthews: Colonial Organs and Organ Building (Melbourne, 1969)

B.A. Naylor: Gazetteer of South Australian Pipe Organs (Melbourne, 1974, rev. 2/1996 by D. Shield)

B. Naylor: 'Dodd, Josiah Eustace (1856–1952)', Australian Dictionary of Biography, viii (Melbourne, 1981)

B.A. Naylor: 'J.E. Dodd: a Romantic Organ Builder', Organ Historical Trust of Australia News, v/3 (1981), 4–20

G.D. Rushworth: Historic Organs of New South Wales: the Instruments, their Makers and Players 1791–1940 (Sydney, 1988)

M. Atherton: Australian Made, Australian Played (Sydney, 1990)

T.M. McEwan: The Australian Organ and its Music (diss., Griffith U., Brisbane, 1998)

W.D. JORDAN

Dodds, Baby [Warren] (b New Orleans, 24 Dec 1898; d Chicago, 14 Feb 1959). American jazz drummer, brother of JOHNNY DODDS. He played in New Orleans with Bunk Johnson, Papa Celestin and others before working in Fate Marable's riverboat band (1918–21), where he acquired a commanding reputation among New Orleans black American jazz musicians. In 1922 he was invited to San Francisco to join King Oliver, with whom he made his first recordings the following year in Chicago. He remained in Chicago for the next two decades, playing freelance on historic sessions with Jelly Roll Morton (Billy Goat Stomp, 1927, Vic.) and Louis Armstrong (Wild Man Blues, 1927, OK) and in small groups led by his brother. With the revival of New Orleans jazz around 1940, Dodds was much sought after for small traditional groups led by Jimmie Noone, Johnson, Sidney Bechet and others. He played regularly for radio broadcasts in 1947 and toured Europe with Mezz Mezzrow in 1948. In the final decade of his life he was largely incapacitated by ill-health, but he continued playing until 1957.

Dodds was the leading jazz drummer in the New Orleans style, and his equipment and technique became standard. Many younger drummers learnt directly from him in Chicago, among them Dave Tough and Gene Krupa, to whom he imparted his secrets of drum accompaniment and tuning. Dodds's basic style derived from the short roll or ruff, played with a drive and precision that set him apart from his contemporaries. By varying his patterns throughout a performance he developed some of the earliest idiomatic accompaniments to improvised jazz ensembles and solos. Late in life he set down his knowledge of jazz drumming in a remarkable series of recorded solos with explanatory commentary, which serve as unique documents of New Orleans drumming style.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

N. Hentoff: 'Warren "Baby" Dodds', The Jazz Makers: Essays on the Greats of Jazz, ed. N. Shapiro and N. Hentoff (New York, 1957/R), 18–47

W. Dodds and L. Gara: The Baby Dodds Story (Los Angeles, 1959, rev. 2/1992)

T.D. Brown: A History and Analysis of Jazz Drumming to 1942 (diss., U. of Michigan, 1976)

W. Dodds: '"Oh, Play that Thing"', Selections from the Gutter: Jazz Portraits from 'The Jazz Record', ed. A. Hodes and C. Hansen (Berkeley, 1977), 98–103

Oral history material in US-NORtu

J. BRADFORD ROBINSON

Dodds, Johnny [John] (b New Orleans, 12 April 1892; d Chicago, 8 Aug 1940). American jazz clarinettist, brother of BABY DODDS. He may have played the guitar before taking up the clarinet at the relatively late age of 17; apart from some lessons from Lorenzo Tio jr, he was largely self-taught. Around 1912 he joined Kid Ory's band in New Orleans, where he played intermittently for the next six years. After touring in Fate Marable's riverboat band and with a road show (both 1918–19) he returned briefly to Ory's group in 1919, then left New Orleans permanently in January 1920 to join King Oliver in Chicago.

During his years with Oliver he travelled to the West Coast, and, as a member of the Creole Jazz Band, took part in Oliver's historic recordings in Richmond, Indiana, and Chicago in 1923. A year later, also in Chicago, he assumed the leadership of Freddie Keppard's house band at Kelly's Stables. He directed this band for six years, during which time he also participated in studio recordings with Louis Armstrong (the Hot Fives and Hot Sevens; S.O.L. Blues, 1927, Col.), with Jelly Roll Morton (Wild Man Blues, 1927, Bb) and with his brother in small groups. With the decline of the New Orleans style in the 1930s, Dodds continued to lead a band part-time at various locations in Chicago, often in conjunction with his brother.

Dodds was a leading clarinettist in the New Orleans style, which to many he represented in its purest form. Unlike his contemporaries Jimmie Noone and Sidney Bechet, he had an uneven command of technique, and his solos were sometimes marred by faulty execution; nevertheless his playing in ensembles was exemplary, as is attested by the several hundred small-band recordings he made with some of the leading jazz musicians of the day. Dodds's best work, played with a highly expressive vibrato centred slightly beneath true pitch, is permeated by a deep feeling for the blues, of which he was an outstanding early interpreter.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Hodeir: Hommes et problèmes du jazz, suivi de La religion du jazz (Paris, 1954; Eng. trans., rev., 1956/R as Jazz: its Evolution and Essence)
G.E. Lambert: Johnny Dodds (New York, 1962); repr. in Kings of Jazz, ed. S. Green (New York, 1978), 109–39
G. Schuller: Early Jazz (New York, 1968)
H. Lyttelton: The Best of Jazz, i: Basin Street to Harlem: Jazz Masters and Masterpieces, 1917–1930 (London, 1978)
G. Anderson: 'Johnny Dodds in New Orleans', American Music, viii (1990), 405–40

J. BRADFORD ROBINSON

Dodecaphony. A synonym for 'atonality' or, in some cases, '12-note serial composition'. See ATONALITY; SERIALISM; and TWELVE-NOTE COMPOSITION.

Dodge, Charles (Malcolm) (b Ames, IA, 5 June 1942). American composer. He studied composition at the University of Iowa (BA 1964) and Columbia University (MA 1966, DMA 1970), where his principal teachers were Richard Hervig, Chou Wen-chung and Luening; he also studied computer music at Princeton University with Godfrey Winham (1969–70). In 1993 he became visiting professor of music at Dartmouth College. He carried out research in acoustics and computer music at the Bell Telephone Laboratories (1971–7), the University of California, San Diego (1974), and MIT (1979). His numerous awards and honours include the Bearns Prize (1964, 1967), an American Academy of Arts and Letters Award (1975) and Guggenheim Fellowships (1972, 1975). He has received commissions from such bodies as the Fromm Foundation, the Koussevitzky Foundation, the Arts Council of Great Britain, Swedish National Radio, Groupe de Musique Experimentale de Bourges and the Los Angeles PO. He has been president (1971–5) and chairman of the board of directors (1975–80) of the ACA, president (1979–82) of the AMC, and has held offices in numerous other professional organizations devoted to the work of 20th-century composers.

Dodge became active as a composer of computer music in the mid-1960s, seeking to extend the compositional technique and expressive range of this medium. Earth's Magnetic Field (1970) is a musical rendition of the effect of solar radiation on the magnetic field surrounding the earth. Speech Songs (1972) was his first work for synthesized voice; using sophisticated computer techniques he created a variety of vocal sounds which lend humour and irony to the text (by Mark Strand). In Cascando (1978), a setting of the radio play by Samuel Beckett, the voice of a live performer, the Opener, 'controls' two computer-synthesized audio channels, Voice and Music. Dodge's works from the early 1980s focus on the confrontation between new, often dehumanizing technology and the musical expression of human thought and feeling: in Any Resemblance is Purely Coincidental (1980), an operatic voice (originally that of Caruso) searches in vain among various computer sounds for a fitting accompaniment. In 1985 Dodge published Computer Music: Synthesis, Composition, and Performance (with T.A. Jerse; second edition, 1996).

WORKS

INSTRUMENTAL

Composition in Five Parts, vc, pf, 1964; Solos and Combinations, fl, ob, cl, 1964; Folia, fl, eng hn, b cl, tuba, vn, va, pf, 2 perc, 1965; Rota, orch, 1966; Distribution, Redistribution, cl, vn, pf, 1982; The One and the Other, chbr orch, 1993

ELECTRO-ACOUSTIC

Tape and inst: Extensions, tpt, tape, 1973; Palinode, orch, tape, 1976; Any Resemblance is Purely Coincidental, pf, tape, 1980; Va Elegy, va, cptr-synth tape, 1987; Cl Elegy, b cl, cptr-synth tape, 1988; Wedding Music, vn, cptr-synth tape, 1988; Concert Etudes, vn, cptr-synth tape, 1994; 'That Which I Should Have Done ...', org, tape, 1996
Tape and vv: Cascando (radio drama, S. Beckett), actor, tape, 1978; The Waves (V. Woolf), female v, tape, 1984; Roundelay (Beckett), SATB, cptr-synth tape, 1985; A Postcard from the Volcano (W. Stevens), S, cptr-synth tape, 1986; Hoy (In His Memory), v, cptr-synth tape, 1989; The Village Child (puppet theatre), rec. v, rec. vn, cptr-synth tape, 1992
Cptr: Changes, 1969–70; Earth's Magnetic Field, 1970
Cptr-synth tape: Profile, 1985; Song Without Words, 1987; A Fractal for Wiley Hitchcock, 1987; The Voice of Binky, 1989; Imaginary Narrative, 1989; In a Quandry, 1995; Just Harmonies – for Christian Wolff, 1996
Cptr-synth vv: Speech Songs (M. Strand), 1972; The Story of Our Lives (Strand), 1974; In Celebration (Strand), 1975; Han motte henne i parken (radio drama, R. Kostelanetz, trans. S. Hanson), 1981; He Met her in the Park (Kostelanetz), 1983

Principal publishers: ACA, Cape North Alliance

BIBLIOGRAPHY

T. Johnson: 'New Music', High Fidelity/Musical America, xxv/10 (1975), 10–11, 40
P. Griffiths: A Guide to Electronic Music (London, 1979), 40ff, 100
C. Gagne and T. Caras: 'Charles Dodge', Soundpieces: Interviews with American Composers (Metuchen, NJ, 1982), 141–52
B. Schrader: Introduction to Electro-Acoustic Music (Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1982)

JEROME ROSEN

Dodgson, Stephen (Cuthbert Vivian) (b London, 17 March 1924). English composer. He studied at the RCM (1947–9), where his teachers included Hadley and R.O. Morris. From 1957 to 1982 he taught theory and composition at the college, and in 1981 was made a FRCM. He has broadcast for the BBC regularly since 1957, and between 1966 and 1975 composed music for many radio dramas. In 1986 he was appointed chairman of the National Youth Wind Orchestra of Great Britain, for which he has composed several works including Bandwagon (1992).

His musical idiom is broadly tonal and traditional in design but is imbued with expressive astringency and rich chromaticism; his music is distinguished by a lyrical gift, lucidity of texture and a subtle instrumental palette. Many works show a characteristic balance of drama, poetry and delightful dance-like moods, evident in the seven orchestral Essays and concertos. Though not a guitarist, his substantial corpus of works for this instrument has won him worldwide recognition and popularity; he is one of the few contemporary composers to write with understanding also for the harpsichord, clavichord and harp. Equally idiomatic, though less well known, are his six virtuoso piano sonatas, while vocal works such as the Last of the Leaves display great sensitivity in word-setting.

WORKS
(selective list)

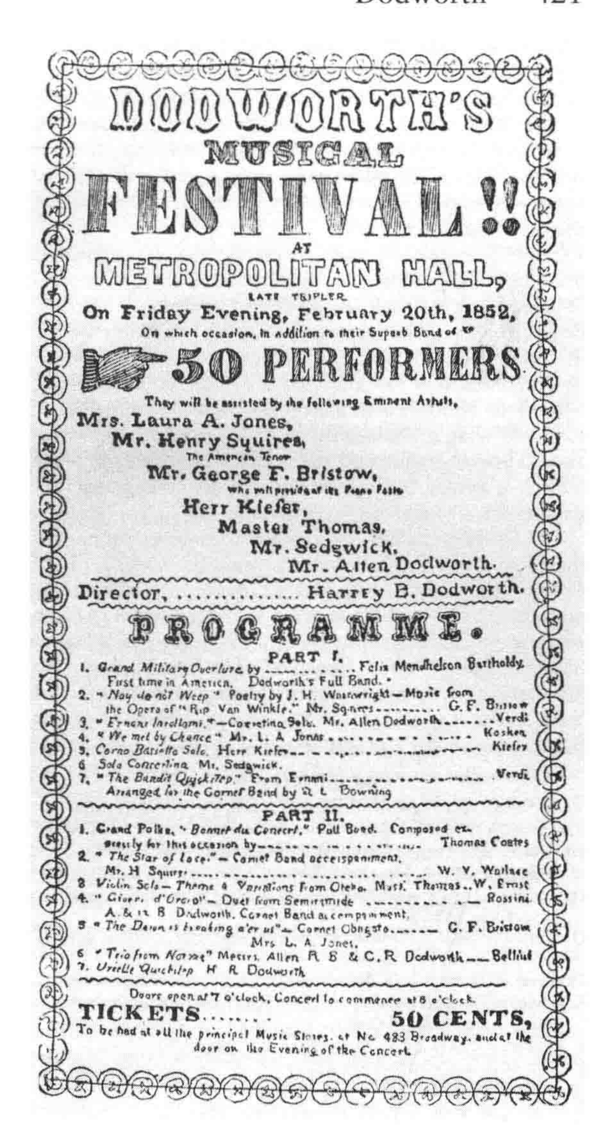
Vocal: 4 Poems of John Clare, T, gui, 1961; The Innocents, SSATBB, 1975; Last of the Leaves, B, cl, str, 1975; Margaret Catchpole – Two Worlds Apart (music drama, 4, R. Fletcher, after R. Cobbald), 1979; Missa brevis, 1991; other works, incl. unpubd song cycles and unacc. choral, 1961–90

Orch: Gui Conc. no.1, 1956; Conc. da camera no.4, pf, str, 1971; Gui Conc. no.2, 1972; Ode, hp, str, 1980; Essays (1–7), orch, 1980–92; Cl Conc., 1983; Cl Conc. 'Capriccio concertante', cl, wind orch, 1984; Hpd Conc. 'Arlington concertante', hpd, ww qnt, brass qnt, perc, db, 1987; Sinfonia 'Troi-Nova', chbr orch, 1989; Duo Conc., vn, gui, str, 1990; Conc., fl, str, 1991; Bandwagon, wind orch, 1992; Divertimento, chbr orch, 1996

Chbr and solo inst: 6 Inventions, sets 1–5, hpd, 1955–93; Sonata no.1, pf, 1959; Partita no.1, gui, 1963; 2 Carillons, 2 hpd, 1967; Duo concertante, gui, hpd, 1968; Sonata no.2, pf, 1975; Partita no.2, gui, 1976; Follow the Star, 3 gui, 1979; Partita no.3, gui, 1981; 5 Occasional Pieces, vn, pf, 1982; Sonata no.3, pf, 1983; Orion, cl qt, brass qnt, 1984; Str Qt no.1, 1985; Fantasia, 6 brass, 1987; Str Qt no.2, 1987; Sonata no.4, pf, 1988; Partita no.4, gui, 1989; Str Qt no.3, 1989; Pastourelle, 2 gui, 1992; Sonata no.5, pf, 1992; Qt, ob, str trio, 1993; Str Qt no.4, 1993; The Midst of Life, gui, 1994; Sonata no.6, pf, 1994; Partita, 10 wind, 1994; The New Terpsichore, bks 1–2, hpd, 1995–6; Str Sextet, 1996; Excursions, brass qnt, 1997; studies, educational pieces for gui, 1965–84

Principal publishers: Associated Board, Berben, Chester, Max Eschig, Moeck, OUP, Ricordi, Studio Music



BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Kerr: 'Stephen Dodgson's Music', Music Teacher, lviii (1979), 13–15 [incl. list of pubd works for the young]

S. Dodgson: 'Writing for the Guitar: Comments of a Non-Guitarist Composer', Guitar Technique, H. Quine (Oxford, 1990)

N. Culf: 'The Guitar Works of Stephen Dodgson', Classical Guitar, viii/12 (1989–90), 11–14; ix (1990–91), no.1, pp.35–40; no.2, pp.35–7; no.3, pp.35–8; no.4, pp.35–7; no.5, pp.35–7

MALCOLM MILLER

Playbill for Dodworth's Musical Festival at Metropolitan Hall, New York, 20 February 1852, with Harvey B. Dodworth as director and Allen Dodworth and the young Theodore Thomas among the soloists: from Thomas's 'A Musical Autobiography' (Chicago, 1905)

Dodworth. Anglo-American family of musicians and composers. They played a prominent role in the development of bands and band music in the 19th century. Thomas Dodworth (b Sheffield, England, 1790; d New York, 1876) arrived in New York in June 1828 with his eldest son, Allen T. Dodworth (b Sheffield, 9 Dec 1817; d Pasadena, CA, 12 Feb 1896); two other sons, Harvey B. Dodworth (b Sheffield, 16 Nov 1822; d West Hoboken, NJ, 24 Jan 1891) and Charles R. Dodworth (b Scotland, 1826; d Philadelphia, 9 May 1894), arrived shortly afterwards. A fourth son, Thomas J. Dodworth (b New York, 13 Dec 1830; d New York, 7 May 1896), was the only one to be born in the USA.

Thomas Dodworth senior played the trombone and Allen was a gifted piccolo player; on their arrival, they joined the Independent Band of New York. In 1834 the band changed its instrumentation, becoming one of the first all-brass bands in the USA, and took the new name of City Band of New York. This organization broke up shortly thereafter, and about half the members formed a new group, the National Brass Band, under Allen Dodworth. In 1836 this became the Dodworth Band. Harvey assumed leadership of the band in the late 1830s, relinquishing it in 1890 to his son Olean Dodworth (b 1843; d New York, 13 April 1916). Harvey also developed the Dodworth Music Store and Publishing Co. Thomas J. Dodworth joined the band in the early 1850s and remained with it throughout his life. Charles was a member only until the late 1850s, after which he moved to Philadelphia and took up a separate career as a performer and teacher. Allen became increasingly active as a teacher of dancing and eventually devoted all his time to his studio, which became a centre for learning the latest ballroom dances. He also wrote a series of articles called 'The Formation of Bands' for the music journal Message Bird (1849), a brass band method – Dodworth's Brass Band School (1853/R) – eight booklets of instructions for various dances, and Dancing and its Relation to Education and Social Life (1885).

The Dodworth Band was usually under contract to a particular military regiment. Its longest was with the 71st National Guard Regiment of New York, and both Harvey and the younger Thomas served with that regiment during the Civil War.

Many changes and innovations in the manufacture of brass instruments were brought about by the Dodworths or as a result of their influence. As early as 1838 they began to use valved instruments constructed so that the bell was directed over the player's shoulder (a shape designed to throw the sound back to the troops marching behind the band). These instruments also had a mellower tone, allowing a more sensitive style of concert performance. Thomas senior and Allen also developed the 'ebor corno', a valved brass instrument with a range encompassing the alto and tenor registers.

The Dodworths were among the founding members of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Society (April 1842), and Allen was elected treasurer. When the orchestra gave its first concert in December 1842 the personnel included Thomas (trombone), Allen and Harvey (violins), and Charles (piccolo). The family was also involved in the formation of the Musical Fund Society of New York.

See also BAND (i), §III, 4 and §IV, 4

BIBLIOGRAPHY

'Band Music then and now: Reminiscences of the Veteran Leader, Harvey B. Dodworth', American Art Journal, xxxiii (1880), 177–8
Obituaries of Harvey B. Dodworth: American Art Journal, lvi (1890–91), 241–2; New York Times (25 Jan 1891)
H. Krehbiel: The Philharmonic Society of New York: a Memorial (New York, 1892/R)
Obituaries of Allen T. Dodworth: Musical Age, xiii/2 (1896), 8; New York Times (14 Feb 1896)
Obituary of Thomas J. Dodworth: New York Times (9 May 1896)
R. O'Neill: 'The Dodworth Family and Ballroom Dancing in New York', Dance Index, ii (1943), 44–56; repr. in Chronicles of the American Dance, ed. P. Magriel (New York, 1948)
R.E. Eliason: Brass Instrument Key and Valve Mechanisms made in America before 1875 with Special Emphasis to the D.S. Pillsbury Collection in Greenfield Village, Dearborn, Michigan (diss., U. of Missouri, 1968)

FRANK J. CIPOLLA

Doe, Paul (Maurice) (b Norwich, 8 Sept 1931). English musicologist. He studied music at Worcester College, Oxford, with Frank L. Harrison and Rubbra (BA 1952), and from 1954 to 1956 he was a research student at Oxford, studying Tudor church music. In 1956 he was appointed assistant lecturer at the University of Aberdeen, and became a lecturer at Birmingham University in 1959. He was appointed professor of music at Exeter University in 1971 and held this position until his retirement in 1996. Having worked on the committee of Early English Church Music since 1970, he served as general editor (1972–80) and chairman (1980–95); in 1975 he also joined the editorial committee of Musica Britannica of which he became general editor in 1988.

Doe's musical activities always centred on practical performance. From 1949 to 1951 he was the leader of the National Youth Orchestra; at Oxford, and later at Birmingham, he led the university orchestra. His writings on and editions of Tudor church music are marked by a careful attention to detail and a fine historical perspective; his edition of Tudor magnificat settings makes available in a practical form seven of the 50-odd extant examples. He has also published editions of sacred music by Parsons and Tye, as well as two volumes of consort music. From 1965 to 1977 he edited the Register of Theses in Music (printed in RMARC, iii onwards).

WRITINGS

'Latin Polyphony under Henry VIII', PRMA, xcv (1968–9), 81–96
Tallis (London, 1968, 2/1976)
'Tallis's "Spem in alium" and the Elizabethan Respond-Motet', ML, li (1970), 1–14
'Another View of musica ficta in Tudor Music', PRMA, xcviii (1971–2), 113–22
The Craft of Music (Exeter, 1973) [inaugural lecture]

EDITIONS

Early Tudor Magnificats I, EECM, iv (1964)
Elizabethan Consort Music, i–ii, MB, xlix–xlv (1979–88)
Christopher Tye: Masses, EECM, xxiv (1980)
Robert Parsons: Latin Sacred Music, EECM, xl (1994)

DAVID SCOTT/ROSEMARY WILLIAMSON

Doef [Doff] (Dut.). See under ORGAN STOP.

Doerr, Ludwig (b Speyer, 12 July 1925). German organist. He studied music from 1945 to 1949, first at the Kirchenmusikalisches Institut in Speyer, then at the Staatliche Hochschule für Musik in Cologne under Joseph Zimmermann (organ) and Heinrich Lehmacher (composition), and finally at the Staatliche Hochschule in Stuttgart with Anton Nowakowski (organ) and Karl Marx (composition). In 1952 he became cathedral organist in Speyer and was also diocesan consultant for organs and church bells. He became a lecturer at the Kirchenmusikalisches Institut in Speyer in 1949, and its director in 1969. From 1953 to 1969 he also lectured at the Pädagogische Hochschule in Landau, and in 1964 he taught organ and Gregorian studies at the Hochschule für Musik in Saarbrücken. He was professor and director of an organ class at the Staatliche Hochschule in Freiburg from 1970 to 1990 and became cathedral organist there in 1972. Doerr has toured many European countries, has made recordings, and served on the juries of international competitions. He has given interpretation classes on Reger and Bach, on whose music his repertory is centred, along with French Baroque music and César Franck. His compositions, like his colourful and powerful interpretations, have met with much acclaim.

GERHARD WIENKE

Doflein, Erich (b Munich, 7 Aug 1900; d Freiburg, 29 Oct 1977). German music teacher and musicologist. From 1919 he studied music under M. Auerbach, E. Praetorius and H. Kaminski, musicology under Max Schneider, art history under W. Pinder and philosophy under R. Hönigswald in Breslau (now Wrocław) and Munich. He took the doctorate at Breslau in 1924 with a dissertation on form and style in music. Subsequently he studied under Gurlitt and Erpf at Freiburg, where in 1928, with E. Keller and E. Katz, he founded an institute for private music teachers which remained in existence until 1937 as the town's music school. From 1941 to 1944 he was head of department at the regional music school in Breslau. After military service and captivity he was appointed professor, department head and acting director of the newly founded Hochschule für Musik, Freiburg (1947), where he remained until his retirement (1965). He was a co-founder (1948) and president (1956–60) of the Institut für Neue Musik und Musikerziehung, Bayreuth (later in Darmstadt).

Doflein's work is characterized by an active participation, based on sober critical reflection, in the contemporary problems of music since about 1925. Article titles such as 'Fragmente zur Zeitdeutung' (1925) or 'Musik heute: Entwurf einer Diagnose' (1959) are typical. Doflein tirelessly propagated a form of progressive musical education that would combine avant-garde music, older music suited to teaching purposes and musicological research under the name of music-educational theory. One result of this concept is the Geigenschulwerk (Mainz, 1931, 2/1951; Eng. trans., 1957), compiled by Doflein with his wife Elma (née Axtfeld), which contains more than 800 pieces from historical sources and for which he also gained the collaboration of such composers as Hindemith, Orff and Genzmer. Similar aims were pursued in his numerous editions of music for two violins, string trios, violin and piano, recorders, flute and piano.

WRITINGS

Über Gestalt und Stil in der Musik (diss., U. of Breslau, 1924; extracts, Breslau, 1924)
'Fragmente zur Zeitdeutung', Melos, v (1925–6), 64–70
'Über Grundlagen der Beurteilung gegenwärtiger Musik', Melos, vii (1928), 287–92
'Zur Lage der Musiklehre', Melos, xi (1932), 266–71
'Klassische Klaviermusik als Hausmusik', Zeitschrift für Hausmusik, iii (1934), 101–9
'Bartók und die Musikpädagogik', Béla Bartók, ed. H. Lindlar (Bonn, 1953), 32–8
'Die sechs Streichquartette von Paul Hindemith', SMz, xcv (1955), 413–21
'Gegenwartsfragen der Musikpädagogik und Idee eines Schulwerks', Musik im Unterricht, xlvii (1956), 316–18
'Über Bartóks letzte Lebensjahre: Emigration und Charakter – Schicksal und Spätwerk', Musikerkenntnis und Musikerziehung: Dankesgaben für Hans Mersmann, ed. W. Wiora (Kassel, 1958), 30–43
'Musik heute: Entwurf einer Diagnose', Prisma der gegenwärtigen Musik, ed. J.E. Berendt and J. Uhde (Hamburg, 1959), 40–100
'Vielfalt und Zwiespalt in unserer Musik', Musikalische Zeitfragen, ix (1960), 9–44
'Historismus und Historisierung in der Musik', Festschrift für Walter Wiora, ed. L. Finscher and C.-H. Mahling (Kassel, 1967), 48–56
'Historismus in der Musik', Die Ausbreitung des Historismus über die Musik, ed. W. Wiora (Regensburg, 1969), 9–39
'Schönbergs Opus 16, Nr.3: der Mythos der Klangfarbenmelodie', Melos, xxxvi (1969), 203–5
'Das Violinduo in der Musikgeschichte', ÖMz, xxvii (1972), 332–42
'Violinsonaten aus Paris aus den Jahren 1770–1785', Violinspiel und Violinmusik: Graz 1972, 20–26
'Das Geigenschulwerk: Idee, Enstehung, Entwicklung', Festschrift für einen Verleger: Ludwig Strecker, ed. C. Dahlhaus (Mainz, 1973), 89–110
'Zu Adornos Schriften über Musikpädagogik: Kritisches zu Kritischem, Berichte und Aphorismen', Zeitschrift für Musiktheorie, iv/1 (1973), 16–27
Many articles on new music and music teaching in Melos, Musik im Unterricht, Zeitschrift für Hausmusik and Das Musikleben

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L.U. Abraham, ed.: Erich Doflein: Festschrift (Mainz, 1972) [incl. H. Wohlfahrt: 'Bibliographie Erich Doflein 1924 bis 1970', 121–31]

HANS HEINRICH EGGEBRECHT

Dogleg jack. A form of jack used on two- or three-manual harpsichords that do not employ a manual coupler. The dogleg jack is not bent, as its English name implies; but its lower third is partly cut away to form a step. This step rests on the end of an upper manual key while the uncut portion of the jack reaches down to rest on the corresponding key of the lower manual (see HARPSICHORD, fig.17). Consequently, when the dogleg register is engaged, it automatically sounds from both manuals. (This makes it impossible to play a PIÈCE CROISÉE unless the upper manual is provided with a second independent unison register of its own in addition to the dogleg.) Although most harpsichords having dogleg jacks (in particular those of the 18th-century English and Netherlandish schools), do not have sliding keyboards, German harpsichords occasionally often employ a short dogleg jack and a sliding lower manual whose keys are fitted with small padded blocks. When the lower manual is pushed inwards, these blocks are positioned beneath the uncut portion of the jacks, permitting them to be activated from the lower manual as well as from the upper. In this way, the upper manual jacks are coupled to the lower manual without actual coupling of the manuals themselves. When the lower manual is pulled outward, the blocks pass in front of the uncut portion of the jacks and the jacks are activated only by the upper manual, thus making possible the performance of pièces croisées.

EDWIN M. RIPIN

Dognazzi, Francesco (b Mantua, ? bap. 17 March 1585; d after Oct 1643). Italian composer and tenor. He served the Gonzaga household in Mantua in the first four decades of the 17th century, for over two decades as maestro di cappella. He was also associated with S Barbara (the ducal church), where he is recorded as a singer in May 1600 and between January and May 1611, and as a canon from 1623. Dognazzi was also employed at a Servite church in 1607 and probably in the chapel of Cardinal Ferdinando Gonzaga in Rome between June and December 1612: a tenor called Don Francesco was dismissed by Duke Francesco in June 1612 and taken on by the duke's brother. In 1616 Ferdinando awarded Dognazzi an annual pension of 100 scudi and, following the death of Santi Orlandi in July 1619, appointed Dognazzi his maestro di cappella, a post previously held by Monteverdi (a few months later Dognazzi tried, unsuccessfully, to persuade Monteverdi to reassume the position). Dognazzi's vocal talents brought him recognition and invitations to sing in festivities of the Accademia dello Spirito Santo in Ferrara in 1624 and under Alessandro Grandi (i) in religious celebrations in Bergamo in 1628. During the war over the Mantuan succession Dognazzi was apparently one of the musicians sent to the imperial court at Vienna: a letter of January 1631 mentions 'Don Francesco nostro' among the musicians there. By the following year he was back in Mantua; he is named on the extant court rosters of 1632 and 1637, and in connection with music he provided for feast days at S Barbara. He retired in 1641 but was still composing in October 1643.

Dognazzi's surviving music amounts to five sacred songs and two printed collections of secular songs. The first collection, Il primo libro de varii concenti, embraces the latest expressive and structural principles: increasingly affective text declamation, rhythmic contrast, chromaticism, strophic variation (on the Ruggiero and romanesca), dialogue, sinfonias and walking bass. The second book, Musiche varie da camera, whose contents were compiled by a court official, is a retrospective volume of five-voice continuo madrigals.

WORKS

Il primo libro de varii concenti, 1, 2vv, chit/other inst (Venice, 1614); facs. in ISS, v (1986)
Musiche varie da camera, 5vv, bc (Venice, 1643)
Arie, 1–3vv, chit/other inst, lost, listed in music inventory of J.-B. Dandeleu (d Brussels, 1667)
Sacred monody, lv, chit/other inst, 1613[3]
4 motets, 1–4vv, bc (org), 1618[4]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FortuneISS

J. Racek: Stilprobleme der italienischen Monodie (Prague, 1965)

P.M. Tagmann: 'La cappella dei maestri cantori della basilica palatina di Santa Barbara a Mantova (1565–1630)', Civiltà mantovana, iv (1970), 376–400

J. Roche: North Italian Church Music in the Age of Monteverdi (Oxford, 1984)

G. Tomlinson: Introduction to Italian Secular Song 1606–1636 (New York, 1986)

S. Parisi: Ducal Patronage of Music in Mantua, 1587–1627: an Archival Study (diss., U. of Illinois, 1989)

S. Parisi: 'Musicians at the Court of Mantua during Monteverdi's Time: Evidence from the Payrolls', Musicologia Humana: Studies in Honor of Warren and Ursula Kirkendale, ed. S. Gmeinwieser, D. Hiley and J. Riedlbauer (Florence, 1994), 183–207

SUSAN PARISI

Doh. The tonic note of a major scale, or third degree of a minor scale in TONIC SOL-FA.

Döhl, Friedhelm (b Göttingen, 7 July 1936). German composer and teacher. He studied school music, the piano with Carl Seemann and composition with Fortner at the Freiburg Musikhochschule (1956–64), concurrently studying musicology, German philology, art history and philosophy at the universities of Freiburg and Göttingen. In 1966 he took the DPhil at Göttingen with a thesis Weberns Beitrag zur Stilwende der Neuen Musik (Munich, 1976). He was a scholar of the Studienstiftung des Deutschen Volkes (1957–64), a lecturer at the Robert-Schumann-Konservatorium in Düsseldorf (1965–8) and a German Academy scholar at the Villa Massimo in Rome (1967–8). In 1969 he was appointed chief lecturer in music theory at the Freie Universität of Berlin, where he was made professor in 1971, and in 1974 he took over the directorship of the Musikakademie of Basle. In 1982 he was appointed professor of composition at the Musikhochschule in Lübeck, and became its director in 1991.

His earliest compositions were in the classical-romantic tradition, but as a student in the early 1960s he turned to serial methods, and devoted himself in particular to an intensive examination of the work of Webern. Döhl, who was influenced by 'informal' painting, developed after 1962 a spontaneous, associative style; from 1965 he tended towards an ascetic, meditative and expansive manner in which sound and form, construction and expression are intimately connected. He wrote experimental works from 1970 to 1976, trying new ways of linking music with space, the stage, language and graphics. The content of most of his compositions of the 1980s relates to his opera Medea (1987–90), and his concern with traditional genres continued in the piano concerto Sommerreise (1993–6). Döhl has an affinity with Schubert, which is evident both in his preference for working with small forces and in the theme of suffering, which is central to his creative writing.

WORKS
(selective list)

Large-scale: Melancolia, 'Magische Quadrate', S, chorus, orch, 1967–8; Klang-Szene I, 2 Hammond org, elecs (5 players), 4 loudspkr groups, objects, lighting, 1970; Klang-Szene II, vocal ens, str, free jazz group, mechanical orch, elec, objects, lighting, 1971; Zorch (Sound-Scene), 3 pf, big band, 1972; Ikaros (ballet, E. Lindegren), orch, 1977–8; Symphonie, vc, orch, 1980–81; Tombeau, 'Metamorphose', orch, 1982–3; Passion, orch, 1984; Medea (op, 3, F. Döhl, after Euripides, F. Grillparzer, H.H. Jahnn and others), 1987–90, Kiel, 1990; Sommerreise. Klavierkonzert, pf, orch, 1993–6

Small-scale inst: Pf Sonata no.1 'Rondes', 1959; Pf Sonata no.2 'Szenen', 1960; Pf Sonata no.3 'Spiegelungen', 1961; Klangfiguren, wind qnt, 1962; Oculapis, fl, pf, 1962; Pf Sonata no.4 'Passages', 1962; Toccata, fl, tpt, hpd, pf, 1964; Tappeto, after Ungaretti, vc, hp, 1967; Pas de deux, vn, gui, 1968; Textur I, fl, 1971; Textur II, pf, 1971; Sound of Sleat, str qt, 1971–2; Sotto voce, fl, vc, pf, 1973; Odradek, after F. Kafka, 2 pf, 1976; 3 Traumstücke, pf, 1978; Der Abend/Die Nacht, after G. Trakl, fl, vc, 1979; Fragment 'Kyrie Eleison', org, 1980; Fiesta, ballet, 2 pf, 1982; Nachtfahrt, pf, perc, 1984; Winterreise, after F. Schubert, Trakl, str qnt, 1985; Bruchstücke zur Winterreise, after Schubert, pf, 1985; Gloria, Fragment II, org, 1986; Missa (Medea-Interpolation), 2 trbn, 3 perc, 1989; Posaunen im Raum (Medea-Material I), 6–12 trbn, 1990; Flöten im Raum (Medea-Material II), 7–20 fl, 1990; Medeas Lied, fl, cl, pf, vn, va, vc, perc, 1991; Revelge, Rührtrommel, 1994; Lied, vc, pf, 1994; Sonate, vn, pf, 1994–5; Offertorium, Fragment III, org, 1995; Notturno, accdn, db, 1995; 3 Balladen, Fragmente, after P. Celan, pf, 1996

Small-scale vocal: 7 Haiku, S, fl, pf, 1963; Fragment 'Sybille' (F. Hölderlin), Bar, fl, va, vc, pf, 1963; Epitaph 'Tich yuang tuc', S, cl, ens, 1963; " … wenn aber … " (Hölderlin), Bar, pf, 1969; Süll (Mikrodrama I), fl, spkr, apparatus, 1972; A & O (Mikrodrama II), spkr, apparatus, 1973; Anna K (Mikrodrama III), spkr, bass drum, vc, tape, apparatus, 1974; Szene über einen kleinen Tod (Textcollage, Döhl), female v, fl, vc, cymbal, tape ad lib, 1975; Unterwegs, Sieben Stationen (Döhl), S, pf, 1978; Auf schmalen Grat, Requiem (C.F. Meyer), 6 vv (solo/chorus), 1978; Medea, Monolog (Textcollage, Döhl, after Euripides, Grillparzer, H.-H. Jahnn), S, chbr orch, 1979–80

Principal publishers: Breitkopf & Härtel, Moeck

BIBLIOGRAPHY

KdG (U. Sommer)

H. Oesch: 'Interview with Friedhelm Döhl', Melos/NZM, i/5 (1975), 355–9

L. Lesle: 'Fragment, Labyrinth, Mythos: Friedhelm Döhl und seine Medea Oper', NZM, Jg.151, no.5 (1990), 22–8

W. Gruhn: 'F. Döhl', Metzler Komponisten Lexikon, ed. H. Weber (Stuttgart and Weimar, 1992), 206–8

WILFRIED BRENNECKE/ERIKA SCHALLER

Döhler, Theodor (von) (b Naples, 20 April 1814; d Florence, 21 Feb 1856). Austrian-Jewish pianist and composer. As an infant prodigy he was Benedict's pupil in Naples, after 1825. In about 1829 he went to Vienna to study the piano with Czerny and composition with Sechter. In 1836 he began a series of international tours as a virtuoso. In Paris he was judged less remarkable than Thalberg, but an appearance as composer and soloist at a Conservatoire concert on 13 April 1838 gained him recognition. Further journeys to Germany and the Netherlands culminated in a stay at St Petersburg in 1843–5. Raised to the nobility by the influence of his patron the Duke of Lucca, he married the Russian Princess Chermetev in 1846. After this he gave no more public performances and settled in Florence in 1848. There, in 1880, his opera Tancreda was performed. Döhler wrote chiefly piano music, including a concerto op.7.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B.M. Antolini: 'Pianisti italiani a metà Ottocento', NRMI, xxv (1991), 375–90

EDWARD DANNREUTHER/DAVID CHARLTON

Dohnányi, Christoph von (b Berlin, 8 Sept 1929). German conductor. His piano studies were interrupted by World War II, and his father and uncle were executed for their parts in the 1944 plot on Hitler's life. After the war he studied law in Munich before entering the Staatliche Hochschule für Musik there in 1948, winning the Richard Strauss Conducting Prize when he graduated in 1951. He then moved to America to continue his studies with his grandfather Ernő Dohnányi at Florida State University, and spent summers at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood studying with Bernstein. In 1952 Solti engaged him as a chorus master and conductor at the Frankfurt Opera; he subsequently progressed from Generalmusikdirektor in Lübeck (1957–63) and Kassel (1963–6) to similar posts in Frankfurt (1968–75) and at the Hamburg Staatsoper (1977–84). In addition, he was chief conductor of the WDR SO in Cologne from 1964 to 1970. He made his British début with the LPO in 1965, his Metropolitan début in 1972 (with Falstaff) and his Covent Garden début in 1974 (with Salome). Dohnányi became music director of the Cleveland Orchestra in 1984, principal guest conductor of the Philharmonia Orchestra in London in 1994 and its principal conductor in 1996. He returned to Covent Garden for much admired accounts of Wozzeck, Die Frau ohne Schatten and Die Meistersinger and a new production of Fidelio (1990); he made his début at the Vienna Staatsoper with the Ring in 1993.

Dohnányi conducted the premières of Henze's Der junge Lord (1965, Berlin) and The Bassarids (1966, Salzburg Festival). Although he has since concentrated on Austro-German repertory from Mozart to Mahler and Strauss, he has also performed much Ives and excels in the works of Schoenberg, Berg and Webern, having conducted highly praised accounts of Schoenberg's Moses und Aron in Frankfurt and Vienna in the 1970s. He is a highly versatile musician and his conducting is best in scores which call for particular technical skill, above all those of the 20th century. While he has been criticized for a lack of breadth in Romantic works, he has continued Szell's tradition in Cleveland of blending European warmth with American power and precision. Notable among his many recordings are Fidelio, Wozzeck, Der junge Lord and Schoenberg's Erwartung. Dohnányi created tremendous controversy with his outspoken press remarks about certain conductors and orchestras in a widely reprinted article in The Times (23 August 1994). He is married to the soprano Anja Silja.

JOSÉ BOWEN, CHARLES BARBER

Dohnányi, Ernő [Ernst von] (b Pozsony [now Bratislava], 27 July 1877; d New York, 9 Feb 1960). Hungarian pianist, composer, conductor, teacher and administrator. Next to Liszt he ranks as the most versatile Hungarian musician, whose influence reached generations in all spheres of musical life. He is considered the first architect of Hungary's musical culture in the 20th century.

1. LIFE. He received his early training in Pozsony. His father, an outstanding amateur cellist, and Károly Forstner, cathedral organist, gave him lessons in piano playing and theory. Despite the absence of professional training, he showed an extraordinary appetite for music and made rapid progress. Having finished at the Gymnasium, he decided to obtain his formal education in music at the Budapest Academy. He was the first Hungarian of significant talent to do so and his example, as well as his personal intervention, induced Bartók (his friend from early schooldays) to follow the same course. Dohnányi studied the piano with Thomán and composition with Koessler, and received his artist's diploma in 1897, after three years. That summer he spent five weeks with d'Albert, preparing for his début.

In 1898 Richter took him to London, where a single performance of Beethoven's Fourth Piano Concerto laid the foundation for Dohnányi's world fame as a pianist. His op.1, the Piano Quintet in C minor (which he composed after 67 juvenile works), had already been acclaimed by Brahms in 1895, and Brahms himself arranged the première in Vienna. In 1899 his Piano Concerto op.5 received the Bösendorfer Prize and by 1900 he had established himself, in both Europe and the USA, as the greatest Hungarian pianist and composer after Liszt. He used his position to introduce the neglected works of Mozart, Beethoven and Schubert into the repertory and became the first among world-famous pianists to perform chamber music regularly. This brought about a special friendship with Joachim, who in 1905 invited him to teach at the Hochschule in Berlin. Dohnányi remained there for ten years, from 1908 with the rank of professor. He nevertheless continued his extensive concert tours and, while in Berlin, composed some of his best works.

In 1915 Dohnányi returned to Budapest and undertook the reshaping of the country's musical life on a grand scale. He selected programmes for his countless concerts with a determination to raise the standards of his public's musical tastes. This activity reached a peak in 1919–21 when he gave (in the absence of visiting artists) about 120 concerts each season in Budapest alone. According to Bartók, Dohnányi was providing the entire musical life of Hungary. The new generation – Bartók, Kodály and Weiner – assembled behind him, and he championed their music and their cause above all. From 1916 he taught the piano at the Budapest Academy, for which he worked out a comprehensive reform plan in 1917. Some of this he was able to put into practice when appointed director in February 1919 by the republican government. However, in October 1919 the new, quasi-fascist regime replaced him with Hubay. The staff went on strike, but failed to reverse the decision. Despite this treatment, Dohnányi stayed in Hungary and continued his work, giving concerts, creating a number of institutions and conducting the Philharmonic Orchestra. He was first elected chief conductor of the Philharmonic Society in 1919 and was re-elected for 25 consecutive years. He used this post, too, to further the music of others, even at the expense of his own compositions. Between 1921 and 1927 he made extensive annual tours of the USA, and in 1925 the New York State SO appointed him chief conductor.

Dohnányi returned to the Budapest Academy in 1928 as head of the piano and composition master classes. In 1931 he was appointed musical director of the Hungarian radio and in 1934 director of the academy once again. His manifold commitments at home and several prolonged illnesses in the 1930s led to the decline of his international concert career, except for occasional tours. From 1939 much of his time was devoted to the fight against growing Nazi influences. By 1941 he had resigned his directorial post at the academy, rather than submit to the anti-Jewish legislation. In his orchestra he succeeded in keeping on all Jewish members until two months after the German occupation of Hungary, when he disbanded the ensemble. In November 1944 he went to Austria, a decision which drew criticism for many years. In fact, Dohnányi was criticized either from the left or from the right for most of his deeds, from his student days on. The explanation may be found in his unassailability on musical or ethical grounds. Thus attacks were launched on political premises, according to the ever-changing Hungarian spectrum. Dohnányi, who happened to be apolitical, possibly had enough experience to foresee coming events and chose not to await the next offensive, unleashed in 1945 and reverberating long after.

Ernő Dohnányi

The 'accusations' levelled against him always took the form of rumours. This, and the magnitude of the so-called charges (never substantiated), made it impossible for Dohnányi to defend himself. Yet, with major tours in England (1947–8), he was on the verge of reviving his international career when family reasons forced him to find security on the other side of the Atlantic. For a few months he was head of the piano department in Tucumán, Argentina, before finally settling in Tallahassee in September 1949, as pianist-and composer-in-residence at Florida State University. His mental and physical powers remained unimpaired to the end, but persisting rumours prevented him from re-entering the world stage. However, he continued to play, compose, conduct and teach, and in 1956 he made a last appearance at the Edinburgh Festival, where his youthfulness astonished British audiences. He died while making some gramophone records, at a time when invitations from everywhere were beginning to come once again.

2. Work. As a pianist Dohnányi ranked among the greatest of all time. Above all, his tone production, his complete understanding of music and the size and choice of his repertory made him unique in his time. Among his pioneering achievements were the performance of all Beethoven's piano works in 1920 and that of all 27 Mozart piano concertos in 1941. As a composer he soon discarded the strong early influences of Schumann and Brahms, and by 1902 he had found his own language in the Serenade op.10. He did not seek to open new paths, but concentrated his efforts on expressing the entire Romantic heritage in the perfect forms of the 18th century. His forms, however, are not replicas; he merely drew from past achievements to create the framework for his highly lyrical and vivacious music, which, often tinged with a rare sense of humour, was so much his own. As a master of chamber music he had few equals after Brahms, and his nine important works in this field are all of a high standard. The rest of his output is variable, but he composed excellent works in almost every genre. They show an unerring mastery of form and instrumentation, fluency, and a rich but utterly natural sense of harmony, which enabled him to make unbridled chromatic excursions without ever losing the tonal centre. He succeeded in blending the 'Brahmsian' preservation of classical form with the Lisztian concept of motivic strands binding together a large-scale work. His best opera, Der Tenor, is one of the few true comic operas written in the first half of the 20th century. Among his orchestral compositions, both symphonies, the Suite in F♯ minor and most of the concertante works are highly rewarding for the performer as well as the audience, as is the Mass op.35. He composed as if he were a virtuoso of all instruments and he was obviously thinking of his own natural, flowing approach to performing at all times.

As a conductor Dohnányi's chief merit was the recognition of Bartók's genius decades before others, despite his own very different musical make-up. In Hungary audiences also owe to him the carefully planned introduction of many masterpieces of earlier periods, previously neglected. As a teacher he brought up generations of musicians, his pupils including Annie Fischer, Georg Solti and Géza Anda. His legendary musicianship (in all fields, including memory, score-reading and improvisation) and his strength of character served as examples over the decades. These virtues, however, proved to be too heavy a burden in a small country, and with Bartók's death (1945) there remained no obstacle for those who wished to attempt to erase the influence of Dohnányi's towering personality from the Hungarian scene. Not until 1970 was the time ripe for his revaluation in his native country, and his true significance has yet to be made a part of standard Hungarian literature.

WORKS

(selective list)

STAGE

op.
18	Der Schleier der Pierrette (mime play, 3 pts, after A. Schnitzler), 1908–9, Dresden, 1910
20	Tante Simona (komische Oper, 1, V. Heindl), 1911–12, Dresden, Könichliches Sächsisches Hoftheater, 22 Jan 1913
30	A vajda tornya [The Vaivode's Tower] (romantikus op, 3, V. Lanyi, after H.H. Ewers and M. Henry), 1915–22, Budapest, Magyar Király, 18 March 1922
34	Der Tenor (komische Oper, 3, E. Góth, after C. Sternheim: Bürger Schippel), 1920–27, Budapest, Magyar Királyi, 9 Feb 1929

ORCHESTRAL

5	Piano Concerto no.1, e, 1897–8
9	Symphony no.1, d, 1900–01
12	Konzertstück, D, vc, orch, 1903–4
19	Suite, f♯, 1908–9
25	Variationen über ein Kinderlied, pf, orch, 1914
27	Violin Concerto no.1, d, 1914–15
31	Ünnepi nyitány [Festival Overture], 1923
32b	Ruralia hungarica, 5 pieces, 1924
36	Szimfonikus percek [Symphonic Minutes], 1933
39	Keringőszvit [Waltz Suite], 1942–3
40	Symphony no.2, E, 1943–4, rev. 1953–6
42	Piano Concerto no.2, b, 1946–7

43	Violin Concerto no.2, c, 1949–50
45	Concertino, hp, chbr orch, 1952
47	American Rhapsody, 1953

VOCAL

choral

—	Magyar hiszekegy [Hungarian Credo], T, vv, orch, 1920
35	Szegedi mise [Szeged Mass], 4 solo vv, 8vv, orch, org, 1930
38	Cantus vitae (sym. cant., I. Madách), 1939–41, unpubd
46	Stabat mater, 3 solo vv, children's chorus, 6vv, orch, 1952–3

songs

14	Six Poems (V. Heindl), 1v, pf, 1905–6
16	Im Lebenslenz (W.C. Gomoll), 1v, pf, 1906–7
22	Three Songs (Gomoll), 1v, orch, 1912
—	Magyar népdalok [Hungarian Folksongs], 1v, pf, 1922

PIANO

2	Vier Klavierstücke, 1896–7: Scherzo, c♯; Intermezzo, a; Intermezzo, f; Capriccio, b
3	Waltz, f♯, 4 hands, 1897
4	Variations and Fugue on a Theme of E[mma] G[ruber], 1897
—	Gavotte and Musette, B♭, 1898
6	Passacaglia, e♭, 1899
11	Vier Rhapsodien, g, f♯, C, e♭, 1902–3
13	Winterreigen, 10 bagatelles, 1905: Widmung, Marsch der lustigen Brüder, An Ada, Freund Viktor's Mazurka, Sphärenmusik, Valse aimable, Um Mitternacht, Tolle Gesellschaft, Morgengrauen, Postludium
17	Humoresken in Form einer Suite, 1907: March, Toccata, Pavane with Variations, Pastorale, Introduction and Fugue
23	Three Pieces, 1912: Aria, Valse impromptu, Capriccio
—	Fugue, d, left hand, 1913
24	Suite im alten Stil, 1913: Prelude, Allemande, Courante, Sarabande, Menuet, Gigue
28	Six Concert Etudes, a, D♭, e♭, b♭, E, f (Capriccio), 1916
29	Variations on a Hungarian Folksong, 1917
—	Pastorale, Hungarian Christmas Song, 1920
32a	Ruralia hungarica, 7 pieces, 1923–4
—	A legfontosabb ujjgyakorlatok [Essential Finger Exercises], 1929
39a	Suite en valse, 2 pf, 1945
41	Six Pieces, 1945: Impromptu, Scherzino, Canzonetta, Cascade, Ländler, Cloches
—	Twelve Short Studies for the Advanced Pianist, 1950
44	Three Singular Pieces, 1951: Burletta, Nocturne (Cats on the Roof), Perpetuum mobile
—	Daily Finger Exercises, 3 vols., 1960

OTHER INSTRUMENTAL

1	Piano Quintet no.1, c, 1895
7	String Quartet no.1, A, 1899
8	Sonata, b♭, pf, vc, 1899
10	Serenade, C, str trio, 1902
15	String Quartet no.2, D♭, 1906
21	Sonata, c♯, pf, vn, 1912
26	Piano Quintet no.2, e♭, 1914
32c	Ruralia hungarica, 3 pieces, vn, pf, 1924
32d	Ruralia hungarica, 1 piece, vc/vn, pf, 1924
33	String Quartet no.3, a, 1926
37	Sextet, C, pf, cl, hn, str trio, 1935
48	1 Aria, fl, pf, 1958; 2 Passacaglia, fl, 1959

arrangements etc.

L. Delibes: Naila, 2 waltzes, 1897
F. Schubert: Valses nobles, concert versions, 1920
L. Delibes: Coppélia, waltz, 1925
J. Strauss (ii): Schatzwalzer, Du und Du, 1928
Cadenzas for Beethoven: Pf Concs. nos.1–4, 1897–1915, and Mozart: Pf Concs. nos.1–27 and 2 Pf Conc. K365, 1906–41

Principal publishers: Associated, Doblinger, Editio Musica, Lengnick, Schott, Simrock

BIBLIOGRAPHY

V. Papp: Dohnányi Ernő (Budapest, 1927)
M.U. Reuth: The Tallahassee Years of Ernst von Dohnányi (diss., Florida State U., 1962)
L. Podhradszky: 'The Works of Ernő Dohnányi', SM, vi (1964), 357–73
M. Eckhardt: 'Briefe aus dem Nachlasse Ernő von Dohnányis', SM, ix (1967), 407–24
M. Eckhardt-Parkai, ed.: 'Érdekes levelek Dohnányi Ernő hagyatékából' [Interesting letters found in the legacy of Dohnányi], Magyar zene, viii (1967), 613–26
B. Vázsonyi: Dohnányi Ernő (Budapest, 1971)
G.L. Mabry: The Vocal and Choral Works of Ernst von Dohnányi (diss., George Peabody College, Vanderbilt U., TN, 1973)
I. Kecskeméti: 'A százéves Dohnányi Ernő (1877–1906)' [Dohnányi at 100], Muzsika, xx/8 (1977), 3–6
M. Hallman: 'Ernő Dohnanyi's Piano Works', American Liszt Society Journal, no.17 (1985), 48–54
K.A. DeFoor: The Symphonies of Ernst von Dohnányi (diss., Florida State U., 1991)
T. Schipperges: 'Grundton der Gelassenheit: zur Musik Ernst von Dohnányis', Musica, xlv/1 (1991), 12–17
P. Laki: 'Franz Schmidt (1874–1939) and Dohnányi Ernő (1877–1960): a Study in Austro-Hungarian Alternatives', MQ, lxxx (1996), 362–81

BÁLINT VÁZSONYI

Dohnányi, Oliver von (b Trencín, 2 March 1955). Slovakian conductor. He studied at the Academy of Musical Arts in Prague with Václav Neumann from 1974 until 1979, when he went to the Hochschule für Musik in Vienna for a year's study with Otmar Suitner. He made his début, with the Bratislava RSO, in 1979 and continued to conduct this orchestra regularly until 1986, as well as the Slovak PO from 1984 to 1989. From 1978 he worked extensively with the chamber ensemble Canticorum Iubilo, with which he toured Spain, Belgium, Sweden and the USSR. Dohnányi was chief conductor of the Slovak National Opera from 1986 to 1989, conducting the company in an award-winning production of Faust at the Edinburgh Festival, and in 1993 was appointed music director of the National Theatre in Prague. Appearances abroad have included visits to the Salzburg Festival, the ENO, Opera North in Leeds, the Teatro S Carlo in Naples and opera houses in Basle, Düsseldorf, Vienna, Zürich and Wexford. He has also appeared with the English Chamber Orchestra and the Yomiuri Nippon SO in Japan. His reputation is based above all on music of the late 19th and 20th centuries, and his recordings include music by Liszt and Rubinstein, Odysseus by Michael Kocáb and an acclaimed performance of Smetana's Libuše.

JESSICA DUCHEN

Doif (Dut.). See under ORGAN STOP (Doef).

Doigté (Fr.). See FINGERING.

Doina. See HORA LUNGA. See also ROMANIA, §II, 1 and MOLDOVA, §II.

Doizi de Velasco, Nicolás [Dias Velasco, Nicolao] (b *c*1590; d probably at Madrid, 1659). Portuguese guitarist and writer on the guitar, active in Spain and Italy. By 1624 he was living in Madrid, where he knew the author and musician Vicente Espinel. After belonging to the household of Philip IV's brother, the Cardinal Infante Fernando of Austria, he served the Duke of Medina de las Torres, Ramiro Nuñez de Guzmán, who was Viceroy of Naples from 1636 to 1644. In 1641 he returned to Madrid and from then until his death he was one of Felipe IV's chamber musicians. In 1651, a year in which he visited Jaén, he was drawing the large annual sum of 736,000 maravedis. His widow, Catalina de Osuna, petitioned the king for a pension on 31 July 1659, and his son made a similar request on 7 April, 1663. His only known work is the treatise Nuevo modo de cifra para tañer la guitarra con variedad, y perfeccion, y se muestra ser instrumento perfecto, y abuntantissimo (a handwritten note in the only surviving copy, in E-Mn, states that it was printed in Naples in 1640). The authors of the preliminary décima and madrigal refer to him as 'Apolo portugues' and 'Amphion lusitano'. The treatise shows that the five-course guitar can play music in three, four and five parts and realize a bass line fully in accordance with the rules of harmony in the same way as the theorbo, harpsichord and organ. To this end Doizi de Velasco devised a new tablature system. The letters a to i and l to n (j and k are not used in Spanish) represent the notes of the chromatic scale from G sol re ut to F♯ fa ut. Each letter is combined with the numbers one to 18 to produce symbols for 19 different chords on each degree of the scale. He recommends the use of bourdons on the fourth and fifth courses to ensure an adequate range of notes, and points out that because the guitar is fretted in equal temperament it can play in any key. For his music examples he prefers the Italian system of notating music at pitch to the Spanish practice of transposing clefs. Several circular diagrams illustrate rising and falling circles of 5ths, and the chacona formula is used to explain transposition.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DBP

H. Anglès and J.Subirá: Catálogo musical de la Biblioteca Nacional de Madrid (Barcelona, 1951), iii, 107–9

F.J. León Tello: La teoria española de la música en los siglos XVII y XVIII(Madrid, 1974), 681–4

E. Casares, ed.: Francisco Asenjo Barbieri: Biografías y documentos sobre música y músicos españoles, Legado Barbieri, i (Madrid, 1986), 177–8

M. Esses: Dance and Instrumental 'diferencias' in Spain during the 17th and 18th Centuries (New York, 1992), i, 119–21

ROBERT STEVENSON/MONICA HALL

Dokshitser, Timofey (Aleksandrovich) (b Nezhin, Chernihiv district, 13 Dec 1921). Ukrainian trumpeter. After attending the military band school and the Glazunov Music Academy, he studied under Tabakov at the Moscow Conservatory and the Gnesin Institute, becoming Tabakov's assistant in 1950. In 1954 he was granted independent status. He was cornet soloist in the Bol′shoy Theatre Orchestra from 1945 to 1984, and from 1957 to 1959 conducted the orchestra in the subsidiary theatre. As Ukraine's foremost trumpet soloist, Dokshitser has given the first performance of works by more than 20 composers, including Hidas, Peskin, Tamberg and Weinberg; Khachaturian wrote an important solo for him in his ballet Gayane. Dokshitser has arranged works by Shchedrin for trumpet, and has made many recordings. For many years he played on a cornet made by Alexander (Mainz), which is now in the Bad Säckingen Trumpet Museum; in 1958 he began using a Selmer B♭ trumpet with a Bach 7E mouthpiece. He taught at the Gnesin Institute from 1954 to 1990, and in 1994–5 at the Bremen Trumpet Academy.

WRITINGS

Shtrikhi na trube [Phrasing on the trumpet] (Moscow, 1976)
Méthode de trompette (Paris, 1990)
Memoirs (Moscow, 1996; Eng. trans. 1997)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

S. Bolotin: Ėntsiklopedicheskiy biograficheskiy slovar′ muzïkantov-ispolniteley na dukhovïkh instrumentakh [Encyclopedic biographical dictionary of musicians and wind instrument players] (Moscow, 1955), 86–8

E. Tarr: East Meets West (Stuyvesant, NY, 2000)

EDWARD H. TARR

Doktor, Paul (b Vienna, 28 March 1919). American violist of Austrian birth. He studied the violin with his father, Karl Doktor, violist in the Busch Quartet, and graduated from the Vienna Music Academy in 1938. He changed to the viola and in 1942 won the Geneva International Music Competition. His début (1938–9) was with the Busch Quartet in quintets in Zürich and London. Doktor left Vienna in 1938 and from 1939 to 1947 was a soloist with the Lucerne SO. His American début, in the Library of Congress, Washington, DC, in 1948 was followed by tours of the USA, Canada and Europe. He became an American citizen in 1952. He joined the staff of Mannes College in 1953, the Philadelphia Academy in 1970 and the Juilliard School in 1971.

Doktor's tone was warm and sweet, though light; he possessed a virtuoso technique and his large repertory was extended by his own transcriptions. He gave first performances of concertos by Quincy Porter and Walter Piston and the BBC première of Wilfred Josephs's Meditatio di Beornmundo. He was a founder-member of the Rococo Ensemble, the New York String Sextet and the Paul Doktor String Trio. His 17th-century viola is attributed to Pietro Guarneri of Mantua.

WATSON FORBES

Dol, Joseph. See DOLL, JOSEPH.

Dolan, Robert Emmett (b Hartford, CT, 3 Aug 1906; d Los Angeles, 26 Sept 1972). American conductor, composer, arranger and film producer. He attended Loyola College, later studying with Joseph Schillinger and Ernst Toch. Beginning in 1927, he conducted Broadway musicals by several of its leading songwriters, including Schwartz (Flying Colors, 1932), Romberg (May Wine, 1935), Arlen (Hooray for What?, 1937), Porter (Leave it to Me, 1938), Kern (Very Warm for May, 1939) and Berlin (Louisiana Purchase, 1940). He also appeared frequently as a network radio conductor during the 1930s. He joined Paramount in 1941 and worked on several dozen films, variously as composer, arranger, conductor or musical director, including Holiday Inn (1942), Lady in the Dark (1944) and Blue Skies (1946). He also served as producer for the lavish Paramount musicals White Christmas (1954) and Anything Goes (1956), an opportunity rarely afforded Hollywood's music executives. With lyricist Johnny Mercer, Dolan wrote a few film songs as well as the musical comedies Texas, L'il Darlin' (1949) and Foxy (1964). In New York, he taught at the Juilliard School in the 1960s and was engaged to conduct Juno (Blitzstein, 1959) and Coco (Previn, 1969) on Broadway. His Music in Modern Media (New York, 1967) is a valuable document of soundtrack recording practice in the USA just before multiple magnetic tracks came into common usage. His manuscripts are held at the University of Wyoming.

GEORGE J. FERENCZ

Dolar [Tolar, Tollar, Thollary], Joannes Baptista [Janez Krstnik, Jan Křtitel] (b Kamnik, Slovenia, *c*1620; d Vienna, 1673). Slovenian composer. He studied at the Jesuit college in Ljubljana until 1639, when he was accepted as a novice in Vienna, where he studied philosophy. After 1645 he taught at the Jesuit high school in Ljubljana before continuing his theological studies in Vienna. He was ordained in 1652. From 1656 to 1658 he was musical director at the Jesuit college, Ljubljana, after which he was called to Passau. In 1659 he was listed as a regens chori in Györ, Hungary. In 1661 or 1662 he became director of the Jesuit seminary of St Ignites and Pancraties, Vienna, as well as musical director of the Kirche Am Hof. He held this post until his death.

Dolar's music apparently appeared in two printed editions, Musicalia varia (1665) and Drammata seu Miserere mei Deus (1666), but these have not survived. Transcriptions of his works are mentioned in the musical registers of monasteries in Bohemia and Moravia (Osek, Slaný, Česky Krumlov, Kroměříž), Hungary and Austria (St Paul im Lavanttal, Eisenstadt, Kremsmünster), and in the register of a court chapel in Rudolstadt, Thuringia. The archives of the Prince-Bishop of Olomouc, Karl Lichtenstein-Castelcorn, preserve 13 compositions by Dolar, probably transcribed by Josef Vejvanovski: two masses, five psalms, an antiphon, two sonatas and three ballettos. The archive of the Benedictine abbey in Kremsmünster preserves the monumental Missa Viennensis, transcribed by Theophil Schrenk. The masses, psalms and antiphon are for four to 16 voices with instruments. The sonatas were undoubtedly written for church services, but the ballettos would have been used in seminary and monastery refectories. Dolar's works all exhibit elements of Italian musical style, popular among Viennese court musicians in the second half of the 17th century.

WORKS

Missa sopra la Bergamasca, CZ-Kra, ed. in MAMS, xxii (1992, 1997)
Missa villana, KRa, ed. in MAMS, iv (1984, 1995)
Missa Viennensis, Kremsmünster, Benedictine monastery, ed. in MAMS, xix (1996)
2 sonatas and 3 balettos, KRa, ed. in MAB, xl (1959); ed. in MAMS, xxv (1995)
5 psalms and Salve Regina, KRa, ed. in MAMS, xxii (1992, 1997)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. Cvetko: Les compositeurs Gallus-Plautzius-Dolar et leur oeuvre (Ljubljana, 1963)
J. Sehnal: 'Ze života hudebníků kroměřiské biskupské kapely v 17. století' [From the life of musicians of the chapel of the bishops at Kremsier in the 17th century], Hudobnovedné štúdie, vii (1966), 122–34
J. Höfler: 'P. Ioannes Baptista Dolar: beiträge zu seiner Lebensgeschichte', Mf, xxv (1972), 310–14
T. Faganel: Zur Fragen der Aufführungspraxis in den Werken von Joannes Baptista Dolar (Brno, 1993), 141–51
J. Sehnal and J. Pešková: Caroli de Liechtenstein – Castelcorno episcopi Olomucensis operum artis musicae collectio Cremsirii reservata (Prague, 1998)

TOMAZ FAGANEL

Dolby, Charlotte. See SAINTON-DOLBY, CHARLOTTE.

Dolcan (Ger.). See under ORGAN STOP (Tolkaan).

Dolce (i) (It.: 'sweet'). A word whose earliest musical uses were apparently indications of mood and performing style, not dynamics. Brossard (Dictionaire, 1703) defined dolce, along with dolcemente and con dolce maniera, in this manner; and the anonymous A Short Explication (London, 1724) followed his lead in its definition of con dolce maniera. But in 1768 Rousseau (Dictionnaire article 'Doux') said that dolce, doux and piano also meant simply 'quiet', though he added that some Italian purists considered that dolce could also mean più soave, corresponding more or less to the French louré. Probably all three words were used fairly loosely in the 17th and 18th centuries, though piano had already begun to develop its independent tradition in the 17th century. In the 19th century dolce was often used as an alternative indication to play quietly; and there is an old story among orchestral musicians that dolce means 'play loudly' because it specifically denotes phrases that must seem quiet but carry through the orchestral texture. The superlative form dolcissimo (current only in musical contexts) is also common and often abbreviated to dolciss. Examples of the use of dolce when it is clearly not a dynamic indication include the mf e dolce in Beethoven's Quartet op.59 no.1 and f dolce opening the finale of Schumann's Third Symphony.

For bibliography see TEMPO AND EXPRESSION MARKS.

DAVID FALLOWS

Dolce (ii) (It.). See under ORGAN STOP.

Dolcevillico, Francesco Saverio. See SÜSSMAYR, FRANZ XAVER.

Dolcian. See DULCIAN.

Dolcissimo (It.: 'very sweet'). See DOLCE (i).

Doles, Johann Friedrich (b Steinbach, Thuringia, 23 April 1715; d Leipzig, 8 Feb 1797). German composer, organist and conductor.

1. LIFE. His father Johann Andreas Doles, the Kantor of Steinbach, died in 1720, leaving the family in great poverty, and the boy's musical education was entrusted to his elder brother Johann Heinrich, who succeeded to his father's position. At the age of 12 Johann Friedrich was sent to school in Schmalkalden. There at 15 he was offered the vacant organist's post, in which he deputized for a year. At 19 he enrolled in the Schleusingen Gymnasium. After one and a half years he was made prefect of the school's choir; he also organized a weekly concert series, together with a number of fellow students, and composed some motets, arias, an Actus dramaticus (1737) and occasional pieces. After completing his course in 1739 he immediately enrolled at Leipzig University, and while there pursued his study of music with Bach, who after four years of instruction recommended him to the post of Kantor in Salzwedel. Near the end of his student years Doles apparently directed Leipzig's new Grosse Concert-Gesellschaft (founded in 1743 and later to become the Gewandhaus Orchestra) and frequently attended performances of Italian opera at the Saxon court in Hubertusburg; these were later to have a decisive influence on his own compositions.

Although Doles's application to Salzwedel had been successful, he instead took up the superior post of Kantor in Freiberg (1744). Through this post he became Kantor at the cathedral and at the Petrikirche, Nikolaikirche and Johanniskirche, as well as Quartus at the Gymnasium.

As co-director of the Gymnasium Doles found himself in open conflict with the rector J.G. Bidermann and the school's board of clerical and lay overseers who, following neo-humanistic precepts, wished to remove music to the periphery of the school's curriculum. Among the many works composed by Doles during this productive period was a school opera (1748, now lost) to commemorate the centenary of the Peace of Westphalia; the text, at least in part Bidermann's, was ridiculed by Lessing, who however gave high praise to Doles's music. Perhaps as a result of this Bidermann, with his De vita musica of 1749, launched his disastrous Rektoratsprogramm, which questioned the role of music in education. The ensuing battle of polemics involved above all Mattheson, but also Gottsched and Bach, and led Doles, who apparently took no part in the journalistic campaign against his rector, into six unrelenting years of accusations, rejoinders and lawsuits (exhaustively documented by Banning, pp.25–49).

Doles escaped this imbroglio by being appointed on 1 October 1755, unanimously and without audition, to succeed Harrer as Kantor of the Leipzig Thomaskirche; C.P.E. Bach was among the unsuccessful applicants. On 30 January 1756 he took up that office, which had remained unchanged in range of duties, salary and terms of contract from Bach's day. He soon established contact with the poet Gellert, whose odes he set and published as early as 1758; a close friendship arose between them which was to last until Gellert's death (1769). From 1770 Doles deputized for the aging Görner as music director of the University Church, but was refused the post by the council at Görner's death in 1778. Disputes again arose with the rector, but Doles was no longer equal to them. In 1784 he submitted a petition to the council much like Bach's Kurzer, jedoch höchst notwendiger Entwurf of half a century earlier, and on 2 March 1789 asked to be relieved of his post solely because of the annoyances caused by these disputes. Shortly before his release he was visited by Mozart (20 April 1789), who played to Doles's complete satisfaction on the Thomaskirche organ and who made his well-known remarks about Bach's music (reported by Doles's pupil Rochlitz) after hearing a performance of the motet Singet dem Herrn under Doles's direction. Doles composed a cantata to Gellert's Ich komme vor dein Angesicht in remembrance of this occasion; the work appeared in print the following year with a revealing 'Vorerinnerung' which put forth his views on the performance of sacred music.

Doles left the Thomaskirche in 1789 and, as earlier in the Grosses Konzert, was succeeded by J.A. Hiller. Still in full possession of his powers, he continued to compose, attended lectures in theology at the university and made numerous manuscript copies of his works for outlying churches, giving rise to the present wide distribution of his music. Many of these pieces were performed long after his death, even far into the 19th century.

Doles's son Johann Friedrich Doles (b Freiberg, 26 May 1746; d Leipzig, 16 April 1796) was a successful lawyer and an active dilettante composer, singer and keyboard player. His works, including a set of six harpsichord sonatas (Riga, 1773/R) and three vocal pieces in manuscript (D-LEm, LEt), are reminiscent of his father's.

2. Works. Doles, along with his Dresden colleague G.A. Homilius, was the most important practitioner of Protestant church music in late 18th-century Germany. His works, comprising mainly cantatas, lieder, motets and chorales, have frequently been criticized for departing from the style of his teacher, Bach. Such criticism represents a misunderstanding of the radically different aesthetic outlooks of their respective ages. Doles himself formulated the difference as follows (1790):

> It is far from my intention, a pupil of the late Sebastian Bach and myself the composer of many works in fugal style, to decry the value of the higher art of composing, still less to dispense with it. Nay, I merely disapprove of its untimely application.

By this he referred to the use of this style in church services, where he felt few of the congregation would comprehend, let alone be moved by, its rigours. Instead he chose as models the melodically orientated styles of Graun and Hasse, indeed of opera altogether, through which he aimed at a simplicity and artlessness which would directly awake the pious sentiments of the untutored listener. (This aim, which reflects populist notions of the Enlightenment, had a decisive effect on Hiller, with superior results.) Critics from earliest times, however, have pointed out the discrepancy between Doles's expressed aim of simplicity and the rich ornamentation which overburdens many of his solo parts. He also gave primacy to clear rhythmic articulation, with the result that most of his works are in almost dance-like metres at fast tempo. They combine series of symmetrical two-bar phrases, and feature feminine cadences and cadential 6-4 chords; chromaticism is rare, parallel 3rds and 6ths quite common.

Doles's 160 or more cantatas encompass a wide variety of forms, from the traditional 'madrigal cantata' on short biblical passages, to the full chorale cantata in Bach's style, and finally to the 'figured chorale' which is practically Doles's own invention, though his handling of the orchestral accompaniment was foreshadowed in the sacred lieder of Gräfe and Hesse. In this style, notable for its simplicity and its virtual disregard of text, the chorus sings a simple four-part harmonization of the chorale melody, broken line by line and accompanied chordally except in the more elaborate orchestral ritornellos and transitions between phrases of text. Doles composed about two dozen such settings beginning in the 1760s. Perhaps more important were his 35 motets in a similar style; many of them have an ornamented solo part on a biblical text in counterpoint against a chorale setting in even note values. These works show the outstanding craftsmanship of the Bach school; one of them, a setting of the chorale Ein feste Burg, remained in use throughout the 19th century and was reprinted in the 20th.

Doles's two extant volumes of lieder – the Neue Lieder nebst ihren Melodien of 1750 and the Gellert settings of 1758 – were well received in their time, despite a superfluity of agréments which even his contemporaries found taxing. The first is in the tradition of Sperontes's anacreontic songs (Kretzschmar praised Doles's 'Wein, vergnüge mich!' as the best of this school). The second approaches the First Berlin School and C.P.E. Bach, though the work does not bear comparison with Bach's own Gellert settings. A third volume is lost. Doles also published a volume of four-part chorales for organ (1785) which, as the first of its type (though patterned after Bach), stimulated similar works by Kühnau and Hiller. Perhaps his most lasting contribution was as a teacher and choir trainer; a manuscript singing tutor 'Anfangsgründe zum Singen' (in A-Wgm) not only sheds interesting light on the singing school that he founded in Leipzig, but is a unique source for Bach's handling of boys' choirs in the Thomasschule.

WORKS

complete list with sources in Banning

SACRED

Cants., pss, chorale settings, for solo vv, chorus, orch: Gott ist unser Zuversicht (Ps xlvi) (Leipzig, 1755); Ich komme vor dein Angesicht (Gellert) (Leipzig, 1790); *c*160 others, MS

Motets, choral lieder, 4vv: Herr, wer bin ich, in Vierstimmige Motetten und Arien, ed. J.A. Hiller, ii (Leipzig, 1777); 34 others in MS, incl. 15 for 8vv

Passion music: St John Passion, see Schulze, 1994; St Luke Passion; St Mark Passion; 3 St Matthew Passion; Nun ist er da, der Grosse Tag, Passion oratorio; Oratorio on the Crucifixion, only text extant; settings of 3 Passion texts Masses: 5 Missa brevis; Sanctus

OTHER WORKS

Lieder: [25] Neue Lieder nebst ihren Melodien (G. Fuchs), 1v, bc/obbl kbd (Leipzig, 1750); [21] Melodien zu Gellerts Geistlichen Oden und Liedern, 4vv/1v, bc (Leipzig, 1758); 15 kleine Lieder mit leichten Melodien für Kinder und Anfänger auf dem Klavier (F. Hölty) (Leipzig, 1790), lost; Morgenlied, in Beliebte Gesänge, ed. E. Seidler, iv (n.d.); Fliesse, meine frömmste Zähre, MS
Kbd: Vierstimmige Choralbuch oder Harmonische Melodiensammlung . . . auf 2 Linienzeilen (Leipzig, 1785) [215 pieces], arr. with bc in D-Dl, LEm; [40] Singbare und leichte Choralvorspiele (Leipzig, 1794–7); Arioso con variazioni, Sonatina, in Musikalisches Handbuch, ed. J.A. Hiller, i (Leipzig, 1777)
Theoretical works: Anfangsgründe zum Singen, MS, A-Wgm, ed. A. Schneiderheinze in Beiträge zur Bachsforschung, vii (1989) [whole issue]

Numerous lost or doubtful works, incl. many cited in Breitkopf catalogues, see Banning

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BlumeEK (G. Feder: 'Verfall und Restauration'); KretzschmarG
B.F. Richter: 'J.F. Doles' Selbstbiographie', MMg, xxv (1893), 125–9
G. Schünemann: 'Die Bewerber um das Freiberger Kantorat', AMw, i (1918–19), 179–204
R. Sietz: Die Orgel-Kompositionen des Schülerkreises um J.S. Bach (diss., U. of Göttingen, 1930; extracts in BJb 1935, 33–96)
H. Banning: Johann Friedrich Doles: Leben und Werk (Leipzig, 1939) [with extensive bibliography]
A. Schering: J.S. Bach und das Musikleben Leipzigs im 18. Jahrhundert, Musikgeschichte Leipzigs, iii (Leipzig, 1941)
H.-J. Schulze: Katalog der Sammlung Manfred Gorke: Bachiana und andere Handschriften und Drucke des 18. und frühen 19. Jahrhunderts (Leipzig, 1977)
A. Schneiderheinze: 'Johann Sebastian Bach, Johann Friedrich Doles und die "Anfangsgründe zum Singen"', Beiträge zur Bachsforschung, iv (1985), 47–68
H.-J. Schulze: 'Eine rätselhafte Johannes-Passion "di Doles"', Rudolf Eller zum Achtzigsten, ed. K. Heller and A. Waczkat (Rostock, 1994), 67–74
H.-J. Schulze: 'Über den Endzweck der Kirchenmusik in Leipzig nach 1750', BJb 1995 (1995), 191–3
D.R. Melamed: 'J.F. Doles's Setting of a Picander Libretto and J.S. Bach's Teaching of Vocal Composition', JM, xiv (1996), 453–74

J. BRADFORD ROBINSON

Doležálek, Jan Emanuel (b Chotěboř, nr Jihlava, 22 May 1780; d Vienna, 6 July 1858). Bohemian composer, instrumentalist and teacher. He was born into the tradition of village schoolmaster–composers which characterized Czech cultural life in the 18th and 19th centuries; his considerable musical talent enabled him to move from his provincial environment to Vienna, where he studied with Albrechtsberger. There he soon became known as a versatile musician, playing the piano and the organ well enough to compete for the position of court organist in 1822 (he was defeated in this contest by his compatriot Voříšek) and giving concerts as a cellist. He also gained a reputation as a teacher and composer.

Most of Doležálek's compositions are for piano and consist of dances and sets of variations which were published by the Viennese firms of Artaria and Mechetti; among these his Deux marches russes and his Variations sur un thème de M. Umlauf tiré du ballet became popular. He also wrote many songs for voice and piano, some of which are settings of texts by such German authors as Schiller and Goethe (e.g. Nähe des Geliebten). However, his most charming songs are those to Czech texts, notably his collection of 15 Czeské písně v hudbu uvedené ('Czech songs set to music', Vienna, 1812), three of which were included in the five-volume Věnec ze zpěvů vlasteneckých ('A garland of patriotic songs', Prague, 1835–9; ed. J. Plavec, Prague, 1960), which was aimed at heightening national feeling and revitalizing the Czech language. A number of manuscripts of his sacred choral works, including a fine Mass in D, survive (CZ-Pnm). He was acquainted with Beethoven (reminiscences of whom are incorporated in Jahn's and Thayer's biographies), who was the major influence on his work.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DČHP
K. Hůlka: 'O starší české písni umělé' [On the older Czech art song], Dalibor, xxviii (1906), 259
M. Tarantová: 'Fr. Schiller a Johann Wolfgang Goethe v hudbě českého obrození' [Schiller and Goethe in music of the Czech revival], Zprávy Bertramky, nos.48–9 (1966), 1–9
S. Klima: 'Hudebník a vlastenec Jan Emanuel Doležálek, 1780–1858' [The musician and patriot Jan Emanuel Doležálek], HV, xxiv (1987), 269–80

ADRIENNE SIMPSON/KARL STAPLETON

Dolge, Alfred (b Leipzig, 22 Dec 1848; d Milan, 5 Jan 1922). American manufacturer of piano felts and soundboards and dealer in piano supplies. He began his career as an apprentice in the piano factory of A. Dolge & Co. in Leipzig, emigrating to the USA in 1866. From 1867 to 1869 he worked in the New Haven, Connecticut, shop of Frederick Mathushek (who had worked with J.H. Pape in Paris). He subsequently left to become an importer of piano supplies (skins for piano hammers and Poehlmann's music wire), and by 1871, in Brooklyn, he was manufacturing hammer felts which in 1873 won a first prize at the Vienna Exhibition. The demand for good-quality felts led him to establish in 1874 a larger manufacturing concern in the Adirondack village of Brockett's Bridge. With ample water power and a large timber supply for the making of soundboards, Dolge transformed the town (renamed Dolgeville in 1887) into a busy industrial community, which later also became the centre of Zimmermann autoharp manufacture. Dolge's felts and soundboards were used by most leading piano makers. Throughout his career, he maintained a large piano supply-house at 122 East 13th Street, New York.

After attempting to build a railway connection for the transport of his products, Dolge suffered financial disaster in 1898 and left Dolgeville to begin a new life in southern California, first as an orange rancher and wine producer, later as a felt maker at the Alfred Dolge Felt Co. (at Dolgeville, California). He was also the author of Pianos and their Makers, which gives valuable information about early 20th-century developments in American piano making, including descriptions of Dolge's own improvements in machines for applying felt to hammers and in the quality of the felt.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. Spillane: History of the American Pianoforte (New York, 1890/R), 316ff
A. Dolge: Pianos and their Makers, i (Covina, CA, 1911–13/R); ii (Covina, 1913/R)
J.C. Freund: 'An Inspiring Memorial Tribute to Alfred Dolge', Music Trades (11 Feb 1922)

CYNTHIA ADAMS HOOVER

Dolgorukov, Prince Pavel Ivanovich (b Moscow, 21 Nov/1 Dec 1787; d Moscow, ?8/20 Feb 1845). Russian composer. His father was the well-known writer and poet Prince Ivan Mikhaylovich Dolgorukov (1764–1822).

Prior to taking up an appointment in the civil service in 1809, he was a student at the University of Moscow. A fine pianist, he took part in numerous concerts arranged by Daniil Nikitich Kashin (1769–1841) at the university, and most of his piano pieces were written for these occasions. Like many of his contemporaries, he composed several sets of variations on Russian folktunes, including Vïydu l' ya na rechenku and Golova bolit. He also composed a number of shorter dance pieces, among which are three polonaises opp.7, 8 and 12, and two sets of six waltzes opp.4 and 13. His earliest piano works date from the first decade of the 19th century; a number were published by the St Petersburg publisher F.A. Dittmar and are listed in a catalogue of the publications of Dittmar's successor, Paez, which appeared in 1810. He wrote sympathetically for the piano in a diatonic style, spiced occasionally with mild chromaticism. His best compositions are the dramatic marches written in memory of the heroes of the war of 1812; contemporary records suggest that he composed at least eight before 1815, three of which are available in modern anthologies.

GEOFFREY NORRIS

Doliarius, Hieronim. See WIETOR, HIERONIM.

Dolidze, Viktor (b Ozurgeti, 18 June 1890; d Tbilisi, 20 May 1933). Georgian composer. While attending the Tbilisi Commercial School he organized an orchestra of guitars and mandolins, and in 1910 he won a gold medal in a mandolin competition in the city. He then studied at the Kiev Commercial Institute (1912–17), simultaneously taking lessons in composition and the violin at a music school. In 1917 he returned to his homeland and devoted himself entirely to composition.

He was one of the founders of professional music in Georgia, remembered particularly as the composer of the first Georgian comic opera, Keto da Kote ('Keto and Kote', 1919). This is a number opera, distinguished by rapid and energetic pacing, an abundance of comic situations, happy and unexpected turns of events, and lively folk humour. Stock characters are defined each by a single solo, while the more developed central couple have several arias apiece, as they might in Rossini or Donizetti. What particularizes Dolidze's opera is its musical language, which relies on the unique folklore of old Tbilisi and adds not only Georgian but also eastern (mainly Armenian) elements to the opera buffa style. Indeed, Dolidze was the first composer to use urban folk music, and the première of his first opera made his name. His success, though, was shortlived. His later operas – the lyrical psychological drama Leila; Tsisana, on a revolutionary subject; and the unfinished Zamira, on Ossetian folk themes – are weaker both dramatically and musically, and his instrumental works are also secondary, except in that his Piano Concerto is notable as the first such written in Georgia.

WORKS

Ops: Keto da Kote [Keto and Kote] (Dolidze, after A. Tsagareli: Khanuma), 1919; Leila (Dolidze, after Tsagareli: Lekis kali Guldjavari [The Lezgin Girl Guldjavar]), 1920; Tsisana (Dolidze, after S. Ertatsmindeli), 1922; Zamira, inc. [on the subject of Ossetian folk themes]

Orch: Iveriada, sym. fantasy, 1925; Osuri siuita [Ossetian suite], 1925; Azerbaidjan Symphony, 1932; Conc., pf, orch, 1932

Other works incl. 20 romances

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Kvaliashvili: 'Kartuli saopero khelovnebis mogvatseni' [Georgian opera art founders], Sabchota khelovneba (1958), no.3, pp.30–32
M. Vachnadze: 'Tbilisis momgerali' [Singer of the praises of Tbilisi], Sabchota khelovneba (1958), no.10, p.33–4
S. Korev: 'Keto i Kote' V. Dolidze [V. Dolidze's Keto and Kote] (Moscow and Leningrad, Muzgiz, 1961)
M. Pichkhadze: 'Pirveli kartuli klasikuri musikaluri komedia' [The first Georgian classical music comedy], Sabchota khelovneba (1971), no.8, pp.29–36
M. Pichkhadze: 'Viktor Dolidze', Sabchota Khelovneba (1980), no.12, pp.46–9
L. Donadze: 'Viktor Dolidzis shemokmedeba' [Viktor Dolidze's works], Sabchota khelovneba (1983), no.4, p.44
L. Donadze: 'V. Dolidze', Kartuli musikis istoria [History of Georgian music], i (Tbilisi, 1990), 264–96

KETEVAN BOLASHVILI

Doll [Dol], Joseph [Giuseppe] (d Naples, Aug 1774). German musician and teacher, active in Italy. Sponsored by the archbishop, Cardinal Spinelli, he entered the Neapolitan Conservatorio dei Poveri di Gesù on 15 December 1736, where he was registered as 'Giuseppe Doll di Baviera, todesco'. His teachers were Francesco Durante and, after 1738, Francesco Feo. In 1749 his cantata Per la solenne esposizione del Ss sagramento (I-FOLc), on a text by Guiseppe Ercolani, was performed in Foligno. On 1 December 1755, after the death of Durante, he and Carlo Cotumacci joined Girolamo Abos as maestri at the Conservatorio di S Onofrio a Capuana in Naples. The institution's Libro maggiore for 1755–7 shows that three teachers were treated as equals in rank and salary. Doll was the only non-Italian ever to become a maestro of a Neapolitan conservatory. In 1757 Gaetano Grossatesta, impresario of the Teatro S Carlo, characterized him as 'giovane virtuoso e capece' and suggested that he be commissioned with an opera, but nothing came of it. Mozart, who met Doll in Naples, wrote to his sister on 5 June 1770: 'We gorged ourselves today with Herr Doll. He is a German composer and a fine fellow'. Shortly before his death Doll was appointed second organist at the Cappella del Tesoro in Naples Cathedral. He was succeeded there, and at S Onofrio, by Giacomo Insanguine. A manuscript copy of a four-voiced setting of a Pater noster assigned to 'Giuseppe Dol Ungarese' is preserved in Bergamo (I-BGc).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GiacomoC
S. Di Giacomo: Maestri di cappella, musici & istromenti al Tesoro di San Gennaro nei secoli XVII & XVIII (Naples, 1920)
U. Prota-Giurleo: 'Notizie biografiche intorno ad alcuni musicisti d'oltralpe a Napoli nel Settecento', AnMc, no.2 (1965), 112–43
E. Anderson, ed.: The Letters of Mozart and his Family (London, 1938, rev. 2/1966, by M. Carolan and A.H. King), i, 142

HANNS-BERTOLD DIETZ

Dollarhide, Theodore (b Santa Rosa, CA, 30 Aug 1948). American composer. He studied composition at San José State University in 1974 with Higo Harada, then with Leslie Bassett, William Bolcom and George Wilson at the University of Michigan. A Fulbright scholarship enabled him to study with Eugene Kurtz in Paris from 1978 to 1979. He has had teaching positions at the universities of Michigan and Wisconsin, and at Indiana University of Pennsylvania. In 1981 he began his close association with Australian music through an appointment to La Trobe University. He remained there until 1988 and had a major impact on a number of the newer generation of Australian composers, including Peter Myers and Mark C. Pollard. From 1988 to 1990 he was Visiting Professor at Yonsei

University in Korea. He returned to the United States in 1990 and from then until 1996 was composer-in-residence with the Santa Rosa SO. His early compositions exploit the texture and tone-colour of large instrumental forces, as is illustrated in Other Dreams, Other Dreamers and Faces at the Blue Front. His later works are more focussed on pitch and rhythm processes of the kind used by other American composers such as Elliott Carter. Works in this style include The Dangerous Life and Samul Nori.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Other Dreams, Other Dreamers, 1976; Faces at the Blue Front, concert band, 1978; Pluriels, 1980; Black Bear Snow Dancing, 1986; The Dark Horse, 1991; Fanfare, 1992

Other inst: Shoestrings, fl, gui, 1977; By Thunder Mill Pond, trbn, 1981; The Dangerous Life, 2 gui, 1984; Samul Nori, cl, va, vc, pf, 1988; Aria, vc, pf, 1990

Choral: 3 Poems (B. Brecht), 1983; Whisper to me, Lord, 1985

Principal publishers: MMB Music, American Composers Editions, La Trobe University Press

MARK POLLARD

Dollé, Charles (fl ? 1735–55). French composer, viol player and teacher ('maître de viole'). He worked in Paris. Throughout his Pièces de viole op.2, dedicated to the Prince of Carignan, Dollé used the signs for vibrato and ornaments adopted by Marin Marais, and the second of his three suites includes a tombeau for Marais le père, a rondeau whose chordal style, use of the high register and vibrato (called 'plainte') recall the expressive playing of the late master of the viol. The Pièces op.3 contains 25 character pieces for six-string pardessus de viole, which are divided into three levels of difficulty. The titles of two pieces, La Roland and La Morel, suggest his acquaintance with the viol players Roland Marais and Jacques Morel. The sonatas in op.4, though consciously italianate in melodic style, with frequent sequences, syncopations and wide leaps, still reflect the French taste in expression and ornamentation. Op.4 includes five pièces with descriptive titles, which employ frequent double stops. Published 17 years later, his duets op.6 for five-string pardessus de viole are closer to violin writing, with widely spaced chords, parallel thirds and imitation. They are thoroughly italianate in form and melody but retain the ornaments of the French style.

WORKS
all published in Paris

Sonates en trio pour les violons, flûtes-traversières et violes avec la basse continue, op.1 (1737)

Pièces de viole, b viol, bc, op.2 (1737)

[25] Pièces pour le pardessus de viole, 1/2 pardessus de viole, bc, op.3 (1737), copy in US-NH

[10] Sonates, duos & pièces, 1/2 pardessus de viole/viol/vn/fl, bc, op.4 (1737)

Livres troisième, pour le pardessus de viole, tant à cinq qu'à six cordes, op.5, lost, announced in Mercure de France, Dec 1749

Sonates à deux pardessus de viole sans basse, op.6 (1754)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R.A. Green: 'Charles Dollé's First Work for pardessus de viole', JVdGSA, xviii (1981), 67–75

A. Rose: 'Another Collection of Pièces by Charles Dollé', Chelys, xi (1982), 32–5

R.A. Green: 'Recent Researches and Conclusions Concerning the "pardessus de viole" in Eighteenth-Century France', Viola da Gamba Miscellany: Utrecht 1991, 103–14

MARY CYR

Döller, Florian Johann. See DELLER, FLORIAN JOHANN.

Dolmetsch. English family (of mixed French, German, Swiss and Bohemian origins) of instrument makers, scholars and performers of early music. (1) Arnold Dolmetsch had great influence on late 19th- and 20th-century attitudes to scholarship and performing practice, particularly through the reconstruction and development of obsolete instruments (the viols, keyboard instruments and notably the recorder). His work was continued by his heirs, principally (5) Carl Dolmetsch.

(1) (Eugène) Arnold Dolmetsch (b Le Mans, 24 Feb 1858; d Haslemere, 28 Feb 1940). Pioneer in the revival of performances of early music (particularly instrumental) on the original instruments and in the style of the period. Born into a family of musicians and craftsmen, he learnt piano making in his father's workshop and organ building from his maternal grandfather, Armand Guillouard. In 1878 he married Marie Morel, a lawyer's daughter eight years his senior. After a short visit to the USA, he studied privately with Vieuxtemps and at the Brussels Conservatory from 1881 to 1883. He then went to the Royal College of Music, in its first year, where he studied the violin with Henry Holmes and harmony with Bridge; he also played in the first five concerts given at the college in a quartet led by Emil Kreuz (1883–4). George Grove, both then and later, encouraged his growing interest in early music. From 1885 to 1889 he taught the violin at Dulwich College, where to assist intonation he fretted his pupils' violins and favoured the learning of simple tunes rather than scales or exercises. His published arrangements of instrumental music by Corelli, Handel and Purcell, with realizations of the figured basses, date from this time and are not truly representative of his work.

In 1889, while looking for music for the viola d'amore, Dolmetsch first came upon English fantasies for viols in the RCM library and in the British Museum. He began to acquire and restore early instruments, which were then played by his wife, his daughter and some of his pupils. In 1890–92 he supplied musical illustrations to Bridge's Gresham lectures, playing works by Jenkins, Simpson, William Lawes and Locke, on viols and harpsichord. At his first public concert, in June 1890, his daughter Hélène played Eight Divisions on a Ground by Simpson on the bass viol. Throughout the 1890s he gave concerts in his own home on period instruments, regularly introducing works taken from manuscripts and early printed editions. In 1894 he and his wife separated; they were later divorced. At that time Dolmetsch still lived in Dulwich; later he moved to Bloomsbury where Elodie, formerly the wife of Edgard Dolmetsch (Arnold's brother), kept house for him and played the harpsichord in his concerts. They were married in 1899.

After restoring many old instruments, Dolmetsch made his first lute in 1893; his first clavichord followed in 1894. At the suggestion of William Morris he built his first harpsichord, which was shown at the Arts and Crafts Exhibition in October 1896. It was at this time that Mabel Johnston first came to Dolmetsch as a violin pupil; she later became an apprentice instrument maker. In 1897 Arnold and Elodie played the harpsichord continuo in the first 'modern' performance of Purcell's King Arthur (in Fuller Maitland's edition) in Birmingham under Richter. In July 1900 he provided the musical accompaniment for Isadora Duncan's Dance Idylls at the New Gallery in London.

In 1902, after various financial and domestic upheavals, he toured the USA, where he was greeted with enthusiasm. The next year, when his second marriage failed, he married Mabel Johnston. He went to America again in 1904, when he worked with Ben Greet, the Shakespearean actor-manager; at Boston he accepted a job at the piano makers Chickering & Sons, running a department of his own where he made harpsichords, clavichords, lutes and viols. Some of his finest instruments date from this period, including a harpsichord for Busoni. He stayed with Chickering from 1905 to 1911. After a trade recession he left the USA, and he worked for Gaveau in Paris from 1911 to 1914.

At this time he began the work which led to the publication of his book on the interpretation of 17th- and 18th-century music. Although many other scholars have since expanded the state of knowledge in this field, Dolmetsch's work remains a landmark: at that time nothing comprehensive had been written on the subject. In 1914 Dolmetsch returned to England; in the following year, he designed and built his first 'triangular harpsichord', a spinet-type instrument with two pedals which, when folded, fitted into a London taxicab.

In 1917 he moved to Haslemere, and he later taught at Dunhurst School. In 1919, following the loss of a Bressan recorder acquired in 1905, he perfected the first modern recorder made to Baroque specifications. Friends financed the building of a workshop in 1920, and from that time until World War II Haslemere was a centre for the study and re-creation of the traditions of performance of the music of previous centuries under unique conditions. The first Haslemere Festival was held in 1925 and consisted of two weeks of concerts of early music played on contemporary instruments. By 1926, Dolmetsch had reconstructed the full family of recorders and these were played for the first time in the festival of that year. Although those early performances showed signs of under-rehearsal, interest and support were such that the festival became an annual event. Much of the music performed there is still edited from manuscripts and early printed music in the Dolmetsch library, which (together with its instruments) was one of the finest private collections in England (now at the Horniman Museum, London). The workshops that Dolmetsch started still produce keyboard instruments and viols following Arnold's maxims and developed by his son (5) Carl Dolmetsch, but it is the recorder which is especially associated with the workshops at Haslemere; examples are to be found in the hands of schoolchildren and of professional players all over the world. In 1929 the Dolmetsch Foundation was established to further the study and performance of music according to Dolmetsch's principles: it provides apprenticeships and scholarships to students of all nationalities and produces a bi-annual journal devoted to its aims, the Consort (first published in 1929, sporadically until 1948, and continuously from that date).

In 1937 Dolmetsch was granted a British Civil List pension, and in 1938 the French made him a Chevalier de la Légion d'honneur; in 1939 he was awarded an honorary DMus by Durham University.

Throughout his career Dolmetsch was met consistently by the prejudice of his contemporaries, which was due largely to their scepticism, but also to his own intolerant and intractable nature. Towards the end of his life scholars and musicians were at last beginning to recognize the true value of his work, but he was a very sick man and had by then lost touch with them and their researches, and refused to believe their sincerity when they praised him. In Grove 5 Donington, who worked and studied at Haslemere, wrote:

> In his prime his critical faculty fully matched his uncanny intuition: in his last years his intuition remained more fruitful than unintuitive learning can ever be, but grew less sure from lack of scholarly contact ... His flair for early style and for inspired tone-production on early instruments ... amounted to a unique phenomenon ... He once characteristically remarked 'students should learn principles rather than pieces: then they can do their own thinking'.

Arnold Dolmetsch

Dolmetsch's great gift was that, in a period when early music was virtually ignored except for academic study, he had both the imagination and the musicianship to take a musical work which had become a museum piece and make it speak to the people of his own time in a language intelligible to them. Today, the performance of early music has taken its place as a subject for serious study: Dolmetsch's pioneering work helped to lay the foundation for such a development.

WRITINGS

'The Lute: I', The Connoisseur, viii (1904), April, 213
'The Lute: II', The Connoisseur, ix (1904), May, 23
'The Viols', The Connoisseur, x (1904), Nov, 134
The Interpretation of the Music of the XVII and XVIII Centuries Revealed by Contemporary Evidence (London, 1915, 2/1946/*R*1969 with preface by A. Harman)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Donington: The Work and Ideas of Arnold Dolmetsch (Haslemere, 1932)
P. Grainger: 'Arnold Dolmetsch: Musical Confucius', MQ, xix (1933), 187–98
Obituary, The Times (1 March 1940) [funeral report, 4 March]
Obituary, MT, lxxxi (1940), 137
W. McNaught: 'Arnold Dolmetsch and his Work', MT, lxxxi (1940), 153–5
M. Dolmetsch: Personal Recollections of Arnold Dolmetsch (London, 1958/R)
S. Bloch: 'Saga of a Twentieth-Century Lute Pioneer', JSLA, ii (1969), 37–43
M. Campbell: Dolmetsch: the Man and his Work (London, 1975)
M. Campbell: 'Not Quite Eye to Eye', The Consort, l (1994), 124–9
M. Campbell: 'Authenticity Reborn: Dolmetsch the Violinist', The Strad, cvi (1995), 492–5

(2) Mabel Dolmetsch (b London, 6 Aug 1874; d Haslemere, 12 Aug 1963). Third wife of (1) Arnold Dolmetsch. She specialized in the playing of the bass viol, and studied this instrument with (3) Hélène Dolmetsch. She is best known for her extensive researches into court dances of the 16th, 17th and 18th centuries. She had four children: Cécile (b Dorking, 22 March 1904; d Haslemere, 8 Aug 1997), who specialized in playing the pardessus de viole; Nathalie (b Chicago, 31 July 1905; d Seavington St Mary, 14 Feb 1989), who founded the Viola da Gamba Society in 1948 and edited much viol music, wrote prefaces to facsimile editions of tutors for the viol by Simpson and John Playford (1955, 1965) and wrote The Viola da Gamba: its Origin and History, its Technique and Musical Resources (London, 1962, 2/1968); (4) Rudolph Dolmetsch; and (5) Carl Dolmetsch.

WRITINGS

Dances of England and France from 1450 to 1600 (London, 1949/R)
Dances of Spain and Italy from 1400 to 1600 (London, 1954/R)
Personal Recollections of Arnold Dolmetsch (London, 1958/R)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. Poulton: 'Mabel Dolmetsch: a Tribute', LSJ, v (1963), 49

(3) Hélène Dolmetsch (b Nancy, France, 14 April 1878; d Dulwich, 7 July 1924). Only daughter of (1) Arnold Dolmetsch by his first wife. A pupil of Carl Fuchs, she was a cellist and a highly gifted viol player. Her career began in her father's concerts when she was seven, but in 1902, following litigation over the disputed ownership of an instrument, she ceased to play with the Dolmetsch consort.

(4) Rudolph (Arnold) Dolmetsch (b Cambridge, MA, 8 Nov 1906; d 6 or 7 Dec 1942). The eldest son of (1) Arnold Dolmetsch and his third wife. He played the harpsichord and viol, the former brilliantly and the latter with a promising natural talent. He was educated at the RCM and was the first of the family to show an interest in modern music, both as composer and conductor. His career was cut short tragically when he was lost at sea during the war.

(5) Carl (Frederick) Dolmetsch (b Fontenay-sous-Bois, France, 23 Aug 1911; d Haslemere, 11 July 1997). Second son of (1) Arnold Dolmetsch and his third wife, (2) Mabel. He made his début in a viol consort at the age of seven, and was a soloist at the first Haslemere Festival (1925). He studied with his father, Carl Flesch and Antonio Brosa. He played a variety of instruments, including viols, but was best known for his virtuoso recorder playing. He was a founder-member and was the first musical director of the Society of Recorder Players (founded 1937). In 1947 he became the musical director of the Haslemere Festival and the Dolmetsch Foundation.

Carl Dolmetsch was the father of four children. Jeanne and Marguerite (both b Haslemere, 15 Aug 1942) were educated at the RAM and also studied the recorder, viol and harpsichord with their father. Jeanne specializes in the recorder and treble viol, Marguerite in the recorder and tenor viol. Both played in the Dolmetsch Ensemble with their father. Carl's second son was Richard (Arnold) (b Haslemere, 2 March 1945; d Preston, 9 May 1966), who was educated at the RAM and played the recorder, violin and harpsichord. In 1961 he won the Gold Medal of Le Royaume de Musique in Paris, but his later years were marred by illness, and he committed suicide.

Carl Dolmetsch gave regular recitals with Joseph Saxby (harpsichord) and had many works specially written for him and his instruments by Berkeley, Cooke, Chagrin, Gál, Maw and Rubbra, among others. As well as his concert activities, Carl supervised the workshops at Haslemere. He wrote many articles for a variety of journals, both musical and those concentrating on the technical aspects of instrument construction. He made many editions of music for recorder, and was the general editor of Il Flauto Dolce, a series of tutors and music for the instrument. He was made a CBE in 1954.

WRITINGS

Ornamentation and Phrasing for the Recorder (London, 1939)
'Recorder and German Flute during the 17th and 18th Centuries', PRMA, lxxxiii (1956–7), 49–63

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Obituaries: M. Campbell, The Guardian (14 July 1997); S. Godwin: The Independent (14 July 1997)

MARGARET CAMPBELL

Dolphy, Eric (Allan) (b Los Angeles, 20 June 1928; d Berlin, 29 June 1964). American jazz alto saxophonist, bass clarinettist and flautist. After studying music at Los Angeles City College, he played the alto saxophone in Roy Porter's band (1948–50). He then served in the US Army for two years, after which he transferred to the US Naval School of Music (1952–3). He returned to Los Angeles and joined Chico Hamilton's quintet early in 1958. In New York he worked with Charles Mingus's group (1959–60) and also played freelance a great deal and recorded his first albums as a leader; but thereafter he ceased to work steadily, even as his fame grew. In mid-1961 he led a quintet with the trumpeter Booker Little. He played in Europe on his own and during a brief spell with John Coltrane (to March 1962), then in November 1962 joined John Lewis's Orchestra U.S.A. He spent the rest of his short career working freelance with Mingus, Lewis and Coltrane, though he also recorded as a leader, including Out to Lunch (1964, BN). He died after a heart attack occasioned by diabetes.

Dolphy was a highly versatile African American musician who played jazz but also performed third-stream music by Gunther Schuller and pieces such as Edgard Varèse's Density 21.5 at the Ojai (California) Music Festival in 1962. This close link to 20th-century art music influenced his fondness for dissonant harmonies in jazz. His startling intonation, especially on the alto saxophone, reflected the acknowledged influence of Ornette Coleman, as well as his love of African and Indian music; he also imitated bird calls. As a jazz improviser Dolphy was unrivalled in his ability to leap fluently between traditional and avant-garde idioms. An intense, passionate improviser, he constantly surprised his listeners with his rapid flow of ideas and his unexpected phrasing and intervals. Perhaps his greatest contribution was his exploration of the bass clarinet as a medium for jazz improvisation; What Love, on the album Charles Mingus Presents Charles Mingus (1960, Cand.), includes bass clarinet 'conversations' with Mingus. A volume of transcriptions of his solos, Dolphy Series Limited (Washington DC, n.d.) has been published by Andrew White.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. DeMicheal: 'John Coltrane and Eric Dolphy Answer the Critics', Down Beat, xxix/8 (1962), 20–23
D. Heckman: 'The Value of Eric Dolphy', Down Beat, xxxi/27 (1964), 17 only
J. Cooke: 'Eric Dolphy', JazzM, xi/11 (1966), 25–40
V. Simosko and B. Tepperman: Eric Dolphy: a Musical Biography and Discography (Washington DC, 1974)
R. Jannotta: 'God Bless the Child: an Analysis of an Unaccompanied Bass Clarinet Solo', Jazzforschung/Jazz Research, ix (1977), 37–48
U. Reichardt: Like a Human Voice: the Eric Dolphy Discography (Schmitten, 1986)

BARRY KERNFELD

Doltzana [dolzana, dulzan, dulzana]. A term, found in late 16th-century sources, that may refer to the dulcian (see BASSOON, §2), the pommer (see SHAWM) or the DOLZAINA.

Dolukhanova, Zara [Zarui] (Agas'yevna) (b Moscow, 15 March 1918). Russian mezzo-soprano. She studied with V. Belyayeva-Tarasevich at the Gnesin music school, and graduated from the Gnesin Institute in 1957. In 1939 she made her début at the Yerevan Opera but soon left the stage for the concert hall. She was, however, one of the singers who took part in re-establishing Rossini's florid mezzo roles in the repertory: she broadcast performances of Cinderella and Rosina (also Cherubino) and recorded extracts of Semiramide. She was appointed a soloist with the All-Union Radio and Television in 1944, and with the Moscow PO in 1959. Dolukhanova was outstanding among Russian singers of her day. She used the wide range and agility of her coloratura voice with controlled ease, giving polished performances of such differing composers as Musorgsky, Tchaikovsky, Prokofiev, Verdi and Debussy; she also gave the first performance (1955) of Shostakovich's cycle From Jewish Folk Poetry. In all her interpretations she displayed a keen style, and she went to the heart of whatever she sang. She toured widely, in east Europe, and in Italy, France, Britain, Argentina, the USA, Japan, New Zealand and other countries.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

N. Mikhaylovskaya: Zara Dolukhanova (Moscow, 1960)
V. Timokhin: Zara Dolukhanova (Moscow, 1977)

I.M. YAMPOL'SKY/R

Dolzaina [doltzana, dolzana, dulcina, dulzaina, dulzan, dulzana] (It.; Fr. doçaine, douçaine, doussaine, douchaine, dulceuse etc.; Sp. dulçayna, dulzayna, duçaina etc.). Term widely documented in Romance languages from the 13th century to the 17th; it was apparently used for a number of quiet double-reed instruments, possibly including the CRUMHORN. Tinctoris distinguished the 'dulcina' from the shawm, describing the former as having seven finger-holes and a thumb-hole and being 'imperfect' since 'not every kind of piece can be played on it'. The instrument may have resembled a shawm, but with a cylindrical bore; it is possibly identifiable with the English 'still shawm' and with a unique instrument recovered from Henry VIII's flagship Mary Rose. In 16th-century Italy the dolzaina may have had its bore bent back on itself, like the early bassoon or 'dulcian'. Zacconi described it as having a range of a 9th, from c to d′ (representing a tenor size); this dolzaina apparently had a double reed on a brass crook and may have been not unlike a SORDUN. A canzona by Buonamente (1636) specifies a dolzaina with a range D–c′: a sordun with additional finger-holes and keys would have had a range sufficient for the piece. This canzona constitutes the latest evidence for the use of the instrument.

Scholars' understanding of the term has changed during the 20th century. Sachs regarded 'dolzaina' and 'douçaine' as alternative names for the crumhorn, whereas Kinsky distinguished between medieval and Renaissance forms, holding the former to be a type of bladder pipe and the latter to be similar to Praetorius's cornamusa. Boydell rejected the identification of the dolzaina/douçaine as a wind-cap instrument, but Mayer argued that the term could refer to crumhorns in the 15th and 16th centuries. A shrill folk oboe, the dulzaina, is still in use in Spain (see SHAWM, §5).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

PraetoriusSM, ii
L. Zacconi: Prattica di musica (Venice, 1592/R)
C. Sachs: 'Doppioni und Dulzaina: zur Namensgeschichte des Krummhorns', SIMG, xi (1909–10), 590–93
G. Kinsky: 'Doppelrohrblatt-Instrumente mit Windkapsel', AMw, vii (1925–6), 253–96
A. Baines: 'Fifteenth-Century Instruments in Tinctoris's De inventione et usu musicae', GSJ, iii (1950), 19–25
B. Klitz: 'A Composition for Dolzaina', JAMS, xxiv (1971), 113–18
B.R. Boydell: The Crumhorn and Other Renaissance Windcap Instruments (Buren, 1982), appx
K.T. Meyer: The Crumhorn: its History, Design, Repertory, and Technique (Ann Arbor, 1983), 14–23, 26–32
H.W. Myers: 'The Mary Rose "Shawm"', EMc, xi (1983), 358–60
E. Küller: 'Eine Doppelrohrblattinstrument mit zylindrischer Bohrung: ein Beitrag zur Diskussion um Tinctoris' "Dulcina"', Collegium musicologicum: Festschrift Emil Platen, ed. M. Gutiérrez-Denhoff (Bonn, 1985, 2/1986), 8–20

BARRA R. BOYDELL

Dolzhansky, Aleksandr Naumovich (b Rostov-na-Donu, 31 Aug/12 Sept 1908; d Leningrad, 21 Sept 1966). Russian musicologist, teacher and educationist. He studied composition at the Leningrad Conservatory with Kushnaryov, Tyulin and Ryazanov, graduating in 1936. He taught there from 1937 and, although dismissed in 1948 for maintaining his support for the renounced Shostakovich, he worked there again from 1954 to 1966; during these periods his pupils included Milka, Rafayel' Zalmanovich Frid and Yuzhak. For many years he was chairman of the critics' section of the Leningrad Union of Composers.

A key innovator and systemizer of music theory, Dolzhansky classified harmonic systems into four types: 'vertical' or 'gradational' (church modes), 'polar' (major or minor), 'neutral' (interspersing major and minor) and closed, self-opposing 'unitary' systems (such as the whole-tone scale). He developed the theory of harmonically opposed harmonies and in polyphony introduced a distinction between tonally and contrapuntally developed types of fugue. He also demonstrated how compositional form could have a bearing on the artistic effect of the work. An interest in counterpoint and musical form drew him to the fugues of J.S. Bach and to Beethoven, in particular the tonal schemes of the symphonies and sonatas. He also published studies of various Russian composers from Tchaikovsky onwards, and wrote a series of pocket-books on composers issued to audiences at concerts of the Leningrad Philharmonic.

Dolzhansky's discoveries are, however, especially linked to the work of Shostakovich. He revealed the consistency of Shostakovich's diatonic evolution and defined the harmonic variety and modulatory system found in his music, foreseeing as early as 1947 the tonal schemes which were to reappear in a number of the composer's future works. He showed the artistic meaning of the changes that Shostakovich wrought in sonata and symphonic form. To Shostakovich scholarship he also introduced the concept of the 'Alexandrian pentachord' – the diatonic six-note structure within the limits of a pure-5th – and then conceived the idea of replacing this with the more precise concept of the 'Alexandrian hexachord'.

Music education was a special interest of Dolzhansky, and always conveyed his ideas with thoroughness and in an accessible manner. His Kratkiy muzïkal'nïy slovar' ('A short dictionary of music') is distinguished by its unity, simplicity and precision, and Kratkiy kurs garmonii dlya lyubiteley muzïki i nachinayushchikh professionalov ('A short course in harmony for amateurs and young professionals') is marked by the originality of its teaching method. The volume of essays Muzïka Chaykovskogo: simfonicheskiye proizvedeniya ('The music of Tchaikovsky: symphonic works') is written in the accessible, literary style of the composer's own journalism and letters and an appendix to the 1963 monograph on Shostakovich's 24 Preludes and Fugues contains a possible outline for a textbook on polyphony. Dolzhansky also lectured, widely to popular audiences. In collaboration with G.B. Bernandt he compiled Sovetskiye kompozitorï: kratkiy biograficheskiy spravochnik ('Soviet composers: a short biographical directory'), the first of its kind in the Soviet Union.

WRITINGS

'O ladovoy osnove sochineniy Shostakovicha' [The harmonic foundations of the works of Shostakovich], SovM (1947), no.4, pp.65–74; repr. in Chertï stilya D. Shostakovicha (Moscow, 1962), 24–42 and Izbrannïye stat'i (Leningrad, 1973), 37–51

Kratkiy muzïkal'nïy slovar' [A short dictionary of music] (Leningrad, 1952, enlarged 5/1966; Chin. trans., 1957; Hung. trans., 1960)

'O kompozitsii pervoy chasti Sed'moy simfonii D. Shostakovicha' [The composition of the first movement of Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony], SovM (1956), no.4, pp.88–98; repr. in Chertï stilya D. Shostakovicha, 43–61 and Izbrannïye stat'i, 52–66 with G. Bernandt: Sovetskiye kompozitorï: kratkiy biograficheskiy spravochnik [Soviet composers: a short biographical directory] (Moscow, 1957)

'Puti razvitiya teorii Ye.N. Korchinskogo' [Paths of development in the theory of Korchinsky] (MS, 1958–9)

'Iz nablyudeniy nad stilem Shostakovicha (razroznennïye repliki)' [From observations on Shostakovich's style (ramdom replies to questions)], SovM (1959), no.10, pp.95–102; repr. in Chertï stilya D. Shostakovicha, 73–86 and Izbrannïye stat'i, 76–86

'Otnositel'no fugi' [On fugue], SovM (1959), no.4, pp.94–102; repr. in Izbrannïye stat'i, 151–62

Muzïka Chaykovskogo: simfonicheskiye proizvedeniya: nauchno-populyarnïye ocherki [The music of Tchaikovsky: symphonic works: specialist and popular studies] (Leningrad, 1960; rev. 2/1965 as Simfonicheskaya muzïka Chaykovskogo: izbrannïye proizvedeniya [The symphonic music of Tchaikovsky: selected works], 3/1981)

'Yeshchyo o "Pikovoy dame" i Shestoy simfonii Chaykovskogo' [More on Tchaikovsky's 'Queen of Spades' and Sixth Symphony], SovM (1960), no.7, pp.88–100; repr. in Izbrannïye stat'i, 162–77

L.G. Berger, ed.: Chertï stilya D. Shostakovicha [Stylistic traits of Shostakovich] (Moscow, 1962)

24 prelyudii i fugi D. Shostakovicha [Shostakovich's 24 preludes and fugues] (Leningrad, 1963, 2/1970)

Kamernïye instrumental'nïye proizvedeniya Shostakovicha [The instrumental chamber works of Shostakovich] (Moscow, 1965; repr. in Izbrannïye stat'i, 120–51)

Kratkiy kurs garmonii dlya lyubiteley muzïki i nachinayushchikh professionalov [A short course in harmony for amateurs and young professionals] (Moscow, 1966)

'Aleksandriyskiy pentakhord v muzïke Shostakovicha' [The Alexandrian Pentachord in the music of Shostakovich], Dmitry Shostakovich (Moscow), 397–439; repr. in Izbrannïye stat'i, 86–120

'Nekotorïye voprosï teorii lada' [Some problems in harmonic theory], Problemï lada, ed. K.I. Yuzhak (Moscow, 1972), 8–34

Izbrannïye stat'i [Selected articles] (Leningrad, 1973)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

SKM

B. Bobrovsky: 'Nauchnoye tvorchestvo A.N. Dolzhanskogo' [The work of Dolzhansky], A.N. Dolzhansky: Izbrannïye stat'i [Selected articles] (Leningrad, 1973), 3–20

A. Chernov: 'O lichnosti i tvorcheskom puti A.N. Dolzhanskogo' [The personality and work of Dolzhansky], ibid., 20–36

A.R. Milka, R.Z. Frid and K. Yuzhak: 'Otsenivaya proydennïy put' A.N. Dolzhanskogo' [Evaluating the career of Dolzhansky], SovM (1978), no.11, pp.123–5

S. Slonimsky: 'Rïtsar' muzïkal'koy nauki' [Champion of musicology], SovM (1983), no.9, pp.82–4

A.R. Milka: 'Tri sekundï s Dolzhanskim' [Three seconds with Dolzhansky], Donatio musicologica (Petrozavodsk, 1994), 63–7

K. Yuzhak: 'Shostakovich Dolzhanskogo: Opus 87, izmenyayushchiysya vo vremeni' [Dolzhansky's Shostakovich: Op.87 modified through time], D.D. Shostakovich: sbornik statey k 90-letiyu so dnya rozhdeniya [Shostakovich: a collection of essays for the 90th anniversary of his birth-date], ed. L.G. Kounatskaya (St Petersburg, 1996), 194–227

KIRA YUZHAK

Dolzian. A corruption either of dulzian, a name commonly used for an early bassoon (see BASSOON, §2), or of DOLZAINA.

Domaine Musical. Parisian concert society established by Boulez in 1954 and active until 1973; see PARIS, §VII.

Domaniewski, Bolesław Marian (b Gronówek, nr Sieradz, 16 July 1857; d Warsaw, 11 Sept 1925). Polish teacher, pianist and composer. From 1871 to 1874 he studied the piano with R. Lorer and Józef Wieniawski in Warsaw, and later at the St Petersburg Conservatory with A. Kross, Anton Rubinstein, Lyadov and Nikolay Solov'yov; on completing his studies in 1882 he was awarded a gold medal. He gave concerts from 1874, first in Russia, then in Poland, France and Italy. From 1890 to 1900 he was professor of the most advanced piano class at the Kraków

Conservatory. In 1900 he settled in Warsaw, where from 1902 to 1925 he was head of the School of Music (later renamed the Chopin High School of Music); he directed the piano class, and under his guidance the academic standards of the school attained a very high level. From 1906 to 1925 he was director of the Warsaw Music Society. Domaniewski wrote Vademecum pour pianistes modernes (Leipzig, 1897), a book of piano exercises which is still used. He also composed many piano pieces. From 1905 to 1907 he edited the fortnightly musical and literary journal Lutnista ('The Lutenist') and also wrote articles on music for other Polish periodicals.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

PSB (F. Kęcki); SMP
J. Kleczyński: 'Bolesław Domaniewski', Echo muzyczne, teatralne i artystyczne, v (1888), 133–4, 155
F. Kęcki: 'Domaniewski, Marian Bolesław', PSB
A. Spóz: Warsawskie Towarzystwo Muzyczne, 1871–1971 [The Warsaw Music Society] (Warsaw, 1971)

ELŻBIETA DZIĘBOWSKA

Domanínská [Klobásková, Vyčichlová], Libuše (b Brno, 4 July 1924). Czech soprano. She studied at Brno Conservatory and with Řezníčková, made her début with the Brno Opera (1945) and soon became a leading member of the company. Her soft, warm, 'jugendliche dramatische' soprano, gifted in cantilena and capable of delicate expressive nuances, was primarily valuable in Smetana. But she won great success as Janáček's Jenůfa, Kát'a Kabanová and Vixen, in which the outstanding character of her voice was supported by sensitive dramatic feeling. In 1955 she joined the Prague National Theatre and with that company sang at the Edinburgh and Holland festivals and the Helsinki Sibelius festival. She also appeared at the Teatro Colón, Buenos Aires, and from 1958 to 1968 as a regular guest at the Vienna Staatsoper. As well as her Czech roles, she sang in Russian and Soviet operas and in Verdi, Puccini and Mozart. She sang in Janáček's Glagolitic Mass at La Scala and her repertory included a wide range of oratorios and cantatas by Bach, Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven and Dvořák, and songs.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ČSHS
L. Šíp: Pěvci před mikrofonem [Singers in front of the microphone] (Prague, 1960), 83–4
E. Kopecký: Pěvci Národního divadla [The singers of the National Theatre] (Prague, 1983), 24–33
P. Skála, ed.: Čeští koncertní umělci: pěvci [Czech concert artists: singers] (Prague, 1984), 27–8
V. Procházka, ed.: Národní divadlo a jeho předchůdci [The National Theatre and its predecessors] (Prague, 1988) [incl. list of repertory and discography]
E. Dufková and B. Srba, eds.: Postavy brněnského jeviště [Personalities of the Brno stage], iii (Brno, 1994), 273–7

ALENA NĚMCOVÁ

Domanský, Hanuš (b Nový Hrozenkov, Moravia, 1 March 1944). Slovak composer. He studied the piano and composition at the Brno Conservatory (1962–5) before attending the Bratislava Academy of Music and Performing Arts, where he studied composition with Kardoš (until 1970). He has held appointments at the Slovkoncert music agency (1970–75) and as deputy editor-in-chief of music broadcasting at Slovak Radio in Bratislava (from 1975). He was president of the composers' section of the Slovak Composers' Union (1975–83); the committee of the Slovak Music Fund (1983–8); and of the international music competition of Radio Brno (1980–89). His solo violin work Dianoia was awarded the Ján Levoslav Bella Prize in 1976, and the Symphony no.2 won the 1984 Slovak Composers' Union Prize; the Bagatelles won the 1996 SOZA Prize for the most performed composition.

His music follows the tradition of Impressionism, particularly Debussy and such 20th-century masters as Stravinsky and Janáček. The piano is his favourite instrument, his music for which calls for subtle nuances of piano technique. His melodic lines consist of short fragments of tunes loosely ordered one after another; motifs may be repeated several times in succession or else reappear later in different contexts. His compositional style has evolved from an emphasis on sonority and dynamics. Lyrically and dynamically expressive, his music is based on contrasts of sound, mood, texture, dynamics and tempo. His musical vocabulary is largely diatonic, with instances of extended tonality (in the Bagatelles for piano and Dithyramby), modality and even pentatonism as in Klapancie (1972). For his subjects he often turns to poetry and history.

WORKS
(selective list)

INSTRUMENTAL

Orch: Conc. piccolo, 1970; Sym. no.1, 1979; Sym. no.2, 1983; Pf Conc., 1986; Chvála zeme [In Praise of the Earth], ov., 1987; Musica z Hontu [The Music of Hont], small orch, 1987; Pod Makytou [Under Makyta], Songs and Dances from Lysá pod Makytou, chbr orch, 1988; Doma ste, doma [At Home you Are, at Home], Christmas pastorals, small orch, 1990

Chbr and solo inst: Hudba [Music], 3 insts, fl, b cl, tpt, 1966; Passacaglia, pf, 1966; Pf Sonata, 1967; Str Qt no.1, 1968; Musica giocosa, 2 vn, pf, 1971; Inno, hymn, org, 1973; Dianoia, vn, 1976; Fragment sonáty, pf, 1977; Str Qt no.2, 1977; Bagatelles, pf, 1978; Dithyramby, pf, 1980; Ad libitum, cl, pf, perc, 1985; Miniatúry, pf, 1985; Ad libitum, cl, vib, pf, perc, 1987; Miniatúry, pf, 1987; XX fantázií (Miniportréty majstrov), pf, 1993; Fantázia (Chvála nehy) [In Praise of Tenderness], pf, 1997

El-ac: Chvála života [In Praise of Life], 1989; Hudba pre klavír, 1992

VOCAL

Choral: O zime [About Winter] (cant.), nar, children's chorus, orch, 1968; Fiat lux (orat), nar, S, chorus, orch, 1970; Neposlušné pesničky [Naughty Songs], children's chorus, fl, 2 vn, pf, 1971; Klapancie [Clappers] (17th- and 18th-century folksong texts], chorus, perc, 1972; Regrútske piesne [Recruits' Songs], male chorus, 1978; Vokálky [Little Vocalises], children's chorus, 1984; Liptovské impresie [Impressions of Liptov], S, female chorus, orch, 1985; Optimistická, children's chorus, pf, 1985; Kraviarky [Cowgirls] (4 songs, P. Gemer), chorus, orch, 1986; Hojana, male chorus, perc, 1989; Vianočné mystérium [Christmas Mystery], solo vv, chorus, orch, 1992

Other: Son et lumière, S, pf, 1969; Elegická suita, S, pf, 1987; Uspávanky z Liptova [Lullabies of Liptov], S/A, small orch, 1984; Žiale, moje žiale [Sorrows, my Sorrows] (love songs of Kysuce), S, orch, 1986

Principal publishers: Slovak Music Fund, Opus

BIBLIOGRAPHY

V. Adamčiaková: 'Bagately pre klavír', Hudobný život, xi/19 (1979), 4 only
I. Berger: 'Hanuš Domanský: Symfónia pre veľký orchester', Hudobný život, xv/19 (1983), 5 only
M. Adamčiak: 'Poétique compositionelle de Hanuš Domanský', Musique slovaque (1984), 11–12
A. Schindlerová: 'Hanuš Domanský, Pavol Bagin, Ladislav Holoubek', Hudobný život, xvii/11 (1985), 5
Ľ. Chalupka: 'Slovenská hudba 20. storočia: vy'voj po roku 1945' [Slovak music of the 20th century: development after 1945], Dejiny hudby od najstarších čias po súčasnosť, ed. O. Elschek (Bratislava, 1996), 273–342
O. Elschek, ed.: Dejiny slovenskej hudby od najstarších čias po súčasnost [History of Slovak music from the earliest to the present times] (Bratislava, 1996), 556–7

YVETTA LÁBSKA-KAJANOVÁ

Domarto, Petrus de (fl ?1445–55). Franco-Flemish composer. It is likely that he was a relative of the Reginaldus de Domarto who served as master of the choirboys at St Pierre, Lille, in 1457–8. Vatican documents from 1443–4 discovered by Alejandro Planchart show that a Petrus Domart alias Hamyon, cleric of Arras, submitted two petitions for papal dispensation of illegitimacy in order to obtain admission to minor orders. This cleric would have been born some time in the mid-1420s. However, two later documents that refer to the composer with certainty do not mention him as a priest. Payment records from the church of Our Lady at Antwerp list Domarto as a singer for a brief period in 1449. Two years later, in 1451, he was apparently active at Tournai: in that year the chapter of Cambrai Cathedral considered him, on account of his reputation as bonus musicus, as the second choice for the vacant post of master of the choirboys, after Paulus Iuvenis, but the latter eventually took the position.

Although Domarto remains a somewhat shadowy figure today he was an internationally known composer in his own time, mainly on account of his four-part Missa 'Spiritus almus' (composed probably in the 1450s). Tinctoris repeatedly found fault with its mensural usage and dissonance treatment (thereby securing the interest of subsequent theorists until well into the 16th century), but nevertheless admitted that Domarto was a composer 'of no small authority'. The tenor, from the responsory Stirps Jesse, remains notationally identical throughout the mass, but is presented in different mensurations which cause it to assume different rhythmic shapes in performance – a 'mechanical' transformation device that recalls similar procedures in the Ars Nova motet. In this respect, as well as with regard to its distinctive mensural profile, Domarto's Missa 'Spiritus almus' seems to have provided the direct inspiration for several later cycles, especially Busnoys's Missa 'O crux lignum' and the anonymous Missa 'L'Ardant desir'. Stylistically Domarto's setting belongs to the musical world of the 1450s, yet this did not prevent it being copied in Italy and elsewhere as late as the 1480s.

The three-part Missa sine nomine (labelled 'quinti toni irregularis' by Tinctoris) may well date from the 1440s, and seems to be a conscious stylistic imitation of masses by contemporary English composers, particularly Leonel Power. That insular models were in Domarto's mind when he composed this work is confirmed by the use of telescoped text setting in the Credo, an almost uniquely English device whose only other known continental instances are also found in English-inspired works: Ockeghem's Missa 'Caput' and Pulloys's Missa sine nomine. (It may be no coincidence that Domarto, Ockeghem and Pulloys were all active at Antwerp in the 1440s.) The mensural profile of Domarto's Missa sine nomine is much simpler than that of Missa 'Spiritus almus': apart from the occasional introduction of sesquialtera proportion, the work moves entirely in the standard mensurations of tempus perfectum and tempus imperfectum diminutum.

The three-part rondeau Chelui qui est tant plain de duel is scored for low voices with frequent crossings between the top voice and the tenor–contratenor pair. It is a brief and unassuming piece, characterized by relative lack of rhythmic and melodic differentiation and impetus; it is most attractive for its dark, vibrant sonorities. The rondeau Je vis tous jours, though shorter, has a much more lively and rhythmically diverse style in all parts, opens with a point of imitation, and possesses a clearer overall sense of direction.

WORKS

Edition: Petrus de Domarto: Complete Works, ed. D. Kidger (Moretonhampstead, 1995–) [complete edn]

Missa 'Spiritus almus', 4vv
Missa sine nomine, 3vv
Chelui qui est tant plain de duel, 3vv
Je vis tous jours en esperance, 3vv

BIBLIOGRAPHY

StrohmM
A. Seay, ed.: Johannes Tinctoris: opera theoretica, CSM, xxii (1975–8)
D. Kidger: The Music and Biography of Petrus de Domarto (thesis, U. of California, Santa Barbara, 1990)
R.C. Wegman: 'Another Mass by Busnoys?', ML, lxxi (1990), 1–19
R.C. Wegman: 'Petrus de Domarto's Missa Spiritus almus and the Early History of the Four-Voice Mass in the Fifteenth Century', EMH, x (1990), 235–303
B.J. Blackburn, E.E. Lowinsky and C.A. Miller, eds.: A Correspondence of Renaissance Musicians (Oxford, 1991)
R.C. Wegman: 'Mensural Intertextuality in the Sacred Music of Antoine Busnoys', Antoine Busnoys: Method, Meaning and Context in Late Medieval Music, ed. P.M. Higgins (Oxford, 1996)

ROB C. WEGMAN

Domberger, Georg Joseph. See DONBERGER, GEORG JOSEPH.

Dömbra [dombira]. (1) Two-string long-necked lute of the Kazakhs of Central Asia. The western dömbra is pear-shaped and usually has 12 to 14 frets, while the eastern model may have a spade-shaped or triangular body, a shorter neck and five to nine frets. The body of the instrument may be made of oak, pine, fir, cedar or maple. The strings were formerly made of gut but are now made of nylon; they may be tuned a 2nd, a 4th or a 5th apart or in unison. The dömbra is often used to accompany epic performance as well as folksongs; its repertory includes approximately 7000 kyui (instrumental pieces) which may be divided into two groups according to performance style. In the shertpe style of playing which originated in east Kazakhstan, the index finger and thumb of the right hand are used to pluck the strings, while in the tökpe style found in west Kazakhstan, all the fingers of the right hand are used simultaneously to strum them. Important performers have included Tättimbet Qazanghepuly (1815–62) and Dauletkerei Shigaev (1820–87) in east Kazakhstan and Quermanghazy Saghyrbaev (1818–89) and Dina Nürpeiogyzy (1861–1955) in west Kazakhstan. The basic left-hand technique of the Kazakh dömbra consists of stopping the lower string with the thumb and the upper string with the fingers, the thumb thus often maintaining a stable position against which the fingers move.

(2) Two-string unfretted lute of the semi-nomadic Uzbeks of south-west Uzbekistan, also known as the dumbrak. Its strings are tuned a 4th, a 5th or an octave apart. The construction of the dömbra is similar to that of the adjacent Afghan Turkestani dambura and Tajik dumbrak, but the repertory and musical style of the Uzbek lute are unique, involving flexible use of two-part polyphony and a great range of rhythmic patterns. The dömbra is played by bakhshi to accompany epics (see UZBEKISTAN, §I, 2(i) and 3(iii)), and is also popular as a solo instrument in the Kashkadarya-Surkhandarya area and Khorezm. The right hand is used to pluck the strings alternately individually and simultaneously, and the strings may also be plucked with the left hand.

(3) Two-string fretted lute of the Kalmyk Mongols west of the Volga delta, often used to accompany solo dancing.

MARK SLOBIN/RAZIA SULTANOVA

Domenico [Dominici], Gianpaolo di [Paolo, Giampaolo de, Giovan Paolo de] (fl Naples, *c*1706–40). Italian composer and instrumentalist. He was probably a Neapolitan; the librettos of his three comic operas name him as 'Virtuoso de Camera del' . . . Dochessa de Laurenzano', and he was paid 45 ducats for playing in the Teatro di S Carlo orchestra in the season 1739–40.

On 7 December 1711 his serenata Clizia, text by N. Giuro, was performed at the Palazzo Cafetani, Piedmont. His first opera was Lisa pontegliosa (text, A. Piscopo; Naples, Teatro dei Fiorentini, 11 November 1719) where, according to Scherillo, Neapolitan dialect was used for the first time in the pastoral variety of opera buffa; it would be more correct to say that here the customary Neapolitan domestic farce is given a pastoral setting, for in number of characters, plot and dramaturgy the work is far closer to the popular chelleta pe' mmuseca than to the traditional pastoral comedy. Both Domenico's other operas, Li stravestimiente affortunate (F.A. Tullio; written 1719, Naples, Fiorentini, November 1722), dedicated to the Viceroy Count d'Althan, and Lo schiavo p'amore (Naples, Fiorentini, 10 November 1724) rely heavily on the comic device of transvestite disguise, borrowed from literary romance. The libretto of the latter work contains an interesting letter by its unknown author (according to Manferrari, A. Palomba) criticizing the public taste in comic opera. This taste, he said, requires that an opera buffa be very short, yet contain many time-consuming arias; that the plot be complicated, but that there be very little of the necessary recitative to develop such a plot; that the opera be highly amusing, yet be without any pungency of wit.

A cantata for soprano and continuo by Domenico appears in a manuscript miscellany (GB-Lbl); it is dated 1706. The Breitkopf catalogue of 1763 advertises three oboe concertos by a 'Dominico', and the Recueil lyrique d'airs choisis des meilleurs musiciens italiens (Paris, 1772) contains an aria by a 'Domenico'.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; SartoriL

M. Scherillo: L'opera buffa napoletana durante il Settecento: storia letteraria (Naples, 1883, 2/1916/R), 95, 115, 123ff, 134ff, 141

B. Croce: I teatri di Napoli: secolo XV–XVIII (Naples, 1891/R, 4/1947), ii, 293

U. Manferrari: Dizionario universale delle opere melodrammatiche, i (Florence, 1954), 316

V. Viviani: Storia del teatro napoletano (Naples, 1969), 317ff

F. Cotticelli and P. Maione: Onesto divertimento, ed allegria de' popli: materiali per una storia dello spettacolo a Napoli nel primo Settecento (Milan, 1996)

JAMES L. JACKMAN/FRANCESCA SELLER

Domenico da Pesaro [Dominicus Pisaurensis] (fl 1533–75). Italian keyboard instrument maker who worked in Venice. More of his instruments have survived than from any other 16th-century maker, comprising seven harpsichords (including two octave harpsichords, i.e. at 4′ pitch), seven polygonal virginals and one clavichord. The latter (see CLAVICHORD, fig.5), now in the Musikinstrumenten-Museum, Leipzig University, and constructed with a type of octave division apparently based on ⅓-comma meantone (see Wraight, 1997), is the earliest surviving dated clavichord (1543), although two undated instruments (nos.1 and 2) in the same collection may be slightly older. Zarlino (Le istitutioni harmoniche, Venice, 1558/R) records having had a harpsichord with divided sharps (24 notes per octave) made for him by Domenico (see ENHARMONIC KEYBOARD). An organ with paper pipes was praised by the Paduan organ maker Barcotto (*c*1660), and a claviorgan combining a sordino (i.e. clavichord) and a graviorgano (probably an organ at 8′ pitch) is mentioned in a Florentine inventory of 1716, but neither instrument is known to survive.

Of the surviving instruments four virginals and three harpsichords were made with the common 16th-century compass of C/E–f‴; three virginals, one harpsichord and the clavichord with C/E–c‴; the two octave harpsichords with C/E–g″a″ (sounding an octave higher); and Domenico's only surviving harpsichord originally having a 4′ stop (1563–70; Stiftelsen Musikkulturens Främjande, Stockholm) with FGA–g″a″ (some of these compasses have subsequently been altered). All seven virginals are of the thin-cased polygonal type. The harpsichord of 1570 (private collection, Nice) is the earliest dated Italian harpsichord to have been made with two 8′ registers.

Domenico's two octave harpsichords (1543, Musée de la Musique, Paris; 1546, Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, Vienna) are notable for being designed with some of the same proportions as the 'clavisimbalum' described by Arnaut de Zwolle (*c*1440; see HARPSICHORD, §2(i), esp. fig.2) and thus represent an important link to instrument making in the 15th century. The 1554 harpsichord (also in the Musée de la Musique) has string-lengths which are double those of the octave harpsichord of 1546 but is still rather short scaled for an iron-strung instrument pitched at a′ = 440. In fact its scale resembles one used in the 17th and 18th centuries for a typical harpsichord intended for stringing with brass wire (which requires a shorter scale than does iron wire), but since it would appear that Domenico derived its design from the earlier instrument (which would have been iron strung) it is probable that it was also intended to be strung with iron but at a high 8′ pitch (a′ = *c*530; see HARPSICHORD, §2(i)).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BoalchM

P.V. Ricerno: 'Antonio Barcotto's "Regula e breve raccordo": a Translation and Commentary', Organ Yearbook, xvi (1985), 47–70

D. Wraight: 'The Identification and Authentication of Italian String Keyboard Instruments', The Historical Harpsichord, iii, ed. H. Schott (Stuyvesant, NY, 1992), 59–161

C. Stembridge: 'The cimbalo cromatico and other Italian Keyboard Instruments with Nineteen or More Divisions to the Octave (Surviving Specimens and Documentary Evidence)', Performance Practice Review, vi (1993), 33–59

D. Wraight and C. Stembridge: 'Italian Split-Keyed Instruments with Fewer than Nineteen Divisions to the Octave', Performance Practice Review, vii (1994), 150–81

D. Wraight: The Stringing of Italian Keyboard Instruments c1500–c1650 (diss., Queen's U. of Belfast, 1997), i, 176–259; ii, 139–53

D. Wraight: 'The Pitch Relationships of Venetian String Keyboard Instruments', Fiore musicologi: studi in onore di Luigi Ferdinando Tagliavini, ed. F. Seydoux (Bologna, 2000)

DENZIL WRAIGHT

Domenico [Domenichino, Domenegino] da Piacenza [da Ferrara] (b Piacenza, *c*1400; d ?Ferrara, *c*1476). Italian dancing-master, dance theorist and composer. He taught dancing to GUGLIELMO EBREO DA PESARO and to ANTONIO CORNAZANO, who referred to him as 'mio solo maestro e compatriota' in his Libro dell' arte del danzare. As far as is known, Domenico spent the years of his youth and early maturity in Piacenza. His first contact with his future patron, the Marchese Leonello d'Este, appears to have been made on the occasion of the prince's wedding to Margherita Gonzaga, in Ferrara in 1435, which Domenico is said to have attended. He is then cited in the registers of the mandati of the Este court in 1439, 1441, 1445, 1447 and 1450 as 'spectabilis miles' and 'familiaris noster'; Guglielmo Ebreo and Antonio Cornazano refer to him as 'dignissimo cavaliere' and 'cavagliero aurato', probably in acknowledgment of his having been made Knight of the Golden Spur. After a five-year interval, centred mainly on the Sforza court in Milan, Domenico returned to Ferrara; in 1456 he was paid the substantial monthly salary of 20 lire marchesani, and he continues to be listed under the salariati of the Este court with payments going up to 31 December 1472. His name appears intermittently in the Ferrarese records until 1475. He was married to Giovanna Trotti, 'domicilla di corte', offspring of a highly respected and politically active Ferrarese family.

Recognized by his contemporaries as 'saltatorum princeps', Domenico was frequently invited to choreograph dances for important courtly celebrations. In 1455 he created and took part in the elaborate dances for the wedding of Tristano Sforza and Beatrice d'Este in Milan at the request of Francesco Sforza. In the same year, assisted by Guglielmo Ebreo, he choreographed 'moresche e molti balli' for the festivities in Milan in honour of 'la duchessa de Calabria', probably celebrating Ippolita Sforza's engagement to Alfonso of Aragon. Both dancing-masters collaborated again on the occasion of the wedding of Pino de' Ordelaffi and Barbara Manfredi in Forlì in May 1462.

Domenico's important treatise, De arte saltandi e choreas ducendii (F-Pn it.972, *c*1445), sets the example for all later dance instruction manuals: the first half contains the theory of dancing and the second the dances themselves (balli and bassadanzas). He was the first to discuss the aesthetics of dancing, frequently referring to Aristotle's Nicomachean Ethics. The chapters on dancing style, use of space, musical accompaniment and dance technique as a means of artistic creativity are particularly important. Each of the four basic metres (bassadanza, saltarello, quadernaria and piva) has its own characteristic step unit (tempo) but all good dancers should interchange the tempi as the choreography requires, resulting in complex and expressive patterns. In the second part the dances included range from purely ornamental ones for two or three people to elaborate creations for 12 or more; several are based on a thematic floor pattern (e.g. Tesara, Gelosia, Verçepe), while others use gesture for dramatic effect. Some, like Belriguardo, Belfiore and Leoncello, make explicit connection to the Este family and its residences. Unlike the French and Burgundian choreographies that are notated in a step tablature, Domenico's are described in words. Among his dances are the first two true ballets: La Mercanzia and La Sobria. Both are miniature dance-dramas, employing all the steps and movements of the dancer's repertory.

WRITINGS

De arte saltandi e choreas ducendii (MS, *c*1420, F-Pn it.972); ed. D.R. Wilson: Domenico of Piacenza (Paris, Bibliothèque Nationale, MS ital. 972) (Cambridge, 1988), and transcr. and trans. A.W. Smith: Fifteenth-Century Dance and Music: Twelve Transcribed Italian Treatises and Collections in the Tradition of Domenico da Piacenza, Dance and Music, iv (Stuyvesant, NY, 1995)

EDITIONS OF DANCES

N. Faloci-Pulignani: Otto bassedanze di M. Guglielmo da Pesaro e di M. Domenico da Ferrara (Foligno, 1887) [based on I-FOLd]

V. Maletic, ed.: Anello, Ballo composed by Domenico of Ferrara (New York, 1965)

I. Brainard, ed.: 3 Court Dances of the Early Renaissance (New York, 1971–2) [incl. Domenico's Verçepe]

I. Brainard, ed.: 'La fia Guilmin in canto/Filia Guilielmino in canto (Domenico/A. Cornazano)', The Musical Manuscript Montecassino 871, ed. I. Pope and M. Kanazana (Oxford, 1978), 531–3

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Poggiali: Memorie per la storia letteraria di Piacenza, i (Piacenza, 1789), 34

O. Gombosi: 'About Dance and Dance Music in the Late Middle Ages', MQ, xxvii (1941), 289–305

A. Michel: 'The Earliest Dance Manuals', Medievalia et humanistica, iii (1945), 117–31

I. Brainard: Die Choreographie der Hoftänze in Burgund, Frankreich und Italien im 15. Jahrhundert (diss., U. of Göttingen, 1956)

O. Kinkeldey: 'Dance Tunes of the Fifteenth Century', Instrumental Music: Cambridge, MA, 1957, 3–30, 89–152

D. Bianchi: 'Tre maestri di danza alla corte di Francesco Sforza', Archivio storico lombardo, 9th ser., ii (1962–4), 290–99

D. Heartz: 'A 15th-Century Ballo: Rôti bouilli joyeux', Aspects of Medieval and Renaissance Music: a Birthday Offering to Gustave Reese, ed. J. LaRue and others (New York, 1966/R), 359–75

I. Brainard: 'Bassedanse, Bassadanza and Ballo in the 15th Century', Dance History Research: Perspectives from Related Arts and Disciplines, ed. J.W. Kealiinohomoku (New York, 1970), 64–79

B. Sparti: 'Music and Choreography in the Reconstruction of Fifteenth-Century Balli: Another Look at Domenico's Verçepe', Fifteenth Century Studies, x, ed. G.R. Mermier and E.E. DuBruck (Ann Arbor, 1984), 177–94

A.W. Smith: 'Studies in 15th-Century Italian Dance: Belriguardo in due: a Critical Discussion', Proceedings [Society of Dance History Scholars] (1987), 86–105

D.R. Wilson: '"Damnes" as Described by Domenico, Cornazano and Guglielmo', Historical Dance, ii/6 (1988–91), 3–9

V. Daniels and E.Dombois: 'Die Temporelationen im Ballo des Quattrocento: spekulative Dialoge um den labyrintischen Rätselkanon De la arte di ballare et danzare des Domenico da Piacenza', Basler Jb für historische Musikpraxis, xiv (1990), 181–247

M. Padovan, ed.: Guglielmo Ebreo da Pesaro e la danza nelle corti italiane del XV secolo: Pesaro 1987 (Pisa, 1990) [incl. A.W. Smith: 'Una fonte sconosciuta della danza italiana del Quattrocento', 71–84; I. Brainard: 'Pattern, Imagery and Drama in the Choreographic Work of Domenico da Piacenza', 85–96; M. Lo Monaco and S. Vinciguerra: 'Il passo doppio in Guglielmo e Domenico: problemi di mensurazione', 127–36; A. Pontremoli: 'Estetica dell'ondeggiare ed estetica dell'aeroso: da Domenico a Guglielmo, evoluzione di uno stile coreutico', 159–68]

B. Sparti: 'How Fast do you want the Quadernaria? or Verçepe and Gelosia Revisited', The Marriage of Music & Dance: London 1991 [unpaginated]

D.R. Wilson: '"La giloxia/Gelosia" as Described by Domenico and Guglielmo', Historical Dance, iii/1 (1992), 3–9

N. Monahin: 'Leaping Nuns? Social Satire in a Fifteenth-Century Court Dance', Proceedings [Society of Dance History Scholars] (1993), 171–9

INGRID BRAINARD

Domenicus Gundissalinus. See GUNDISSALINUS, DOMENICUS.

Domestic music. See CHAMBER MUSIC.

Domestikos. In a Byzantine choir, the precentor who intoned the ĒCHĒMA.

Domgraf-Fassbänder, Willi (b Aachen, 19 Feb 1897; d Nuremberg, 13 Feb 1978). German baritone. He studied with Jacques Stückgold and Paul Bruns in Berlin and Borgatti in Milan. He made his début at Aachen in 1922 as Count Almaviva. Engagements followed at the Deutsche Oper, Berlin, at Düsseldorf and at Stuttgart. In 1930 he became first lyric baritone at the Berlin Staatsoper, where he remained until 1946. In addition to his German roles, his repertory there included Rigoletto, Luna, Escamillo, Silvio and Marcello.

He first appeared in England at Glyndebourne on the opening night of the first season in 1934, when he sang Figaro. His warm, pleasing baritone was enhanced by his mercurial personality and good looks. He returned to Glyndebourne in 1935 and 1937 as Figaro, Guglielmo and Papageno, which he also sang at Salzburg under Toscanini in 1937. After the war he appeared in Hanover, Vienna, Munich and Nuremberg. In the latter part of his career he scored a great personal success in the title roles of Egk's Peer Gynt and of Wozzeck, in which his gifts as a singing actor were fully used. His Figaro and Guglielmo (1935, Glyndebourne) were recorded, and he also made many individual recordings. His daughter, and former pupil, is the mezzo-soprano Brigitte Fassbaender.

HAROLD ROSENTHAL/ALAN BLYTH

Domhardt, Gerd (b Wolmirstedt, 19 Feb 1945; d Halle an der Saale, 18 Feb 1997). German composer. He studied at Martin Luther University (1963–8) and attended Zechlin's masterclasses at the DDR Akademie der Künste (1973–6). After working as a choral music editor for Deutscher Verlag für Musik, Leipzig, he became a freelance composer in Halle. Founder and director of the Annäherung concert series, he provided a platform for the work of contemporary composers during the years of the DDR. From 1987 to 1997 he was an honorary lecturer at the Institut für Musikwissenschaft, Halle University. His honours included the Handel Prize (1977), the Hans Stieber Foundation Composition Prize (1978), the Hanns Eisler Prize (1982), the DDR Art Prize (1988) and the position of guest of honour at the Villa Massimo, Rome (1993).

Domhardt's early choral compositions make use of both 12-note rows and rhythmic speech-song. Later, he turned increasingly towards instrumental genres. His predominantly lyrical concertos and chamber works feature moments of extreme intensity brought on by his common approach to structure in the horizontal and vertical dimensions. Often working with fundamental motivic cells, he based motivic manipulation on serial techniques, ordering musical events into discrete layers that resulted in polyrhythmic textures. During the 1990s he became preoccupied with nocturnal ideas, silence, the character of Orpheus, and relationships between light and shade, the dynamic and the static.

WORKS

Dramatic: Weiberkomödie (op, after H. Müller), 1987–9; radio scores, incid music

Vocal: Assoziationen (H. Czechowski, K. Bartsch), cycle, mixed chorus, 1970; Kammermusik 1971 (J. Bobrowski), Mez, chbr ens, 1971, rev. 1995; Rundgesang (G. Maurer), 4-pt mixed chorus, pf, 1972; Melodramen für Chile (P. Neruda, V. Jara), spkr, insts, 1974; Ode an den Wein (Neruda), B, orch, 1975; Invocation 'In memoriam Paul Dessau' (Neruda), 8-pt mixed chorus, 1979; Ein Meidlein tet mir klagen, concert folksong, mixed chorus, 1983; Bitte für die Liebenden (H. Preissler), 2-pt chorus, pf, 1984; Hölderlin (F. Hölderlin), mixed chorus, 1985; Orpheus: Frag. II 'In memoriam Victor Jara' (Neruda), spkr, chbr ens, 1985; Mörike-Kantate (E. Mörike), sprechstimme, 2 children's choirs, hp, perc, 1988; 3 Lieder (I. Müller), S, pf, 1990–92; Motet (Hölderlin), 3 choruses, 1996; NachtGedanken, boys' choir, 1996–7, unfinished

Orch: Chbr Sym. no.1, 1972, rev. 1990; Chbr Sym. no.2, 12 str, perc, 1975; Sym. no.1, 1976–7; Concerto piccolo, pf 4 hands, chbr orch, 1977; Double Conc., 2 vn, orch, 1978–9; Mikrokonzerte, solo insts, str, 1979–81; 4 Orchesterstücke, 1979; Sym. no.2, 1980–81; Va Conc., 1982–3; Rondeau, 1985, rev. 1990; Concertino, vn, chbr orch, 1986; Mémoire, str, 1986; Vn Conc., 1989; Chbr Conc., vn, chbr orch, 1991; Mémoire II, 1995; Orpheus, eng hn, chbr orch, 1996

Chbr and solo inst: Monolog, fl, 1973; Str Qt no.1, 1974; Sonata no.1, vn, pf, 1975, rev. 1990; Trio Sonata, fl, ob, bn, 1978; Fantasia, hpd, 1980; Str Sextet, 1980; Exposé, ens, 1983; Quattrosonata, fl, cl, bn/vc, pf, 1984; Cembaloblätter, hpd, 1986; Orpheus: Frag. I, 2 gui, 1987; Nachtklang I, ens, 1991; Correspondance, perc, 1992 [arr. perc, live elecs, 1994]; Nachtklang II, fl, perc, 1992; Scheidt-Adaptionen, ens, 1992; Nachtklang III, fl, pf, perc, 1993; Notturno, gui, 1993; Eurydike (Sonata no.2), vn, pf, 1994–6; … Nichts stockt, cl, trbn, vc, pf, 1994–5; Sotto voce, a fl, cl, b cl, 1994; Lamento d'Orfeo, eng hn, 1995; Nachklang IV, ens, 1995; Orpheus: Frag. III, eng hn, bn, va, gui, 1995; Stilles Viereck, 4 gui, 1995

Principal publishers: Deutscher Verlag, Verlag Neue Musik, Peters, Friedrich Hofmeister, Domus

ULRIKE LIEDTKE

Dominant (i). In some medieval music theory, the TENOR or reciting tone of a mode.

JANNA SASLAW

Dominant (ii). In the tonal system, the fifth DEGREE of the major or minor scale, the triad built upon that degree, or the key that has this triad as its tonic. The dominant scale degree is considered one of the most important pitches of a key, since as the fifth in the tonic triad it is harmonically stable. This is attributed by some theorists to the fact that the fifth is the first overtone that is not equivalent to an octave transposition of the fundamental (see HARMONICS, §1).

The dominant chord is an essential part of the standard (V–I) CADENCE in tonal music, in which context its own triad is required to be major. Thus in a minor key the dominant triad includes as its 3rd the raised 7th degree of the scale, or leading note; this chromatic alteration produces the harmonic minor scale. With the addition of a diatonic (minor) 7th, the triad becomes a DOMINANT SEVENTH CHORD.

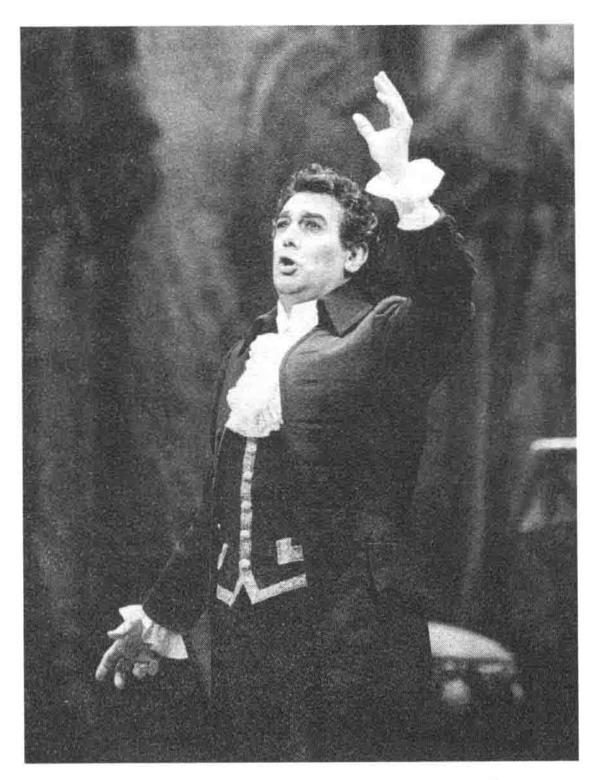
The dominant key is the most common goal of modulation throughout the tonal era, a phenomenon which has been attributed in part to the large amount of common pitch content between any tonic key and the key of its dominant, which also entails common chord content. Moreover, by contrast with the subdominant key (which has just as many pitch classes in common with the tonic), when the dominant key moves to the tonic key, their relationship is analogous to that of the chords in the perfect cadence.

A chord which relates to a scale degree other than the tonic in a temporary tonic–dominant relationship is known as an APPLIED DOMINANT.

JANNA SASLAW

Dominant seventh chord. With reference to a given tonality, the chord consisting of a major triad built on the fifth scale degree with an added minor 7th; the dominant 7th of C major (or minor) is G–B–D–F. Its strongest tendency is to resolve to the tonic: its root is the same as the 5th of the tonic, its 7th tends to resolve to the 3rd of the tonic, and its 3rd – the leading note of the tonality – tends strongly to resolve upward to the root of the tonic. □

Domingo, Plácido [Placido] (b Madrid, 21 Jan 1941). Spanish tenor. Taken by his family to Mexico in 1950, he studied the piano, conducting (under Igor Markevich) and finally singing. In 1957 he made his début as a baritone in the zarzuela Gigantes y cabezudos. His first important tenor role was Alfredo in Monterrey, Mexico, in 1961, the year he made his American début as Arturo (Lucia di Lammermoor) in Dallas. From 1962 to 1965 he was a member of the Israeli National Opera, singing some 300 performances of ten operas, some of them in Hebrew. In 1965 he made his New York début at the City Opera as Pinkerton and with that company in 1966 sang the title role in the first North American performance of Ginastera's Don Rodrigo. He first sang at the Metropolitan as Maurizio (Adriana Lecouvreur, 1968), at La Scala as Ernani (1969), and at Covent Garden as Cavaradossi (1971). He made notable appearances as Vasco da Gama (L'Africaine) at San Francisco in 1972, as Arrigo (Les vêpres siciliennes) in Paris and later in New York, and as Otello in Hamburg and Paris in 1975. That year he also sang Verdi's Don Carlos at Salzburg. In 1976 he appeared as Turiddu and Canio in a double bill in Barcelona – on one occasion singing the Prologue to Pagliacci when the baritone was taken ill; he repeated both roles at Covent Garden later that year. In 1982–3 at the Metropolitan he sang Paolo (Zandonai's Francesca da Rimini), Aeneas (Les Troyens) and Lohengrin; his repertory also included Hoffmann, Don José, Pollione, Edgardo, Riccardo, Radames, Chénier, Don Alvaro (La forza del destino), Werther, Puccini's Des Grieux, Rodolfo, Calaf, Siegmund, Parsifal and Samson; he created Menotti's Goya in Washington, DC, in 1986.



After a career lasting more than 35 years, Domingo's voice showed little sign of decline. Domingo has also conducted operas on several occasions, having made his début in this capacity in La traviata at the New York City Opera in 1973; his Metropolitan conducting début was in La bohème in the 1984–5 season.

Domingo is widely regarded as the leading lirico spinto tenor of the late 20th century, a consummate musician and an actor of exceptional passion. His singing was always marked by exemplary intelligence and taste. While he undertook a wide range of roles, he became particularly identified with Verdi's Otello, of which he was a wholehearted, eloquent exponent who suggested the heroic dimension of the character through force of personality. Domingo recorded this role three times (including the Zeffirelli film of 1986), and recorded almost all his other principal roles, several more than once, and appeared on many video recordings of his stage appearances (notably in the title role of the Covent Garden Andrea Chénier; see illustration). All evince his thoroughgoing commitment, warm and flexible tone, command of line and fiery declamation. If he was not always the most subtle of interpreters in terms of vocal colouring and shades of meaning, he virtually never deviated from the high standards he set himself in matters of technique and style.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Rosenthal: 'Placido Domingo', Opera, xxiii (1972), 18–23
J.B. Steane: The Grand Tradition (London, 1974/R), 541–2
P. Domingo: My First Forty Years (New York, 1983)
D. Snowman: The World of Plácido Domingo (New York, 1985/R)

HAROLD ROSENTHAL/ALAN BLYTH

Plácido Domingo in the title role of Giordano's 'Andrea Chénier', Covent Garden, London, 1985

Dominguez, Oralia (b San Luis Potosí, 15 Oct 1928). Mexican contralto. She studied at the Mexican National Conservatory and made her début with the Mexico City Opera in 1950. Three years later she first appeared in Europe, at La Scala in Adriana Lecouvreur. Engagements at other leading opera houses followed, including S Carlo, Naples, the Vienna Staatsoper and Paris Opéra, and she made her Covent Garden début as Sosostris in the première of Tippett's The Midsummer Marriage (1955). She combined a well-trained and voluptuous voice of exotic timbre with agility of technique, which was heard to advantage in Rossini's L'italiana in Algeri at the 1957 Glyndebourne Festival, and her engaging sense of comedy made her a much-admired Mistress Quickly in Verdi's Falstaff at Glyndebourne (1959–60) and Covent Garden (1967–8). Her recordings include roles in operas from Monteverdi to Wagner, notably Erda under Karajan (Rheingold 1967, Siegfried 1969).

NOËL GOODWIN

Dominican College. College in San Rafael, California, USA, near San Francisco. Its American Music Research Center holds an important music collection. See SAN FRANCISCO, §5.

Dominican friars. The Order of Friars Preachers, or Dominicans, also known in England as Blackfriars from the colour of their cloaks, was founded by St Dominic in the first decade of the 13th century. The founder's original purpose was to form a group of itinerant preachers to combat the heresy of the Albigenses in the south of France. From a loosely associated handful of men was to grow one of the foremost centrally organized orders of the modern world. Approved by Foulques of Toulouse, then by Innocent III, and confirmed by Honorius III, the new Order of Preachers adopted the Rule of St Augustine together with a set of Constitutions proper to itself. Recognized at first as an order of canons regular, the Dominicans later became one of the first Mendicant Orders. As an international preaching body they laid claim to extensive privileges, including exemption from episcopal jurisdiction.

From Southern France the order spread rapidly across Europe. By 1221 it was organized into eight provinces: Spain, Provence, France, Lombardy, Rome, Hungary, Germany and England, to which were added by 1228 Poland, Scandinavia, Greece and the Holy Land. The order now covers most parts of the world. Each province sends representatives to the General Chapter, the supreme legislative authority, one of the functions of which is to elect the Master-General.

The Order of Preachers has always been a spearhead of intellectual activity. It produced St Thomas Aquinas (1224/5–74), the greatest thinker of his age, whose Summa theologica became the standard theological textbook. The Dominicans made a point of establishing themselves in universities, including Paris, Oxford (1221) and Cambridge (1238). They suffered a period of decline after 1290 but this was followed by a vigorous revival in the 16th century.

Up to the Second Vatican Council, the Dominicans possessed their own rite, a 13th-century version of the Roman rite, having much in common with the Use of Paris and partially influenced by the Cistercian liturgy. The adoption of this rite, which probably goes back to St Dominic himself, owes much to the Commission of Four Friars in the mid-13th century and above all to Humbert of Romans, who was elected Master-General in 1254. Humbert's revision was granted approval by Clement IV in 1267. One characteristic of Dominican Use is the Salve regina procession after Compline, thought to have been inaugurated in 1221, the date of St Dominic's death.

Dominicans have made important contributions to the liturgy of the Western Church as a whole. The texts of the Mass and Office for Corpus Christi are attributed, on the authority of Ptolemy of Lucca (early 14th century), to Thomas Aquinas. He related that Thomas had been invited to write them by the pope. A Dominican pope, Pius V, was responsible for the revision of the Roman Breviary (1568) and the Roman Missal (1570).

In later centuries the order's earlier techniques of singing plainchant were totally lost. After 1900, however, a return to the sources resulted in fresh editions of Dominican service books, thanks chiefly to the labours of Vincent Laporte, and this stimulated a return to earlier traditions of performance.

Several passages in the works of St Thomas point to his interest in and knowledge of music, although no extended treatise by him exists on the subject. It was left to the Paris Dominican, HIERONYMUS DE MORAVIA, to fulfil this task in his Tractatus de musica, written during or after 1272. This treatise became the carefully guarded property of the Sorbonne in 1304. The order 'incathenabitur in cappela' was given and it was numbered 64th among the works dealing with the Quadrivium. The special interest of the treatise is its abundance of lively detail and its practical instructions in the art of vocal embellishment in the performance of festal plainchant. Besides adding vocal embellishments on feast days, Dominican choirs, from the later Middle Ages onwards, used the organ for alternatim performance of plainchant. Much legislation on this topic flowed from the pens of the Capitular Fathers at successive General Chapters, but the practice was tolerated, provided that the cantor, or a novice, pronounced the words of the organ verses slowly and distinctly while they were being played. For his part, the organist was strictly forbidden to play worldly vanities on his instrument. Cajetan, commenting on St Thomas (II–II, 91.2), even went so far as to declare it a mortal sin to do so.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Acta capitulorum generalium Ordinis Praedicatorum (Rome, 1900–01)

A. Gastoué: 'Un dominicain professeur de musique au treizième siècle: Fr. Jérome de Moravie et son oeuvre', Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, ii (1932), 235–51

S.M. Cserba, ed.: Hieronymus de Moravia, O.P.: Tractatus de musica (Regensburg, 1935)

W.R. Bonniwell: A History of the Dominican Liturgy (New York, 1944, enlarged 2/1945)

D. Delalande: Le graduel des prêcheurs (Paris, 1949)

S. Bullough: 'St Thomas and Music', Dominican Studies, iv (1951), 14–43

W.A. Hinnebusch: The Early English Friars Preachers (Rome, 1951)

R. Creytens: 'L'ordinaire des frères prêcheurs au Moyen Age', Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, xxiv (1954), 108–88

M.-H. Vicaire: Histoire de S. Dominique (Paris, 1957/R; Eng. trans., 1964)

K. Foster: The Life of St Thomas Aquinas: Biographical Documents (London, 1959)

W.A. Hinnebusch: The History of the Dominican Order (London, 1966–73)

P. Gleeson: 'Dominican Liturgical Manuscripts from before 1254', Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, xliv (1972), 81–135

J. Harper: The Forms and Orders of Western Liturgy from the Tenth to the Eighteenth Century (Oxford, 1991)

MARY BERRY

Dominican Republic [formerly Santo Domingo] (Sp. República Dominicana). Country in the West Indies. It occupies the eastern two-thirds of the Greater Antillean island of Hispaniola (La Española), today shared with Haiti. Hispaniola was called 'Quisqueya' by the original Amerindian inhabitants, the Taínos (subgroup of Arawak, one of the four major language families of the greater Amazon region), who numbered at least one million at the time of European contact in 1492. The island became the Spanish colony of Santo Domingo and thus the first European colony in the New World (1492). The modern Dominican Republic reflects its cultural heritage. Its vernacular musical culture is of Spanish and West and Central African heritage.

I. Historical background. II. Art music. III. Traditional music. IV. Popular music.

I. Historical background

The Taínos were virtually decimated by disease, warfare and suicide within the first 40 years of conquest. African slaves were introduced as a substitute labour force as early as 1502. However, the island was abondoned by Spain after the exhaustion of gold and the discovery of greater riches on the mainland (Mexico, 1519; Peru, 1532). This allowed the French to wrest away the western third in 1697 and to establish the colony of Saint-Domingue. The Dominican Republic and Haiti thus shared a single heritage for the 200 years following the conquest but have since diverged politically, radically and culturally, including musically.

While Santo Domingo languished, underpopulated and impoverished, the French developed Saint-Domingue through sugarcane cultivation. Approximately one million Africans were introduced into Saint Domingue during the 17th century for this purpose. In 1804 the African slaves won their independence, establishing the second republic in the New World (the first being the USA.). They gave their new republic the Taíno name of 'Haïti' (mountainous land). In an effort to rid the entire island of European colonial domination, Haiti then occupied Santo Domingo from 1822 to 1844. Santo Domingo called on Spain to oust the Haitians, establishing the Dominican Republic. Dominicans still celebrate independence not from Spain but from Haiti, on February 27th. Spain reoccupied from 1861 until 1865, when independence was again restored.

The Haitian occupation is an historical marker; fear of another invasion underlies cultural policy and national identity, symbolized by music. Racial and cultural dimensions of national identity affirm 'hispanidad' – a Hispanic identity, in juxtaposition with Haiti, self-designated as a 'black republic'. Nonetheless, despite significant differences, there are also musical similarities and mutual influences, accelerated in the late 20th century by the sizeable Haitian population residing in the Dominican Republic and the impact of Haitian popular music. Despite a continued fear of Haitian encroachment, the two foreign occupations of the 20th century were by the USA (1916–22 and 1965). The Dominican Republic has increasingly close ties with the USA, due to current emigration, especially to New York City, where the Dominican sector of upper Manhattan constitutes the largest Dominican community outside the Republic.

II. Art music

The island of Hispaniola was the site of Santo Domingo, the first Spanish colony in the Americas. The first sung mass in the New World took place there on 6 January 1494, at La Isabela on the north coast. Nueva Isabela (now the capital city, Santo Domingo) was established on the south coast in about 1496. Three trumpeters arrived in 1509; the 1512 authorization for the cathedral provided for a singer and an organist. Other cathedrals and churches also appointed musicians, such as a singer at the cathedral in La Vega in 1537. Early in the 16th century public entertainments were given by performers called juglares, both male and female, a tradition of medieval origin. Tremendous celebrations of the colony's patron saint, Our Lady of Mercy, took place in the capital in the early 17th century; patron saint celebrations still bring together both sacred and secular, art and traditional music.

The colony rapidly became impoverished as accessible gold deposits were exhausted and riches were discovered on the mainland in the early 16th century. In 1586 Francis Drake partly destroyed the capital and burnt the church archives, undoubtedly including musical scores. The church and colony suffered poverty from this period until the mid-19th century. The establishment of an independent Dominican Republic, following liberation from Haiti (which occupied Santo Domingo 1822–44) and the restoration of independence after a second period of Spanish rule (1861–5), led to a flourishing of musical arts, despite chronic political and economic instability. The musicians of this period, though lacking technical training, started composing in a national idiom. Juan Bautista Alfonseca (1810–75), the father of the national school, introduced the merengue and mangulina folkdance rhythms into the ballroom.

From the time of independence, foreigners such as the Catalan musician Rafael Ildefonso Arté and Andrés Requena of Spain taught music, established music academies and founded and conducted orchestras and bands. Leading musicians included Alfonseca, José Reyes (1835–1905), who composed the national anthem, and José María Arredondo (1840–1924). Church music again declined in the late 19th century but concert and salon music flourished, stimulated by resident foreign teachers and conductors and visiting troupes from Cuba and Puerto Rico giving opera, zarzuela and variety shows. The most musically active towns were Santo Domingo, Santiago de los Caballeros, Puerto Plata, San Francisco de Macorís and San Pedro de Macorís (the former three remained so to the end of the 20th century). Bands, chamber orchestras and music schools continued to be established in urban areas, where concerts and veladas (soirées in homes and social clubs) were frequent. The Sunday evening retreta or municipal band concert was a tradition in most towns, and in some still continues.

The band – military, municipal and dance – has played a central role in Dominican musical culture: not only as a medium for the training of musicians and the development of a national musical literature, but also as a conduit for social mobility; as a point of interface between art and traditional musics; and as an arm of political control, used first by European colonists and then by the independent governments in power. Most of the notable composers of the 19th century through the mid-20th were bandleaders, including Requena's student Pablo Claudio (1855–99), who dominated Dominican music after Alfonseca. The main figures of the modern national school, who used folk music as a basis for their compositions, were José de Jesús Ravelo (1876–1951), Juan Francisco García ('Don Pancho'; 1892–1974), Esteban Peña-Morell (1897–1938), Luis Emilio Mena (1895–1964), Rafael Ignacio (1897–1984), José Dolores Cerón ('Loló'; 1897–1969), Enrique Mejía Arredondo (1901–51), Luis Rivera (1901–86) and Ramón Díaz (1901–76). Enrique de Marchena-Dujarric (1908–88) was impressionistic rather than nationalistic, Julio Alberto Hernández (b 1900) a composer of salon music and Luis Alberti (1906–76) renowned for dance music.

Many of these composers were encouraged by the Spanish composer Enrique Casal y Chapí, who in 1941 became conductor of the new national symphony orchestra. Although Chapí believed that a national school need not be based on traditional music, his students, notably Manuel Simó (1916–88) and Ninón Lapeiretta (1907–89), did tap traditional sources, as does Bienvenido Bustamante (b 1921) and Manuel Marino Miniño (b 1930). But Simó, and others including Margarita Luna (b 1921), have also used the 12-note system and aleatory procedures. Younger composers include Miguel Pichardo-Vicioso (b 1939) and José Antonio Molina (b 1960). Unlike the late 20th-century composers of some other Latin American countries, those of the Dominican Republic have tended to express nationalism in popular music of various genres rather than in art music: notable are the songwriter Juan Luis Guerra (b 1957), the Latin jazz composer and pianist Michel Camilo and the traditionally-based composer and guitarist Luis Díaz (or Días; b 1952). By the end of the 20th century the geographical focus for young composers had shifted to the expatriate community in New York.

III. Traditional music

1. Taíno music. 2. European influence. 3. African influence. 4. Creole music. 5. Recent developments.

1. Taíno music. Although Taíno musical culture was largely vocal, instruments included clay, bone (and perhaps cane) flutes, hand (and possibly ankle) rattles, and, most importantly, a wooden slit-drum (hollowed-log idiophone), the mayohuacán; in addition, the conch-shell was played for signalling.

The mayohuacán accompanied the areíto (areyto) ritual, also documented among the Taínos of Borínquen (Puerto Rico) and Cuba. Combining descriptions from various sources, the areíto was a large-scale ceremonial music and dance event, lasting hours or days. It was held to celebrate marriage or victory, as a funerary memorial, to pay homage, and perhaps for recreation. The areíto was performed by up to 300 dancer–singers (single sex or mixed) assembled in linear, circular or arch formation and with arms linked or hands held. They were led by a soloist, whose vocal phrases (commemorating ancestors' deeds) were repeated by the dancing chorus at a higher or lower pitch.

Few observable retentions of Taíno culture remain in Dominican music, except possibly the use of the scraper and shaker. Elements of musical style are difficult to detect; it is possible that they exist in the Dominican western area of San Juan de la Maguana, where religious retentions may be perceived.

2. European influence. The Dominican traditional musical genres of most notable Hispanic heritage in the rural sector are vocal and unaccompanied. These include the most archaic religious songs and some secular genres. Sacred song of folk Catholicism for saints' celebrations or death rituals includes the (partially) sung rosary (with its French counterpart, the cantique, in the Haitian enclave of Tesón, Samaná); altar and processional songs (most notably the 'Salve de la Virgen', set to many different melodies, some from archaic Catholic liturgy); other religious songs generically called versos; and songs for children's wakes (baquiní, a Yoruba term) such as the almost-extinct mediatuna of the Cibao region. Secular genres include lullabies (ex.1); Spanish ballads or romances (ex.2); children's songs and games; work songs

Ex.1 Lullaby, transcr. L. Ramón y Rivera

Ex.2 Romance de Delgadina, game song; transcr. L. Ramón y Rivera

(of the melismatic, antiphonal and unmetred variety); and various improvisatory verbal genres performed as sung conversations or debates within the context of agricultural labour (e.g. the chuin of Baní), or for religious or social commentary or courtship in a festive context, even at the periphery of a wake (e.g. the décima, a ten-line improvised poetic form with an ABBAACCDDC rhyming scheme), or as ritual, such as the tonadas de toros (bull songs; see §4) of the brotherhoods associated with the immense pilgrimage networks of the east. Generally speaking, improvisatory verbal dexterity in song is not nearly as prominent as elsewhere in the Hispanic Caribbean (e.g. Puerto Rico or Cuba). The décima is also more significant as a sung, rather than spoken, poetic structure, and if sung, is unaccompanied; however, its social function is similar to elsewhere in the Hispanic Caribbean.

Aside from the literate music of the elite (see §II) European influence exists in the urban milieu in the realms of popular song (see §IV) and brass and wind band music. The band was an important element of European colonization and after independence has served to define identity and build patriotism in the new republic. The municipal music schools (Academias de Música), founded in the mid-20th century under Generalísimo Rafael Trujillo (in power from 1930 to 1961), and the municipal bands for which they train (as well as the military bands), have provided musical literacy and social or military ascendance for the musicians involved, as well as being the means of training orchestral musicians, conductors and composers. The repertories of municipal bands include arrangements of art music as well as marches and creole dance music (see §4).

Dance band musicians have served as the conduits of rural genres into the dancehalls of the urban elite and also for the transmission of urban fashions in dance (often of overseas origin) into rural areas, where they are sometimes preserved long after their popularity has faded in urban contexts. In the late 1700s and early 1800s the European contredanse and quadrille were in vogue, followed in the mid-1800s by the central European waltz, mazurka and polka. In the late 1800s creole ballroom dances, the danzón of Cuba and the danza of Puerto Rico became fashionable, and are still danced on occasion. By the 1920s, after the first US occupation, dances such as the one-step, two-step and fox-trot became popular, followed by the orchestrated merengue in the 1920s.

Both popular songs and social-dance ensembles were accompanied mainly by Spanish-derived string instruments, including the now archaic tiple (treble guitar), tres (traditionally triangular or guitar-shaped, but now only the latter, with three double courses) and the six-string guitar. Around 1880 these were largely replaced in rural dance ensembles in the North by the button accordion, brought into Puerto Plata by trade with the Germans.

Another domain of European musical influence is Protestant religious song. The hymnody of Protestant black American and British West Indies enclaves was largely Wesleyan Methodist and Anglican respectively, with the later addition of African Methodist Episcopal. In Samaná, 'Sankeys' (Moody-Sankey hymns) were sung in English for the dead until the 1980s, with African-influenced performance practices such as anticipation of the beat. These hymns are now sung in Spanish, as is the other main hymnody of protestant church services, constituted by hymnals published in the neighbouring US territory of Puerto Rico. Spirituals (in Samaná, called 'anthems') are sung after services and formerly accompanied agricultural labour. The lifting of restrictions following the death of Trujillo has allowed increasing proselytism by American-based Protestant sects, which often have already established bases in Puerto Rico. Most notable musically are the charismatic Pentecostal sects, whose hymns are transmitted orally and accompanied with guitars and drum kits, often electronically amplified.

Ex.3 Plena, transcr. L. Ramón y Rivera

3. African influence. The first Africans in Hispaniola, as early as 1502, were in fact Christian Africans (ladinos) from Spain, where they had been resident throughout the 1400s. Africans began entering directly from the African continent in the years after 1510, initially from Senegambia and later from further southwards (eventually Angola) when the slave trade ceased with the Haitian occupation in 1822. While the larger number of Africans from individual ethnic groups has allowed the continuity of certain culture-specific African practices in Haiti, the smaller numbers of Africans in the Dominican Republic has necessitated consolidation and mixture of cultural traits. The constellations of African ethnic influences also differs somewhat between the two countries, with West African (notably Dahomeyan) more prominent in Haiti, and Central African (Bantu) important in the Dominican Republic (although present in both).

Secular genres with significant African influence include: plenas (group work songs) of the metred, call-and-response type (ex.3), including plenas de hacha (tree-cutting songs), plenas de hoyar (digging songs) and plenas de majar (pounding songs); and stories about animals, with their sung responses. The most important sacred and semi-sacred African-influenced music is that of the palos or atabales (long drums; fig.1) associated with Afro-Dominican brotherhoods (cofradías) and their patron saints' festivals and members' death rituals; personally sponsored saints' festivals (velaciones, velorios de santo); and sometimes Vodú ceremonies (the Dominican counterpart of Haitian Vodoun, African-derived extra-official religious societies focussed on healing and characterized by spirit possession of mediums by deities). Another religious genre is the non-liturgical salve, 'Africanized' by its adaptation to a call-and-response structure and polyrhythmic accompaniment with hand-drums and other small membranophones (see below).

African influences are also found in the music of the 20th-century British West Indies and Haitian enclaves: the Afro-British fife-and-drum ensembles used to accompany mummer ensembles (momís, guloyas) in San Pedro de Macorís; and the Haitian-Dominican gagá music (from the Haitian rará) of Lenten season religious societies, which exist in almost every sugarcane community associated with sugar mills throughout the country. Gagá is sung in Haitian Créole (or in Spanish in some locales) and accompanied by an ensemble of petro drums, several one-tone bamboo trumpets (called vaccines in Créole and bambúes or fotutos in Spanish) played in hocket, and other sorts of trumpets as well as idiophones. Both the momís and the Haitian gagá ensembles include street processions with similarly carnivalesque multicoloured skirted male participants, performing acrobatic routines which are intended to entice monetary and alcoholic contributions. However, gagá groups are also religious societies with an element of secrecy based on the leader's seven-year pact with the patron deity. Within a sugarcane mill region there is competition, sometimes violent, between certain gagá ensembles when they meet on the road during Easter week.

1. Palos drums of the southern region

Ex.4 Tonada de palos, transcr. L. Ramón y Rivera

Musical instruments themselves which are African-derived or African-influenced include the palos or atabales long drums, mentioned above, whose sound, for brotherhood members, represents the voice of their patron saint. Palos are made of hollowed-out logs, and vary regionally in nickname, size, number included in the ensemble (two or three), number of heads, the type of head fixture (tacked, laced or hoop-and-laced) and the number and type of accompanying idiophones (of African or Taíno-African origin): one or more shakers (maracas), one to three metal scrapers (güiras or guayos), and/or a stick beaten on the drum body (catá, maraca; see ex.4).

2. Street musicians playing merengue típico cibaeño for tourists on El Conde Street, Santo Domingo, featuring tambora, güiro (guayo) and accordion

Ex.5 Salve, transcr. L. Ramón y Rivera

Ex.6 Che Blanco, mangulina, transcr. L. Ramón y Rivera

Ex.7 Merengue, transcr. L. Ramón y Rivera

♩ = 114

TAMBORA

GUAYO

etc.

etc.

etc. Ay que Cha-

-pi - ta pa-ra nun - ca e-xis - ti - rá gra-cias da - mos al va - lien - te Juan To - más que nos ha qui-ta o el fan - tas-ma de la paz etc.

There are several musically unique Afro-Dominican enclaves. These include the Brotherhood of the Holy Spirit in Villa Mella and its congos dance and drums (laced double-headed in a set of two, one large and one small, accompanied by a clave-like idiophone called canoíta); and the Brotherhood of St John the Baptist in Baní in Peravia, with its sarandunga dance and music, played on three squat, laced double-headed drums called tambores, held between the knees to accompany the dance, or under the arm in procession or at the altar and accompanied by güiro. Both congos and tambores drums are palos variants, and as such are always played by the hands, accompany singing, with the larger or largest drum as the master drum and its player as the head of the ensemble and usually the lead singer within a call-and-response structure. Palos-type drums also always accompany the drum dance (baile de palos), which is a couple dance symbolizing ritual pursuit and possibly derived from the colonial calenda dance.

Other African-derived instruments include the gayumba, a single-string ground bow of Central African origin (the counterpart of the Haitian tambour maringouin) used for entertainment and dance, which was once ubiquitous and is now practically in disuse. An adapted African instrument introduced with the popularization of Cuban son in the 1930s (largely through the recording industry) is the marímba (marímbula in Cuba and Puerto Rico), a giant-sized African lamellophone often used as a bass instrument with traditional merengue (merengue típico cibaeño or 'perico ripiao') bands (see §IV below).

4. Creole music. As a creole musical culture, genres and styles of multiple origins may coexist without merging within a single musical event or even musical genre. Such is the case of the saint's festival, a night-long event of individual sponsorship, initially undertaken in payment for divine healing, then repeated annually. The saint's festival includes European-derived sacred salve at the altar and African-influenced drum–dance (except in the central Cibao region) temporally interspersed or spatially separated outside in a roofed patio. Additionally, if the festival is a nightly stop on a pilgrimage in the eastern region, it may include the unaccompanied, improvisatory tonadas de toros (bull songs) of pilgrimage-associated brotherhoods. The event may also add secular social dance, likewise temporally or spatially separated from the more sacred ritual components, in another site on the homestead or later in the morning, after the obligation of the religious vow has been completed.

Salve altar music still retains its Spanish variant, the antiphonal 'Salve de la Virgen', rendered obligatorily after each of three rosaries in a night-long festival. In the east and central-southern regions, these are followed by many non-liturgical pieces of call-and-response structure with interspersed secular text (salves con versos in the east), or, in the central-southern region (ex.5), the sacred text is totally replaced by improvised secular quatrains by the vocal soloist interspersed with a fixed response by others. Polyrhythmic accompaniment is provided by hand-drums (panderos), a small vertical drum (mongó) and in San Cristóbal and Baní, also other small drums (called salve con panderos). In the salve of Baní (an unusual coexistence of European and African elements in a single piece) women standing in a line in front of the altar sing the antiphonal 'Salve de la Virgen' text while men, at the rear of the chapel, provide polyrhythmic accompaniment on an assortment of small drums.

The smaller membranophones of the Dominican Republic are associated not only with the non-liturgical salve, but characteristically represent the key instrument in rural social dance ensembles throughout the country, likewise instrumentally and musically hybrid. There are several local creole rural dances still enjoyed. The pan-Caribbean juba dance (from colonial times) is called pripri in the central-southern and eastern regions, and is characterized by the horizontal, heel-dampened balsié drum played with the button accordion, güira and marimba. The 19th-century mangulina dance form of the southwest is in 6/8 time; it is played after the carabiné dance form and before the valse or danza (depending on the region) by an ensemble comprising a knee-held vertical drum, also called balsié, with a large tambourine (pandero), accordion or (less usually) strings, and güira (guayo; ex.6). The merengue and its variants are also performed: they include a type of merengue redondo, in which the embraced couple gyrates on an axis, as if tracing the circumference of a circle; the merengue redondo variant of Samaná; and the now widely extended merengue típico cibaeño or perico ripiao of Cibao (ex.7), which forms the basis of the orchestrated commercial merengue (see §IV).

5. Recent developments. New creations arise in many domains, including street music: examples are the urban carnivals of many locales and the Christmas parrandas (door-to-door raucous processions). In the Dominican Republic and Dominican expatriate enclaves in New York and other US cities on the eastern seaboard, the traditional merengue coexists as a sub-species with the continually evolving commercial, orchestrated merengue. The traditional merengue of Cibao has become ubiquitous as a symbol of folkdance, edging many other regional genres into virtual extinction (fig.3). At the same time, in the heart of the capital and the town of Villa Mella just to the north, Afro-Dominicans maintain the Cuban-derived son, which is the basis of the now-commercialized genre of bachata, a term now taken as a genre but originally meaning a noisy dance party accompanied by the steel-string guitar.

3. Jaded street musicians play the now ubiquitous folk merengue of the northern Cibao

The major recent socio-economic development affecting music has been the rural-to-urban migration which, in some 25 years, has changed the rural/urban ratio from 60/40% to 40/60% or larger, if the million or so expatriate Dominicans residing in urban locales of the USA (primarily upper Manhattan, New York City) are included. The New York artistic environment has not only promoted commercial merengue, but at the same time also provided freedom of expression and support for Dominican musicians. Figures such as Tony Vicioso emphasize Afro-Dominican traditional music to balance the emphasis on Hispanic heritage, even claiming Haitian-derived gagá as a new Dominican traditional music genre – a controversial position which can invoke police intervention within the Dominican Republic. Composer-musician Luis Díaz honours Taíno as well as African musical heritage and addresses socio-cultural injustice through a uniquely hybrid style nourished by the rock-influenced soundscape of New York. Within commercialized traditional music and commercial dance music and song, especially within the New York expatriate community, women have become increasingly significant, such as Fefita la Grande, accordionist and singer of traditional merengue, and Milly Quezada of the popular, orchestrated merengue band Milly y los Vecinos.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

AND OTHER RESOURCES

F. de Nolasco: La música en Santo Domingo y otros ensayos (Ciudad Trujillo, 1939)

J. Francisco Garcia: 'Formas de la música folklórica dominicana', Boletín del folklore dominicano, i (1946), 10–14

E. Garrido: Versiones dominicanas de romances españoles (Ciudad Trujillo, 1946)

F. de Nolasco: 'El carabiné', Boletín del folklore dominicano, i (1946), 19–24

J. Garcia: 'Las fiestas de Santa Cruz', Boletín del folklore dominicano, ii (1947), 26–32

E. Garrido: 'El aguinaldo', Boletín del folklore dominicano, ii (1947), 3–25

E. Garrido: 'El folklore del niño dominicano', Boletín del folklore dominicano, ii (1947), 54–64

F. de Nolasco: Vibraciones en el tiempo (Ciudad Trujillo, 1948)

J.M. Coopersmith: Música y músicos de la República Dominicana (Washington DC, 1949/R)

E. Garrido de Boggs: Folklore infantil de Santo Domingo (Madrid, 1955/R)

F. de Nolasco: Santo Domingo en el folklore universal (Ciudad Trujillo, 1956)

E. Garrido de Boggs: 'Panorama del folklore dominicano', Folklore américas, xxi/1–2 (1961), 1–23
I. Aretz and L.F.Ramón y Rivera: 'Reseña de un viaje a la República Dominicana', Boletín del Instituto de folklore, iv (1963), 157–211
J.A. Hernández: Música tradicional dominicana (Santo Domingo, 1969)
E. Rodríguez Demorizi: Música y baile en Santo Domingo (Santo Domingo, 1971)
L. Alberti: De música y orquestas bailables dominicanas, 1910–1959 (Santo Domingo, 1975)
F. Lizardo: Danzas y bailes folklóricos dominicanos (Santo Domingo, 1975)
M.E. Davies: Afro-Dominican Religious Brotherhoods: Structure, Ritual and Music (Ann Arbor, 1976)
F. Franklin, ed.: Enciclopedia dominicana (Santo Domingo, 1976 3/1986–8)
M.E. Davies: 'Aspectos de la influencia africana en la música tradicional dominicana', Boletín del Museo del Hombre Dominicano, no.13 (1980), 255–92
M.E. Davies: 'La cultural musical religiosa de los "americanos" de Samaná', Boletín del Museo del Hombre Dominicano, no.15 (1980), 127–69
M.E. Davies: Voces del purgatorio: estudio de la salve dominicana (Santo Domingo, 1981)
B. Jorge: La música dominicana: siglos XIX–XX (Santo Domingo, 1982)
D. Pacini Hernández: Music of Marginality: Social Identity and Class in Dominican Bachata (Ann Arbor, 1989)
M.E. Davies: 'Music and Black Ethnicity in the Dominican Republic', Music and Black Ethnicity in the Caribbean and South America, ed. G. Béhague (Miami, 1994), 119–55
A. Incháustegui: El album de Eduardo Brito (Santo Domingo, 1994)
A. Incháustegui: Por amor al arte: notas sobre música, compositores e intépretes dominicanos (Santo Domingo, 1995)
B. Jorge: El canto de tradición oral de República Dominicana (Santo Domingo, 1996)
P. Austerlitz: Merengue: Dominican Music and Dominican Identity (Philadelphia, 1997)
A. Incháustegui and B. Delgado Malagón: Vida musical en Santo Domingo (1940–1965) (Santo Domingo, 1998)

RECORDINGS

Singers of the Cibao, Original Music OML 403CC (*c*1970)
Caribbean Island Music: Songs and Dance of Haiti, the Dominican Republic and Jamaica, Nonesuch H-72047 (*c*1973)
Music from the Dominican Republic, Folkways FE 4281 to FE 4284 (1976–8)
Rara in Haiti/Gagá in the Dominican Republic, Folkways FE 4531 (1978); reissued as Caribbean Revels: Haitian Rara and Dominican Gaga, Smithsonian Folkways SF 40402 (1991)
Afro-Dominican Music from San Cristóbal, Dominican Republic, Folkways FE 4285 (1983)
Merengue: Dominican Music and Dominican Identity, ROUN1130 (1997)
Root Music/Música raíz, Fundación Cultural Bayahonda (1997)
Merengues from the Dominican Republic, Lyrichord LLST 7351 (n.d.)

IV. Popular music

Merengue and bachata are the major genres of Dominican mass-mediated, or popular, music, while merengue is by far the country's best-known musical type and an important national symbol. Dating from 1854, the earliest documents referring to Dominican merengue describe it as a ballroom dance related to the pan-Caribbean danza, a variant of the European-derived contredanse. Merengue was danced by independent couples (instead of groups) and was marked by Afro-Caribbean rhythmic inflections. Salon merengue was not confined to the Dominican Republic in this period; local variants were performed in Haiti, Puerto Rico and Venezuela. Autochthonous forms of merengue are still performed in Haiti and Venezuela, as well as in Colombia, but these variants never achieved the prominence that Dominican merengue eventually attained; in Puerto Rico, merengue was subsumed into the danza.

After a period of popularity in Dominican ballrooms in the mid-19th century, merengue was rejected by local élites because of its dance style, which was considered lascivious, and because of its African influences. The Afro-Dominican masses, however, adopted merengue, infusing it with even more Africanisms, such as interlocking percussion rhythms and motion of the dancers' hips. Rural merengue variants with various instrumentations developed in several areas of the Dominican Republic, and some of these are still performed (especially pri-prí, or merengue palo echao, which is popular in the town of Villa Mella). Only the Cibao region's variant, however, became prominent. During the early 20th century merengue típico cibaeño ('Cibao-style folk merengue'), performed on the tambora (double-headed drum), the güira (metal scraper), the button accordion and (often) the alto saxophone, emerged as the top social dance in Cibao's countryside and barrios (lower-class urban neighbourhoods). Two types of merengue típico cibaeño were current (and both are still performed): a three-part sectional form and a one-part form called the pambiche.

The United States occupied the Dominican Republic from 1916 to 1924. During and after the occupation, North American musics became popular, but local forms were simultaneously embraced by nationalists. In the early 1930s Luis Alberti and other Cibao dance band leaders straddled these competing trends and combined merengue with jazz-inflected North American social dancing at élite social clubs.

Rafael Trujillo became dictator of the Dominican Republic in 1930. Although Trujillo was himself partly of African descent, he excluded explicit links to Africa from officially sanctioned national culture. In 1936 Trujillo brought Luis Alberti's band, renamed Orquesta Presidente Trujillo, to the capital city to play big band arrangements of merengue at high society balls. All of the country's dance bands were required to perform newly composed merengues praising the dictator, and this national music became a staple of radio broadcasts. Trujillo was attracted to merengue because of the syncretic nature of the music: in spite of its Afro-Caribbean style, it also contains European elements which set it apart from the neo-African ritual repertory that proliferates in the Dominican Republic.

After Trujillo's fall in 1960 the country opened up to external influences as never before. Bandleader Johnny Ventura and arranger Luis Pérez incorporated salsa elements and rock-and-roll performance style into an exuberant, faster merengue, abandoning big band instrumentation in favour of a smaller conjunto ('combo') format consisting of tambora, güira, piano, bass, singers and two to six wind instruments. In the ensuing decades, merengue continued to incorporate elements ranging from Spanish romantic baladas to rap. It also gained a high profile in the growing Dominican diaspora and became popular among non-Dominicans, even usurping salsa as the favoured Latin-Caribbean dance by the 1980s. Bandleaders Wilfrido Vargas and Juan Luis Guerra led the way in the 'internationalization of merengue', as Dominicans called the music's boom.

In spite of urbanization, accordion-based merengue remained important at the end of the 20th century. While rural groups and those playing for tourists preserved the traditional style, groups in the Cibao region's principal city, Santiago de los Caballeros, developed a new form of accordion-based merengue that added conga drums and electric bass to the traditional line-up of accordion, saxophone, tambora and güira. Allied with both tradition and modernity, Dominicans sometimes call this music merengue típico moderno ('modern folk merengue').

Beginning in the 1970s, bachata emerged as a distinct genre. Several musical types, including the Cuban bolero-son and merengue, are performed within the rubric of bachata, which is marked by its distinct guitar-based instrumentation (versus the accordion or wind instrument texture of most merengue) and vernacular lyrics that comment frankly on working-class life. Bachata employs a tight, nasal vocal quality, one or two guitars, electric bass, maracas or güira, and bongó (for bolero-son) or tambora (for merengue).

Spearheaded by the group Convite, a Dominican brand of nueva canción ('new song') emerged in the 1970s. This musical movement blended rural Afro-Dominican ritual forms such as gagá and palos with pop and jazz while challenging traditional, Eurocentric notions of Dominican identity. Beginning in the 1980s and continuing into the new millennium, bandleaders such as José Duluc and Tony Vicioso followed this trend, undertaking innovative collaborative musical ventures with rural musicians. This movement, however, sorely lacked recording opportunities due to conspicuous disinterest on the part of the music industry, which continued to promote merengue.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.A. Hernández: Música tradicional dominicana (Santo Domingo, 1969)
L.F. Alberti: De música y orquestas bailables dominicanas, 1910–1959 (Santo Domingo, 1975)
L.M. Brito Ureña: El merengue y la realidad existencial del hombre dominicano (Santo Domingo, 1987)
A. Incháustegui: El disco en al República Dominicana (Santo Domingo, 1988)
J. del Castillo and M.A.García Arévalo: Antología del merengue/Anthology of the Merengue (Santo Domingo, 1989)
D. Pacini Hernández: 'Merengue: Race, Class, Tradition, Identity', Americas: an Anthology, ed. M.B. Rosenberg, A. Douglas Kincaid and K. Logan (New York, 1992), 167–72
J. Duany: 'Ethnicity, Identity, and Music: an Anthropological Analysis of the Dominican Merengue', Music and Black Ethnicity in the Caribbean and South America, ed. G. Béhague (New Brunswick, NJ, 1994), 65–90
D. Pacini Hernández: Bachata: a Social History of a Dominican Popular Music (Philadelphia, 1995)
P. Austerlitz: Merengue: Dominican Music and Dominican Identity (Philadelphia, 1997)
P. Austerlitz: 'The Jazz Tinge in Dominican Music', BMRJ, xviii/1–2 (1998), 1–19

MARTHA ELLEN DAVIS (I–III), PAUL AUSTERLITZ (IV)

Dominiceti, Cesare (b Desenzano del Garda, 12 July 1821; d Sesto S Giovanni, Lombardy, 20 June 1888). Italian composer. He studied in Milan. His first opera, I begli usi di città, was successful in his native city in 1841, but failed in Venice later that year. His next, La fiera di Tolobos, was unsuccessful in Brescia in 1845. Disappointed by this failure, it was a while before he returned to operatic music. His next opera, Due mogli in una (1853, Milan; excerpts published there), a melodramma giocoso in the Rossini style, was judged to have some originality, winning praise from Alberto Mazzucato, and another opera, La maschera, was performed at La Scala in 1854. Dominiceti's life soon took a melodramatic turn: he went to South America as a maestro concertatore with a travelling opera company and was abandoned in Bolivia by its impresario. For 18 years he worked in a tin mine, amassing a modest fortune. He then returned to Milan and resumed his career as an opera composer with Morovico (Milan, 1873), but was now considered out of date. From 1881, the year of his last opera (L'ereditiera, Milan), he was composition professor at the Milan Conservatory.

Of the three operas by Dominiceti performed after his return, only Il lago delle fate (1878, Milan; vocal score published there) had any success. Classified as a dramma fantastico, it was set in a gorge in the Black Forest. It is structured as an old-fashioned number opera, but uses harmonies that are modishly chromatic, and has one interesting delirium scene. This opera stayed in the repertory of northern Italian opera houses for some time. Dominiceti also had some success with the many salon songs he wrote throughout his career. His fame in later years rested on his ability as an orchestrator; it was rumoured that he helped Boito with the scoring of the revised Mefistofele. Boito wrote a libretto, Irám, for him; it is usually stated that he never composed it, but according to Ricordi's 1875 catalogue the autograph score was then in their archives. (DBI (G. Ricci); GroveO (M. Tartak) [incl. complete list of 7 operas])

MARVIN TARTAK/CLAUDIO TOSCANI

Dominici, Gianpaolo [Giovan Paolo] di. See DOMENICO, GIANPAOLO DI.

Dominicus de Ferraria (*fl c*1420). Italian composer. He was probably from Ferrara. His only known work, the ballata O dolce conpagno, survives only in GB-Ob Can.misc.213. A canon cancrizans, it may have been modelled on either of the two retrograde rondeaux found in early 15th-century north Italian sources: Guillaume de Machaut's Ma fin est mon commencement (GB-Ob Can.pat.lat.229), and the anonymous Il vient bien (F-Pn n.a.fr 6771). As in those works, the key to the realization of Dominicus's ballata must be deduced from its enigmatic text.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Riemann: 'Zwei falsch gelöste Kanons in Stainer's "Dufay"', ZIMG, vi (1904–5), 466–7
L. Feininger: Die frühgeschichte des Kanons (Emsdetten, 1937), 21–2
W. Apel: The Notation of Polyphonic Music 900–1600 (Cambridge, MA, 1942, 5/1961), 143 [facsimile], 187
U. Günther: 'Fourteenth-Century Music with Texts Revealing Performance Practice', Studies in the Performance of Late Mediaeval Music: New York 1981, 253–61
V. Newes: 'Writing, Reading and Memorizing: the Transmission and Resolution of Retrograde Canons from the 14th and Early 15th Centuries', EMc, xviii (1990), 226–30

VIRGINIA NEWES

Dominicus Pisaurensis. See DOMENICO DA PESARO.

Domino, Fats [Antoine] (b New Orleans, 26 Feb 1928). American rock and roll singer, pianist and songwriter. He studied the piano from the age of nine, and in his early teens developed a boogie-woogie technique derived from the playing styles of Kid Stormy Weather, Sullivan Rock and Drive 'em Down (Willie Hall). His pleasant, nasal singing style was influenced by the singer and guitarist Smiley Lewis (Amos Overton Lemmon). By the time he was 21, Domino was house pianist at the Hideaway Club, where he was heard by the trumpeter and bandleader Dave Bartholomew; together they recorded The Fat Man (1950), a rhythm and blues hit that launched Domino's career. Domino's soft, understated singing was a perfect contrast to the powerful saxophone riffs of Bartholomew's band of black musicians, whose rambling sound (midway, stylistically, between rhythm and blues and rock and roll) attracted both black and white listeners. In 1955 Domino's single Ain't that a shame reached number 10 in the US pop charts, which was highly unusual for a rhythm and blues song at that time. It was followed by a series of hits, a mixture of new tunes and retailored pop standards, including I'm in love again, My Blue Heaven, When my Dreamboat Comes Home, Blueberry Hill and Blue Monday (all 1956). These placed Domino alongside Elvis Presley, Chuck Berry, Little Richard and Jerry Lee Lewis as one of the founders of rock and roll, although he had none of their sexual or antiauthoritarian allure.

Domino continued to write and record hit songs until the early 1960s, and for a brief period he and Bartholomew were the most successful songwriting team in pop history. But by 1964 their music had lost much of its original character and their audience had dwindled. After working for a time at gambling casinos in Las Vegas and Reno, Domino began recording again in 1968 with the Beatles' song Lady Madonna and an album, Fats is Back, produced in the big-band rock fashion of the period. These did not sell well enough to merit further recording, however, and Domino entered semi-retirement in New Orleans. He resumed an active career in the late 1970s and early 80s when he made several tours of Europe. In 1993 he recorded a new album, Christmas is a Special Day, released the following year.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Broven: Walking to New Orleans: the Story of New Orleans Rhythm and Blues (Bexhill-on-Sea, 1974)

P. Guralnick: 'Fats Domino', The Rolling Stone Illustrated History of Rock & Roll, ed. J. Miller (New York, 1976, rev. 3/1992 by A. DeCurtis, J. Henke and H. George-Warren)

LANGDON WINNER

Dommer, Arrey von (b Danzig [now Gdańsk], 9 Feb 1828; d Treysa, nr Marburg an der Lahn, 18 Feb 1905). German music historian and librarian. He intended to follow a career in theology, but changed to music (1851), studying composition in Leipzig with J.C. Lobe and E.F. Richter and taking organ lessons. He taught music in Leipzig before moving to Hamburg in 1863, where he gave lectures on music history and theory. He was a critic for the Hamburger Correspondent for seven years. In 1873 he was appointed to the staff of the Hamburg City Library; he remained there until 1889, when he retired to Marburg. Little known for his compositions (a few vocal works), Dommer earned more acclaim for his writings on music. His greatly revised and enlarged edition of Koch's Musikalisches Lexikon (1865) and, in particular, his own Handbuch der Musikgeschichte (1868) showed him to be a scholar with a thorough command of his subject. His books on Luther printings and early Marburg prints were of pioneering importance. He was also the author of numerous shorter essays and articles, many for the Allgemeine deutsche Biographie.

WRITINGS

Elemente der Musik (Leipzig, 1862)

ed.: H.C. Koch: Musikalisches Lexikon (Heidelberg, 3/1865)

Handbuch der Musikgeschichte (Leipzig, 1868, enlarged 3/1914/R by A. Schering)

Lutherdrucke auf der Hamburger Stadtbibliothek 1516–1523 (Leipzig, 1888/R)

Die ältesten Drucke aus Marburg in Hessen 1527–1566 (Marburg, 1892)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

NDB (G. von Dadelsen)

G. Zedler: 'Arrey von Dommer', Lebensbilder aus Kurhessen und Waldeck 1830–1930, ed. I. Schnack, i (Marburg, 1939), 93–5

M.S. Cole: 'Sonata-Rondo, the Formulation of a Theoretical Concept in the 18th and 19th Centuries', MQ, lv (1969), 180–92

O. Wessely: 'Gedanken zur theoretischen und praktischen Interpretation', Bruckner-Interpretation: Linz 1982, 13–26

GAYNOR G. JONES/BERND WIECHERT

Domnérus, Arne (b Stockholm, 20 Dec 1924). Swedish jazz alto saxophonist, clarinettist and bandleader. He led his first small group in 1942 and appeared during the next few years with several Swedish dance and jazz orchestras. In 1949 he performed at the Paris Jazz Fair, which brought international recognition to Swedish jazz, and made his first recordings as a leader. From 1951 to 1968 he led a group that over the years included many of the foremost Swedish musicians, including Lars Gullin and Jan Johansson. He was also a member of the Swedish Radio Big Band (1956–65) and the leader of its successor, the Radiojazzgruppen (1967–78). He has performed in America, appearing at the Monterey Jazz Festival in California, and recording with Terry Clarke (Darktown Meeting, 1978, Phon.) and Benny Carter (Skyline Dive, 1982, Phon.). He has also been active in the performance of jazz-orientated popular music, such as his collaboration with Paul Simon (Songs of Simon, Sonet, 1972).

Domnérus won international acclaim as a soloist in the early 1950s, mainly through a large number of recordings with Swedish and international all-star groups and others under his own name, and came to be regarded as a leading European alto saxophonist. His distinctive style blends elements from those of Charlie Parker, Lee Konitz and Johnny Hodges. Notable recordings include Mobil (1965, Megafon 8), Duets for Duke (with Bengt Hallberg, 1978, Sonnet) and Live is Life (1995, Proprios).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Kjellberg: 'Domnérus, Arne', Sohlmans musiklexikon, ed. H. Åstrand (Stockholm, 2/1975–9)

U. Soederholm: 'Sveriges Radios mya storband', Musikern (1980), no.11, pp.14–15

E. Kjellberg: Svensk jazzhistoria: en översikt (Stockholm, 1985)

O. Hahn: 'Arne Domnérus en svensk jazzauktoritet', Musikrevy, xliv (1989), 215–16

M. Wendel: 'Dompan lever paa lusten att spela', Orkester journalen, no.59 (1991), 21–8

Oral history in S-Sva

ERIK KJELLBERG

Domnich, Heinrich (b Würzburg, 13 March 1767; d Paris, 19 June 1844). German horn player, composer and teacher, active in France. Son of the Hungarian-born principal horn at the Würzburg court, Friedrich Domnich (b Ofen, 9 June 1729; d Würzburg, 22 April 1790), he was the most famous of three horn-playing brothers; the others were Jacob (b Würzburg, 1758; d Philadelphia, after 1806), who in about 1790 emigrated to Philadelphia and taught and played extensively there, and Arnold (b Würzburg, 29 Sept 1771; d Meiningen, 14 July 1834), who was employed at the Saxe-Meiningen court from 1786 until 1834, becoming principal horn in 1803. At an early age Heinrich entered the band of Count von Elz at Mainz, but when subjected to livery service he left in 1783 for Paris, where he studied with Punto for two years. In 1785 he earned praise for the neatness and facility of his playing as second to Jean Lebrun in a double concerto at the Concert Spirituel; this was the first of at least eight appearances there by Domnich between 1785 and 1788.

In the latter year he played a solo concerto by Devienne, but he otherwise appeared mainly in duos and trios with Lebrun. By 1787 he had joined the Opéra orchestra as Lebrun's second, in 1793 he entered the National Guard band and by 1799 he was second horn at the Théâtre Feydeou. Domnich, along with Duvernoy, Buch and Kenn, was appointed professor of the horn at the newly formed Paris Conservatoire in 1795. He was professor of cor basse until his retirement in 1817, when his class merged with Dauprat's. Among his best-known pupils were E.C. Lewy and J.-B. Mengal. Little is known about his life after retirement.

Domnich's importance is as a teacher rather than a performer. His Méthode de premier et de second cor (Paris, 1807/R) was the first definitive tutor for the horn; it laid the foundations of the French school of horn playing, and remains invaluable in teaching hand technique. In his method Domnich stressed the singing style and the importance of striving for similarity between open and stopped notes, but he was sharply critical of cor mixte playing, preferring the traditional division of horn players into cor alto and cor basse specialists. His description of Hampel's hand-stopping experiments is the earliest and most complete; he must either have studied with Hampel or have written down what Punto recounted from his studies with Hampel. Domnich wrote solo concertos (which remain useful works for hand-horn students), symphonies concertantes for two horns and romances.

WORKS
(selective list)

all published in Paris

Vocal: 6 romances, acc. pf, op.1 (n.d.); 6 romances, acc. pf/harp, op.2 (n.d.); [3] Recueil des romances suivi d'un duo, acc. pf/harp, opp.3–5 (1800); 6 romances ... 6me recueil, acc. pf/harp (n.d.); Ces bois épais: romance, acc. lyre/gui (n.d.) (arr. by C. Lintant); Charmant ruisseau: romance, acc. pf/hp (n.d.); Humble et gentille violette: romance, acc. pf (?1800); La jeune Hortense: romance, acc. pf/hp (n.d.); Non, laisse-moi, Lucas: duo, acc. pf/hp (n.d.); Paix, paix: duo, acc. pf/hp (n.d.)

Orch: Concerto pour premier cor (n.d.); 2me concerto pour le second cor (n.d.); 3me concerto pour cor principal (n.d.); lère simphonie concertante, 2 solo hn (?1797–1806)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ADB (Brückner); FétisB; GerberNL (da Rore, Cypriano); MGG1 (G. Karstädt); PierreH; SchillingE

B. Coar: A Critical Study of the Nineteenth Century Horn Virtuosi in France (De Kalb, IL, 1952)

R. Morley-Pegge: The French Horn (London, 1960, 2/1973)

H. Fitzpatrick: The Horn and Horn-Playing and the Austro-Bohemian Tradition from 1680 to 1830 (London, 1970)

D. Lienhard: 'Das Naturhorn in Paris', Basler Jb für historische Musikpraxis, xv (1991), 81–115

HORACE FITZPATRICK/THOMAS HIEBERT

Domokos, Pál Péter (b Csíkvárdotfalva, 28 June 1901; d Budapest, 18 Feb 1992). Hungarian musicologist and folklorist. After taking a diploma in 1919 as a schoolmaster and music teacher in Csíksomlyó (now Şumuleu), he studied music and sciences at the Budapest Teachers' Training College (graduated 1926) and then worked as a music teacher and choirmaster in Csíkszereda (now Miercurea-Ciuc) from 1926 to 1929. Between 1926 and 1940 he played an important role in the cultural life of the Hungarian minority in Romania: he founded a newspaper, initiated a movement to revive popular customs and organized choral festivals to perform Kodály's works. Subsequently he was the principal of the teachers' college in Cluj (1940–44), taking the doctorate in 1943 at Cluj University. In 1944 he moved to Budapest.

Domokos began his research with pioneering fieldwork in Moldavia (1929, 1932), where he collected folksongs among the Csángó-Magyars, and in Bukovina (1932); material from the first trip was published in his first book A moldvai magyarság (1931). Bartók, whose work on folk music had prompted this research, transcribed the songs from phonograph cylinders. In Budapest Domokos continued collecting folk music among a group of Csángós resettled in Hungary, and published it with Rajeczky in Csángó népzene. In the 1960s, prompted by the scarcity of written 18th-century musical sources in Hungary, he began to investigate the libraries and archives of Hungary and Slovakia, and found about 200 dance melodies in 18th-century manuscripts. In the Cantionale Catholicum he published the works of two Franciscan monks: the text and melodies of János Kájoni (Cantionale Catholicum, Csíksomlyó, 1676) and the writings of I.J. Petrás, who served as a priest in Hungarian villages in Moldavia from 1842 to 1885 and informed the learned society of this isolated Hungarian minority.

WRITINGS

A moldvai magyarság [The Magyars in Moldavia] (Miercurea-Ciuc, 1931, rev. 5/1987)

Adalékok Moldva történetéhez [Data on the history of Moldavia] (Cluj, 1940)

'Egy népballada dallama' [The tune of a ballad], Ethnographia, lxiii (1952), 150–59

'Júlia szép leány: ballada monográfia' [Fair maid Julia: study of a ballad], Ethnographia, lxx (1959), 13–60

'Két zenetörténeti dokumentum, i: Spielenberger Márton ódái (Danzig, 1641); ii: Egy Sepsiszentgyörgyi kézirat zenetörténeti adalékai' [Two music history documents, i: Odes of Márton Spielenberger (Danzig, 1641); ii: Musical data of a manuscript from the town Sepsiszentgyörgy], Zenetudományi tanulmányok, vii (1959), 583–604

'Magyar táncdallamok a XVIII. századból' [Hungarian dance melodies from the 18th century], Zenetudományi tanulmányok, ix (1961), 269–94

'Beziehungen der Musik des 18. Jahrhunderts in Ungarn zur ungarischen Volksmusik von heute', SM, vi (1964), 25–37

'Der Moriskentanz in Europa und in der ungarischen Tradition', SM, x (1968), 229–311

'A pannonhalmi magyar táncgyüjtemény' [The Pannonhalma collection of Hungarian dances], Magyar zenetörténeti tanulnányok Mosonyi Mihály és Bartók Béla emlékére, ed. F. Bónis (Budapest, 1973), 29–51

Hangszeres magyar tánczene a XVIII. században [Instrumental dance music in Hungary in the 18th century] (Budapest, 1978)

Bartók Béla kapcsolata a moldvai csángómagyarokkal [Béla Bartók's connection with the Csángó-Magyars in Moldavia] (Budapest, 1981)

Múltbanéző: tanulmányok [Looking back: studies], ed. I. Fazakas (Budapest, 1990)

EDITIONS

Mĕrt akkor az idő napkeletre fordul [Time then turns to sunrise] (Cluj, 1940) [50 Csángó folksongs]

Rezeda: 96 csángómagyar népdal [Reseda: 96 folksongs] (Budapest, 1953/R) ed., with B. Rajeczky: Csángó népzene [Csángo folk music], i–iii (Budapest, 1956–61/R)

J. Kájoni: Cantionale Catholicum (Budapest, 1979)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Vargyas: 'A 70 esztendős Domokos Pál Péter köszöntése' [Greeting the 70-year-old Pál Péter Domokos], Ethnographia, lxxxiii (1972), 95–8 [incl. list of works]

'Megfog vala apóm szokcor kezemtül ... ': tanulmányok Domokos Pál Péter emlékére ['Many times my grandfather took me by the hand ... ': studies in honour of Pál Péter Domokos] (Budapest, 1993) [incl. list of works]

MARIA DOMOKOS

Domville, Silas. See TAYLOR, SILAS.

Donà, Mariangela (b Piove di Sacco, Padua, 23 May 1916). Italian musicologist. She studied at Milan University with Antonio Banfi, taking her degree in 1940. She became librarian of the Brera National Library, Milan, in 1942 and later worked as an editor for Ricordi (1961–3). In 1965, with Sartori, she founded the Ufficio Ricerca Fondi Musicali, the music section of the Brera National Library (now in the Milan Conservatory), becoming its director in 1981, and has since worked to fulfil its aim of gathering catalogues of all known Italian collections of music making it the bibliographical centre for the country's music. She was director of the Messina University Library (1969–70) and from 1971 has been coordinator of the Italian committee for RILM. From 1977 to 1994 she was responsible for the Italian branch of IAML. Her main research interests in Romantic music and philosophy have led to the translation of important works by Hanslick and Hoffmann and to studies of musical expression.

WRITINGS

ed. and trans.: E.T.A. Hoffmann: Dialoghi di un musicista (Milan, 1945, 2/1985 as E.Th.A. Hoffmann, poeta e compositore: scritti scelti sulla musica)

Il bello musicale (Milan, 1945, 2/1971) [trans. of E. Hanslick: Vom Musikalisch-Schönen, Leipzig, 1854]

Espressionismo e dodecafonia, ed. L. Rognoni (Turin, 1954, enlarged 2/1966 as La scuola musicale di Vienna; Eng. trans., 1977) [trans. of writings by Schoenberg, Berg and Kandinsky]

Manuale di tecnica dodecafonica (Wiesbaden and Milan, 1954) [trans. of H. Eimert: Lehrbuch der Zwölftontechnik, Wiesbaden, 1950]

Talento e genio (Milan, 1956) [trans. of G. Révész: Talent und Genie, Berne, 1952]

La musica moderna (Turin, 1960, 2/1975) [trans. of H.H. Stuckenschmidt: Neue Musik, Berlin, 1951]

La stampa musicale a Milano fino all'anno 1700 (Florence, 1961)

'Bibliografia critica Cherubiniana', Luigi Cherubini nel II centenario della nascita, ed. A. Damerini (Florence, 1962), 188–201

La musica nelle biblioteche milanesi, Milan, 28 May – 8 June 1963 (Milan, 1963) [exhibition catalogue]

'La musicologia in Italia', CHM, iv (1966), 94–101

'Affetti musicali nel Seicento', Studi secenteschi, viii (1967), 75–83

Espressione e significato nella musica (Florence, 1968)

'Forma pittorica e forma musicale in Paul Klee', Quadrivium, xiv (1973), 101–11

'Dagli archivi milanesi: lettere di Ranieri de' Calzabigi e di Antonia Bernasconi', AnMc, no.14 (1974), 268–300

'Notizie sulla famiglia Sammartini', NRMI, viii (1974), 400–05

'La tipografia milanese Malatesta nel sec. xviii e la politica culturale austriaca in Lombardia', Studi di biblioteconomia e storia del libro in onore di Francesco Barberi, ed. G. De Gregori and M. Valenti (Rome, 1976), 251–62

'Un'aria di Rossini per un'opera di Nicolini nella Biblioteca Comunale di Civitanova Marche', AnMc, no.19 (1979), 320–29 with E. Zanetti and A. Zecca Laterza: Manuale di catalogazione musicale (Rome, 1979)

'Ricordo di Benvenuto Disertori', Studi trentini di scienze storiche, lviii (1979), 155–60

'Peter Lichtenthal musicista e musicologo', Ars iocundissima: Festschrift für Kurt Dorfmüller, ed. H. Leuchtmann and R. Münster (Tutzing, 1984), 49–83

'L'Ufficio per la Ricerca dei Fondi Musicali Italiani: storia, presente e avvenire', Fonti musicali in Italia, i (1987), 25–30

'Johann Kuhnau e Der Musikalische Quacksalber', Liuteria, musica, cultura, xxxi (1993), 34–41

'Music in Milan in the Eighteenth Century during the Austrian Domination', Austria, 966–1996: Ottawa 1996 (forthcoming)

ed., with F. Lesure: Scritti in memoria di Claudio Sartori (Lucca, 1997) [incl. 'La musica strumentale nei circoli privati milanesi nella prima metà dell'Ottocento', 89–109] with L. Ghielmi: C. Monza: Pièces modernes: pour le clavecin (Milan, 1986) [incl. preface]

EDITIONS

CAROLYN GIANTURCO/TERESA M. GIALDRONI

Donadze, Lado (Vladimer) (b Ozurgety, 5/18 Mar 1905; d Tbilisi, 8 Dec 1986). Georgian musicologist. He graduated in law from the Tbilisi State University (1931), and in musicology from the Tbilisi State Conservatory (1934). He undertook postgraduate study with Roman Gruber at the Leningrad Conservatory (1937), and gained the doctorate from the Moscow Conservatory (1957) with a dissertation on the music of Paliashvili. He taught the history of music at the Tbilisi College of Music (1932–4) and at the Conservatory (1937–76), where he set up the music history department. His writings on the founders of Georgian art music created the basis for music history studies in Georgia. Donadze was awarded the Z. Paliashvili prize in 1972.

WRITINGS

Shalva Mshvelidze (Tbilisi, 1946)

'Muzïkal'noye naslediye Gruzii (Klassicheskiy period)' [The musical heritage of Georgia (Classical period)], Gruzinskaya muzïkal'naya kul'tura, ed. A. Tsulukidze (Moscow, 1957), 103–76

Zakaria Paliashvilis shemokmedeba [The work of Zakoria Paliashvili] (diss., Moscow Conservatory, 1957)

Narkvevebi kartuli sabchota musikis istoriis shesakheb [Essays on the history of music in Soviet Georgia], i (Tbilisi, 1975)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Toradze: 'Tsigni Zakaria Paliashvili' [The book about Zakharia Paliashvili], Sabchota khelovneba (1972), no.3, pp.43–7

L. Kakuliia and S. Chkoniia: Kompozitorï i muzïkovedï Gruzii (Tbilisi, 1985), 166–7

JOSEPH JORDANIA

Donalda [Lightstone], Pauline (b Montreal, 5 March 1882; d Montreal, 22 Oct 1970). Canadian soprano. She studied at the Royal Victoria College, Montreal, and went to Paris in 1902, taking her stage name from her benefactor, Donald A. Smith (Lord Strathcona). After studies with Edmond Duvernoy and Paul Lhérie, she made her début as Massenet's Manon in Nice in 1904. The following year she made her Covent Garden début as Micaëla with Destinn and Dalmorès. Later she sang several roles there, including Mimì with Caruso, and was Ah-joe in the première of Leoni's L'oracolo (1905). In 1919 she was the first London Concepcion in Ravel's L'heure espagnole. She also sang at the Théâtre de la Monnaie in Brussels, the Opéra-Comique in Paris and the Manhattan Opera in New York. Donalda won admiration for her rich timbre and vivacious style. She retired in 1922 and taught in Paris until 1937; she then returned to Montreal, where she founded the Opera Guild in 1941. That organization gave several Canadian premières and she remained president until its demise in 1969.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A.E. Knight: 'The Life of Pauline Donalda', Record Collector, x (1955–6), 265–74 [with discography]

R.C. Brotman: Pauline Donalda (Montreal, 1975)

GILLES POTVIN

Donaldson, John (b Newcastle upon Tyne, bap. 5 Jan 1789; d Edinburgh, 12 Aug 1865). English educationalist. His father, John Donaldson, was a well-known organ builder in Newcastle and York. As a young man he lived in Glasgow where, having visited Dublin to study J.B. Logier's teaching methods, he opened a Logierian academy in 1816 and established a music warehouse. Kalkbrenner and Moscheles both commended his talents as a pianist. He published a Piano Sonata in G minor which he dedicated to Clementi (1822), and took a deep interest in the science of acoustics. But soon after his marriage in 1820 he gave up teaching in order to study for the Scottish bar. In 1826 he was admitted to the Faculty of Advocates and settled in Edinburgh.

When the University of Edinburgh instituted the Reid chair of music in 1838 Donaldson offered himself as a candidate. He was finally appointed professor in 1845 and remained in the post until his death, introducing regular lecture courses in the theory of music (including one 'exclusively for ladies') and building up a remarkable collection of scientific apparatus and musical instruments. In his demonstrations he replicated and enlarged on acoustical experiments of Savart and others, using apparatus imported from Paris or manufactured locally to his own specifications; surviving items may be seen in the National Museums of Scotland and the Edinburgh University Collection of Historic Musical Instruments. Donaldson's determination to secure adequate premises and funding was opposed by the Reid trustees, however, and led to a lawsuit between the town council and the trustees which was settled in his favour. As a result of his efforts the Reid School of Music (now known as the Reid Concert Hall) was built in 1858–9 at a cost of £8000. It housed a museum of instruments and library, and its classroom was equipped with a four-manual organ by William Hill & Son with a justly tuned 14-rank Mixture stop (1861) as well as a barrel-and-finger organ by David Hamilton designed to illustrate the rules of part-writing (1845–51).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

'Mr. Logier's New System of Musical Instruction', Quarterly Musical Magazine and Review, i (1818), 111–39
H.G. Farmer: A History of Music in Scotland (London, 1947)
J.C. Kassler: The Science of Music in Britain, 1714–1830: a Catalogue of Writings, Lectures and Inventions (New York, 1979)
C.D.S. Field: 'John Donaldson and the Teaching of Acoustics at the University of Edinburgh in the Mid-Nineteenth Century', Proceedings of the Institute of Acoustics, xix/5 (1997), 509–20
C.D.S. Field: '"A Musical Apparatus of Somewhat Complex and Intricate Mechanism": Organs in Professor John Donaldson's Classroom at the University of Edinburgh 1845–65', B.I.O.S. Journal, xxiv (2000)

CHRISTOPHER D.S. FIELD

Donaldson, Walter (b Brooklyn, NY, 15 Feb 1893; d Santa Monica, CA, 15 July 1947). American songwriter, lyricist and publisher. He was a pianist and song plugger in Tin Pan Alley before World War I and then became a staff composer for Irving Berlin's publishing company. His first successful song was My Mammy (J. Young and S. Lewis, 1918), which Al Jolson used in a blackface revue. My Buddy (1922) was his first popular collaboration with the lyricist Gus Kahn, who wrote the words to most of his hit songs, including Carolina in the Morning (1922), and Yes, sir, that's my baby (1925). Donaldson also wrote My Blue Heaven (G. Whiting, 1927), Little White Lies (1930), and At Sundown (1927) and You're Driving Me Crazy (1930) which became jazz standards. He left New York to work in the Hollywood film industry after the advent of sound, beginning with Glorifying the American Girl (1929, incl. 'There must be somebody waiting for me (in Loveland)'). He drew on his earlier hit song Makin' Whoopie (Kahn, 1928) for the movie Whoopie starring Eddie Cantor (1930), including 'My baby just cares for me' (Kahn). Another success was Suzy (1936), which included 'Did I Remember' (H. Adamson). In 1928 he helped found the music publishing company Donaldson, Douglas and Gumble. Donaldson's melodies are characterized by repeated motifs and inventive harmonies and rhythms; many of his tunes have been favourite material for jazz musicians.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Wilder: American Popular Song: the Great Innovators, 1900–1950 (New York, 1972)
D. Ewen: American Songwriters (New York, 1987)
E. Donaldson and R.S. Schiff, eds.: The Walter Donaldson Songbook (Winona, MN, and Los Angeles, 1988) [incl. list of works, 9–13]
A. Forte: The American Popular Ballad of the Golden Era, 1924–1950 (Princeton, NJ, 1995)

DEANE L. ROOT

Donath, Helen (b Corpus Christi, TX, 10 July 1940). American soprano. After studies at Del Mar College, Corpus Christi, she studied with Paola Novikova in New York. She appeared in concert and recital in New York and Texas from 1958 to 1960, then won a contract at Cologne, where her parts included Wellgunde (the role of her début in 1961), Liù, Blacher's Juliet, Micaëla and Branghien in Frank Martin's Le vin herbé. In 1963 she moved to Hanover and received special recognition in the theatre and on television as Jeanne in Egk's Die Verlobung von San Domingo. Donath made her débuts at Salzburg (Pamina) in 1967 and San Francisco (Sophie) in 1971; the same year she also first appeared at the Bol'shoy, as Sophie with the Vienna Staatsoper. Her La Scala début, as Micaëla, followed in 1972, and her Covent Garden début, as Anne Trulove, in 1979. In 1991 she undertook the Governess in The Turn of the Screw in Los Angeles, and in 1993 she sang Eva in Dresden. She has been equally active in oratorio and recital, and has recorded much of her repertory, including Mozart masses and the Governess under Colin Davis and, among her other opera roles, Eva and Marzelline (under Karajan), Sophie and Gluck's Amor (under Solti), and Micaëla (under Maazel). Her lyric soprano has been notable for its flexibility, purity and ease in the upper register.

MARTIN BERNHEIMER/ALAN BLYTH

Donati [Donat]. German family of organ builders. In 1653 Christoph Donati the elder (b Marienberg, Saxony, 30 Sept 1625; d Leipzig, 14 Aug 1706) built with Matthias Tretzscher from Kulmbach, Bavaria, an organ in the Stadtkirche in Bayreuth. The same year he was in Leipzig, where he was made a citizen on 4 October 1662. In 1684, after his third marriage, he came into possession of an inn. He built clavichords as well as about 20 organs, including those at Neuenkirchen, near Cuxhaven (1661–2), Luckau, Lower Lusatia (cathedral of St Nicolai, 1672–4), Eisenberg, Thuringia (Schlosskirche, 1683–8) and Brandis bei Wurzen (1705), all notable examples of his craftsmanship. Johann and Johann Philipp Krieger were involved in the final arrangement of the disposition of his organ at Eisenberg; Sebastian Knüpfer composed the music played for the dedication of an organ at Knauthain, and Mattheson published the disposition of his organ in the Leipzig Neukirche. Christoph Donati the younger (b Leipzig, bap. 2 Dec 1659; d Leipzig, 14 June 1713) was an efficient assistant and successor to his father; however he does not appear to have produced any works independently.

Johannes Jacobus Donati (b Leipzig, bap. 27 June 1663), son of Christoph the elder, was organ builder at the princes' courts at Gotha and Altenburg; on 9 February 1701 he married Severin Holbeck's daughter, and took over his late father-in-law's business; on 28 June 1704 he was made a freeman of Altenburg. He was also a versatile musician. Christoph Thielemann and Wahlfried Ficker are known to have been his pupils and worked with him. He built a large number of instruments (showing a preference for unusual stops and pungent voicing) and his talent was often remarked upon, both during his lifetime and after his death. His 1724 organ in Schlunzig, near Glauchau (one manual and pedal, ten speaking stops), is a remarkable example of organ construction. A clavichord built by him in 1700, now in the Musikinstrumenten-Museum, University of Leipzig, is thought to be the first with full bass octave. After his death his Zwickau workshop was run by his son Johann Jacob Donati (b Zwickau, bap. 15 Oct 1715).

Johann Christoph Gottlob Donati (b Leipzig, bap. 19 Oct 1694; d Glauchau, bur. 8 Sept 1756), son of Christoph the younger, had been apprenticed to his uncle Johannes Jacobus in Zwickau; in 1726 he was working as an organ builder in Glauchau, where two years later he bought a house in the outskirts, and where from 1740 he was assistant judge at the district court (on the occasion of the peace celebrations in 1763, however, his widow received alms from the poor-box). A contemporary account of him as 'instrument maker' seems to indicate that he also built clavichords and harpsichords. His excellent organ for the Schlosskapelle, Lichtenwalde (1740–41), was moved to the Stiftskirche, Ebersdorf, in 1962.

Christian Gottlob (b Glauchau, bap. 3 Aug 1732; d Altenburg, Thuringia, 13 Nov 1795) and Gotthold Heinrich Donati (b Glauchau, bap. 24 Oct 1734; d Altenburg, 28 Dec 1799), sons of Johann Christoph Gottlob, continued to run their father's workshop after his death, and in March 1770 they were made freemen of Glauchau. In December 1771, Christian Gottlob was made organ builder at the Prince of Saxony's court, and in the following year he and his brother moved to Altenburg. After Christian Gottlob's death, Gotthold Heinrich took over his post; his achievements were complimented by the court organist Krebs. Organs by the brothers survive at Neuenmörbitz (1770), Wettelswalde (1793) and Böhlen (1794). Johann Christoph Donati (b Glauchau, bap. 21 Dec 1737; d Glauchau, bur. 15 Jan 1764), another son of Johann Christoph Gottlob, worked with his brothers, and was also a respected craftsman during his brief life. Carl Friedrich Donati (b Glauchau, bap. 2 May 1740; d Glauchau, 2 Feb 1814), a fourth son, was a master carpenter in Glauchau, where he was made a freeman on 25 February 1774. His work on organs included helping to install the Gesau positive organ.

August Friedrich Wilhelm Donati (b Altenburg, 21 May 1773; d Altenburg, 1 Feb 1842), son of Christian Gottlob, was made court organ builder at Altenburg on 17 January 1800, and in 1805 he rebuilt the organ in the Schlosskirche at Eisenberg. On 18 March 1814 he was given the post of Hoffourier, and as part of his organ-building work also tuned the instrument in the Schlosskirche. He is not known to have built any organs independently.

Whereas the dispositions of the organs built by Christoph Donati the elder show the influence of the north German tradition, the work of his descendants is in some respects related to that of Gottfried Silbermann. The Donatis retained their independence, however. Their surviving instruments are characterized by beautiful cases and an expressive, majestic sound.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (W. Hüttel)
A. Schering: Musikgeschichte Leipzigs, ii: von 1650 bis 1723 (Leipzig, 1926)
P. Smets, ed.: Orgeldispositionen (Kassel, 1931)
E. Müller: Musikgeschichte von Freiberg (Freiberg, 1939)
P. Rubardt and E.Jentsch: Kamenzer Orgelbuch (Leipzig and Kamenz, 1953)
P. Rubardt: Führer durch das Musikinstrumenten-Museum der Karl-Marx-Universität Leipzig (Leipzig, 1955, 2/1964)
U. Dähnert: 'Die Orgel in der Schlosskirche zu Eisenberg', Zwischen Saale und Elster, iv (1959), 1–6
H. Winter: 'Die Orgel der St. Marien-Kirche in Neuenkirchen im Lande Hadeln', Festschrift Neuenkirchen, ed. J. Macrander (Neuenkirchen, 1973), 7–12
W. Hüttel: 'Zwei Meisterwerke der sächsisch-thüringischen Orgelbaukunst im 18. Jahrhundert', Acta Organologica, xv (1981), 76–87
W. Hüttel: Zur Musikgeschichte der Stadt Glachau und ihrer näheren Umgebung (Glachau, 1986), 32, 37
W. Hüttel: Musikgeschichte von Glauchau und Umgebung (Glauchau, 1995), 97–9, 101–3, 107–10

WALTER HÜTTEL

Donati, Baldassare. See DONATO, BALDASSARE.

Donati, Bindo d'Alesso (fl 14th century). Italian poet, son of the poet Alesso di Guido Donati. Only one ballata, Non avrà mai pietà, set to music by Francesco Landini, is extant. (Several poems were modelled on its first line; for further discussion see A. Lanza: Studi sulla lirica del Trecento, Rome, 1978, pp.142ff)

GIANLUCA D'AGOSTINO

Donati, Ignazio (b Casalmaggiore, nr Parma, *c*1570; d Milan, 21 Jan 1638). Italian composer. He was maestro di cappella of Urbino Cathedral from 1596 to 1598 and again from 1612 to 1615, at Pesaro in 1600, at Fano from 1601 to 1605, of the Accademia dello Spirito Santo, Ferrara, in 1616, at Casalmaggiore from 1618 to 1623, of Novara Cathedral from October 1623 to 1629, of Lodi Cathedral from 1629 to 1630 and finally of Milan Cathedral from 10 April 1631. Though this long succession of posts might suggest that he was restless, it does show not only a geographical progression, from the distant east coast of Italy to Ferrara – a comparatively advanced musical centre – and then on to his native Lombardy, but also a progressive rise in status, from the comparative backwaters of Pesaro and Fano, by way of a distinguished academy to the Lombard cathedrals, of which Milan was the peak.

Donati's output is almost exclusively church music. He was consistently inventive in all the branches of it that he worked in, but he is specially important as an outstanding pioneer of the small-scale concertato motet for a few voices and continuo: most of his works in this genre are for two to five voices, though he also published two volumes entirely of solo motets. He produced only one collection of psalms, the remarkable Salmi boscarecci of 1623, with its optional ripienos and many alternative methods of performance. The first of his two volumes of masses (1622) contrasts in separate works, to cater for different tastes, the usual modern style with a smoother, more old-fashioned one (though not a pallid stile antico).

With the practical experience that he gained in directing so many provincial choirs Donati was concerned that his music should be as adaptable as possible to limited resources. In verbose but fascinating prefaces to several of his publications he explained how, for example, one could omit the middle voices of four-part motets (1612) or perform the Salmi boscarecci with one, two, three or even four choirs, with or without instruments, according to whether ferial or festive music was required. He also experimented with positioning solo voices at a distance from the organ, as well as with the more usual spatial disposition of separated choirs, and had interesting ideas on the teaching of singing, with which he prefaced the solo motets of 1636.

Like the best composers of small-scale concertato motets Donati was equally at home in intimate solo, duet and trio motets and in works in four to six parts. In the latter he liked to contrast as many varied groupings of voices as possible with contrapuntal dexterity and also melodic charm – qualities rarely combined in this genre in the decade 1610–20. An example is the six-part Confitebor from op.6, where, despite the long neutral text, monotony is avoided by a delightful uninterrupted succession of solos, small groupings and tuttis. Donati's music is often cheerful: he seldom set pathetic texts. A specially attractive illustration of this is the joyous Easter motet Alleluia haec dies, for four voices and optional violin, from his 1629 collection. A striking emotional change from belligerence (chromatic bass line, brittle counterpoint) to security (bright major key and homophony) is found in the motet Ecce confundentur in op.6. In duets and trios Donati's melodic gift is even more evident: he states his melody, often carefully varied by sequences, in one voice and then another before combining them in canon, over a brisk walking bass line, and sometimes attempted thematic unity or used a refrain, as in the charming three-part Non vos relinquem orphanos in op.4. All three collections of 1618 contain fine examples of the dialogue form: Trenseamus usque ad Bethlehem (op.5) and Domine si fuisses hic (op.6) show a strong feel for drama. Donati published a few solo motets as early as 1612, but they differ from the two solo volumes in lacking vocal ornamentation. This is particularly prominent in the 1636 book, whose contents are mostly in a brilliant style, declamatory and with some very expressive mood painting; an unusually heartfelt mood characterizes Peccavi super numerum, which belongs to the best traditions of monody.

WORKS

Edition: Composizioni sacre e profane a più voci, secoli XIV, XV e XVI, ed. L. Torchi, AMI, i (1897/R)

all published in Venice

Sacri concentus, 1–5vv, una cum org (1612)
Motetti, 5vv, in concerto con due sorti di letanie della Beata Vergine et nel fine alcuni canoni (1616)
Concerti ecclesiastici, 2–5vv, bc (org), op.4 (1618)
Concerti ecclesiastici, 1–4vv, bc (org), op.5 (1618)
Motetti concertati, 5–6vv, con dialoghi, salmi e letanie della Beata Vergine, bc (org), op.6 (1618)
Il primo libro de motetti, 1v, bc, op.7 (1619, 2/1634)
Messe, 4–6vv, parte da capella, e da concerto, bc (org) (1622)
Salmi boscarecci concertati, 6vv, 6vv ad lib . . . con una messa . . . bc (org), op.9 (1623)
Madre de quatordeci figli . . . il secondo libro de motetti, in concerto . . . fatti sopra il basso generale Perfecta sunt in te, 5vv (1629)
Le fanfalughe, 2–5vv (1630)
Il secondo libro delle messe da capella, 4–5vv, op.12 (1633)
Li vecchiarelli, et perregrini concerti, 2–4vv, con una messa, 3–4vv concertata, op.13 (1636)
Il secondo libro de motetti, lv, bc, op.14 (1636)
20 motets in 1619[5], 1620[5], 1626[5], 1629[5], 1641[2], 1641[3], 1646[4], D-Bsb; 1 lit in 1626[3]; 6 pss in D-Rp; various works in A-KR

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Goldschmidt: Die italienische Gesangsmethode des XVII. Jahrhunderts und ihre Bedeutung für die Gegenwart (Breslau, 1890, 2/1892/R), 77, 111, 561; appx, 40ff, 54–5 [includes edn of a motet from Il primo libro op.7, and two from Il secondo libro op.14]
H. Leichtentritt: Geschichte der Motette (Leipzig, 1908/R), 254ff
V. Fedeli, ed.: Le cappelle musicali di Novara dal secolo XVI a' primordi dell'Ottocento, IMi, iii (1933), 58ff
H.T. McElrath: A Study of the Motets of Ignatio Donati (ca. 1575–1638) (diss., U. of Rochester, 1967)
H.E. Smither: 'The Latin Dramatic Dialogue and the Nascent Oratorio', JAMS, xx (1967), 403–33
J. Roche: North Italian Church Music in the Age of Monteverdi (Oxford, 1984)

JEROME ROCHE/ELIZABETH ROCHE

Donato [Donati], Baldassare [Baldissera] (b ?1529; d Venice, 17 February 1603). Italian composer and singer. A pupil of Willaert and an altar boy in S Marco, Venice, he was appointed as a singer in the ducal chapel in or before 1546. In 1547 he was given the task 'of keeping the maestro di cappella Adriano [Willaert] occupied in composing'. In 1562 he became singing teacher to the boys in S Marco; in the same year, he was given the post of director of the short-lived cappella piccola, which sang in S Marco on non-festive Thursdays and Fridays and, together with the main choir of the church, on Saturdays and major feast days. In 1577, Donato directed the group of singers engaged by the scuola grande of S Rocco to serve during religious ceremonies and processions, but he resigned within a year after quarrelling with the governors. Three years later, he was made singing teacher at the seminary. In 1588, singers under his direction provided music at three of the Venetian scuole grandi (S Marco, S Giovanni Evangelista and Misericordia). In the same year, he became deputy maestro di cappella at S Marco and, in 1590, he succeeded Zarlino as maestro. Perhaps on account of his age, there seem to have been some doubts about his suitability for the appointment. In any case, the contract was initially awarded for five years. Its terms required Donato to continue teaching at the seminary; it also prohibited him from singing outside S Marco, suggesting that, like many of his Venetian contemporaries, he was habitually involved in making music elsewhere in the city: above all, perhaps, for the parish and monastic churches and confraternities. The contract was renewed in 1596 (though teaching in the seminary was henceforth entrusted to Giovanni Bassano), and Donato remained in his post for the rest of his life. A deliberation by the governors of the Ospedale dei Derelitti (the Ospedaletto) shows that, on his death, he was singing teacher to the figlie del coro of this institution.

Donato's church music appeared in 1599 in a retrospective volume. Some of his motets show contrapuntal tendencies typical of his teacher Willaert; others, above all the larger-scale works, come closer to the style of the Gabrielis. Donato was also a significant figure in the sphere of Venetian secular music. He published three volumes of madrigals and villanellas and is known to have maintained close contacts with several Venetian academies. While a young man, he was asked by the Venetian noble and dilettante poet Domenico Venier to set three stanzas for civic celebrations in Venice, probably the outdoor Ascension Day ceremonies; these settings were published in the Napollitane of 1550. Later, he became a member of Venier's academy. Caffi states that he also belonged to the Nuova Accademia Veneziana.

Donato frequented the Zantani household, which also hosted such famous composers as Parabosco, Padovano and Merulo (all of them musicians at S Marco). Some of Donato's publications are listed in the inventories of music owned by the Accademia Filarmonica, Verona; a five-part mass by him is listed among the music sometimes performed during the academy's most important annual festivity, held on 1 May.

Donato's popularity may be gauged from the large number of reprints of his earliest published collection, the four-part Napollitane, et alcuni madrigali of 1550 (six reprints in the course of eight years), as well as by the frequency with which his madrigals were included in anthologies, both in Italy and abroad. His Primo libro a cinque e sei voci is dominated by sonnet settings, though it also includes poems in other forms, many of them by young poets active in Venier's salon. The collection shows Donato at his best in the somewhat freer madrigal, where his talent for distinctive motives and vivid rhythms is most apparent; upper parts tend to be particularly melodious. Good examples are Sarra, vostra beltate è tanta e tale and Cantai un tempo, e se fu dolce il canto (on a poem by Bembo). The three madrigals by Venier – Gloriosa felice alma Vineggia, Quattro dee che 'l mondo onora e ama and Viva sempre in ogni etade – are characterized, as is natural in outdoor contexts, by uncomplicated textures and slow-moving harmony.

WORKS

Le napollitane et alcuni madrigali, 4vv (Venice, 1550), ed. in SCMad, x (1991) [repr. as Il primo libro de canzon villanesche alla napolitana]; 3 Latin contrafacta, 1588[21], 1 arr., lute, 1582[5]

Il primo libro di madrigali, con 3 dialoghi, 5–7vv (Venice, 1553), ed. in SCMad, x (1991)

Il secondo libro de madrigali, 4vv (Venice, 1568), 1 ed. in Einstein; 2 Eng. trans., 1588[29], one arr. (4 new voices added to cantus), 1589[12], 1 arr. v and lute, 1594[19]

Il primo libro de motetti, 5, 6, 8vv (Venice, 1599)

12 motets (some possibly repr. from Primo libro), 1549[7], 1576[2], 1600[2], 1609[1], 1613[2]

11 madrigals, 3, 5, 6, 8, 12vv, 1548[9], 1551[10] (instr. version, 1549[34], ed. in IIM, i, 1994), 1557[23], 1561[10], 1570[15], 1570[21], 1576[5], 1579[3], 1584[4], 1598[9], 1606[8]

3 laudi, 4vv, 1600[5]; 2 chansons, 1589[5], 1608[11]; 2 German lieder, 1585[37], 1597[7]; Intabulations, 1584[15]

2 psalms, A-Wn

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Einstein IM

F. Caffi: Storia della musica nella già cappella ducale di San Marco in Venezia dal 1318 al 1797 (Venice, 1854–5/R, repr. 1931): ed. E. Surian (Florence, 1987), 147–51

G. Turrini: L 'accademia filarmonica di Verona dalla fondazione (maggio 1543) al 1600 e il suo patrimonio musicale antico (Verona, 1941), 80, 188, 213

G. Ellero, J.Scarpa and M.C. Paolucci, eds.: Arte e musica all'Ospedaletto: schede d'archivio sull'attività musicale degli ospedali dei Derelitti e dei Mendicanti di Venezia (sec. XVI–XVIII) (Venice, 1978), 51

E. Rosand: 'Music in the Myth of Venice', Renaissance Quarterly, xxx (1977), 511–37, esp. 527–30

G. Vio: 'Precisazioni sui documenti della Pietà in relazione alle figlie del coro', Vivaldi veneziano europeo: Venice 1978, 101–22

J.H. Moore: Vespers at St Mark's: Music ofAlessandro Grandi, Giovanni Rovetta and Francesco Cavalli (Ann Arbor, 1981), 75–6, 134, 246

G.M. Ongaro: The Chapel of St Mark's at the Time of Adrian Willaert (1527–1562): a Documentary Study (diss., U. of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, 1986)

R. Edwards: 'An Expanded Musical and Social Context for Andrea Gabrieli: New Documents, New Perspectives', Andrea Gabrieli e il suo tempo: Venice 1985, 43–57, esp. 52, 55

J.E. Glixon: 'Music at the Scuole in the Age of Andrea Gabrieli', Andrea Gabrieli e il suo tempo: Venice 1985, 59–74, esp. 70

M. Feldman: City Culture and the Madrigal at Venice (Berkeley, 1995), 63, 67, 97, 311–12, 384–405

E. Quaranta: Oltre San Marco: Organizzazione e prassi della musica nelle chiese di Venezia nel Rinascimento (Florence, 1998)

ANU AHOLA

Donato da Cascia [Magister Dominus Donatus de Florentia] (fl Florence, 2nd half of the 14th century). Italian composer. The position of Donato's works in the Squarcialupi Codex (I-Fl 87) suggests that he was somewhat younger than Lorenzo and older than Landini. The poet Franco Sacchetti designated Donato as 'presbiter de Cascia' (Cascia near Florence, not the Umbrian Cascia). Donato has nothing to do with the Dominus Donati who is mentioned by Clercx as applying for a canonry in Liège in 1344. The titles Ser, Dominus and Don as well as his dress as depicted in I-Fl 87 (f.71*v*) indicate that he was a Benedictine or a Camaldolensian.

Very little information can be gleaned from the texts of Donato's works, which are almost all madrigals. The two lost settings of texts by Sacchetti presumably date from the 1350s. Sovran' uccello se' was possibly composed on the occasion of one of the two journeys to Rome made by the Emperor Charles IV (in 1355 and in 1368). Dal cielo scese possibly refers to Samaritana di Polenta who married Antonio della Scala (Verona) in 1378. Some doubt is cast on this relatively late dating of a work by Donato by the fact that the two-voice madrigal is still dominant in his work, as it was in the output of the older Trecento composers. On the other hand, the style of the only surviving ballata (if indeed it is a work by Donato) contradicts this, for it can hardly belong to the early examples of its genre. As well as Sacchetti, Donato also set texts by Niccolò Soldanieri, Arrigo Belondi and Antonio degli Alberti.

14 madrigals, one caccia, one ballata and one virelai have survived; with one exception (the virelai in the south German MS CZ-Pu XI E 9) they are all to be found in Tuscan sources. The largest repertory is contained in I-Fl 87, with 15 works.

On the one hand Donato is indebted stylistically to Jacopo da Bologna, notably in the transitional phrases between lines of madrigal verse, these being usually untexted and monophonic (though some are two-voiced and more modern in style), and in sporadic points of imitation. On the other hand Donato's style is similar to that of Lorenzo in its rich, virtuoso melismas. With the exception of the caccia-madrigal – which is texted in all three voices and does not belong among the older cacce – all pieces are for two voices, in the early Trecento fashion, with text supplied for both voices. (The missing text in the tenor of Come'l potestu far is presumably to be supplied.) Pieces with completely simultaneous syllabic articulation are found alongside others in which the text is offset by rhythmic or melodic imitation. The one virelai is composed in a simple French style. The ballata with text in dialogue form, contained in I-Fl 87, is syllabic in style and has a tripartite structure which became more common in the late 14th century and the 15th. Thus, older and more modern stylistic elements occur side by side in Donato's work.

WORKS

Editions: Der Squarcialupi-Codex Pal.87 der Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana zu Florenz, ed. J. Wolf (Lippstadt, 1955) [W]

The Music of Fourteenth-Century Italy, ed. N. Pirrotta, CMM, viii/3 (1962) [P]
Italian Secular Music, ed. W.T. Marrocco, PMFC, vii (1971) [M]
Poetry edition: Poesie musicali del Trecento, ed. G. Corsi (Bologna, 1970), pp.xlviii, 117–25

VIRELAIS

Je port amiablement, 2vv, P 42, M 51 (text inc., full text in I-Fn W. A. 1031, ed. in Contini)

BALLATAS

Senti tu d'amor, 2vv, W 101, P 41, M 62 (volta with its own music; text: dialogue)

MADRIGALS

Come da lupo (N. Soldanieri), 2vv, W 113, P 23, M 30 (cited by Sercambi; see Rossi, LVII)
Come 'l potestu far, 2vv, P 24, M 33
Dal cielo scese, 2vv, W 115, P 25, M 35
D'or pomo incominciò, 2vv, W 105, P 26, M 37 (Senhal: 'Alisa' or 'Lisa')
Fortuna avversa (F. Sacchetti), music lost
I' fu' già bianc'uccel (A. degli Alberti), 2vv, W 116, P 28, M 44
I' fu' già usignolo (Soldanieri), 2vv, W 103, P 29, M 46 (cited by Sercambi; see Rossi, LXXVIII)
I' ho perduto (A. Belondi), 2vv, W 110, P 30, M 49
L'aspido sordo (Belondi), 2vv, W 112, P 31, M 54
Lucida pecorella (?Soldanieri), 2vv, W 102, P 32, M 57
Seguendo'l canto, 2vv, W 100, P 34, M 60
S'i', monacordo, 2vv, W 111, P 35, M 64 (text inc.)
Sovran uccello se', 2vv, W 107, P 36, M 66
Un bel girfalco (Soldanieri), 2vv, W 99, P 37, M 69 (cited by Sercambi; see Rossi, LXXV)
Un cane, un'oca, 2vv, W 106, P 38, M 72
Volgendo i suo' begli occhi (Sacchetti), music lost

CACCIAS

Faccia chi de', 3vv, W 108, P 39, M 40 (form of the text: madrigal; all voices with text)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (N. Pirrotta)
E. Li Gotti and N. Pirrotta: Il Sacchetti e la tecnica musicale del Trecento italiano (Florence, 1935)
K. von Fischer: Studien zur italienischen Musik des Trecento und frühen Quattrocento (Berne,1956)
S. Clercx: Johannes Ciconia: un musicien liégeois et son temps (Brussels, 1960), i, 24
G. Contini: 'Poesie francesi della Paria Viscontea', Studi in onore di Carlo Pellegrini (Turin, 1963), 61–80
K. von Fischer: 'Paolo da Firenze und der Squarcialupi Kodex (I-Fl 87)', Quadrivium, ix (1968), 5–24
G. Thibault: 'Emblèmes et devises des Visconti dans les oeuvres musicales du Trecento', L'Ars Nova italiana del Trecento: Convegno II: Certaldo and Florence 1969 [L'Ars Nova italiana del Trecento, iii (Certaldo, 1970)], 131–60
L. Rossi, ed.: Giovanni Sercambi: Novelliere (Rome, 1974)
F.A. Gallo: Il Medioevo, ii (Turin, 1977; Eng. trans., 1985, as Music of the Middle Ages, ii)
F.A. D'Accone: 'Una nuova fonte dell' Ars Nova italiana: il codice di San Lorenzo, 2211', Studi musicali, xiii (1984), 3–31
J. Nádas: 'Manuscript San Lorenzo 2211: some Further Observations', L'Europa e la musica del Trecento: Congresso IV: Certaldo 1984 [L'Ars Nova italiana del Trecento, vi (Certaldo, 1992)], 145–68
G. Di Bacco: 'Alcune nuove osservazioni sul codice di Londra (British Library, MS Additional 29987)', Studi musicali, xx (1991), 181–234
F.A. Gallo, ed.: Il codice Squarcialupi (Florence, 1992) [incl. K. von Fischer: 'Le biografie', i, 127–44, esp. 136; N. Pirrotta: 'Le musiche del codice Squarcialupi', i, 193–222, esp. 205–7]
B. Wilson: 'Madrigal, Lauda, and Local Style in Trecento Florence', JM, xv (1997), 137–77
G. D'Agostino: 'La tradizione letteraria dei testi poetico-musicali del Trecento', 'Col dolce suon che da te piove': studi su Francesco Landini e la musica del suo tempo in memoria di Nino Pirrotta, ed. M.T.R. Barezzani and A. Delfino (Florence, 1999), 389–428

KURT VON FISCHER/GIANLUCA D'AGOSTINO

Donatoni, Franco (b Verona, 9 June 1927; d 17 August 2000). Italian composer and teacher. His childhood was passed in the constricted ambience of provincial life during the two decades of fascist rule. The only child of a council employee in Verona, he was an isolated and friendless boy, and although studious, seemed to possess little flair for language and argument. His parents circumspectly concluded that he was best fitted for a career as a bank clerk, but also thought it prudent to let him study the violin, hoping that he might earn supplementary income from the Arena di Verona orchestra in due course. Indeed, it was the family's annual excursions to operatic performances at the arena that provided a highpoint of artistic excitement during his youth, though the bands that enlivened the family's long Sunday afternoon walks also exerted their fascination. Even so, a musical vocation at first seemed implausible: he made no striking progress on the violin, and failed to pass his first solfeggio examination at the Verona Liceo Musicale. Yet despite these setbacks he seemed determined to gain a technical grasp of music. Guided from 1942 by Piero Bottagisio at the Liceo Musicale, he managed to pass the entrance examination for the composition course at the Bolzano Conservatory. But the final years of World War II obliged all prudent teenagers to stay indoors: schools were open one day a week at best, and the SS patrolled the streets, ready to consign those who aroused suspicion to concentration camps. When in 1945 the Americans liberated Verona, Donatoni was able to complete his school diploma and commit himself to studying composition. He enrolled in the Milan Conservatory, but found himself in the doldrums since his professor Ettore Desderi, accused of collaboration, did almost nothing. Advised to transfer to the Bologna Conservatory in 1948, he at last found a sympathetic environment, and his studies under its director, Lino Liviabella, prospered. An ancient radio allowed him to confront the challenges of the previous 30 years through the broadcasts of Guido Turchi: though not engaged by Stravinsky or Schoenberg, he was profoundly impressed by a transmission of Bartók's Fourth Quartet, and fascinated by Petrassi's First Concerto for Orchestra. Travelling to Venice to attend the first performance of Petrassi's Noche oscura in 1951, he plucked up courage and introduced himself. Petrassi told him that he might resume contact once his composition diploma at Bologna was completed later that year.

If in 1952 Donatoni enrolled in Pizzetti's post-diploma class at the Accademia di S Cecilia in Rome in order to gain access to a student grant, his real target was further contact with Petrassi, whose encouragement proved seminal. Indeed, Petrassi as teacher-composer, always open to and engaged in the work of his students, was the exemplar upon whom Donatoni was to model his own career. In the same year, Donatoni submitted a Concertino for strings, brass and solo timpanist – much in the manner of Bartók – for a competition organized by Radio Luxembourg. Petrassi was on the jury, and sent a telegram to his protégé with the news that it had won first prize. The following year another seminal encounter took place. Through social contacts in Verona, Donatoni met the young lion of the avant garde, Bruno Maderna, who persuaded him to begin grappling with the inheritance of Mahler, Schoenberg and Webern. The resultant creative confusion was compounded by a first visit, again prompted by Maderna, to the Darmstadt summer school of 1954. There, René Leibowitz's lectures led him to buy that author's La musique de douze sons, and to spend the next few months analysing Schoenberg's Variations for Orchestra, covering the score with a multi-coloured maze of annotations. But he was also impressed, and intimidated, by the achievements of Stockhausen and Boulez, and further journeys to Darmstadt in 1956 and 1958 persuaded him that he would have to find a way forward along similar paths, whether he liked it or not. Unsurprisingly, the first compositional fruits of this resolve – culminating in the Second Quartet of 1958 – were further attempts to absorb by emulation. It was not until the end of the decade that he at last felt capable of speaking in a distinctive voice with such works as Movimento for harpsichord, piano and nine instruments (1959), or For Grilly, an 'improvisation' for seven instruments (1960). In 1959, at Berio's house, he encountered another mephisto of those years – John Cage – but, unlike most of his contemporaries, he was unimpressed and distrustful. Where others projected onto Cage a metaphysics of negation at several removes from Californian Zen, Donatoni saw a dangerous farceur, but one whose games with chance heralded an abyss into which he was subsequently to find himself compelled to peer. His scrutiny of contingency as the foundation of the subjective self, and of the creative process, was sustained through the 1960s and into the early 70s with a piercing honesty that won him the admiration of generations of students. But his mentors in this process were Kafka, Musil and Beckett, rather than the cult of the happy accident. Already the logical confines of his musical world were being worked out. If the generative power of post-serial transformation games was infinite, then one could start anywhere – Donatoni has usually started with a fragment of material from his own previous work – and by employing spontaneously chosen rules of substitution, elimination and others, he could arrive at a chain of new blocks of material. Such a process being by definition endless, a gratifying sense of ending, of meaningful consummation, was clearly unavailable. Instead, the process would produce a series of internally static panels. Inventing each game, and deciding which game to play next, was the task of subjective intuition which, viewed from outside as object, is determined with equal contingency as the processes that its choices set in motion. Donatoni himself was becoming ever more aware of 'the impossibility of being the author of one's own intellect, of one's own will'. He frequently had recourse to alchemical imagery to describe the process, the more so once he had encountered Marguerite Yourcenar's novel of Renaissance alchemy, L'oeuvre au noir. As in Yourcenar's novel, it is not just the relationships constituting the base material that are being dissolved as a necessary first step towards pristine newness and otherness, but the associations that constitute the composing subject.

That the consequences of these operations caught the fascinated attention of his contemporaries was instructive – Donatoni takes as emblematic of his 'arrival' the moment when, after the first performance of Doubles for harpsichord at the 1961 Palermo festival, Stockhausen came forward to ask for a score, proposing to show it to Boulez. To the seasoned navigator of the New Music, practised in assenting to radical contingency, such challenges made aural sense. Critics, too, were delighted by his music, but appalled to discover how he had made it, or at least by his unnerving candour. But if Doubles and Puppenspiel (for orchestra, also written in 1961) established in authoritative form the panel-based procedures that have sustained a good deal of his subsequent work, Per orchestra (1962) seemed to throw the precision and scrupulous technical workmanship of his previous works to the winds. Maniacal precision there is, in the many pages of instructions as to how to make an enormous orchestra produce a radically unforeseeable result. The process of compositional self-annihilation had begun. It was pursued further in Zrcaldo for string quartet (1963), in Asar and in Black and White (1964). Admirers of these radical assaults upon the ideology of creativity were displeased when, with Puppenspiel II for flute and orchestra (1966), he returned to meticulous notation – but only to testify to a scintillating absence of creative responsibility. Automatic transformation processes now reigned supreme, operating upon a phrase of Schoenberg (Etwas ruhiger in Ausdruck of 1967), of Stockhausen's Momente (Souvenir of 1967), of Bussotti's La passion selon Sade (Solo of 1969). And of course the same processes could be repeated upon these products of 'sadistic parasitism': Orts (1969) in turn dismembered Souvenir.

Throughout the 1960s these activities were kept separate from Donatoni's advancing career as a teacher of composition. He had married his Irish wife, Susan, and with a growing family to support (the arrival of their first son in 1959 was celebrated by Serenade, his only vocal piece for many years to come), he was obliged to keep his head down. He had already undertaken some teaching for the Milan Conservatory, and in 1961 was appointed professor there. From 1966 to 1968 he taught composition at the Turin Conservatory, and then returned to Milan as professor of composition, where he was to remain until 1978. A crucial further step came in 1970 when, on Petrassi's recommendation, he began his highly influential courses at the Siena Accademia Musicale Chigiana. There, for the first time, he began to teach out of his own compositional experiences – and although the impact upon a younger generation of Italian composers was to prove so potent as to generate, for a while at least, a measure of stylistic uniformity among them, it established Donatoni as a seminal figure in Italian musical life. His teaching responsibilities proliferated: he then taught in the DAMS course at the University of Bologna (1971–85), but he also took up the advanced composition course at the Accademia di S Cecilia in Rome, as well as teaching in Milan, Biella and Brescia. Invitations from abroad began to multiply the pedagogic moto perpetuo: it has continued to this day.

The 1970s saw Donatoni move into, and battle his way out of, profound personal and compositional crisis. Always prone to depression, the solitude resulting from an invitation from the Deutscher Akademischer Austauschdienst to work in Berlin for a year in 1972 precipitated one of his blackest crises, compounded by the death of his mother in 1973. He continued to produce calculatedly monstrous orchestral works – To Earle Two (1971–2), a cancerous proliferation from To Earle (1970) for chamber orchestra, Voci, Orchesterübung (1972–3), and, in memory of Bruno Maderna, Duo pour Bruno (1974–5), as well as a calculatedly cadaverous chamber work, Lied (1972). But by early 1975, in spite of the acclaim that greeted the latter three works, he had resolved to stop composing, had abandoned the lease on his studio, and had taken up regular employment as an editor at his music publisher, Suvini Zerboni. Donatoni has always defined himself as a writer of scores: his work lives or dies in the act of notation, of writing down the consequences of an intuitively grasped transformational code. When that act became intolerable, it had to cease. But he had promised to write a piece for the instrumental teachers of the 1976 Accademia Musicale Chigiana, and his wife Susan persuaded him that, despite his resolve, he should honour his commitment. The result was Ash for eight instruments. Although the title might point to self-cremation, the musical substance showed a way forward, for his automatic codes, applied to the pitch equivalents of BACH, were employed in rapid succession (rather than densely superposed, as had previously been the case) to generate more varied and differentiated solo lines.

Having glimpsed a way forward, Donatoni's creative recovery acquired momentum, aided by the pleasure of writing for the talents of individual soloists. Apart from his earlier harpsichord pieces for Mariolina de Robertis, this was for him a novel venture. From the start of this phase, he tended to produce two-movement pieces, such as Algo for guitar, Ali for viola (both 1977), and Argot for violin (1979). Then he allowed the game of detecting potential affinities between the three works when superimposed, to generate a trio for these instruments, About . . . (1979). The same game was repeated with Marches for harp (1977), Nidi for piccolo (1977) and Clair for clarinet (1980), which interacted in Small (1981). About. . . and Small were then persuaded into co-existence, each in turn offering its materials as a gloss upon the other, and abetted by a trio of female voices singing verses by Susan Park, in She (1982). Similarly, a 'text' such as Alamari for cello, double bass and piano (1983), itself the product of previous solo pieces, became the basis for the jazz-inspired Hot (1989). Both in the more relaxed play between automatism and intuition in his transformation-games, and in this further game of inter-reacting texts, Donatoni had found means to reassert an audibly self-evident pleasure in construction.

Sheer artisan enjoyment, although engaging, was only half the story. Complex workmanship was employed to graver ends in the string quartet The Heart's Eye (1979–80). Here, Donatoni provided a demonstration of the multiple nature of musical time by initially writing two bars (bb.131–2), each of them retrograded and reworked (in bb.133 and 134), and thence proceeding to write the whole work forward and backward (bar 135 exactly mirroring bar 131 and so on) with all the resources of his transformational codes to hand. The resultant discrepancy between what the reader may do with the score, and what the listener does with the performance is extreme. The listener's search for a (temporarily) dynamized, and consequential time is rigorously denied: one is offered simply a before and after. The score-reader may play games of consequence, if he or she wishes to succumb to the mephistophelian temptations placed in their path by the score. The modes of being in time offered by musical writing, reading, performing and listening do not – perhaps should not – map onto one another.

Fundamental to these years of recovered creativity was the confirmation, with the exuberant Spiri for ten instruments (1977), of a tendency that had been maturing during his years of crisis, with Lied and Ash. No longer would he write massive 'negations' for orchestra, to be played once or twice, argued over by critics and left to gather dust on the shelves of long-suffering publishers. Instead, he would write for the mixed chamber ensembles that were becoming the faithful and enthusiastic performers of his new scores. The wit and finesse of these chamber scores did more to consolidate his worldwide reputation than did any other element of his output. They were enlivened by a sense of quasi-theatrical interaction within the ensemble that often sprang from calculatedly bizarre challenges on the part of those who commissioned them. One such provocateur was Paul Méfano, the director of the Ensemble 2E2M. He stipulated that the substantial ensemble accompanying the concertante cello of Le ruisseau sur l'escalier (1980) was to include four flutes and four clarinets, a group of three violins, a group of extremely low instruments (double bassoon, contrabass tuba, double bass) and a group of keyboards and percussion. Donatoni chose to assign to each group a quasi-independent set of materials; it therefore became the task of the cello line to mediate between them. Pierre Boulez joined the game with the commission for Cadeau (1983), requesting a work for a range of instrumentation not readily found within the stereotypical new music group of the late 20th century: two oboes, two bassoons, two horns (thus simulating a displaced 18th-century serenade), plus tuba, harp, xylorimba, vibraphone, glockenspiel and bells. Again, Donatoni established his own instrumental dramaturgy: the double reeds confront the brass who, in turn, confront the rest in a conflict whose dry wit re-animates a longstanding Italian tradition.

If diverse instrumental resources open up differing structural perspectives, then the revisiting of established musical texts may be undertaken not as an act of 'sadistic parasitism', but as a rethinking of potentials. To take one example among many, Refrain, written for Amsterdam's Nieuw Ensemble in 1986, establishes an interplay between sustaining instruments and plucked ones. Its unusual forces (piccolo, bass clarinet, mandolin, guitar, harp, marimba, viola, double bass) generated a first extrapolation, Frain (1989). But on receiving an invitation to Melbourne from the more conventionally constituted Elision Ensemble (with greater resources in both woodwind and strings), Donatoni reread Refrain to produce Refrain II (1991). A further rereading added brass in Refrain III (1993) to create a 'chamber symphony'. Parrying such conventional pieties, the Nieuw Ensemble challenged Donatoni to rethink the materials of Refrain so as to eliminate sustaining instruments. The athletic wit of Refrain IV (1996), for an octet of mandolin, guitar, harp, harpsichord, piano, vibraphone and marimba, confirmed the acuity of their hunch. Such games between commissioner and composer depended upon personal acquaintance. Where Donatoni could not invent an instrumental dramaturgy for known protagonists, he sought dramatic stimulus within his own imagination, as witnessed by some of his more eccentric titles. When asked, in 1988, to write a string quartet for the Ensemble Intercontemporain, with whose players he was unacquainted, he fixed upon the lingering, incorporeal smile of Lewis Carroll's Cheshire Cat, as interpreted by Adorno's epigram that 'it is power which smiles'. Mouse-like scurryings, 'consumed' by Donatoni's feline transformation games, chart an unsmiling oblivion for Le souris sans sourire. One other element of the renewed creative vitality of the later 1970s served to define polar opposites within his musical world. Apart from the Serenata of 1959, he had resolutely avoided the human voice because, for Donatoni, it represented too direct a solicitation to empathy with the dubious pleasures of subjective selfhood. Now, dubious or not, he felt able to run that risk and did so with all the technical assurance of this new chapter in his creative trajectory. A commission for the Persepolis Festival (the performance of which was, however, confounded by the fall of the Shah) encouraged him to think on a grand scale, while an unexpected flowering of his personal life encouraged him to reach out to the voice. The brilliantly expressive result, Arie for soprano and orchestra (1978), was greeted by enthusiasts of the humane as the return of the prodigal son. Donatoni, on the other hand, wryly insisted that in daring 'to exhibit an illicit conniving with the unsayable through narcissistic abandon', the work represented an (equally dubious) complement to To Earle Two, having turned into musical ideology not the self negated, but the self asserted. For all that, the (mainly female) voice from then on continued to play a greater role within his output. Inevitably, those who enjoyed throwing challenges in his path could not resist the temptation of propelling him towards the doors of the opera house. His first skirmish with this institution, Atem (1985), was a compilation of previous work for which the stage director, George Pressburger, was licensed to invent a scenario. More recently, he amused himself by putting on stage one of his own medical crises in Alfred-Alfred (1995), throughout the performance of which he remained on stage, supine upon a hospital trolley. But the blandishments of empathy, of voyeuristic pleasure in the human subject, are best exorcised away from the theatre and exorcised collectively. The major monument to his engagement with the immediacies of the human voice to date has thus been In cauda for chorus and orchestra (1982–91). In such massed company he first felt able, in that work's final section, to confront a challenge habitually avoided by his contemporaries: an adagio.

Franco Donatoni, 1992

WORKS
(selective list)

DRAMATIC

La lampara (ballet, 2, U. Dall'Ara), 1957, Milan, 1957
Atem (op, 2, intermezzo, B. Brandolini d'Adda and others), 1984, Milan, Scala, 16 Feb 1985 [incl. complete or in part: Sezioni, Per Orchestra, Secondo Estratto, Doubles II, Voci, Diario '76]
Alfred-Alfred (7 scenes, 6 intermezzi), 1995

VOCAL

Serenata (D. Thomas), S, 16 insts, 1959; Arie (Omar Khayyám and others), S, orch, 1978; De près (J. Robertet), S, 2 pic, 3 vn, 1978; . . . ed insieme bussarono (H. Kabir), S, pf, 1978; L'ultima sera (F. Pessoa), S, fl, cl, vn, vc, pf, 1980; In cauda (Brandolini d'Adda), SATB, orch, 1982, third part added 1991; She (S. Park), 3 S, vn, va, gui, pic, cl, hp, 1982; Abyss, A, b fl, eng hn, b cl, d bn, hn, trbn, pf, perc, va, vc, db, 1983; Still, S, 2 fl, 2 vn, cel, pf, 1985; O si ride (Brandolini d'Adda), 3 S, 3 A, 3 T, 3 B, 1987; Cinis (G.L. Calvo), S, b cl, 1988; Aahiel (anon.), Mez, cl, vib/mar, pf, 1992; An Angel within my Heart (Park), S, 2 cl, vn, va, vc, 1992; Late in the Day (M. Rivière), S, fl, cl, pf, 1992; Flans (F. Villon), S, fl/pic/a fl, ob/eng hn, cl/b cl, pf/cel, perc, vn, va, vc, db, 1994

INSTRUMENTAL

Orch: Concertino, timp, 2 hn, 2 tpt, 2 trbn, str, 1952; Conc., bn, str, 1952; Ouverture, chbr orch, 1953; Sinfonia, str, 1953; Divertimento, vn, chbr orch, 1954; Musica, chbr orch, 1955; Strophes, 1959; Sezioni, 1960; Puppenspiel 'Studi per una musica di scena', 1961; Per orchestra, 1962; Black and White, 37 str, 1964; Divertimento II, str, 1965; Puppenspiel 2, fl, orch, 1966; Doubles II, 1970; To Earle, chbr orch, 1970; To Earle Two, fl, ob, cl, bn, 2 hn, tpt, trbn, hp, hpd, pf, orch, 1971–2; Voci, Orchesterübung, 1972–3; Espressivo, ob, orch, 1974; Duo pour Bruno, 1974–5; Portrait, hpd, orch, 1976–7; Diario '83, 4 tpt, 4 trbn, orch, 1983; Sinfonia op.63 'Anton Webern', cl, b cl, 2 hn, hp, str, 1983; Eco, chbr orch, 1985–6; Conc. grosso, 5 elec kbd, orch, 1992; Sweet Basil, trbn, big band, 1993; In cauda II, 1993–4; Portal, b cl, cl, e♭ cl, orch, 1994; In cauda III, 1996
4 or more insts: Quartetto I, str qt, 1950; Quartetto II, str qt, 1958; Movimento, hpd, pf, 3 fl, 2 cl, bn, 2 hn, tpt, 1959; For Grilly, fl, cl, b cl, vn, va, vc, perc, 1960; Quartetto IV (Zrcaldo), str qt, 1963; Asar, 4 vn, 3 va, 2 vc, db, 1964; Etwas ruhiger im Ausdruck, fl, cl, vn, vc, pf, 1967; Souvenir (Kammersymphonie op.18), fl, ob, 2 cl, bn, hn, tpt, trbn, hp, pf, hpd, 2 vn, va, vc, 1967; Black and White no.2, kbds, 1968; Orts (Souvenir no.2), fl, ob, cl, bn, hn, tpt, trbn, hp, pf, hpd, 2 vn, va, vc, spkr ad lib, 1969; Solo, 5 vn, 2 va, 2 vc, db, 1969; Lied, 2 fl, 2 cl, cel, vib, pf, hp, hpd, 2 vn, 2 va, 1972; Quarto estratto, pic, fl, mand, cel, hpd, hp, pf, vn, 1974; Lumen, pic, cl, cel, vib, va, vc, 1975; Terzo estratto, pf, 2 ob, 2 bn, 2 tpt, 2 trbn, 1975; Ash, fl, ob, cl, pf, hpd, vn, va, vc, 1976; Diario '76, 4 tpt, 4 trbn, 1977; Spiri, 2 vn, va, vc, fl, ob, cl, b cl, cel, vib, 1977; Toy, 2 vn, va, hpd, 1977; The Heart's Eye, str qt, 1979–80; Le ruisseau sur l'escalier, vc, 19 insts, 1980; Tema, fl, ob, cl, bn, 2 hn, 3 vn, 2 va, vc, 1981; Feria, 5 fl, 5 tpt, org, 1982; Cadeau, 2 ob, 2 bn, 2 hn, tuba, hp, xilomar, vib, glock, campane, 1983; Ronda, vn, va, vc, pf, 1983; Darkness, 6 perc, 1984; Sestetto, 2 vn, 2 va, 2 vc, 1985; Arpège, fl, cl, vn, vc, vib, pf, 1986; Refrain, pic, b cl, mand, gui, hp, mar, va, db, 1986; Flag, fl/pic, ob, cl, b cl, bn, 2 hn, trbn, 2 vn, va, vc, db, 1987; Le souris sans sourire, str qt, 1988; Cloches, 2 pf, pic, fl, ob, eng hn, cl, b cl, bn, dbn, 2 perc, 1988–9; Blow, fl, ob, cl, hn, bn, 1989; Frain, pic, b cl, mand, gui, hp, mar, va, db, 1989; Hot, s sax, cl, tpt, trbn, perc, db, pf, 1989; Chantal, hp, fl, cl, 2 vn, va, vc, 1990; Holly, eng hn, ob, ob d'amore, 13 insts, 1990; Marches II, hp, 3 female vv ad lib, 12 insts, 3 perc, 1990; Spice (Ronda no.2), vn/va, cl/e♭ cl, vc, pf, 1990; Cloches III, 2 pf, 2 perc, 1991; Refrain II, pic/fl, ob/eng hn, cl/e♭ cl/b cl, mand, gui, hp, perc, vn, va, vc, db, 1991; Mari II, 4 mar, 1992; Concertino II, 5 Yamaha kbds, 1993; Jay, pf, 2 tpt, 3 hn, 2 trbn, 1993; Puppenspiel no.3, pic, fl, a fl, 14 insts, 1994; Refrain III, fl/pic/a fl, ob/eng hn, cl/b cl, tpt, trbn, mand, gui, hp, hpd, perc, vn, va, vc, db, 1994; Serenata II, fl, vn, db, hpd, perc, 1994; Sincronie II, vc, pf, fl, cl, bn, hn, vn, va, vc, 1994; Algo III, 3 gui, fl/pic, ob/eng hn, cl/e♭ cl, b cl, tpt, t trbn, b trbn, perc, mand, gui, hp, hpd, vn, va, vc, db, 1995; Fanfara, 4 hn, 3 tpt, 3 trbn, tuba, Napoleonic drum, 1995; Rasch II, sax qt, vib, mar, perc, pf, 1995; Algo IV, gui solo, mand, hpd, pf, cel, vib, mar, xyl, perc, vn, va, vc, db, 1996; Lame II, 8 vc, 1996; Lem II, db, 15 insts, 1996; Refrain IV, mand, gui, hp, hpd, cel, pf, vib, mar, 1996; Luci III, str qt, 1997

1–3 insts: Recitativo e allegro, vn, pf, 1951; Sonata, va, 1952; Composizione in 4 movimenti, pf, 1954; 5 pezzi, 2 pf, 1954; Doubles, hpd, 1961; Babai, hpd, 1964; Estratto, pf, 1969; Secondo estratto, hp, hpd, pf, 1970; Jeux pour deux, hpd, positive org, 1973; Duetto, hpd, 1975; Musette per Lothar, musette, 1976; Algo, gui, 1977; Ali, va, 1977; About . . ., vn, va, gui, 1979; Argot, vn, 1979; Marches, hp, 1979; Nidi, pic, 1979; Clair, cl, 1980; Fili, fl, pf, 1981; Small, pic, cl, hp, 1981; Lame, vc, 1982; Lem, db, 1982; Ala, vc, db, 1983; Alamari, vc, db, pf, 1983; Françoise Variationen, nos.1–7, pf, 1983; Ombra, cl, b cl, 1983; Rima, pf, 1983; Omar, vib, 1985; Ave, pic, glock, cel, 1987; Françoise Variationen, nos.8–14, pf, 1987; Françoise Variationen, nos.15–21, pf, 1987; Short, tpt, 1988; Ciglio, vn, 1989; Françoise Variationen, nos.22–8, pf, 1989; Midi, fl, 1989; Soft, b cl, 1989; Bok, b cl, mar, 1990; Cloches II, 2 pf, 1990; Het, fl, b cl, pf, 1990; Rasch, sax qt, 1990; Feria II, org, 1992; Feria III, org, 1992; Mari, mar, 1992; Nidi II, t baroque fl, 1992; Scaglie, trbn, 1992; Sincronie, pf, vc, 1992; Sweet, t rec, 1992; Algo II, 2 gui, 1993; Ciglio II, vn, fl, 1993; Small II, fl, va, hp, 1993; Ciglio III, vn, pf, 1994; Françoise Variationen, nos.29–35, 36–42, 43–9, pf, 1994; Cinis II, b cl, mar, perc, 1995; Duetto II, 2 vn, 1995; Incisi, ob, 1995; Luci, a fl, 1995; Luci II, bn, hn, 1995; Triplum, fl, ob, cl, 1995; Al, mand, mandola, gui, 1997; Feria IV, accdn, 1997; Tell, eng hn, 1997; Till, hn, 1997

OTHER WORKS

Tape: Quartetto III, 4 track, 1961

Transcrs.: Bach: L'arte della fuga (I–VII), orch, 1992; Bach: L'arte della fuga (VIII–XI), orch, 1997

Principal publishers: Suvini Zerboni, Ricordi

WRITINGS

Questo (Milan, 1970)

Antecedente X: sulle difficoltà del comporre (Milan, 1980)

'La somiglianza della continuità', La musica, le idee, le cose, ed. A. Brizzi and R. Cresti (Florence,1981)

P. Santi, ed.: Il sigaro di Armando: scritti 1963–1982 (Milan, 1982)

'Processo e figura', Quaderni della Civica Scuola di Musica, no.13 (1986)

In-Oltre (Brescia, 1988)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Smith Brindle: 'The Lunatic Fringe Combed', MT, xcvii (1956), 516–18

M. Bortolotto: 'The New Music in Italy', Contemporary Music in Italy, ed. P.H. Lang and N. Broder (New York, 1965), 61–77; also pubd in MQ, li (1965), 61–77

F. Degrada: 'Cinque domande a Franco Donatoni, Luigi Nono, Sylvano Bussotti, Giacomo Bussotti', Discoteca, no.77 (1968), 33–6

M. Bortolotto: Fase seconda (Turin, 1969), 227–51

G. Lanza Tommasi: 'I due volti dell'alea', NRMI, iii (1969), 1076–95

L. Pinzauti: 'A colloquio con Franco Donatoni', NRMI, iv (1970), 299–306; repr. in Musicisti d'oggi: venti colloqui (Turin, 1978), 133–41

M. Baroni: 'Donatoni 1960–1970', Notiziario [Milan] (1971), Jan, 1–19

M. Baroni: 'Das Portät Franco Donatoni', Melos, xl (1973), 345–51

I. Stoianova and others: 'Dossier Donatoni', Musique en jeu, no.20 (1975), 1–27

R. Cresti: Franco Donatoni (Milan, 1982)

D. Osmond-Smith: 'Radical Challenge', The Listener (6 Dec 1984)

A. Bonnet and others: 'Dossier Donatoni', Entretemps, ii/Nov (1986), 63–102 [incl. Fr. trans. of F. Donatoni: 'Processo e figura', 1986]

G. Borio: 'Franco Donatonis Streichquartett "The Heart's Eye": zur Aesthetik figurativer Musik', Melos, xlix/3 (1987), 2–16

R. Dalmonte: 'Colloquio con Franco Donatoni', Musica/Realtà, no.25 (1988)

G. Mazzola Nangeroni: Franco Donatoni (Milan, 1989)

E. Restagno, ed.: Donatoni (Turin, 1990) [incl. interview]

E. Restagno: 'Pensar facendo, far pensando', Il giornale della musica, no.53 (1990)

M. Gorodecki: 'Who's Pulling the Strings', MT, cxxxiv (1993), 246–51

DAVID OSMOND-SMITH

Donaueschingen. Town in Germany. It was noted in the 20th century for its festival of contemporary music. It was the home of the Fürstenbergs from 1488; they maintained a court chapel and opera which achieved particularly high standards during the late 18th and early 19th centuries, and employed musicians such as J.W. Kalliwoda, J.A. Sixt, Joseph Fiala and Conradin Kreutzer. The works of Mozart, Dittersdorf, Umlauf and J.A. Hiller were particularly popular there and Italian works by Cimarosa, Gazzaniga, Piccinni, Sarti, Salieri and Paisiello were frequently heard. It became an internationally known centre for contemporary music between 1921 and 1926, and since 1950 has re-established its reputation.

The Donaueschingen Festival was the first to devote itself exclusively to contemporary music; it is organized by the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde Donaueschingen, in collaboration from 1950 with the Südwestfunk (SWF), Baden-Baden (which was renamed Südwestrundfunk in 1998 following its merger with the Süddeutsche Rundfunk in Stuttgart). The programmes between 1921 and 1926 were organized largely by Joseph Haas and Hindemith. Between 1950 and 1970 Heinrich Strobel, director of music at the SWF, was responsible for the artistic arrangements; he was succeeded by Otto Tomek, Josef Häusler, Christof Bitter and, from 1992, Armin Köhler. The general aim of the festival is to promote unknown and disputed talent, and to try out new methods and forms of expression. Donaueschingen's first Kammermusikaufführungen zur Förderung Zeitgenössischer Tonkunst (contemporary chamber music programmes) in 1921 provided the basis for the later fame of Hindemith, Krenek and Hába. Since 1950 it has provided a springboard for numerous significant composers including Boulez, Stockhausen, Xenakis, Penderecki, Ligeti, Holliger, Ferneyhough and Rihm.

The history of the Donaueschingen festivals falls into several periods. The first, up to about 1924, concentrated on a new style of chamber music centring on the string quartet; the extension of these stylistic tendencies to vocal music inaugurated the phase of Gebrauchsmusik and 'Musik für Sing-und Spielkreise'; in 1926 the question of mechanical instruments (the Welte-Mignon piano and organ) was raised. In 1927 the Donaueschingen Festival was shifted first to Baden-Baden and in 1930 to Berlin. At the 1926 festival a new area, that of theatre music, was entered with the presentation of Oskar Schlemmer's Triadisches Ballett (with music by Hindemith); but chamber opera was a major feature of the Baden-Baden Festival programme, which included premières of Weill's Mahagonny to a libretto by Brecht, Hindemith's Hin und zurück, Milhaud's L'enlèvement d'Europe and the Hindemith-Weill collaboration Der Lindberghflug (1929). The Neue Musik Berlin festival in 1930 brought an abrupt end to Donaueschingen's efforts. Nonetheless, the concepts and ideals established there continued. Between 1934 and 1939 an attempt was made, within the constraints of Nazi cultural policy, to revive in Donaueschingen the tradition of the early chamber music concerts, but the programmes and influence were purely provincial.

Two further attempts, in 1946 and 1947, were equally unsuccessful.

In 1950, through the collaboration of Donaueschingen and the SWF, the festival was successfully revived and its international reputation increased. Since then the SWF SO – until 1962 under Hans Rosbaud, from 1964 to 1979 under Ernest Bour and latterly under various conductors – has been placed at the disposal of Donaueschingen every year. Thus, the earlier emphasis on chamber music at the festivals was given up and the title was consequently changed to Donaueschinger Musiktage für Zeitgenössische Tonkunst (Donaueschingen Festival of Contemporary Music). After 1950 the SWF made a practice of giving commissions to Donaueschingen (252 up to 1994), and has thereby had a direct influence on contemporary composition; this contrasts with the Kammermusikaufführungen of the 1920s, whose programmes consisted largely of works that were not commissioned for the occasion. Since 1950 the festival has moved through several phases. In the 1950s it reflected the powerful influence of serialism on the younger generation, whereas in the 1960s the emphasis shifted to timbre and surface. The 1970s brought a new engagement with 19th-century tradition and tonality, and since about 1980 there has been, as elsewhere, a marked pluralism. Since 1970, too, live electronic music has gained ground, joined since 1980 by a predilection for large forces and expansive forms, as well as for multi-media experiments, which have significantly increased since 1992. In 1969 the title of the festival was changed for the third time, to the Donaueschinger Musiktage.

Important premières at Donaueschingen have included Hindemith's String Quartet op.16 (1921) and Kammermusik no.1 op.24 no.1 (1922), Webern's Sechs Lieder op.14 (1924), Stravinsky's Piano Sonata (1925), Boulez's Poésie pour pouvoir (1958) and Répons (1981), Messiaen's Chronochromie (1960), Stockhausen's Mantra (1970) and works by Berio, Fortner, Hába, Henze, Ligeti, Nono, Penderecki and Xenakis.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Münch: Geschichte des Hauses und Landes Fürstenberg (Aachen and Leipzig, 1829, 2/1847)

F. Dollinger and G. Tumbült: Das Fürstliche Fürstenbergische Hoftheater zu Donaueschingen 1775–1850 (Donaueschingen, 1914)

H. Burkard: 'Musikpflege in Donaueschingen', Badische Heimat, viii (1921), 83–98

H. Bennwitz: Donaueschingen und die neue Musik 1921–1955 (Donaueschingen, 1956)

M. Rieple and others: Musik in Donaueschingen (Konstanz, 1959)

H. Bennwitz: Die Donaueschinger Kammermusiktage von 1921 bis 1926 (diss., U. of Freiburg, 1961)

H.H. Stuckenschmidt: Die Musik eines halben Jahrhunderts 1925–1975 (Munich, 1976)

J. Häusler: Spiegel der Neuen Musik: Donaueschingen (Kassel, 1996)

JOSEF HÄUSLER

Donāy [Dūnāy]. Sassanian single reed end-blown double pipe. See SURNĀY.

Donberger [Donnberger, Domberger], Georg Joseph (b Bruck an der Leitha, 11 Feb 1709; d Herzogenburg, 2 April 1768). Austrian organist and composer. He attended the Jesuit College in Vienna from 1720, studying the humanities; he also studied the organ, the violin and especially the viola d'amore. His attempts at composition pleased Caldara, who accepted him as a pupil, and a music drama by him was performed at the Jesuit College before Emperor Charles VI in 1727. Donberger went on to study philosophy in Vienna and earned his living teaching music, making the acquaintance of J.G. Graun, František Benda, Quantz and Tůma. On 30 May 1733 he was ordained priest and became regens chori at the Augustinian monastery of Herzogenburg; most of his compositions are sacred, written for this and other Austrian monasteries, although he also wrote some instrumental music. Along with Zechner and Tůma, Donberger was one of the leading composers in Austria between Fux and Haydn, and his works remained popular there well into the 19th century. His music shows a solid contrapuntal technique as well as an element of virtuosity, particularly notable in his masses and his German and Latin solo works.

WORKS

Principal sources: A-Gd, GÖ, H, KN, Krems Pfarrarchiv, LA, M, N, SE, SEI, SF, SL, SOp, Wk, Wn, Wp, Ws, WIL, Z; CH-E; CZ-Bm, SK-BRnm, CZ-Pnm; D-Bsb, OB; H-Gc; PL-Wu; thematic catalogue by R. Hug in preparation

92 masses, 17 requiem, 3 Libera me, 2 Stabat mater, 2 introits, 12 offs, 6 motets, 5 Vespers, 16 pss, 3 Mag, 6 Salve regina, 7 Alma Dei redemptoris, 2 Regina coeli, 6 lits, 10 TeD, 15 hymns, 2 Veni Sancte Spiritus, 4 cantilenas, 3 arias, 2 Asperges, responses for Holy Week

2 pastorales, orat, Carnival song, Mysteriosum quodlibeticum, Applausus, 4 libs for music dramas

11 Parthia, insts

Incipits of other works given in catalogues of Herzogenburg Chorherrenstift Bibliothek and Musikarchiv, see Brook

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; MGG1 (R. Hug); WurzbachL

L. Mangold: Biographie Georg Joseph Donberger's regulierten, lateranensischen Chorherrn des heiligen Augustin zu Herzogenburg (MS, n.d., A-Wgm)

G. Reichert: Zur Geschichte der Wiener Messenkomposition in der ersten Hälfte des 18. Jahrhunderts (diss., U. of Vienna, 1935)

B.S. Brook: Thematic Catalogues in Music: an Annotated Bibliography (Hillsdale, NY, 1972), 117–18

RAIMUND HUG

Doncastre, W. [?William] de (fl ? *c*1345). English theorist. He was named by the theorist JOHN HANBOYS (*fl c*1370) in connection with his symbols for notes smaller in value than the semibrevis: the symbols are 14th-century in character, using the rhomb with an upward, downward or obliquely downward tail (see P.M. Lefferts, ed. and trans.: Robertus de Handlo, The Rules, and Johannes Hanboys, The Summa, Lincoln, NE, 1991, pp.268–73).

He may be identifiable with the William de Doncastre who is traceable in monastic records from Cambridge in 1345 (Lefferts, p.60).

ANDREW HUGHES

Donceanu, Felicia (b Bacău, 28 January 1931). Romanian composer. After studying composition with Jora at the Bucharest Academy (1949–56), she worked as a music editor at the State Art and Publishing House (1956–8) then at the music publishing operation of the Composers' Union (1958–66), a position which allowed her time to compose. Donceanu enhances modal techniques with general folk elements which are represented in such a way as to ease their reception. She is an accomplished poet and artist, and her music is often imbued with a poetic quality. Best known for her many songs and choral works, she won the Enescu Prize in 1984 with the song cycle Cântând cu Ienăchiţă Văcărescu.

WORKS
(selective list)

Choral: Tablouri bacoviene [Tableaux in the Manner of Bacovia], op.12, 1974; Trifolium, madrigals, op.14 no.2, 1977; Dacă n-ar fi fost strămoşii [But for our Ancestors], 1982; Odă pentru Ciprian Porumbescu [Ode for Porumbescu], op.19 no.1, 1983; Vioara din Liveni [The Sandalwood Violin], op.19 no.3, 1984; Tezaur străbun [Ancient Treasure], op.28 no.2, 1984; Idilă maramureşeană [Maramures Idyll], op.27 no.2, 1988; Tatăl nostru [The Lord's Prayer], op.30 no.2, 1991; Horă de băieţi [The Young Man's Dance], op.36 no.1, 1992; Inscripţie pe o uşă [Inscription on a Door], op.36 no.2, 1993; Juxta crucem dolorosa, op.37 no.1, 1993; Colindă [Christmas Carol], 1995; Stalactite, 1995

Solo vocal: Schiţe în laviu [Watercolour Sketch] (song cycle, after Ovid), S, ob, cl, hp, 1971; Măiastra (Donceanu), op.10 no.2, S, chorus, chbr orch, 1973; Cântând cu Ienăchiţă Văcărescu [Singing with Văcărescu], song cycle, op.20, S, fl, lute, va da gamba, perc, 1984; Monodia (Tatăl nostru), op.30 no.3, S, perc, 1991 [also with Gk text, arr. Mez, perc]; Colind laic [Secular Carol] (Donceanu), op.35 no.1, S, 2 va da gamba, hpd, perc, 1992; Numărătoarea [The Enumeration] (theatrical fantasia, T. Arghezi), op.35 no.2, Mez, cl, pf, perc, 1993; Rugăciunea Domnească [The Lord's Prayer], op.30 no.3, 1v, str, perc, 1993; Yolanda (Donceanu), S, orch, 1993; Stabat mater, op.37 no.3, S, hp, 1994

Orch: Meşterul Manole [Master Manole], sym. poem, op.14 no.1, 1956, rev. 1977; Piatra Craiului [The King's Stone], 3 tone poems, op.16 no.1, 1962, rev. 1982; Prin Ţara de Sus [Through the High Lands], suite, op.21, str, 1985

Chbr and solo inst: Sonata, D, op.1, vn, pf, 1955, rev. 1967; Mai sunt încă roze [Still there are Roses], op.9, 1972 [after text by A. Macedonschi]; Inscripţie pentru un catarg [Inscription for a Mast], op.28, hp, 1989; Legenda unui zbor [The Legend of a Flight] (Parlando rubato), op.31, hp, 1991; Acolade, fl, cl, vn, vc, db, pf, perc, 1995; La curtea lui Petru Cercel, op.35 no.3, viols, hpd, perc, 1995

BIBLIOGRAPHY

V. Cosma: Muzicieni români: lexicon (Bucharest, 1970)
G. Constantinescu: 'Medalion Felicia Donceanu', Muzica, xxxi/4 (1981), 22–3
C. Sârbu: 'Felicia Donceanu: creaţia vocal-camerală', Muzica, new ser., iii/1 (1992), 59–82

OCTAVIAN COSMA

Dönch, Karl (b Hagen, 8 Jan 1915; d Vienna, 16 Sept 1994). German bass-baritone. He studied at the Dresden Conservatory and made his début in 1936 at Görlitz. In 1947 he joined the Vienna Staatsoper, where he was often heard as Beckmesser, a role he recorded under Knappertsbusch (1950) with Schöffler as Hans Sachs; further success came in 1951 as the Doctor (Wozzeck), which he recorded under Boulez (1966). He sang in the premières of von Einem's Dantons Tod (1947, Salzburg), Liebermann's Penelope (1954, Salzburg) and Frank Martin's Der Sturm (1956, Vienna). A versatile actor-singer who made much of comedy-character, he sang in major German theatres, at La Scala, and in New York and Buenos Aires. He was also in demand for operetta, and recorded several roles in the 1950s. He was director of the Vienna Volksoper from 1973 to 1987, where he enlarged the repertory to include such works as Albert Herring and From the House of the Dead.

NOËL GOODWIN

Donegan, Lonnie [Donegan, Anthony James] (b Glasgow, 29 April 1931). Scottish singer and guitarist. He was the most prominent figure in the Skiffle movement of the late 1950s. Skiffle groups performed a repertory of mostly American folk songs and gospel hymns using guitars, banjos, tea-chest basses and washboards which were played using thimbles. The first of these groups emerged from British traditional jazz bands such as those of Ken Colyer and Chris Barber, with whom Donegan played banjo. He adopted the thin, nasal vocal tone associated with American country and western music but his early repertory was based around songs associated with the black American songster Leadbelly. His most successful recordings in this vein included versions of Leadbelly's Rock Island Line (1954) and Pick a bale of cotton (1962). The former, in particular, inspired the formation of hundreds of skiffle groups whose members included many future pop and rock performers.

Donegan also made versions of American country and folk pieces such as The Battle of New Orleans (1959) and Tom Dooley (1958) and he co-wrote and performed material in the English music-hall tradition, notably My old man's a dustman (1960) and Does your chewing gum lose its flavour? (1959). In cabaret he included popular ballads such as Jule Styne's The party's over (1962). See G. Melly, Revolt into Style: the Pop Arts in the 50s and 60s (London, 1970, reissued 1989), 25–7

DAVE LAING

Donemus Foundation. Dutch organization based in Amsterdam. It was set up in 1947 with assistance from the Stichting Nederlandse Muziekbelangen (Foundation for Netherlands Musical Interests) and central government, with the aim of documenting and publishing modern Dutch music. This move was prompted by the loss of a number of scores, including some by Willem Pijper, in the bombing of Rotterdam in May 1940. The microfilm archives of Dutch works created at that time formed the basis of the Donemus collection after the war. The founders of Donemus (whose name is an abbreviation of 'Documentatie in Nederland voor Muziek') included C. Wiessing, H.E. Reeser and H. Reinink. The foundation grew under the directorship of André Jurres (1952–74), who in his various international posts did much to promote Dutch music. Around 10,000 works by some 550 Dutch composers are now available through Donemus, as well as biographical information on the composers, press releases and programme notes. Performance material of all the documented works is available on request, and scores of a limited number of works are issued. Donemus has published the journals Muzikaal perspectief (1948–57), Sonorum speculum (1958–74) and, since 1975, the English-language quarterly Key Notes, as well as a monthly information bulletin in Dutch. Donemus issued series of recordings under the title 'Donemus Audio-Visual' (1961–75), 'Composers' Voice' (1975–87) and, more recently, 'Composers' Voice Compact Disc'. The foundation is subsidized by the Dutch government and represented at a number of international publishing houses.

JOHAN KOLSTEEG

Donfrid [Donfried], Johann [Johannes] (b Veringenstadt, nr Sigmaringen, 1585; d Rottenburg am Neckar, 1654). German music editor, singer, teacher and composer. He studied at the University of Dillingen, one of the main cultural centres of south-west Germany, and in 1610 took a post as singer at St Martin, Rottenburg. This carried with it duties as a schoolteacher: in this capacity he became Rektor of the school in 1622 and in his musical capacity Kapellmeister of the church in 1627.

Donfrid is chiefly interesting as an editor who saw it as his task to propagate in Catholic southern Germany the best and most popular church music by Italian composers of his day. To this end he published five large anthologies at Strasbourg in the 1620s: the tripartite Promptuarii musici, consisting of motets arranged in a liturgical cycle, as had been done by other editors, such as Schadaeus, before him; the Viridarium, devoted to Marian pieces; and the Corolla musica, a selection of 37 masses (the Jubilus Bethlehemeticus does not belong with this group). The importance of these collections is clear: they cemented musical links between Italy and Germany at a time when Italy was to a large extent the arbiter of style in European sacred music, and indeed they helped to achieve for German Catholic music what Schütz's two Venetian visits did for Lutheran music.

The liturgical scheme of the Promptuarii musici is such that the first two volumes between them cover the church's year, dividing at Easter, while the third duplicates some liturgical seasons and also includes much material for individual feasts and saints' days. Donfrid drew on the work both of conventional polyphonists such as Victoria, Marenzio and H.L. Hassler (he did not ignore native German music) and, more often, of early composers of concertato pieces: he included a number of Lodovico Viadana's Cento concerti ecclesiastici (1602) and motets by his immediate imitators such as Leone Leoni, Finetti and Patta in northern Italy and Cifra, Agazzari and Ottavio Catalani in Rome. A number of Germans are represented, such as Loth, Rudolph Lassus, Holzner, Wolfgang Mayr and Pfendner, the last four all active in Bavaria, as well as the bigger figure of Aichinger. From the Italian point of view it must be conceded that this represents a conservative selection for the date of part i, 1622 (although there is a new duet by Monteverdi), but part iii and the Viridarium, both of 1627, contain music by some much more adventurous Italians, such as Alessandro Grandi (i), Biagio Tomasi and Ercole Porta, which certainly raises the artistic level; no fewer than 35 motets by Grandi appear in these two volumes. Only one piece by Donfrid himself is known – a motet in Promptuarii musici, i.

EDITIONS

Promptuarii musici, concentus ecclesiasticos, 2–4vv, bc (org), e diversis iisque illustrissimis et musica laude praestantissimis huius aetatis authoribus, collectos exhibentis. Pars prima (Strasbourg, 1622[2])

Promptuarii musici, concentus ecclesiasticos ducentos et eo amplius, 2–4vv, bc (org) ... Pars altera (Strasbourg, 1623[2])

Tablatur für Orgel (Hamburg, 1623), lost

Promptuarii musici, concentus ecclesiasticos 286 selectissimos, 2–4 vv, bc (org), e diversis et praestantissimis Germaniae, Italiae et aliis aliarum terrarum musicis... Pars tertia (Strasbourg, 1627[1])

Viridarium musico-marianum. Concentus ecclesiasticos plus quam ducentos in dialogo, 2–4, 6, 8vv, bc (org), e diversis iisque clarissimis et musica laude praestantissimis huius aetatis authoribus, pro omni genere et sorte cantorum (Strasbourg, 1627[2])

Corolla musica missarum 37, pro vivis ac defunctis, iuncto mortuali lesso etc selectissimarum, 1–5vv, bc (org), e diversis et excellentissimis Italiae ac Germaniae auctoribus ... collecta (Strasbourg, 1628[2])

Jubilus Bethlehemeticus: cantiones sacrae, latinae et germanicae ... 4–6vv, una cum et sine bc (org) (Strasbourg, 1628)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Vleugels: Zur Pflege der katholischen Kirchenmusik in Württemberg von 1500–1650 (Kassel, 1930)

A. Adrio: Die Anfänge des geistlichen Konzerts (Berlin, 1935)

J. Roche: 'Anthologies and the Dissemination of Early Baroque Italian Sacred Music', Soundings, iv (1974), 6–12

R. Schmitt: Untersuchungen zu Johann Donfrids Sammeldrucken unter besonderer Berücksichtigung der geistlichen Konzerte Urban Loths (Bonn, 1974)

JEROME ROCHE

Don heusser, Der. See TANNHÄUSER, DER.

Doni, Antonfrancesco (b Florence, 16 May 1513; d Monselice, nr Padua, 1574). Italian writer, academician and musician. His chequered career began in a Servite monastery in Florence, but having been expelled he set out for northern Italy *c*1540. After some wanderings, documented in his letters, he settled in Piacenza in 1543, with the intention of studying law. He soon dropped this in favour of literary and artistic activities. With the aid of a few nobles and men of letters (including Lodovico Domenichi and the poet Luigi Cassola) he founded the short-lived Accademia Ortolana. At this time Doni described himself as 'writer, instrumentalist, singer, and painter'; he played the viola and as a member of the Ortolani he contributed not only literary efforts but musical compositions as well. The first part of Doni's Dialogo della musica was written here in 1543.

The next year Doni went to Venice. Though he confessed himself to be overawed by the splendours of Venetian musical life, he made new acquaintances, completed his Dialogo and persuaded the printer Girolamo Scotto to issue this work as well as a volume of letters. He returned to Florence in 1545 and was elected secretary of the Accademia Fiorentina in 1546. For a brief time he set himself up as a printer in Florence and hoped to publish music; a collection of madrigals in manuscript, with a printed frontispiece, survives from his shop (see Haar: 'A Gift of Madrigals'). Like many of Doni's projects this career soon foundered and by the beginning of 1549 he was again in Venice.

In the 1550s Doni was an active member of the Venetian Accademia Pellegrina, whose activities he reported with such exaggerated fancy that the very existence of this group has been questioned by sober historians. He won some fame by engaging in controversy with Domenichi and with Aretino. He saw to the printing of some of his major works, including La zucca, I mondi and I marmi, all issued by Francesco Marcolini. After another period of aimless wandering he went into retirement near Padua, where he died.

Although many of the tales and anecdotes in works such as I marmi are concerned with music and musicians and many of Doni's letters mention music, his important contributions to the musical culture of his age are the Dialogo della musica (1544) and the musical portion of his bibliographical work La libraria (1550/51). The Dialogo is not a formal treatise at all; of it Doni said that 'Cicero holds that music consists of numbers, tones and measures; but in my Dialogo I have used neither square nor compass'. It is a lively series of tales and conversational exchanges by a group of interlocutors (among them composers such as Parabosco and Perissone Cambio), with its text punctuated with contemporary madrigals, motets and a chanson. The speakers are singers as well, talking about the pieces before and after performing them. The music of the top voice is printed in the volume of text, with the remaining voice parts in separate partbooks. Unique in form, the Dialogo illustrates how music was performed in company. Doni was proud of this work, in which he boasted that he had 'performed a feat of arms with the printer's press and as it were outdone Josquin in this music'.

In his Libraria Doni gave a list of all the printed collections of music he knew; as one of the few such lists surviving from the period, it is a valuable source of information about editions and works now lost.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EinsteinIM

Dialogo della musica (Venice, 1544), ed. G. Malipiero (Vienna, 1964); also ed. in A.M. Monterosso Vacchelli: L'opera musicale di Antonfrancesco Doni (Cremona, 1969)

La Libraria (Venice, 1550/R)

Novelle di M. Antonfrancesco Doni colle notizie sulla vita dell'autore raccolte da Salvatore Bongi (Lucca, 1852)

A. Einstein: 'The "Dialogo della musica" of Messer Antonio Francesco Doni', ML, xv (1934), 244–53

C. Ricottini Marsili-Libelli: Anton Francesco Doni, scrittore e stampatore (Florence, 1960)

J. Haar: 'A Gift of Madrigals to Cosimo I: the Ms. Florence, Biblioteca Nazionale Centrale, Magliabecchi XIX 130', RIM, i (1966), 167–89

J. Haar: 'Notes on the "Dialogo della musica" of Antonfrancesco Doni', ML, xlvii (1966), 198–224

J. Haar: 'The Libraria of Antonfrancesco Doni', MD, xxiv (1970), 101–23

R. Agee: 'Ruberto Strozzi and the Early Madrigal', JAMS, xxxvi (1983), 1–17

M. Feldman: City Culture and the Madrigal at Venice (Berkeley, 1995)

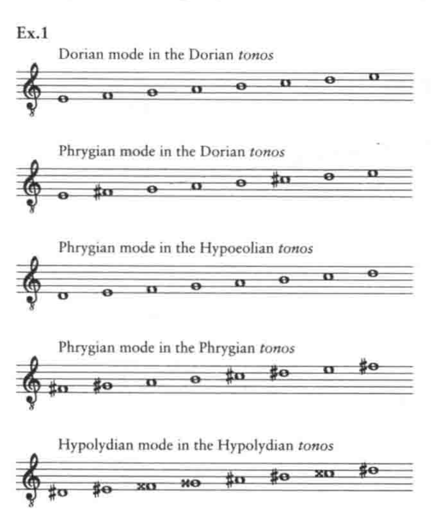
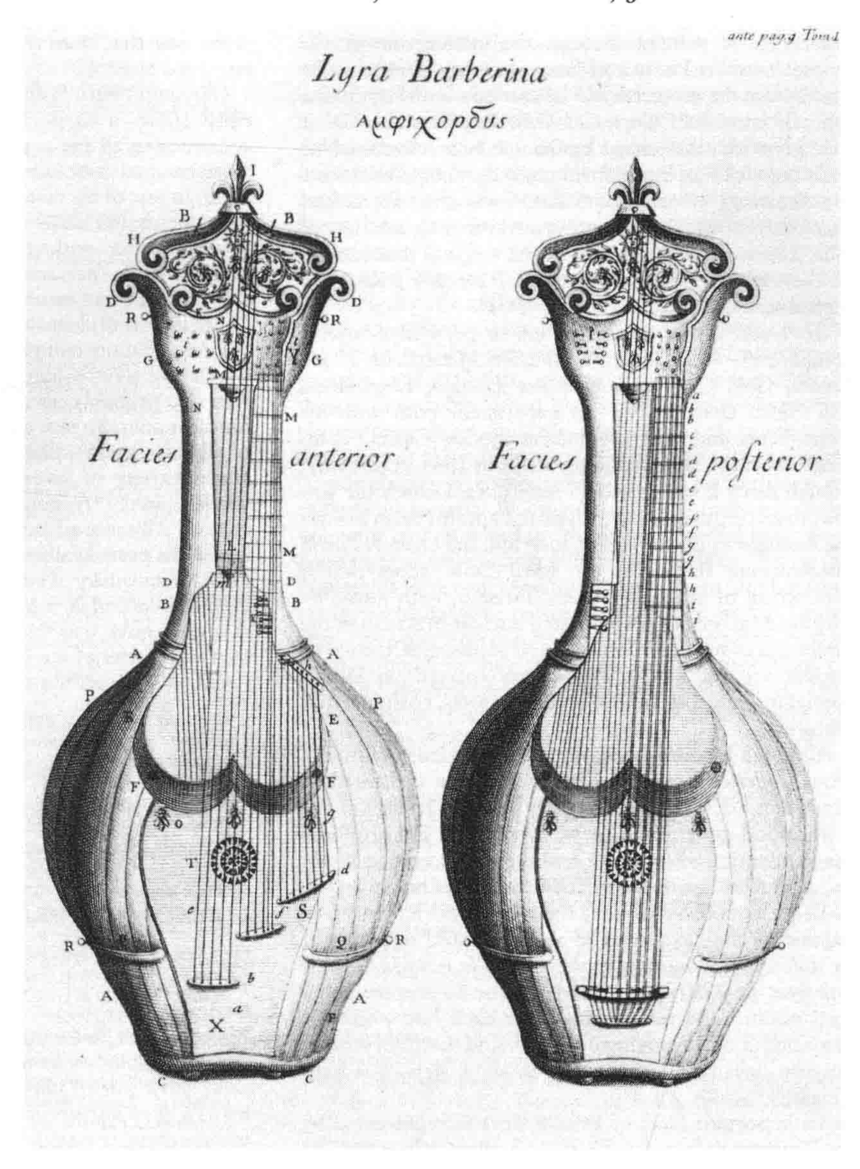
JAMES HAAR

Doni, Giovanni Battista (b Florence, bap. 13 March 1595; d Florence, 1 Dec 1647). Italian classicist, philologist and music theorist. From about 1630 he dedicated himself almost totally to the rediscovery of Greek music and to the revival in modern practice of the ancient tonoi and genera. As an offshoot of this investigation he reviewed the history of modern music drama and wrote several revealing critiques of the earliest styles of musical pastoral.



1. Life. At the age of ten Doni was sent to study arts and letters at Bologna, and he then studied philosophy, classical languages, geography and mathematics at the Jesuit College in Rome: among his teachers were Tarquino Gallutio, professor of rhetoric, who remained his mentor for many years, Torquato de Cuppis, Bernardino Stephonio and Famiano Strada. In 1613 his father sent him to France to study law at Bourges, where he was a fellow student of his cousin Louis Doni d'Attichy (who became Bishop of Riez, Provence, in 1628). He spent more time, however, on Latin, philosophy, oriental languages and writing prose and verse than on law, and his family recalled him from France in 1618. At his father's insistence he completed the laurea in canon and civil law at Pisa and reluctantly entered legal practice. But his ambition was to teach Greek at Pisa, and he lost no opportunity of collecting antiquities; he eventually accumulated 6000 inscriptions.

Doni entered the employ of Ottavio Corsini shortly before Corsini was sent by Pope Gregory XV as legate to the King of France in 1621. He used his sojourn in Paris to work in the colleges and libraries and to meet French scholars, notably Mersenne, with whom he corresponded throughout his life. The death of one of his brothers took him back to Florence in 1622, but the following year he went again to Rome to serve Maffeo Barberini shortly before he was elected pope as Urban VIII. When, on 9 October 1623, the pope's nephew Francesco Barberini was made a cardinal, Doni became his secretary. They went on diplomatic missions to Paris in 1625 and 1627 and to Madrid in 1626. Everywhere he went Doni sought out libraries and collections of antiquities and established ties with humanists and scientists. Among his most devoted associates and correspondents were Claude de Saumaise, René Moreau, Jean Bourdelot, Nicolas-Claude Fabri de Peiresc, Lucas Holste, Galileo Galilei, Athanasius Kircher, Gaspar Scioppius, J.A. Ban, Daniel Heinsius, Gabriel Naudé and Isaac Voss.



In 1629 Doni was appointed secretary of the sacred College of Cardinals, which entitled him to wear the purple robe of the chamberlains of the pope. But he wrote the same year to a friend that he felt out of place in the courts of prelates, since he lacked the boldness and affectation demanded of a courtier, and that he longed to devote himself to scholarship.

In 1633 the death of another brother (in a duel near Vaison, France, where he was governor) led Doni to throw himself into the study of music to cure his melancholy. He worked to improve the understanding of the tables of Alypius so that he could transcribe Greek notation, and he sought to adapt modern instruments to perform the ancient modes and genera. When in 1635 another brother died he looked for an opportunity to return to Florence to save his house. He re-established himself in his home city in 1640: in that year he was appointed professor of rhetoric at the university and was admitted to the Accademia della Crusca and made consul of the Accademia Fiorentina. He married Margerita Fiaschi in 1641. He died quite suddenly after a brief illness.

2. Works. Inspired by the progress already made by Girolamo Mei and Vincenzo Galilei, Doni sought to uncover all he could concerning the practice of Greek music. His close reading of the surviving Greek theoretical sources led him to draft the Trattato de' generi e de' modi della musica, in which he communicated his understanding of the ancient Greek tonal system. There he reviewed the changing conception of this system from the time of Plato to late authors such as Cleonides, Ptolemy, Gaudentius and Aristides Quintilianus. Doni adequately explained for the first time the relationship of the tonoi to the octave species in a way consistent with the sources. He also gave a history of the chromatic and enharmonic genera that cleared up misinterpretations by previous authors such as Vicentino and Salinas. In the Compendio del trattato de' generi e de' modi della musica, a bowdlerization of the unpublished and unfinished Trattato, Doni turned to applying the ancient precepts to modern composition, hoping to stimulate a new musical flowering. The chief fault he found with modern monodic music was the lack of diversity in its tonal system. In the ancient Greek system, as he described it in Compendio del trattato, on the other hand, he found more diversity than probably actually existed. He recognized correctly, following Ptolemy, that the Dorian double octave was transposed to six other keys. He went beyond this to assume that each of the octave species thus produced in the central range, which he called modes, could also be transposed to six keys. Thus not only the Dorian pattern of tones and semitones but also the other interval sets were available at each height of pitch. Some of these permutations are shown in ex.1; the last, the Hypolydian mode in the Hypolydian tonos, demonstrates the need at the time for special instruments to play and accompany in certain of these intonations, particularly in the syntonic diatonic of Didymus, which Doni preferred as the most perfect. He designed and had constructed several such instruments, 'diharmonic' viols and violins, 'diharmonic' and 'triharmonic' harpsichords, a theorbo with three fingerboards and a 'panharmonic' viol. The special harpsichords were built for Doni by Giovanni Pietro Polizzino.

Doni's lyra Barberina: engraving from 'Lyra Barberina amphichordos' (Florence, 1763)

The most famous of Doni's inventions was the 'amphichordal' lyre or 'lyra Barberina' (see illustration), which permitted the performance of all his ancient modes and transpositions. Its pear-shaped body was disposed with strings of gut on one side for certain modes and with strings of metal on the other side for other modes. Doni claimed that it had a louder and fuller, yet sweeter tone than the lute and an evenness of timbre throughout its range; though plucked, it was capable of sustained notes.

Doni described this instrument in his essay 'Lyra Barberina', dedicated to Pope Urban VIII, which he began in 1632 and probably finished in 1635. The main part of it is a history of Greek string instruments that carefully distinguishes, with ample documentation, the many forms of lyre, kithara, chelys, testudo, phorminx, pektis, and other types named in the Greek literature. Because of its many pictorial illustrations, Doni sent the treatise to France to be printed through the intercession of the Dupuy brothers Pierre and Jacques around 1640, but he died before the project could be carried out. More than a century later A.F. Gori and G.B. Passeri published it together with other essays by Doni in two volumes of his collected writings, but unfortunately they could not locate the drawings of ancient instruments that Doni had prepared, for which they substituted other figures, few of which served Doni's intention (the original illustrations as they appear in manuscripts in F-Pn and I-Rvat are reproduced in Palisca, 1978 and 1981).

Doni was not a musician, but he persuaded several composers – Frescobaldi, Domenico Mazzocchi, Pietro Eredia, G.A. Capponi, Ottaviano Castelli, Luigi Rossi and Pietro Della Valle – to experiment both with his instruments and with the ancient modes. Castelli composed an entire commedia in musica in 1641 in this way, though using a scale of equal semitones. Della Valle was the most faithful to Doni's ideas and applied them in both the Dialogo di Esther (1640, lost) and the Oratorio della purificazione (in I-Rn). In 1640 Doni supervised a production of Seneca's tragedy Troades, with music by Virgilio Mazzocchi, that imitated ancient practices in the limitation of music to choruses and soliloquies, the use of ancient metres, modes and genera (played on Doni's special instruments), and the stage settings, costumes and gestures.

Although he disclaimed practical knowledge of music, Doni undertook, in two French treatises dedicated to Louis Doni d'Attichy on 12 May 1640, a reform of the solmization system and of staff notation. He proposed the elimination of ut and la and the application solely of mi, fa, sol and re to the rising Greek tetrachord, e.g. B–C–D–E. If more syllables were to be used he preferred expanding the hexachord to an octave and replacing ut by doh and adding bi after la (Nouvelle introduction de musique, pp.29ff). In the same treatise he proposed that staff notation be reformed so that each line would be identified at the beginning by a letter and the notes written only on lines that were spaced to show steps and half-steps.

An important facet of Doni's work is represented by the Trattato della musica scenica, written between 1633 and 1635 and later revised, and the critiques of dramatic music in the Compendio and Annotazioni. Particularly valuable are his classification of the different styles of monody (see STILE RAPPRESENTATIVO) and his remarks on the use of ornamentation and other expressive devices in monody. His main thesis is that the Greeks sang only the choruses and lyrical portions of their tragedies, not the dialogue, and that modern music drama should be reformed in imitation of the ancient. If the dialogue were spoken, he argued, this would improve the production's variety, dramatic interest and acting, while shortening the duration and permitting the composer to concentrate his art on the expression of emotion. In the Annotazioni he proposed for passages of narrative or dialogue a simple sung recitative with a florid accompaniment. He deplored the simplicity of the accompaniments in contemporary opera and urged composers to apply the contrapuntal art of the polyphonic madrigal to the lyrical monodies and unison choruses. He had little respect for the operatic composers of his day and detected only slight advances in dramatic music after Peri, Caccini and Monteverdi (who at the time that Doni was writing had still to compose his last three operas).

Giovanni Pietro Polizzino (b Rome, *c*1602; d Rome, 8 April 1658), a harpsichord maker, was responsible for constructing all the complicated polyharmonic two and three manual harpsichords inspired by the theories of Doni. In one of his manuscripts Doni mentions four such instruments but adds that Polizzino made still others. Polizzino also worked for Della Valle, constructing a 'triharmonic', 'hessarmonic' or 'panharmonic' harpsichord, with three manuals and split keys, about 1638–9. There is also evidence that in 1649, Polizzino finished a second and more complex cembalo grande a tre tastature which was sent to João IV of Portugal. This instrument was also probably devised by Della Valle, who included for the monarch a new composition of his, 'with a mixture of all three genres, diatonic, chromatic and enharmonic, and a variety of seven different tones, that is dorian, aeolian, ionian, lydian, phrygian, hypolydian and mixolydian'. All trace of these instruments had already been lost in the period following their construction. On 2 May 1658 an inventory of Polizzino's shop listed a two-manual arpicordone and an arpicordo, the last reference to a term that until now, was thought to have fallen into disuse in the first quarter of the 17th century.

WRITINGS

only those on music

Trattato de' generi e de' modi della musica (MS, I-Bc D143)

Compendio del trattato de' generi e de' modi della musica (Rome, 1635); extract in Solerti (1903), 195ff

Annotazioni sopra il Compendio de' generi e de' modi della musica (Rome, 1640); extracts ed. C. Gallico as 'Discorso sesto sopra il recitare in scena con l'accompagnamento d'instrumenti musicali', RIM, iii (1968), 286–302

De praestantia musicae veteris libri tres (Florence, 1647)

Dichiaratione del Cembalo Pentarmonico (MS, 1647); repr. in Barbieri (1987)

Lyra Barberina amphichordos: accedunt eiusdem opera, i–ii, ed. A.F. Gori and G.B. Passeri (Florence, 1763/R); vol.ii entitled De' trattati di musica di Gio. Battista Doni . . . tomo secondo; extracts in Solerti (1903), 186ff

Contents, vol.i: Lyra Barberina amphichordos, facs. in Palisca (1981); Idea sive designatio aliquot operum; Progymnastica musicae pars veterum restituta; Dissertatio de musica sacra recitata . . . Maias 1640; Due Trattati . . . l'uno sopra il genere enarmonico, l'altro sopra gl'instrumenti di tasti . . . con 5 discorsi: 1. Del sintono di Didimo, e di Tolomeo; 2. Del diatonico equabile di Tolomeo; 3. Qual specie di diatonico si usasse dagli antichi; 4. Della disposizione . . . delle viole diarmoniche; 5. In quanti modi si possa praticare l'accordo perfetto nelle viole diarmoniche vol.ii: Trattato della musica scenica (revised version); 2 lezioni: se le azioni drammatiche si rappresentavano in musica . . . 1624; Discorso . . . del conservare la salmodia de' Greci; Lezioni: 1. Del modo tenuto dagli Antichi nel rappresentare le tragedie, e commedie; 2. Sopra la rapsodia; 3. Sopra il mimo antico; 4. Sopra la musica scenica; Discorso della ritmopeia de' versi latini e della melodia de' cori tragichi; Degli obblighi ed osservazione de' modi musicali; Trattato della musica scenica, parte prima (early version): Deux traictez de musique: 1. Nouvelle introduction de musique; 2. Abrégé de la matiere des tons, Rome, 12 May 1640, F-Pn, I-Fm

Letters on music in: Prose fiorentine raccolte dallo Smarrito, Accademico della Crusca, xvi, ed. G.G. Bottari, R.A. Martini and T. Buonaventura (Florence, 1743), 277ff; G.B. Doni: Commercium litterarium, ed. A.F. Gori (Florence, 1754) [bound with Bandini: Commentariorum]; Correspondance du P. Marin Mersenne, ed. C. de Waard (Paris, 1932–); Lettere inedite di alcuni illustri Accademici della Crusca, ed. T. Cicconi (Pesaro, 1835) [to C. dal Pozzo]

Other letters, F-Pn, I-Fl, Fm, Fn, MOe (principal sources only)

List of unpublished writings, writings on other subjects and poetical works in A.M. Bandini: Commentariorum de vita et scriptis Ioannis Bapt. Doni (Florence, 1755), pp.cxi ff

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Solerti: Le origini del melodramma (Turin, 1903/R)
A. Solerti: 'Lettere inedite sulla musica di Pietro della Valle a G.B. Doni ed una veglia drammatica-musicale del medesimo', RMI, xii (1905), 271–338
F. Vatielli: La 'Lyra Barberina' di G.B. Doni (Pesaro, 1908)
A. Ziino: 'Pietro della Valle e la "musica erudita" nuovi documenti', AnMc, iv (1967), 97–111
C. Gallico: 'Discorso di G.B. Doni sul recitare in scena', RIM, iii (1968), 286–302
M.R. Grossman: G.B. Doni and Theatrical Music (diss., U. of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign, 1977)
C.V. Palisca: 'G.B. Doni, Musicological Activist, and his Lyra Barberina', Modern Musical Scholarship, ed. E. Olleson (Stocksfield, 1978), 180–205
C.V. Palisca: 'G.B. Doni's Lyra Barberina, Commentary and Iconographical Study, Facsimile Edition with Critical Notes', Quadrivium, xxii/2 (1981) [whole issue, also pubd separately (Bologna, 1981)]
L. Schleiner: 'Milton, G.B. Doni, and the dating of Doni's Works', Milton Quarterly, xvi/2 (1982), 36–42
P. Barbieri: 'Il cembalo onnicordo di Francesco Nigetti in due memorie inedite di G.B. Doni (1647) e B. Bresciani (1719)', RIM, xxii (1987), 34–113
D. Becker: 'La selva sin amor: Favola pastorale, illustración de las teorías de Doni', RdMc, x (1987), 517–27
S. Leopold: 'Das Madrigal und die wahre Theatermusik: Die Stillehre Giovanni Battista Donis', Musiktheorie, iv (1989), 143–51
A. Nicolò: Il carteggio di Cassiano dal Pozzo, Catalogo (Florence, 1991)
M. Padoan: 'Nature and Artifice in G.B. Doni's Thought', IRASM, xxiii (1992), 5–26
S. Schaal: Musica scenica: die Operntheorie des Giovanni Battista Doni (Frankfurt, 1993)
F. Hammond: Music and Spectacle in Baroque Rome (New Haven, 1994)
C.V. Palisca: 'Giovanni Battista Doni's Interpretation of the Greek Modal System', JM, xv (1997), 3–18
P. Barbier: 'Gli strumenti poliarmonici di G.B. Doni e il ripristino dell'antica musica greca (c.1630–1650)', AnMc, xxx (1998), 79–114

CLAUDE V. PALISCA (with PATRIZIO BARBIERI)

Donington, Robert (b Leeds, 4 May 1907; d Firle, Sussex, 20 Jan 1990). English musicologist, husband of Gloria Rose. He was educated at St Paul's School and Oxford (BA 1930, BLitt 1946). He studied the viol, the violin and the interpretation of early music with Arnold Dolmetsch in Haslemere, harmony and counterpoint with H.K. Andrews and R.O. Morris, and composition with Wellesz at Oxford. He divided his career between performance and scholarship. As Leverhulme Research Fellow (1934–6) he scored and catalogued English 17th-century music for viols. He was a member of the English Consort of Viols (1935–9) and the London Consort (1950–60), and founded and directed the Donington Consort (1956–61). From 1961 he spent much of his time in the USA, where he lectured and performed at several universities and music festivals, including the Carmel California Bach Festival (1961, 1971), Stanford University (1961, 1964), the University of Southern California (1964), Rutgers University (1968) and Yale University (1970–71). In 1964 he was appointed professor of music at the University of Iowa. He was a founder-member of the Galpin Society in 1946 and held office as a council member of the American Musicological Society (1967–8, 1970–72). He was made an OBE in 1979.

In addition to The Instruments of Music, one of the standard surveys of the field, Donington published a thoughtful and provocative study of the symbolism in Wagner's Ring based on the precepts of Jungian myth analysis, and he followed this up with a wide-ranging if very personal study of symbols in opera published just after his death. He also became known for several studies of Baroque performing practice, and contributed several important articles, notably 'Ornamentation' and 'Ornaments', to the fifth edition of Grove's Dictionary. His The Interpretation of Early Music became an indispensable reference work, even though it was criticized for presenting too many quotations from treatises without putting them into any larger context or including enough explanation to allow the reader to know precisely how the suggestions are to be applied to individual compositions. His briefer and more popular A Performer's Guide to Baroque Music complements the earlier work, containing many valuable insights into problems of performing practice and a healthy commonsense attitude towards their solution. Not least, his discussion of early gramophone recordings and his application of conclusions drawn from early 20th-century singing to earlier periods is stimulating if controversial. In all his writings on performing practice Donington was at pains to avoid the dogmatic and emphasizes the importance of relying on good taste and instinctive musicianship. He carried on the pioneering work of Arnold Dolmetsch in illuminating problems of Baroque performing practice, and did more than any other British scholar to encourage performers to learn as much as they can about earlier conventions by carefully reading the existing theoretical sources. (For Obituaries by J.A. Sadie and J.M. Thomson see EMc, xviii (1990), 684–6.)

WRITINGS

The Work and Ideas of Arnold Dolmetsch (Haslemere, 1932) with E. Hunt: A Practical Method for the Recorder (London, 1935)
The Instruments of Music (London, 1949, enlarged 3/1970) with T. Dart: 'The Origin of the In Nomine', ML, xxx (1949), 101–6
'Performing Purcell's Music To-Day', Henry Purcell, 1659–1695: Essays on his Music, ed. I. Holst (London, 1959), 74–102
Music for Fun (London, 1960)
Tempo and Rhythm in Bach's Organ Music (London, 1960)
The Interpretation of Early Music (London, 1963, 4/1989)
Wagner's 'Ring' and its Symbols: the Music and the Myth (London, 1963, enlarged 3/1974)
'Words and Music', Michael Tippett: a Symposium on his 60th Birthday, ed. I. Kemp (London, 1965), 87–114
'Amore traditore: a Problem Cantata', Studies in Eighteenth-Century Music: a Tribute to Karl Geiringer, ed. H.C.R. Landon and R.E. Chapman (London, 1970), 160–76
'A Problem of Inequality', MQ, liii (1967), 503–17
'Monteverdi's First Opera', The Monteverdi Companion, ed. D. Arnold and N. Fortune (London, 1968, 2/1985 as The New Monteverdi Companion), 257–76
A Performer's Guide to Baroque Music (London, 1973)
String Playing in Baroque Music (London, 1977)
The Opera (New York, 1978)
The Rise of Opera (London, 1981)
Baroque Music: Style and Performance (London, 1982)
Music and its Instruments (London, 1982)
'The Present Position of Authenticity', Performance Practice Review, ii (1989), 117–25
Opera and its Symbols: the Unity of Words, Music, and Staging (New Haven, CT, 1990)

HOWARD MAYER BROWN

Donizetti, (Domenico) Gaetano (Maria) (b Bergamo, Nov 1797; d Bergamo 8 April 1848). Italian composer. A dominant figure in Italian opera, he was equally successful in comic and serious genres, and an important precursor of Verdi.

1. Education and early career (to 1830). Donizetti was born in Bergamo, the fifth of six children of Andrea and Domenica (Nava) Donizetti. The family lived in extremely modest circumstances: the highest station Andrea Donizetti achieved was that of custodian and usher at Bergamo's pawnshop, the Monte de' Pegni. Although Gaetano's elder brother Giuseppe was a military bandsman and eventually became chief of music for the Ottoman armies, musical achievement was neither expected nor encouraged in the Donizetti family. The composer's own account, related late in life, sketches his home atmosphere with a characteristic mixture of melancholy and wit:

> I was born underground in Borgo Canale [just outside the walls of Bergamo's upper city]. One descended a cellar staircase where no suspicion of light ever penetrated. And like an owl I took flight, bringing upon myself now sad, now happy forebodings, not encouraged by my poor father, who always repeated to me that it was impossible that one should compose.

Donizetti's early encounters with music were made possible by his first composition teacher and lifelong mentor, Simon Mayr, a native of Bavaria who was maestro di cappella at the cathedral of S Maria Maggiore in Bergamo. At the age of nine, Donizetti was admitted as a scholarship student to the Lezioni Caritatevoli, a school Mayr founded in the same year to train musicians for the cathedral. Donizetti took classes in singing and keyboard, and, later, in composition and theory with Mayr himself. A 'throat defect' limited the young Gaetano's usefulness as a member of the cathedral chorus, but his progress in all other aspects of musical training was rapid. In 1811 Mayr cast him in the title role of the school's year-end production, Il piccolo compositore di musica, a role that required the 14-year-old Donizetti to improvise a waltz at the piano while at the same time singing in recitative 'I have a vast mind, a quick talent, and ready imagination – I am a thunderbolt at composing'. This ability to divide his musical energies at tremendous speed was one that would remain with him.

In 1815 Mayr arranged (and provided some financial support) for Donizetti to continue his studies at Bologna's Liceo Filarmonico Comunale under Padre Stanislao Mattei. Mattei had taught Rossini and Morlacchi, but his operatic taste inclined towards the style of an earlier generation, and he once reportedly complained that Rossini's innovations had brought dishonour upon his school. Donizetti's compositional output during the years in Bologna consisted mainly of exercises in counterpoint and fugue, as well as some sacred music and several isolated operatic scenes to existing librettos, none of which seems to have received public performance. Noteworthy among these is the one-act dramatic scene Il pigmalione (1816), which exhibits a strong influence of Mayr's style but as yet little trace of Rossini.

When Donizetti concluded his studies in Bologna in 1817, Mayr helped him to obtain his first professional engagement, a commission that resulted in Enrico di Borgogna, performed in November 1818 at the Teatro di S Luca in Venice. Based on a libretto by Donizetti's fellow student Bartolomeo Merelli (later an influential impresario), Enrico was successful enough to prompt a request for a second work for the same theatre, the one-act farsa Una follia(now lost), and two subsequent commissions from the same impresario, Paolo Zancla, for Le nozze in villa (Mantua, 1819) and Il falegname di Livonia (Venice, S Samuele, 1819). Resident in Bergamo during this time, Donizetti also honed his skills in non-operatic forms, composing a large proportion of his sacred works as well as several string quartets for an ensemble in which Mayr played the viola. While these early efforts mostly adhere to an established style blending influences of Mayr and Rossini, the testimony of a fellow student at the Caritatevoli hints at more rebellious tendencies. In a memoir written decades later, Marco Bonesi depicts Donizetti as at once eager to 'reform the conventional forms and situations' and uneasily aware that young composers needed to cater to the Rossinian idiom for reasons of self-advancement.

Up to this point Donizetti's professional activities had been confined to northern Italy and to smaller theatres, but in 1821 he was invited – probably again on Mayr's recommendation – to compose a new opera for the Teatro Argentina in Rome. The resulting work, Zoraid di Granata, was Donizetti's most successful yet, winning him an invitation from the leading impresario of the time, Domenico Barbaja, to write for Naples. While he was in Rome for the rehearsals of Zoraid, Donizetti made the acquaintance of the Vasselli family, whose daughter, Virginia, would become his wife in 1828, and whose son Antonio (Toto) grew into one of his best friends and the recipient of some of his most personally revealing letters.

Donizetti settled in Naples in February 1822 and was to be based there for the next 16 years, although he quickly began to receive performances and commissions across a widening geographical area. The stay in Naples was inaugurated with La zingara (1822), a work that impressed the student Vincenzo Bellini so much that he kept a copy of the score on his harpsichord and played from it every day. La zingara's librettist was Andrea Leone Tottola, a poet of the older generation who had written several texts for Rossini and who specialized in the comic operas with basso buffo roles in dialect that were a Neapolitan speciality. Before 1830 Donizetti would write five more operas on texts by Tottola, although he also forged connections with more adventurous poets, especially Jacopo Ferretti, Domenico Gilardoni and Felice Romani. Romani, commonly recognized as the leading librettist of his generation, proved elusive, often refusing Donizetti's requests for librettos and delivering material desperately behind schedule. This chronic lateness plagued the pair's first collaboration, on the one-act comic opera for La Scala, Milan Chiara e Serafina (1822), the most prestigious commission Donizetti had received to date. Preoccupied with the text he was preparing for Mercadante in the same season, Romani delivered the libretto with only two weeks to spare before the first rehearsals; although such pressure often later coincided with Donizetti's greatest successes, Chiara e Serafina was badly received and survived only 12 performances, closing off the possibility of a commission from Milan's leading theatre for some time to come.

In 1825–6 Donizetti embarked on a disastrous year at the Teatro Carolino in Palermo, a position that paid him only 45 ducats a month (the prima donna earned more than ten times this). The only operatic product of this failed experiment was Alahor in Granata, which was much criticized for the 'immorality' of its libretto and for excessive reliance on Rossinian formulas: one critic went so far as to suggest that if only Donizetti could 'assume courage enough to free himself from the fetters of the Rossinian school, that bondage of imitation upon imitation, better things could be expected of him'. This verdict was phrased in unusually severe terms, but its concerns were a constant of Donizetti's early reception.

Upon returning to Naples in 1827 Donizetti signed a new and demanding contract with Barbaja, for four new operas per year over three years. Barbaja's terms allowed for a payment of 200 ducats for each opera, plus an additional 50 scudi per month for Donizetti's services as director of the second theatre of Naples, the Teatro Nuovo, an arrangement that gave Donizetti enough financial security to marry Virginia Vasselli the following year. Even while keeping up with the demanding pace of the Naples contract, Donizetti managed to accept the occasional commission that flowed in from other Italian cities as his reputation grew. Among the most important of these was an 1828 invitation to participate in the opening season of the new Teatro Carlo Felice in Genoa, for which Donizetti supplied Alina, regina di Golconda to another libretto by Romani. The Genoa season also included performances of Bellini's revised Bianca e Fernando and Rossini's Le siège de Corinthe, the latter with a new duet cabaletta ('Per pietoso all'amor') penned by Donizetti. This was the occasion for the first of several rivalrous encounters with Bellini, episodes that Donizetti seems to have approached with a remarkable generosity but which often drew bitter remarks from the more competitive Bellini.

In 1828 Donizetti accepted the position of director of the royal theatres of Naples, a post he would hold until 1838. Two other important projects of these early years in Naples were L'esule di Roma (1828) and the azione tragico-sacra Il diluvio universale (1830), both written for the Teatro S Carlo to librettos by Domenico Gilardoni. Although he was often criticized for stylistic infelicities, Gilardoni (also the librettist for Bellini's Bianca e Fernando) was an innovative poet who did more than just parcel out a play into arias and ensembles, but thought carefully about how the action unfolded on stage and often experimented with odd verse forms and mixed metres. Gilardoni's influence was probably important also in pushing Donizetti towards more adventurous subject matter (see Bini and Commons). *L'esule di Roma*won immediate acclaim in Naples and was staged at La Scala within six months, making it Donizetti's greatest early success. In a gesture that illustrates the new attention accorded to Donizetti's music, one newspaper devoted an entire article to the trio that closed the first act, focussing on the question of how a canonic ensemble could authentically convey the divergent emotions of three different characters.

2. Achievement of fame (1830–38). After more than a decade of what might be called apprenticeship, Donizetti's reputation was established, nationally and internationally, by the success of his 31st opera, Anna Bolena. Performed in 1830 in a special carnival season at the Teatro Carcano in Milan that also included the première of Bellini's La sonnambula, the opera was an immediate success, quickly going on to be performed in Paris and London, and decisively altering many aspects of Donizetti's career. The best way to gain a sense of the texture of Donizetti's professional existence between the première of Anna Bolena and his departure for Paris in 1838 might be through the lens of these changes – through the collaborations and confrontations that structured his creative life – rather than through a chronological inventory of the staggering 25 operas he composed during this period.

Like that of Rossini and Bellini, Donizetti's success was dependent on the cooperation and support of the singers who performed his operas, and interactions with singers in rehearsal were always a significant influence on the development of his style. The cast at the première of Anna Bolena brought together two singers who would play very different roles in Donizetti's career, Giuditta Pasta and Giovanni Rubini. Much of the score was composed during a month Donizetti spent at Pasta's home on Lake Como, and it seems likely that the soprano offered a good deal of practical input during this visit, as she was also to do with several of Bellini's operas. Rubini, too, was frequently a powerful shaping force on Donizetti's projects: early in his career Donizetti had looked to this fellow of native Bergamo for support, in 1831 even revising his Gianni di Parigi (begun in 1829) for Rubini, in the hope that the championship of an established tenor would win the opera a performance in Paris. Although Rubini was to disappoint in this, the role of the tenor hero was soon taken over by Gilbert-Louis Duprez, who created the tenor leads in Parisina (1833) and Lucia di Lammermoor (1835) among other works, and whose contribution to the later Les martyrs (1840) and La favorite (1840) was such that Donizetti once called him the 'second father' of those works. But at least as important among Donizetti's casts of the early 1830s was the baritone Giorgio Ronconi, first interpreter of the leading roles in Il furioso nell'isola di San Domingo and Torquato Tasso (both 1833), opere semiserie written for the Teatro Valle in Rome. Although Ronconi's voice was not regarded as particularly beautiful, powerful or homogeneous, he possessed a strong dramatic presence and delivered text with exceptional clarity and intelligence. The combination of dramatic force and lyricism in the roles Donizetti designed for Ronconi helped to shape the lineaments of the Verdian baritone.

1. Gaetano Donizetti: portrait by an unknown artist (Museo Teatrale alla Scala, Milan)

Donizetti's correspondence took on a new tone in the early 1830s, as his circle of friends widened and he began to deal more forcefully with librettists and impresarios. From this period date the first examples of the letters that are little more than breathless inventories of premières, half-finished compositional projects and travel itineraries, a formula that would become a norm of his epistolatory style. Some less friendly letters from this period also bear witness to Donizetti's growing professional confidence and to two major frustrations. A handful of strongly worded letters are addressed to the impresario Alessandro Lanari, whose contracts Donizetti felt were restricting his opportunities for advancement in Paris, and to the publisher Giovanni Ricordi, to whom Donizetti vented his anger over performances of his operas from pirated scores. This last issue was a concern for most composers of the time: pirates usually operated by paying someone to orchestrate a new opera from a cheaply available vocal score, thus circumventing the rental fees charged for full orchestral material by the publishers or impresarios who owned the rights, and often resulting in error-ridden performances. Donizetti's growing confidence is evident, especially in a series of letters to Jacopo Ferretti, librettist of Il furioso and Torquato Tasso, one of very few poets (or, indeed, correspondents of any kind) with whom he exchanged views on operatic aesthetics. Donizetti's letters to Ferretti combine brow-beating and playful dialogue, attesting to his close involvement with the details of his librettos. The composer offers comments and corrections to individual lines, often requesting what he calls 'castrations', and reminding Ferretti repeatedly that brevity is all, that 'success consists of doing little and making that little beautiful, and of not singing a lot and boring the audience'.

An overview of almost any single year from the 1830s reveals a dizzying pace of new composition, revision and involvement in revivals. In 1833, for example, when Donizetti's national reputation was solidly established but before invitations began to flow in from abroad, four new Donizetti operas received first performances, and Donizetti spent extended periods in three different Italian cities. Donizetti began 1833 in Rome supervising the première of Il furioso all'isola di San Domingo (2 January), but by mid-January he had transferred to Florence, impatiently awaiting Romani's libretto for Parisina. Between mid-February and mid-March he composed all of Parisina, saw it through rehearsals and a successful première (17 March), and immediately returned to Rome to begin work on Torquato Tasso. Donizetti and Virginia remained in Rome through the summer, living with Virginia's brother Toto Vasselli. In May, June and July while working on Tasso, Donizetti also arranged for a performance of a revised version of Il diluvio universale in Genoa, composed a cantata (Il fato) for the nameday of Count Antonio Lozano, arranged for the publication of Il furioso, Sancia di Castiglia and some numbers from Parisina, and began talks about a commission for the Théâtre-Italien in Paris. In July Donizetti began to search for a subject for his next collaboration with Romani for a carnival opera at La Scala. Rehearsals for Tasso began in the last week of August, and the opera was performed at the Valle on 9 September. Almost immediately, Donizetti left for Milan, leaving Virginia behind in Rome, to supervise a production of Il furioso at La Scala, for which he composed three new pieces and touched up the orchestration. He spent October and November in Milan, mainly occupied with the composition of *Lucrezia Borgia*with Romani, negotiations over casting and with the censors. Towards the end of the year Donizetti corresponded with Lanari about alterations to Fausta for Venice performances with Pasta and the tenor Domenico Donzelli, as well as about plans for his next opera for Florence, which was to be Rosmonda d'Inghilterra. After the première of Lucrezia at La Scala on 26 December, Donizetti left Milan to supervise performances of Il diluvio in Genoa and Fausta in Turin, and stopped in Florence for a month or so to see Rosmonda on to the stage, before finally reuniting with Virginia in Rome and returning with her to Naples in April 1834 after an absence of 17 months.

If the success of Anna Bolena gave Donizetti a new degree of control over most aspects of composition and performance, one area where he remained virtually powerless was in relation to the theatrical censors. Especially restrictive in Naples and Rome where Donizetti was most active, the censors enforced the usual prohibitions on allusions (however veiled) to the regime in power, to members of the royal family and, most often, to religious practices. Far more troublesome, however, were their rules against any subject matter that might shock an audience: as one fairly typical set of regulations from Naples specifies, theatres were not to represent illicit romantic relationships (unless these were 'effectively opposed by virtue'), nor any violence or physical suffering that might 'induce loathing or disgust in the spectators'. As these examples suggest, censorship was more often about local taste and decorum than about politics or controlling audience reaction in any direct way, and perhaps the most confining prohibition of all was that on tragic endings. Although Donizetti had set one particularly gory example in the then unperformed Gabriella di Vergy in 1826 (composed 'purely for my own enjoyment'), his first staged opera to end with a death was Il paria (1829).

Almost all of Donizetti's serious operas in the 1830s were in some way affected by censorship. Lucrezia Borgia was banned in Naples, thanks to a dénouement in which five characters are murdered and to its depiction of a historical figure who had living descendants; in most other cities the opera could be performed only in elaborate disguises, under titles such as Eustorgia da Romano or Elisa Fosco. Lucrezia Borgia could be staged at all only because it was written for Milan where censorship was less draconian; in 1834 Maria Stuarda was banned altogether in Naples, even after Donizetti and his librettist Emanuele Bardari had effected an initial round of requested changes. Reworked as Buondelmonte (an innocuous romantic plot devoid of political content), the opera was approved for performance in Naples in October 1834, and the advocacy of mezzo-soprano Maria Malibran won it a brief run at La Scala before it was forbidden by the Milanese censors after only six performances. The final phase of Donizetti's battles with the Italian censors, and the point at which the situation apparently became intolerable to him, came with the struggles to stage Poliuto in Naples in 1838, problematic because of its religious content. When none of Donizetti's efforts to recast the plot in less risky terms were deemed acceptable, he gave up and revised the opera instead for Paris as Les martyrs (1840). The original Italian version of Poliuto was performed only in 1848, when theatrical censorship in Naples was temporarily loosened by the 1848 revolution.

2. Terrace scene at Bergamo: painting by Luigi Deleidi, c1840 (Museo Donizettiano, Bergamo): (from left to right) the host Michele Bettinelli, Donizetti, Antonio Dolci, Giovanni Simone Mayr and Deleidi, shown sketching

Conflicts with the censors were almost certainly an important factor in Donizetti's decision to leave Naples for Paris in 1838; the artistic impact of these conflicts is more difficult to measure. One common interpretation argues that the prohibitions on sensational subject matter and tragic endings stunted Donizetti's artistic growth, preventing him from becoming truly 'Romantic', at least until he was able to work in a larger and freer milieu: the fight against censorship 'lay at the heart of Donizetti's struggle to develop a musical form appropriate to Romantic opera' (Black, G (iii) 1984, p.147). However, this is implicitly to link dramatic novelty with musical innovation, an connection that is only partially sustained by the evidence (as the discussion of the operas below will demonstrate). Indeed, it seems likely that the restrictions under which Donizetti operated in Naples also had positive effects, if only in the sense that early 19th-century Italian opera thrives on a tension between generic limits and idiosyncratic expression. Certainly Donizetti later showed an attachment to certain dramatic conventions he had railed against in letters – although not, ever, to happy endings – even once such gestures were no longer enforced by his surroundings.

Censorship aside, as the decade advanced it became increasingly difficult to stage opera in Naples. The commission that oversaw the theatres suffered from lack of management and financial shortfall; indeed in 1835, the soprano Fanny Tacchinardi Persiani (the first Lucia) threatened to halt rehearsals for the première of Lucia unless the singers were paid. In 1837 Donizetti drafted a bitter letter (clearly never intended to be sent) asking to be released as director of the Naples theatres, calling the post 'totally useless' and complaining that too many musical decisions had been made without consulting him. Donizetti occasionally sought positions that would offer comparable financial security within more comfortable circumstances, but both an attempt in 1833 to secure the position of maestro di cappella at the Novara cathedral and an 1837 bid to succeed the late Niccolo Zingarelli as director of the Naples conservatory failed, with both posts awarded instead to Saverio Mercadante.

A major preoccupation during these years was obtaining a commission for Paris. After the first unsuccessful attempt with Gianni di Parigi in 1831, Donizetti was thwarted in attempts to secure a Parisian performance for Parisina, when Lanari, who held the performing rights to the opera (composed for his theatre), demanded too high a price for the Paris performance. The long-awaited opportunity finally arrived in 1835 when Rossini commissioned new works for the Théâtre-Italien from both Donizetti and Bellini. Unable to persuade Felice Romani to supply a libretto, Donizetti settled for the relatively inexperienced Emanuele Bidèra, who adapted Byron's play Marino Faliero. Bellini's letters from this period indicate that Rossini was closely involved with the composition of both Marino Faliero and Bellini's I puritani; Bellini himself admits to receiving pointers on orchestration, and writes of *Marino Faliero*that Rossini advised Donizetti to revise 'the introduction, the finale, and many other pieces'. While not matching the delirious reception accorded to I puritani, Marino Faliero was well received, although the French too complained of Donizetti's habit of composing too quickly and imitating Rossini.

While in Paris to supervise the première of Marino Faliero, Donizetti attended a performance of Fromental Halévy's La Juive at the Opéra, an experience that seems to have left him with conflicting feelings of excitement and distaste:

> If you could only see the richness . . . it is no longer illusion, but truth. – cardinals on the stage, the king, a company of supplicants (as they say in Bergamo) with the standard of the virgin, and the blessed souls in front. – everyone barefoot. – they burn the Jewess alive. – it appears real, you know, – and the effect is bad, bad like the music they sing over top of it all.

Despite this disapproval of the Opéra's extravagant 'historical' style, Donizetti set his sights on a performance there. In 1836 he devoted an unprecedented five months to the composition of L'assedio di Calais, based on the French patriotic episode of the sacrifice of the burghers of Calais. Donizetti described the opera as his 'most erudite, the most congruent with French tastes', by which he probably referred to the inclusion of an extended ballet, several unusually prominent and musically complex choruses, and a mélodrame-inspired episode of pantomime in the Prelude. Eventually performed at the S Carlo in November 1836, L'assedio di Calais never achieved a Paris performance.

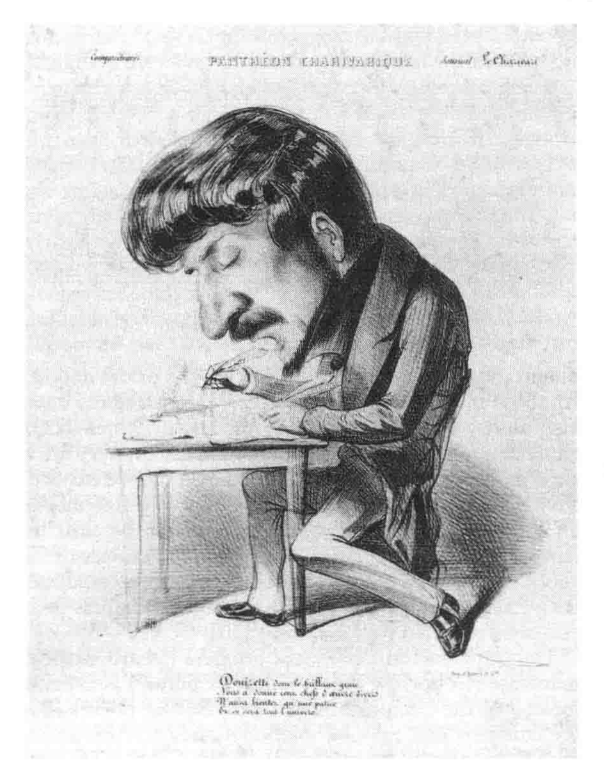
Donizetti's despair in the face of these various professional obstacles was exacerbated by a series of personal tragedies in the late 1830s. In 1835–6 his parents died within a few weeks of each other, and in July 1837, at the age of only 29, Virginia died after giving birth to a stillborn child. This was her second stillbirth; in 1829 a first son, born with a severe birth defect, had died after living only 11 days. It has been suggested plausibly that Virginia's difficulties with child-bearing and her untimely death were results of the syphilis that was to incapacitate Donizetti less than a decade later (Ashbrook, 1987). Donizetti was devastated by Virginia's death; well into the 1840s his letters refer to her with such frequency and affection that one suspects he never recovered. As he wrote to her brother Toto: 'I keep asking: for whom do I work? Why? I am alone on earth. Can I live? And such thoughts make me drop my arms, dear Toto!'

3. International career, illness and death (1838–48). Discouraged by this sequence of professional disappointments and personal tragedy, Donizetti left Naples in October 1838 and moved permanently to Paris. He seems briefly to have considered retiring from composition, writing more or less simultaneously to a Bergamo friend, Antonio Dolci, that he wished to live modestly with no need of fame or wealth and to Mayr that 'music has great power over me. I would be dead [without it]!' However, it was more a matter of external circumstances than of low spirits that in Paris Donizetti entered a rare period of more than a year during which no new works were staged. Instead he supervised productions of *Roberto Devereux*and L'elisir d'amore at the Théâtre-Italien, and began adapting the forbidden Poliuto as Les martyrs. After many delays, Les martyrs was finally produced at the Opéra in the spring of 1840, initiating what Hector Berlioz bitterly called Donizetti's 'conquest' of the Parisian theatres. Just two months before the première of Les martyrs, La fille du régiment was given its first performance at the Opéra-Comique, and the new Théâtre de la Renaissance presented the French première of Lucie de Lammermoor and commissioned a new work from Donizetti, L'ange de Nisida. The Renaissance went bankrupt before L'ange could be staged, but Donizetti reworked the music as La favorite for the Opéra, where it was performed in December 1840 (fig.3). Another aborted project was less lucky: Le duc d'Albe, commissioned by the Opéra in 1839–40, was repeatedly pushed aside and had to wait until 1882 for its first performance.

As Donizetti became established in Paris, more – and more prestigious – invitations began to flow in from other quarters as well. February 1841 saw the première of Adelia in Rome; less than a year later Maria Padilla was given its first performance at La Scala. In March 1842 Donizetti was invited to conduct the Italian première of



3. Rosine Stolz as Léonor and Gilbert Duprez as Fernand in Act 4 of Donizetti's 'La favorite', Paris Opéra (Salle Le Peletier), 1840: lithograph by Emile Desmaisons after François Gabriel Guillaume Lepaulle, frontispiece to the first edition of the vocal score (Paris: Schlesinger, 1840)

Rossini's Stabat mater in Bologna. At this time Rossini also attempted to persuade Donizetti to accept the post of maestro di cappella at the cathedral of S Petronio in Bologna, but Donizetti declined in order to accept the far more prestigious position of Hofkapellmeister to the Habsburg court in Vienna and court composer to the Austrian emperor. The Vienna job paid 1000 Austrian lire per month 'for doing nothing' (as the delighted Donizetti put it), and allowed for five or six months of leave; the duties were to give lessons at a conservatory, to conduct concerts in the royal apartments two or three times a year, and to write pieces for the chapel and court. Donizetti was uncharacteristically impressed by his new position, writing to his closest friends with a mixture of joy and self-mockery of the 'gilded habit and sword' he wore to discharge official duties.

By the early 1840s Donizetti was residing for about half of each year in Paris and Vienna, squeezing in frequent trips to Italy, and always working on several new projects while simultaneously supervising stagings of older works. One typically high-strung letter of the period frames his life as a scene from a comic opera:

> I don't know if you're familiar with Figaro's aria in Rossini's Barbiere – 'tutti mi chiedono, tutti mi vogliono', etc. . . . That's the way it is. Paris says: come at once. No! Naples: come running. No! Bologna: settle down here; here are your terms. No. Do you want to accept (here comes the adagio) the post in V–I–E–N–N–A of Hofkapellmeister.

The good humour of this and other letters shows that Donizetti thrived on his whirlwind schedule, and it is worth noting that this acceleration of his compositional (and other professional) activities at the height of his career sets Donizetti apart from most of his contemporaries,

4. Donizetti caricatured writing with both hands at once: lithograph from the series 'Panthéon charivarique' in the journal 'Le charivari' (1841) including Verdi and Bellini, both of whom slowed their rate of composition and accepted fewer commissions as soon as reputation and financial security made this possible.

While the first symptoms of the syphilis that killed Donizetti may have been evident as early as 1828, the illness seems to have become fully apparent to the composer and his associates only in the early 1840s. In his memoirs, the publisher and journalist Léon Escudier fancifully dated its onset to a contretemps with the mezzo-soprano Rosine Stoltz during rehearsals for Donizetti's last opera, Dom Sébastien, late in 1843. However, Donizetti himself was clearly aware of his disease much earlier: hardly a letter written during the first half of that year fails to mention the now usual headaches and fever. By 1844 the illness had become serious enough to slow the furious productivity to a crawl; in 1845 Donizetti was barely able to compose at all and complained of confusion and of a weight that made it difficult to move his head:

> I fall out of bed at night, and beat my head against the ground to drive out the blood. . . . Well, can you guess? I wanted to leave the light on, and then it is there when I fall (at two or three o'clock in the morning), I feel my heart pounding I wake up . . . I see the light. . . . Everything is silent . . . with blood in the head and sensitive nerves the night is the saddest thing, besides the privations of food, of drink, of hours measured [only] in living and sleeping.
> Light, light! Either that of God, or that of oil and wax!

Early in 1846 doctors and the prefect of police (perhaps involved because of some embarassing sexual indiscretions) deemed it necessary to confine Donizetti in an asylum in the Paris suburb of Ivry. In the autumn of 1847 the doctors at Ivry finally ceded to the demands of friends and family and gave permission for Donizetti to be moved back to Bergamo, where he was lodged in the home of the Baroness Rosa Rota-Basoni. His death on 8 April 1848 oddly coincided with and was somewhat overshadowed by the 1848 uprisings against Austrian domination in Lombardy. An autopsy declared the cause of death as 'cerebro-spinal syphilis'. The remains were interred in Bergamo cemetery, but moved, along with those of Mayr, to the cathedral of S Maria Maggiore in 1875.

4. Operas, 1818–30. The slow development of Donizetti's style across his first decade of operatic productivity has been attributed to the long sojourn in Naples, which stifled his attraction to Romantic plots and encouraged mechanical imitation of Rossinian vocal writing (Ashbook, 1987). Neapolitan taste also pushed Donizetti towards farce, as in the series of operas that included prominent roles for the popular basso buffo Carlo Casaccia (La zingara, Il fortunato inganno, Emilia di Liverpool, Il borgomastro di Sardaam), and towards the semiseria genre, rapidly becoming old-fashioned in the rest of Italy by this time. If regional taste exerted an influence on generic and dramatic choices, the musical possibilities available to the young Donizetti were constrained above all by the wild popularity of Rossini's operas. The Rossinian influence can be heard most immediately in the wealth of vocal display in these early works, at first indulged equally in all voice types and in all sections of an aria, and gradually (by about 1827–8) restricted to higher voices and confined to cadential passages, being let loose only after the entire text has been stated. Another obvious debt to Rossini lies in the surprising amount of word-painting in the early operas, particularly the preponderance of musical effects designed to portray comically hyperbolic physical reactions such as shivers, pounding hearts, and brains spinning in confusion. The Act 1 finale of Olivo e Pasquale (1827) paints the ultra-Rossinian line 'a cloud of thoughts whispers in my brain like waves' with a patter of quavers moving by semitones, while the quartet from La lettera anonima (1822) depicts heart palpitations in a similarly literal manner (ex.1).

It is striking that one of Donizetti's most Romantic and least vocally florid works from this period is Gabriella di Vergy (1826), composed without a commission and not performed until after his death. However, even a purely comic work like L'ajo nell'imbarazzo (1824) demonstrates that Donizetti's early style was more flexible and less slavishly Rossinian than is often asserted. L'ajo nell'imbarazzo combines a dominant idiom of syllabic patter and loosely additive aria forms with more purely melodic and more tightly structured designs used strategically for characterization. The stock characters of the miser father and ignoramus son sing mostly in patter, the melancholic lover expresses himself in elaborately patterned (but equally comic) arias, and the sympathetic figures of the enterprising tutor and prima donna soprano move freely between comic and serious poles.

Perhaps the clearest index of Donizetti's changing relation to Rossini is the design of individual aria and ensemble movements. After the free-form numbers sung by almost all of the purely comic characters, the most common form for the lyric sections of arias and duets is a two-phase design made popular by Rossini, consisting of an opening, declamatory section of (usually) two four-bar phrases in a syllabic, almost recitative-like style, followed by a longer section that highlights vocal display.

Ex.1 La lettera anonima, Act 1, Quartetto

ROSINA: con mo - ti in - so - li - ti con mo - ti in - so - li - ti gli bat - te il cor

MELITA: con va - ni pal - pi - ti mi bat - te bat - te il cor con va - ni pal - pi - ti mi bat - te il cor

FILINTO: con mo - ti in - so - li - ti mi bat - te bat - te il cor con mo - ti in - so - li - ti mi bat - te il cor

CONTE: con mo - ti in - so - li - ti mi bat - te bat - te il cor con mo - ti in - so - li - ti mi bat - - te il cor

The declamatory opening and the florid body of the aria tend to be quite distinct melodically, and the vocal ornament of the second section is often based on chains of semiquavers and repeated patterns of scales and triads. In L'ajo nell'imbarazzo the cavatina for the prima donna soprano, Gilda, pairs this conventional formal progression with a corresponding evolution of sentiments in the text, producing a juxtaposition of moods reminiscent of Rossini's 'Una voce poco fa' (Il barbiere di Siviglia) with its famous 'ma' ('but'). The speech-like pace of the first eight bars of the vocal line depicts the martial resolve Gilda has inherited as the daughter of a colonel, while the body of the aria is dominated by the 'malice' of which she boasts in the second half of her text, captured musically by the excess of vocal ornament after bar 9 (ex.2).

At the beginning of his career, Donizetti alternated this 'two-phase' design with numbers based on what opera scholars have labelled the 'lyric prototype'. First applied to the standard aria design of Bellini's mature operas, this term describes a structure that distributes two quatrains of poetry across four (usually) four-bar phrases: the first two lines of text are set as a four-bar phrase, the next two as a modified repetition (a a^1); the music for lines 5 and 6 introduces a contrasting motif and moves away from the tonic (b), and the last two lines return to the tonic, with either a version of the opening motif or a new culminating idea (a^2 or c). Crucially, the lyric prototype tends to confine vocal display to its final sections, reserving at least the opening a and a^1 phrases for a more syllabic, more melodic style. In his earliest operas, Donizetti employs lyric-prototype movements mainly for characters somehow marked as 'other' – the gypsy Argilla in La zingara (1822) or the laughable melancholic in L'ajo nell'imbarazzo. By 1827 or 1828, lyric prototype designs gradually become more common even in dramatically neutral situations, first gaining currency in cabalettas and in entrance arias and rondò finales for the prima donna. At about the same time Donizetti's approach to the duet also shifts, with the Rossinian model, in which both characters sing together throughout the usually very brief slow movement, gradually displaced by a more extended slow movement that begins with parallel solo statements and reserves the impact of the two voices blended in harmony for a few concluding phrases. However, it should be emphasized that these developments coexisted with freer, more ad hoc designs for comic numbers that remained constant well into the 1830s.

The watershed in Donizetti's progress toward 'artistic maturity' (to borrow Philip Gossett's phrase) is usually located at the composition of Anna Bolena (1830) and the conquest of a new international audience that came with that opera's success. But a cluster of operas written around 1828 for Naples and Rome attest to a comparable change of style, if not one that can be as neatly linked to external circumstances. Works such as Alina, regina di Golconda, Il paria and especially *L'esule di Roma*all show a reduction of vocal ornament, especially for the male voices, and an exploration of new plot types and new approaches to dramaturgy and musical structure. Alina mines a pastoral genre new for Donizetti, an idiom whose musical impact is heard particularly in a fabricated dream scene for the baritone Vollmar with its drones and folk-like accompanying chorus. The Indian setting of Il paria exploits a different variety of exoticism; rather than drawing on stock melodic markers of the Orient, Il paria's Brahmins and priestesses become an excuse to experiment with a newly uncompromising syllabic vocal style.

The most striking departure from the Rossinian mould before 1830 came with L'esule di Roma, whose composition prompted one of Donizetti's rare statements of aesthetic principle. Inspired by the success of the trio that ended L'esule di Roma's first act in place of a conventional

Ex.2 L'ajo nell'imbarazzo, Act 1, Cavatina

GILDA — Moderato

Fig - lia son d'un col - on - nel - lo, ho un spi - ri - to ho un spi - ri - to mar - zia - le; ho un spi - ri - to mar - zia - - - - - - - - - - - le; e qui den - tro al mio cer - vel - lo, ho ma - li - zia in quan - ti - tà fig - lia son d'un co - lon - nel - lo, ho uno spi - ri - to mar - zia - le; è qui den - tro al mio cer - vel - lo, ho ma - li - zia in quan - ti - tà e qui den - tro al mi - o cer - vel - lo, ho ma - li - zia in quan - ti - tà concertato finale, Donizetti wrote to Mayr of his desire to 'shake off the yoke of finales', vowing that within the next year he would conclude a first act with a quartet and end an opera with a death. This last desideratum was partly directed against censorship and traditional operatic dramaturgy, but the letter to Mayr can also be glossed as an attack on two musical mainstays of contemporary style, the concerted ensemble (or largo concertato) of the traditional internal finale and the concluding double aria (or rondò finale) for soprano. Donizetti's rhetoric here somewhat outstripped his practice: he would never completely abandon either the standard internal finale or the rondò (see Gossett, 1985), and examples of both can be found even in his last operas.

Although Gilardoni's libretto for L'esule di Roma bears some striking similarities to Rossini's Tancredi and to the traditional plots popular in Naples, Donizetti uses the neo-classical frame more as an invitation to Romantic experiment than as an established formula. In addition to linking vocal ornament more closely to dramatic expression, L'esule di Roma modifies the 'portrait gallery' convention of beginning the first act with double arias for each principal character in turn. The bass Murena and the hero Settimio (tenor) do sing double arias, but rather than introducing the prima donna, Argelia, with a third such number, Donizetti denies her any aria in the first act, but instead concentrates attention on her through a string of linked numbers: Settimio's cavatina is propelled by his anticipation of reunion with her, and this is followed by a scena in which Settimio watches Argelia from a distance while she sings only a brief Bellinian arioso. Finally, the lovers are reunited in a duet that consists only of an ecstatic cabaletta, providing musical and emotional release for the entire scene-complex.

L'esule di Roma also includes the first of Donizetti's mad scenes, for Murena, a number that typifies the motivic density, rhythmic energy and flexibility of form that increasingly mark his style after 1828. The mad scene's slow movement begins with three varied repetitions of its opening motif, obsessively tracing a minor 3rd, moving up by step and falling back through a sigh figure (ex.3). This opening phrase is closely moulded to the rhythms of the text, with extra musical space carved out for the inarticulate exclamations 'Ahi misero' and 'Ah!' At bar 6, the initial sigh figure is reinterpreted as a falling minor 3rd (with the leap now filled in), which in turn becomes the basic motif for the next section of the movement (from 'Lo spirto accoglie'). The section begins along fairly conventional lines, with the introduction of new melodic material and the setting of text lines 4–8, but after the chorus enters it quickly veers into word-repetition on chromatically wavering repeated notes and recitative-like rhythms.

These features of closely worked motivic logic and additive form within a movement would surface more and more often in Donizetti's later operas, but like scene-complexes and substitutes for the cabaletta, such effects tend to be reserved for special dramatic circumstances, always co-existing with more conventional structures. Both the experiments of L'esule di Roma, apparently so incongruous with its neo-classical plot, and Donizetti's subsequent retreat from some of these techniques shed valuable light on the thorny concept of 'Romanticism' in Donizetti's output, revealing it to be not so much a maturity that he evolved into once and for all, but a manner he adopted intermittently, often prompted by striking plot situations or (as here) by collaboration with an adventurous librettist.

5. Operas, 1830–38. In a detailed study of the autograph of Anna Bolena (1985), Philip Gossett has shown that Donizetti devoted unusual attention to that opera, tightening the pace of recitatives and orchestral introductions, writing out more vocal ornamentation than ever before, and eliminating repetition and predictable turns of phrase from cabalettas, always the least flexible of operatic conventions. It seems reasonable to attribute at least some of this effort – and some of Anna Bolena's remarkable innovation – to the presence of a much-anticipated Bellini première at the same theatre in the same season. Bellinian inspiration can be heard in the lengths to which Donizetti goes to blur the boundary between aria and recitative (often by inserting passages of arioso, a technique that had attracted notice in Bellini's *La straniera*the year before) and to obscure or modify the opera's division into discrete 'numbers'. In the first act, for example, Donizetti works two subtle modifications on the traditional sequence of entrance arias, introducing the seconda donna Giovanna Seymour with a brief arioso and a duet rather than an aria, and launching the title character's entrance aria as an interruption of a romanza sung by the page Smeton: what begins as a third strophe to Smeton's E♭ major romanza is broken off by distraught exclamations from Anna and the chorus, effecting a rapid modulation to the G major of Anna's slow movement ('Come, innocente, giovane'). Within individual numbers, too, Donizetti avoids predictable patterns, especially the practice (common in both earlier and later works) of beginning ensembles with similar statements.

Gossett has shown that Donizetti often increased the motivic variety and rhythmic definition of melodies as he revised, but perhaps equally important in Anna Bolena is the cultivation of an extreme motivic economy. In what may be another nod to Bellini's experiments with speech-like melody, Donizetti often favours near-literal repetitions of the same three- or four-note initial figure, sometimes using such a motivic fragment as the germ for an entire phrase or thematic block. For example, the cabaletta of the duet for Anna and Giovanna begins with repeated statements of a gradually rising four-note motif

Ex.3 L'esule di Roma, Act 2 Scena ed Aria

Ex.4 Anna Bolena, Act 2
(a) Duetto

(b) Scena, Recitative ed Aria

separated by rests; the slow movement of Percy's aria in Act 2 similarly grows out of a fragmented descent that only gradually lengthens out into a phrase of convincing melodic sweep (ex.4*a*).

Not all the works that followed Anna Bolena were as adventurous. Similar innovations can be heard in Lucrezia Borgia (1833), Maria Stuarda (1835) and Maria de Rudenz (1838), but such experiments alternated throughout the 1830s with works such as Parisina (1833) and Pia de' Tolomei (1837), which enjoyed equal success while retaining the 'portrait gallery' structure and highlighting florid solo singing over ensembles and extended scenic units. Traditional approaches are particularly tenacious in the opere buffe and semiserie: such works as Torquato Tasso and *Il furioso all'isola di San Domingo*tend to combine the old free-form comic patter numbers with elaborate double arias for the seria characters. But even Donizetti's best-known opera of this period, Lucia di Lammermoor, represents more of a conservative extreme than a measure of Donizetti's standard practices. Its famous mad scene aside, Lucia's style is surprisingly Classical, being based on a succession of fairly conventional (if beautifully conceived) double arias and bipartite duets. Even the psychological and musical disruptions of the mad scene are confined to the extended recitative that begins the scene, never seriously derailing the fundamental logic of the double aria. This sense of a prevailing balance and symmetry is reinforced by the organization of the last act around paired double arias for the principals, with Lucia's flamboyant mad scene balanced by Edgardo's more introspective suicide aria.

This assessment of Lucia as partly a 'Classical' work raises the question of Donizetti's role as a composer of 'Romantic' opera. The label is appropriate, even necessary, but only if the term 'Romanticism' is understood in a sense specific to Italy, and to opera. In sharp contrast to their French counterparts, Italian aesthetic theorists of the 1820s and 30s espoused a moderate notion of Romanticism, one that remained friendly to and continuous with Classicism; it is such a loose definition that is most relevant to Donizetti's forays into Romantic expression. Lucia is Romantic first of all by virtue of its plot, which unites the vogue for the novels of Walter Scott, a misty Scottish setting, and the gothic ingredients of a ghost and a decaying castle. Indeed, the Act 1 fountain scene might be taken as a summary of Donizetti's Romantic manner. Not only does the soprano's slow movement ('Regnava nel silenzio') narrate the appearance of a ghost, but the movement's form bends and breaks to accommodate its supernatural content: beginning with the balanced phrases of a lyric prototype, Donizetti alters the contour of the opening motif, circles back to it twice as if in allusion to the strophic form characteristic of story-telling, and finally allows the number to be derailed into distraught coloratura at the moment when the ghost intrudes into Lucia's tale. But, crucially, the hallucinatory digression is short-lived; the movement concludes with a goal-orientated cadenza, and formal convention snaps back into place decisively with the love-drunk cabaletta that rounds out the scene.

What might be called Donizetti's Romantic manner – by then, was often triggered by subject matter: particularly tragic or gothic plots, those that called for vivid couleur locale, or featured grotesque or morally ambiguous characters, mixing of genres, or patriotic sentiment. For example, the Venetian settings of both Lucrezia Borgia and *Marino Faliero*provoked unusual stylistic solutions, the latter even more so because it was composed with the cosmopolitan and more flexible Parisian audience in mind. In both operas, Donizetti created a sense of Venetian colour not primarily through echoes of some imagined folk or gondolier's style, but using means at once more abstract and more specific: a preponderance of strophic designs (in Lucrezia) and vocal ornament used for exotic effect (in Marino Faliero).

The question of Romanticism, especially as it relates to formal innovation, is further complicated by the strong French influence that coincides with Donizetti's embrace of Romantic subjects in the mid-1830s. Partly in response to French models, his aria forms in the 1830s move in two divergent directions, towards greater discursive freedom and towards the increased patterning of strophic forms. Often a text with a strong narrative impulse or supernatural content, such as 'Regnava nel silenzio', inspires expansions or modifications of the now-standard lyric prototype design. But at the same time, as Donizetti became more attuned to French operatic conventions he opted more often for strophic arias or variations on the French *couplets*structure. Strophic arias are almost de rigueur for musico pages and bards such as Smeton in Anna Bolena ('Deh! non voler costringere') and Maffio Orsini in Lucrezia Borgia ('Nella fatal di Rimini'), but they are also increasingly assigned to principal characters, conveying rustic simplicity, mystery or formality. The relative stiffness of Lucrezia's strophic entrance aria ('Com'è bello'), with its written-out ornamentation, is both an ingredient of local colour and a marker of the ambiguous character of Lucrezia herself. Typically, Lucrezia's tightly controlled strophes are a brief moment of stasis within an ambitious span of musical and scenic continuity: interrupted by the recitative interventions between strophes from eavesdropping bravos – a device that anticipates Verdi's exchange for Rigoletto and Sparafucile two decades later – Lucrezia's aria also flows straight into the next number, her duet with Gennaro.

Ex.5 Marino Faliero, Act 1, Duetto

Ex.6 Marino Faliero, Act 2, Aria

Ex.7 Maria de Rudenz, Act 3, Duetto

Of course, strophic forms are far from Donizetti's only source of couleur locale. Marino Faliero is particularly interesting in this light, because it brings together the Venetian setting, the new leeway permitted by the Paris audience, and the mostly intangible effect of Rossini's authoritative presence as director of the Théâtre-Italien. The gondoliers' chorus and aria for Fernando that begin the second act are a fairly obvious hommage to the third act of Rossini's Otello, but there is also a bow to a more conventional aspect of Rossini's style in the Act 1 duet for Israele and Faliero (ex.5). After an opening eight bars of Bellinian 12/8 cantabile, the slow movement's middle section introduces repetitive patterns of vocal ornamentation that recall the controlled, almost mechanical ornamentation of Rossini and much early Donizetti. The slow movement of Fernando's Act 2 aria conveys a folklike impression by combining syllabic declamation with emphasis on the fifth scale degree, so that the sustained Ds in the vocal line (within the G minor context) create the impression of a wail or moan across the lagoons (ex.6).

Another novelty of Donizetti's style in the mid-1830s concerns harmony and tonal motion, particularly a growing tendency to modulate to distant keys within movements and, in rare instances, to attach dramatic meaning to specific keys or pitches. In Maria Stuarda (1835), emphasis on the key of D♭ major is used to lend the opera a particular atmosphere or tinta (to borrow the Verdian term): the tonality recurs in the slow movement of Maria's cavatina ('Oh nube! che lieve per l'aria'), in the slow movement of the duet for Maria and Leicester that immediately follows (which also begins with the almost identical melodic motif based on a rising 4th), and in the third-act terzetto. In L'assedio di Calais (1836), a generally expanded harmonic language and thick choral texture are pressed into service to convey the energy and threat of the mob, at several points almost animating the collective body of the people of Calais as an autonomous dramatic character. Yet a third manifestation of Donizetti's new approach to tonality occurs in Maria de Rudenz, where an unusual number of arias and ensembles either end in different keys from those in which they begin or modulate suddenly at their midpoints. The Act 3 duet for the brothers Enrico (tenor) and Corrado (baritone), rivals for the love of the same woman, begins in a secure D minor, but modulates in its third phrase (b of a lyric prototype design) to E♭ major via only a single perfunctory pivot chord (ex.7). This shift to E♭ in the middle of the tenor's opening statement is accompanied by the expressive direction 'ironico', as Enrico conjures a vision of his brother's future happiness 'in Matilde's embrace'. In bar 16 Enrico rejects his own vision with a syncopated 'no!' harmonized by the dominant of the D minor tonic; his climb back to close in the tonic, however, is achieved indirectly, through a rising chromatic line over mostly subdominant harmony as he vows that he will die before seeing his brother united with Matilde.

In his review of the première of Marino Faliero, Berlioz complained that Donizetti did not take enough care over orchestration, jeering that 'in Italy if an opera contains a gracious solo for the flute, horn, or cello, the orchestration would be called good; but in Paris, where everyone can hear Beethoven, Weber and Mozart daily, many people know that the word "orchestration" means something else altogether'. Professional jealousy aside, Berlioz was describing a distinction between Italian and Parisian orchestration that Donizetti would have recognized and that had an audible impact on his approach to instrumentation. In the works composed before Donizetti's Parisian sojourn, Berlioz's dismissive description is not too far off the mark: like his contemporaries, Donizetti orchestrated in the theatre; his main concerns were balance and creating a transparent texture through which the voice could be heard, with orchestral effects used only rarely for dramatic impact. In general, the orchestral sound is lighter than that of Verdi's operas, with the flute and bassoon in particular placed very high in their registers, and with only a single trombone used in the comic operas.

But Donizetti also showed himself capable of exploiting unusual orchestral colour for dramatic effect. In his early and middle-period works, this most often took the form of elaborate preludes or obbligatos for a solo instrument; from Lucia and Marino Faliero on, unusual blends of orchestral timbres also became important. The best-known example of a dramatically charged solo instrument is surely the flute in the Lucia mad scene, an obbligato that was originally drafted for the far more uncanny glass harmonica but replaced for practical reasons. Other unusual effects include the solo clarinet that accompanies Paolina's entrance aria in Act 1 of Poliuto, the bass clarinet in the third-act prelude of Maria de Rudenz, and the pairing of horn and cello in the introduction of the protagonist's romanza in Act 2 of Parisina. Occasionally a particular orchestral sound is used to characterize an entire opera, such as the recurring passages for French horns in Lucia.

6. Operas, 1838–43. The music of Donizetti's final period does not exhibit the characteristics of a 'late style' as traditionally understood. Although he was certainly in an economic position to reduce his commitments and write only a few operas shaped to his own taste, as Verdi would, Donizetti's personality and perhaps also his musical style demanded new audiences and constant external stimulus. Thus the new stylistic directions of these last operas were prompted above all by the international milieu in which Donizetti now worked: a consolidation of the Parisian influences already present earlier led to expansion on several levels, while interaction with his newer Viennese audience inspired a certain classicism and restraint. The divergent stimuli provided by these theatrical settings, as well as the fact that Donizetti's career was cut brutally and unexpectedly short by illness, dictate that we may speak not so much of a 'late style' as of several distinct late styles.

After 1838 the interaction with Parisian models took on greater importance, not only because Donizetti was now resident in Paris, but because he began to write operas on French librettos and to write for the Opéra, which imposed a very specific set of stylistic requirements. In a letter to Mayr written just after his move to Paris, Donizetti outlined some of what was required of an Italian composer aiming to assimilate the prevailing conventions of grand opéra:

> Both the music and the poetry of French opera have a cachet all their own, to which each composer must adapt, whether in recitatives or in set pieces; for example, one must avoid crescendos etc. etc., just as one must avoid the usual cadences felicità, felicità, felicità; and then, between one [statement of the] cabaletta and the other they always have some [new lines of] poetry that escalate the action, without the usual repetition of verses that our [Italian] poets use.

Donizetti's rhetoric here seems as revealing for what he leaves out as for what he states. He omits any mention of the large formal and dramatic questions usually considered central to the aesthetics of French opera – the emphasis on the scenic tableau as the basic dramatic unit, the preference for strophic or ternary-form arias – focussing instead on what he sees as the freedom offered by the French style, the encouragement it offers to 'avoid the usual' Italian formulas.

This is not to suggest that Donizetti's grands opéras ignored the broadest outlines of French dramaturgy. All three works for the Opéra feature ballets and elaborate choral tableaux, and the five acts of Dom Sébastien string together the settings of escalating complexity and historical detail: the embarkation of a flotilla for the invasion of North Africa, a bloody battlefield scene, a mock state funeral in the cathedral square of Lisbon, an interrogation in a subterranean Inquisition chamber and a failed escape from a tower prison above the city's harbour. It seems ironic, but perhaps also typical of such attempts at cultural border-crossing, that the Paris critics were often most ambivalent about Donizetti's more blatant efforts to sound French. For example, the most Gallic-sounding choruses in Dom Sébastien (especially the Act 1 finale, 'En avant, soldats') were unanimously and scathingly criticized, while the opera's most popular moments were also its most straightforwardly Italian, such as the Largo concertato in the fourth act that reminded several critics of the sextet from Lucia.

But as Donizetti's letter suggests, the move to Paris also required – and made possible – many more subtle adjustments of style, some dictated by the inflections of the language itself. Although a draft libretto for Dom Sébastien shows that Donizetti sometimes set French text by first translating it into Italian and imagining rhythms to fit the corresponding Italian verse metres, there is also much musical evidence that setting the French language elicited new forms, melodic types and especially a new level of melodic detail. For example, the slow movement of Fernand's entrance aria in La favorite melds French and Italian formal designs, repeating and embellishing a standard lyric prototype to create a two-strophe structure reminiscent of the French couplets (ex.8). In terms of text-setting and melodic style, too, the number teeters between two national idioms. An opening phrase describes Fernand's first sight of his beloved praying in church, establishing a melodic contour and relation between voice and orchestra that might be heard as typically Italian, but on its repetition and the contrasting phrase that begins at bar 6, word-repetition and rapid, nervous text-setting ('frémir de plaisir', 'qu'elle était belle') paint Fernand's agitated reaction to the sight of his love in a more word-driven French style. When the opening phrase returns to close off the strophe, Fernand's thoughts turn back from love to the religious contemplation with which he began, almost as if Donizetti had deployed the contrasting spacious Italian vocal melody and jittery French declamation as correlates for the opposite poles of piety and physical desire that alternately attract Fernand.

A more ambitious manifestation of French strophic design occurs in the Prophecy for the poet Camoëns in the first act of Dom Sébastien, a number that places a couplets-like aria within an elaborate frame of choral participation and scenic activity (ex.9). In a drastic expansion of the alternation of verse and refrain that characterizes the couplet, the prophecy juxtaposes Camoëns' open-ended, hallucinatory solo verses predicting the defeat of Portuguese army with choral repetitions of the 6/8 martial refrain ('En avant, soldats') that had so displeased the critics. The entire progression is underlined by shifting scenic effects: as Camoëns foretells the bloody defeat of the Portugese forces, the sun disappears behind storm clouds and the platoons of sailors let their banners drop. The dramatic situation elicits both a loose melodic organization and a level of dissonance unusual even in Donizetti's late works. Camoëns' solo verses draw continuity mainly from the orchestra's repetitions of an undulating semiquaver figure that moves rapidly through shifting, dissonant harmonies, repeatedly superimposing a flattened 6th triad on a tonic pedal with a woodwind-heavy orchestration; above this orchestral evocation of storm clouds, the poet intones his prophecy in recitative-like fragments (fig.5).

Ex.8 La favorite, Act 1, Cavatina

While many traces of the French encounter also inform the work Donizetti composed for other cities during this last phase of productivity, the predominant impression created by the operas written for Vienna and Italy is one of reserve, even conservatism: of more modest orchestral and choral forces, a novel but less ostentatious approach to staging, and a generally more transparent texture. Sometimes this was a matter of practical circumstances such as the choice of librettist, but Donizetti's own aesthetic inclinations may also have contributed something to this preservation of a tried and true dramaturgy. In contrast to some of the rebellious pronouncements made at the beginning of his career, Donizetti now sometimes cleaved to conventions such as the rondò finale for the prima donna, even complaining that the original endings of both Adelia and Maria Padilla dispatched the heroines so quickly that there was no chance for a final cabaletta.

Donizetti's first opera for Vienna, Linda di Chamounix (1842), represents a return to the rather old-fashioned genre of opera semiseria, with a libretto by Gaetano Rossi, who had written his first libretto in 1796 and provided the librettos for Rossini's Tancredi and Semiramide. Donizetti described the opera as a companion piece to Ferdinando Paër's Agnese (1809), which, like Linda, centres on a seduced girl and her father's dishonour and which also features a mad scene (although Paër's is not for the daughter but for the father, a plot-turn Donizetti had used in Maria Padilla a few months earlier). But within this rather old-fashioned generic framework, Linda di Chamounix also presents a completely new sense of atmosphere and of stage space. Extensive use of offstage music evokes the vast expanses of the Alpine setting, and perhaps also creates a metaphorical distance from, or nostalgia for, the virginal innocence Linda leaves behind when she moves to Paris. This sense of music as a marker of space and a carrier of virtue is captured most fully in the ballata ('Per sua madre andò una figlia') sung by Linda's confidant, Pierotto (musico), fragments of which are recalled three times in the opera. When the ballata is recalled in the second act, it floats in from outside the window of Linda's lavish apartment, as the man she loves begs her for an embrace. The mere sound of the familiar tune, with its associations of home and of the mother's voice, freezes Linda, recalls her to virtue. The ballata's role as dramatic agent is even more forceful in its final recurrence, where it animates Linda's defeated, deranged body through the Alpine landscape, as Pierotto leads her home to the Savoy and to her mother.

Like the late works for Italy Adelia (1840) and Maria Padilla (1841), Donizetti's other opera for Vienna, Maria di Rohan (1843), demonstrates his continuing willingness to adhere to the traditional outlines of 'number opera', especially the presentation of the principal characters in a string of double arias. However, in Maria di Rohan, these flashes of conventionality often sound more self-consciously classicizing than regressive, as if Donizetti has set

Ex.9 Dom Sébastien, Act 1, Prophétie

5. Autograph score of part of Camoëns's cavatina 'Soldats, j'ai rêvé la victoire' from Act 1 of Donizetti's 'Dom Sébastien', first performed in Paris, 1843 (F-Pn) himself the challenge of writing an aria for each character in turn without sacrificing forward motion. And indeed, a generous sense of dramatic momentum is provided by the libretto's device of compressing the action into a 24-hour period and frequently reminding audience and characters of the passing of time through the sound of a clock striking.

The sense of time compressed, elapsing almost as 'real' time, is conveyed most strongly at moments such as the Act 2 duet for Maria and her husband Chervreuse, in which Maria constantly watches the door and waits for the clock to strike, expecting but dreading the promised arrival of her lover Chalais; but such urgency can also be conveyed by techniques less dependent on plot. Even Maria's cavatina ('Cupa, fatal mestizia'), which, like any entrance aria, superficially halts the action for an extended exploration of the soprano's tormented emotions, achieves a musical economy and a sense of emotional development across its length that seems new for Donizetti (ex.10). The orchestral introduction to Maria's slow movement is trimmed to a two-bar scale fragment for cello and double bass, which returns as a mark of punctuation throughout the number. This bass pattern at first seems unusually independent from the vocal line, its brusque pizzicato and arched contour opposed to Linda's rocking motif and more frankly expressive idiom. By bar 5, however ('in questo core ha stanza'), the bass ostinato is revealed as governing the contour of the vocal line. The dryness of the repeating orchestral figure further matches the vocal line's strict avoidance of melisma, an apt response to the dominant sentiment of Maria's text: repentant for 'past mistakes', she denies herself the right to weep, to give way to her sorrow ('il pianto è grave error per me'). In the movement's final phrases, this line is repeated, transformed into a prayer-like apotheosis in the parallel major. The shimmering coda anticipates Verdi's practice of ending minor-key numbers with a radically new, celestial music and a corresponding sense of psychological transformation.

It would misrepresent Donizetti's career to ignore the fact that some of his greatest successes were comic operas or that he continued to compose in the comic vein throughout his career, even when the genre began to lose prestige. In addition to the full-length works L'elisir d'amore (1832), La fille du régiment (1840), and Don Pasquale (1843), all of which enjoyed immediate and lasting success, Donizetti produced a steady stream of comedies in one act. Although they proceed from the plot types and musical conventions traditional to opera buffa – Don Pasquale is even based on a libretto originally to music set in 1810 – Donizetti's comic operas inject a new strain of sentiment into the old forms.

Ex.10 Maria di Rohan, Act 1, Cavatina

In L'elisir d'amore, Donizetti and Romani soften the brittle comedy of their French model (a libretto by Scribe origanlly for Auber), enriching Nemorino's outer persona as a fool who 'knows nothing but how to sigh' with two substantial new occasions for introspection, 'Adina, credimi' and 'Una furtiva lagrima'. And both L'elisir and Don Pasquale poke fun at high literary notions of romance and heroism, introducing their heroines in the act of reading romances: Adina wishes for a potion like Isolde's, and Norina compares her own seductive powers to those of a chivalric heroine. Both operas eventually set up more natural – but ultimately no less 'Romantic' – alternatives to this bookish artifice, as if to subsume rather than reject the romance tradition. This playful stance towards conventions of tragedy and romance raises the possibility that the periodic turn to writing in the comic vein fulfilled some of this same rejuvenating function within Donizetti's output, providing a perspective from which to view and comment on the established idioms of serious opera.

7. Non-operatic works. Like every Italian composer of his day, Donizetti had written quantities of liturgical music as part of his musical training. Mayr's teaching is particularly evident in some of the ensembles, with their echoes of Haydn and other German masters. After 1824 the output diminished almost to nothing; then in 1835 he returned to religious composition, but by then all floridity had been banished from the vocal lines. The Requiem commemorating the death of Bellini includes a Mozartian Introit, a severely fugal Kyrie with final stretto, a Dies irae that anticipates Verdi's in theatrical force, a 'Judex ergo' that begins in solemn, measured declamation and ends in a sentimental lilt of 6ths and 3rds and an Offertory in the style of a Neapolitan folksong.

Not until his last years when serving as court Kapellmeister in Vienna did Donizetti find a liturgical style that was both consistent and rich in variety. This can be seen in a Miserere in G minor, which was originally dedicated to Pope Gregory XVI in 1837 and rewritten in 1842–3. No longer is there any trace of the theatre. The movements

6. Scene from Act 3 of Donizetti's 'Maria di Rohan', Kärntnertortheater, Vienna, 5 June 1843, with Eugenia Tadolini (Maria), Giorgio Ronconi (Chevreuse) and Carlo Guasco (Count de Chalais); engraving by Johann Wenzel Zinke after Cajetan are small but concentrated in expression. The even-numbered verses, originally to be sung to plainchant, are fully harmonized, but in a modal manner. In movements such as 'Et exultabit' and the final fugue, counterpoint is revitalized as in Rossini's Petite messe solennelle.

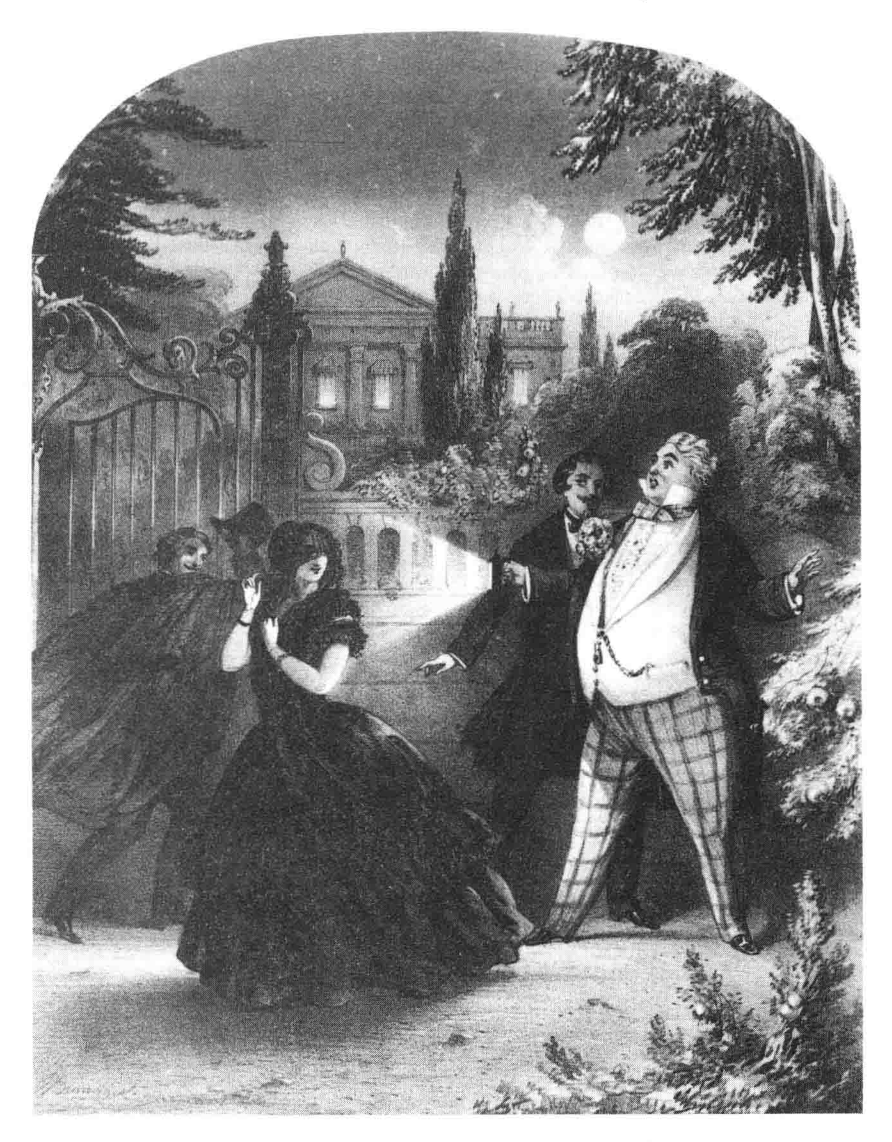
Donizetti wrote songs and duets with piano accompaniment to texts ranging from Metastasio to Romani and professional versifiers of the time such as Guaita and Tarantini. Many of the poems are of operatic provenance and were therefore set as operatic miniatures complete with recitative; some were grouped together in publications of the type popularized by Rossini's Soirées musicales. The melodies centre on two stereotypes – the popular song and the Italian opera aria, while the piano writing suggests simple orchestral accompaniment. The songs are fluent and attractive, and often include an unexpected modulation or unusual feature of design.

Donizetti's instrumental works have little importance except as evidence of a purely technical skill with which he is rarely credited. Of a different order, however, are the 19 string quartets, all but two apparently composed for musical gatherings at the house of one Bertoli in Bergamo, where Mayr often played the viola. All show a sure grasp of the possibilities of four-part string texture as a well as a close thematic organization in Haydn's manner (several have monothematic finales), although they are exercises rather than works of art, a fact which has prevented them from entering the repertory.

8. Reception. The first memoirs and biographical studies to appear after Donizetti's death take as one of their primary tasks the dignifying of his illness, an endeavour that often took the form of mistaking his venereal disease for mental breakdown and – more surprisingly – of linking his illness to his unique compositional gifts. Although medically implausible, the quasi-neurological diagnosis offered in 1875 by Federico Alborghetti and Michelangelo Galli had the advantage of accounting for both the tragic fatal illness and Donizetti's amazing fertility of composition:



> Often Donizetti jestingly told his wife and friends that when he sat down at his desk or at the piano to compose, it seemed to him that ideas came to him from only one side of his head, and that he felt in his brain a kind of band that stretched from the right to the left hemispheres. . . . When he had comic music in his head he felt an annoying tapping on the left side of his forehead, and when he wrote serious music he felt the same irritation on the right-hand side.

Beyond the obvious desire to recast the pathology of syphilis into a positive creative force, this bizarre vignette draws attention to two other aspects of Donizetti's career that biographers have felt obliged to account for, and that have continued to colour Donizetti's reception up to the present day, too often negatively: his unusual facility in both comic and serious genres and the sheer speed and ease with which he composed.

By the time of Donizetti's death, more than 20 of his 65 completed operas were enjoying strong careers on stages across Europe, a situation that would endure until the last quarter of the 19th century. While most Donizetti operas fell out of the repertory by the turn of the 20th century, a handful of works, including L'elisir d'amore, Lucrezia Borgia, Lucia di Lammermoor, La fille du régiment, La favorite and Don Pasquale, enjoyed uninterrupted popularity.

Because Donizetti's style so quickly became synonymous with the bel canto style generally, his compositional legacy can be difficult to trace in specific terms. He was undoubtedly a major influence on Verdi, and Verdi's close acquaintance with Donizetti's scores (many of which were staples of Giuseppina Strepponi's repertory) can be heard in many aspects of his style. It has been something of a sport to hunt for melodic reminiscences of Donizetti in Verdi's operas, but more significant is Verdi's debt to Donizetti's general handling of melody and rhythm, and perhaps most of all the tinta of some specific Donizetti works.

Friedrich Lippmann has compiled a detailed and convincing inventory of Donizetti's melodic influence on Verdi ('Verdi und Donizetti', G (i) 1975), pointing especially to their sacred affection for melodies that rapidly span a wide range with great rhythmic élan, melodies based on syncopations or other extravagant rhythmic profiles, and those broken up by rests into short, gasping phrases. One might add a common treatment of the voice, evident in the resemblance between the wide range, virtuosity and prevalence of large leaps in the music Verdi wrote for Abigaille (Nabucco) or Lady Macbeth and Donizetti's idiom of soprano writing, perhaps especially the music he composed for Giuseppina Ronzi de Begnis (Fausta, Gemma di Vergy, Roberto Devereux). More specifically, one can hear echoes of Maria Stuarda in Nabucco (especially of the canonic Largo concertato 'E sempre la stessa' in Verdi's 'S'appressan gl'istanti') and of Poliuto in the triumphal scene from Aida. Verdi's treatment of his Victor Hugo source in Rigoletto owes much to the ominous atmosphere of Lucrezia Borgia (Tomlinson, G (viii) 1988), and the love duet of Un ballo in maschera, with its cataclysmic confession of adulterous love, as well as the transcendent major-key coda of Amelia's Act 2 aria, seem clearly modelled on the corresponding scenes in Maria di Rohan.

7. Scene from the first London production of Donizetti's 'Don Pasquale', Her Majesty's Theatre, 29 June 1843, with (left to right) Giovanni Mario (Ernesto), Giulia Grisi (Norina), Luciano Fornasari (Malatesta) and Luigi Lablache (Don Pasquale)

In France Donizetti's operas quickly came to represent the Italian vocalism that both attracted and alarmed critics and composers. Berlioz launched some particularly vitriolic attacks in his journalism, falsely accusing Donizetti of re-using music from Betly in La fille du régiment and repeatedly criticizing his willingness to fall back on predictable formulas. In the 1840s and 50s compositional influence flowed mainly from north to south, and little of Donizetti beyond the occasional broadly 'italianate' gesture can be detected in the grands opéras of Auber, Halévy or Meyerbeer. Among French composers more friendly to Italian operatic aesthetics, one can trace a clear line of influence from the mad scenes of *Lucia*and Anna Bolena to the even more virtuoso coloratura and the recurring themes of the mad scenes by Meyerbeer (L'étoile du nord, Dinorah), Bizet (La jolie fille de Perth) and Thomas Ambroise (Hamlet).

In German-speaking countries the attitude to Donizetti's operas oscillated between suspicion and appropriation. As they did with Bellini, critics loved to pinpoint the Germanic elements in the operas written for Vienna, which usually amounted to novel effects of harmony or orchestration and to detecting a freer, less convention-bound attitude to form, especially the rejection of the cabaletta. Schumann partly blamed Donizetti's popularity for the frail condition of German operatic composition; in 1838 he walked out of a Vienna performance of L'elisir d'amore and later attacked Donizetti on nationalist grounds as a composer who wrote 'in Italian in Italy, [wished] in Paris to make himself French, and in Vienna to make himself German'.

Liszt composed fantasies on themes from Lucrezia Borgia, Lucia di Lammermoor, Parisina and Dom Sébastien, but his journalism makes no secret of his preference for Rossini, granting Donizetti only the feeble praise that at its best 'the faint breath of Rossini can still be heard giving some semblance of life to these soulless bodies'. Similarly, Wagner had earned a bit of much-needed income from the Donizetti phenomenon by preparing the vocal score of La favorite in Paris in 1840, but Cosima's meticulous documentation of his stray remarks and even the melodies he hummed indicates that Wagner far preferred Bellini, and rarely mentioned Donizetti unless to dismiss him.

In this context of German disdain, what may be the final chapter of 19th-century reception in Germany seems especially surprising. The fourth song of Mahler's Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen (1885) quotes in its middle section a melody from Dom Sébastien, possibly relayed to Mahler through the opera's frequent performances in Vienna, through Liszt's paraphrase, or even by way of Viennese military bands that had adopted the tune for funerals. Whatever the means of dissemination, the thematic relationship reminds us of both a rarely noted melancholy facet of Donizetti's style and of the complex channels through which his music has circulated and exerted influence.

Beginning with a centenary season in Bergamo in 1948 and revivals there every few years through the 1950s, the 'Donizetti Renaissance' brought many forgotten works back to the stage, often as vehicles for sopranos such as Maria Callas (Anna Bolena, La Scala, 1957), Joan Sutherland (Anna Bolena, Maria Stuarda, Emilia di Liverpool), Leyla Gencer (Roberto Devereux) and Monserrat Caballé (Lucrezia Borgia, Gemma di Vergy). Since the 1970s two London-based organizations have been invaluable in bringing lesser-known Donizetti works to public attention. The Donizetti Society produces a journal devoted to the composer and (under the imprint of Egret House) has published piano-vocal scores of works that are difficult to obtain. The record label Opera Rara has produced première recordings of more than 20 rare Donizetti operas.

A critical edition published by Casa Ricordi, Donizetti's publisher during his lifetime, began in 1989 and by 2000 had produced editions of nine operas. The definitive biography was then still William Ashbrook's Donizetti and his Operas (1982), although much new information has been supplied by Annalisa Bini and Jeremy Commons in Le prime rappresentazioni delle opere di Donizetti nella stampa coeva (1997). Since 1995 the Bergamo-based Fondazione Donizetti has sponsored performances, conferences and scholarly publications on Donizetti's life and works.

WORKS

MSS are autographs unless otherwise stated

OPERAS

vs – vocal score mel – melodramma
NC – Naples, Teatro di S Carlo NN – Naples, Teatro Nuovo
NFO – Naples, Teatro del Fondo RV – Rome, Teatro Valle

MSS are autographs unless otherwise stated

Title	Genre, acts	Libretto	First performance	Remarks; sources
Il Pigmalione	scena drammatica, 1		Bergamo, Donizetti, 13 Oct 1960	comp. Bologna, 1816; F-Pc
L'ira d'Achille	1		unperf.	comp. Bologna, 1817; Pc (inc.)
Enrico di Borgogna	mel, 2	B. Merelli	Venice, S Luca, 14 Nov 1818	copy Pc
Una follia	farsa, 1	Merelli	Venice, S Luca, 15 Dec 1818	? also perf. as Il ritratto parlante; ov., copy I-Bc
Le nozze in villa	ob, 2	Merelli	Mantua, Vecchio, carn. 1820–21	comp. Bergamo, 1819; as I provinciali, ossia Le nozze in villa, Genoa, 1822; copy F-Pc
Il falegname di Livonia, o Pietro il grande, czar delle Russie	ob, 2	G. Bevilacqua-Aldovrandini, after A. Duval	Venice, S Samuele, 26 Dec 1819	I-Mr
Zoraide di Grenata	mel eroico, 2	Merelli	Rome, Argentina, 28 Jan 1822	rev. (J. Ferretti), Rome, 1824; Mr
La zingara	dramma, 2	A.L. Tottola	NN, 12 May 1822	copy Nc; vs (Paris, 1856)
La lettera anonima	dramma per musica, 1	G. Genoino	NFO, 29 June 1822	Mr; vs (Paris, 1856)
Chiara e Serafina, o Il pirata	mel semi-seria, 2	F. Romani, after R.C.G. de Pixérécourt: La cisterne	Milan, Scala, 26 Oct 1822	Mr
Alfredo il grande	dramma per musica, 2	Tottola	NC, 2 July 1823	Nc, copy F-Pc
Il fortunato inganno	dg, 2	Tottola	NN, 3 Sept 1823	I-Nc
L'ajo nell'imbarazzo	mel giocoso, 2	Ferretti, after G. Giraud	RV, 4 Feb 1824	rev. as Don Gregorio, Naples, 1826; as Il governo della casa, Dresden, 1828; Nc (partly autograph), excerpts (Milan, ?1827, 1837), vs (Paris, 1856; Milan, 1878)
Emilia di Liverpool	dramma semiseria, 2	after S. Scatizzi: Emilia di Laverpaut	NN, 28 July 1824	rev. (G. Checcherini), Naples, 1828; also perf. as L'eremitaggio di Liverpool; Nc, copy F-Pc, vs (Paris, 1856)
Alahor in Granata	dramma, 2	M.A.	Palermo, Carolino, 7 Jan 1826	copy US-Bu
Elvida	dramma, 1	G.F. Schmidt	NC, 6 July 1826, rev.(3) *c*1838	I-Nc

Title	Genre, acts	Libretto	First performance	Remarks; sources
Gabriella di Vergy	tragedia lirica, 3	Tottola, after P. Du Belloy	NC, 29 Nov 1869	orig. comp. 2 acts, 1826, rev. (3) *c*1838; rev. by others for 1869 perf., BGi
2nd version			Belfast, Whitla Hall, 9 Nov 1978	comp. *c*1838; GB-Lu (partly autograph)
Olivo e Pasquale	mel, 2	Ferretti, after S.A. Sografi	RV, 7 Jan 1827	I-Nc; excerpts (Milan, 1830), vs (Paris, 1856)
Otto mesi in due ore, ossia Gli esiliati in Siberia	op romantica, 3	D. Gilardoni, after Pixérécourt: La fille de l'exilé	NN, 13 May 1827	rev. (A. Alcozer), Naples, 1833; Nc; rev. by U. Fontana as Elisabeth, ou La fille du proscrit (A. de Leuven and Brunswick [L. Lhérie]), unperf., MS London, Royal Opera House (partly autograph), vs (Paris, ?1854)
Il borgomastro di Saardam	mel giocoso, 2	Gilardoni, after Mélesville [A.-H.-J. Duveyrier], J.T. Merle and E. Cantiran de Boirie	NFO, 19 Aug 1827	Mr, excerpts (Milan, 1830, 1833), vs (Paris, 1856)
Le convenienze teatrali	? mel comico/giocoso, 1	Donizetti, after Sografi	NN, 21 Nov 1827	2-act version, Vienna, 1840; F-Pc (partly autograph), 2 excerpts (Milan, 1830 or 1831), vs (Paris, 1856), vs, ed. E. Riccioli (Florence, 1971)
2nd version: Le convenienze ed inconvenienze teatrali	dramma giocoso, 2		Milan, Cannobiana, 20 April 1831
L'esule di Roma, ossia Il proscritto	mel eroico, 2	Gilardoni, after L. Marchionni: Il proscritto romano	NC, 1 Jan 1828	also perf. as Settimio il proscritto; I-Mr, excerpts (Milan, 1828; Naples, 1832), with new aria, Bergamo, 1840, vs (Milan, ?1840)
Alina, regina di Golconda	mel, 2	Romani, after M.-J. Sedaine	Genoa, Carlo Felice, 12 May 1828	rev. version, Rome, 1829; Nc, vs (Milan, 1842)
Gianni di Calais	mel semiseria, 3	Gilardoni, after C.V. d'Arlincourt	NFO, 2 Aug 2828	Nc, excerpts (Milan, 1830 or 1831)
Il paria	mel, 2	Gilardoni, after C. Delavigne	NC, 12 Jan 1829	Nc, scena ed aria (Milan, 1837), vs (Paris, 1856)
Il giovedì grasso, o Il nuovo Pourceaugnac	1	Gilardoni	NFO, 26 Feb 1829	Nc, vs, without recits. (Paris, 1856)
Elisabetta al castello di Kenilworth	mel, 3	Tottola, after V. Hugo: Amy Robsart, and E. Scribe: Leicester [itself after W. Scott: Kenilworth]	NC, 6 July 1829	Nc, vs (Paris, 1856)
I pazzi per progetto	1	Gilardoni	NC, 6 Feb 1830	Nc, vs (Paris, 1856)
Il diluvio universale	azione tragico-sacra, 3	Gilardoni, after Byron: Heaven and Earth and F. Ringhieri: Il diluvio	NC, 6 March 1830	Nc, excerpts (Milan, 1834), vs (Paris, 1856)
Imelda de'Lambertazzi	mel tragico, 2	Tottola	NC, 5 Sept 1830	Nc, excerpts (Milan, 1830)
Anna Bolena	tragedia lirica, 2	I. Pindemonte and A. Pepoli	Milan, Carcano, 26 Dec 1830	Mr, vs (Milan, 1830 or 1831, 2/1876)
Gianni di Parigi	mel, 2	Romani, after Saint-Just	Milan, Scala, 10 Sept 1839	comp. 1831; Nc, vs (Milan, 1843)
Francesca di Foix	mel, 1	Gilardoni, after C.-S. Favart and Saint-Amans: Ninette à la cour	NC, 30 May 1831	Nc
La romanziera e l'uomo nero	1	Gilardoni	NFO, 18 June 1831	Nc, vs, without recits. (Paris, 1856)
Fausta	mel, 2	Gilardoni and Donizetti	NC, 12 Jan 1832	ov. added, Milan, 1832; rev. version, Venice, 1834; Nc, vs (Milan, 1832 or 1833; Paris, ?1832)
Ugo conte di Parigi	tragedia lirica, 4	Romani, after H.-L.-F. Bis: Blanche d'Aquitaine	Milan, Scala, 13 March 1832	Nc, vs (Milan, 1832)
L'elisir d'amore	mel giocoso, 2	Romani, after Scribe: Le philtre	Milan, Cannobiana, 12 May 1832	Nc (Act 1), BGi (Act 2); vs (Milan, 1832, 2/1869), fs (Milan, 1916)
Sancia di Castiglia	tragedia lirica, 2	P. Salatino	NC, 4 Nov 1832	Nc, vs (Milan, 1833)

Title	Genre, acts	Libretto	First performance	Remarks; sources
Il furioso nell'isola di San Domingo	mel, 2	Ferretti, after anon. play on M. de Cervantes: Don Quixote	RV, 2 Jan 1833	rev. version, Milan, 1833; Mr, excerpts (Milan, 1833), vs in 2 acts (Paris, *c*1845)
Parisina	mel, 3	Romani, after Byron	Florence, Pergola, 17 March 1833	BGi (*R*1981 in ERO, xxv), vs (Milan, 1833, 2/1911)
Torquato Tasso	mel, 3	Ferretti	RV, 9 Sept 1833	Mr, vs (Milan, 1833; Naples and Rome, *c*1835; Paris, n.d.): also perf. as Sordello il trovatore
Lucrezia Borgia	mel, prol., 2	Romani, after Hugo	Milan, Scala, 26 Dec 1833	rev. version, Milan, 1840; Mr; vs (Milan, 1834, 2/1859 or 1860), fs (Naples and Milan, *c*1890)
Rosmonda d'Inghilterra	mel serio, 2	Romani	Florence, Pergola, 27 Feb 1834	Nc, excerpts (Milan, 1834, 1851 or 1852); rev. as Elenora di Gujenna, Naples, 1837, Nc, vs (Paris, ?1840)
Maria Stuarda	tragedia lirica, 2/3	G. Bardari, after F. von Schiller	Milan, Scala, 30 Dec 1835	comp. for Naples, 1834, banned by censor; S-Smf, excerpts (Milan, 1835), vs (Paris, 1866), fs, ed. A. Wiklund (Milan, 1991)
2nd version: Buondelmonte	tragedia lirica, 2	P. Salatino	NC, 18 Oct 1834	new lib. fitted to music for Naples perf., I-Nc (partly autograph), excerpts (Milan, 1834 or 1835)
Gemma di Vergy	tragedia lirica, 2	G.E. Bidera, after A. Dumas père: Charles VII chez ses grands vassaux	Milan, Scala, 26 Dec 1834	Mr, vs (Milan, 1835, 2/1870 or 1871)
Marino Faliero	tragedia lirica, 3	Bidera, after Delavigne	Paris, Italien, 12 March 1835	Nc, vs (Paris, n.d.; Milan, 1835 or 1836)
Lucia di Lammermoor	dramma tragico, 3	S. Cammarano, after Scott: The Bride of Lammermoor	NC, 26 Sept 1835	rev., Fr., Paris, 1839; autograph owned by Commune di Bergamo (R Milan, 1941), vs (Naples, ?1835; Milan, 1837, 2/?1857), fs (Milan, *c*1910)
Belisario	tragedia lirica, 3	Cammarano, after E. von Schenk, trans. Marchionni	Venice, Fenice, 4 Feb 1836	Mr, vs (Milan, 1836, 2/1870; Paris, ?1836)
Il campanello di notte	mel giocoso, 1	Donizetti, after Brunswick, M.-B. Troin and V. Lhérie: La sonnette de nuit	NN, 1 June 1836	Nc, vs (Naples and Rome, ?1836; Milan, 1839), fs, ed. I. Narici (Milan, 1994)
Betly, ossia La capanna svizzera	dg, 1	Donizetti, after Scribe and Mélesville: Le chalet	NN, 21 Aug 1836	rev. (2 acts), Naples, 1837; Nc, vs (Naples, ?1836; Paris, ?1836; Milan, 1836 or 1837, 2/1877)
L'assedio di Calais	dramma lirico, 3	Cammarano, after Du Belloy	NC, 19 Nov 1836	F-Pc, ?I-Nc, vs (Milan, 1836)
Pia de' Tolomei	tragedia lirica, 2	Cammarano, after B. Sestini, and Dante: Commedia	Venice, Apollo, 18 Feb 1837	rev. version, Sinigaglia, 1837; Nc, excerpts (Milan, 1837; Paris, ?1837)
Roberto Devereux, ossia Il conte di Essex	tragedia lirica, 3	Cammarano, after F. Ancelot: Elisabeth d' Angleterre	NC, 28 Oct 1837	Nc (*R*1982 in ERO, xxvi), vs (Naples, 1837; Milan, 1838/*R*1975, 2/1870 or 1871)
Maria de Rudenz	dramma tragico, 3	Cammarano, after A. Bourgeois, J.-G.-A. Cuvelier and J. de Mallian: La nonne sanglante	Venice, Fenice, 30 Jan 1838	Vt, vs (Milan, ?*c*1845; Paris, *c*1845; Leipzig, *c*1845)
Poliuto	tragedia lirica, 3	Cammarano, after P. Corneille	NC, 30 Nov 1848	comp. for S Carlo, 1838, banned by censor; Nc, vs (Milan, *c*1850)
2nd version: Les martyrs	grand opéra, 4	Scribe	Paris, Opéra, 10 April 1840	Mr; (Paris, 1840/*R*1982 in ERO, xxvii), vs (Paris, ?1840/*R*1975; Milan, 1843)

Title	Genre, acts	Libretto	First performance	Remarks; sources
La fille du régiment	oc, 2	J.H. Vernoy de Saint-Georges and J.-F.-A. Bayard	Paris, OC (Bourse), 11 Feb 1840	Nc; (Paris, ?1840); It., Milan, 1840, vs (Milan, 1840 or 1841, 2/1879)
L' ange de Nisida	3	A. Royer and G. Vaëz	unperf.	comp. 1839; also known as Silvia; rev. as La favorite; excerpts F-Pc
La favorite	opéra, 4	Royer and Vaëz (with addns by Scribe), after Baculard d'Arnaud: Le comte de Comminges	Paris, Opéra, 2 Dec 1840	Malfieri collection; (Paris, 1841/*R*1982 in ERO, xxviii), rev. and expanded from L' ange de Nisida; ed. R. Harris-Warrick (Milan, 1997)
Adelia, o La figlia dell'arciere	mel serio, 3	Romani and G. Marini, after anon. Fr. play	Rome, Apollo, 11 Feb 1841	I-Nc, vs (Paris, ?1843; Milan, n.d.)
Rita, ou Le mari battu	oc, 1	Vaëz	Paris, OC (Favart), 7 May 1860	comp. 1841; Nc, vs (Paris, 1860); also perf. as Deux hommes et une femme
Maria Padilla	mel, 3	G. Rossi and Donizetti, after Ancelot	Milan, Scala, 26 Dec 1841	Mr, vs (Paris, ?1841; Milan, 1841 or 1842)
Linda di Chamounix	mel semiserio, 3	Rossi, after A.-P. d'Ennery and G. Lemoine: La grâce de Dieu	Vienna, Kärntnertor, 19 May 1842	rev. version, Paris, 1842; Mr, vs (Vienna and Milan, 1842; Paris, 1842)
Caterina Cornaro	tragedia lirica, prol., 2	G. Sacchèro, after Saint-Georges: La reine de Chypre	NC, 18 Jan 1844	comp. 1842–3; Nc, vs (Milan, 1845/*R*1974; Paris, 1845)
Don Pasquale	dramma buffo, 3	G. Ruffini and Donizetti, after A. Anelli: Ser Marcantonio	Paris, Italien, 3 Jan 1843	Mr; vs (Milan, 1843, 2/1871), fs (Milan, 1961)
Maria di Rohan	mel tragico, 3	Cammarano, after Lockroy [J.P. Simon] and Badon: Un duel sous le Cardinal de Richelieu	Vienna, Kärntnertor, 5 June 1843	rev. version, Paris, 1843; Mr, vs (Milan, 1843, 2/1870 or 1871; Ger., Vienna, ?1843; Paris, n.d.)
Dom Sébastien, roi de Portugal	opéra, 5	Scribe, after P.-H. Foucher	Paris, Opéra, 13 Nov 1843	F-Pc (with unpubd addns), vs (Paris, ?1843; Milan, 1844, 2/1886), fs (Paris, 1843–4/*R*1980 in ERO, xxix)

Inc. or unfinished: Olimpiade (P. Metastasio), duet, comp. Bologna, 1871, I-BGi (not autograph); Introduzione and aria [aria adapted from Le nozze in villa] in I piccioli virtuosi ambulanti (ob, 1), Bergamo, sum. 1819, pasticcio perf. by students of Mayr's school; La bella prigioniera (farsa, 1), comp. Naples, 1826, 2 nos., pf acc., BGi; Adelaide (comica), begun Naples, 1834, inc. autograph F-Pc [partly used in L'ange de Nisida]: Le duc d'Albe (op, 4, Scribe and C. Duveyrier), begun Paris, 1839, I-Mr (inc.), completed by M. Salvi and others as Il duca d' Alba, Rome, 1882, vs (Milan 1881 and 1882), completed by T. Schippers, Spoleto, 1959; Ne m'oubliez pas (3, Saint-Georges), comp. Paris, 1843, 7 nos. F-Pc; La fidanzata, aria Pc

CANTATAS AND OCCASIONAL WORKS

Il ritorno di primavera (G. Morando), 3 solo vv, orch, April 1818, I-Bc

Canto accompagnatorio, SATB, orch, for funeral eulogies of Marchese G. Terzi, Bergamo, 1819, BGc

Teresa e Gianfaldoni, 2 solo vv, orch, vs (Rome, 1821)

Cantata ('Questo è il suolo'), S, S, pf, Naples, for royal birth, April 1822, BGi

Angelica e Medoro (after Ariosto), Naples, May 1822

L'assunzione di Maria Vergine (G.B. Rusi), T, T, B, vv, orch, Rome, 1822, BGi

Aristea (azione pastorale, 1, G.F. Schmidt), 3 female vv, 3 male vv, orch, Naples, S Carlo, 30 May 1823, Nc

A Silvio amante, T, orch, ?1823, BGi

La fuga di Tisbe, S, pf, composed 15 Oct 1824, F-Pc

I voti dei sudditi (azione pastorale, 1, Schmidt), 4vv, orch, Naples, S Carlo, 6 March 1825, copy I-Nc

La partenza, vv, orch, Palermo, Carolino, for departure of General delle Favare, July 1825

Cantata, vv, orch, Palermo, Carolino, for king's birthday, 14 Aug 1825

Licenza, vv, orch, Palermo, Carolino, for a gala, 1825/6

Saffo, solo v, vv, orch, before 1828, BGi, arr. v, pf (Naples, n.d.)

Il Canto XXXIII della Divina commedia (Dante), solo B, pf, Jan–Feb 1828 (Milan, 1843)

Inno reale (F. Romani), vv, orch, Genoa, for inauguration of Teatro Carlo Felice, 7 April 1828

Il genio dell'armonia (E. Visconti), solo vv, vv, ?orch, Rome, in honour of Pius VIII, 20 Dec 1829, collab. Costaguti and Capranica

Il fausto ritorno (azione allegorico-melodrammatica, D. Gilardoni), vv, orch, Naples, S Carlo, for return of king and queen from Spain, sum. 1830, Nc

Cantata, vv, orch, Milan, for wedding of Ferdinand of Austria, 24 Jan 1831, BGi

Inno, for wedding of King of Naples, Nov 1832

Il fato (J. Ferretti), Rome, for nameday of Count A. Lozano, 13 June 1833

Cantata (E. and C. Carnevali), Rome, for nameday of Anna Carnevali, 26 July 1833, private collection of H. Steger, Vienna

La preghiera di un popolo (hymn), S, A, T, B, 4vv, orch, Naples, S Carlo, for Ferdinand II, 31 Aug 1837, Nc, vs (Milan, 1837)

Cantata (Donizetti), vv, orch, Naples, S Carlo, for royal birth, Aug 1838, Nc

Dalla Francia un saluto t'invia, T, B, B, TTBB, orch, pf, Paris, May 1841, perf. Bergamo, for Mayr's 78th birthday, 14 June 1841, ed. J.S. Allitt and U. Schaffer (London and Davos, 1975)

Luge qui legis, vv, orch, Milan, funeral march for P. Marchesi, 1842, vs (Naples, n.d.)

Cristoforo Colombo, Bar, orch, Paris, Opéra, for benefit of P. Barroilhet, March 1845, scena e cavatina Nc

Aci e Galatea, mentioned by Albinati; Gloria a Dio dei nostri padri, solo B, orch, Nc; Inno, for nameday of P. Pangrati, Nc; Niso e Violetta, v, orch, sketch Mr; Per il nome di Francesco I, mentioned by Albinati; Sacro è il dolore, hymn, 2 vv, orch, Nc; Uno sguardo (F. Romani), perf. Milan; La pietade col nemico or mi sembra qui delitto, solo B, orch, BGi

SACRED

Gl, D, STB, small orch, 1814, I-BGi; Qui tollis, F, T, cl, orch, 7 Sept 1814, pts [partly autograph] BGi; Ky, 4vv, orch, 1816, Nc; In gloria Dei Patris, c, 4vv, 17 Sept 1816, BGi; Tantum ergo, TTB, orch, perf. 8 Nov 1816, Bc; Cum sancto, vv, orch, 16 July 1817, F-Pc; Ky, D, 4vv, orch, 1 Aug 1817, Pc; Ky, D, vv, orch, 7 Aug 1817, I-Bc; Gl, C, 3–4vv, orch, 28 May 1818, MS copy and partly autograph pts BGi; Ky, c, 3vv, org, 8 Aug 1818, F-Pc; Cr, C, 3vv, orch, 17 April 1819, Pc; Mag, D, S, T, B, STB, orch, May 1819, Pc; De torrente, F, ST, orch, June 1819, Pc

Laudamus–Gratias, F, S/T, ob/cl, orch, 3 July 1819, Pc; Qui tollis–Miserere, 3vv, orch, 8 July 1819, MS property of Donizetti heirs; Gl, 3vv, orch, 16 July 1819, I-Nc; Salve regina, F, solo T, orch, 5 Aug 1819, F-Pc; Iste confessor, D, S, T, B, STB, orch, 6 Aug 1819, I-Nc; Sicut erat, C, STB, orch, 9 Sept 1819, F-Pc; Laudate pueri, D, S, A, T, B, SATB, orch, 8 Oct 1819, I-Nc; Beatus vir, F, solo T, ob, cl, small orch, F-Pc; Cum Sancto Spiritu, D, 3–4vv, orch, 1819, Pc; Dixit, C, S, T, B, vv, orch, 1819, I-Nc; Domine ad adjuvandum, C, S, T, B, vv, orch, 1819, F-Pc; Domine a dextris, d, solo B, orch, 1819, I-Nc

Oro supplex, E, solo B, hn, orch, 1819, BGc; Tecum principium, S/T, ob/cl, orch, 1819, Nc; Miserere, 4vv, Jan 1820, copy Nc; Motet, solo T, cl, small orch, 29 March 1820, F-Pc; Miserere, 4 solo vv, vv, orch, 4 April 1820, I-Rvat; Tibi soli peccavi, F, solo S, basset-hn, orch, 6 April 1820, F-Pc; Tunc acceptabis, D, 4vv, orch, 6 April 1820, pts Pc; Asperges me, B♭, SATB, orch, 8 April 1820, Pc; Domine Deus, E♭, solo B, cl, orch, 16 May 1820, I-Nc; Gl, D, S, T, B, vv, orch, 20 May 1820, Nc; Ky–Christe–Ky, F, S, A, T, B, SATB, orch, 20 May 1820, copy and partly autograph pts BGi; Ky, 4vv, orch, 20 May 1820, Nc; Qui tollis, E♭, solo T, hn, vv, orch, 24 May 1820, MS copy and partly autograph pts BGi

Gloria Patri, F, solo S, vn, orch, 28 May 1820, F-Pc; Qui sedes–Quoniam, c, solo T, vn, orch, 3 July 1820, I-Nc; Laudamus te, A, S, A, T, B, SATB, orch, 6 July 1820, Nc; Gratias agimus, G, solo S, fl, orch, 6 July 1820, F-Pc; Dominus a dextris, d, solo T, vn, orch, Aug 1820, Pc; Cr, C, S, T, B, vv, orch 18 Oct 1820, I-BGi; Libera me di sanguinibus, a, solo S, vn, orch, 30 Oct 1820, F-Pc; Ne procias, E, solo B, hn, orch, 29 Nov 1820, I-Nc; Dixit Dominus, C, S, T, B, vv, orch, 1820, MS copy and autograph pts BGi; Tuba mirum, E♭, solo B, orch, 5 Jan 1821, MS copy and partly autograph pts BGi, Ky, 4vv, orch, 26 May 1821, F-Pc

Ky, F, 4vv, orch, 26 May 1821, I-Nc, Miserere, c, 4vv, orch, 18 Jan 1822, F-Pc; Cr, D, SATB, orch, perf. 24 Nov 1824, copy by Mayr I-BGi; Parafrasi del Christus (S. Gatti), S, A, str orch, 1829, rev. 1844, Nc; Requiem, d, S, T, B, SATB, orch, for Bellini, 1835, unfinished, vs (Milan, 1870/R); Miserere, g, 3 male solo vv, vv, orch, org 1837, Rvat, rev. for solo vv, vv, orch, 1842–3, Mr (Milan, 1844/5); Requiem, vv, orch, for Zingarelli, 1837; Requiem, vv, orch, for Abate Fazzini, 7 Nov 1837; Messa di Gloria with Cr, c, 3–4 solo vv, vv, orch, perf. 28 Nov 1837, Nc

Ave Maria, off, F, solo S, SATB, str orch, May 1842, BGi, vs (Milan, n.d., Paris, n.d.), fs (New York, n.d.); Gloria Patri, 4vv, orch, 1843, Nc; Ave Maria (Dante), S, A, str orch, Jan 1844 (Milan, n.d.); Quoniam ad te, off, solo S, small orch, 1844, Nc; Sic transit gloria mundi, 8vv, org, 1844, F-Pc; Domine, Dominus noster, off, solo B, orch, Nov 1844, I-Nc

undated

Ave Maria, F, 2vv, pf, Ms; 3 canzoncine sacre, 2vv, pf, Mc: 1 Questo cor, quest'alma mia, 2 L'amor di Maria Santissima, 3 Preghiera a Maria Vergine; Christe, solo T, 2 vn, cl, db, Rsc; Confitebor, C, STB, bc (org), BGi; Credidi, D, STB, bc (org), BGi; 3 Cr: STB, orch, Nc, E♭, S, A, T, B, 4vv, orch, Nc, C, 4vv, orch, BGi; Credo breve, C, Crucifixus, F, vv, orch, orch pts BGi (vocal pts lost); 3 Cum Sancto Spiritu: C, c, 4vv, orch, both Nc, D, S, A, T, B, SATB, pts BGi; Dies irae, c, vv, orch, inc. sketch BGi; Docebo, D, solo B, small orch, org, pts. (partly autograph) BGi

Domine ad adjuvandum, C, S, T, B, vv, wind, org, F-Pc; 2 Domine Deus: D, solo B, small orch, I-Nc, e, solo B, cl, orch, copy BGi; Et vitam, C, 4vv unacc., Nc; 3 Gl: 4vv, orch, Nc, C, 4vv, orch, Nc, solo vv, vv, orch, D-Dl; Gloria Patri–Sicut erat, C, STB, orch, MS copy and partly autograph pts I-BGi; In convertendo, C, solo B, orch, F-Pc; Inno [to St Peter], C, solo T, small orch, I-Nc; Judica me Deus (S. Biava: Ps xlii), 2 children's vv, org ad lib, copy BGi; 5 Ky: c, STB, 2 ob, 2 hn, org, BGi, c, STB, 2 ob, 2 hn, org, BGi, c, S, T, B, STB, small orch, MS copy and partly autograph pts BGi, d, S, A, T, B, SATB, orch, pts (partly autograph) BGi, d, SATB, orch, pts (partly autograph) BGi

Ky–Christe–Ky, E–G-e, T, SATB, orch, BGi; 2 Laudamus–Gratias: F, solo T, cl, orch, lost, A, 4vv, orch, lost; Laudate pueri, C, 3vv, orch; 2 Miserere: T, T, B, B, TTBB, 2 va, 2 vc, 2 db, org, F-Pc, d, 4vv, orch, pts (some autograph) I-BGi; Nisi Dominus, D, solo T, orch, MS copy and partly autograph pts BGi; Pange lingua, F; Preces meae, E♭, solo T, 4vv, solo insts, orch, BGi; Qui sedes, C, solo S, vn, small orch, F-Pc; Qui sedes–Quoniam, a, solo S, vn, orch, MS copy and partly autograph pts I-BGi; 3 Qui tollis: E♭, STB, orch, MS copy and partly autograph pts BGi, B♭, solo T, small orch, pts (partly autograph) BGi, E, solo T, hn, orch, pts (partly autograph) BGi

Requiem, 3vv, orch, for benediction of tomb of Alfonso della Valle di Casanova, vs (Naples, n.d.); Salve regina, F, STB, wind insts, vc, db, F-Pc; Sicut erat, C, 4vv, orch, Pc; 3 Tantum ergo: F, solo T, orch, I-Nc, D, solo S, org, Mc, E♭, solo T, wind insts, db, pts BGi; Tecum principium, F, S, T, cl, orch, partly autograph pts BGi; TeD (S. Biava), B♭, 2 children's vv, org ad lib, b, copy BGi

VOCAL CHAMBER

3 canzonette (Rome, ?1823) [A]

Collezione di canzonette, 5 songs, 3 duets, 1 qnt (Naples, n.d.) [B]

Donizetti per camera: raccolta di [9] ariette e [3] duettini (Naples, n.d.) [C]

Nuits d'été à Pausilippe, 6 songs, 6 nocturnes (Naples, 1836; London, 1836; Milan, 1837; Paris, ?1840) [D]

Soirées d'automne à l'Infrascata, 4 songs, 1 duet (Naples, 1837; Milan 1839 [with added duet]; Vienna, 1840s, as Soirées de Paris) [E]

Un hiver à Paris 1838–1839, 5 nos. (Naples, 1839), as Rêveries napolitaines, with added song (Paris, ?1839; Milan, 1839; Naples, *c*1841; Naples, 1841/2 [with 2nd added song]) [F]

Matinée musicale, 6 songs, 2 duets, 2 qts (Naples, 1841; London, 1841; Paris, 1841; Milan, n.d.) [G]

Inspirations viennoises, 5 songs, 2 duets (Naples, 1842; London, 1842; Milan, 1842; Paris, n.d.) [H]

Raccolta di [6] canzonette e [2] duettini (Milan, n.d.) [I]

Dernières glânes musicales, 8 songs, 2 duets (Naples, n.d.) [J]

Fiori di sepolcro: [9] melodie postume (Naples, n.d.) [K]

Donizetti: Composizioni da camera, ed. R. Mingardo (Milan, 1961) [L]

6 arie inedite, ed. C. Pestalozza (Milan, 1974) [M]

for solo voice and piano

Addio, romanza (Milan, 1844), J; Addio brunetta, son già lontano, allegretto scherzoso, in Il sibillo (Naples, 5 Oct 1843), repr. in Journal of the Donizetti Society, ii (1975), 155; Adieu, tu brise et pour jamais, romance, F-Pc; Ah, non lasciarmi, no, bell'idol mio (Metastasio), romanza, Pc; Ah, rammenta, o bella Irene (P. Metastasio), cavatina (Milan, 1830 or 1831), L; Ah, si tu voulais, toi que j'aime, canzone, I-BGi; Aimer ma rose est la sorte de ma vie, romance, I; A mezzanotte, arietta, D, L; Amiamo, canzonetta (Milan, 1871); Amis courons chercher la gloire, canzone, F-Pc; Ammore!, canzonetta napoletana, Amor che a nulla amato, albumleaf 1843, I-BGi

Amor corrisposto (Bei labbri che amore formò) (Metastasio), A; Amor marinaro (Me vojo fà na casa), canzonetta napoletana, E, L; Amore e morte (G.L. Redaelli), arietta, E, L; Amor tiranno (Perchè due cori insieme) (Metastasio), romanza, K; Amour jaloux, romance, F-Pc; Anch'io provai le tenere smanie, arietta, unpubd; Antonio Foscarini (G.B. Niccolini) (Naples, n.d.), A piè del mesto salice, canzonetta, private collection of Marchesi Medici, Rome; Au pied d'une croix, romance, Pc; Au tic-tac des castagnettes, canzonetta or aria, I; Che cangi tempra mai più non spero (Metastasio), andante, M

Che non mi disse un dì (Metastasio), canzonetta, in Il sibillo (Naples, 2 May 1844), repr. in Journal of the Donizetti Society, ii (1975), 159; Combien la nuit est longue, romance, F-Pc; Come volgeste rapidi, giorni de' miei primi anni, romanza, Pc; Dell'anno novello, canzonetta, I-Nlp; Del colle in sul pendio, canzonetta, B; Doux souvenirs, vivez toujours (E. Barateau), mélodie, pubd; D'un genio che m'accende (Metastasio), B; Ella riposi alcuni istanti almeno, cavatina, Ms; Elle n'existe plus, mélodie, in 2 mélodies posthumes (Milan, n.d.); È morta! (C. Guaita), scena, H, L; E più dell'onda instabile, arietta, Nc; Faut-il renfermer dans mon âme, mélodie, F-Pc

Fra le belle Irene è quella (Metastasio), canzonetta; Garde tes moutons, romance, pubd; Già presso il termine de' suoi martiri (Metastasio), I-BGi; Giovanna Gray, romanza, K; Giuro d'amore (Eterno amore e fè ti giuro), arietta, B, L; Gran Dio, mi manca il cor, F-Pc; Heureuse ici près de toi (after Sappho), I-BGi(without acc.); I capelli (Questi capelli bruni), romanza, C; Il barcajuolo (L. Tarantini), D, L; Il cavallo arabo, bolero or romanza, G; Il crociato (C. Guaita), arietta or romanza, D; Il giglio e la rosa (Non sdegnar vezzosa Irene), canzonetta, I, J; Il m'aime encore, doux rêve de mon âme, mélodie, F-Pc

Il mio ben m'abbandonò, melodia, I-BGi; Il mio grido getto ai venti, romanza moresca, 1844, M; Il nome (Voi vorreste il nome amato), arietta, C; Il pegno, canzonetta, private collection of Marchesa Medici, Rome; Il pescatore (Batte il bronzo) (A. Ricciardi), K; Il pescatore (Era l'ora) (A. de Lauzières, after Schiller), F, L; Il rimprovero (Quando da te lontano), romanza, C; Il ritorno del trovatore da Gerusalemme, F-Pc; Il ritratto (F. Romani), impromptu, private collection Casa Branca, Milan; Il sorriso è il primo vezzo, canzonetta, B, C

Il sospiro (C. Guaita), melodia, H, L; Il sospiro del gondoliere, barcarola, I-Nc; Il trovatore, BGi; Il trovatore in caricatura (Le troubadour à la belle étoile) (L. Borsini), scene bouffe or ballata, F; Io amo la mestizia, romanza, ?1841/2, private collection of Marchesa Medici, Rome; Io son pazza capricciosa, arietta; J'attends toujours (E. de Lonlay), romance, pubd; Je vais quitter tout ce que j'aime, romance, F-Pc; La bohémienne, ballade, Pc; La chanson de l'abeille (H. Lucas), It. (Milan, 1844), J; La conocchia, arietta or canzone napoletana, D, L

La corrispondenza amorosa (Cifre d'amore; Billets chéris), romanza, G, L; La dernière nuit d'un novice (A. Nourrit), ballata, added to F, L; La farfalla ed il poeta, canzoncina, Pc; La fiancée du timballier (V. Hugo), 1843, Pc; La fidanzata, romanza, K; La folle de Sainte-Hélène (A. Nourrit), ballata, added to 1841/2 Naples repr. of F; La gondola, canzone; La gondoliera (Vieni la barca è pronta), barcarola, G; La hart (P. Lacroix), chant diabolique; La longue douleur, preghiera; La lontananza (F. Romani), arietta, E, L; L'amante spagnuolo (L. Tarantini), arietta or bolero, E; Lamento in morte di V. Bellini (Venne sull'ale ai zeffiri) (A. Maffei) (Milan, 1836)

Lamento di Cecco Varlungo, albumleaf, Donebauer Collection, Prague; La mère et l'enfant (A. Richomme), mélodie (Milan, 1830), J, L, acc. arr. orch, copy I-BGi; La mia fanciulla, K; L'amor mio (L'arcano del core) (F. Romani), K, L; La musulmane (M. Bourges), pubd; La negra (La nouvelle Ourika), romance, G; La ninna-nonna (La mère au berceau de son fils) (A. de Lauzières), ballata, F, L; La partenza del crociato (Puoti), arietta or romanza, C; La passeggiata al lido (Che bel mar) (Naples, n.d.); La prière (?P. Lacroix); La savoiarda (A. Broffeni), romanza, K; La speranza; La sultana (L. Tarantini), ballata, F, L; La torre di Biasone (Tarantini), ballata, D

La tradita (oh ingrato, m'inganni), romanza or arietta, C; L'attente, mélodie; La vendetta (Bedda Eurilla), canzonetta siciliana, C; La voix d'espoir (M. Cimbal), romance; La zingara (C. Guaita), arietta, H, L; Le crépuscule (V. Hugo), D, L; Le départ pour la chasse (P. Lacroix), Bar/B, hn, Nc; Le dernier chant du troubadour, romance, in 2 mélodies posthumes (Milan, n.d.); Le gondolier de l'Adriatique (Crevel de Charlemagne), nocturne; Le miroir magique (E. Plouvier), chansonette; Léonore (M. Escudier), romance (Milan, 1843), J; Le pauvre exilé (A. de Leuven), romance

Le petit joueur de la harpe (P. Lacroix), Nc; Le petit montagnard, K; Le pirate (S. Saint Etienne), mélodie, in Lyre française (Mainz, n.d.); Le renégat (E. Pacini), scène, It. (Milan, 1835); Les revenants (Lacroix), aria, F-Pc; Les yeux noirs, et les yeux bleus (E. Monnier), romance; L'étrangère, romance, private collection Marchesa Medici, Rome; Le violon de Crémone (E.T.A. Hoffmann), romance, Pc; L'ora del ritorno (Guaita), arietta, H; Lu trademiento (Aje, tradetore, tu m'haje lassata), canzone napoletana, I, L; Malvina (G. Vitali), scène dramatique (Milan, 1845), M; Malvina la bella, romanza, in Il sibillo (Naples, 28 Dec 1843), repr. in Journal of the Donizetti Society, ii (1975), 156; Marie enfin quitte l'ouvrage, romance, Pc

M'è Dio il tuo signore (Oh quanto in me tu puoi), G; Mentre del caro lido, canzonetta, private collection of Marchesa Medici, Rome; Minvela (Quando verrà sul colle), canzonetta or romanza, C; Mon enfant, mon seul espoir, romance, Pc; Morir per te!, arietta (Naples, n.d.), Nice, st'occhiuzzi càlali, canzonetta, private collection of Marchesa Medici, Rome; Noé (J. de Boutellier), scène du déluge, 1839, pubd; Non amerò che te (after G. Vitali), romanza (Milan, 1842/3); Non amo che te, romanza; Non giova il sospirar (Metastasio), canzonetta veneziana, A

Non m'ami più (L'ingratitude) (Guaita), H; Non v'è più barbaro di chi non sente (Metastasio), canzonetta, private collection of Marchesa Medici, Rome; Non v'è nume, non v'è fato, romanza (Milan, n.d.); N'ornerà la bruna chioma (Romani), scena e cavatina, L; O anime affanate, venite a noi parlar (Dante: Commedia), Pc; Occhio nero incendiator, canzonetta, I; O fille que l'ennui chagrine, romance, Pc; Oh, Cloe, delizia di questo core, canzonetta, private collection of Marchesa Medici, Rome; Oh, je rêve d'une étrangère plus douce que l'enfant qui dors, Pc

On vous a peint l'amour (Lacroix), romance, Pc; Or che in cielo, barcarola, Strenna musicale, i (1837); Or che la notte invita, canzonetta, Pc; Oui, je sais votre indifférence, Pc; Oui, ton dieu c'est le mien (M. Michonne), romance, Pc; Ov'è la voce magica, melodia, 1844, M; Pace! canzonetta (Naples, n.d.); Pas d'autre amour que toi (E. Barateau), mélodie; Perchè due cori, romanza, I-Nc; Perchè mai, Nigella amata, insensibile tu sei?, romanza, F-Pc; Perchè se mia tu sei (Metastasio), romanza, Pc; Philis plus avare que tendre, romance, Pc

Più che non m'ama un angelo (L'amor funesto), romanza, also arr. with vc/hn, 1842, L; Plus ne m'est rien, romance, Pc; Pourquoi me dire qu'il vous aime, romance, Pc; Preghiera (Una lagrima), G, L; Quand un soupçon mortel, romance, Pc; Quand je vis que j'étais trahie, scène religieuse, with pf, org, Pc; Quando il mio ben io rivedrò, canzonetta, private collection of Marchesa Medici, Rome; Quando morte coll'orrido artiglio, prayer, Pc; Quanto mio ben t'adoro, canzonetta, private collection of Marchesa Medici, Rome; Quel nome se ascolto (Metastasio), romanza

Questo mio figlio è un fiorellin d'amore, berceuse, in Album du gaulois, oeuvres inédites, i (Paris, 1869); Qui sospirò, là rise, aria, copy, with autograph annotations, I-Nc; Rendimi il core, o barbaro, canzonetta, A; Rose che un dì spiegaste, romanza, F-Pc; Se a te d'intorno scherza, romanza, in Il sibillo (Naples, 4 April 1844), repr. in Journal of the Donizetti Society, ii (1975), 158; Se lontan, ben mio, tu sei (Metastasio), canzonetta; Se talor più nol rammento, cavatina; Seul sur la terre, albumleaf or romance, private collection of C. Lozzi, Bologna; Sì o no, canzonetta giocosa, J; Si tanto sospiri, ti lagni d'amore, Pc; Si tu m'as fait à ton image, romance, Pc

Sorgesti alfin, aurora desiata, aria, I-Nc; Sospiri, aneliti che m'opprimete, canzonetta, private collection of Marchesa Medici, Rome; Sovra il campo della vita, larghetto, M; Sovra il remo sta curvato (L. Mira), barcarola, in Il sibillo (Naples, 22 Feb 1844), repr. in Journal of the Donizetti Society, ii (1975), 157; Spunta il dì, l'ombra sparì, romanza, F-Pc; Su l'onda tremula ride la luna, B; Su questi allor, canzonetta, private collection of Marchesa Medici, Rome; Taci invan, mia cara Jole, romanza, 1835; T'aspetto ancor (Nel tuo cammin fugace), romanza (Milan, 1843), J; Te dire adieu (G. Vaëz), romanza

Te voglio bene assaje, canzone napoletana, often attrib. Donizetti; Tengo no n'namurato, canzonetta napoletana, I; Troppo vezzosa è la ninfa bella, canzone, I-BGi; Trova un sol mia bella Clori (Metastasio), collection of Count G.B. Camozzi-Vertova, Bergamo; Trova un sol mia bella Clori (Metastasio), Toscanini collection, New York [different setting]; Tu me chiedi se t'adoro, arietta, 1840, F-Pc; Una prece sulla mia tomba (Non priego mai) (Redaelli), canto elegiaco or romanza, C

Una tortora innocente, romanza, I-BGi; Una vergine donzella per amore, romanza, F-Pc; Un bacio di speranza, romanza (Milan, 1845); Un coeur pour abri (A. Richomme), scène; Un detto di speranza, romanza, J; Uno sguardo (F. Romani), romanza, Casa Branca, Milan; V'era un dì che il cor beato, romanza, I-Ms; Vien ti conforta, o misera, F-Pc; Vision, (E. Plouvier), mélodie; Viva il matrimonio (L. Tarantini), cavatina buffa, bass (Milan, 1843)

duets

Ah, non lasciarmi, no (Metastasio), I-Nc; Amor, voce del cielo (Tarantini), notturno, D; Armida e Rinaldo (Tasso), F-Pc; Canzonetta con l'eco (Per valli, per boschi), 27 Aug 1817, I-BGi; C'est le printemps (E. Plouvier), chansonette-valse; Che cangi tempra mai più non spero (Metastasio), unacc., BGi; Che ciel sereno, I; Che vuoi di più (Guaita), H; Duettino, S, S, Nc; Duet, S, S, F-Pc; Duet, 1822, collection of C. Lozzi, Bologna; Godi diletta ingrata nell'ingannarmi tu, canzonetta, Pc; Ha negli occhi un tale incanto (Metastasio), B

Héloïse et Abélard (Crevel de Charlemagne), duo historique; Ho perduto il mio tesoro (Metastasio), B; I bevitori (Tarantini), notturno or brindisi, D; I due carcerati, I-Mc; I fervidi desiri (Da me che vuoi, che brami), C; Il fiore (Qui dove mercè negasti), duettino pastorale, E; Il giuramento (Palazzolo), notturno, D; Io d'amore, o Dio, mi, moro (?Metastasio), B, C; I sospiri (Ti sento, sospiri) (Metastasio), C; L'addio (Dunque addio) (F. Romani), F; L'addio (Io resto), G; La gelosia (Querelle d'amour), scherzo, G, L; L'alito di Bice (F. Puoti), notturno, D

La passeggiata al lido (Che bel mar), J; L'aurora (Tarantini), notturno, D; La voce del core (T'intendo, sì, mio cor) (Metastasio),

C; Les napolitains (Crevel de Charlemagne), nocturne; L'incostanza di Irene (Metastasio), 1826, added to E; L'ultimo rimprovero (O crudel che il mio pianto), I, J; Lumi rei del mio martire, canzonetta, private collection of Marchesa Medici, Rome; Non mi sprezzar Licori (Metastasio), I-BGi; Predestinazione (Guaita), H; Quegli sguardi e quegli accenti, BGi; Se mai turbo il tuo riposo (Metastasio), Nc

Sempre più t'amo, mio bel tesoro, F-Pc; Sempre sarò costante (Metastasio) (Rome, n.d.); Se tu non vedi tutto il mio cor (Metastasio), copies Pc, I-Nc; Si soffre una tiranna (Metastasio), BGi; Sull'onda cheta e bruna, barcarola (Milan, 1838); Uno sguardo ed una voce (Une nuit sur l'eau) (Palazzolo), notturno, D; Vedi là sulla collina, Mc; Vuoi casarti, duetto buffo, 2B for 3–5 voices

Ah che il destino (Metastasio), (S, S, T)/(S, S), BGi; Cedè la mia costanza, Irene, al tuo rigor (Metastasio), S, A, T, B, 1820, F-Pc; Clori infedel, S, A, B, I-Rsc; Di gioja di pace la dolce speranza, Moldenhauer Archive, Seattle; Finchè fedele tu mi sei stata, canzonetta, 4vv, 5 May 1817, F-Pc; Io morrò, sonata è l'ora, 3vv, Pc; La campana, T, T, B, B, G; Lumi rei del mio martire, madrigale, 4vv, 12 June 1817, I-BGi; Qui sta il male, trio, Nc; Rataplan (La partenza del reggimento), T, T, B, B, G, K; Se schiudi il labbro, divertimento, S, S, T, T, B, unacc., B; Strofe di Byron, S, A, B, B, Mc; Sien l'onde placide, Per noi la vita, Ma poi passati stragi e orror

ORCHESTRAL

Sinfonias: C, 12 June 1816, I-Bc; Sinfonia concertante, D, 17 Sept 1816, ed. G. Piccioli (Milan, 1937); C, 24 Nov 1816, BGi; D, 29 March 1817, F-Pc; g, wind insts, 19 April 1817, ed. D. Townsend (New York, 1967), ed. B. Päuler (Zürich, 1970); D, 10 Sept 1817, Pc; 'La partenza', 25 Oct 1817, Pc; D, 17 Dec 1817, Pc; d, on death of A. Capuzzi, 1818, Pc; 'L'incendio', perf. Bergamo, 19 March 1819, Pc; D, ?1832/3, inc., I-BGi [incl. themes used in Il furioso and L'elisir d'amore]; on themes by Bellini, 1836, F-Pc, arr. pf (Milan, 1836); D, 25 non-autograph pts I-BGi; Adagio and Minuet from a sym., F-Pc

Sinfonia to the cant. In morte M. Malibran, perf. Milan, 17 March 1837, other movts by Pacini, Mercadante, Coppola, Vaccai, I-Mr, vs (Milan, 1837/8)

Concs.: Concertino, G, eng hn, orch, perf. Bergamo, 19 June 1817, ed. R. Meylan (Frankfurt, 1966); Cl Conc., E♭, private collection A. Marinelli, Bergamo; Conc., vn, vc, orch, F-Pc; Conc., for unspecified inst, Pc; untitled work, B♭, cl, small orch, I-BGi

Other works: Introduzione, str orch, 1829, ed. U. Schaffer (London and Davos, 1975); Gran marcia militare imperiale, for the Sultan of Turkey, arr. pf (Paris, n.d.), arr. sym. band by D. Townsend (n.p., 1967); March, Aug 1840, F-Pc; Preludio, for an opera, Pc; Rataplan, I-Mr

CHAMBER

Str qts: no.1, E♭, 26 Dec 1817; no.2, A; no.3, c; no.4, D, 27 July 1818; no.5, e; no.6, g; f, 6 May 1819; B♭, 26 May 1819; d, 22 Jan 1821; g, 26 Jan 1821 (without 4th movt); C, 12 March 1821; C, 15 March 1821; A, 19 April 1821; D, 1825; e, 1836; D, F, b, all dated 1819–21 by Zavadini; all in Gaetano Donizetti: 18 quartetti, ed. Istituto italiano per la storia della musica (Rome and Buenos Aires, ?1948) [defective edn]; C, F-Pc (without last movt), inc. 1st movt, a, Pc, both dated 1819–21 by Zavadini

Other works: Sextet, 2 vn, va/vc, fl, 2 hn, lost; Qnt, C, 2 vn, 2 va, vc, 1st movt I-BGi; Qnt (Introduzione and Largo affettuoso), 2 vn, va, vc, db, MS property of Donizetti heirs; Qnt, C, 2 vn, va, vc, gui, Nc; Pf Trio, E♭, 12 Nov 1817, copy BGi; Sonata, fl, pf, c, 15 May 1819, ed. R. Meylan (Frankfurt, 1969); Sonata, vn, pf, f, 26–7 Oct 1819, BGi; Sonata, vc, pf, D, copy BGi; Sonata, ob, pf, ed. R Meylan (Frankfurt, 1966), Variations, D♭, vn, pf, BGi; Scherzo, D, vn, pf, 1826, on 27 themes from Donizetti ops, BGi; Larghetto and Allegro, g, vn, hp, ed. R. Meylan as Sonata (Frankfurt, 1970); Largo, vn, vc, pf, d, copy BGi; Larghetto, fl, bn, pf, ed. B. Päuler as Trio (Zürich, 1971); Larghetto and Polonaise, vii, acc. inc., F-Pc; Largo, g, vc, pf, ed. U. Schaffer (London and Davos, 1975); untitled work, B♭, wind insts, org, I-BGi; Studio no.1, B♭ cl, 1821, ed. R. Meylan (Frankfurt, 1970); Duetto, B♭, 2 cl, ed. B. Päuler (Zürich, 1971)

PIANO

Pastorale, E, 1813, I-BGi, Sinfonia no.3, A, 22 Oct 1813, BGi; Sinfonia, C, 19 Nov 1816, Bc; Un capriccio in sinfonia, e, 15 Aug 1817, BGi; 2 motivi del celebre Mo Paer messi in suonata, 7 Oct 1817, BGi; Variazioni sopra la canzonetta del bardo nell'Alfredo di Mayr (Milan, 1820); Rondò, D, Feb 1825, BGi; Larghetto, C, 30 Dec 1834, Mc; La vénitienne, waltz (Milan, 1843)

Undated: Adagio e Allegro, G, Allegro, f, ed. R. Meylan (Frankfurt, 1971); Allegro vivace, C; Allegro vivace, G; Fugue, g; Invito, waltz; Larghetto, theme and variations, E♭; Piece on theme of 'Una furtiva lagrima', g; Presto, F; La ricordanza, adagio sentimentale, E♭; Sinfonia, D; Waltz; Variations, G; Variations, E: all BGi; Sinfonia, D, Nc; Waltz, F-Pc; Giuseppina, polka-mazurka (Naples, n.d.)

4 hands: Il Capitan Battaglia, sonata, E♭, 1819; Polacca, D, 1819; Sonata, C, 31 March 1819; Sonata, D, 12 Oct 1819; Sinfonia no.2, d, 28 March 1820; Sonata, a, 25 April 1820; Una delle più matte, C, 17 May 1820; untitled piece, C, 25 Feb 1821; Waltz, 1844: all I-BGi

4 hands, dated 1813–21 by Zavadini: 2 Allegro, D, E; Allegro moderato, A; Allegro vivace, C; Il genio di GDM, G; L'inaspettata, E♭; La lontananza, e; Larghetto, G; Marcia lugubre, f; La solita sonata, F; Sonata no.3 a 4 sanfe, F; Sonata, B♭; Sonata, D; Sonata no.3, F; all BGi

OTHER WORKS

Student vocal essays, etc: Ah! quel Guglielmo, sextet, S, S, T, T, B, B, orch, 1812, I-Nc; Ognun dice che le donne, aria, solo B, orch, 20 March 1815, F-Pc; Guarda che bianca luna (J. Vittorelli), anacreontica, v, orch, 30 March 1815, Pc; Perchè quell'alma ingrata, duet, S, T, orch, 27 Sept 1816, I-Nc; Amor mio nume, aria, 1816; Ti sovvenga amato bene, aria, S, orch, 10 May 1817, Nc; Isabella ormai mi rendi, trio, T, T, B, orch, 1818, Nc; Se bramate che vi sposi, duet, MS property of Donizetti heirs; Taci, tu cerchi invano, duet, S, S, orch, Nc; Sposo lo so, recit, Da quel piano difendemi, duet, S, B, small orch, Nc; Che avvenne che fu, recit, Solo per te sospiro, romanza, T, small orch, BGi

Student exercises: Fugues and counterpoint exercises, some 1815–17, BGi, Nc

Didactic: Solfeggi, Mez, pf, Nc; Vocalizzi o gorgheggi, F-Pc

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A Catalogues. B Specialist publications. C Letters. D Life and works. E Biographical studies and memoirs. F Reception. G Critical and special studies: (i) General (ii) Anna Bolena (iii) Don Pasquale (iv) L'elisir d'amore (v) La favorite (vi) Lucia di Lammermoor (vii) Maria Stuarda (viii) Other works.

A: CATALOGUES

Ricordi di Gaetano Donizetti esposti nella mostra centenaria tenutasi in Bergamo nell'agosto-settembre 1897, raccolti da Giuseppe e Gaetano Donizetti, collezione di proprietà dei fratelli Giuseppe e Gaetano Donizetti (Bergamo, 1897, enlarged 2/1897)

C. Malherbe: Centenaire de Gaetano Donizetti: catalogue bibliographique de la section française à l'exposition de Bergamo (Paris, 1897)

G. Zavadini: Museo donizettiano di Bergamo: catalogo generale (Bergamo, 1936)

V. Sacchiero, ed.: Il Museo donizettiano di Bergamo (Bergamo, 1970)

L. Inzaghi: 'Catalogo generale della opera', Gaetano Donizetti, ed. G. Tintori (Milan, 1983), 133–278

A. Campana, E. Senici and M.A. Smart, eds.: Donizetti a Casa Ricordi: gli autografi teatrale (Bergamo, 1998)

J.P. Cassaro: Donizetti: a Guide to Research (New York, forthcoming)

B: SPECIALIST PUBLICATIONS

Studi donizettiani, no.1 (1962); no.2 (1972); no.3 (1978); no.4 (1988) [SD]

Donizetti Society Journal (1974–) [DSJ]

Studi donizettiani I: Bergamo 1975 [incl. articles on Don Pasquale, Torquato tasso, and on dramaturgy, cultural context, librettos, form, performance, instrumentation]

L'opera teatrale di Gaetano Donizetti: Bergamo 1992, ed. F. Bellotto (Bergamo, 1993) [incl. articles on La favorite, Il campanello, Les martyrs, Il diluvio universale, I pazzi per progetto, Maria Stuarda, Marino Faliero, Gianni da Calais, and on textual problems, dramaturgy, vocal writing, staging]

Gaetano Donizetti ed il teatro musicale europeo: Venice 1997, ed. L. Zoppelli (forthcoming) [incl. articles on Adelia, Maria di Rohan, Caterino Cornaro, Don Pasquale, Imelda, Linda di Chamounix, Anna Bolena, Lucia di Lammermoor, Dom Sébastien, and on notation, editions, librettos, criticism, form and style, French sources]

Gaetano Donizetti: la vocalità e i cantanti: Bergamo 1997, ed. F. Bellotto (forthcoming) [incl. articles on Caterino Cornaro, Adelia, Linda di Chamounix, and on Persiani, Strepponi, Marini, Viardot]
Stagione lirica autunnale 1997, ed. F. Bellotto (Bergamo, 1997) [vol. to commemorate Donizetti's birth; incl. articles on Adelia, Don Pasquale, Lucia di Lammermoor]
Stagione lirica autunnale 1998, ed. F. Bellotto (Bergamo, 1998) [vol. to commemorate Donizetti's death; incl. articles on L'elisir d'amore, Il Pigmalione, Lucia di Lammermoor, Rita, Il furioso all'isola di San Domingo, Dom Sébastien]
Voglio amore, e amor violento: Bergamo 1998, ed. F. Bellotto (forthcoming) [incl. articles on Zoraide, Marino Faliero, Pia de' Tolomei, Belisario, Linda di Chamounix, L'elisir d'amore, Lucrezia Borgia, and on contemporary style and reception, the creative process, staging]

C: LETTERS

F. Schlitzer: 'Curiosità epistolari inedite nella vita teatrale di Gaetano Donizetti', RMI, i (1948), 273–83
G. Zavadini: Donizetti: vita, musiche, epistolario (Bergamo, 1948)
G. Barblan and F. Walker: 'Contributo all'epistolario di Gaetano Donizetti', SD, no.1 (1962), 1–150
F. Speranza: 'Lettere inedite di Donizetti', 'Lettere inedite dirette a Donizetti', SD, no.2 (1972), 97–110, 111–29 [index, 131–2]
'An Unpublished Donizetti Letter', DSJ, ii (1975), 271–4 [letter to G. Peluti]
J. Commons: 'Una corrispondenza tra Alessandro Lanari e Donizetti (45 lettere inedite)', SD, no.3 (1978), 9–74
F. Lippmann: 'Autographe Briefe Rossinis und Donizettis in der Bibliothek Massimo, Rom', AnMc, no.19 (1980), 330–35
SD, no.4 (1988), 7–126
L.G. Waidelich: '"In dem Vaterlande der Haydn, der Mozarte, und so vieler andern berühmten Componisten": ein unbekannter Brief Gaetano Donizettis betreffend den Vertrieb seiner Opera buffa Olivo e Pasquale in Deutschland', Semantisch Insen: musikalischer Festland (Hamburg, 1997), 57–62

D: LIFE AND WORKS

LaMusicaE (G. Barblan)
F. Regli: Gaetano Donizetti e le sue opere (Turin, 1850)
G. Donati-Petteni: Donizetti (Milan, 1930, 3/1947)
G. Gavazzeni: Gaetano Donizetti: vita e musiche (Milan, 1937)
G. Monaldi: Gaetano Donizetti (Turin, 1938)
G. Zavadini: Donizetti: vita, musiche, epistolario (Bergamo, 1948)
L. Bossi: Donizetti (Brescia, 1956)
A. Geddo: Donizetti: l'uomo, le musiche (Bergamo, 1956)
H. Weinstock: Donizetti and the World of Opera in Italy, Paris and Vienna in the First Half of the Nineteenth Century (New York, 1963/R)
W. Ashbrook: Donizetti and his Operas (Cambridge, 1982) [incl. full bibliography]
P. Mioli: Donizetti: 70 melodrammi (Turin, 1988)

E: BIOGRAPHICAL STUDIES AND MEMOIRS

L. Stierlin: Biographie von Gaetano Donizetti (Zürich, 1852)
T. Ghezzi: 'Ricordi su Donizetti', Omnibus [Naples] (7 March 1860)
L. Escudier: Mes souvenirs (Paris, 1863)
F. Cicconetti: Vita di Gaetano Donizetti (Rome, 1864)
A. Bellotti: Donizetti e i suoi contemporanei (Bergamo, 1866)
Cenni biografici di Gaetano Donizetti raccolti da un vecchio dilettante di buona memoria (Milan, 1874)
F. Alborghetti and M. Galli: Gaetano Donizetti e G. Simone Mayr: notizie e documenti (Bergamo, 1875)
P. Cominazzi: 'Sorsa attraverso le opere musicali di Gaetano Donizetti: reminiscenze', La fama (1875), no.35, pp.137–8; no.36, pp.141–2; no.37, pp.145–7; no.38, pp.149–51; no.39, pp.153–4; no.40, pp.157–9
G. Duprez: Souvenirs d'un chanteur (Paris, 1880)
E. Branca: Felice Romani ed i più riputati maestri di musica del suo tempo (Turin, 1882)
G. Cottrau: Lettres d'un mélomane (Naples, 1885)
A. Gabrielli: 'Le case di Donizetti a Napoli', Fanfulla della domenica, liii (1893)
E. Verzino: Contributo ad una biografia di Gaetano Donizetti (Bergamo, 1896)
C. Ricci: 'Donizetti a Bologna: appunti e documenti', Gaetano Donizetti: numero unico nel primo cettenario della sua nascita 1797–1897, ed. P. Bettòli (Bergamo, 1897), 10–13
A. Cametti: Un poeta melodrammatico romano: appunti e notizie in gran parte inedite sopra Jacopo Ferretti e i musicisti del suo tempo, GMM, lii–liii (1897–8); repr. Milan, 1898
G. Antonini: 'Un episodio emotivo di Gaetano Donizetti', RMI, vii (1900), 518–35
A. Gabrielli: Gaetano Donizetti (Rome, 1904)
A. Cametti: Donizetti a Roma (Turin, 1907)
A. Pougin: 'Donizetti', Musiciens du XIXe siècle (Paris, 1911)
U. Riva: 'Un bergomasco, (Giuseppe Donizetti, pascià), riformatore della musica in Turchia', Rivista di Bergamo, i (1922), 349–53
C. Caversazzi: Gaetano Donizetti: la casa dove nacque, la famiglia, l'inizio della malattia (Bergamo, 1924)
A. Codignola, ed.: I fratelli Ruffini: lettere di Giovanni e Agostino Ruffini alla madre dalla'esilio francese e svizzero (Genoa, 1925–31)
C. Caversazzi: Gaetano Donizetti: discorso a cura della Congregazione di carità (Bergamo, 1926)
F. Abbiati: 'La musica in Turchia con Giuseppe Donizetti, pascià', Bergomum, new ser., iii Nov (1928)
G. Donati-Petteni: Studi e documenti donizettiani (Bergamo, 1929)
G. Rota-Basoni Scotti: 'Le memorie donizettiane della Baronessa Basoni Scotti',Rivista di Bergamo, viii (1929), 446–57
M. Bonesi: 'Note biografiche su Donizetti', Bergomum: bollettino della Biblioteca Civica, ed. G. Zavadini, xl/3 (1946), 81–9
Donizetti l'uomo: Bergamo 1946–8
O. Tiby: 'Gaetano Donizetti a Palermo', Accademia nazionale di Santa Cecilia: annuario 1949–51; pubd separately (Rome, 1951)
F. Schlitzer: L'ultima pagina della vita di Gaetano Donizetti da un carteggio inedito dell'Accademia Chigiana, Quaderni dell'Accademia Chigiana, xxviii (Siena, 1953)
A. Damerini: 'Vita tragica di Donizetti', Melodramma, i–ii (1954)
F. Schlitzer: Donizetti, G.: episodi e testimonianze, F. Fiorentino (Naples, 1954)
F. Schlitzer: 'Donizettiana', Mondo teatrale dell'ottocento (Naples, 1954), 49–122
F. Schlitzer: L'eredità di Donizetti: da carteggi e documenti dell'archivio dell'Accademia Chigiana, Quaderni dell'Accademia Chigiana, xxx (Siena, 1954)
O. Tiby: Il Real Teatro Carolino e l'ottocento musicale palermitano (Florence, 1957)
G. Zavadini: Donizetti l'uomo (Bergamo, 1958)
A. Geddo: 'Para una iconografia de Donizetti', Boletín de programas, xx (1961), 86
F. Walker: The Man Verdi (London, 1962/R)
H. Weinstock: 'Chi era Marianna Donizetti?', SD, no.2 (1972), 41–6
G. Barblan: 'Donizetti in Naples', DSJ, i (1974), 105–19
L. Mikoletzky: 'Gaetano Donizetti und der Kaiserhof zu Wien: neue Dokumente', AnMc, no.14 (1974), 411–13
J. Allitt: Donizetti and the Tradition of Romantic Love: a Collection of Essays on a Theme (London, 1975)
G. Barblan: 'Gaetano Donizetti mancato direttore dei conservatori di Napoli e di Milano', Il melodramma italiano dell'Ottocento: studi e ricerche per Massimo Mila, ed. G. Pestelli (Turin, 1977), 403–11
G. Pillon: 'I diarii della follia di Gaetano Donizetti', Il borghese (31 July 1977)
R. Steiner-Isenmann: Gaetano Donizetti: sein Leben und seine Opern (Berne, 1982)
Musikrevy, xlvii (1992), 87–111 [18 short articles]

F: RECEPTION

A. Calzado: Donizetti e l'opera italiana in Spagna (Paris, 1897)
A. Centelli: 'La musica di Donizetti a Venezia', Gaetano Donizetti: numero unico nel primo centenario della sua nascita 1797–1897, ed. P. Bettòli (Bergamo, 1897), 13–15
C. Malherbe: 'Le centenaire de Donizetti et l'exposition de Bergame', RMI, iv (1897), 707–29
A. Pougin: 'Les opéras de Donizetti en France', Gaetano Donizetti: numero unico nel primo centenario della sua nascita 1797–1897, ed. P. Bettòli (Bergamo, 1897), 20–21
G. Pinetti: Le opere di Donizetti nei teatri di Bergamo (Bergamo, 1942)
A. Della Corte: 'Un secolo di critica per l'opera di Donizetti', Melodramma, i–ii (1954)
J. Black: 'Donizetti and his Contemporaries in Naples 1822–1848: a Study in Relative Popularity', DSJ, vi (1988), 11–27
A. Bini and J. Commons: Le prime rappresentazioni delle opere di Donizetti nella stampa coeva (Rome and Milan, 1997)

G: CRITICAL AND SPECIAL STUDIES

see also specialist publications

(i) General

P. Scudo: 'Donizetti et l'école italienne depuis Rossini', Critique et littérature musicales, i (Paris, 1850, 3/1856), 75–97
H.F. Chorley: 'Donizetti's Operas', Thirty Years' Musical Recollections, i (London, 1862/R, abridged 2/1926/R by E. Newman), 153–65
P. Bettòli: 'Le opere di Gaetano Donizetti: errori e lacune', Gaetano Donizetti: numero unico nel primo centenario della sua nascita 1797–1897 (Bergamo, 1897), 26–7
E.C. Verzino: Le opere di Gaetano Donizetti: contributo allo loro storia (Bergamo, 1897)
L. Miragoli: Il melodramma italiano nell'ottocento (Rome, 1924)
G. Barblan: L'opera di Donizetti nell'età romantica (Bergamo, 1948)
B. Dal Fabbro: 'Donizetti e l'opera buffa', I bidelli del Walhalla (Florence, 1954), 129–40
E. Dent: 'Donizetti: an Italian Romantic', Fanfare for Ernest Newman, ed. H. van Thal (London, 1955), 86–107; repr. in DSJ, ii (1975), 249–70
M.P. Boyé: 'Donizetti et l'opéra italien', Revue de la Méditerranée, nos.73–6 (1956), 240–54, 369–83, 486–95, 581–91; nos.77–82 (1957), 24–38, 177–84, 286–302, 415–35, 545–58, 623–34; no.83 (1958), 46–59
A. Geddo: 'Donizetti: ordine fra i suoi quartetti', La Scala, no.77 (1956), 63–6, 112–14
G. Barblan: 'Il "Giovedi grasso" e gli svaghi "Farsaioli" di Donizetti', Musicisti piemontesi e liguri, Chigiana, xvi (1959), 109–14
G. Barblan: 'Attualità di Donizetti', L'opera italiana in musica: scritti e saggi in onore di Eugenio Gara (Milan, 1965), 59–73
F. Cella: 'Indagini sulle fonti francesi dei libretti di Gaetano Donizetti', Contributi dell'Istituto di filologia moderna, Fr. ser., iv (1966), 343–590
F. Lippmann: 'Die Melodien Donizettis', AnMc, no.3 (1966), 80–113
R. Celletti: 'Il vocalismo italiano da Rossini a Donizetti', AnMc, no.5 (1968), 267–94; no.7 (1969), 214–47
F. Lippmann: 'Gaetano Donizetti', Vincenzo Bellini und die italienische Opera seria seiner Zeit, AnMc, no.6 (1969), 304–17; It. trans., rev., in M.R. Adamo and F. Lippmann: Vincenzo Bellini (Turin 1981)
E. de Mura: Enciclopedia della canzone napoletana (Naples, 1969)
W. Dean: 'Some Echoes of Donizetti in Verdi's Operas', Studi verdiani III: Milan 1972, 122–47
F. Lippmann: 'Der italienische Vers und der musikalische Rhythmus: zum Verhältnis von Vers und Musik in der italienischen Oper des 19. Jahrhunderts', AnMc, no.12 (1973), 253–369; no.14 (1974), 324–410; no.15 (1975), 298–333
W. Dean: 'Donizetti's Serious Operas', PRMA, c (1973–4), 123–41
J. Commons: 'Unknown Donizetti Items in the Neapolitan Journal "Il sibilo"', DSJ, ii (1975), 145–60
A. Gazzaniga: 'Donizetti a Napoli: da "La zingara" a "L'Esule"', CSD 1975, 351–98
F. Lippmann: 'Verdi und Donizetti', Opernstudien: Anna Amalie Abert zum 65. Geburtstag, ed. K. Hortschansky (Tutzing, 1975), 153–73
J. Commons: 'Giuseppe Bardari', DSJ, iii (1977), 85–96
G. Gavazzeni: 'Brogliacco donizettiano', Il melodramma italiano dell'Ottocento: studi e ricerche per Massimo Mila (Turin, 1977), 425–36
J. Black: 'Gammarano's Libretti for Donizetti', SD, no.3 (1978), 115–31
T.G. Kaufman: 'Italian Performances in Vienna 1835–1859', DSJ, iv (1980), 53–71
J. Black: Donizetti's Operas in Naples (London, 1982)
G. Tintori, ed.: Gaetano Donizetti (Milan, 1983)
J. Black: 'Code of Instructions for the Censorship of Theoretical Works, Naples 1849', DSJ, no.5 (1984), 147–50
A. Gazzaniga: 'La geminazione nel linguaggio di Donizetti', NRMI, xviii (1984), 420–33
S.L. Balthazar: Evolving Conventions in Italian Serious Opera: Scene Structure in the Works of Rossini, Bellini, Donizetti, and Verdi, 1810–1850 (diss., U. of Pennsylvania, 1985)
C. Dahlhaus: 'Komödie mit Musik und musikalische Komödie: zur Poetik der komischen Oper', NZM, Jg.147 (1986), 24–7
G. Tomlinson: 'Italian Romanticism and Italian Opera: an Essay in their Affinities', 19CM, x/1 (1986), 43–60
W. Ashbrook: 'Donizetti and Romani', Italica, lxiv (1987), 606–31
S. Fayad: Donizetti a Napoli (1822–1838) (Naples, 1987)
N.L. Jennings: Gaetano Donizetti (1797–1848): the Evolution of his Style Leading to the Production of 'Anna Bolena' in 1830 (diss., Michigan State U., 1987)
J.S. Allitt: Donizetti in the Light of Romanticism and the Teaching of Johann Simon Mayr (Rockport, MA, 1991)
S. Huebner: 'Lyric Form in 'Ottocento' Opera', JRMA, cxvii (1992), 123–47
C.P.D. Cronin: The Comic Operas of Gaetano Donizetti and the End of the Opera Buffa Tradition (diss., Stanford U., 1993)
L. Zoppelli: 'Narrative Elements in Donizetti's Operas', OQ, x/1 (1993–4), 23–32
E. Saracino, ed.: Tutti i libretti di Donizetti (Milan, 1993)
E. Sala: 'Women Crazed by Locve: an Apsect of Romanitc Opera', OQ, x/3 (1993–4), 19–41
M.A. Smart: Dalla tomba uscita: Representations of Madness in Nineteenth-Century Italian Opera (diss., Cornell U., 1994) [incl. chaps. on I pazzi per progetto, Lucia di Lammermoor, Maria Padilla]
G. Pagannone: 'Mobilità strutturale della 'lyric form': sintassi verbale e sintassi musicale nel melodramma italiano del primo Ottocento', Analisi, vii/20 (1996), 2–17
M. Eynard, ed.: Studi su Gaetano Donizetti nel bicentenario della nascita (1797–1997) (Bergamo, 1997)
F. Mancini and S. Ragni, eds.: Donizetti e i teatri napolitani nell'Ottocento (Naples, 1997)
W. Ashbrook: 'The Evolution of the Donizettian Tenor-persona', OQ, liv/3 (1998), 25–32
P. Gossett: 'Donizetti: European Composer', OQ, liv/3 (1998), 11–16
G. Pagannone: 'Tra "cadenze felicità, felicità, felicità" e "melodie lunghe, lunghe, lunghe"', Il saggiatore musicale (1998), 53–86

(ii) Anna Bolena

M. Ballini: 'Ritorno dell' "Anna Bolena"', La Scala, no.89 (1957), 17–22
R. Hauser: Felice Romani – Gaetano Donizetti – Anna Bolena: zur Aesthetik politischer Oper zwischen 1826 und 1831 (diss., Albert-Ludwigs U., 1980)
P. Gossett: Anna Bolena and the Artistic Maturity of Gaetano Donizetti (Oxford, 1985)
C.N. Gattey: 'Donizetti's "Anna Bolena": Historical Accuracy Considered', About the House, vii (1988), 11–17

(iii) Don Pasquale

W.J. Kleefeld: Don Pasquale von Gaetano Donizetti (Leipzig, 1901)
F. Walker: 'The Librettist of "Don Pasquale"', MMR, lxxxviii (1958), 219–23
P. Berri: 'Il librettista del "Don Pasquale": leggende, ingiustizie, plagi', La Scala, no.110 (1959), 19–24
H. Liebsch: 'Eine Oper, zwei Texte: textkritische Bemerkungen zu Donizettis "Don Pasquale"', MG, xii (1963), 91–5
P. Rattalino: 'Il processo compositivo nel "Don Pasquale" di Donizetti', NRMI, iv (1970), 51–68, 263–80
L'avant-scène opéra, no.108 (1988) [Don Pasquale issue]
C.P.D. Cronin: 'Stefano Pavesi's Ser Marcantonio and Donizetti's Pasquale', OQ, xi (1994–5), 39–53
Don Pasquale [facs. of the autograph score; introduction by P. Gossett] (Rome, 1999)

(iv) L'elisir d'amore

E. Prout: 'Auber's Le philtre and Donizetti's L'elisir d'amore: a Comparison', MMR, xxx (1900), 25–7, 49–53, 73–6
E. Appelius: 'Il centenario dell' "Elisir d'amore"', Rivista di Bergamo, xi (1932), 195–7
G. Gavazzeni: 'Donizetti e "L'elisir d'amore"', RaM, vii (1934), 44–50
P. Petrobelli: 'Dulcamara e Berta: storia di una canzone', Liedstudien Wolfgang Osthoff zum 60. Geburtstag, ed. M. Just and R. Wiesend (Tutzing, 1989), 307–12

(v) La favorite

G. Barblan: La favorita: mito e realità (Venice, 1965)
W. Ashbrook: 'La composizione di La favorita', SD, no.2 (1972), 13–27
R. Leavis: 'La favorite and La favorita: One Opera, Two Librettos', DSJ, ii (1975), 117–29
W. Ashbrook: 'L'ange de Nisida di Donizetti', RIM, xvi (1981), 96–114
P. Gossett: 'Introduction to La favorite', ERO, xxviii (1982)
H.R. Cohen, ed.: The Original Staging Manuals for Twelve Parisian Operatic Premières/Douze livrets de mise en scène lyrique datants des créations parisiennes (Stuyvesant, NY, 1991) [incl. production book for La favorite]

K. Loveland: Reading Donizetti's 'La fille du régiment': Genesis, Transformations, and Interpretations (diss., U. of Rochester, 1996)
E.T. Glasow: 'Berlioz on the premiere of La favorite', OQ, liv/3 (1998), 33–43

(vi) Lucia di Lammermoor

R. Barbiera: 'Chi ispirò la "Lucia"? … il martirio di Gaetano Donizetti', Vite ardenti nel teatro da archivii e da memorie (1700–1900) (Milan, 1931), 147–75
G. Roncaglia: 'Il centenario di "Lucia"', RMI, xl (1936), 119–25
I. Pizzetti: 'Un autografo di Donizetti', La musica italiana dell'Ottocento (Turin, 1947), 231–9
M. Baccaro: 'Lucia di Lammermoor' prima al S. Carlo di Napoli (Naples, 1948)
F. Sacchi: 'Sensazionale tragedia in Scozia', Melodramma, i–ii (1954)
A. Gazzaniga: 'Un intervallo nelle ultime scene di "Lucia"', NRMI, xiii (1979), 620–33
J.N. Black: 'Cammarano's Notes for the Staging of Lucia di Lammermoor', DSJ, iv (1980), 29–44
L'avant-scène opéra, no.56 (1983) [Lucia di Lammermoor issue]
G. Morelli: 'La scena di follia nella Lucia di Lammermoor: sintomi, fra mitologia della paura e mitologia della libertà', La drammatrugia musicale, ed. L. Bianconi (Bologna, 1986), 411–34
K. Ringger: 'Lucia di Lammermoor ou les regrets d'Emma Bovary', Littérature et Opéra, ed. P. Berthier and K. Ringger (Grenoble, 1987), 69–79
W. Ashbrook: 'Popular Success, the Critics and Fame: the Early Careers of *Lucia di Lammermoor*and Belisario', COJ, ii (1990), 65–81
S. McClary: 'Excess and Frame: the Musical Representation of Madwomen', Feminine Endings: Music, Gender, and Sexuality (Minneapolis, 1991), 80–111
G. Paduano: 'Lucia di Lammermoor: procedure di drammatizzazione', Il giro di vite: percorsi dell'opera lirica (Florence, 1992), 85–114
M.A. Smart: 'The Silencing of Lucia', COJ, iv (1992), 119–41
F. Izzo: 'Michele Carafa e Le nozze di Lammermoor: un oscuro precedente delle Lucia', Ottocento e oltre: scritti in onore di Raoul Meloncelli, ed. F. Izzo and J. Streicher (Rome, 1993), 161–93

(vii) Maria Stuarda

P. Schmid: 'Maria Stuarda and Buondelmonte', Opera, xxiv (1973), 1060–66
J. Commons: 'Maria Stuarda and the Neapolitan Censorship', DSJ, iii (1977), 151–67
J. Commons, P. Schmid and D. White: '19th-Century Performances of Maria Stuarda', DSJ, iii (1977), 217–42

(viii) Other works

H. Berlioz: '"La fille du régiment"', Journal des débats (16 Feb 1840); repr. in Les musiciens et la musique (Paris, 1903/R), 145–56
A. Cametti: La musica teatrale a Roma cento anni fa: 'Olivo e Pasquale' di Donizetti (Rome, 1927)
A. Cametti: 'La musica teatrale a Roma cento anni fa: "Il corsaro" di Pacini, il "Furioso" e "Torquato Tasso" di Donizetti, "La sonnambula" di Bellini, la "Norma" di Bellini', Reggia Accademia di Santa Cecilia, annuario 1930–31, 445–89; (1933–4), 365–421
G. Barblan: 'La "Messa di Requiem" di Gaetano Donizetti', RaM, xviii (1948), 192–8
N. Gallini: 'Inediti donizettiani: ultima scena dell'opera "Caterina Cornaro"', RMI, lv (1953), 257–72
B. Becherini: 'Il "Don Sebastiano" di Donizetti al XVIII maggio musicale fiorentino', RBM, ix (1955), 143–53
U. Cattini: 'Note sul Roberto Devereux', Ricordiana (1957), Nov, 478–88
G. Barblan: 'Un personaggio di Cervantes nel melodramma italiano: "Il furioso all'isola di San Domingo"', Musicisti lombardi ed emiliani, Chigiana, xv (1958), 85–94
J. Commons: 'An Introduction to "Il duca d'alba"', Opera, x (1959), 421–6
J. Commons: 'Emilia di Liverpool', ML, xl (1959), 207–28
G. Roncaglia: 'Ricuperato anche "Il furioso all'isola di S. Domingo" di Gaetano Donizetti', La Scala, no.115 (1959), 34–9, 69–70
G. Barblan: 'Il nuovo finale dell'atto 1° della Pia de' Tolomei, con scritti di Donizetti e Cammarano', SD, no.1 (1962), 143–51
G. Barblan: 'Una donizettiana farsa di costume: "Le convenienze e le inconvenienze teatrali"', Le celebrazioni del 1963, Chigiana, xx (1963), 217–36
G. Barblan: 'Alla ribalta un'ottocentesca tragedia lirica: "Parisina d'Este" di Donizetti', Chigiana, new ser., i (1964), 207–38
G. Barblan: 'Caracteristicas corais do "D. Sebastiano" de Donizetti', Estudos italianos em Portugal, no.23 (1964), 203
G. Barblan: 'Lettura di un'opera dimenticata: "Pia de' Tolomei" di Donizetti (1836)', Chigiana, xxiv (1967), 221–43
J. Freeman: 'Donizetti in Palermo and Alahor in Granata', JAMS, xxv (1972), 240–50
P. Rattalino: 'Unità drammatica della Linda di Chamounix', SD, no.2 (1972), 29–40
G. Barblan: 'Maria di Rohan', ibid., ii (1975), 14–33
J. Commons: 'The Authorship of I piccioli virtuosi ambulanti', DSJ, ii (1975), 199–207
J. Guaricci: 'Lucrezia Borgia', ibid., ii (1975), 161–77
M.F. Messenger: 'Donizetti, 1840: 3 "French" Operas and their Italian Counterparts', DSJ, ii (1975), 99–115
B. Sarnaker: 'Chi cantò L'esule di Roma? ovvero, Parti in cerca di cantanti', Il melodramma italiano dell'ottocento: studi e ricerche per Massimo Mila, ed. G. Pestelli (Turin, 1977), 413–24
J.N. Black: 'Cammarano's Self-Borrowings: the Libretto of Poliuto', DSJ, iv (1980), 89–103
T.G. Kaufman: 'L'esule di Roma: a Performance History', DSJ, iv (1980), 104–9
P. Gossett: Introduction to Parisina, ERO, xxv (1981)
P. Gossett: Introduction to Les martyrs, ERO, xxvii (1982)
P. Gossett: Introduction to Roberto Devereux, ERO, xxvi (1982)
W. Ashbrook: 'Donizetti and Romantic Sensibility in Milan at the Time of Maria Padilla', DSJ v (1984), 8–19
J. Black: 'Elisabeth d'Angleterre, Le comte d'Essex, and Roberto Devereux', DSJ, v (1984), 135–46
J. Black: 'The Revival of Gemma di Vergy at the S Carlo of Naples in June 1838', DSJ, v (1984), 82–7
J. Commons and J.Black: 'Il campaneli di notte: Further Evidence, Further Questions', DSJ, v (1984), 231–9
W. Crutchfield: 'A Donizetti Discovery', MT, cxxv (1984), 487–90 [Elisabeth (Otto mesi)]
T. Kaufman: 'Lucrezia Borgia: Various Versions and Performance History', DSJ, v (1984), 37–81
F. Lo Presti: 'Le duc d'Albe: the Livret of Scribe and Duveyrier', DSJ, v (1984), 243–316
R. Parker: 'Maria Padilla: some Historical and Analytical Remarks', DSJ, v (1984), 20–34
J.-M. Bailbé: 'Polyuecte: de Donizetti à Gounod', Revue d'histoire littéraire de la France, lxxxv/5 (1985), 799–810
A. Bini: 'Otto mesi in due ore ossia Gli esiliati in Siberia: vicende di un'opera donizettiana', RIM, xxii (1987), 183–260
P. Gossett: 'Music at the Théâtre-Italien', Music in Paris in the 1830s, ed. P. Bloom (Stuyvesant, NY, 1987), 327–64
P. Mioli: 'Da Alina, regina di Golconda a Don Pasquale: la "prima buffa" nel vocalismo donizettiano', SD, no.4 (1988), 127–61
G. Tomlinson: 'Opera and Drame: Hugo, Donizetti, and Verdi', Studies in the History of Music, ii (New York, 1988), 171–92
F. Bellotto: I quartetti per archi di Gaetano Donizetti (diss., U. of Pavia, 1989)
J. Joly: Dagli Elisi all'inferno: il melodramma tra Italia e Francia dal 1730 al 1850 (Florence, 1990) [incl. chaps. on Maria de Rudenz and Linda di Chamounix]
H.R. Cohen, ed.: The Original Staging Manuals for Twelve Parisian Operatic Premières/Douze livrets de mise en scène lyrique datants des créations parisiennes (Stuyvesant, NY, 1991) [incl. production book for La fille du régiment]
J. Joly: 'Due padri-tenori tra odio e follia: "La Juive" e "Maria Padilla"', Opera & Libretto, ii (1993), 199–213
F. Capitanio: 'Un inedito donizettiano nella Biblioteca Civica: Canone infinito à 5 voci (1825)', Bergomum: studi di storia, arte e litteratura di Bergamo, lxxxix (1994), 103–110
M.A. Smart: 'The Lost Voice of Rosine Stoltz', COJ, vi/1 (1994), 31–50

MARY ANN SMART (7 with JULIAN BUDDEN)

Donizetti, Giuseppe (b Bergamo, 6 Nov 1788; d Constantinople, 12 Feb 1856). Italian teacher and composer. He was the elder brother of Gaetano Donizetti, and studied the flute with an uncle. From 1806, after being turned away from the Lezioni Caritatevoli di Musica for being too old, he took lessons from Mayr. In 1809 he enrolled in the Italian army as a musician, and subsequently played in battalions on the island of Elba and in the Sardinian army. He was highly regarded as a bandmaster, and when Sultan Mahmud II asked for a musician to reorganize his imperial band, Donizetti's name was put forward by the Italian ambassador in Constantinople. He arrived there in 1828, and was made General Instructor of Imperial Ottoman Music with a generous stipend of 8,000 francs a year.

Donizetti coached the players, acquired Italian instruments and taught Western notation. The band was immediately successful, and Donizetti took charge of the other army bands. Through his influence the first school of Western music in Turkey was opened in 1831. In addition to conducting band music on ceremonial occasions, and orchestral programmes at the court theatre (in the harem), he mounted productions of short Italian operas.

Donizetti's importance lies above all in his work as a teacher and organizer. His compositions, mostly occasional pieces (marches and anthems) for Mahmud II and Abdul Medjid, rarely depart from a consciously conventional and celebratory style. Nevertheless, at least one of the imperial marches found some contemporary popularity: Liszt wrote a Grande paraphrase de la marche de Donizetti composée pour Sa majesté le sultan Abdoul-Medij-Khan (Berlin, 1848). He was made an honorary general in the Turkish army in recognition of his services, and in 1842 the French government made him a knight of the Légion d'Honneur.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F. Romani: 'Donizetti in Costantinopoli (frammento di un viaggio inedito in Oriente)', 'Miscellanee' del Cavaliere Felice Romani tratte dalla 'Gazzetta piemontese', i (Turin, 1837), 9–12 [article from 12 Nov 1834]
A. Bacolla: 'Giuseppe Donizetti e la musica in Turchia', Piemonte (1 June 1911); Fr. trans. as La musique en Turquie et quelques traits biographiques sur Giuseppe Donizetti Pacha (Constantinople, 1911)
U. Riva: 'Un bergamasco (Giuseppe Donizetti Pascià) riformatore della musica in Turchia', Rivista di Bergamo, i (1922), 349–53
F. Abbiati: 'La musica in Turchia con Giuseppe Donizetti Pascià', Rivista di Bergamo, vii (1928), 305–12

FRANCESCO BELLOTTO

Donnberger, Georg Joseph. See DONBERGER, GEORG JOSEPH.

Donner, Henrik Otto (b Tampere, 16 Nov 1939). Finnish composer and jazz musician. He studied composition at the Sibelius Academy in Helsinki, with Fougstedt and Kokkonen (1958–63) and in Germany, with Ligeti and Koenig (1962–3). He conducted the Akademiska Sångföreningen choir (1969–76), was head of entertainment at the Finnish Broadcasting Company (1970–74), and from 1976 to 1979 he was managing director of Love Records. He has also chaired many organizations, such as the Finnish Composers' International Copyright Bureau (Teosto). As a jazz musician he has played with the Ossi Aalto, Christian Schwindt, Esa Katajavuori, Swedish Lars Werner bands and others, and later in his own experimental 'The Otto Donner Treatment', featuring different line-ups. Since the 1970s he has, in addition to jazz, composed music for a variety of purposes, much of it of a popular type, such as choral pieces, ditties and music for stage and screen. In the early 1960s Donner became known as an avant gardist delighting in radical experiments: For Emmy 2, for example, sought to demolish the conventional concert by activating the audience. He was initiated furthest into improvisation and music theatre by Terry Riley and Ken Dewey, with whom he arranged the Street Piece Helsinki happening (1963). Donner's Moonspring (1964) represents a collage of different styles; his most coherent and weighty work to date is possibly XC (1970), selected for the ISCM festival.

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: Gilbert (musical, 1965)
Orch: Moonspring or Aufforderung zum . . . or Sym. I 'Hommage à Charles Ives', str, Hammond org, 1964; Kinetique, 1964; To Whom It May Concern, sym. orch, jazz ens, 1966; Dalens ande [The Spirit of the Valley], big band, 1986–7; Ooghaa, brass, 1990; Ritual I, big band, 1990
Inst: Ideogramme I, fl, cl, trbn, perc, 12 radios/tape recorders, 1962; Ideogramme II, chbr orch, 1963; 6 Bagatelles, str qt, 1965; Str Qt, 1970; Notte, gui, 1971; The Castle, str septet, 1986
Vocal: Cantata profana, chbr orch, 3vv, 1962; XC (E. Pound), chbr ens, chorus, S, 1970; Etyde för sommarvind [Etude for the Summer Wind], male chorus, 1974; Jaguaren [The Jaguar] (E. Diktonius), male chorus, 1974, rev. 1990; En gång var natten min [Once the Night Was Mine], children's vv, 1986; Den första sommaren [The First Summer], 1v, big band, 1990; Blåsten blåser [The Wind Is Blowing], youth choir, 1991
Jazz, incid music, film music

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Heininen: 'Ett (alltför) öppet brev till vänner' [An [all too] open letter to friends], Musikrevy, xxxix (1984), 39–46
P. Jalkanen: Pohjolan vössä [In the Northern Night] (Helsinki, 1992)
E. Salmenhaara, ed.: Suomalaisia säveltäjiä [Finnish composers] (Helsinki, 1994)
K. Aho and others: Finnish Music (Helsinki, 1996)

MIKKO HEINIÖ

Donnerblech (Ger.). Thunder sheet. See THUNDER MACHINE, THUNDER SHEET.

Donnini, Girolamo (d Bonn, early 1752). Italian composer. His early life remains obscure, but Thayer discovered that at least by 1719 (Eitner said 1714) he was serving the Elector Joseph Clemens at the court in Bonn as second of its three Konzertmeister. When such music had an instrumental accompaniment, as in opera productions, Donnini, rather than the director of instrumental music, conducted. By 1722 he was also working as court composer; by 1719 he had written a three-act 'tragedy', Ester (I-MOe), to celebrate a visit by Albert Charles and Ferdinand, Princes of Bavaria (not Clemens August, as appears on the score). In this oddly constructed work, the middle act abandons the nominal plot line, and, in the voices of such allegorical personages as Fortuna, Usura, Amor proprio and Virtù, sings the praises of the visitors' distinguished family. In 1722 Donnini's singers numbered 22.

On 30 November 1723 Donnini was appointed chamber music composer, and on 29 March 1732, after Clemens August had become elector, he succeeded Trevisani as Kapellmeister, remaining in the post until his death. Under his directorship, Beethoven's grandfather, Ludwig, joined Bonn's musical establishment as bass singer.

Donnini's only known compositions besides Ester are an undated 'divertimento pastorale', Icaro (MOe), and a violin concerto (A-Wkm).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; SchmidlDS
A.W. Thayer: Ludwig van Beethoven's Leben (Berlin, 1866–79; rev. and completed H. Deiters and H. Riemann, Leipzig, 2/1901–27), i, chaps.1, 2 [material on Donnini does not appear in the English editions by Krehbiel, 1921, and Forbes, 1964]

JAMES L. JACKMAN

Donohoe, Peter (b Manchester, 18 June 1953). English pianist. He studied the piano and percussion at Chetham's

School and the RNCM in Manchester and in 1976 went to Paris to study with Yvonne Loriod. Having developed a national reputation in Britain after winning sixth prize at the Leeds Piano Competition in 1980, he created a sensation when he won the 1982 Tchaikovksy Competition in Moscow. The following year he was made an honorary fellow of the RNCM. He has maintained a worldwide performing career, including annual performances at the Proms and frequent broadcasts on radio and TV. Donohoe is a strong, virtuoso pianist, conceiving his interpretations on a grand scale and excelling in the music of Beethoven, Liszt, Bartók and in the Russian repertory. He maintains, however, a straightforward, unfussy approach, and his career resisted a notorious marketing campaign by his record company to glamorize him. Among his many recordings those of Liszt's B minor Sonata and Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto no.2 have won international awards. In the early 1990s he began to develop a parallel career as a conductor, appearing with the CBSO, the Hallé Orchestra, the Moscow Chamber Orchestra and other orchestras. Donohoe has given a number of premières, including those of Turnage's Entranced (1982), York Höller's Piano Concerto (1985), James MacMillan's The Berserking (1990) and Alexander Goehr's . . . In Real Time II–IV (1992).

JESSICA DUCHEN

Donostia, José Antonio de [José Gonzalo Zulaica y Arregui] (b San Sebastián, 10 Jan 1886; d Lecároz, Navarre, 30 Aug 1956). Basque composer and musicologist. In 1896 he joined the Capuchin College in Lecároz, where he studied civil and ecclesiastical subjects and also harmony and composition with Ismael Echazarra. In 1903 he took vows as a Capuchin and in 1908 was ordained a priest. He adopted the name of José Antonio de San Sebastián but was generally known as Donostia, the Basque name for San Sebastián. He taught at the Capuchin College in Lecároz following his ordination, at the same time collecting and studying Basque popular songs and composing. He took composition and counterpoint lessons from Adrián Esquerrá in Barcelona (1908) and from Bernardo Gabiola in San Sebastián (1910). He also learnt Gregorian chant with Father Casiano Rojo Olalla in the Benedictine Abbey in Silos (1909) and with Father Mauro Sabrayrolles in Besalú (1915). On his frequent trips to Barcelona he met Granados, Felipe Pedrell and the poets Apelles Mestres and Llorençs Riber.

In 1918 he was relieved of his teaching duties to enable him to pursue a musical career. He travelled to Paris where he met Ravel and Roussel, studied with Eugène Cools (1920–21) and collaborated with Henri Ghéon on stage works that included Les trois miracles de Ste Cécile (1920) and La vie profonde de St François d'Assise (1925–6). During the Spanish Civil War (1936–9) he lived in Toulouse; he remained in France (Paris, Mont de Marsan and Bayonne) until 1943. In that year he returned to Lecároz and in 1944 was asked to head the folklore department of the newly created Instituto Español de Musicología in Barcelona. There he was active as a musicologist, and composed one of his masterpieces, the Missa pro defunctis (1945), among other works. In 1953 he left Barcelona and returned to Lecároz, where he continued researching and composing until his death. He was involved with Eusko Ikaskuntza (Sociedad de Estudios Vascos) from its foundation in 1918 and was president of its music and dance section (1926–36). He was also a member of Euskaltzaindia (Academy of the Basque Language), the Real Academia de Bellas Artes de S Fernando and the Real Sociedad Bascongada de los Amigos del País.

As composer Father Donostia was largely self-taught. His music is based on two elements, Gregorian chant (stimulated by Pope Pio X's motu proprio of 1903) and Basque popular song. At first he was influenced by Romanticism, but contact with French Impressionism led to a more personal and refined language, with a concise expressiveness. Although he composed important sacred vocal music, this was exceeded in popularity by his Basque choral music and Preludios vascos for piano. He compiled two important books of Basque song, the first published in 1921, the second posthumously in 1994; together they include about 2000 melodies. He also wrote prolifically on this subject, publishing the first monograph about Basque music, Música y músicos en el país vasco (1951).

WORKS

Edition: Obras musicales del Padre Donostia, ed. J. de Riezu (Lecároz, 1960–80)

(selective list)

STAGE AND VOCAL

Stage: La ermita de Santa Rosalía (zarzuela), 1906; Larraldeko area [The Flower of Larralde] (op, A. Campíon, Basque trans. D Aguirre), 1913, unfinished; Les trois miracles de Ste Cécile (incid music, H. Ghéon), 1920, Paris, 23 Jan 1921; La vie profonde de St François d'Assise (incid music, Ghéon), 1925–6, Paris, 1 Nov 1926; Le Noël de Greccio, ou le sermon devant la crèche (incid music, Ghéon), 1935–6, Paris, 9 Feb 1936; La quête héroïque du Graal (incid music, Ghéon), 1938, Rentería, 23 May 1980; other incid music

Sacred vocal: Poema de la pasión (J.L. de Ubeda), 2 S, chorus 8vv, eng hn, 1937; O Iesu mi dulcissime, chorus 4vv, 1941; Missa pro defunctis (Requiem), chorus 4vv, org, 1945, arr. chorus 4vv, orch, 1946; Tríptico franciscano (J. Verdaguer, St Francis of Assisi), chorus 4vv, 1949; motets, songs, arrs. of trad. songs

Secular vocal: Ikhazkin mendian [Being a Coal Merchant in the Forest] (P. Ibarrart), 1v, pf, 1911; Pom de Cançons (A. Mestres), 1v, pf, 1913; Suite vasca, chorus 4vv and 7vv, 1913; Euskel eresiak [Basque Songs] (trad.), 1v, pf, 1914–15; 4 mélodies catalanes (L.L. Riber, J.M. Guasch, A. Mestres), 1v, pf, 1914–15; 3 chants basques, 1v, pf, 1928; Gure herria [Our People] (trad. Basque), 1v, pf, 1928; Mendi lore [Mountain Flower] (trad. Basque), 1v, pf, 1928; Canciones sefardíes (trad. Sephardi), 1v, pf, 1941

INSTRUMENTAL

Orch: Preludios vascos, 1st ser., perf. 1916; Preludios vascos, 2nd ser., perf. 1917; Acuarelas vascas, perf. 1932; Edate-soinua [Sound of Drinking], chbr orch, 1933; Urruti-jaia [Festive Song], chbr orch, 1933; Sagar-dantza [Dance of the Apple], chbr orch, 1936; Danza, chbr orch, 1937; Axeria eta gabaraxaina, perf. 1951; Infantiles, unfinished [completed by J.B. Portu]

Chbr: Minueto, str qt, 1905; Romanza no.1, vn, pf, 1905; Romanza no.8, vn, pf, 1905; Str Qt, E, 1905; Invocación, vc, pf, 1907; 5 preludios vascos, vn, pf, 1928; Ingurutxo de Bedayo [Bedayo Dance], txistu, tamboril, pf, 1931; Paisaje, fl, str qt, 1935; Página romántica, vn, pf, 1941; Glosa sobre la Salve, vc, org, 1943

Solo inst: Album para órgano, org, 1907–12; Preludios vascos, pf, i, 1912; Andante para una sonata vasca (alla classica), pf, 1913; Preludios vascos, pf, ii, 1913, iii, 1914, iv, 1915–23; In paradisum, org, 1921; Errimina (Nostalgia), pf, 1925 [orig. for gui]; Menuet basque, pf, 1928; Prière plaintive à Notre Dame de Socorri, pf, 1928; Vora 'l Ter [On the Banks of the Ter], gui, transcr. for pf, 1934; Itinerarium mysticum, org: i, Ascensiones cordis, 1938–40, ii, In Festo VII Dolorum BM Virginis, 1937–40, iii, Pro tempore Nativitatis Domini, 1940–43; Infantiles, pf 4 hands: i, 1940, ii, 1937–8, iii, 1940–47; Oración a Ntra. Sra. de Roncesvalles, org, 1939; Tríptico, org, 1941; Tiento y canción, gui, transcr. for pf, 1946; Toccata sobre el tema Do–Re–Si–Do, org, 1949; Adoración, org, 1952; Homenaje a Juan Crisóstomo de Arriaga, pf, 1954

EDITIONS AND ARRANGEMENTS

Euskel eres-sorta [Basque Song Book], 393 trad. Basque songs (?Pamplona, 1921); J. de Arana: Sonata, vn, pf, 1933; T. Albinoni: Sonata, vn, pf, 1935; Música de tecla en el País Vasco: siglo XVIII (Lecároz, 2/1976); Cancionero popular vasco, ed. J. de Riezu, vi–ix (San Sebastián, 1994)

WRITINGS

ed. J. de Riezu: Obras completas: artículos (Bilbao, 1983)
ed. J. de Riezu: Obras completas: diarios, reseñas (Bilbao, 1983)
ed. J. de Riezu: Obra literaria: conferencias (San Sebastián, 1985)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F. Gascue: 'Las conferencias del P.J.A. de Donostia en Oñate: breves consideraciones sobre su contenido', Euskalerriaren alde [San Sebastián], viii (1918), 475–85
J. de Riezu: Vida, obra y semblanza espiritual del Padre José Antonio de Donostia, capuchino (Pamplona, 1956)
'Memorial al Padre Donosti', Munibe, ix/3 (1957), 186–93
N. Almandoz: 'Evocación y recuerdos del P. José Antonio de San Sebastián', TSM, xl (1957), 117–20
A. Sagardia: 'El Padre José Antonio de San Sebastián', Vida vasca, xxxv (1958), 73–9
Gure herria [Bayonne], xxxii (1960) [Donostia issue]
A. Sagardia: Músicos vascos, viii (San Sebastián, 1972)
J.A. Arana Martija: Música vasca (San Sebastián, 1976, 2/1987)
J. de Riezu: 'Música popular y música sabia [del Padre Donostia]', Sociedad de estudios vascos: asamblea general 1978 (San Sebastián, 1979) 151–8
J. Bello: 'El padre Donostia', Muga [Bilbao], ii/8 (1980), 62–8
J. de Riezu, ed.: Cartas al P. Donostia: selección, versión, notas (San Sebastián, 1980)
Aita Donostiari omenaldia 1986 (San Sebastián, 1986) [Fs; incl. work-list and thematic catalogue]
G. Ibarretxe: 'Observaciones a la rama musical del Padre Donostia', Cuadernos de sección música/Eusko ikaskuntza, vi (1993), 159–69
G. Ibarretxe: 'Pequeña historia crítica de la etmomusicología vasca', Cuadernos de sección música/Eusko ikaskuntza, vii (1994), 243–62
J.L. Ansorena: 'La música de teatro en el P. Donastia', Boletín de la Real Sociedad Vascongada de los Amigos del País, lii/2 (1996), 631–52
G. Ibarretxe: El canto coral como entramado del nacionalismo musical vasco: el P. Donostia y los constructos identitarios en el imaginario vasco (diss., U. of País Vasco, 1996)
J.L. Ansorena: Aita Donostia. P. José Antonio de San Sebastián (José Gonzalo Zulaica y Arregui) (San Sebastián, 1999)
For further bibliography see J. Bilbao: Eusko bibliografia (San Sebastián, 1973–8)

ITZIAR LARRINAGA

Donovan, Richard Frank (b New Haven, CT, 29 Nov 1891; d Middletown, CT, 22 Aug 1970). American composer and organist. He studied at Yale University, at the Institute of Musical Art, New York (BMus 1922), and with Widor in Paris. In 1923 he joined the faculty of Smith College; he was later appointed instructor (1928) and then Battell Professor of Theory (1947) at Yale, remaining there until 1960. From 1936 to 1951 he was conductor of the New Haven SO. After an early post-Impressionist phase Donovan's compositional style developed to a lucid polyphony, despite closely woven textures, with frequent use of modal themes, sometimes of folktunes. After 1950 his music became more astringent and chromatic, verging towards atonality but still characterized by dense polyphony and strong asymmetrical rhythms. His Design for Radio won the BMI Publication Award and his organ works have been performed frequently.

WORKS

Orch: Wood-notes, fl, str, harp, 1924–5; Smoke and Steel, sym. poem after C. Sandburg, 1932; Sym., chbr orch, 1936; Ricercare, ob, str, 1938; Suite, ob, str, 1944–5; Design for Radio, 1945; New England Chronicle, ov., 1947; Passacaglia on Vermont Folk Tunes, 1949; Sym., D, 1956; Epos, 1963
Chbr: Sextet, wind, pf, 1932; 2 pf suites, 1932, 1953; Cl Sonata, 1937; Pf trio, 1937 in 1 movt; Serenade, ob, str trio, 1939; Terzetto, 2 vn, va, 1950; Soundings, bn, tpt, perc, 1953; Ww Qt, 1953; Music for 6, ob, cl, str qt, 1957; Fantasia, bn, 7 insts, 1960, rev. 1961; Pf Trio no.2, 1963; other pf pieces
Choral: How far is it to Bethlehem?, female vv, org, 1927; Chanson of the Bells of Oseney, female vv, pf, 1930; To all you ladies now at hand, male vv, pf/orch, 1932; Fantasy on American Folk Ballads, male vv, pf/orch, 1940; Hymn to the Night, female vv, 1947; 4 Songs of Nature, female vv, 1953; Mass, unison vv, org, 3 tpt, timp, 1955; Magnificat, male vv, org, 1961; 10 others
15 songs, incl. 5 Elizabethan Lyrics, S/T, str qt, 1963
Org: 2 Chorale-Preludes on American Folk Hymns, 1947; Paignion, 1947; Antiphon and Chorale, 1955

MSS in US-NH

Principal publishers: ACA, Boosey & Hawkes, Galaxy

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EwenD
A. Frankenstein: 'Richard Donovan', Bulletin of American Composers Alliance, v/4 (1956), 2 [incl. list of works]
'Richard Donovan', Compositores de América/Composers of the Americas, ed. Pan American Union, xv (Washington DC, 1969), 90–95 [incl. list of works]

H. WILEY HITCHCOCK

Dont, Jakob [Jacob] (b Vienna, 2 March 1815; d Vienna, 17 Nov 1888). Austrian violinist and teacher. He was the son of the cellist Josef Valentin Dont (b Georgenthal, Bohemia, 15 April 1776; d Vienna, 14 Dec 1833). He studied primarily with Joseph Boehm and also with Georg Hellmesberger at the Vienna Conservatory. In 1831 he became a violinist at the Burgtheater, and in 1834 a member of the Hofkapelle. In the early 1830s he made frequent appearances as a soloist and in chamber music in his home town, but despite his command of the instrument, excessive shyness led him to withdraw from performing early and devote himself to teaching and composing. He taught at the Vienna Conservatory, where Leopold Auer studied with him from 1857 to 1858. He wrote about 50 compositions for violin, most of them opera potpourris or character pieces; he was also devoted to the music of Beethoven, and arranged violin parts to accompany some of the piano sonatas. His outstanding pedagogical works, praised by Joachim, Auer and Flesch, are still used in advanced training. His multi-volume Gradus ad Parnassum unites six earlier opuses with a vast collection of pieces arranged for two to four string instruments for developing ensemble playing skills.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Auer: Violin Playing as I Teach it (New York, 1921/R)
J.C. Thompson: A Practice Manual: Jacob Dont's Twenty-Four Studies, Opus 37 (diss., Louisiana State U., 1986)
R. Klopčič: 'Dont's Lost Violin Study', The Strad, cvi, 1053–5

JOHN MORAN

Donzelli, Domenico (b Bergamo, 2 Feb 1790; d Bologna, 31 March 1873). Italian tenor. After studying with Eliodoro Bianchi he made his début at Bergamo in 1808 in Mayr's Elisa. He then completed his studies in Naples with Viganoni and Gaetano Crivelli. For the next decade he sang florid tenor roles throughout Italy, appearing in Rossini's Tancredi, the first performance of Torvaldo e Dorliska (1815, Rome), L'inganno felice and La Cenerentola. Then his voice began to grow heavier, and he turned to a different repertory. In 1825 he made his Paris début at the Théâtre Italien in the title role of Rossini's Otello. During six seasons in Paris he sang in the first performances of Rossini's Il viaggio a Reims (1825), Halévy's Clari (1829) and Bertin's Fausto (1831). He sang from 1829 at the King's Theatre, taking part in the first London performances of Bellini's Il pirata (1830) and La straniera (1832). He created Pollione in Norma at La Scala (1831), and later sang the role in London, Venice, Bologna, Trieste and Sinigaglia (Senigallia). He appeared in many Donizetti operas, including Fausta, Anna Bolena, Parisina, Belisario, Lucia di Lammermoor and Roberto Devereux. Two of the greatest successes of his later career were as Masaniello in Auber's La muette de Portici and the title role in Mercadante's Il bravo. He retired in 1844.

ELIZABETH FORBES

Doof (Dut.). See under ORGAN STOP (Doef).

Doolittle, Amos (b Cheshire, CT, 18 May 1754; d New Haven, CT, 30 Jan 1832). American composer. See PSALMODY (ii), §II, 2.

Doors, the. American rock group. It was formed in Los Angeles (1965) by the singer and lyricist Jim Morrison (1943–71) and Ray Manzarek (b 1935; keyboards), and took its name from William Blake via Aldous Huxley's The Doors of Perception; other members included Robbie Krieger (b 1946; guitar) and John Densmore (b 1944; drums). The group first attracted attention in the USA with their hit single Light my fire (Elecktra, 1967), and went on to produce an often moody style of late-1960s blues-based psychedelia with a tendency to linger over the darker aspects of emotional life; this was best exemplified by The End, a dramatic and shocking piece in which Morrison recited and shouted his Oedipal desires. While the group's music became increasingly refined over the course of the six studio albums from The Doors (Elecktra, 1967) to L.A. Woman (Elecktra, 1971), the style remained relatively stable as the band produced several hit singles, including Hello, I love you (Elecktra, 1968) and Touch me (Elecktra, 1969). The group's music and dark lyrics inspired a number of new-wave bands in the late 1970s and 80s and Morrison has become an iconic figure in rock culture, owing in part to Hopkins and Sugarman and a feature film by Oliver Stone (1991).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Fong-Torres: 'James Douglas Morrison, Poet: Dead at 27', Rolling Stone, no. 88 (1971), 1ff
J. Hopkins and D. Sugarman: Nobody Gets Out of Here Alive (New York, 1980)
J. Densmore: Riders on the Storm (New York, 1990)
J. Rocco: The Doors Companion, Four Decades of Commentary (New York, 1997)
R. Manzarek: Light My Fire, My Life with the Doors (New York, 1998)

JOHN COVACH

Doorslaer, Georges van. See VAN DOORSLAER, GEORGES.

Doo-wop. A style of vocal rock and roll popular in America in the 1950s and early 60s. It was essentially an unaccompanied type of close-harmony singing by groups of four or five members; if an accompaniment was added it functioned as a restrained background, largely obscured by the voices. The beginnings of the style can be detected in 19th-century barbershop singing, and in the music of such black vocal groups as the Ink Spots in the 1930s and the Orioles in the late 1940s. The Orioles inspired a number of groups named after birds in the early and mid-1950s, among them the Larks and the Flamingos; other popular doo-wop groups included the Chords (Sh-boom), Frankie Lymon and the Teenagers (Why do fools fall in love?), the Moonglows and the Nutmegs. The black groups were soon imitated by white ensembles, which often consisted of Italian Americans from New York and Philadelphia; their style differed from that of the black groups in that their sound was closer to Tin Pan Alley, and their lyrics correspondingly more escapist and less sexually suggestive. Such groups as the Capris (There's a moon out again), Danny and the Juniors (At the Hop), and Dion and the Belmonts (A Teenager in Love) enjoyed enormous popularity from 1961 to 1963, and many of them continued to perform in rock and roll revival shows. In the early 1980s there was renewed interest in doo-wop, and in 1982 several groups (including the Harptones, the Moonglows and the Capris) made recordings on the Ambient Sound label. For further information see M. Rosalsky: Encyclopedia of Rhythm and Blues and Doo-wop Vocal Groups (Lanham, MD, 2000).

JOHN ROCKWELL

Doppel-Be (Ger.). Double FLAT.

Doppel-Cadenz (Ger.). A type of ornament. See ORNAMENTS, §8.

Doppelflöte (Ger.). See under ORGAN STOP.

Doppelganze-Note (Ger.). See BREVE. See also NOTE VALUES.

Doppelkreuz (Ger.). Double SHARP.

Doppelleittonklang (Ger.). See KLANG (ii).

Doppelschlag (Ger.). A type of turn. See ORNAMENTS, §8.

Dopper, Cornelis (b Stadskanaal, 7 Feb 1870; d Amsterdam, 18 Sept 1939). Dutch composer and conductor. He studied the violin, the piano and composition at the Leipzig Conservatory (1888–90). His most important teacher was Oscar Paul, who lectured on the history of music and musical aesthetics. Dopper was otherwise self-taught. Back in the Netherlands, he completed his first opera Het blinde meisje van Castel-Cuillé in 1892. In 1897 he became violinist and later also repetiteur and assistant conductor at the Nederlandse Opera in Amsterdam, until this company was dissolved in 1903. In 1906, Mengelberg performed his Rembrandt Symphony with the Concertgebouw Orchestra. Between 1906 and 1908 Dopper worked in the United States as one of the conductors of the Savage Opera Company; among other things, he conducted the American première of Madama Butterfly. At the suggestion of Mengelberg, he was nominated as second conductor of the Concertgebouw Orchestra in 1908. He mainly worked as a repetiteur but also gave the Dutch premières of pieces such as Debussy's La mer. In 1918 the critic Vermeulen, following the première of Dopper's Zuiderzee Symphony, made known his rejection of Dopper, who was regarded as conservative. This incident led to demotion: until he was dismissed in 1931, Dopper chiefly continued to conduct summer and popular concerts, and the youth concerts which he himself initiated in 1923. His most popular orchestral work, the eclectic Ciaconna gotica (1920), was performed throughout the world by Mengelberg. Dopper was not an innovator as a composer, but possessed a great instinct for orchestral colouring. His interest in antiquity is apparent from works such as the Symphonia epica based on Homer and the orchestral studies Päân I and II. But above all Dopper was a Dutch composer, as shown by the titles of his Rembrandt, Amsterdam and Zuiderzee

Symphonies. In this last work he neatly combines melodies from Valerius's songbook Nederlandtsche Gedenck-clanck (1626). Only three of Dopper's works have been published; his complete works are preserved in the Gemeentemuseum, The Hague.

WORKS
(selective list)

Ops: Het blinde meisje van Castel-Cuillé (H.C. Meursinge-Offers), 1892, The Hague, 17 Dec 1894; Frithjof (B. Bueninck), 1895, unperf.; William Ratcliff (2, H. Heine), 1896–1901, Weimar, Hof, 19 Oct 1909; Het eerekruis (1, H. Engelen), 1903, Amsterdam, 9 Jan 1903; Don Quichote, unfinished

7 syms. incl. Rembrandt Sym. (no.3), 1892, rev. 1904; Symphonia epica (no.5), 1908; Amsterdam Sym. (no.6) , 1912; Zuiderzee Sym. (no.7), 1917

Other orch: Conc., tpt, 3 timp, orch, 1910; Vc Conc., 1912, rev. 1923; Päân I and II, 1915; Altniederländische Suite, 1916; Ciaconna gotica, 1920

Other orch pieces, choral pieces, chbr music, songs

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H.J. van Royen and others, eds.: Historie en kroniek van het Concertgebouw en het Concertgebouworkest 1888–1988, i (Zutphen, 1989)

J. Stam and I. Datema: Cornelis Dopper: lijst van composities en geannoteerde bibliografie (Stadskanaal, 1993)

THEO MULLER

Doppio bemolle (It.). Double FLAT.

Doppio diesis (It.). Double SHARP.

Doppio movimento (It.: 'double movement'). A direction to double the tempo.

Doppioni (from It. doppio: 'double'). A woodwind instrument of the late 16th and early 17th centuries, known principally in Italy. Zacconi (1592) gave the ranges of three sizes of doppioni: soprano (canto), c′–d″; tenor, c–d′; and bass,C–a. These were repeated by Cerone (1613), who translated the name into Spanish as 'doblados'. Praetorius (1618) referred directly to Zacconi's description, stating that he had been unable to find such an instrument, but supposing that it might be similar to his wind-cap KORTHOLT or to the SORDUN or the CORNAMUSA (i). The restricted range of a 9th for soprano and tenor has led to the assumption that the doppioni had a wind cap (see WIND-CAP INSTRUMENTS). Sachs believed that 'doppioni', 'crumhorn' and 'dolzaina' were different names for the same instrument; he claimed that it was called 'double' because its pitch was an octave lower than its size suggested (owing to its having a cylindrical bore); that is, it sounded at a pitch one would expect from an instrument 'double' the length. Kinsky regarded as untenable Sachs's theory that the three names referred to the same instrument since Zacconi listed the doppioni alongside both the crumhorn ('cornamuto torto') and dolzaina. He did, however, favour their identification as wind-cap instruments.

It is more likely that the doppioni was so called because it had two separate bores. Two instruments of this type survive in the Accademia Filarmonica in Verona and are described in Weber and van der Meer. Each of these has two cylindrical bores tuned about a 4th apart, effectively combining two instruments in one, though both cannot be played at the same time. They have tenons, as if for wind caps, but the tenons are perforated, implying that a transverse pin was fitted. The caps therefore could not have been airtight, and the instrument was presumably played with a reed on a brass crook which could be inserted into either bore. It is possible that these two examples were originally wind-cap instruments which were later adapted for open reeds, the caps (now lost) being retained as protective covers. Doppioni thus appear to represent an experiment in combining two instruments in one to give the player a choice of ranges. The much larger range given by Zacconi for the bass instruments compared with the soprano and tenor may be the result of his giving the combined ranges of both bores for a bass/great bass size, but the range of only one bore each for the soprano/alto and the alto/tenor or tenor/bass sizes. An inventory from Modena of 1600 lists 12 instruments da due registri, l'uno di più sorte, which may be doppioni.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

PraetoriusSM, ii

L. Zacconi: Prattica di musica (Venice, 1592/R)

D.P. Cerone: El melopeo y maestro (Naples, 1613/R)

C. Sachs: 'Doppioni und Dulzaina: zur Namensgeschichte des Krummhorns', SIMG, xi (1909–10), 590–93

G. Kinsky: 'Doppelrohrblatt-Instrumente mit Windkapsel', AMw, vii (1925), 253–96

R. Weber and J.H.van der Meer: 'Some Facts and Guesses concerning Doppioni', GSJ, xxv (1972), 22–9

B.R. Boydell: The Crumhorn and Other Renaissance Windcap Instruments (Buren, 1982)

K.T. Meyer: The Crumhorn: its History, Design, Repertory, and Technique (Ann Arbor, 1983)

BARRA R. BOYDELL

Doppio pedale (It.: 'double pedal'). A term used in organ music to denote the simultaneous use of both feet on the pedals. The technique is found in the 15th-century organ tablature of Adam Ileborgh (since 1981 in a private collection, previously US-PHci; ed. in CEKM, i, 1963) and in music by 17th- and 18th-century north German organ composers such as Reincken and Tunder, as well as in the works of Bach. See also PEDAL, §5.

□

Doppler. Polish, later Hungarian, family of composers and instrumentalists.

(1) (Albert) Franz [Ferenc] Doppler (b Lemberg [now L'viv], 16 Oct 1821; d Baden, nr Vienna, 27 July 1883). Flautist, composer and conductor. He was taught music first by his father, the composer and oboist Joseph Doppler, and made his début in Vienna at the age of 13. After several concert tours with his brother (2) Karl Doppler he settled in Pest, where he was first flautist in the German Town Theatre from 1838 and in the Hungarian National Theatre from 1841. His first opera, Benyovszky, was produced at the National Theatre in 1847, and four further Hungarian operas were staged there during the next ten years, all with considerable success; they combine Italian influences (e.g. Donizetti) with elements of Russian (Benyovszky), Polish (Vanda) and Hungarian music. Again with his brother Karl, he took part in the foundation of the Philharmonic Concerts in 1853 under the conductorship of Ferenc Erkel. The two brothers continued to make successful joint concert tours throughout Europe, including a visit to the Weimar court in 1854 when they met Liszt, and a tour with the violinist Karl Hubay to London in 1856. Franz moved in 1858 to Vienna, where he worked for the Hofoper as first flautist and assistant (later chief) conductor of the ballet. Most of his ballet music, which was widely popular, dates from this period and his only German opera, Judith, was performed at the court in 1870. From 1865 he taught the flute at the Vienna Conservatory. He was a skilful orchestrator, and his transcriptions of some of Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsodies became well known.

WORKS
(selective list)

STAGE
performed at Hungarian National Theatre, Pest, unless otherwise stated

Benyovszky, vagy A kamcsatkai száműzött [Benyovszky, or The Exile of Kamchatka] (op, 3, R. Köfflinger, after A. von Kotzebue), 29 Sept 1847, vs (Pest, n.d.)
Ilka és a huszártoborzó [Ilka and the Recruiting of the Hussars] (comic op, 3, J. Janotyckh von Adlerstein), 29 Dec 1849, vs (Pest, n.d.), parts (Hamburg, n.d.)
Vanda (op, 4, T. Bakody), 30 Dec 1850, H-Bn, arr. pf (Pest, n.d.)
Két huszár [Two Hussars] (3, J. Czanyuga), 12 March 1853, Bn, ov., arr. pf (Pest, n.d.)
Salvator Rosa (melodrama, A. Degré), 1855 [collab. F. Erkel and K. Doppler]
Erzsébet [Elizabeth] (op, 3, J. Czanyuga), 6 May 1857 [ov. and Act 1 only; Act 2 by F. Erkel, Act 3 by K. Doppler], Bn
Judith (Ger. op, 4, S.H. Mosenthal), Vienna, Hofoper, 30 Dec 1870, vs (Vienna, 1870)
15 ballets

OTHER WORKS

Chbr: L'oiseau des bois, idyll, fl, 4 hn/pf/hmn, op.21 (Mainz, n.d.); Fantaisie pastorale hongroise, fl, pf, op.26 (Mainz, n.d.); Fantaisie sur des motifs hongroises, 2 fl, pf, op.35 (Mainz, n.d.) [collab. K. Doppler]; Variations sur un air hongrois, vn, pf (Pest, n.d.)
Pf (solo unless otherwise stated): Pásztor hangok [Shepherd Sounds] (Pest, 1859); Kossuth-Marsch (Pest, n.d.); Impromptu (Pest, 1872); Ungarische Weisen, 4 hands, op.41 (Berlin, n.d.); Blumen-Walzer, op.44 (Hamburg, n.d.) [from ballet Melusine]; Einzugsmarsch zum Jagd-Carneval (Vienna, 1880); Introduction and Allegro, 4 hands, Régi magyar zene gyöngyei, ed. I. Fáy (Vienna, n.d.); Aus der Heimat, 4 hands (Vienna, n.d.)
Other works: Hungarian ov., orch; ballads, vv, orch; male choruses; songs; orch transcrs., incl. F. Liszt: [6] Hungarian Rhapsodies (Leipzig, 1874–5), Grand galop chromatique (Leipzig, 1906)

(2) Karl [Károly] Doppler (b Lemberg [now L'viv], 12 Sept 1825; d Stuttgart, 10 March 1900). Flautist, composer and conductor, brother of (1) Franz Doppler. He made several concert tours with his brother at a comparatively early age, and like him was a flautist in Pest, first in the German Town Theatre then in the National Theatre, where he also became conductor until 1862, and where his Hungarian Singspiel, A gránátos tábor ('The Grenadier Camp', libretto by J. Czanyuga), was performed in February 1853. During this time he composed songs and incidental music with some success, both for German stage works and for Hungarian folk plays. From 1865 to 1898 he was Kapellmeister at the Stuttgart court, where he was again involved in work for the theatre. His prizewinning song Honfi dal ('Patriotic Song'; Pest, 1857) was probably his most popular composition; he also wrote some piano pieces and collaborated with his brother in various arrangements for male chorus.

(3) Árpád Doppler (b Pest, 5 June 1857; d Stuttgart, 13 Aug 1927). Pianist and composer, son of (2) Karl Doppler. He studied at the Stuttgart Conservatory and later taught the piano there. In 1880 he went to New York to teach at the Grand Conservatory, but returned after three years to his previous post in Stuttgart. From 1889 he was chorus master at the Stuttgart Court Opera, and his comic opera Halixula was performed there in 1891. His other compositions include an opera on Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing, orchestral variations, a festival overture and some piano music.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (Z. Gárdonyi); GroveO (D. Legány)
'Karl Doppler und seine Beziehungen zu Ungarn', Pester Lloyd (15–16 March 1900)
K. Isoz: Doppler Ferenc levelei Erkelhez [Letters from Doppler to Erkel] (Budapest, 1911) [also in Ger.]
K. Isoz: 'Doppler Ferenc', A zene, xv (1933–4), 7–11
M. Eckhardt: 'Liszt es a Doppler-testvérek szerepe a Filharmóniai Társaság alapitásában' [The role of Liszt and the Doppler brothers in founding the Philharmonic Society], Zenetudományi dolgozatok, v (1982), 133–9

ZOLTÁN GÁRDONYI/R

Dor [Doro, d'Or], Josquin (fl 1516–22). Franco-Flemish singer and composer. He was in the employ of Cardinal Ippolito d'Este from 1516 to 1520, when he moved to Rome, first joining the musici segreti of Pope Leo X and then the papal chapel. He was still a member of the latter choir in 1522, but is absent from lists of its personnel prepared in 1525 and 1526. His only extant work is a Missa de nostra domina whose Credo was composed by his colleague Beausseron (Bonnevin; ed. in CMM, xcv/1, 1982). It is based on the plainsong of Masses IX (Ky, Gl) and XVII (San, Ag), mostly paraphrased within an imitative texture, but sometimes treated as long-note cantus firmi. A notable feature of the mass is that Dor sometimes responded to repetition within the chant melody by repeating whole sections of polyphony, for instance in the Christe.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F.X. Haberl: Die römische 'Schola cantorum' und die päpstlichen Kapellsänger bis zur Mitte des 16. Jahrhunderts, Bausteine für Musikgeschichte, iii (Leipzig, 1888/R), 70–71
H.-W. Frey: 'Regesten zur päpstlichen Kapelle unter Leo X und zu seiner Privatkapelle', Mf, viii (1955), 412–37, esp. 432
L. Lockwood: 'Adrian Willaert and Cardinal Ippolito I d'Este', EMH, v (1985), 85–112, esp. 107, 111

RICHARD SHERR

Dorati, Antal (b Budapest, 9 April 1906; d Gerzensee, nr Berne, 13 Nov 1988). American conductor and composer of Hungarian birth. The son of professional musicians (his father was a violinist in the Budapest PO), he entered the National Hungarian Royal Academy of Music at the age of 14. He studied there with Bartók, Kodály and Leo Weiner, and also read philosophy at Vienna University. After graduating at 18 he became a répétiteur at the Hungarian State Opera, where he made his conducting début the same year (1924) and remained for four years.

In 1928 he became assistant to Fritz Busch at the Dresden Opera, then musical director at Münster (1929–33). He spent the next eight years as conductor with the Ballets Russes de Monte Carlo (successor to the Diaghilev company), taking musical charge of the De Basil wing after the 1938 split. He toured with the company in Europe, North America, Australia and New Zealand; his numerous guest appearances with major orchestras included his American concert début with the National SO of Washington, DC, in 1937. In 1941 he became musical director of the new American Ballet Theater and for four years helped significantly to establish its professional basis. He became an American citizen in 1947.

From 1945 Dorati acquired a distinguished reputation as an orchestral trainer, beginning with his postwar reorganization of the Dallas SO (1945–9). He then spent 11 years as musical director of the Minneapolis SO, making it internationally known through more than 100 recordings. His European tours at this time included an association with the LSO (with which he made his British concert début in 1946) that was influential on its later standards. He also took an active interest in the Hungarian refugee orchestra, the Philharmonia Hungarica, on its formation in 1957, later becoming its honorary president; between 1969 and 1973 he recorded with this orchestra all Haydn's symphonies, to widespread acclaim; these were followed by an equally admired series of Haydn operas with the Lausanne Chamber Orchestra. He was made a Chevalier des Arts et des Lettres by the French government, a Knight of the Swedish Order of Vasa, and in Britain was appointed KBE in 1984.

Antal Dorati, 1965

A frequent guest-conductor of opera in Europe and North America, Dorati made his Covent Garden début in 1962 with Rimsky-Korsakov's The Golden Cockerel. His talents usually benefited most from close and continuous contact with an orchestra, and he resumed a regular appointment in 1963 as principal conductor of the BBC SO, when he rebuilt its corporate personality after it had been a year without an appointed conductor. He moved to the Royal Stockholm PO in a similar capacity in 1966, and in 1970 he also became musical director of the National SO, which he conducted at the inaugural concert at the Kennedy Center (9 September 1971). From 1975 to 1978 he was senior conductor of the RPO, with whom he recorded Haydn's The Creation, The Seasons and Il ritorno di Tobia; and from 1979 to 1984 he was conductor laureate and music director of the Detroit SO. Throughout his career Dorati championed Bartók's music, conducting the première of his Viola Concerto (1949); he also gave the first performances of works including Hindemith's Sinfonia serena (1947), Piston's Symphony no.4 (1951), Session's Symphony no.4 (1960), Gerhard's Concerto for Orchestra (1965) and the seventh, eighth and tenth symphonies of Pettersson (1968, 1972 and 1973). His conducting was marked by vigorous direct rhythm, dramatic intensity and an acute ear for colour. In addition to his fresh, subtly detailed readings of Haydn's symphonies and vocal works, his numerous distinguished recordings include excitingly taut, idiomatic performances of Stravinsky's The Firebird, Petrushka and The Rite of Spring, and many works by Bartók and Kodály.

He composed more than 20 works in an idiom he described as 'recognizably contemporary but not afraid of melody', all publicly performed, and published numerous orchestral arrangements, including the Johann Strauss music for Graduation Ball (1939), a widely successful ballet by David Lichine. His autobiography, Notes of Seven Decades, was published in 1979.

WORKS
(selective list)

Vc Conc., 1946; The Way (dramatic cant., Claudel), A, Bar, nar, chorus, orch, 1954; Sym. no.1, 1957; The Two Enchantments of Li-Tai-Po, Bar, chbr orch, 1958; Missa brevis, chorus, perc, 1959; Magdalena, choreographic poem; Pf Conc., 1974; Sym. no.2 (1986)

11 other orch and vocal works, chbr and pf pieces, songs

Principal publishers: Belwin Mills, Chester, Leeds, Suvini Zerboni

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Turner: 'Antal Dorati Talks', Records and Recording, xviii/2 (1974–5), 12 [with discography by M. Ashman]; suppl. to discography, xviii/5 (1974–5), 81

R. Fairman: 'Transatlantic Maestro', Records and Recording, xxiii/2 (1979–80), 16–17

A. Clark: 'Dorati at 80', Classical Music (5 April 1986), 11

J.L. Holmes: Conductors: a Record Collector's Guide (London, 1988), 72–5

NOËL GOODWIN

Dorati [Doratius], Girolamo [Geronimo, Hieronymus] (b Lucca, bap. 26 Jan 1590; d Lucca, between 17 Aug and 11 Oct 1617). Italian composer and organist. He was the son of the trombonist Michele Dorati and the grandson of the composer Nicolao Dorati. Girolamo was the organist at S Piercigoli in Lucca. His Psalmi ad Vesperas for eight voices (Venice, 1609) are divided into two choirs, each with organ continuo. In these works he did not merely alternate the two choruses following the verse divisions, but varied the structure, often achieving an impressive sonority within a homophonic style that is harmonically simple but rhythmically rich. Two motets by him in Promptuarii musici (Strasbourg, 1617[1]) are also double-choir works.

For bibliography see DORATI, NICOLAO.

GABRIELLA BIAGI RAVENNI

Dorati, Nicolao [Nicolaus, Niccolo, Nicolò] (b Lucca, *c*1513; d Lucca, Feb 1593). Italian composer and trombonist. In late 1543 he was a trombonist in the Cappella di Palazzo, instituted in that year by the Lucca government. In 1557 he became its director, an appointment that he held until his death. His madrigals show a capable assimilation of contemporary trends: the prevalence of five-part writing, and the use of madrigalisms and the fashionable misura cromatica. Florentine influence is evident in a growing prevalence of homorhythm and text-declamation. In his six- to eight-voice madrigals he frequently divided the voices into two choirs; these works were almost certainly intended for the Cappella di Palazzo, where performance forces varied between voices, instruments and a combination of the two. Interestingly, some of Dorati's poetic choices show an awareness of growing Protestantism in Lucca.

Nicolao's younger brother Bartolomeo (d Lucca, Feb 1603) was also a trombonist in the Cappella di Palazzo from February 1546 until his death. Nicolao's sons, Michele (b Lucca, bap. 20 May 1560; d Lucca, 5 Sept 1620) and Lorenzo (b Lucca, bap. 29 Jan 1563; d Lyons, 1611–1613), also belonged to the group, the former as trombonist from 19 July 1581 until his death, the latter only from 21 October 1582 until 31 January 1584.

WORKS

Il primo libro di madrigali, 5vv (Venice, 1549)
Li madrigali, libro secondo, 5–8vv (Venice, 1559)
Il terzo libro de madrigali, 5vv (Venice, 1561)
Il quarto libro de madrigali, 5vv (Venice, 1567)
Le stanze della signora Vittoria Colonna [recte Veronica Gambara], 4vv (Venice, 1570)
Madrigali ... libro primo, 6vv (Venice, 1579)
2 motets, 6vv, in 1585[1], 1585[3]; 1 madrigal, 5vv, in 1552[25]
1 motet, inc., I-PS

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Nerici: Storia della musica in Lucca (Lucca, 1879/R), 192ff
A. Bonaccorsi: Maestri di Lucca: i Guami e altri musicisti (Florence, 1967), 122–3
G. Biagi Ravenni: 'I Dorati, musicisti lucchesi, alla luce di nuovi documenti d'archivio', RIM, vii (1972), 39–81

GABRIELLA BIAGI RAVENNI

Đorđević, Vladimir R. (b Brestovac, 1 Dec 1869; d Belgrade, 22 June 1938). Serbian ethnomusicologist, historiographer and composer. After completing music studies with Fuchs at the Vienna Conservatory and with Šebor in Prague, he worked as a music teacher and choirmaster in various Serbian cities including, from 1912, Belgrade. During World War I he taught in Bordeaux, Nice and Beaulieu and from 1918 held a position at the Stanković Music School in Belgrade. He collected many folktunes from Serbia and Macedonia and was among the first Serbian musicians to collect bibliographical information on Serbian composers. These were partly printed in Muzički glaznik (1922), of which he was an editor. He founded a museum at the Stanković Music School to exhibit his collection of folk musical instruments. His compositions, based mainly on folk themes, include arrangements for violin, piano, chorus and orchestra.

WRITINGS

Prilozi biografskom rečniku srpskih muzičara [Contributions to a biographical dictionary of Serbian musicians] (Belgrade, 1950)
Ogled srpske muzičke bibliografije do 1914. godine [Essay on Serbian music bibliography up to 1914] (Belgrade, 1969)

FOLKSONG EDITIONS

Srpske narodne melodije: južna Srbija [Serbian folktunes: south Serbia] (Skopje, 1928)
Srpske narodne melodije: predratna Srbija [Serbian folktunes: prewar Serbia] (Belgrade, 1931)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Milojević: 'Vladimir Đorđević i njegov odnos prema narodnom muzičkom blagu' [Đorđević and his relationship to folk music], Srpski književni glasnik, new ser., liv (1938), 548–54
L. Janković: 'Vladimir Đorđević i narodne igre' [Djordjević and folk dances], Glasnik Etnografskog muzeja u Beogradu, xviii (1955), 249–58 [with Eng. summary]
K. Lazić: 'Bibliografska delatnost Vladimira R. Đorđević' [Bibliographical activity of Đorđević], Bibliotekar, xviii (1966), 164–97
L. Janković: 'Vladimir Đorđević, pionir etnomuzikologije u Srbiji' [Đorđević, the pioneer of ethnomusicology in Serbia], in V. Đorđević: Ogled srpske muzičke bibliografije do 1914. godine (Belgrade, 1969), 9–32
R. Pejović: Kritike, članci i posebne publikacije u srpskoj muzičkoj prošlosti [Criticism, articles and other publications on Serbian music history] (Belgrade, 1994), 126–8

ROKSANDA PEJOVIĆ

Dordiglione (It.). See TOURDION.

Doret, Gustave (b Aigle, 20 Sept 1866; d Lausanne, 19 April 1943). Swiss composer and conductor. From 1885 to 1887 he studied with Joachim in Berlin, then went to Paris to study composition with Théodore Dubois and Massenet. There he was appointed second conductor for the Concerts d'Harcourt, and conductor of the Société Nationale's concerts. He conducted the first performance of his friend Debussy's Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune on 22 December 1894. His fame grew, as both conductor and composer. The Opéra-Comique in Paris successfully gave his Les armaillis in 1906, and another opera, La tisseuse d'orties, was performed in Paris in 1926. He was very attracted to opera and wrote, in collaboration with René Morax, several works for the Théâtre du Jorat, which opened at Mézières (Vaud) in 1908 with Henriette. These works created a form of popular theatre which met with great success in Switzerland, France and Belgium. He also wrote a great deal of choral music.

He received numerous honours, and throughout his life he exercised a considerable influence on music in Switzerland through his uncompromising personality and his abilities as a conductor. As music correspondent for newspapers in Lausanne and Geneva, he advocated orientating the music of French Switzerland, until then more influenced by German music, towards France. He wrote almost no purely orchestral works, preferring vocal music through which he could express the spirit of the people as revealed in their historical dramas and legends. His use of timbre and his unprepared modulations remind one of Debussy, although he lacked Debussy's subtlety, while his lyrical lines betray the pupil of Massenet. Nevertheless his art is always sincere and he created a tradition conforming to the sensibilities of his countrymen.

WORKS
(selective list)
for complete list see Pellizzari

OPERAS

Maedeli (2, H. Cain and D. Baud-Bovy), 1901; Les armaillis (légende dramatique, 2, Cain and Baud-Bovy), 1906, rev. 1913; Henriette (4, R. Morax), 1908; Le nain du Hasli (légende dramatique, 2, Cain and Baud-Bovy), 1908, rev. 1920; Aliénor (légende, 5, Morax), 1910; La nuit des quatre temps (4, Morax), 1912; Loÿs

(3, P. Quillard), 1913; Tell (4, Morax), 1914; Davel (5, Morax), 1923; La tisseuse d'orties (drame lyrique, 4, Morax), 1926; La servante d'Evolène (4, Morax), 1937

OTHER WORKS

Les 7 paroles du Christ, orat, 1895; La fête des vignerons (festival play, Morax), 1905; La fête des vignerons (festival play, P. Girard), 1927
Suite tessinoise, orch; Str Qt, D; Pf Qnt, c
Choral pieces, songs
Principal publishers: Foetisch, Rouart

WRITINGS

Musique et musiciens (Lausanne, 1915)
Lettres à ma nièce sur la musique en Suisse (Geneva, 1918)
Pour notre indépendance musicale (Geneva, 1919)
La musique en Suisse romande: trois précurseurs: Hugo de Senger, G.A. Koëlla, Henri Plumhof (Lausanne, 1930)
Temps et contretemps (Fribourg, 1942)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Dupérier: Gustave Doret (Lausanne, 1932)
V. Vincent: Le Théâtre du Jorat (Neuchâtel, 1933)
R. Morax: 'L'oeuvre de Gustave Doret', Revue musicale de Suisse Romande, xix/3 (1966), 3–4
'Lettres inédites de Gustave Doret à René Morax', Revue musicale de Suisse Romande, xix/3 (1966), 7–10
P. Meylan: 'Gustave Doret: musicien de théâtre', SMz, cvi (1966), 293–7
P. Pellizzari: Gustave Doret: catalogue (Lausanne, 1990)

PIERRE MEYLAN/CHRIS WALTON

Dörffel, Alfred (b Waldenburg, Saxony, 24 Jan 1821; d Leipzig, 22 Jan 1905). German music librarian and writer on music. He received his first musical training from the Waldenburg organist J.A. Trube. At the age of 14 he moved to Leipzig, where he studied with G.W. Fink, C.G. Müller, K. Kloss and later Mendelssohn and Schumann. He soon established himself in Leipzig as a piano and theory teacher. At Schumann's invitation, he took a position with Breitkopf & Härtel in 1845, preparing piano arrangements and, from the following year, also contributing to the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik. In his reviews of 1848–9 he judged Schumann's new compositions to make him a worthy successor to Beethoven. Later he wrote for the Musikalisches Wochenblatt and from 1865 to 1881 was a regular contributor to the Leipzig Nachrichten. In 1860 he succeeded C.F. Becker as curator of the music department of the Leipzig Stadtbibliothek. The following year he opened his own music lending library, which was continued by his son; it was later purchased by C.F. Peters and became the basis of the Musikbibliothek Peters (founded in 1894). Dörffel was awarded an honorary doctorate from the University of Leipzig in 1885.

Dörffel was noted for his meticulous work in editing and proofreading works for Breitkopf & Härtel and Peters; Wagner praised his supervision of the publication of the score of Tristan und Isolde. His many editions include several volumes of the Bach Gesellschaft Gesamtausgabe of the works of Bach (including cantatas 111–30 and 171–90); he also compiled an index to the first 120 cantatas and a thematic index to Bach's instrumental works. Dörffel was important as a music critic in Leipzig and contributed significantly to the Gewandhaus concerts.

WRITINGS

Katalog der Dörffelschen Musikbibliothek (Leipzig, 1861)
Instrumentationslehre (Leipzig, 1864) [trans. of H. Berlioz: Traité de l'instrumentation, Paris, 1844]
Der Orchesterdirigent (Leipzig, 1864) [trans. of H. Berlioz: Le chef d'orchestre, Paris, 1856]
Thematisches Verzeichnis der Instrumentalwerke von J.S. Bach (Leipzig, 1867, 2/1882)
Friedrich Rochlitz: sein Leben und Wirken (Leipzig, 1868)
Führer durch die musikalische Welt (Leipzig, 1868)
Literarisches Verzeichnis der im Druck erschienenen Werke von Robert Schumann (Leipzig, 1871)
Thematisches Verzeichnis zu den Kirchenkantaten 1–120 [von J.S. Bach] (Leipzig, 1878)
Geschichte der Gewandhausconcerte zu Leipzig (Leipzig, 1884/R)
Numerous articles in NZM (from 1846)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

NDB (H. Becker)
E. Bernsdorf: Neues Universal-Lexikon der Tonkunst (Dresden, 1856–61, suppl. 1865)
F.G. Jansen, ed.: Robert Schumanns Briefe: neue Folge (Leipzig, 1886, 2/1904; Eng. trans., 1890)
O. von Hase: Breitkopf & Härtel: Gedenkschrift und Arbeitsbericht (Leipzig, 1894, 4/1917–19, enlarged 5/1968 by H. von Hase)
W. Altmann, ed.: Richard Wagners Briefwechsel mit seinen Verlegern (Leipzig and Mainz, 1911)
J. Thym: 'Schumann in Brendel's Neue Zeitschrift für Musik from 1845 to 1856', Mendelssohn and Schumann: Essays on their Music and its Context, ed. R.L. Todd and J. Finson (Durham, NC, 1984), 21–36
A. Horstmann: Untersuchungen zur Brahms-Rezeption der Jahre 1860 bis 1880 (Hamburg, 1986)
S. Pederson: Enlightened and Romantic German Music Criticism, 1800–1850 (diss., U. of Pennsylvania, 1995)

GAYNOR G. JONES/SANNA PEDERSON

Dorfman, Joseph (b Odessa, 3 Aug 1940). Israeli composer of Ukrainian birth. He studied at the Odessa Conservatory (1958–65) with Starkowa (piano) and Kogan (composition) and at the Gnesin Institute (1968–71) where he completed the doctorate. In 1973 he moved to Israel, where he was appointed to a post at Tel-Aviv University. Though the works he wrote in the USSR were influenced by early 20th-century Russian music and by Hindemith, in Israel he turned to graphic notation and to specifically Jewish subjects.

WORKS
(selective list)

Works in conventional notation: Prelude and Fugue, pf, 1963; Suite, pf, 1964; Perpetuum mobile, str, 1965; Sonata [no.1], pf, 1965; Str Qt [no.1], 1965; Divertimento, str, 1966; Sym., orch, 1967; Sonata [no.2], pf, 1969; Str Qt [no.2], 1970; Suite, orch, 1970; Ov., orch, 1971
Graphic works: Ascent, pf, perc, 1974; The Stones of Jerusalem, ballade, 1974; Twelve Tribes of Israel, perc, slides, 1974; Visions, 1 str, 1974; Duo, 1 str, kbd, 1975; Kol nidrei, vn, 1975; Solo, kbd, 1975; Songs of Shulamit, S, fl, va, hpd, 1975; Str Qt, 1975; Wind Qnt, 1975

Principal publisher: Israel Music Institute

WILLIAM Y. ELIAS

Doria, Clara. See ROGERS, CLARA KATHLEEN.

Dorian. The common name for the first of the eight church modes, the authentic mode on D. Originally 'Dorian' was an ancient Greek tribal name that was used to designate one of the harmoniai, as mentioned in Plato's Republic or Aristotle's Politics, along with the names Phrygian, Lydian, Mixolydian and some others. The 2nd-century Hellenistic theorist Ptolemy of Alexandria used these terms, along with Hypodorian, Hypophrygian and Hypolydian, to designate the seven tonoi, or transposition keys. Four centuries later Boethius, basing his discussion on Ptolemy, described these seven names as toni, tropi, vel modi ('tones, tropes or modes') in the fourth book of his De institutione musica, still with the meaning of transposition keys. In the late 9th-century Carolingian treatise Alia musica, an eighth name, Hypermixolydian, taken from another part of the fourth book of Boethius's treatise, was added; this term was replaced by Hypomixolydian in the Nova expositio, a commentary on the Alia musica. This set of eight terms, beginning with Dorian and ending with Hypomixolydian, was given a new sense in the Nova expositio: it designated a set of eight diatonic species of the octave, each conceived as the juxtaposition of a 5th and a 4th, which were said to be the tonal embodiments of the eight modes of Gregorian chant.

In the Middle Ages and Renaissance the Dorian mode was described in two ways: as the diatonic octave species from d to d′, divided at a and composed of a first species of 5th (tone–semitone–tone–tone) plus a first species of 4th (tone–semitone–tone), thus d–e–f–g–a + a–b–c′–d′; and as a mode whose FINAL was d and whose AMBITUS was c–d′, with upward extension 'by licence' as far as e′ or f′ (the note b♭′ could also occur 'by licence'). In addition to the final, the note a – the tenor of the corresponding first psalm tone – was regarded as an important melodic function in the first church mode.

'Dorian mode' is often used to refer to the general tonal organization of Renaissance and Baroque polyphonic compositions whose chief scale degree is D, whose parts range more or less within the Dorian or the HYPODORIAN ambitus and whose principal cadential degrees are D, A and F in the first rank and C, G and E in the second rank. Compositions of this kind, though their most important harmony is what is now called the D minor triad, cannot really be said to be in the harmonic tonality, or key, of D minor. This polyphonic application of the Dorian mode is often found transposed up a 4th to G, and works having the properties of the polyphonic Dorian mode but set in the cantus mollis (i.e. with a one-flat signature), and having G as their chief scale degree, are often said to be 'in G Dorian'. As late as the 18th century, works in the tonal minor mode were notated as if in the polyphonic Dorian mode, with one fewer flat in the key signature and the flattened sixth degree treated as an accidental (e.g. Bach's solo Violin Sonata in G minor BWV1001).

'Dorian mode' is often used to describe European folksongs, and even non-Western melodies, in which the relationship of the most prominent scale degree (the final or apparent tonic) to the scale type seems similar to that in the Dorian church mode.

See also MODE.

HAROLD S. POWERS

Dorian, Frederick (b Vienna, 1 July 1902; d Pittsburgh, 24 Jan 1991). American musicologist and critic of Austrian birth. In 1925 he took the doctorate at the University of Vienna, where he worked with Adler. He was trained in composition and conducting at the Vienna Music Academy and was a member of the Schoenberg seminar in Vienna; he also studied theory and conducting with Webern and the piano with Edward Steuermann. He was music critic of the Berliner Morgenpost from 1930 to 1933. In 1934 he became Parisian music correspondent for the Frankfurter Zeitung and from 1935 to 1936 he wrote for the Neues Wiener Journal. In America he held the position of professor of music at Carnegie-Mellon University from 1936 until 1971, when he was appointed Andrew Mellon Lecturer in Music there; he became professor emeritus in 1975. In 1977 he was visiting professor of musicology at the Hebrew University, Jerusalem, and later visiting professor of music history at the Curtis Institute of Music, Philadelphia.

Dorian's books are written both for the musical scholar and the educated general reader. In Commitment to Culture (1964) he gave an account of the history of patronage and its contemporary sources in western Europe; The Musical Workshop (1947) is a lucid discussion of the creative process in music; and The History of Music in Performance (1942) documents its subject with the works and writings of major composers from the Renaissance to the present.

WRITINGS

Die Fugenarbeit in den Werken Beethovens (diss., U. of Vienna, 1925; extracts in DTÖ, xiv (1927), suppl., 75–106)
The History of Music in Performance (New York, 1942, 2/1966/R)
The Musical Workshop (New York, 1947/R)
'Webern als Lehrer', Melos, xxvii (1960), 101–6
Commitment to Culture: Art Patronage in Europe – its Significance for America (Pittsburgh, 1964)

PAULA MORGAN

Dorian sixth. The raised sixth degree in the minor mode; the interval between the tonic and the raised 6th (e.g. C–A♮ in C minor, instead of C–A♭). It takes its name from the Dorian mode, in which the raised 6th is a distinguishing characteristic. The term is generally applied to neo-modal music, for example to the use of a subdominant major triad in the minor mode (F–A♮–C in C minor).

Dorian Wind Quintet. American ensemble, formed in the summer of 1961 at the Berkshire Music Festival through a programme funded by the Fromm Foundation; its members are the flautist Karl Kraber (who replaced John Perras), the clarinettist Jerry Kirkdale (who was preceded by William Lewis and Arthur Bloom), the oboist Gerard Reuter (preceded by Charles Kuskin and David Perkett), the bassoonist Jane Taylor and the horn player David Jolley (preceded by Robin Graham, Barry Benjamin and William G. Brown). The group made its New York recital début in October 1961 and toured Europe during the following season, giving part of a series of concerts sponsored by various American embassies. In addition to serving from 1963 to 1973 as ensemble-in-residence for the SUNY system, the quintet has also been a resident ensemble at Brooklyn and Hunter colleges, CUNY. It not only offers exemplary performances of the standard repertory for its instrumentation, but has also encouraged many leading composers of the late 20th century to write for the medium; among those who have produced works especially for the ensemble are Berio, Foss, Davidovsky and Druckman. Its recordings include the complete wind quintets of George Perle.

JAMES WIERZBICKI/R

Dorico, Valerio (b Ghedi, nr Brescia, *c*1500; d Rome, 1565). Italian printer. His entire professional career was spent in Rome. From March 1526 to April 1527 he collaborated with the printer Giovanni Giacomo Pasoti of Parma on six of the eight music books Pasoti printed for the Roman publisher Jacomo Giunta. By 1531 Dorico was established as an independent printer and bookseller, producing at least five collections of music and one musical treatise during the next six years. In all the music books with which his name is associated from the 1520s and 1530s, Dorico used the double-impression method of printing; after Pasoti's disappearance from Rome during the sack of 1527, Dorico retained possession of his types and decorative materials, using them in his own editions in the 1530s. After a musical hiatus of seven years, he adopted the single-impression method, which was devised by Attaingnant, for his edition of Morales's masses in 1544. Until his death he and his brother Luigi printed 26 music books and two musical treatises. His heirs continued to print music until 1572, contributing seven additional publications.

The musical activity of the Dorico firm comprised about a sixth of its total production, and slightly more than half of all the music printed in Rome during the middle third of the 16th century, including masses, motets, madrigals, laudi, lute tablatures and instrumental ricercares. Some historical importance attaches to Dorico's otherwise limited musical activity: he is credited with the first collection to use the word 'madrigal' to describe its contents (Libro primo de la serena, 1530), and he was the first to print the sacred music of Palestrina and Animuccia. Dorico claimed credit for choosing the music he printed only twice in his career. Apparently he preferred to receive commissions, often from local composers, a practice that guaranteed him both financial support and free editorial assistance from the musicians he served. The only contract known to survive, dated 12 May 1564, is for 30 copies of Eliseo Ghibel's De festis introitibus missarum ... liber primus at the request of P.P. Caracena, a singer in the papal choir; Dorico is listed as the printer and Antonio Barrè as his editor. Dorico's surviving music books are well organized, thoughtfully illustrated and reasonably well edited. His folio editions of masses by Morales, Palestrina, Rodio and Animuccia are modelled visually on Antico's Liber quindecim missarum, but the belief that he inherited typographical material from Antico seems to be apocryphal.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F. Barberi: 'I Dorico, tipografi a Roma nel Cinquecento', La bibliofilia, lxvii (1965), 221–61
D. Kamper: Studien zur instrumentalen Ensemble-Musik des 16. Jahrhunderts in Italien, AnMc, no.10 (1970)
S.G. Cusick: Valerio Dorico: Music Printer in Sixteenth-Century Rome (Ann Arbor, 1981)
D.G. Cardamone: 'Madrigali a tre et arie napolitane: a Typographical and Repertorial Study', JAMS, xxxv (1982), 436–81
M. Buja: Antonio Barrè and Music Printing in Mid-Sixteenth-Century Italy (diss., U. of North Carolina, 1996)

SUZANNE G. CUSICK/MAUREEN BUJA

Döring, Johann Friedrich Samuel (b Gatterstädt, nr Querfurt, 16 July 1766; d Altenburg, 27 Aug 1840). German bass and teacher. He attended the Thomasschule in Leipzig from 1779, and as a pupil of the choirmaster J.F. Doles he soon became the chorus prefect. In 1789 he met Mozart, who gave an organ concert there, but he declined Mozart's offer to take him to Vienna, as he was receiving a royal bursary to study theology at the University of Leipzig. He took his final examination in Dresden in 1791 and became a private tutor. On Doles's recommendation, he became Kantor at the Nikolaikirche in Luckau, Lower Lusatia, in 1793; two years later, however, he moved to Görlitz, where he was active for almost two decades as a Kantor and schoolteacher. In 1814 he succeeded J.G. Krebs as Kantor of Altenburg.

Thoroughly schooled in music, Döring appeared with success as a bass, a violinist, a pianist and an organist. He was also highly regarded as a conductor and singing teacher. His sacred music was admired by his contemporaries for its melodic qualities, but it was largely unpublished and almost none has survived. His desire to provide a good general musical education is evident in his attempt to make the melodies in his chorale books easier to read by means of a system of letter notation similar to German organ tablature.

WORKS

extant works only

Ström' hin (cant.), chorus, orch, 1823, D-LEm; Neujahrslied (M. Claudius), 4vv, pf (Altenburg, n.d.)
Arrs. (for 4vv, unless otherwise stated): Heilig ist Gott (several versions), 1794, LUC; Die drei Rosen des Lebens (from the Dan.), 4vv, fl, pf (Görlitz, 1799); Vollständiges Görlitzer Choralmelodienbuch (Görlitz, 1802; suppl., 1811); Sammlung einiger Lieder und Arien, 1v, pf, i (Görlitz, 1809); 12 vierstimmige Chorgesänge (Leipzig, 1814); Vollständiges Altenburger Choralmelodienbuch (Altenburg, 1815); 27 Choralmelodien (Leipzig, 1827); Jauchzet dem Herrn alle Welt (Telemann, formerly ascribed to Bach), motet, 8vv (Leipzig, n.d.)

WRITINGS

Etwas zur Berichtigung des Urtheils über die musikalischen Singechöre auf den gelehrten protestantischen Schulen Deutschlands (Görlitz, 1796–1811) [4 essays]
Anweisung zum Singen (Görlitz, 1805)
Etwas zur Berichtigung des Urtheils über den musikalischen Unterricht und die Übung dieser schönen Kunst (Altenburg, 1817)
Articles in Lausitzer Monatsschrift (1806–8)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; FétisB; RiemannL; ZahnM
M. Gondolatsch: Görlitzer Musikleben in vergangenen Zeiten (Görlitz, 1914)
K. Paulke: 'Musikpflege in Luckau', Niederlausitzer Mitteilungen, xiv (1918)
M. Gondolatsch: 'Beiträge zur Musikgeschichte der Stadt Görlitz, II', AMw, viii (1926), 348–79

BERND BASELT

Dorini, Gregorio. See TURINI, GREGORIO.

Dorman, Mrs. English contralto. See YOUNG family, (7).

Dorn (Ger.). See PLECTRUM.

Dorn, Heinrich Ludwig Egmont (b Königsberg [now Kaliningrad], 14 Nov 1804; d Berlin, 10 Jan 1892). German conductor, composer and journalist. He studied the piano, singing and composition in Königsberg, made several long journeys throughout Germany, during which he met Weber in Dresden, and completed his studies with Ludwig Berger, Bernhard Klein and Zelter in Berlin, where his first opera, Rolands Knappen, was produced successfully in 1826. At the same time he became a co-editor of the Berliner allgemeine Muzikzeitung, for which he wrote a spirited defence of the beleaguered Gaspare Spontini. Over the next two decades he built a solid reputation as a conductor of opera, holding theatre posts at Königsberg (1828), Leipzig (1829–32), where he taught counterpoint to the young Schumann, Hamburg (1832), Riga (1834–43), and Cologne (1844–8). He organized the first music festival of the Russian Baltic provinces in Riga (1836), and directed the Lower Rhine music festivals (1844–7). His most prestigious appointment (in 1849, after Nicolai's death) was as co-conductor, with Wilhelm Taubert, of the Berlin Hofoper. Afer his retirement from that post in 1869, he remained active in Berlin for many years as a teacher and writer. Two of his sons, Alexander (1833–1901) and Otto (1848–1931), also made musical careers in Berlin.

In his later years Dorn was a particularly bitter critic of Wagner, his collected writings include negative reviews of Tristan, Die Meistersinger and the first Bayreuth festival. His enmity, reciprocated by Wagner, was partly personal. The two men had started out as friends, first in Leipzig, where Dorn conducted two of Wagner's student works, and later in Riga, where Wagner conducted Dorn's Der Schöffe von Paris. They then quarrelled over Wagner's dismissal from Riga, which Wagner believed Dorn had engineered. Nevertheless Dorn's friend Liszt persuaded him to conduct Tannhäuser, the first Wagner opera performed in Berlin, in 1855; and through much of his career Dorn seems to have been attracted by aspects of Wagner's style. His Die Nibelungen (1854), by far the most successful of his operas, is based on the medieval Nibelungenlied, a source approached by Wagner when sketching the Ring cycle, and uses an ambitious scheme of reminiscence motifs – which may also reflect the influence of Liszt, who conducted the opera's première at Weimar. Dorn's other operas are highly conservative, given equally to sentimentality and to light humour. They were overshadowed in popularity by his numerous collections of songs and salon pieces and by his patriotic choruses.

WORKS

STAGE

Rolands Knappen (komische Oper, 2 Dorn), Berlin, Königstädtisches, 15 July 1826, vs (Berlin, 1826)

Der Zauberer und das Ungetüm (melodrama, 3, Dorn and J. von Minutuoli), Berlin, 20 April 1827

Die Bettlerin (romantisch-komische Oper, 4, C. von Holtei), Königsberg, Stadt, 24 July 1828, vs (Leipzig, 1828)

Abu Kara (romantische Oper, 3, L. Bechstein), Leipzig, Stadt, 27 Sept 1831, vs (Leipzig, *c*1831)

Der Schöffe von Paris (komische Oper, 2, W.A. Wohlbrück), Riga, Stadt, 1 Nov 1838

Das Banner von England (romantische Oper, 4, K. Alt, after W. Scott), Riga, Stadt, 8 Nov 1841

Die Nibelungen (grosse romantische Oper, 5, E. Gerber, after the medieval saga), Weimar, Hof, 22 Jan 1854, vs (Berlin, 1854)

Ein Tag in Russland (komische Oper, 3, J.C. Grünebaum, after E. Scribe), Berlin, Hof, 19 Dec 1856

Gewitter bei Sonnenschein (Spl, 1, C. Nuitter), Dresden, 19 Sept 1865, vs (Berlin, 1866)

Der Botenläufer von Pirna (komische Oper, 3, M. Heydrich, after Mélesville [A.-H.-J. Duveyrier]), Mannheim, 3 Dec 1865, vs (Berlin, 1865)

Rosavra, unperf.; Artaxerxes, inc.; Das Schwanenmädchen, inc.

OTHER WORKS

Orch: Festouvertüre, op.8; Dombaufestouvertüre, op.60; Festouvertüre, op.69; Ouvertüre zur Genesungsfeier des Königs, Berlin, 1850

Chbr: Sonata, E, pf, vc/vn, op.5; Bagatelle, 2 vn, va, vc, op.106 (Berlin, 1872)

Numerous choral works, incl. TeD, solo vv, chorus, orch, op.65 (Mainz, *c*1850); pf pieces, *c*100 songs

WRITINGS

Spontini in Deutschland (Leipzig, 1830)

Aus meinem Leben (Berlin, 1870–77)

Das provisorische Statut der Königlichen Akademie der Künste in Berlin (Berlin, 1875)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (W. Kahl, D. Sasse)

T. Kroyer: 'Die circumpolare Oper: zur Wagnergeschichte', JbMP 1919, 16–33

E. Newman: The Life of Richard Wagner, i (London, 1933/R)

H. Grohe: 'Heinrich Dorn: ein "Kollege" Richard Wagners', ZfM, Jg.106 (1939), 706–8

A. Rauh: Heinrich Dorn als Opernkomponist (diss., U. of Munich, 1939)

A.P. Leverett: 'Liszt, Wagner, and Heinrich Dorn's Die Nibelungen', COJ, ii (1990), 121–44

V. Lindenberg: 'Heinrich Dorn's Tätigkeit in Riga', Die Musik der Deutschen im Osten und ihre Wechselwirkung mit den Nachbarn: Cologne 1992, 169–83

ADELYN PECK LEVERETT/CHRISTOPHER FIFIELD

Dornel, Louis-Antoine (*b c*1680; d Paris, after 1756). French organist and composer. His name first appears in the archives of Ste Madeleine-en-la-Cité, Paris, where he was appointed organist in 1706; he had competed against Rameau on that occasion, and owed his success to Rameau's refusal to accede to the conditions laid down by the church authorities. Ten years later, in 1716, Dornel left Ste Madeleine for the abbey of Ste Geneviève where, after deputizing for André Raison until the latter's death in 1719, he was appointed his successor. In 1725 he also became maître de musique to the Académie Française, in which capacity he was required to write and direct a motet for the feast of St Louis celebrated each year by the Académie on 25 August. References in the Mercure de France (April 1726, June and July 1729, December 1736) reveal that the motets composed for these occasions were also heard at the Concert Spirituel. Unfortunately none of them has survived. Despite indications that Dornel's compositions were found pleasing (his motet of 1727 was considered 'fort beau', and the Mercure for August 1731 reports that his motet Domine Dominus noster performed on St Louis's Day that year was 'fort applaudi'), he lost his post to Rebel in 1742. The circumstances of this premature retirement suggest that Dornel was the victim of an intrigue. Apart from a reference in the Mercure of June 1745 to the performance of his motet Laudate pueri Dominum at the king's mass, nothing more is known about his career. In view of La Borde's statement, published in 1780, that Dornel had died some 25 years previously at the age of 75, and in the absence of more precise information, it must be assumed that he died during the 1750s, but not before 1756, the year of his gift of an autograph manuscript of organ pieces to a clerical acquaintance in Le Mans.

Although none of Dornel's occasional sacred music has survived, much else has. His extant works include his first serious instrumental compositions, published under the title Livre de simphonies contenant six suittes en trio … avec une sonate en quatuor (Paris, 1709). This was quickly followed by two other instrumental collections, one of violin sonatas and flute suites, one of trio sonatas; he also left a published collection of harpsichord pieces and the organ manuscript referred to above (the contents of which probably date from the early 1700s). He was active as a composer of secular vocal music, and published at least two solo cantatas; his name also appears in connection with airs published in Mercure (July 1731, August 1748) and in the collections of Ballard (between 1704 and 1735), as well as in other popular anthologies. His theoretical work, Le tour du clavier sur tous les tons majeurs et mineurs, is in part concerned with opposing the use of 'tons outrez' (keys with more than three sharps or flats).

Dornel, composing at a time when Italian music was prominent in Paris, was most overtly influenced and inspired by Corelli and the Italian school in his trios and solo sonatas. For example, the 1711 violin sonatas each have either four or five movements, alternately slow and fast, with a characteristic interplay of motifs between solo and bass, Corellian suspensions and circling sequences. Much of Dornel's writing has a polyphonic bias, due no doubt to his training as an organist. The most telling observations on his music are those by his contemporaries. La Borde reflected that Dornel 'avait beaucoup de réputation dans son temps, et la méritait en partie'. In his own time, Nemeitz (Séjour de Paris, 1727) made favourable mention of him, as did the Mercure, which described the harpsichord pieces as 'fort estimées et de très facile exécution'. Dornel is certainly a minor figure, and his music is uneven. But at its best, for example in the fine set of organ versets in A minor, it reveals a competence and imaginativeness approaching that of Clérambault.

WORKS
all printed works published in Paris

VOCAL

Les caractères de la musique (cant.), 1v, insts (1721)
Le tombeau de Clorinde (cant.), B, vn (1723)
Airs pubd singly in the Mercure de France and in 18th-century anthologies
Motets, lost, incl.: Eructavit cor meum, 1726; Domine Dominus noster, 1731; Laudate pueri Dominum
Les élèves d'Apollon (divertissement), perf. Concert Spirituel, 1729, lost

INSTRUMENTAL

Livre de simphonies contenant 6 suittes en trio, fls, vns, obs, ... avec 1 sonate en quatuor, ?op.1 (1709)
[8] Sonates, vn, et [4] suites, fl, bc, op.2 (1711); 4 suites ed. H. Ruf (Kassel, 1988)
[8] Sonates en trio, fls, vns, obs, op.3 (1713)
Concerts de simphonies ... contenant 6 concerts en trio, fls, vns, obs (1723)
Pièces de clavecin (1731); ed. C. Caumont (Paris, 1982)
Org pieces, F-Psg, ed. N. Dufourcq, L.-A. Dornel: Livre d'orgue (Paris, n.d.)

WRITINGS

Le tour du clavier sur tous les tons majeurs et mineurs (Paris, 1745)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

AnthonyFB; La BordeE; LaLaurencieEF
N. Dufourcq: Le livre de l'orgue français, iv (Paris, 1972)
B. Gustafson and D. Fuller: A Catalogue of French Harpsichord Music, 1699–1780 (Oxford, 1990)
G. Cantagrel, ed.: Guide de la musique d'orgue (Paris, 1991)
M. Benoit, ed.: Dictionnaire de la musique en France aux XVIIe et XVIIIe siècles (Paris, 1992)

EDWARD HIGGINBOTTOM

Dorset Garden Theatre. London theatre used in the 17th century for productions with music. See LONDON (i), §V, 1.

Dorsey, Jimmy [James] (b Shenandoah, PA, 29 Feb 1904; d New York, 12 June 1957). American popular and jazz clarinettist, alto saxophonist and bandleader, brother of Tommy Dorsey. He began playing the slide trumpet and the cornet at the age of seven, but changed to reed instruments in 1915. In September 1924 he joined the California Ramblers, a popular dance band in New York, then between 1925 and 1934 he worked freelance with leading New York bands such as those of Paul Whiteman, Jean Goldkette and Vincent Lopez. More importantly, from 1926 he began recording extensively with leading Midwestern white jazz pioneers, including Bix Beiderbecke and Red Nichols. He played in Nichols's popular group the Five Pennies, a widely influential band not only in the USA but also in England; this established Dorsey as a leading jazz reed player.

In 1934 Dorsey founded with his brother the successful but short-lived Dorsey Brothers Orchestra. After a public argument in 1935 Jimmy took over the leadership of the group and built it into one of the leading dance bands of the late 1930s and early 1940s. The band had big hits with the singers Helen O'Connell and Bob Eberly (formerly Eberle), including Amapola, Green Eyes and Tangerine (all 1941, Decca). Their successful formula – daringly unsuited to conventional dancing – involved changes of mood, tempo and rhythmic character within the course of a song. They also recorded the film soundtrack for Gershwin's Shall We Dance? (1937), accompanying Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers. Dorsey appeared with the group in several films, including The Fabulous Dorseys (1947), a fictionalized version of the brothers' careers. He continued to lead dance bands sporadically after World War II until his death, at one period joining Tommy to run a new Dorsey Brothers Orchestra (1953–6).

In the 1920s Dorsey was a major model for other jazz musicians on the clarinet and the saxophone: Lester Young and Coleman Hawkins both acknowledged his influence. He had an excellent technique and played in a fluid, polished style which could be strongly rhythmic. In the years 1941–2, at the height of the swing era, his was one of the most popular swing bands.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

SchullerSE
R. English: 'The Battling Brothers Dorsey', Eddie Condon's Treasury of Jazz, ed. E. Condon and R. Gehman (New York, 1956/R), 303–16
G.T. Simon: The Big Bands (New York, 1967, enlarged 2/1971, 4/1981)
H. Sanford: Tommy and Jimmy: the Dorsey Years (New Rochelle, NY, 1972)
C. Garrod: Jimmy Dorsey and his Orchestra (Zephyrhills, FL, 1980) [discography]
C. Garrod: The Dorsey Brothers and their Orchestra (Zephyrhills, FL, 1992) [discography]

JAMES LINCOLN COLLIER

Dorsey, Thomas A(ndrew) [Georgia Tom]. (b Villa Rica, GA, 1 July 1899; d Chicago, 23 Jan 1993). American blues singer, gospel songwriter, pianist and publisher. The son of an African-American revivalist preacher, he moved in 1910 to Atlanta, where he came under the influence of local blues pianists. He left for Chicago during World War I and studied at the Chicago College of Composition and Arranging, also becoming an agent for Paramount records. Dorsey's compositions at the time included Riverside Blues (recorded by King Oliver's Creole Jazz Band, 1923, Para.). His skill as a pianist, composer and arranger gained him a job with Les Hite's Whispering Serenaders in 1923, and soon afterwards he formed his own Wildcats Jazz Band, with which Ma Rainey performed. As 'Georgia Tom' he made several recordings with her, usually including the slide guitarist Tampa Red (Hudson Whittaker). In the late 1920s Dorsey formed a duo with Tampa Red; their blues recording Tight like that (1928, Voc.) became a great hit and prompted further collaboration in recordings of 'hokum' blues, combining urban sophistication, rural humour and often ribaldry, as in Terrible Operation Blues (1930, Champion). Dorsey's first gospel song, Someday, Somewhere, was published in the collection Gospel Pearls (1921), and in the early 1930s he turned exclusively to gospel music. In 1931 he organized the first gospel choir at the Ebenezer Baptist Church in Chicago; the following year, with Sallie Martin, he founded the National Convention of Gospel Choirs and Choruses, and also opened the Thomas A. Dorsey Gospel Songs Music Publishing Company, the first publishing house for the promotion of black American gospel music.

Dorsey was the most influential figure in the gospel song movement. His earliest gospel songs, including Stand by me, If I don't get there and We will meet him in the sweet by and by, were strongly influenced by C.A. Tindley.

They are based on church hymns and spirituals and lack the swing and open structure of his later songs. In the early 1930s he made a small number of gospel recordings, including How about you (1932, Voc.) and If you see my Saviour (1932, Voc.), and the widely recorded song If I could hear my mother pray (1934, Voc.). His light voice, suited to the earlier blues recordings, lacked conviction and excitement for gospel music and he made no further recordings, concentrating instead on writing songs that others would interpret. Of these his most successful was Precious Lord, take my hand (1932), written after his first wife's death. As he became known for his compositions, Dorsey toured with Mahalia Jackson and Roberta Martin, selling sheet music of his songs. Among the best known are There'll be peace, I will put my trust in the Lord and The Lord has laid His hands on me. As late as 1983 he figured prominently in the acclaimed documentary film Say Amen, Somebody!, which included his own performance of Precious Lord as well as a clip of the song being sung by Mahalia Jackson.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Bontemps: 'Rock Church Rock', The Book of Negro Folklore (New York, 1958), 313–20

T. Heilbut: The Gospel Sound: Good News and Bad Times (New York, 1971/R)

H.C. Boyer: 'Analysis of his Contributions: Thomas A. Dorsey, "Father of Gospel Music"', Black World, xxiii/9 (1974), 20–28

J. O'Neal and A. O'Neal: 'Georgia Tom Dorsey', Living Blues, xx/March (1975), 17–34 [interview]

I.V. Jackson: Afro-American Religious Music: a Bibliography and Catalogue of Gospel Music (Westport, CT, 1979)

C. Cooper: 'The Real Thomas Dorsey', Village Voice (5 Oct 1982)

J.A. Standifer: 'Reminiscences of Black Musicians', Jazzforschung/Jazz Research, xvii (1985), 205–22

J.A. Wright: 'Music as Cultural Expression in Black Church Theology and Worship', Journal of Black Sacred Music, iii (1989), 1–5

M.W. Harris: The Rise of Gospel Blues: the Music of Thomas Andrew Dorsey in the Urban Church (New York, 1992)

PAUL OLIVER/R

Dorsey, Tommy [Thomas] (b Mahanoy Plane, PA, 27 Nov 1905; d Greenwich, CT, 26 Nov 1956). American popular and jazz trombonist and bandleader, brother of Jimmy Dorsey. He studied the alto horn, baritone horn and cornet with his father, a part-time musician, and later changed to the trombone. From 1926 he worked with such prominent dance orchestras as those led by Jean Goldkette and Paul Whiteman. He then moved to New York, where he was in demand as a player in studio and pit orchestras. In 1934 he founded with Jimmy the successful but short-lived Dorsey Brothers Orchestra. After a public argument in 1935 the two separated, and Tommy organized a dance band of his own which quickly became one of the most popular of the swing era. The band's music was characterized by smooth, well-crafted arrangements, notably lively swing versions of Marie and Song of India (both 1937, Vic.), both with brilliant solos by Bunny Berigan. However, Dorsey's orchestra was known primarily for its dance music, frequently with singers such as Jack Leonard, Frank Sinatra and Jo Stafford. Its biggest hits were dreamy romantic ballads such as I'll Never Smile Again (1940, Vic.), in which Sinatra was joined by a vocal group, the Pied Pipers. After the collapse of the swing-band movement in the late 1940s Dorsey struggled to keep his band intact. Eventually he brought in his brother Jimmy and together they ran another version of the Dorsey Brothers Orchestra (1953–6) which had some success, particularly in its television appearances.

Dorsey was vastly admired as a trombonist by other musicians for his technical skill. His tone was pure, his phrasing was elegant and he was able to play an almost seamless legato line; as a player of ballads, exemplified by his rendition of his big band's theme song I'm gettin' sentimental over you (1935, Vic.), he has rarely been surpassed.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveJ

A. McCarthy: Big Band Jazz (London, 1974)

H. Sanford: Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey: the Dorsey Years (New Rochelle, NY, 1972)

G. Schuller: The Swing Era: the Development of Jazz, 1930–1945 (New York, 1989)

C. Garrod: The Dorsey Brothers and their Orchestra (Zephyrhills, FL, 1992) [discography]

R.L. Stockdale: Tommy Dorsey: on the Side (Metuchen, NJ, 1995) [discography]

JAMES LINCOLN COLLIER

Dortmund. Town in North Rhine-Westphalia, Germany. It played a conspicuous part in the popularization of music during the industrial expansion of the 19th century. In the Middle Ages Dortmund belonged to the Hanseatic League and enjoyed a prosperity which it subsequently lost and recovered only in the 19th century; medieval affluence is reflected in the main churches, the Marienkirche, the Reinoldikirche and the Propsteikirche St Johannes der Täufer, all begun in the 13th and 14th centuries. The chronicle of Dietrich Westhoff (which covers the period 750–1550) mentions the music performed in connection with the foundation of the Dominican priory in 1331. In 1415 an organ was placed in its Propsteikirche by Prior Hermann von Recklinghausen. The Marienkirche was supplied with an organ a century later, by which time Dortmund also had a company of Stadtpfeifer. Music was cultivated in the schools at this time and freely used in religious drama. After the Reformation a Dortmunder Gesangbuch (1585), based on the widely used Rostocker Gesangbuch, was issued.

Although Dortmund was a small town of about only 300 inhabitants it assumed at least regional musical importance during the 18th century through its collegium musicum, which owed much to the energy and initiative of its first two directors, the Kantors Johann Gottlieb Preller (1727–86) and Friedrich Günther. A collegium musicum programme normally comprised an overture, a symphony and a selection of vocal and choral music. Preller was also responsible for introducing the new-style biblical oratorios of J.H. Rolle (1716–85) to Dortmund. As the industrial potential of the Ruhr district was increasingly realized through coal and iron production, Dortmund expanded, as did its musical activities. By 1830 the town possessed a concert orchestra of 38 players and in 1840 a Liedertafel was established. In 1843 the tercentenary of the Gymnasium stimulated much music-making, while two years later a Musikverein was formed. Conspicuous figures in music education in the town included Friedrich Eduard Wilsing (1809–93), Franz Giesenkirche (1830–85), and Rudolf Breidenstein, who conducted the Dortmunder Musikverein for 20 years.

A Westphalian Music Festival was inaugurated in 1852, with a choir of 300 drawn from Bielefeld, Dortmund, Gütersloh, Haltingen, Hamm, Soest and Witten which performed the standard repertory. The festival was first held in Hamm, but in 1854 and 1862 moved to Dortmund, where it continued to be held at irregular intervals; it was restructured under Julius Janssen (1852–1921) in 1890, when the size of the choir was doubled. Max Bruch, however, was apparently disenchanted with Dortmund and its district, observing that 'Westphalia is a region where people are interested in material things, but not in intellectual or musical matters'.

At the beginning of the 20th century, with the population of Dortmund standing at 145,000, musical affairs were much influenced by Janssen, Georg Hüttner (1861–1919) and Carl Holtschneider (1872–1951). Janssen was a conductor of wide interests, responsible for numerous Westphalian music festivals. He led the Musikverein and, after 1896, the Philharmonisches Orchester. Holtschneider, who arrived in Dortmund in 1887 as organist of the Propsteikirche, was a distinguished recitalist, conducted many choral and orchestral performances and founded a Palestrina Choir in 1901, followed by a madrigal choir and a Bach-Verein. Through the latter a Dortmund Bach Festival took place in 1922. As conductor of the Philharmonisches Orchester, Hüttner worked closely with Holtshneider in establishing a conservatory, which had its own choir. Among later developments were the Lehrgesangverein, for the training of teachers of singing in schools (1936) and a Jugendmusikschule, founded in 1951. The city remains a significant regional centre for music festivals.

Dortmund lacked a court theatre in the 18th century, and it was only in the early 19th century that it became possible to mount opera productions in various venues, notably in the Kühnscher Saal, which was used from 1837 until its destruction by fire in 1903. It was not until 1904 that a new Theater am Hiltropwall was opened in Dortmund. In 1944 the theatre was destroyed in an air raid. After the war, performances were given in the hall of the Pädagogische Akademie until a specially designed small theatre, the Kleines Haus, was opened in 1950. The Grosses Haus opened in 1966, with Wilhelm Schüchter as its musical director. Subsequent musical directors have included Marek Janowski, Hans Wallet, Klaus Weise, Siegfried Köhler and Moshe Atzmon.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG2 (U. Tadday)

B. Friedhof: Geschichte der Instrumentalmusik in Dortmund seit dem Ausgange des 18. Jahrhunderts (Dortmund, 1912)

R. Schneider: Studien zur Geschichte des Musiklebens der Stadt Dortmund vom frühen Mittelalter bis zum Ausgange des 19. Jahrhunderts (Kassel, 1934)

W. Salmen: Geschichte der Musik in Westfalen bis 1800 (Kassel, 1963–7)

M. Geck and U. Tadday, eds.: Wilhelm Feldmanns 'Versuch einer kurzen Geschichte des Dortmunder Conzerts, von seiner Entstehung an bis jetzt 1830' (Hildesheim, 1994)

PERCY M. YOUNG

Dorus-Gras [née Van Steenkiste], Julie(-Aimée-Josephe [Joséphine]) (b Valenciennes, 7 Sept 1805; d Paris, 6 Feb 1896). Belgian soprano. She studied at the Paris Conservatoire and made her début at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, Brussels, in 1825. She sang Elvire at the first Brussels performance of Auber's La muette de Portici (1829) and also took part in the historic performance of that opera on 25 August 1830 that allegedly sparked off the Belgian revolution. In 1831 she was engaged at the Paris Opéra, and during the next 15 years created many roles there, including Alice in Robert le diable (1831), Eudoxie in La Juive (1835), Marguerite de Valois in Les Huguenots (1836), Teresa in Benvenuto Cellini (1838) and other roles by Auber and Halévy. In 1839 she appeared in London on the concert platform, and in 1847 she sang the title role of Lucia di Lammermoor in English at Drury Lane, with Berlioz conducting. In 1849, when she sang at Covent Garden in three of her most famous roles, Elvire (La muette de Portici), Alice and Marguerite de Valois, she was still, according to Chorley, 'an excellent artist, with a combined firmness and volubility of execution which have not been exceeded, and were especially welcome in French music'. She was not a particularly convincing actress, but the accuracy of her singing and the brilliance of her voice ensured her success.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

T. Gautier: Histoire de l'art dramatique en France depuis vingt-cinq ans (Paris, 1858–9/R)

H.F. Chorley: Thirty Years' Musical Recollections (London, 1862/R, abridged 2/1926/R by E. Newman)

G. Chouquet: Histoire de la musique dramatique en France (Paris, 1873/R)

S. Wolff: L'Opéra au Palais Garnier (1875–1962) (Paris, 1962/R)

ELIZABETH FORBES

Dorward, David (Campbell) (b Dundee, 7 Aug 1933). Scottish composer. He studied English and philosophy at the University of St Andrews (1951–5), where he immersed himself in the university's musical life, studying music with Thorpe Davie, and in 1957 he won a scholarship to the RAM where he studied with Manuel Frankell and John Gardner (1957–60). From 1962 to 1991 he was a music producer at the BBC's Edinburgh music department, producing concerts of chamber music by contemporary Scottish and international composers.

Dorward has composed not only songs and shorter pieces, but works of larger scale, such as the two symphonies and the Piano Concerto (1976), written for Ronald Stevenson. His earlier works were diatonic, but with the String Quartet no.3 (1966) he broke with formalism, employing cell-like structures to make up a musical argument. His melodies are always harmonically conceived. An example of his humour can be found in his unconventional octet, Histoire (1974). His musical, A Christmas Carol (1967), has proved popular, and a tenderness appears in such recent works as Summer Moonlight (1994).

Other works strike a more elegiac note, such as the Violin Sonata, composed for Leonard Friedman, and the Second Symphony (first performed in Glasgow by the BBC Scottish SO in 1997), which contains passages inspired by the massacre of Glencoe and the Balkan troubles of the 1990s.

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: A Christmas Carol (musical, D. Dorward, R. Eyre, A. Secchi), 1967, Edinburgh, Dec 1967; Tonight, Mrs Morrison (op, 1, G. Bruce), op.43, 1968, Glasgow, 1969

Orch: The Cooper o' Fife, comedy ov, op.1, 1958, rev. 1969; Conc., op.9, wind, perc, 1960; 3 Summer Interludes, op.12, 1960; Sym. no.1, op.13, 1961; Festivities for Young Orchestra, op.20, 1962; Variations on an Old Scots Air, op.22, 1963; Conc., op.30, vn, str, 1965; Conc., op.35, vc, str, 1966; Sinfonietta, op.34, str, 1966; Sonata concertante, op.48, 14 str, 1970; Pf Conc., 1976; Va Conc., op.54a, 1982; Golden City, op.80, 1988; Measured Notes of Set Music, op.88, 3 str orch, 1994; Sym. no.2, op.91, 1995

Vocal: Deer on the High Hills, op.25 (C. Smith), S, Bar, orch, 1960; 5 Songs for Children, op.23, unison vv, pf, 1963; The Fervent Fire, op.28, S, Bar, SATB, orch, 1964; Freedom is a Noble Thing, op.29

(J. Barbour), Bar, spkr, orch, 1964; 4 Songs, op.40 (J. Clare), T, pf, 1967; Thalassa (The Singers), op.38 (G. Bruce), S, A, T, B, 1967; A Scots Cantata, op.46 (Anon., W. Dunbar), SSA, orch, 1969; A Faustus Scena, op.47 (C. Marlowe), Bar, vn, vc, pf, 1970; The Wolf and the Lamb, op.50 (R. Henryson), SATB, orch, 1970; The Goldyn Targe, op.56 (Dunbar), SATB, orch, 1972; The Garden of Love, op.61, T, hn, pf, 1973; God is our refuge and strength, op.67 (Ps xlvi), SATB, org, 1976; A Garland of Wild Flowers and Thistles, op.68, high v, eng hn, pf, 1977; 3 Bird Songs, op.83 (S. Conn), 1v, pf, 1991; For Your Tomorrow.. . ., op.84 (D. Shepherd), SATB, org, 1992; The Lantern-Bearers, op.92 (R.L. Stevenson), Treble/high v, pf, 1996; In the Still Air (H. Bonar), 1v, 4 insts/rec, pf, 1997

Unacc. choir or chorus: The Weather Beasts, op.36 (M. Brown), SATB, 1966; Exsultate justi, op.52, SATB, 1971; Summer Moonlight, op.90 (E. Brontë), SSAA, 1994

4 Str Qts: no.1, op.3, 1958; no.2, op.24, 1963; no.3, op.33, 1966; no.4, op.55, 1972

Other inst: Diversions, 6 cl, op.5; Elegy, op.8, hn, 4 vc, 1959; Divertimento, op.15, brass, 1961; A Christmas Carol Concert, recs, pf, 1962; Cassation, op.41, fl, ob, vn, vc, pf, 1967; Little Suite, op.39, 4 trbn, 1967; Air, Strathspey and Reel (Wind Qnt), op.44, 1968; Sarabande and Allegro Burlesco, fl, vc, pf, 1972; Histoire, op.62, 8 pfmrs, 1974; Qt (Rus in urbe), op.64, cl, vn, vc, pf, 1975; Fantasy-Variations, op.66, va, pf, 1976; Sonata no.1, op.70, vn, pf, 1978; Caledonian Caprice, op.73, wind band, ad lib bagpipes, 1979; Sax Qt, op.72, 1979; The Cairn of the Hosts, vn, pf, 1980; Wind Qnt, op.78, 1982; Caledonian Caprice, op.73, wind band, bagpipes ad lib, 1979

Works for brass band, pf, org, vn and pf, vn; other chbr works

Incid. music, documentary film scores, music for radio and TV

Principal publishers: Berben, Curwen, Galliard, Heinrichshofen, OUP, Rosehill

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Wilson: 'Ready for the Baton Charge', Glasgow Herald (26 March 1997)

DAVID C.F. WRIGHT

Doss, Adolf von (b Pfarrkirchen, Bavaria, 10 Sept 1823; d Rome, 13 Aug 1886). German composer and writer. The descendant of a Swedish noble family which had moved to Germany for religious reasons, he studied at the Dutch Institute in Munich from 1835 to 1843. After some secret journeys to Switzerland, he moved there to enter the Jesuit Order in Brig (11 November 1843). He studied at Fribourg, Vals-les-Bains (France), Namur, Maastricht, Cologne and Leuven and was ordained a priest on 12 September 1855. He was active in Münster (1855–62), Bonn (1862–6) and Mainz (1866–73). While he was in Mainz (where he was also a local superior of the Jesuit community) the Jesuit Order was being suppressed in Germany. He moved in 1873 as an exile to Liège, becoming professor at the St Servais Jesuit college, where he was free to use his musical talents to serve the church. From 1884 he was father confessor at the Collegio Germanico in Rome.

Doss's outstanding contribution to the Jesuit Order is as a writer of practical religious works for young people: these were translated into several languages. His musical contribution is devoted exclusively to church music: masses, oratorios, over 100 motets and over 50 sacred songs. He wrote neither instrumental nor secular works: a few operas and some stage music in his repertory should really be classed as sacred music. He aimed to reform church music by expelling from it all secular influences. Through the circulation of his compositions in Germany, France, Belgium and Switzerland, he played an important role in the revival of sacred music.

WORKS

MSS in the St Servais college, Liège unless otherwise stated, operas, incidental music and oratorios for solo voices, chorus, orchestra and first performed at the St Servais college

STAGE

Jean-sans-terre (dialogue op, 3, A. Neut), 12 Aug 1875

Maurice et la légion thébaine (dialogue op, 3, A. de Wouters), 10 Aug 1876

Robert Bruce (dialogue op, 3, L. Bailly), 13 Aug 1878

Witikind, ou La conversion des Saxons (op, 2, D. Hasselle), 11 Aug 1880

Un vaut dix (oc, 1), solo vv, str qt, db, pf, 1881, unperf.

Percival (dialogue op, 4, Bailly), March 1883

OTHER WORKS

Incid music: Baudouin du Bourg (4, E. Halleux), Namur, Collège, July 1851, lib (Namur, 1851); Le triomphe de la croix, 28 Jan 1874; Le déluge (E. Turquety), 28 Nov 1879 [originally perf. Frankfurt, 5 Jan 1875 as Die Sündflut]; Le trait d'union (Bailly), 15 Feb 1879; La cité des hommes et la cité de Dieu (V. de Laprade), 13 Aug 1879; Les comtes de Moha (Hasselle), 1880, unperf.

Orats: Oratorio pour la béatification du vénérable Pierre Claver, Namur, Collège, 1852; La fosse aux lions (Turquety), 29 Dec 1875; L'hymne de la nuit (A. de Lamartine), 27 Dec 1876; Le festin de Balthazar (E. Brahy), 27 Nov 1879 (Liège, ?1880); Héliodore (biblical scene, A. Maus), 1881, unperf.; Ste Cécile (J. Demarteau), 28 Sept 1883 11 masses, most for 4vv, orch; over 150 motets and sacred songs, 1–4vv, most org acc. or unacc.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

O. Pfülf: Erinnerungen an P. Adolf von Doss, S.J., einen Freund der Jugend (Freiburg, 1887)

A. de Backer and others: Bibliothèque de la Compagnie de Jésus, ed. C. Sommervogel (Brussels, 1890–1932)

W. Bäumker: Das katholische deutsche Kirchenlied in seinen Singweisen (Freiburg, 1911/R)

J. Ilias: Un jésuite musicien: le Père de Doss (Liège, 1938)

GAYNOR G. JONES

Dos Santos. Portuguese family of organ builders, probably originating from Paço, Lumiar, near Lisbon. Several generations of this family have operated from Mangualde, beginning with Luís António dos Santos, who is remembered for his instrument no.8, dated 1808 and later installed in the nave of Viseu Cathedral (later moved to the Seminário, Viseu), and for his diverse mechanical and engineering skills. This organ is an example of the Portuguese Baroque at its height, despite the fact that most Portuguese builders by this time favoured neo-classical designs. It is not known how Luís António became an organ builder, but his great-grandson Artur Alexandre dos Santos believed that he once worked at Mafra. If this was so, then he could have been a labourer or apprentice for António Machado e Cerveira and Peres Fontanes during the construction of the new organs there between 1792 and 1807. Luís António built organs for the Franciscan church, Viseu (1796); the church of the Misericórdia, Penalva do Castelo; the church of the Misericórdia, Mangualde (1802); the convent of S António, Vila Cova de Alva (1811); and the parish church, Insua.

(Peres) António José dos Santos, the son of Luís António, worked extensively in northern Portugal as an organ builder. His son António José dos Santos júnior also built organs. The firm installed an instrument (perhaps not built by them) in the church of the Misericórdia, Penefiel (*c*1840), altered the organ in the sanctuary of Bom Jesus de Matosinhos, district of Oporto (*c*1859), restored the epistle organ of Oporto Cathedral in 1869, made repairs to the organ at Lordelo do Ouro, Oporto, and worked on the organ of S Bento da Vitória, Oporto (*c*1880). An inscription inside the wind-chest of the organ built by Manoel de Sá Couto for the church of Nossa Senhora da Abadia, Amares (1797–8), records that António José repaired or rebuilt this instrument in 1874. Antonío José built organs for the churches of S Nicolau (1882), the Misericórdia (1888) and Paranhos (1884), all in the district of Oporto, and maintained various other organs in the city. In 1899 the firm moved the organ built by Manoel de Sá Couto in 1817 and a matching decorative façade from the church of S Bento da Avé-Maria, Oporto, to the church of Bonfim, Oporto, where (with some additions) they were combined and installed as one instrument.

The early work of the firm seems to have followed conventional Portuguese traditions but in the later 19th century it was much influenced by foreign traditions and contemporary trends. The Oporto Cathedral epistle organ, for example, was made expressive by the addition of shutters behind the façade.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. de Azevedo: Baroque Organ-Cases of Portugal (Amsterdam, 1972)

W.D. Jordan: 'Organ Building Traditions in Portugal', The Organ, lxii (1983), 51–77

D. de Pinho Brandão: Orgãos da Sé do Porto e actividades de organeiros que nesta cidade viveram (Oporto, 1985)

W.D. Jordan: 'The Organ in Portugal', The Organ, lxv (1986), 163–85

M. Valença: A arte organística em Portugal (Braga, 1990–95)

W.D. JORDAN

Dostal, Nico(laus Josef Michaël) (b Korneuburg, Lower Austria, 27 Nov 1895; d Vienna, 27 Oct 1981). Austrian composer. The nephew and grandson of military composers, he studied at the church music department of the Vienna Music Academy in Klosterneuburg. He then worked as a theatre composer, arranger and orchestrator in Innsbruck, Salzburg and Berlin until in 1933 he had his first operetta success with Clivia. He also wrote for film. In 1943 he left Berlin and in 1946 returned to Austria. Of his later stage works, Doktor Eisenbart (1952) was the most successful, while Liebesbriefe (1955) was the only work to be first performed in his native country.

WORKS
(selective list)

Operettas: Clivia, Berlin, 1933; Die Vielgeliebte, Berlin, 1935; Prinzessin Nofretete, Cologne, 1936; Extrablätter, Bremen, 1937; Monika, Stuttgart, 1937; Die ungarische Hochzeit, Stuttgart, 1939; Die Flucht ins Glück, Stuttgart, 1940; Die grosse Tänzerin, Chemnitz, 1942; Manina, Berlin, 1942; Der Kurier der Königin, Hamburg, 1950; Zirkusblut, Leipzig, 1950; Doktor Eisenbart, Nuremberg, 1952; Liebesbriefe, Vienna, 1955; Rhapsodie der Liebe, Nuremberg, 1963

Other stage works: Eva im Abendkleid (comedy with music), Chemnitz, 1941; Süsse kleine Freundin (Kleine Freundin gesucht) (comedy with music), Wuppertal, 1949; So macht man Karriere (chamber musical), Nuremberg, 1961

Other works: film scores, waltzes, masses, songs

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GänzlEMT

P. Herz: 'Nico Dostal: Letzer der grossen Operetten Komponisten', Österreiche Autorenzeitung, xxiii/4 (1981), 11–12 [obituary]

N. Dostal: Ans Ende deiner Träume Kommst du nie (Innsbruck, 1982) [autobiography]

□

Dostoyevsky, Fyodor Mikhaylovich (b Moscow, 30 Oct/11 Nov 1821; d St Petersburg, 28 Jan/9 Feb 1881). Russian novelist. Son of a doctor, he was for a short time a military engineer. His first novel Poor Folk was published in 1846. Arrested in 1849 as a member of the Petrashevsky socialist group, he was condemned to death, reprieved at the place of execution, and sent to Siberia. During his penal servitude in Omsk (1850–54), Dostoyevsky underwent a profound spiritual crisis, and became deeply religious, seeing the Orthodox Church as the fullest expression of Christianity. In 1859 he received an amnesty and returned to St Petersburg. From then on he lived by writing. He suffered from epilepsy, was a compulsive gambler, and was constantly in debt. From 1867 to 1871 he lived abroad to escape his creditors. He was twice married, the second time (1867) to his young secretary. His most important works are Notes from the House of the Dead (1860–62), Notes from the Underground (1864), Crime and Punishment (1866), The Idiot (1868–9), The Possessed (1871–2) and The Brothers Karamazov (1879–80).

Dostoyevsky's works have probably had a more far-reaching influence on literature and thought both in Russia and the rest of the world than those of any other Russian novelist. With his profound understanding of good and evil, he was one of the first writers to analyse the psychological motives which prompt men's actions; many people have also acclaimed him as a religious philosopher of a 'new Christianity'. Although his ideas have certainly influenced many musicians, notably Mahler and Bartók, relatively few musical compositions have been inspired by his works, and few of these are by Russian composers. Dostoyevsky's ideas were ahead of their time, and it is only in the 20th century that composers have attempted to translate them into music. Since 1917 in the Soviet Union Dostoyevsky's reputation has fluctuated; many of his religious and political ideas are alien to the official Soviet viewpoint, and this may explain why so few Soviet composers have been attracted to his work.

WORKS SET TO MUSIC

Belïye nochi [White Nights] (short story, 1848): op by M. Tsvetayev, 1933; chamber op by Yu. Butsko, Moscow, 1973; Le notti bianche, op by L. Cortese, Milan, 1973

Zapiski iz myortvogo doma [Notes from the House of the Dead] (novel, 1862): Z mrtvého domu, op by Janáček, Brno, 1930

Igrok [The Gambler] (novel, 1866): op by Prokofiev, Brussels, 1929

Prestupleniye i nakazaniye [Crime and Punishment] (novel, 1866): Raskolnikoff, 2 ovs. by Rezniček, 1925, 1929; Delitto e castigo, op by A. Pedrollo, Milan, 1926; Crime et châtiment, film music by Honegger, 1934; Raskolnikov, incid music by J.H. Hallnäs, 1936; Raskolnikoff, op by H. Sutermeister, Stockholm, 1948; Raskolnikov's Traum, dramatic scene by G. Klebe, 1956; Raskolnikoff, ballet by Lutz, Linz, 1964–5; incid music by H.C. Maréchal

Idiot [The Idiot] (novel, 1868–9): Der Idiot, ballet by Henze, Berlin, 1952; Nastas'ya Filippovna, op by V.N. Bogdanov-Barezovsky, 1968

Mal'chik u Khrista na yolke [Christ, the Boy, and the Christmas Tree] (short story, 1876): Yolka, op by V.I. Rebikov, Moscow, 1903

Brat'ya Karamazovï [The Brothers Karamazov] (novel, 1879–80): Bratři Karamazovi, op by O. Jeremiáš, Prague, 1928; Der Grossinquisitor, dramatic orat by B. Blacher, Berlin, 1948; Bratři Karamazovi, pf suite by I. Berg, 1949

Also based on Dostoyevsky: Racconto d'inverno, ballet by Rossellini, Rome, 1947; Vocal sym. by V. Sommer, 1958

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveO (R. Taruskin)

V.G. Karatïgin: 'Dostoyevskiy i muzïka', Zhizn' iskusstva (15 and 29 Nov, 13 Dec 1921); repr. in Izbrannïye stat'i, ed. Yu.A. Kremlyov (Moscow, 1965), 251–62

A. Coeuray: 'Dostoïevski et la chanson populaire', ReM, iv/4–6 (1922–3), 149–55
A. Gozenpud: Dostoyevskiy i muzïkal'no-teatral'noye iskusstvo (Leningrad, 1981)
H. Robinson: 'Dostoevsky and Opera: Prokofiev's The Gambler', MQ, lxx (1984), 96–106
B. Shteynpress: 'Russkaya literatura v zarubezhnoy opere', [Russian literature in foreign operas], SovM (1986), no.6, pp.93–6

APRIL FITZLYON

Dot (Fr. point; Ger. Punkt; It. punto; Sp. punto; Lat. punctum). Dots are used in various contexts in Western notation. Above a note, a dot signifies that the note is to be played staccato or (if beneath a slur) portato (see BOW, §II, 2–3); in some keyboard sources of the early 16th century it may however indicate chromatic alteration. Placed to the right of a note, it indicates that the value of that note should be augmented by half (in earlier notation systems, the modification may be different; see DOTTED RHYTHMS and NOTE VALUES). In early mensural notation, a dot may indicate rhythmic division (see NOTATION, §III, 3, and PUNCTUM). Dots in vertical pairs or groups of four alongside a bar-line or (more commonly) a double bar indicate a passage to be repeated (see REPEAT). For tablature dot notations, see DOT-WAY.

RICHARD RASTALL

Dotār. See DUTĀR.

Dotesio. Spanish firm of music publishers. See under UNIÓN MÚSICAL ESPAÑOLA.

Dôthel [D'Hautell, D'hotel, D'hôtel, Dhotel, Dothel, Dötel, Dottel], Nicolas [Niccolò] [il figlio] (b Lunéville, 1721; d Florence, 1810). French flautist and composer, active in Italy. His father Nicolas (d Florence, 1761) was an oboist with the Lunéville bande, and first oboist with the grand duke's guard in Florence from 1739. The younger Nicolas also joined the bande in 1736 before being promoted to flautist in the grand duke's chapel and chamber music. From 1747 he is mentioned on the payroll as virtuoso di camera, and about 1777 he described himself as 'Imo flauto e maestro di concerto'. Burney, writing in 1770, mentioned Dôthel together with Nardini and Campioni as outstanding musicians, and in Cramer's Magazin der Musik (1783) Ribock discussed Dôthel's style of playing. There are accounts in Florentine newspapers of his concerts, while librettos from the Teatro della Pergola show that he took part in over 50 operas between 1790 and 1797.

Dôthel composed a great deal of flute music: Prince von Esterhazy's catalogue lists 95 pieces, including concertos, sonatas, duets and trios, all composed before about 1760. Though typical of their period, they also display originality and contrapuntal skill, notably in the canons and flute trios. Dôthel's Studi exemplify the contemporary state of flute technique in all the keys, and confirm his status as an influential teacher in northern Italy. The import (from France) of the flute into Italian ensemble playing can be traced back to him, and he aided its further development through his own works and arrangements for large ensembles, which include the bass flute. Other compositions for large ensembles by composers such as Lidarti, Mancinelli and Stabingher, show the influence of this 'Florentine School'.

An accurate listing of Dôthel's output is severely impeded by the fact that James Oswald used the pseudonym 'Dottel Figlio' for some of his works published in London at the time.

WORKS

some works, anon. or signed only ND, DN or DF, are doubtful

13 Fl concs.: 1 (Paris, ?1781); 10 I-Gl, 1 also Pca; 1 D-Rtt; 1 A-Wn
2 Muzette concs., F-Pn
9 Qts.: 6 for fl, vn, va, vc (Florence, ?1777); 2 for fl, 2 vn, b, I-Gl; 1 Gl, MTventuri, doubtful, ?Toeschi
92 Trios, 2 fl/fl, vn/2 vn, vc: 6, op.1 (Paris, before 1763, London, 1761); 6 op.4 (Paris, *c*1768), 6, op.5 (Paris, *c*1768); 1 in Nc; 19 in Gl, 3 also US-BEm, 2 also CH-Zz; 7 in F-Pn (6 Antonio!); 3 in US-BEm, 1 also CH-Zz; 1 in Zz; 5 in D-Bsb; 5 in I-Pca; 33 in GB-Lbl; 2 in I-Gl, doubtful, ?Lidarti
12 Trios, 3 fl: 6 in S-Skma (facs. Florence, 1988); 6 in I-Gl, 1 ed. N. Delius (Mainz, 1991)
37 Sonatas, fl, b/fl, vc: 1 in G.B. Sammartini, op.8 (London, 1759); 6 op.2 (Paris, *c*1763/R); 20 in GB-Lbl; 2 in I-Ps; 7 in D-KA, 1 also D-Rtt; 1 in S-Skma
8 Sonatas, cemb, fl, US-LOu
32 Duets, 2 fl/vn: 6, op.3 (London, *c*1763); 6 (London, *c*1758); 6 (London, 1762, 1765, 1770; Amsterdam, 1763); 6, op.3 (Paris, *c*1763, as op.5, London, after 1768); 4 in GB-Lbl; 3 in I-Gl; 1 in Mc, ed. N. Delius (Frankfurt, 1991)
Other works: Studi per il flauto (Paris, 1777), as 21 Capriccios in J. Gunn: The Art of Playing the German-Flute (London, 1803/R)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BurneyFI; DEUMM; EitnerQ; GerberL; SartoriL
Motivi di musica (MS, n.d., CH-Zz)
C.F. Cramer, ed.: Magazin der Musik (Hamburg, 1783–6/R), 719
J. Harich: 'Inventare der Esterházy-Hofmusikkapelle in Eisenstadt', Haydn Yearbook 1975, 5–125
M. Graziadei: Niccolò Dôthel, virtuoso di flauto traversiere: la sua vita ed i suoi concerti per flauto ed orchestra (thesis, U. of Pisa, 1987–8)
N. Delius: 'Nicolas Dôthel, oder ein janusköpfiger Oswald?', Festschrift Hans-Peter Schmitz, ed. A. Eichhorn (Kassel, 1992), 53–61
N. Delius: 'I duetti per due flauti di Nardini e la "scuola flautistica" a Firenze', Pietro Nardini, violinista e compositore: Livorno 1994, 35–51

NIKOLAUS DELIUS

Dot notation. See DOT-WAY.

Dotted note. See PERFORMING PRACTICE, §I, 5 and NOTE VALUES.

Dotted rhythms. Rhythms in which long notes alternate with one or more short notes, so called because the long notes are usually written with the aid of the dot of addition (see NOTE VALUES). Dotted rhythms are found in mensurally notated music of all periods; this article, however, deals mainly with music of the 17th and 18th centuries, in which it was customary to alter certain sorts of written rhythmic values in performance (see also NOTES INÉGALES; for notational meanings of the dot before 1600 see NOTATION, §III). The principal issue is the degree to which such rhythms sounded uneven, rather than the specific manner of their notation (e.g. the dot may be replaced by a rest or tie).

Dozens of contemporary theoretical and pedagogical sources indicate that the dot was ordinarily equal to one half the value of the note or rest preceding it, just as it is today. But the treatises also present various exceptions. The dot could stand for a tie (ex.1); dotted notes bearing ornaments, such as pre-cadential trills, were often held beyond their literal value to allow for fuller execution of the embellishments (see, for example, ex.12 below); and the dot could also represent a triplet (ex. 2; the notation at (b) was very rare before the 19th century, see below). According to both Loulié (1696, MS additions) and Métoyen, the length of the dot is regulated in proportion to the notes that follow it: the greater their value, the less the dot is sustained, and vice versa.

Ex.1

(a) = (b)

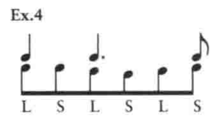
Ex.2



This view may account for some of the curious extra beaming found in works by Gigault and François Couperin (see, for example, ex.11 below). Both Nivers' Livre d'orgue (1667) and Loulié's revisions of his treatise employ the dot without a complementary shortening of the succeeding note (ex.3) to suggest the relatively mild unevenness of notes inégales, which was ordinarily unnotated; such 'half-dotted' notation was rare, however. But Gigault's Livre de musique pour l'orgue (1685) is full of ordinary (3:1) dotted rhythms that apparently indicate notes inégales, and it is possible that composers outside France (e.g. Purcell) also dotted passages of diminutions to indicate French-style inequality. Written dotting at the customary rhythmic level of inequality (usually the quaver) intermixed with straight notes is legion in French music, and as late as 1782 Pierre Marcou reported that there was not 'perfect agreement' concerning the distinction between notated rhythms and the unwritten custom of notes inégales. In such cases one can only appeal to taste and common sense in determining whether the dotted notes are to be contrasted with a milder degree of unwritten inequality. (See Hefling, 1993, pp.5, 32–5, 52–5 and 66–8 for further details.)

Ex.3

Of greater import is the lengthening of the dot occasioned by the French custom of notes inégales. Common sense would suggest that in a situation like ex.4, in which French performers would customarily apply long–short (L–S) inequality to the quavers, the note after the dotted crotchet in the upper voice should coincide with the shortened sixth quaver in the lower part. Four 18th-century theorists specify such elongation of dots and shortening of the following little note(s) in the context of notes inégales (Hotteterre, Morel de Lescer, Métoyen and Engramelle), and three of them advocate the practice for unaccompanied performance (i.e. independently of the need to synchronize separate voices in polyphony). Engramelle also extends the principle to the shortening of a quaver anacrusis that begins a phrase (see Hefling, 1993, pp.68–70 and 145–50). The length of such overdotting is proportional to the degree of inequality, which, although probably mild in most cases (a ratio of 2:1 or less), could theoretically range from scarcely perceptible to the 3:1 ratio of a notated dot, depending upon the character of the piece. The stronger the inequality, the longer the overdotting. (Morel de Lescer actually describes double dotting.)

Ex.4

Overdotting concomitant with notes inégales would have affected a wide range of French pieces, including the minuet, sarabande, loure, marche, entrée, and the introduction to the French overture. This practice probably constitutes the background for Quantz's famous instructions (1752) for the elongated execution of dotted rhythms in French overtures and dance music (even though he does not explicitly acknowledge a connection between overdotting and French inequality; see Hefling, 1993, pp.83–98, and in Historical Performance, 90–93). Quantz also advocates the contraction of upbeat tirades after a dot or rest in overtures, entrées, and furies, although only one earlier French source hinting at this has been located (Montéclair, *c*1735; see ex.5, and also Hefling in

Ex.5 Montéclair: Petite methode (1735), Entrée, pickups to be played 'à l'extremité du frapé [at the very end of the beat]'

Historical Performance, 88–9). J.S. Bach's revision of the French overture in the second part of the Clavier-übung (BWV 831a/831) seems much akin to Quantz's directives concerning the overture, and they are also echoed in the later writings of Kirnberger and Schulz, Türk, and Rellstab. (Only Kirnberger and Schulz, however, also mention French dance music, which was by then falling out of fashion.) Thus it would appear that French overdotting was a reasonably widespread performance mannerism.

Nevertheless, 20th-century claims of a universal 'French overture' or 'splendid' style have been considerably overstated (e.g. Dolmetsch, Dart and Donington), and there are no simple rules of thumb. In determining whether or not to introduce French overdotting (or any other rhythmic alterations) in a given work, today's performer must carefully consider (1) whether the composer in question may have been familiar with the custom; (2) whether the composer's manner of notation countermands such rhythmic alteration; (3) whether overdotted performance would have been practicable under the typical conditions of the period, in which full scores were relatively rare, performance parts were virtually never marked up during rehearsals (as is customary today), rehearsal time was generally scant, and the ensemble was typically controlled not by a conductor with a baton, but rather by a leader (usually the first violinist or harpsichordist) who also played with the group; (4) the expressive and stylistic impact of the altered rhythms.

Quantz was also the first writer to advocate general overdotting of relatively small note values, beginning at the level of the dotted quaver and semiquaver, and including the so-called Lombard snap (ex.6): this may be termed 'galant' overdotting. Between 1753 and 1790 several later writers (chiefly north Germans) advocate this practice to varying degrees (e.g. C.P.E. Bach, Leopold Mozart, J.F. Agricola and Türk); it cannot, however, be derived from notes inégales, nor does any writer associate it with French music. According to the treatises, the affective range of galant overdotting extends from the pleasing or 'flattering' to liveliness and boldness, depending upon style and tempo of the music in which it is adopted; it poses few difficulties in performance.

Ex.6

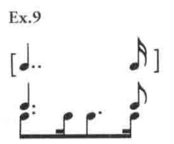
Ex.7 J. S. Bach: Sonata no.4 for violin and harpsichord BWV1017, 3rd movt

As noted above, the dot was used as a makeshift notation for 2:1 ratios in triplet contexts. C.P.E. Bach (1753) indicates that in such situations the third triplet and the semiquaver should be synchronized, and many scores cannot sensibly be interpreted otherwise. Nevertheless, C.P.E. Bach's Berlin colleague Quantz insists that 'you must not strike the short note after the dot with the third note of the triplet, but after it' (1752, chap. V, §22), and J.F. Agricola claims this was also J.S. Bach's teaching (Bach-Dokumente, iii, Kassel, 1972, p.206). A piece such as ex.7 can be effectively rendered either way (although in either case it is likely that the left-hand quavers would be assimilated to the right-hand triplets). (See Neumann, 1987, for further information and discussion.) The ambiguity of dotted notation in triplet contexts persisted well into the 19th century.



A fairly common notational shorthand in Baroque music is the failure to shorten the initial note of a dotted passage beginning with an upbeat (ex.8); according to

Ex.8

Quantz, such upbeats should be shortened to fit with the prevalent dotted rhythms. Gigault, C.P.E. Bach, and Türk offer brief hints about the synchronization of larger and smaller dotted rhythms (e.g. ex.9), and as noted above, assimilation to the prevailing value is inherent in the French practice of overdotting concomitant with notes inégales. Synchronization is probably the appropriate solution, for example, in the opening sections of Handel's French overtures, wherein abound apparently meaningless inconsistencies of rhythmic notation, very likely owing to haste. But in carefully written music one must ascertain whether the rhythm as notated is intended (as it probably is, for example, in variation 26 of Bach's Goldberg Variations, ex.10).

Ex.9

Ex.10 J. S. Bach: Goldberg Variations, BWV988, variation 26

Other peculiarities in dotted notation include François Couperin's multiplying the beams of short notes following a dot, perhaps to suggest very rapid execution (ex.11*a–b*).

Ex.11

(a) F. Couperin: Pièces de violes (1728), Suite no.1 Prelude

(b) idem: Troisième livre de pièces de clavecin (1722), Les fauvétes plaintives

C.P.E. Bach advocated two new uses for the dot that were not taken up: adding a second dot with a stroke over it to indicate a silence of articulation in the elongated execution of a turn figure (ex.12), and dotting the figures of a

Ex.12 C.P.E. Bach: Versuch, Eng. trans., 120

continuo part to show the rhythm of the realization (ex.13). Some composers place the dot where it occurs rhythmically instead of directly after the note it prolongs (ex.14). This often puts it across the bar-line, where it obviates the need for a tie.

Ex.13 C.P.E. Bach: Versuch, Eng. trans., 373

Ex.14 Chambonnières: Pièces de clavessin, livre premier (1670), Courante

Double dotting occurs in French sources of the 17th and 18th centuries, most frequently in the keyboard works of Louis Couperin, Chambonnières and André Raison (not, however, in the viol music of Marin Marais, where the tremblement sign and dots used to indicate fingering can be misinterpreted as double dotting). Yet there is no apparent correlation between notated double dots and the French performance custom of overdotting concomitant with notes inégales (see Hefling, 1993, pp.70–78). Leopold Mozart's influential violin treatise (1756 and later editions) recommends the double dot for the sake of clarity, and until the generation of his son Wolfgang notated double dotting remained relatively rare.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

É. Loulié: Elements ou principes de musique (Paris, 1696, 2/1698; Eng. trans., incl. MS additions from F-Pn, f. fr. n. a. 6355, 1965/R)

M.P. de Montéclair: Petite méthode pour apprendre la musique (Paris, *c*1735)
J. Hotteterre: Méthode pour la musette (Paris, 1737/R)
J.-B. Métoyen: Démonstration des principes de musique (Paris, n.d.)
J.J. Quantz: Versuch einer Anweisung die Flöte traversiere zu spielen (Berlin, 1752/R, 3/1789/R; Eng. trans., 1966/R, 2/1985)
C.P.E. Bach: Versuch über die wahre Art das Clavier zu spielen (Berlin, 1753–62/R, 2/1787; Eng. trans., 1949)
L. Mozart: Versuch einer gründlichen Violinschule (Augsburg, 1756/R; Eng. trans., 1939, 2/1951/R)
J.F. Agricola: Anleitung zur Singkunst (Berlin, 1757; Eng. trans., 1995)
Morel de Lescer: Sçience de la musique vocale (Paris, *c*1760)
J.P. Kirnberger and J.A.P. Schultz: 'Loure', 'Ouvertüre', 'Punkt: punktierte Note', in J.G. Sulzer: Allgemeine Theorie der schönen Künste (Leipzig, 1771–4, 4/1792–9/R)
M.D.J. Engramelle: La tonotechnie au l'art de noter des cylindres (Paris, 1775/R)
P. Marcou: Elemens théoriques et pratiques de musique (London and Paris, 1782)
D.G. Türk: Klavierschule (Leipzig and Halle, 1789; Eng. trans., 1982)
J.C.F. Rellstab: Anleitung für Clavierspieler (Berlin, 1790)
A. Dolmetsch: The Interpretation of the Music of the XVII and XVIII Centuries (London, 1915/R, 2/1946/R)
T. Dart: The Interpretation of Music (London, 1954, 4/1967)
R. Donington: The Interpretation of Early Music (London, 1963/R)
D. Fuller: 'Dotting, the "French Style", and Frederick Neumann's Counter-reformation', EMc, v (1977), 517–43
F. Neumann: 'La note pointée et la soi-distant "manière française"', RdM, li (1965), 66–91; Eng. trans. in EMc, v (1977), 310–24
F. Neumann: 'Facts and Fiction about Overdotting', MQ, lxiii (1977), 155–85
D. Fuller: 'The "Dotted Style" in Bach, Handel, and Scarlatti', Bach, Handel, Scarlatti: Tercentenary Essays, ed. P. Williams (Cambridge, 1985), 99–117
F. Neumann: 'Conflicting Binary and Ternary Rhythms: From the Theory of Mensural Notation to the Music of J.S. Bach', Music Forum, vi (1987), 93–127
S.E. Hefling: Rhythmic Alteration in Seventeenth- and Eighteenth-Century Music: Notes inégales and Overdotting (New York, 1993)
D. Montgomery: 'Triplet Assimilation in the Music of Schubert: Challenging the Ideal', Historical Performance, vi (1993), 79–97
M. Bilson: 'Triplet Assimilation in the Music of Schubert: a Reply', Historical Performance, vii (1994), 27–31
D. Fuller: 'Last Words on Inequality and Overdotting: a Review of Stephen Hefling's Book', Performance Practice Review, vii (1994), 120–32
S.E. Hefling: 'Déjà vu all over again? Rhythmic Alteration vs Neumann's Musical Protectionism', Historical Performance, vii (1994), 85–94
S.E. Hefling: 'Some Thoughts about "Last Words on Overdotting"', Performance Practice Review, vii (1994), 133–45

STEPHEN E. HEFLING

Dotti, Anna Vincenza (b Bologna; fl 1711–28). Italian contralto. During the period 1711–16 she sang repeatedly in Bologna and in Mantua, Genoa, Florence, Livorno (in Bononcini's Camilla), Reggio nell'Emilia and Venice (three operas, two of them by Vivaldi). Between 1717 and 1720 she appeared in 12 operas in Naples, including the version of Handel's Rinaldo with additions by Leo at the royal palace in 1718, in which she was Almirena. From autumn 1724 she was for three seasons a member of the Royal Academy company in London as second woman to Cuzzoni, singing in Handel operas, Ariosti's Artaserse, Dario and Lucio Vero, Bononcini's Astianatte and the pasticcios Elpidia and Elisa. She created Irene in Tamerlano (1724) and Eduige in Rodelinda (1725), and appeared in revivals of Giulio Cesare, Ottone and probably Floridante. After Faustina Bordoni's arrival in spring 1726 Dotti was allotted less important parts; Handel gave her only one aria in Alessandro and Admeto, in both of which (as on other occasions) she played male roles. On leaving London she enjoyed considerable success in Brussels (autumn 1727), and sang in an opera there in 1728. Her compass was narrow (a to e″), and her lower notes evidently weak. She is sometimes confused with Anna Maria Dotti, who sang in two operas at Venice in 1708.

WINTON DEAN

Dot-way [dot notation]. A system of notation for the recorder, used in England in the second half of the 17th century (an example printed in 1704 is mentioned in HawkinsH, 737). It is a form of tablature, using a six-line staff, each line of which represents a finger-hole. A small vertical stroke placed on a line indicates that the hole is to be closed; a horizontal dash through the stroke on the top line indicates that the octave is to be achieved.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

T. Greeting: The Pleasant Companion, or New Lessons and Instructions for the Flageolet (London, *c*1667–8)
C. Welch: Six Lectures on the Recorder (London, 1911)
R. Rastall: The Notation of Western Music (London, 1983)

RICHARD RASTALL

Dotzauer, (Justus Johann) Friedrich (b Häselrieth, nr Hildburghausen, 20 Jan 1783; d Dresden, 6 March 1860). German cellist, teacher and composer. His early musical talent was fostered by his father. The organist J.K. Rüttinger, a former student of J.S. Bach's pupil J.C. Kittel, taught him composition; he studied the piano and violin with Heuschkel and Gleichmann, and also learnt the cello, double bass, horn and clarinet. He made his début as a cellist at a court concert at the age of 15. In 1799 he went to Meiningen for cello lessons with J.J. Kriegk, a pupil of J.L. Duport. From 1801 to 1805 Dotzauer played in the court orchestra there, and for the next six years in the Leipzig orchestra, also giving solo and quartet performances. In 1806 he spent six months in Berlin, where he became profoundly influenced by Romberg. Dotzauer was appointed to the Dresden royal orchestra in 1811, becoming soloist in 1821 and remaining there until his retirement in 1850. His playing as principal was praised by Berlioz in 1843, and Spohr applauded his artistry in chamber music. He travelled throughout Germany and appeared in Vienna and the Netherlands but declined an invitation to go to St Petersburg.

Combining great musicianship with a technique advanced beyond contemporary standards, Dotzauer's work represented a milestone in the development of cello performance. His teaching ability and didactic publications resulted in the so-called 'Dresden School' of playing, which influenced such pupils as F.A. Kummer, C. Drechsler, C. Schuberth and his own son Karl Ludwig, and through them Grützmacher, Cossmann, J. Goltermann and their pupils. Although many of Dotzauer's 178 or so compositions were quickly forgotten, others have been revived and welcomed as the subject of recordings. The pedagogical works remain important teaching material, and extracts have frequently appeared in later composers' collections of exercises and studies. In 1827 Breitkopf & Härtel published an edition of Bach's six cello suites showing Dotzauer's fingerings and bowings. He was the father of Justus Bernhard Friedrich Dotzauer (1808–74), a pianist, and Karl Ludwig Dotzauer (1811–97), who was a cellist at the Kassel court.

WORKS
(selective list)

Graziosa (op), Dresden, 1841
Masses; other sacred works
Orch: Sym., op.40; Conc., 2 vc; Fl Conc.; 9 vc concs., opp.27, 66, 72, 81, 82, 84, 93, 100, 101; 3 vc concertinos, opp.67, 89, 150
Chbr: str qts, opp.12, 13, 19, 29, 30, 45, 64, 108; str duos, trios, qnts; vn sonatas; vc sonatas; pf sonatas; 28 waltzes, pf 4 hands
Vc studies, incl. opp.47, 54, 120

TUTORS

Violoncellschule, op.165 (Mainz, 1832)
Violoncellschule für den ersten Unterricht nebst 40 Übungsstücken, op.126 (Vienna, 1836)
Violoncell-Flageolett-Schule, op.147 (Leipzig, 1837)
Praktische Schule des Violoncellspiels, op.155 (Hamburg and Leipzig, ?1870)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (K. Stephensen)
E.S.J. van der Straeten: History of the Violoncello (London, 1915/R)
J. Eckhardt: Die Violoncellschulen von J.J.F. Dotzauer, F.A. Kummer und B. Romberg (Regensburg, 1968)
V. Walden: An Investigation and Comparison of the French and Austro-German Schools of Violoncello Bowing Techniques, 1785–1839 (diss., U. of Auckland, 1994)

E. VAN DER STRAETEN/LYNDA MACGREGOR

Doubisson. See DU BUISSON.

Double (i). A French term used during the 17th and early 18th centuries for a technique of variation in which more or less elaborate ornamentation is added to the original melody, while the supporting harmonies remain the same. By extension, the embellished melody itself was also known as a double (the unadorned version of the melody was called the simple). With its twin meanings the term double is thus equivalent to diminution (see DIMINUTION) and DIVISION. In vocal music, double technique came to the fore as a method of embellishing the air de cour in performance. The classic examples of vocal doubles are to be found in the strophic airs for solo voice by Michel Lambert (1610–96). Probably issued as models, Lambert's doubles were the first to be published in any quantity. His airs comprise two verses of poetry. For the first verse, the melody is presented with little ornamentation; for the second, diminutions transform the melody into a double. Vocal doubles in Lambert's style, by Honoré d'Ambruis, Jean-Baptiste de Bousset and others, persist in collections of airs sérieux et à boire throughout the Baroque period. The concepts of simple and double seem to have derived originally from steps used in Renaissance dances such as the pavane and the branle, and in instrumental music of the 17th and 18th centuries the term double is applied in the main to dance variations. Composed for solo lute, viol or harpsichord, these were cultivated in Germany, especially, as well as in France. In 18th-century keyboard suites, single pieces are often supplied with a variation labelled double, for example Les canaries in ordre no.2 of François Couperin's first harpsichord book (1713), and Les niais de Sologne in Rameau's Pièces de clavecin (1724). Bach added a double to the Courante of his first English Suite and the Saraband in his sixth. In the same spirit of melodic variation the Polonaise in Bach's Orchestral Suite in B minor is also followed by its double, although, unusually, the flute's embellished melody in the double is heard against the simple melody, now transferred to the cello. For further information, see M. Reimann, 'Zur Entwicklungsgeschichte des Double', Mf, v (1952), 317–32; vi (1953), 97–111.

See also IMPROVISATION §II, 3(iii)

GREER GARDEN

Double (ii). An adjective used to indicate a lower octave. Thus the double bassoon plays in the octave below the bassoon, the double bass an octave below the violoncello and so on. This usage derives from the old practice of identifying notes below gamma ut (the G on the bottom line of the bass stave) by double letters, FF, EE and so on. Organ builders still refer to these low pitches as 'double F', 'double E' etc. 'Double harp' (arpa doppia) signifies a harp with more than one rank of strings (see HARP, §V, 5).

Keyboard instruments with two manuals are called 'double'. But in the 16th and 17th centuries the terms 'double harpsichord', 'double regals', 'double virginals' or even 'double curtall' (and also the Doppelfagott mentioned by Praetorius in 1619) more often referred to instruments whose ranges extended below gamma ut. For further information see F.W. Galpin: Old English Instruments of Music (London, 4/1965), 212ff.

HOWARD MAYER BROWN/R

Double (iii). A prefix used to indicate the combination of two instruments into one. Such terms as 'double clarinet', 'double flageolet' etc. refer to a single instrument with two tubes. The double euphonium, however, is a combination of a euphonium (with wide bell) and saxtromba (with narrow bell). The player can manipulate a valve to direct the windstream into one or the other bell and thus change the tone quality of the instrument. A valve on the 'double horn', on the other hand, controls the pitch but not the timbre of the instrument, which can be played in either F or B♭.

HOWARD MAYER BROWN/R

Double (iv). Singers who undertake two roles in the same work and instrumentalists who play more than one instrument are said to 'double' one with the other. A 'double' is also a singer who understudies a part in an opera or other vocal work, in order to replace the regular performer in case of need.

HOWARD MAYER BROWN/R

Doublé (Fr.). A type of turn. See ORNAMENTS, §7.

Double apostrophe. See DISTROPHA, TRISTROPHA.

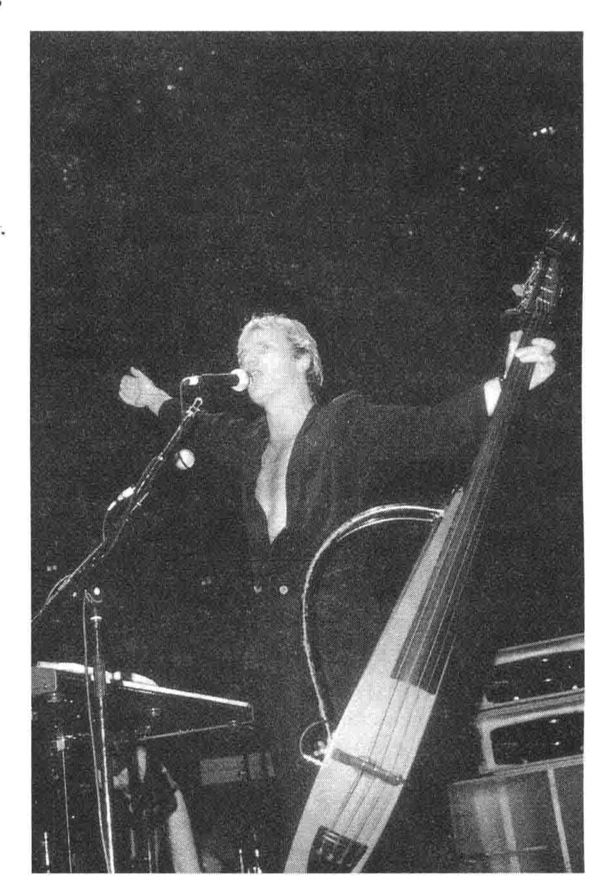
Double bar. Two vertical lines drawn through the staff to mark off a section of a piece. See BAR.

Double bass [bass, contrabass, stand-up bass, string bass, upright bass] (Fr. contrebasse; Ger. Kontrabass; It. contrabasso, contrabbasso; Sp. contrabajo). The largest and lowest-pitched bowed string instrument in use. It has four or (less often) five strings tuned in 4ths and sounds an octave lower than the cello. In western art music it is best known for its contribution to the orchestra, where it supplies not only the power and weight but the basic rhythmic foundation, and has also been used as a continuo instrument. More rarely the bass is heard as a soloist, in which field its surprisingly large repertory includes over 200 concertos. The instrument, normally played pizzicato, is an essential member of jazz and dance bands; in many countries it is used in military and concert bands.

See also VIOLONE.



1. Structure and tuning. 2. The bow. 3. History. 4. Repertory and performers. 5. Jazz and popular music.

1. STRUCTURE AND TUNING. Double basses vary in shape and size more than almost any other instrument. There are two basic designs: one is shaped like a viol, the other like a violin. There are also a few examples of other shapes (e.g. guitar-like). Viol-shaped basses usually have a flat back, of which the top part slopes towards the neck; the two holes in the belly are sometimes C-shaped, and very occasionally there is a third hole in the form of a rose. Other instruments are more closely modelled on the violin, although for convenience of playing their backs also are sometimes flat, and their shoulders less square.

Of the smallest basses (bassetti and chamber basses) some are little bigger than a cello, while some of the larger (full-size) instruments can have a body of anything up to about 140 cm in length. The normal (three-quarter) size found in orchestras is about 115 cm. One of the largest is 4·8 metres high and was built by Paul de Wit for the Cincinnati music festival of 1889. A great three-string 'octobass' was built in 1851 by J.-B. Vuillaume, who was so proud of it that he incorporated its design in a crest on his headed notepaper. The instrument is tuned C′–G′–C and is now in the Musée de la Musique, Paris. Berlioz thought highly of it, but it can be regarded as little more than a curiosity. Another large instrument (which belonged to Dragonetti) is in the Victoria and Albert Museum, London. The 'piccolo bass', a rare small double bass used in jazz, is fitted with thin strings and tuned an octave higher than the standard instrument. Electric basses are becoming more popular in jazz and new music. These dispense with the traditional acoustic body, using synthesizers and amplication to process the sound instead.

Normal four-string instruments are tuned E′–A′–D–G. On five-string basses the additional bottom string is most commonly tuned to B′ (sometimes C′). Occasionally a mechanical attachment with levers serves instead of a fifth string. This device enables the player to extend the length of the fourth string, thus lowering its pitch to C′: although useful in the orchestra it is impractical for playing rapid passages or glissandos. Because of this a simpler version of the extended fourth string, without levers, is preferred by some players. Much of the solo repertory requires the use of scordatura, the most common being F♯′–B′–E–A, usually known as 'solo tuning'. This is considered to give the bass a brighter sound that projects better, but since aluminium-covered steel or nylon core strings have replaced their thick gut predecessors it is arguable whether the practice of scordatura tuning is still necessary. Strings are tuned by means of brass machines with steel worm-screws, but early basses had large wooden pegs. As with the size of the instrument itself there is no standard length of playing stop. Many orchestral instruments have a stop of about 105 cm, but variations from 100 to 110 cm are not uncommon. Orchestral music for the instrument is notated an octave higher than the actual pitch. Much of the solo repertory used to be notated at pitch, but this practice is now almost exclusively confined to Italy and is sometimes even referred to as the 'old Italian system of notation'.

2. THE BOW. There are two types of bass bow in use today (see BOW, fig.14). The French bow, like a violin bow (but shorter and heavier than a cello's), is the most common in England, France, Italy and parts of Scandinavia: players in Germany, Austria, the former USSR and most of the USA prefer the German bow which has a deeper frog and is held 'underhand' although not with the same hold that is used on a viol bow; this is historically a viol-type bow (for illustration, see BOW, fig.15 and VIOL, fig.10). Opinions differ widely concerning the merits of the two bows but it is doubtful whether either has any advantage over the other. The Dragonetti bow, which was also held underhand but arched away from the hair, was still in use in England until the early 20th century.

1. Sting playing the electric stick bass

3. HISTORY. Research into the evolution of the double bass reveals a tangled web of several hundred years of changes in design and fashion in the dimensions of the instrument and consequently in its stringing and tuning. The picture is further complicated by the simultaneous use during any one period of different forms of bass in different countries. The earliest known illustration of a double bass type of instrument dates from 1516 (fig.2) but in 1493 Prospero wrote of 'viols as big as myself'. Planyavsky (1970) pointed out that it is more important to look for an early double bass tuning rather than for any particular instrument by shape or name. A deep (double- or contra-) bass voice is first found among the viols. There existed simultaneously two methods of tuning – one using 4ths alone, the other using a combination of 3rds and 4ths ('3rd–4th' tuning) (see VIOL, §3). Agricola wrote of the contrabasso di viola as being the deepest voice available. He was referring to an instrument comparable with that made by Hanns Vogel in 1563 and now in the Germanisches Nationalmuseum, Nuremberg (fig.3). This ornately and beautifully decorated bass is fitted with gut frets like other viols and tuned G′–C–F–A–d–g. This high '3rd–4th' tuning was given by Praetorius

2. Possibly an early illustration of a double bass: detail from 'Herod's Feast', 1570–80 (Tiroler Landesmuseum Ferdinandeum, Innsbruck), probably a copy by a Tyrolean artist after a German painting of 1516

(Syntagma musicum, 2/1619) for a six-string VIOLONE (a name also confusingly used in the 16th century to denote the bass of the viol family). One advantage of this instrument was that by using the top five strings it could play in the cello register and by using the lower five, in the bass. This violone in G was often used on its own for continuo work. Praetorius listed several other tunings, both high and low, for five- and six-string violoni. Most interesting of all is the low tuning D′–E′–A′–D–G, only one step removed from the modern E′–A′–D–G instrument. Orlando Gibbons scored for the 'great dooble base' in several viol fantasias. Whether a low '3rd–4th' tuning was used or a higher one cannot be certain.

Some fine basses, many of which were probably converted from their original form into three- or later four-string instruments, date from the late 16th century and early 17th. A notable example is that by Gasparo da Salò, owned by Dragonetti and now in the museum of S Marco, Venice (for illustration, see DRAGONETTI, CARLO). A beautiful six-string violone of much lighter construction by Da Salò's apprentice G.P. Maggini is in the Horniman Museum, London (fig.4*a*). This is of violin shape, with a flat back, and makes interesting comparison with the viol-shaped violone by Ventura Linarol (Padua, 1585) in the Kunsthistorisches Museum, Vienna (fig.4*b*).

During the early 17th century the five-string bass was most commonly used in Austria and Germany. Leopold Mozart referred in the 1787 edition of his Violinschule to having heard concertos, trios and solos played with great beauty on instruments of this kind. The earliest known playing instructions, by Johann Jacob Prinner (Musicalischer Schlissl, 1677, autograph US-Wc), are for an instrument tuned F′–A′–D–F♯–B. Much more usual, however, is the tuning F′–A′–D–F♯–A cited in 1790 by Albrechtsberger, for a violone or contrabass with thick strings and frets tied at every semitone round the fingerboard.

Michel Corrette's 1773 Méthode throws much light on the bass techniques and tunings in use during the 18th and early 19th centuries when the bass was enjoying some popularity as a solo instrument. Many of the virtuoso pieces from the Viennese school of that period and later abound with passages of double stopping and, in view of the tunings required, were thought by early 20th-century authorities not to have been written for the bass at all. Later research revealed that the instrument has in the past been tuned in some 40 or 50 different ways; although the early solo repertory is quite practical with the tunings the composers envisaged (e.g. one of the '3rd–4th' tunings), much is unplayable on the modern conventionally tuned instruments. There are in fact numerous solo concertos from this period.

3. Double bass viol by Hanns Vogel, Nuremberg, 1563 (Germanisches Nationalmuseum, Nuremberg)

(a) (b)

4. (a) Six-string violone by Gio(vanni) Paolo Maggini, Brescia, early 17th century (Horniman Museum, London); (b) viol-shaped violone by Ventura Linarol, Padua, 1585 (Kunsthistorisches Museum, Vienna)

In Italy an early tuning (cited by Planyavsky, 1970) is Adriano Banchieri's of 1609 for his 'Violone contrabasso', D′–G′–C–E–A–d. Later the number of strings was reduced, and three-string instruments were preferred. Even during the early 18th century a three-string bass tuned A′–D–G or G′–D–G was normal. It had no frets and with the growth of the symphony orchestra it was logical that this more powerful instrument should supersede earlier models. Not until the 1920s was the additional E′ string expected of most professional players. Until then any passages going below A′ were transposed up an octave, resulting in the temporary disappearance of the 16′ line.

Apart from those of the Italian makers already mentioned, basses by Amati, Bergonzi, Grancino and Testore are particularly prized. Among the good English makers are Forster, Kennedy, Lott and Tarr (fig.5). In Austria fine basses were made by Jacob Stainer. Others have come from the schools of Mittenwald and Mirecourt.

4. Repertory and performers. Telemann's unusual Trillensymphonie in D (1730) for two double basses, chalumeau, flute and harp continuo shows how differently he treated high and low tuned violoni. The writing, which owes more to peasant dancing than it does to court elegance, must be one of the earliest examples of a work using a double bass instrument as a soloist. Little other solo music is known from the 18th century (Stamitz's concerto, for example, is a transcription of a viola work) until the solo parts in Haydn's symphonies (e.g. nos.6–8) of the early 1760s; then, in the four years from 1765, no fewer than 28 concertos appeared (by Vanhal, Haydn, Zimmermann, Franz Hoffmeister, Johannes Sperger and Dittersdorf).

In 1791 Mozart wrote his aria Per questa bella mano (K612) for bass and double bass to be performed by the singer Gerl with the bassist Friedrich Pischelberger (1741–1813); both were engaged in the production of Die Zauberflöte under Schikaneder. This work was published in 1822 – one of the first virtuoso double bass works to appear in print. Pischelberger and Johannes Sperger were the most outstanding virtuosos of the Austrian school at that time and it is unlikely that solo bass playing had ever before reached such a peak. Sperger's works include 18 concertos, three concert arias with soprano and a number of cassations and quartets. He played a five-string bass which he tuned in a number of different ways. Josef Kämpfer (1735–88), a Hungarian virtuoso, toured Europe towards the end of the 18th century and is said to have greatly impressed Haydn. Although Kämpfer travelled as widely as St Petersburg, Copenhagen, Hamburg and London, it was not until Domenico Dragonetti settled in London that the bass gained popularity in England.

Dragonetti's success was unique in that for over 50 years no musical gathering was considered complete without him. Not only did his fine performances win him recognition throughout Europe, but his kind, amiable personality endeared him to the British public. He counted among his friends Haydn, Beethoven, Hummel, Spohr, Liszt and many other composers. Rossini thought highly of him, and in 1824 composed a duet for him to play with the banker Sir David Salomons, an amateur cellist. At Rossini's insistence Dragonetti had a copy of his bow made for Cherubini, who had begun a double bass class at the Paris Conservatoire. The bass players there used the French overhand bowing which some thought to lack the power of Dragonetti's underhand bow. Rossini delivered the bow himself but the introduction was not a success. The British Library contains a large collection of Dragonetti manuscripts and most British players are still taught in a tradition directly descended from his pupils.

5. Double bass by William Tarr, Manchester, 1847 (private collection)

The later Italian virtuoso Giovanni Bottesini had a different approach to the bass. While some critics praised Dragonetti's powerful tone and his ability to play in tune, others scorned his loud and rasping style. For Bottesini there was little but praise; his delicate tone and agile technique stunned audiences and his ability to 'dart from one end of the instrument to the other' was remarkable (H.R. Haweis). The second half of his Metodo completo per contrabbasso explains how he extended the technique of the instrument by the use of arpeggios and very high harmonics. Bottesini was not only an internationally famous virtuoso but also a highly respected composer, conductor and musical director. On occasions he directed and conducted his own operas and even performed solos on the double bass during the intervals between the acts. He studied composition with Verdi, whose works he knew well – his numerous virtuoso solos have a close affinity with the style of popular 19th-century Italian opera. Among his lesser-known works are some concertos for two double basses.

In 1874 Franz Simandl published his Neueste Methode des Contrabass-Spiels, reprinted many times and still widely used. Simandl studied in Prague under Josef Hrabě and worked most of his life in Vienna. In France the Méthode complète (*c*1931) of Edouard Nanny has been more popular than that of Simandl. The early 20th century saw the rise of Sergey Koussevitzky, another virtuoso who conducted. The recordings he made in 1929 of his Valse miniature, Chanson triste and Láska's Wiegenlied show the perfect command he had of his instrument. Koussevitzky wrote comparatively little for the bass, his recital programmes consisting largely of transcriptions (notably the Cello Sonata by Strauss, Bruch's Kol Nidrei, Mozart's Bassoon Concerto and many Baroque works).

Since Koussevitzky many virtuosos have made recordings, and traditional bass technique has been greatly developed since the 1950s. Gary Karr has a repertory of more than 30 concertos, many of which he commissioned. The American Bertram Turetzky has commissioned over 200 works and has developed his own particular style of playing, centred on pizzicato and non-traditional bow techniques. In England Barry Guy has explored new avenues of sound by coupling the bass to electronic apparatus controlled during performance at the discretion of the player. Until his death in 1991, the Czech František Pošta was the leading exponent of the school of playing descended from Wenzel Hause and Josef Hrabě. Other noted double bass players include the Berliner Klaus Stoll, the Viennese Ludwig Streicher, the Italian Francesco Petracchi, the Finn Jorma Katrama, the French virtuosos Francois Rabbath and Joëlle Leandre and the Briton Duncan McTier, all of whom have made significant contributions to the instrument's recorded solo literature; an eminent historian of the instrument is Alfred Planyavsky.

It is hard to be certain when the double bass obtained a regular place in the orchestra. Many 17th-century orchestras did not use 16′ tone; there was no double bass in the Paris Opéra orchestra, for example, until the early years of the 18th century. But court orchestras of the mid-18th century included double basses; usually they were more numerous than the cellos. A modern symphony orchestra generally has at least eight (for a fuller discussion see ORCHESTRA).

Any principal orchestral player must attain a standard equal to that of the virtuoso soloist; advanced technique is required for most of the works of, for example, Schoenberg, Strauss and Stravinsky. Some of the more exposed passages occur in Britten's Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra and A Midsummer Night's Dream, Ginastera's Variaciones concertantes, Mahler's First Symphony, Musorgsky's Pictures from an Exhibition (orch. Ravel, 1922), Prokofiev's suite Lieutenant Kijé, Rossini's six early string sonatas, Saint-Saëns's Le carnaval des animaux and Stravinsky's suite Pulcinella. Chamber music with double bass includes several works by Mozart of a divertimento character (attesting the use of the instrument in such contexts in 18th-century Austria), Beethoven's Septet (op.20), Schubert's 'Trout' Quintet and Octet, Spohr's Octet and Nonet, and many works by Hummel, Onslow and others. Dvořák used it in a string quintet (op.77). 20th-century composers have turned their attention to the instrument in their search for less familiar tone colours, e.g. Prokofiev's Quintet and works by Henze, many of which use artificial harmonics.

5. JAZZ AND POPULAR MUSIC. The double bass was used in ragtime orchestras and string bands from the 1890s. It was present in many early New Orleans dance orchestras, and early photographic evidence suggests that from the time of Buddy Bolden up to about 1920 the instrument was often bowed rather than plucked. Although during the era of acoustic recording the double bass was often replaced by the tuba (probably because of its greater carrying power), in the late 1920s the double bass was established as the basis for the rhythm section, particularly in larger ensembles. Gut strings (sometimes wound with steel) were used, and in order to help the double bass to compete in volume with the rest of the big band, a high bridge (brightening the sound by increasing the string tension) and SLAP-BASS technique were often employed. During the course of the 1930s the slap-bass style declined in jazz, except as a special effect (although it remained a primary technique in other forms of popular music), and players began to seek a wider range of expressive possibilities.

In many ragtime pieces and in early jazz the double bass would play on the first and third beats of the bar and occasionally in melodic interludes or bridge passages. In the swing era it kept steady time with a 'walking bass' (see WALKING BASS (1)), a style epitomized by the work of Walter Page in Count Basie's band. Like most bass players at this time, Page served primarily as a member of the rhythm section and took few solos. The development of the instrument as a solo voice was largely the work of Jimmy Blanton (with Duke Ellington).

During the 1940s and 50s, players such as Ray Brown, Oscar Pettiford, Red Callender and Charles Mingus extended the application of bop style to the double bass, using instruments with a lower bridge and employing increasingly sophisticated amplification. Mingus began to break down the instrument's time-keeping role by placing notes before, on, or after the beat to vary the effect of the rhythmic accompaniment. He also developed a highly individual solo style, and later in his career he frequently performed extended compositions and improvisations as an unaccompanied soloist.

By the 1950s steel strings and improved amplification had largely eliminated the difficulty of producing sufficient volume on the double bass. Some players (notably Red Mitchell) adopted a tuning in 5ths, an octave below the cello, which involved extended left-hand positions, and others experimented with the five-string bass. Advancements in left-hand technique led to the abandoning of conventional orchestral fingering systems; in the right hand musicians began to use two or three fingers in quick succession to produce lines as fast and complex as those of a wind or keyboard instrument. Players such as Charlie Haden, Jimmy Garrison, Dave Holland, Barre Phillips and Buddy Guy have explored harmonics, double stopping, percussive methods of producing notes, the use of the body of the instrument to make percussive sounds, and the possibilities offered by the section of the string between the bridge and the tailpiece. Some have adopted the use of a metal bridge and others a bridge that can be raised or lowered as required. Transducers built into the instrument or mounted on the bridge have assisted in more effective amplification.

In jazz-rock ensembles the ELECTRIC BASS GUITAR is normally preferred to the double bass, but in general the bass guitar has not supplanted the double bass in ensembles playing other styles of jazz. However, many double bass players also play electric bass guitar, whether fretted or unfretted, and change to that instrument as appropriate.

Some players have experimented with solid-bodied electric double basses (sometimes known as 'stick basses': see fig.1), which have small bodies and commensurately long necks; they are fitted with pickups and controls similar to those of the electric bass guitar. Their sound (whether pizzicato or bowed) is an uneasy compromise between that of an amplified acoustic double bass and a fretless electric bass guitar. Their principal advantage is that they are more easily carried than the acoustic instrument.

The majority of these problems have been overcome in the semi-acoustic five-string basses designed and played by Eberhard Weber. These retain the richness of tone of a conventional double bass as well as being portable and easy to combine with electronic effects units.

Although the bass guitar was first introduced in 1951 the double bass continued to be the most commonly used bass instrument in the rock and roll bands of that decade. In the early 1960s the bass guitar became the pre-eminent bass instrument in pop and rock music, although the double bass has continued to be used when a more 'natural' or 'acoustic' sound has been sought. The double bass continues in use in traditional music, particularly of eastern Europe, and in some styles of American COUNTRY MUSIC (notably in BLUEGRASS MUSIC).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Agricola: Musica instrumentalis deudsch (Wittenberg, 1529/R, enlarged 5/1545); Eng. trans. by W. Hettrick (Cambridge, 1994)
J.J. Quantz: Versuch einer Anweisung die Flöte traversiere zu spielen (Berlin, 1752/R, 3/1789/R; Eng. trans., 1966, 2/1985, as On Playing the Flute)
M. Corrette: Méthode pour apprendre à jouer de la contre-basse à 3, à 4, et à 5 cordes (Paris, 1773, 2/1781/R)
J.G. Albrechtsberger: Gründliche Anweisung zur Composition (Leipzig, 1790/R; Eng. trans., 1844), enlarged 3/1821
C.D. von Dittersdorf: Lebensbeschreibung (Leipzig, 1801; Eng. trans., 1896/ R); ed. N. Miller (Munich, 1967)
J.G. Albrechtsberger: Sämmtliche Schriften, ed. I. von Seyfried (Vienna, 1826, 2/1837/R; Eng. trans., 1834)
J. Fröhlich: Kontrabass-Schule (Würzburg, 1829; Eng. trans., ?1840)
J. Hindle: Der Contrabass-Lehrer (Vienna, ?1850)
G. Bottesini: Metodo completo per contrabbasso (Milan, n.d.; Fr. trans., 1869; Eng. trans., 1880)
F. Simandl: Neueste Methode des Kontrabass-Spiels (Vienna, 1874; Eng. trans., 1903); trans. and ed. F. Zimmermann and L. Drew (New York, 1987)
A.C. White: The Double Bass (London, ?1893/R)
E. Madenski: Grundriss der Geschichte des Solospiels auf dem Kontrabass (Vienna, 1903)

F. Warnecke: 'Ad infinitum': Der Kontrabass (Hamburg, 1909)
W. Altmann, ed.: Der Kontrabass [Mitteilungsblatt des Kontrabassisten-Bundes] (March 1929–Feb 1931)
E. Nanny: Méthode complète de contrebass (Paris, *c*1931)
E. Halfpenny: 'A Note on the Genealogy of the Double Bass', GSJ, i (1948), 41–5
M. Grodner: A Comprehensive Catalog of Available Literature for the Double Bass (Bloomington, IN, 1958, 3/1974)
C. Bär: 'Zum Begriff des "Basso" in Mozarts Serenaden', MJb 1960–61, 133–55
F. Zimmerman: 'The Double Bass in Ensemble', American String Teacher, xiv/4 (1964), 12 only
R. Carter: Building a Jazz Bass Line (New York, 1966, enlarged 2/1970)
E. Cruft: The Eugene Cruft School of Double Bass Playing (London, 1966)
R. Elgar: Looking at the Double Bass (St Leonards on Sea, 1967)
G. Karr, ed.: Sound Post: the Double Bass [journal of the International Institute for the String Bass] (1967–71)
L. Hurst: 'The Bass Extension Machine vs. the Five-String Bass', The Instrumentalist, xxii/10 (1968), 77–84
A. Meier: Konzertante Musik für Kontrabass in der Wiener Klassik: mit Beiträgen zur Geschichte des Kontrabassbaues in Österreich (Giebing, 1969, 2/1979)
B. Turetzky: 'The Bass as a Drum', The Composer, i/2 (1969), 92–107
B. Turetzky: 'Vocal and Speech Sounds: a Technique of Contemporary Writing for the Contrabass', The Composer, i/3 (1969), 118–35
A. Planyavsky: Geschichte des Kontrabasses (Tutzing, 1970, 2/1984)
A. Planyavsky: 'Mozarts Arie mit obligatem Kontrabass', MJb 1971–2, 313– 16; repr. with Eng. trans. in Bass World, ii/4 (1975–6), 187–97, 206 only
G. Karr, ed.: Probass (1971–3) [successor to Sound Post]
S. Carlin: Il contrabbasso (Ancona and Milan, 1974)
International Society of Bassists: Newsletter (1974–) [some issues titled Bass World]
A. Shipton: 'Styles of New Orleans Bass Playing', Footnote, vii/1 (1976), 18
J. Webster: 'Violoncello and Double Bass in the Chamber Music of Haydn and his Viennese Contemporaries, 1750–1780', JAMS, xxix (1976), 413–38
F. Baines: 'What exactly is a Violone?', EMc, v (1977), 173–7
M. Grodner, ed.: Concepts in String Playing: Reflections by Artist-Teachers at the Indiana University School of Music (Bloomington, IN, 1979)
A. Roidinger: Der Kontrabass im Jazz (Vienna, 1980, 5/1996)
P. Brun: Histoire des contrebasses à cordes (Paris, 1982; Eng. trans., 1989)
Kontrabass und Bassfunktion: Innsbruck 1984
A. Planyavsky: 'Violone und Violoncello im 17. Jahrhundert', Musicologica austriaca, iv (1984), 43–84
T. Coolman: The Bass Tradition: Past, Present, Future (New Albany, IN, 1985)
R. Brown: 'Ray Brown and the Sound of a Bass', Crescendo International, xxiv/5 (1985), 5 only
R. Slatford and S. Pettitt: The Bottom Line: New Prospects for Teaching and Learning the Double Bass (London, 1985)
L. Dreyfus: Bach's Continuo Group (Cambridge, MA, 1987)
A. Planyavsky: Der Barokkontrabass Violone (Vienna, 1989)
K. Guettler: A Guide to Advanced Modern Double Bass Technique (London, 1992)
P. Cutts, ed.: Double Bassist (1996)
P. Brun: A New History of the Double Bass (Villeneuve d'Ascq, 2000)

RODNEY SLATFORD (1–4), ALYN SHIPTON/R (5)

Double bassoon [contrabassoon] (Fr. contrebasson; Ger. Kontrafagott; It. contrafagotto). A BASSOON whose basic pitch is one octave below that of the normal bassoon, from B♭″ (or even A″) upwards to f or even c′.
(See BASSOON, §9 and fig.12.)

Double bémol (Fr.). Double FLAT.

Double counterpoint. Two-part INVERTIBLE COUNTERPOINT.

Double croche (Fr.). See SEMIQUAVER (16th-note); seizième is also used. See also NOTE VALUES.

Double cursus. A term used in modern studies of medieval song and poetry to designate the repetition of a whole musical or formal section. It is found particularly in the sequence (see SEQUENCE (i)), where the music and the poetic scheme of three or four stanzas are repeated with new text. Paul von Winterfeld coined the term in order to describe the form of the French 9th-century poem Buona pucella fut Eulalia in his article 'Rhythmen und Sequenzenstudien, i: Die lateinische Eulaliasequenz und ihre Sippe', Zeitschrift für deutsches Altertum und deutsche Literatur, xlv (1901), 133–49.
See also LAI.

Double curtaile. See CURTAL.

Double dièse (Fr.). Double SHARP.

Double flat. See FLAT.

Double fugue. A fugue on two subjects; by analogy, a triple fugue is a fugue with three subjects. Scholars of fugue do not agree on the specific defining characteristics of double fugue. Some argue that a fugue may be called 'double' only when its two themes are first stated simultaneously at the outset; according to that criterion, a fugue with SUBJECT and COUNTERSUBJECT handled in the standard way (see FUGUE, §1) is not a double fugue, even though it has two themes. Others maintain that a fugue qualifies as a double fugue only if each subject is given its own separate EXPOSITION and the two subjects are first combined towards the end of the piece. According to this latter model, the classic example of a triple fugue is the E♭ organ fugue (the St Anne) from book 3 of J.S. Bach's Clavier-Übung. Mattheson (Das neu-eröffnete Orchestre, 1713) may have been the first to use the word (Doppel-Fuge in German), which he applied both to any fugue that had two or more themes and to invertible counterpoint in general. The presence of more than one theme in fugal writing of the pre-Bach era was common, especially in keyboard music (e.g. the works of Sweelinck, Frescobaldi and Froberger), but no specific terminology was applied to the phenomenon by musicians of the time.

PAUL WALKER

Double harpsichord. A two-manual HARPSICHORD. See also RUCKERS family.

Double-headed drum. Drum with two heads (it is classified as a membranophone). The term is used especially, for a particular group of such drums held horizontally so that both heads can be used. Such instruments, which may be cylindrical, slightly conical, double-conical or barrel shaped, are important in an area which stretches from southern Europe and North Africa to South Asia. For some, such as the DAVUL of Turkey and the Middle East, the player uses a different beater for each side. On many, including the davul, the dangali and GANGA of Chad, the dhol of Armenia, the ḌHOL, ḌHOLAK and MṚDAṄGAM of India, and the gâta bĕre of Sri Lanka, the heads are of different construction, size or thickness, providing two (often more) distinct timbres; sometimes one head is termed 'male', the other 'female'.
See also DRUM, §I.

□

Double organ. The word 'organ' frequently appears in the plural in late medieval sources, although left singular by Chaucer. A 'payre of orgonys' was mentioned by Sandwich (1444) and others, indicating a single instrument, probably with only one manual. By 1650–70 (Evelyn, Pepys) a 'pair of organs' might be a one- or two-manual instrument. The word 'double' has been used in various contexts in reference to English organs. 'Doble regalls' (St Peter Cheap, London, 1555) may indicate the presence of a bass stop or long compass in the bass. 'Dowble pryncipalles' (All Hallows, Barking-by-the-Tower, 1519) refers to the provision of two similar independently drawing principal ranks at each pitch, an interpretation confirmed by two soundboard fragments discovered in Suffolk in 1993 and 1995. 'Double', used as a prefix to a stop name since the 18th century, refers to a stop sounding an octave below unison pitch. 'Double organ' was the term used in the 17th century to describe an instrument with two manuals, as in the contract with Thomas Dallam for the organ at Worcester Cathedral, built in 1613–14, and in other documents thereafter. This is also what is meant in the voluntaries for double organ popular from about 1640. In some voluntaries, 'double' is the registration term for GREAT ORGAN, 'single' for the CHAIR ORGAN.

STEPHEN BICKNELL

Double punctum. See BI–PUNCTUM, TRI–PUNCTUM.

Double-ronde (Fr.). See BREVE. See also NOTE VALUES.

Double sharp. See SHARP.

Double stopping. See MULTIPLE STOPPING.

Double subject. An expression sometimes used to designate the SUBJECT of a FUGUE and its COUNTERSUBJECT, when the latter is treated as a second subject (i.e. when it figures prominently in the thematic structure of the fugue). Since the question of prominence involves personal judgment, there is no widespread agreement on when the expression 'double subject' ought or ought not to be used, and some scholars avoid it altogether. A fugue with a double subject is distinguishable from a DOUBLE FUGUE in that its subjects are stated consecutively rather than simultaneously.

PAUL WALKER

Double theme. See DOUBLE SUBJECT.

Double tonguing. A technique employed in playing woodwind or brass instruments to articulate detached notes cleanly in faster tempos (see TONGUING). The tip and back of the tongue are used alternately, forming the consonants 'T' and 'K' in succession, thus: te-ke te-ke te-ke, and so on.

Doublette (Fr.). See under ORGAN STOP.

Double virga. See BI-VIRGA, TRI-VIRGA.

Double whole note. See BREVE. See also NOTE VALUES.

Doubling (i). In part-writing, the repetition of one of the notes in a chord either in unison or at the octave (or 15th, 22nd etc.); in four-part harmony, for instance, one note of every triad is doubled, usually the root.

Doubling (ii). In polyphonic music, the performance of one part by different instruments or voices in unison or at the octave (or 15th, 22nd etc.). For example, in the Classical orchestra the double basses usually double the cellos at the lower octave, and the bassoons often double the cellos in unison.

Doubling (iii). Playing more than one instrument or role in a performance; for example, a flautist in an ensemble might double on the piccolo, and a singer in Don Giovanni might double the Commendatore and Masetto.

Doubling (iv). An ornament in music of the Scottish highland bagpipe (see BAGPIPE, §9).

Doubrava, Jaroslav (b Chrudim, 25 April 1909; d Prague, 2 Oct 1960). Czech composer. He was, with Hanuš, one of the foremost composition pupils of Jeremiáš, with whom he studied from 1931 to 1937. Between 1945 and 1955 he worked for Czech radio as a reviewer, producer and lecturer, and at the same time was active in the Union of Czech Composers and the Prague Artistic Society. A distinguishing mark of his style is his synthesis of modality, inventive instrumentation and musical symbolism. His modality, as well as his dramatic and ballad conceptions, was strongly influenced by Janáček, while the foundations of his lyricism may be traced to Suk.

Though motor rhythm and constructivism were dominant influences on Doubrava's early pieces (e.g. the Suite and the Sonatina for piano), in the 1940s his music became simpler in expression and structure (e.g. the oratorio Poselství, 'The Message', and the Symphony no.2 'Stalingradská'). These works take an anti-fascist stance; Doubrava was himself a member of a partisan group during the German occupation and the Symphony no.2 was courageously performed by Czech Radio on 8 February 1945, in the last months of the German occupation.

After the war Doubrava composed a number of stage works in which his style is shown at its most fully developed, incorporating timbral drama, symbolism and modern linear polyphony. A member of the Communist party from 1945, Doubrava was soon disillusioned and resigned in December 1951 during the height of the show trials. In consequence his music was officially ignored for the rest of his life. Considerable interest has been shown in him from the 1980s as 'one of the most expressive and individual of Janáček's successors' (Havlík).

WORKS
(selective list)

STAGE

Křest svatého Vladimíra [The Baptism of St Vladimir] (op, 3, Doubrava, after K. Havlíček Borovský), 1937, 1949–51, 1958–9, inc., unperf.

Sen noci svatojanské [A Midsummer Night's Dream] (op, 3, Doubrava and R. Vonásek, after W. Shakespeare), 1942–9, Opava, Nejedlý, 21 Dec 1969

Líný Honza [Lazy Honza] (op, 1, Vonásek and Doubravá, after J. Lada), 1952, inc., unperf.

Balada o lásce [A Ballad of Love]/ Láska čarovaná [Love Bewitched] (opera-ballad, 3, J. Wenig and Doubrava, after Z. Winter), 1960, Prague, Smetana, 21 June 1961 [orchd J. Hanuš]

Ballets: Král Lávra [King Lávra] (after K.H. Borovský), 1951, Olomouc, 6 April 1955; Don Quijote (Doubrava, J. Bachtík, after Cervantes), 1955, Brno, 16 Jan 1957

OTHER WORKS

Orch: Sym. no.1 'Chorální', 1938–40; Sym. no.2 'Stalingradská', 1943–4; Revoluční pochod partyzánského oddílu Ludvika Svobody [The Revolutionary March of Ludvik Svoboda's Partisan Division], 1945; Sym. no.3 'Tragická', 1956–8

Choral: Poselství [The Message] (orat, J.A. Komenský), 1940; Balada o krásné smrti [The Ballad of a Beautiful Death] (cant., J. Čarek), 1941
Song cycles: Epigramy (K. Havlíček Borovský), 1939; Noci [Nights] (J. Hora, F. Halas), 1944; Prostopravda [The Simple Truth] (Cz. folk poetry), 1952; Mladost [Youth] (Moravian and Slovakian trad.), 1956; Čarovaná láska [Enchanting Love] (trad.), 1956; Ráj domova [Paradise of home] (Čarek), 1956; 5 zpěvů o lásce [5 Songs about Love], 1958
Chbr and solo inst: Pf Sonatina, 1937; Pf Suite, 1937; Sonata, vn, 1942; Sonata, vn, pf, 1942; Pf Sonata, 1949; Maličkosti [Trifles], suite, pf, 1953; Sonata no.2, vn, pf, 1959

Principal publishers: Český Hudební Fond; Orbis; Státní Nakladatelství Krásné Literatury, Hudby a Umění; Svoboda

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ČSHS [incl. earlier bibliography]
J. Hanuš: 'Profil jevištního díla Jaroslava Doubravy' [Profile of Doubrava's stage works], HRo, xiv (1961), 771–3
J. Šmolík: 'Směla být třetí Tragická?' [Should the third have been the Tragic?], HRo, xviii (1965), 224–8, 273–6
J. Šeda: 'Jaroslava Doubrava (25.4.1909 – 2.10.1960)', HRo, xxxvii (1984), 230–34, 275–8
J. Jiránek: 'Jaroslav Doubrava prizmatem své klavírní tvorby' [Jaroslav Doubrava through the prism of his piano works], HV, xxiii (1986), 18–32
O. Pukl: 'Poselství Jaroslava Doubravy: profil skladatelovy protiokupační tvorby 1939–1945' [Jaroslav Doubrava's mission: a profile of the composer's anti-occupation works 1939–45], HV, xxiv (1987), 3–25 [incl. further bibliography]
J. Havlík: 'Operou proti totalitě: nad nedkončenou operou Jaroslava Doubravy Křest svatého Vladimíra' [Through opera against totalitarianism: Jaroslav Doubrava's unfinished opera The Baptism of St Vladimir], HV, xxxiv (1997), 39–64 [incl. Ger. summary]
J. Havlík: 'Případ Doubrava' [The case of Doubrava], HRo, li/5 (1998), 36–8

OLDŘICH PUKL/R

Doubravová, Jarmila (b Chrudim, 23 June 1940). Czech musicologist, daughter of Jaroslav Doubrava. She studied aesthetics and musicology at Prague University (1957–62); she took the doctorate in 1962 with a dissertation on Janáček's The Diary of One who Disappeared and the CSc in 1967 with a stylistic analysis of the music of Suchoň, Doubrava and Slavický. She earned the degree of Docent in 1998 with a book, Dialogue and Imagination. From 1962 to 1997 she worked at the Czechoslovak Academy of Sciences (from 1993 the Czech Academy of Sciences) and taught at the universities of Prague and Bratislava. In 1997 she became a member of the department of aesthetics at Prague University. She has written widely on the aesthetics and semiotics of music, and has been a member and head of various project teams.

WRITINGS

Janáčkův Zápisník zmizelého: estetická monografie [Janáček's The Diary of One who Disappeared: aesthetic monograph] (diss., U. of Prague, 1967)
Suchoň – Doubrava – Slavický: stylová analýza [Suchoň – Doubrava – Slavický: stylistic analysis] (CSc diss., U. of Prague, 1967)
'K hudebnímu myšlení Miroslav Kabeláče' [The musical thought of Kabeláče], HV, vi (1970), 7–19 [summaries in Eng., Ger., Russ.]
'Houslový koncert Albana Berga z interpersonálního hlediska' [Alban Berg's Violin Concerto from an interpersonal point of view], HV, ix (1972), 117–39 [with Ger. summary]; Ger. trans. in Europäische Zeitschrift für semiotische Studien, vii (1995), 457–502
'Secesní rysy díla Josefa Suka' [Jugendstil features of Josef Suk's works], Česká hudba světu, svět české hudbě, ed. J. Bajer (Prague, 1974), 138–50
'Interpersonální význam hudby a hudební sémiotika' [The interpersonal meaning of music and semiotics of music], HV, xii (1975), 154–64 [with Ger. summary]
'Čas struktury a struktura času' [Time in structure and the structure of time], HV, xiii (1976), 128–45 [with Eng. summary]
'Z rané tvorby E. Schulhoffa' [From the early works of Schulhoff], HRo, xxix (1976), 281–5 [on Zehn Themen]
'Sound and Structure in Josef Suk's "Zrání"', IRASM, viii (1977), 73–87
'Sprache in der tschechischen neuen Musik', MZ, xiii (1977), 77–83
'Leoš Janáček: Glagolitic Mass – Igor Stravinsky: Symphony of Psalms (Semantic Confrontation of Two Orientations)', Hudba slovanských národů a její vliv na evropskou hudební kulturu: Brno 1978, 167–73
'Problém jednovětě formy: pocta H. Boschovi S. Havelky' [The issue of single-movement form: S. Havelka's homage to H. Bosch], HRo, xxxi (1978), 414–17
'Music and Visual Art: their Relation as a Topical Problem of the Contemporary Music in Czechoslovakia', IRASM, xi (1980), 219–28
Hudba a výtvarné umění [Music and visual arts] (Prague, 1982)
'Musical Semiotics in Czechoslovakia and an Interpersonal Hypothesis of Music', IRASM, xv (1984), 31–8
'Development of Musical Language and Style between 1945 and 1980', MZ, xxii (1986), 59–67
'Denotation and Connotation of Fugue in Music and Visual Arts in the Twentieth Century', Semiotic Theory and Practice: Palermo 1984, ed. M. Herzfeld and L. Melazzo (Berlin, 1988), 189–96
'Tragika a mýtus: Dariačangin sad Vladimíra Godára' [Tragedy and myth: Vladimír Godár's Dariatchanga's Orchard], HRo, xlii (1989), 561–5
'Nad Piňosovým varhanním koncertem' [Piňos's Organ Concerto], 'Pan Brouček a Don Quijote' [Mr Brouček and Don Quixote], HV, xxvii (1990), 48–59, 320–26
'Influence of Foreign Musical Cultures in the Work of Miloslav Kabeláč', MZ, xxvii (1991), 67–76
'On a Myth of the Content Analysis', Signs of Humanity: Barcelona and Perpignan 1989, ed. G. Deledalle (Berlin, 1992), ii, 641–6
ed.: Czech and Slovak Semiotics (Vienna, 1992)
Sémiotika obecná, uměnovědná a hudební [General semiotics, the semiotics of musicology and of music] (Bratislava, 1992)
'Influences of Jewish Culture on Czech and Slovak Culture after 1945', Proceedings of the Eleventh World Congress of Jewish Studies: Jerusalem 1993, ed. D. Assaf, D/ii (Jerusalem, 1994), 203–10
'The Symbol of the Tree in Musical Jugendstil', Musical Signification, ed. E. Tarasti (Berlin, 1995), 565–74
'Interpersonal Analysis of Music', CMR, xvi (1996), 311–23
Dialog a imaginace [Dialogue and imagination] (Prague, 1998)
ed.: Kulturní Chrudim minulosti a přítomnosti [Culture in Chrudim past and present] (Prague, 1999)
Sémantické gesto [Semantic gesture] (forthcoming)

KAREL STEINMETZ

Douçaine (Fr.). See DOLZAINA.

Douce (Fr.). See ORGAN STOP (Dolce).

Doucemelle (Fr.). See DULCE MELOS.

Doucement (Fr.). See DOLCE (i).

Douchaine (Fr.). See DOLZAINA.

Douglas, Barry (b Belfast, 23 April 1960). Northern Ireland pianist. He studied at the Belfast School of Music and in London at the RCM (1978–82), continuing lessons privately with Maria Curcio. He made his London recital début in 1981, his London concerto début at the Royal Festival Hall in 1983, and his New York début at Carnegie Hall in 1988. In 1986 he won the gold medal at the Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow and gained widespread international recognition. He was awarded an honorary DMus by Queen's University, Belfast, in 1987. Douglas is at his best in the large-scale works of such composers as Liszt, Brahms, Tchaikovsky, Prokofiev and Rachmaninoff, in which, as several recordings reveal, his performances can be thoughtful, dynamic and powerfully shaped. In 1993 he took a sabbatical to study Russian literature and culture as an honorary fellow at Oxford University. He was the subject of a BBC documentary film Rhapsody in Belfast and appeared in John Schlesinger's film Madame Sousatska (1988).

JESSICA DUCHEN

Douglas, Clive Martin (b Rushworth, Victoria, 27 July 1903; d Melbourne, 29 April 1977). Australian composer and conductor. After initial training as a violinist, he studied at the Melbourne University Conservatorium with A.E.H. Nickson and Heinze, graduating in 1934; he completed the doctorate in 1958. Douglas made a major contribution as staff conductor for the Australian Broadcasting Commission for 30 years (Tasmania 1936–41, Brisbane 1941–7, Sydney 1947–53 as associate conductor to Eugene Goossens, Melbourne 1953–66), and played a pivotal role as conductor and musical adviser to the Commonwealth Film Unit, writing 25 film scores between 1947 and 1963. He also wrote two educational suites for army and school education, which enjoyed success in Canada and Ireland.

Douglas's historical significance lies in his skill as an orchestrator when such expertise in Australia was rare, and in his attempt to create a distinctly Australian music through the incorporation of Australian Aboriginal musical elements into an essentially European musical style (a musical counterpart to the Jindyworabak movement in Australian literature). While subsequent generations have seen such appropriation as at best naive, and at worst colonial, the movement represented an important, if ultimately unsuccessful, phase in the assertion of Australian cultural independence. His musical style is characterized by the clarity and colour of the orchestral textures, much use of rhythmic ostinatos, sinewy chromatic melodies and frequent parallel harmonic progressions, particularly in tritones, 4ths and 5ths. The use of Aboriginal elements in Kaditcha (1938) is the first of its kind by a symphonic composer (predating Antill's Corroboree by eight years) and continued until Terra Australis (1959). As with Antill, the resultant fabric tends to have more features in common with European primitivist styles than with its Aboriginal origins. Douglas's structures are frequently programmatic, and often in a tableau style (as in Sturt 1829, 1952), partially explained by his film music experience. In later works, such as the Symphony no.3 and Three Frescoes, he adapted his chromatic melodic style to produce a mixture of tonal and serial writing.

WORKS

(selective list)

Stage: Ashmadai (operetta, 1), op.12, 1935; Kaditcha (operetta, 3 scenes), op.19, 1938, rev. 1956; Eleanora (trilogy), op.26–8: Eleanor, Maid Rosamond, Henry of Anjou, 1940–43

Orch: Sym. Fantasy, op.20, 1938; Carwoola, sym. poem, op.22, 1939; Intermezzo [from Maid Rosamond], op.29, 1942; Meet the Orch, educational suite, op.36, 1944; Sym. no.1 'Jubilee', op.48a, 1950; Sturt 1829 (Kaiela), sym. poem, op.53, 1952; Essay for Str, op.55, 1952; Wangadilla, orch suite, op.56, 1954; Olympic Ov., op.64, 1956; Coolawidgee, op.66, Miniature Suite, small orch, 1957; Sym. no.2 'Namatjira', op.67, 1956; Sinfonietta: Festival of Perth, op.79, 1961; Variations Symphoniques, op.80, 1961; Fanfare Ov., op.82, 1961; Divertimento II, op.84, 2 pf, small orch, 1962, rev. 1967; Sym. no.3, op.87, 1963; 4 Light Orch Pieces, op.89, 1964; 3 Frescoes, op.90, 1969; Movt in C on a Theme of Alfred Hill, op.91, 1969; Pastoral for Orch, op.92, 1970; Carnival for Orch, op.93, 1970; Discourse, op.94, str orch, 1971

Choral: The Hound of Heaven, op.11, Bar, chorus, orch, 1933, rev. 1938; Choral Fantasia, op.24 [from Ashmadai], B, chorus, orch, 1939; Blue Billabong, op.25 [from Kaditcha], chorus, orch, 1940; Terra Australis, op.76, nar, S, chorus, orch, 1959

Solo vocal: 5 Pastels, op.51 (song cycle), S, cel, str, 1952; The Lakes of Tasmania, op.58 (song cycle), 1v, orch, 1954; Song Landscape, op.60 (song cycle), S/T, str orch/pf, 1955; Pastorale and Ritual Dance, op.68, 1v, pf, 1957

Chbr: Divertimento I, op.83, wind qnt, 1962, rev. 1965

Documentary film scores: Whither Japan, op.38, 1947; Australia at School, op.39, 1947; Battle of the Roads, op.41, 1948; Hold the Land, op.42, 1948; Farming for the Future, op.43, 1949; Flight Plan, op.44, 1949; By Design, op.45, 1950; Advance Australia, op.46, 1950; Universities in Australia, op.47, 1951; Trouble for Insects, op.50, 1951; Holidays and Waterways, op.52, 1952; Aeradio, op.54, 1952; Our Neighbour Australia, 1953, collab. Antill; The Queen in Australia, 1954, collab. R. Hughes, J. Post, C. Mackerras; Melbourne – Olympic City, op.61, 1955; Mountain Spring, op.69, 1957; Queensland Playground, 1957, collab. C. Carnell; Winter Playground, op.70, 1957; Power in the Mountains, 1957, collab. D. Andrews, D. Holland; Grampians Wonderland, op.72, 1958; Target Jindivik, op.74, 1959; The Builders, op.77, 1960; The Changing Hills, op.81, 1961; The Queen Returns, op.87, 1963, collab. M. Eagles

MSS in AUS-Msl and Allans Music, Melbourne

Principal publisher: Allans Music (Australia)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Douglas: 'Folk-Song and the Brown Man: a Means to an Australian Expression in Symphonic Music', The Canon, x (1956–7), 81–5

Australian Composers' Seminar: Report of Proceedings [Hobart 1963] (Hobart, 1963), 20–23

R. Covell: Australia's Music: Themes of a New Society (Melbourne, 1967)

A.D. McCredie: Musical Composition in Australia (Canberra, 1969)

G. Howard: 'Clive Douglas', Australian Composition in the Twentieth Century, ed. F. Callaway and D. Tunley (Melbourne, 1978)

PETER McCALLUM

Douglas, Minnie [Lizzie]. See MEMPHIS MINNIE.

Douglas, Roy (b Tunbridge Wells, 12 Dec 1907). English composer and arranger. A self-taught musician who has composed mainly for film and television, he is better known as an arranger. Among his many orchestrations are Addinsell's film scores of 1937–43, including Warsaw Concerto, and sections of scores by Benjamin, Berners, Anthony Collins and Walton. His orchestrations of Chopin for Les sylphides have been performed throughout the world. From 1944 he was closely associated with Vaughan Williams, helping to prepare most of his later works for performance and publication, an experience he recalled in Working with R.V.W. (London, 1972). From 1940 to 1976 he performed similar services for Walton. His original works include the Six Dance Caricatures (1939) for wind quintet, the Elegy (1946) and Cantilena (1957) for string orchestra, Jubilate (1964) for organ, an overture Festivities (1972) for full orchestra and A Nowell Sequence (1992) for string orchestra or quartet. His music is published by Boosey & Hawkes and OUP.

CHRISTOPHER PALMER/STEPHEN LLOYD

Doukkali, Abdelwahab [al-Dūkkālī, 'Abd al-Wahāb] (b Fès, 7 Jan 1941). Moroccan singer and composer. He studied at the newly created Conservatory of Music in Fès in the 1950s. From 1959 to 1962 he pursued careers in both theatre and radio. He made his first recordings in 1959 and enjoyed successes with the songs l-Tūmūbīl, composed by Mohammed ben Abdeslam, and Lā tatrukinī, composed by Doukkali himself. After touring Algeria in 1962, he left Morocco and settled in Cairo. His three-year sojourn in Egypt established his popularity outside North Africa. After returning to Morocco in 1965, he enjoyed his greatest success of the 1960s with the recording of his composition Mā ānā illā bashar. A successful recording of this song by the Lebanese singer

Sabah drew the attention of the greater Arab world to Doukkali in particular and to Moroccan song in general. Doukkali remained active in the 1990s, enjoying awards and success with compositions such as Kān yā mākān and Montparnasse.

Doukkali, with Abdelhadi Belkhayat, is one of the most successful artists of Moroccan chanson moderne. This genre was inspired by 20th-century Egyptian music and shares certain of its characteristics, such as song forms and the use of large orchestras; it blends the Egyptian musical approach to modernity with Moroccan idioms. Doukkali has consistently exploited the possibilities of this genre, singing works in classical Arabic as well as Moroccan dialect and using both Moroccan and Middle Eastern modes and rhythms. His choice of poetic texts is similarly eclectic, ranging from the romantic to the patriotic and from folktales to social commentary.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. and M.E. Hachlaf: Anthologie de la musique arabe, 1906–1960 (Paris, 1993)

A. Fassi: Passions orientales: anthologie, traduite de l'arabe, de la chanson orientale et nord-africaine classique et moderne (Tangiers, 1996)

S. Cherki: Jul tara al-ma'ānī [Wander and you will see the meanings] (Casablanca, 1997)

TIMOTHY D. FUSON

Dounias, Minos E. (b Cetate, Romania, 26 Sept 1900; d Athens, 20 Oct 1962). Greek musicologist and violinist. His family moved soon after his birth to Constantinople, where he attended Robert College (1914–21), learning the violin and playing in a string quartet and orchestra. Subsequently he studied the violin at the Berlin Conservatory with Moser and Kulenkampff (1921–6) and musicology with Schering and Abert at Berlin University (1926–32), taking the doctorate under Schering in 1932 with a dissertation on Tartini's violin concertos (Die Violinkonzerte Giuseppe Tartinis, Wolfenbüttel, 1935, 2/1966). Concurrently he played the violin in various string quartets, orchestras and early music groups. While working as professor of music at Pierce College, Athens (from 1934), he organized various vocal ensembles and instrumental groups which were the first in Greece to perform music of the late medieval, Renaissance and Baroque periods: the New Hellenic Choral Society (1936–7), the Choral Society of the Anglo-Hellenic League (1938–40) and the Athens Musical Society (1945–53). He also had an influential career as a music critic, first with the newly established journal Neoellinika grammata ('Modern Greek literature', 1936–49) and then with the Athenian Kathimerini ('Daily') newspaper (1948–62), through which he was able to raise the standards of musical taste in Greece (a selection of his criticism was published as Mousikokoitika, Athens, 1963). At the same time he gave numerous public lectures and broadcast extensively. Between 1950 and 1961 he served as president of the Society of the Friends of Nikos Skalkottas, and in the early 1950s acted as music adviser to the Greek Broadcasting Commission. His publications include an edition of Mozart's sonatas for organ and orchestra (Neue Ausgabe sämtlicher Werke, vi/16, Kassel, 1957–60/R).

DIMITRI CONOMOS

Dourlen, Victor-Charles-Paul (b Dunkirk, 3 Nov 1780; d Batignolles, Paris, 8 Jan 1864). French teacher and composer. His academic and practical abilities won him honourable mentions and prizes at the Paris Conservatoire from 1799. In 1805 he gained the Prix de Rome with the cantata Cupidon pleurant Psyché. His comic opera Philoclès, performed in 1806 before his departure for Italy, gave further evidence of early mastery. The works he wrote as a student in Rome were well received, and at the same time he apparently also produced stage works for Paris; he was accepted as an assistant professor at the Conservatoire in 1812. In 1816 he was made professor of harmony, a post held until his retirement in 1842. Dourlen's compositions were not popular, except for Le frère Philippe, and there is little doubt that teaching was his principal interest; but it is equally certain that he was not a pedant. The foreword to his Traité d'harmonie salutes the innovations of Mozart and Beethoven and suggests a sensibility that is lacking in Dourlen's own music.

WORKS

OPERAS

first performed in Paris, at the Opéra-Comique (Théâtre Feydeau) unless otherwise stated

Philoclès (2, J. Gensoul), 4 Oct 1806

Linnée, ou La mine de Suède (oc, 3, J.C.B. Dejaure), 10 Sept 1808

La dupe de son art, ou Les deux amants (oc, 1, L.-C. Sapey), 9 Sept 1809

Cagliostro, ou Les illuminés [Act 1] (oc, 3, J.A. de Réveroni de Saint-Cyr and E. Mercier-Dupaty), 27 Nov 1810, frags., sketches *F-Pc [Acts 2 and 3 by A. Reicha]

Plus heureux que sage (oc, 1, Mézès), 25 May 1816

Le frère Philippe (oc, prol., 1, A. Duport), 20 Jan 1818 (Paris, 1818)

Marini, ou Le muet de Venise (oc, 3, E.-J.-B. Delrieu), 12 June 1819

La vente après décès (oc, 1, C.-G. Etienne), Gymnase-Dramatique, 1 Aug 1821

Le petit souper (1, J.B.R.B.V. d'Epagny), 22 Feb 1822

VOCAL

Alcyone (cant., Arnault), 1804, F-Pc

Cupidon pleurant Psyché (cant., Arnault), 1805, Pc

Te Deum, 4vv, orch, 1807, Pc

Dies irae, 4vv, orch, 1808, Pc

15 separately pubd songs (Paris, n.d.), 1v, pf acc., unless otherwise indicated, incl. Conserve bien vierge simple; Elle m'aima cette belle Aspasie; L'amitié, l'amour et le vin, 3vv, pf; La pensée; Le baiser d'adieux; Le petit montagnard; Le ramier de la montagne; Le retour du paladin, 1v, gui; Les chanteurs ambulants, 2vv, pf; Les secrets; Mathilde aux pieds du Christ; Poème des troubadours; Trois nocturnes italiens, 2vv, pf all published in Paris, n.d.

INSTRUMENTAL

op.
1	Sonates, pf
2	La bataille de Marengo, sonate militaire, pf, 1801
3	Piano Concerto
4	Trio, pf, vn, vc
5	3 sonates, pf, vn
6	Sonates faciles, pf
9	Sonate, pf, fl
—	Fantasie sur Bélisaire, romance de Garat, pf
—	Potpourri sur des airs de Jean de Paris de Boieldieu, pf

Opp.7–8 unknown

WRITINGS

Méthode élémentaire pour le pianoforte (Paris, *c*1820)

Traité d'harmonie contenant un cours complet tel qu'il est enseigné au Conservatoire de Paris (Paris, 1834)

Traité d'accompagnement (Paris, 1840)

Principes d'harmonie (Paris, n.d.)

Tableau synoptique des accords (Paris, n.d.)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB

J. Carlier: 'Victor Dourlen', Mémoires de la Société dunkerquoise pour l'encouragement des sciences, des lettres et des arts, ix (1864), 512

A. Bongrain, Y. Gérard and M.-H. Coudroy-Saghaï, eds.: Le Conservatoire de Paris – Des Menus-Plaisirs à la Cité de la Musique, 1795–1995 (Paris, 1996)

DAVID CHARLTON

Dousmoulin, Joseph. See TOUCHEMOULIN, JOSEPH.

Doussaine (Fr.). See DOLZAINA.

Douwes, Claas (b ?Hennaard, Friesland, *c*1650; d Tzum, *c*1725). Dutch writer on music, organist and schoolmaster. While mysteries remain about Douwes's biography and publications, there is no doubt that his little Grondig ondersoek (Franeker, 1699/R) is one of the most important sources of information for historians and makers of keyboard instruments, offering unique details on the scaling of the clavichord and virginals. It also discusses the trumpet marine and 'noardske Balke' (noordsche balk). His general musical education came from such Dutch authors as J.A. Ban, but his data on instruments (useful, like his discussion of musical intervals, to remote Friesian organists) were more empirical and, though based on an uncertain unit of measurement, much more practical than those of any European theorist of his period. His treatise is concerned with the notes (toonen) of music: how to tune them, how to use them harmonically and how to produce them on different instruments. It does not seem to have been widely known at the time.

Douwes built at least one organ, probably gaining experience from the lively tradition then surrounding Franeker (a university town from 1585 to 1811), not least as it concerned builders such as Baders and Schnitger (an organ at Sneek, 1710).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Williams: Introduction, notes and bibliography to facs. edn. of Grondig ondersoek van de toonen der musiek (Amsterdam, 1971)
W.R. Thomas and J.J.K. Rhodes: 'Harpsichord Strings, Organ Pipes and the Dutch Foot', Organ Yearbook, iv (1973), 112–21

PETER WILLIAMS/R

Doux (Fr.). See DOLCE (i).

Douzième (Fr.). See TWELFTH (i).

Dovgan′, Vladimir Borisovich (b Polyarnïy, Murmansk district, 24 March 1953). Russian composer and pianist. He graduated from the Gnesin Music Academy in 1976, having studied composition with G.I. Litinsky and the piano with L.E. Brumberg. From 1977 he has taught composition at the Gnesin Music Lyceum. He was deputy chairman of the Moscow Union of Composers (1987–92), chairman of the board of the Music Fund for Russia (1988–90) and a piano teacher at the Bogoslovsky Institute.

Vocal and instrumental genres are prominent in Dovgan′'s output. Stylistically, his music is reminiscent of Tchaikovsky, Rachmaninoff, Skryabin and Prokofiev, but also bears comparison with the work of a closer contemporary, Boris Chaykovsky. He finds new compositional resources in Ukrainian folk music which he heard as a child and during expeditions in the Trans-Carpathian region where he notated about 100 songs. The cycle Iz ukrainskoy narodnoy poèzii ('From Ukrainian Folk Poetry') is based on authentic melodies; the organic and original way in which he uses folk sources is evident in the Kontsertnaya rapsodiya for piano and wind orchestra, Verkhovenskaya, a sonata-rhapsody for bayan and the cantata Chudove dzherelo ('The Miraculous Source') on folk texts in the Carpathian dialect of the Ukrainian language.

In his vocal music Dovgan′ relies on the traditions of the 19th-century Russian romance: he combines these with the romantic lyricism of Schubert and Schumann in his cycles to poems by Anna Akhmatova and Maksim Voloshin. His Shest′ romansov na stikhi App. Grigor′yeva ('Six Romances to Poems by Appolon Grigor′yev') have been described as a kind of Russian Dichterliebe. In the 1980s he turned to large-scale symphonic works with the lyrical and psychological First Symphony, the epic third and fourth piano concertos, and the monumentally dramatic Second Symphony which he dedicated to his parents, 'fighters of the Great Patriotic War'. The 1990s saw him turning to religious themes and old Russian sources such as the znamennïy chant in works such as the concerto for mixed choir Iz triodi postnoy ('From the Triodon of Lent') and other liturgical canticles to Orthodox texts. Dovgan′ makes professional appearances as a pianist and writes much for the piano, including concertos, sonatas and numerous other pieces.

WORKS

Orch: Concertino, vn, orch, 1975; Ov., 1975; Pf Conc. no.1, 1976; Conc., pf, wind, 1977; Sym. no.1, 1981; Pf Conc. no.3, 1983; Sym. no.2, 1984; Prelyudiya-ostinato, 1985; Torzhestvennaya pesn′ [Festive Song], 1985; Pf Conc. no.4, Èpicheskiy [The Epic], conc.-sym., 1988; Sym. no.3 'Mikhail Chernigovsky', 1992

Choral: Pesn′ Presvyatoy Bogoroditse [Song to the Most Holy Mother of God] (liturgical canticle), 1991; Simvol verï [The Symbol of Faith] (liturgical canticle), 1991; Iz Triodi Postnoy [From the Triodon of Lent], 1994; 4 liturgical canticles, 1994; 2 liturgical canticles, 1996

Chbr and solo inst: Kvintet-rapsodiya [Qnt-Rhapsody] fl, cl, vn, vc, pf, 1971; Sonata, vn, pf, 1972; Str Qt no.1, 1972; Sonata no.1, ob, pf, 1973; 5 p′yes [5 Pieces], vn, pf, 1976; Verkhovinskaya, sonata-rhapsody no.1, bayan, 1977; 3 detskiye p′yesï [3 Children's Pieces], hn, pf, 1978; Sonata no.2, ob, pf, 1979; Dramaticheskiye variatsii [Dramatic Variations], ob, pf, 1981; 2 detskiye p′yesï [2 Children's Pieces] hp, 1982; Fantasy, bn, 1983; Partita, hpd, 1985; St Qt no.2, 1987; Sonata no.2, bayan, 1994

Pf: Pf Sonata no.1, 1973; 5 p′yes [5 pieces], 1974; Pf Sonata no.2, 1978; 2 detskiye p′yesï [2 Children's Pieces], 1980; 5 p′yes na narodnïye melodii zakarpatskoy Ukrainï [5 Pieces on Folk Melodies from Trans-Carpathian Ukraine], 1983; 3 ukrainskiye zakarpatskiye pesni [3 Songs of Trans-Carpathian Ukraine], 1983; Pf Sonata no.3, 1989; Pf Sonata no.4, 1989; 14 detskikh p′yes [14 Children's Pieces], 1994; Pf Sonata no.5, 1994; 5 detskikh p′yes [5 Children's Pieces], 1995; Pf Sonata no.6, 1995

Vocal (1v, pf, unless otherwise stated): 6 romansov na stikhi russkikh poètov [6 Romances to verses by Russian Poets] (A. Blok, V. Bryusov, A. Grigor′yev, N. Zabolotsky), 1973; Iz ukrainskoy narodnoy poèzii [From the Folk Poetry of the Ukraine] (vocal cycle), 1976; Chudove dzherelo [The Miraculous Source] (cant., trad. text in the Trans-Carpathian dialect of the Ukraine), S, T, chbr orch, 1979; Garsia Lorka (vocal cycle), 1980; romances and song cycles after A. Akhmatova, M. Voloshin, A. Grigor′yev and Yu. Loshits

BIBLIOGRAPHY

'Avtorï rasskazïvayut: V. Dovgan″ [Composers relate], SovM, (1984), no.9, p.119 only
Yu. Kreynina: 'Vladimir Dovgan″, Kompozitorï Moskvï, ed. R. Kosacheva, iv (Moscow, 1994)

ALLA VLADIMIROVNA GRIGOR′YEVA

Dow, Daniel (b ?Kirkmichael, Perthshire, 1732; d Edinburgh, 20 Jan 1783). Scottish antiquarian and composer. He was giving guitar lessons in Edinburgh by the 1770s. In 1776 he published in Edinburgh A Collection of Ancient Scots Music ... never before printed, consisting of Ports, Salutations, Marches or Pibrochs &c, an interesting pioneer collection of Gaelic music a generation before the more important scholarly work of Gunn, Campbell and Fraser. Earlier, in 1773, Dow had brought out Twenty Minuets and Sixteen Reels or Country Dances of his own composition, set for 'Violin, Harpsichord or German Flute'; they include the reel The Bridge of Perth, written to celebrate the opening of the new bridge over the Tay in 1772, and many of the minuets are in the newly fashionable key of E♭. Around 1780 Dow's 37 New Reells and Strathspeys appeared, and a further 14 New Reells and Strathspeys about 1800. His son John Dow achieved considerable local fame as a folk-fiddler in Perthshire.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Glen: The Glen Collection of Scottish Dance Music, i (Edinburgh, 1891), p.ix

DAVID JOHNSON

Dowd, William (Richmond) (b Newark, NJ, 28 Feb 1922). American harpsichord maker. He studied English at Harvard (AB 1948). His interest in music began while he was at school, where he had piano lessons. At Harvard he and his friend Frank Hubbard became increasingly interested in early keyboard instruments, and built a clavichord. They decided not to follow their proposed careers as teachers of English and instead to found a workshop for building harpsichords constructed on historical principles. Dowd served an apprenticeship in the Detroit workshop of John Challis, a disciple of Arnold Dolmetsch and the pioneer builder of harpsichords in the USA. In autumn 1949 Dowd and Hubbard established their workshop in Boston, Massachusetts. By 1955, when Hubbard left for a research trip in Europe, the firm had constructed 13 harpsichords and four clavichords, and restored several important historical instruments. Dowd continued the firm's production and restoration work during Hubbard's absence, and worked out an important design based on the two-manual harpsichords of Pascal Taskin. This French double harpsichord soon found wide favour with performers as a general-purpose concert instrument.

After the dissolution of the firm in late 1958 Dowd established his own workshop in Cambridge, Massachusetts, which continued production of harpsichords based on historical models, attaining an annual output of 20 to 22 instruments, a large number for instruments of the highest quality. From 1971 to 1985 Dowd maintained an additional workshop under his name in Paris in collaboration with Reinhard von Nagel, which produced between 20 and 24 instruments annually (for illustration, see HARPSICHORD, fig. 17). Both the Cambridge and Paris workshops were largely given over to the production of two-manual harpsichords based on the great French prototypes by the Blanchets, Hemsch and Taskin, including Taskin's reconstructions en grand ravalement of Ruckers harpsichords. They also made a smaller instrument of Flemish design and a French single-manual model, as well as specially commissioned instruments based on other models, and restorations of antique harpsichords. Dowd harpsichords are probably in wider use by leading professional performers in North America and Europe than those of any other maker. Dowd closed his Boston workshop in 1988. ([H. Haney:] 'Portrait of a Builder', The Harpsichord, iv/1 (1971–2), 8–19)

WRITINGS

'A Classification System for Ruckers and Couchet Double Harpsichords', JAMIS, iv (1978), 106–13

'The Surviving Instruments of the Blanchet Workshop', The Historical Harpsichord: a Monograph Series in Honor of Frank Hubbard, i, ed. H. Schott (Stuyvesant, NY, 1984), 17–107

HOWARD SCHOTT

Dowiakowska-Klimowiczowa, Bronisława (Apolonia Izabela) (b Warsaw, 9 Feb 1840; d Warsaw, 3 Feb 1910). Polish soprano. She studied with Quattrini and made her début in Warsaw on 25 March 1857. On 20 April 1858 she made her stage début in Warsaw in Flotow's Alessandro Stradella, later singing in Les Huguenots and Don Giovanni. From 1859, for 35 years, she sang about 100 operatic soprano roles, including all of Moniuszko's operas as well as operas by Kurpiński, Münchheimer, Auber, Hérold, Grossman, Bellini, Donizetti, Meyerbeer, Weber, Verdi, Flotow, Halévy, Rossini, Marschner, Mozart, Wagner, Bizet and others; she was the first in Poland to sing Marguerite in Gounod's Faust (1865). Between 1873 and 1889 she made guest appearances in Lemberg (now L'viv), and she also sang at Kraków (1873, 1885), Kiev, Odessa (1881) and Nice (1888–9). Her compass was a to e‴, and she possessed a brilliant technique and an ability for clear enunciation. Her final appearance was as Mignon at the Warsaw Opera (2 September 1894).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

PSB (M. Rulikowski); SMP

J. Kleczyński: 'Bronisława Dowiakowska', Echo muzyczne, teatralne i artystyczne, xi (1894), 237–8

A. Spóz: 'Bronisława Dowiakowska', Encyklopedia muzyczna PWM, ed. E. Dzięgbowska, ii (Kraków, 1984)

IRENA PONIATOWSKA

Dowland, John (b ?London, 1563; bur. London, 20 Feb 1626). English composer and lutenist. He was one of the finest players of his time, and while his music was soon superseded in England, it had a profound influence on the Continent, where he spent much of his career. He is now recognized as the greatest English composer of lute music and lute songs.

1. Life. 2. Works: (i) Songs (ii) Lute music (iii) Consort music.

1. LIFE. Dowland wrote in A Pilgrimes Solace (London, 1612) that 'I am now entered into the fiftieth yeare of mine age'; nothing has been found to substantiate Thomas Fuller's claim that he was born in Westminster, or W.H. Grattan Flood's claim that he came from Dalkey near Dublin. However, he wrote in The First Booke of Songs or Ayres (London, 1597) that he had studied music from childhood, and this was presumably in an aristocratic household; he was certainly in Sir Henry Cobham's service for all or some of Cobham's period as English resident in Paris from 1579 to 1583, and was still there in 1584, when he was mentioned in a letter to Sir Edward Stafford, Cobham's successor. He admitted in 1595 in a long autobiographical letter to Sir Robert Cecil that he had become a Catholic in France, though he received a BMus at Christ Church, Oxford, on 8 July 1588, which would have involved him subscribing to the Thirty-Nine Articles.

Little is known about Dowland during this period, but there are signs that he was rapidly making his mark on English musical life. In 1588 the Oxford academic John Case listed him among English musicians worthy of honour, and a poem in Anthony Munday's A Banquet of Daintie Conceits (London, 1588, but registered 1584) is labelled 'To Dowland's Galliard'. On 17 November 1590 a variant of his song His golden locks time hath to silver turned was apparently sung to Queen Elizabeth by Robert Hales on behalf of Sir Henry Lee during a ceremony in the tiltyard at Westminster. Dowland also seems to have played in an entertainment given by Lord Chandos during the queen's visit to Sudeley from 9 to 12 September 1592: one of the characters was a musician called 'Do', and a variant of his song My heart and tongue were twins was performed.

With these court connections, Dowland might have expected to fill the vacancy among the royal lutenists created by John Johnson's death in the summer of 1594, but no-one was appointed at that time, so he responded to an invitation to enter the service of Heinrich Julius, Duke of Brunswick-Lüneburg at Wolfenbüttel. He wrote in his letter to Cecil that the duke plied him with gifts and promised 'as mutch as any prince in the worlde', though in the autumn of 1594 he visited the court of Moritz, Landgrave of Hesse, in the company of the Wolfenbüttel lutenist Gregorio Huet, and in the following spring he set out for Rome to study with Luca Marenzio. He wrote in The First Booke that he visited Venice (where he met Giovanni Croce), Padua, Genoa, Ferrara and 'divers other places' before reaching Florence, where he became drawn into a circle of English Catholics involved in treasonable activities. When he was promised 'a large pention of the pope, & that his holynes & all the cardinales would make wonderfull mutch of me', he realized the seriousness of his position, and returned to Kassel by way of Bologna, Venice and Nuremberg without apparently reaching Rome or meeting Marenzio.

Dowland's letter to Cecil, written in Nuremberg on 10 November 1595, was evidently designed to demonstrate his loyalty to the queen:

> god he knoweth I never loved treason nor trechery nor never knew of any, nor never heared any mass in englande, wh[i]che I finde is great abuse of the peple for on my soule I understande it not, wherefor I hav reformed my self to lyve according to her ma[jes]ties lawes as I was borne under her highnes, & that most humbly I do Crave p[ar]don, p[ro]testinge if ther wer any abylitie in me, I wold be most redy to make amende[s] . . .

However sincere he may have been, it did not improve his prospects at the English court. True, the courtier Henry Noel wrote to him at Kassel on 1 December 1596 to tell him that the queen 'hath wished divers tymes your return', and to 'wishe you health & soon return'. But Noel died on 26 February 1597 before any strings could be pulled, and Dowland was again left without a court appointment; he commemorated his patron with the Lamentatio Henrici Noel, a set of seven four-part psalms and canticles. He also took the opportunity to publish The First Booke, entered in the Stationers' Register on 31 October, where he described himself as 'Lutenist and Batcheler of musicke in both the Universities'; no record of his Cambridge MusB survives. The First Booke was an outstanding success, and confirmed Dowland's position as a leader of English musical life. He is compared to Spenser in Richard Barnfield's sonnet 'If music and sweet poetry agree', published in 1598, though court preferment still eluded him, and on 9 February that year the Landgrave of Hesse wrote inviting him back to Kassel. It is unlikely that he accepted the offer, for he is next heard of on 18 November entering the service of Christian IV, King of Denmark.

Dowland was evidently highly valued by Christian IV. His salary of 500 daler (more than £200 in contemporary English money) made him one of the highest-paid court servants; his successor, Thomas Cutting, only received 300 daler. He also received occasional gifts from the king, and was allowed extended periods of absence in England. The first journey, in the autumn, winter and spring of 1601–2, was made to purchase instruments and recruit musicians, while he set out a second time in the summer of 1603 'on his own business', apparently another attempt to obtain a post at the English court. Elizabeth had died on 24 March 1603, and Dowland dedicated his consort collection Lachrimae or Seaven Teares (London, 1604) to the new queen, Anne of Denmark, Christian IV's sister. Dowland wrote in the dedication that he 'had accesse' to her in Winchester (she was there from 18 September to late October), and planned to return to Denmark that autumn but was 'twice under sayle' before being 'forst back' by 'contrary windes and frost'. Thus he was able to see Lachrimae through the press (it was entered in the Stationers' Register on 2 April 1604), and was still in London on 9 May 1604, the day he wrote out a lute piece for a foreign visitor, Hans von Bodeck of Elbing (now Elbląg in Poland).

Opening of the tune of the Lord's Prayer, with John Dowland's signature, from the 'Album amicorum' of Johannes Cellarius of Nuremberg, 1599–1606 (GB-Lbl Add.27579, f.88)

The title-page of Lachrimae contains the first reference to Dowland's house 'in Fetter-lane neare Fleet-streete'. We know remarkably little about his domestic life. He presumably married before 1591, when his son Robert was apparently born; Robert's godfather, Sir Robert Sidney, governor of Flushing in the Netherlands, was in London in December that year. But we do not know Mrs Dowland's Christian name, nor how many children they had ('children' in the plural is mentioned in the letter to Cecil). She apparently remained in London while he was abroad, so they can have had little family life after 1594. Dowland told Cecil that the Landgrave of Hesse had sent her a ring worth £20 on his arrival at Kassel in 1594, and a complicated series of lawsuits relating to The Second Booke of Songs or Ayres reveals that she handled the sale of the manuscript to the publisher George Eastland; Dowland signed the dedication 'From Helsingnoure in Denmarke' on 1 June 1600. There is no mention of her after 1601, though he was still living in Fetter Lane on 10 April 1609, when he signed the preface of Andreas Ornithoparcus his Micrologus, his translation of Musicae activae micrologus (Leipzig, 1517).

The end of Dowland's service at the Danish court came early in 1606: he was dismissed on 24 February and paid outstanding salary and expenses. There is no evidence that he left under a cloud, as Poulton suggested. It may just be that his high salary could no longer be afforded, or that he had decided to leave Denmark. It has been assumed that he returned immediately to England, but there is no record of his activities there for the next three years, and his statement in the preface to Andreas Ornithoparcus his Micrologus that he had 'now returned home to remaine' implies that he had arrived only recently. Perhaps he spent some time at another continental court, but details of any such sojourn have yet to come to light.

By this time Dowland was one of the most famous musicians in Europe, yet he continued to be passed over at the English court. In April 1610 a vacancy among the royal lutenists went to Simon Merson, a relative nonentity, a situation that apparently provoked some moving lines from Dowland's friend and neighbour Henry Peacham, published in his emblem book Minerva Britanna (London, 1612):

> So since (old friend) thy yeares have made thee white,
> And thou for others, hast consum'd thy spring,
> How few regard thee, whom thou didst delight,
> And farre and neere, came once to heere thee sing;
> Ingratefull times, and worthles age of ours,
> That let's us pine, when it hath cropt our flowers.

Dowland made his own feelings plain in the extraordinary preface to A Pilgrimes Solace, published in the same year. He began by contrasting his 'Kingly entertainment in a forraine climate' with his 'strange entertainment' in England – he 'could not attaine to any (though never so meane) place at home' – and went on to attack large sections of his profession, including 'simple Cantors, or vocall singers' who excel in 'blinde Division-making' but are ignorant of theory, young 'professors of the Lute' who do not respect their elders and betters, and 'divers strangers from beyond the seas', who claim that the English 'have no true methode of application or fingering of the Lute'. He particularly singled out Tobias Hume, who had the temerity to claim in 1605 that the newly-fashionable lyra viol could 'with ease yeeld full various, and devicefull Musicke as the Lute'.

There is more than a hint of paranoia here, and it is hard to resist the conclusion that he was his own worst enemy at times; as Henry Peacham put it in The Compleat Gentleman (London, 1622), he 'slipt many opportunities in advancing his fortunes'. Not that he was without patronage. He described himself as lutenist of Theophilus, Lord Howard de Walden, on the title-page of A Pilgrimes Solace, received a gift from William Cavendish, Earl of Devonshire, in May 1612, and was paid £5 for providing a 'conserte' for the Middle Temple on Candlemas Day 1613 with the composer William Corkine and the otherwise unknown Richard Goosey. Court preferment finally came in 1612, perhaps because Thomas Howard, Theophilus's father, was acting Lord Chamberlain at the time. By a warrant dated 28 October 1612 Dowland was given a specially created post, increasing the number of court lutenists from four to five.

A Pilgrimes Solace was Dowland's last publication, and the only works that can be dated with any certainty after it are the two beautiful devotional partsongs in Sir William Leighton's Teares or Lamentacions of a Sorrowful Soule (London, 1614). His music continued to be published in continental collections, though it is doubtful whether he provided any of the material, or in some cases even knew of their existence. In his last years he seems to have had a measure of the recognition that had long been accorded him abroad. Johannes-Philippus Medelius wrote in a Latin poem prefacing Elias Mertel's Hortus musicalis (Strasbourg, 1615) that 'every land strives to exalt the renown of its own artists. Music bears witness to this truth. England puts Dowland first, honours and loves him'. Henry Peacham continued to praise him at regular intervals, and referred to him as 'Maister Doctor Dowland' in Thalia's Banquet (London, 1620), which provides the first evidence of his doctorate; Thomas Lodge's reference to 'Doctor Dowland, an ornament of Oxford' in his Learned Summary (London, 1621) implies that the award came from there. Dowland was apparently active until his last years, for as late as December 1624 he was paid £10 for a lute and 100s 'for stringes to bee used at such tymes as hee should wayte' at court. His court pay ceased on 20 January 1626, which suggests that that was the day he died, but there was apparently an error of some sort, for his burial at St Ann Blackfriars was not recorded until a month later, on 20 February.

2. Works.

(i) Songs. Dowland is one of England's greatest song composers, to be ranked with Purcell and Britten. In part, his importance lies in his role as an innovator. He effectively created the English type of lute-song, synthesizing elements from the broadside ballad, dance music, the consort song and the madrigal. Equally importantly, he devised a printed format for The First Booke that contributed to its success – it was reprinted at least four times up to 1613 – and effectively defined the genre; it was used for all subsequent collections of lute-songs. Instead of a set of quarto partbooks, with each book containing all the parts in the collection for a particular voice or instrument, Dowland used a single folio book intended to be placed flat on a small table, to be read by the performers grouped around it. The table layout brilliantly solved the problems of combining lute tablature with staff notation in a printed collection, and allowed for many different types of domestic performance: all the songs in The First Booke can be performed by a single person singing the cantus part and playing the underlaid tablature on the left-hand page. Alternatively, they can be sung as partsongs using some or all the lower parts on the right-hand page, or with viols replacing or doubling some or all of the voices. Another advantage of the table layout, particularly exploited in later collections such as A Pilgrimes Solace, is that the layout of each opening could be different, so that it was possible to include in a single collection a wide variety of music, ranging from solo songs to masque music or even anthems and motets.

Musically, The First Booke is Dowland's least adventurous collection: all the 21 songs are scored for four voices and lute, they are all strophic, and most of them use dance rhythms and patterns to some extent. Some of them, such as the galliards Can she excuse my wrongs and If my complaints could passions move, also circulated as instrumental dances, and were probably adapted from them using the technique established for broadside ballads of writing words to fit an existing tune. Yet the collection was deservedly successful, for Dowland revelled in the discipline of finding precise correspondences between poetic metre and musical rhythm, line and phrase lengths, rhyme schemes and dance structures, creating a number of flawless masterpieces in the process.

The Second Booke and The Third and Last Booke of Songs or Aires (London, 1603) begin with pieces for solo voice with a bass part (underlaid in The Second Booke) and lute, progress to partsongs, and finish with elaborate dialogues involving solo voices, a chorus, obbligato viols and, in the case of Come when I call from The Third and Last Booke, two lutes. These collections have fewer simple, homophonic dance-songs and many more serious pieces with contrapuntal lute parts and/or lower voices. This trend is taken further in A Pilgrimes Solace, which consists of four distinct groups of pieces: secular partsongs, a group of elaborate devotional partsongs, three songs specifically for solo voice, treble and bass viols and lute, and four songs for solo voices and chorus. Three of the last, the nautical dialogue Up merry mates and the wedding song Welcome black night with its second part Cease these false sports, may come from theatrical entertainments, and use a novel declamatory vocal idiom akin to Italian monody. In darkness let me dwell, one of three remarkable songs contributed to Robert Dowland's anthology A Musicall Banquet (London, 1610), is the greatest example of a type that relates more to the consort song than the strophic dance song. It is through-composed with a complex contrapuntal lute part, there are no optional lower voice parts, and the anguished text is illustrated by grinding dissonances and lurching harmonic instability, culminating in the extraordinary inconclusive ending, shown in ex.1.

(ii) Lute music. John Dowland never fulfilled the promise, made in the preface of The First Booke, to 'set forth the choisest of all my Lessons in print', nor did he publish the 'greater Worke, touching the Art of Lute-playing' mentioned in the preface to Robert Dowland's anthology Varietie of Lute-Lessons (London, 1610). Had he done so, it would be easier to assess his 100-odd lute solos. As it is, with a few exceptions, they survive only in prints and manuscripts of more or less uncertain provenance and accuracy. The situation is complicated by the number of variants that exist of popular pieces. Dowland would doubtless have performed his own music in a semi-improvised manner from a memorized 'gist', and would have felt free to alter the details each time he wrote a piece down. Thus it is rarely possible to establish a single authoritative text of a piece, particularly since there is often no way of distinguishing between settings that derive from the composer and those made by his more accomplished colleagues and contemporaries.

Dowland probably played on a six-course lute in his youth, though most of his lute music and his first three songbooks require seven courses, and towards the end of his life he seems to have played on a nine-course lute. He probably intended his early music for a lute with the three lowest courses tuned in octaves, a practice still advocated in William Barley's New Book of Tabliture (London, 1596), which contains seven of his pieces, though in the Varietie of Lute-Lessons he repudiated it as 'irregular to the rules of Musicke' and recommended tuning all the courses in unison. Right-hand technique also underwent a change at the time. Johann Stobaeus wrote that Dowland changed over from the old 'thumb under' position to 'thumb out', which produced a 'clearer, crisper, brighter sound'. This more modern technique was also advocated by Jean-Baptiste Besard's lute instructions, published in translation in the Varietie.

Ex.1 In darkness let me dwell

Most of Dowland's lute music is based on dance forms: pavans, galliards, almains and jig-like pieces. He seems to have preferred not to pair pavans and galliards, and to have had a particular fondness for the galliard (more than 30 examples by him survive), though his most popular piece was the pavan Lachrimae. He turned it into the song Flow my tears, and it occurs in about 100 manuscripts and prints in many different solo and ensemble arrangements. Lachrimae exemplifies the novel aspects of Dowland's dance music. It marks the transition from functional dance music to abstract instrumental music (Thomas Morley wrote that pavans for dancing ought to have strains of even-numbered breves, but its third strain consists of $8\frac{1}{2}$ breves), it is much more contrapuntal than the pavans of his predecessors, and a remarkable amount of its material derives from the famous falling 'tear' motif heard at the opening.

Lachrimae also illustrates Dowland's fondness for borrowing ideas from his contemporaries. It is possible that he encountered the 'tear' motif in a Lassus motet or a Marenzio madrigal, while the contrapuntal idea in the third strain seems to derive from an anthem by Tye by way of Morley's pavan Sacred End. Similarly, The Right Honourable the Lord Viscount Lisle, his Galliard is one of several of Dowland's galliards derived from Lassus's Susanne un jour; The Most High and Mighty Christianus the Fourth, King of Denmark, his Galliard uses material from several earlier battle pieces; another galliard (in c, PL no.28) is based on a galliard by Daniel Bacheler, two fantasias (in G, PL no.1 and in g, PL no.7) refer to Tallis's Felix namque settings for keyboard; while the ending of a third fantasia, 'Farewell' (PL no.3), is related to the setting of the words 'I'll sing my faint farewell' in Weelkes's three-part madrigal Cease, sorrows, now (1597). Dowland's fantasias tend to be more rigorously contrapuntal than those of his fellow English lutenists, perhaps because he was more aware of the consort and keyboard repertories than they were. He was fond of contrapuntal passages exploiting the chromatic 4th, proportional time changes and the use of a cantus firmus, though there are also many passages of brilliantly virtuosic and idiomatic writing (ex.2).

(iii) Consort music. Dowland's consort music has often been thought of as a by product of his lute music, since 11 of the 21 pieces he published in Lachrimae or Seaven Teares also exist in versions for solo lute, and many of the other pieces that also survive in contemporary manuscripts and prints are probably arrangements of lute pieces made by others. All the pieces except one in Lachrimae or Seaven Teares use the standard late-Elizabethan five-part dance music scoring with a single soprano part, three inner parts and bass, apparently intended for treble viol, three tenor viols and bass viol, or for violin, three violas and bass violin; the exception, Mr Thomas Collier his Galliard with 2 Trebles, uses the more modern Italianate scoring with two equal and crossing soprano parts. It is unlikely that the consort settings that use other scorings, such as the ones for string quartet and continuo published by Thomas Simpson in his Taffel-Consort (Hamburg, 1621), were made by the composer. A number of Dowland's lute pieces also exist in settings for mixed consort (violin or treble viol, flute or recorder, bass viol, lute, cittern and bandora), though it is not clear whether he was directly involved in composing or arranging for that repertory.

Nevertheless, the five-part settings in the Lachrimae collection are beautifully conceived, and there is some evidence that they are not simply arrangements of lute pieces. A few details of the inner parts of Lachrimae Antiquae seem to be borrowed from Marenzio, but these features do not appear in the lute setting, suggesting that Dowland originally conceived the piece in five parts; furthermore, the lute setting published in Johann Rude's Flores musicae, ii (Heidelberg, 1600) is entitled 'Pavana a 5 voc.'. The Lachrimae collection, which Dowland described in his preface as 'this long and troublesome worke, wherein I have mixed new songs with olde, grave with light', divides into settings of favourite lute pieces, and those pieces that do not exist in earlier versions and may have been specially composed in the winter of 1603–4. The former are generally lively and high pitched, and were perhaps conceived for a violin consort at the Danish court, while the latter include the rest of the

Ex.2 Forlorn Hope Fantasia

'Lachrimae' pavans, are generally low-pitched and serious, and are most suitable for viols.

The cycle of seven 'Lachrimae' pavans was something new in European music. The principle of linking dances thematically was a common technique at the time, but only Dowland thought of writing a variation sequence using a single type of dance, and he was the first composer to use dance forms and variation techniques to explore the elevated areas of feeling hitherto exclusively associated with contrapuntal genres such as the motet and the fantasia.

The Latin titles of the pavans have yet to be satisfactorily explained, but there can be little doubt that they represent some sort of spiritual journey through grief and despair to redemption and enlightenment, and it is possible that Dowland intended them to represent some of the states of melancholy described by Robert Burton in his Anatomy of Melancholy (London, 1621) and by other Elizabethan and Jacobean writers. Yet the pavans, linked by a subtle web of melodic and harmonic cross-references, make perfect sense on a purely musical level and mark an important stage in the development of autonomous, abstract instrumental music.

WORKS

Editions: John Dowland: First Book of Ayres, ed. E.H. Fellowes, rev. T. Dart, EL, 1st ser., i–ii (2/1965) [F i]
John Dowland: Second Book of Songs, ed. E.H. Fellowes, rev. T. Dart, EL, 1st ser., v–vi (2/1969) [F ii]
John Dowland: Third Booke of Songs, ed. E.H. Fellowes, rev. T. Dart and D. Scott, EL, 1st ser., x–xi (3/1970) [F iii]
John Dowland: A Pilgrimes Solace, ed. E.H. Fellowes, rev. T. Dart, EL, 1st ser., xii, xiv (2/1969) [F iv]
Robert Dowland: A Musicall Banquet, ed. P. Stroud, EL, 2nd ser., xx (1968) [S]
John Dowland: Complete Psalms, ed. D Poulton (London, 1973) [P]
The Collected Lute Music of John Dowland, ed. D. Poulton and B. Lam (London, 1974, 3/1981) [PL]
John Dowland: Complete Consort Music, ed. E. Hunt (London, 1985) [H]
John Dowland: Ayres for Four Voices, ed. D. Greer, MB, vi (2000) [previous edn by T. Dart and N. Fortune (1953, 2/1963)] [G]

SECULAR SONGS

for 4 voices and lute unless otherwise stated

The Firste Booke of Songes or Ayres of Fowre Partes (London, 1597/*R*1968, and several later edns) [1597]
The Second Booke of Songs or Ayres of 2, 4. and 5. parts (London, 1600/*R*1970) [1600]
The Third and Last Booke of Songs or Aires (London, 1603/*R*1970) [1603]
A Pilgrimes Solace (London, 1612/*R*1970) [1612]

All ye whom love or fortune hath betrayed, 1597; F i, 28; G 32
A shepherd in a shade, 1600; F ii, 42; G 69
Awake sweet love, thou art returned, 1597; F i, 38; G 44
Away with these self-loving lads, 1597; F i, 42; G 49
Behold a wonder here, 1v, lute, b viol, 1603; F iii, 6
Burst forth, my tears, 1597; F i, 16; G 17
By a fountain where I lay, 1603; F iii, 24, G 99
Can she excuse my wrongs, 1597; F i, 10; G 10 [= Can she excuse, PL no. 42; The Earl of Essex Galliard, H no. 12]
Cease, cease these false sports [see Welcome, black night]
Clear or cloudy sweet as April showering, 1600; F ii, 50; G 78
Come again, sweet love doth now invite, 1597; F i, 34; G 40
Come away, come sweet love, 1597; F i, 22; G 25
Come, heavy sleep, 1597; F i, 40; G 46
Come when I call, or tarry till I come (dialogue), 2vv, 3 viols, 5-part chorus, 2 lutes, 1603; F iii, 42; G 122
Come, ye heavy states of night, 1600; F ii, 36; G 62
Daphne was not so chaste as she was changing, 1v, lute, b viol, 1603; F iii, 8
Dear, if you change, I'll never choose again, 1597; F i, 14; G 14
Die not before thy day, 2vv, lute, 1600; F ii, 17
Disdain me still, that I may ever love, 1612; F iv, 2; G 130
Faction, that ever dwells in court, 1600; F ii, 44; G 72
Farewell, too fair, 1v, lute, b viol, 1603; F iii, 2
Farewell, unkind, farewell, 1603; F iii, 28; G 105
Far from triumphing court, 1v, lute, b viol, 1610^{20}, F iv, 73; S 14
Fie on this feigning, is love without desire, 1603; F iii, 32; G 110
Fine knacks for ladies, 1600; F ii, 32; G 59
Flow, my tears, fall from your springs, 2vv, lute, 1600; F ii, 10 [= Lachrimae, PL no. 15; Lachrimae antiquae, H no. 1]
Flow not so fast ye fountains, 1603; F iii, 16; G 89
From silent night, true register of moans, 1v, tr, b viols, lute, 1612; F iv, 26
Go, crystal tears, 1597; F i, 18; G 20
Go nightly cares, the enemy to rest, 1v, tr, b viols, lute, 1612; F iv, 21
His golden locks Time hath to silver turned, 1597; F i, 36; G 42
Humour say what mak'st thou here (dialogue), 2vv, 4 viols, 4-part chorus, lute, 1600; F ii, 52; G 81
If floods of tears could cleanse my follies past, 1600; F ii, 30; G 57
If my complaints could passions move, 1597; F i, 8; G 8 [= Captain Digorie Piper's Galliard, PL no. 19; Captain Piper his Galliard, H no. 18]
I must complain, yet do enjoy my love, 1603; F iii, 34; G 112
In darkness let me dwell, 1v, lute, b viol, 1610^{20}; F iv, 80; S 18
I saw my lady weep, 2vv, lute, 1600; F ii, 8
It was a time when silly bees could speak, 1603; F iii, 36; G 114
Lady if you so spite me, 1v, lute, b viol, 1610^{20}; S 16; F iv, 76
Lasso vita mia, mi fa morire, 1v, tr, b viols, lute, 1612; F iv, 31
Lend your ears to my sorrow, good people, 1603; F iii, 22; G 97
Love stood amazed at sweet Beauty's pain, 1603; F iii, 20; G 94
Love, those beams, that breed, 1612; F iv, 8; G 139
Me, me and none but me, 1603; F iii, 10; G 83
Mourn, mourn, day is with darkness fled, 2vv, lute, 1600; F ii, 19
My heart and tongue were twins, 1612; F iv, 54; G 188
My thoughts are winged with hopes, 1597; F i, 6; G 6 [= Sir John Souch's Galliard, PL no. 26; H no. 13]
Now cease, my wandering eyes, 1600; F ii, 34; G 61
Now, O now I needs must part, 1597; F i, 12; G 12 [= The Frog Galliard, PL no.23]
O sweet woods, the delight of solitariness, 1600; F ii, 28; G 53
O what hath overwrought my all amazed thought, 1603; F iii, 26; G 102
Praise blindness, eyes, for seeing is deceit, 1600; F ii, 26; G 51
Rest awhile, you cruel cares, 1597; F i, 24; G 27
Say, Love, if ever thou didst find, 1603; F iii, 14; G 87
Shall I strive with words to move, 1612; F iv, 10; G 141 [= Mignarda, PL no. 34; Sir Henry Noel his Galliard, H no. 14]
Shall I sue, shall I seek for grace?, 1600; F ii, 46; G 73
Sleep wayward thoughts, 1597; F i, 26; G 30
Sorrow, stay, lend true repentant tears, 2vv, lute, 1600; F ii, 13
Stay, Time, awhile thy flying, 1612; F iv, 16; G 149
Sweet, stay awhile, why will you rise?, 1612; F iv, 4; G 134
Tell me, true Love, 1v, b viol, 4-part chorus, lute, 1612; F iv, 18; G 150
The lowest trees have tops, 1603; F iii, 38; G 117
Think'st thou then by thy feigning, 1597; F i, 20; G 23
Time's eldest son, Old Age (2p. Then sit thee down, and say thy Nunc dimittis; 3p. When others sing Venite exultemus), 2vv, lute, 1600; F ii, 21
Time stands still, 1v, lute, b viol, 1603; F iii, 4
To ask for all thy love, 1612; F iv, 6; G 137
Toss not my soul, 1600; F ii, 48; G 75
Unquiet thoughts, 1597; F i, 2; G 1
Up merry mates, to Neptune's praise (dialogue), 2vv, 4-part chorus, lute, 1612; F iv, 56
Weep you no more, sad fountains, 1603; F iii, 30; G 108
Welcome, black night, Hymen's fair day, 1v, b viol (in 2p. Cease, cease these false sports), 5-part chorus, lute, 1612; F iv, 62
Were every thought an eye, 1612; F iv, 13; G 145
What if I never speed?, 1603; F iii, 18; G 91
What poor astronomers are they, 1603; F iii, 40; G 120
When Phoebus first did Daphne love, 1603; F iii, 12; G 85
White as lilies was her face, 1600; F ii, 38; G 65
Whoever thinks or hopes of love for love, 1597; F i, 4; G 3
Wilt thou unkind thus reave me of my heart, 1597; F i, 30; G 35
Woeful heart with grief oppressed, 1600; F ii, 40; G 67
Would my conceit that first enforced my woe, 1597; F i, 32; G 37

Adieu, sweet amaryllis, 1v, pf [?acc. arr. H. Harty from lute tablature], Library of Queen's University, Belfast; facs. in Greer (1987) (doubtful)

PSALMS AND DEVOTIONAL SONGS

A Pilgrimes Solace (London, 1612/*R*1970) [1612]
Lamentatio Henrici Noel (1597), GB-NO [NO]

All people that on earth do dwell [i] (Ps c), 4vv, 1592[7], P 8
All people that on earth do dwell [ii], 4vv, 1621[11]; P 9
An heart that's broken and contrite, 4vv, mixed consort, 1614[7]; ed. in EECM, xi (1970), 24
Behold and have regard (Ps cxxxiv), 4vv, 1592[7]; P14
If that a sinner's sighs be angel's food, 4vv, lute, 1612; F iv, 40; G 159
In this trembling shadow cast, 4vv, lute, 1612; F iv, 37; G 155
I shame at mine unworthiness, 5vv, 1614[7] ed. in EECM, xi (1970), p.176
Lord, hear my prayer, hark the plaint (Ps cxliii), 4vv, NO; P 26
Lord, in thy wrath reprove me not (Ps vi), 4vv, NO; P 28
Lord, to thee I make my moan [i] (Ps cxxx), 4vv, 1592[7]; P 12
Lord, to thee I make my moan [ii], 4vv, NO; P 24
My soul praise the Lord (Ps civ), 4vv, 1592[7]; P 10
O God of power omnipotent, 4vv, 1592[7]; P 15
O Lord consider my distress (Ps li), 4vv, NO; P 18
O Lord of whom I do depend, 4vv, NO; P 20
O Lord, turn not away thy face, 4vv NO; P 16
Put me not to rebuke, O Lord (Ps xxxviii), 1592[7]; P 7 [tune also used for other texts, including numerous other psalms]
Where righteousness doth say, 4vv, NO; P 22
Where sin, sore-wounding, 4vv, lute, 1612; F iv, 51; G 183

LUTE

Nos. in parentheses are those used in the edition [PL] and in Poulton (1972); for additional sources see Ward (1977) and Craig-McFeely

Fantasias etc.:
Farewell (3)
Farewell (4) [on In nomine]
Forlorn Hope (2)
4 untitled fantasias: d (5), 2 in g (6, 7), G (1, 1a)
Prelude (98)

Pavans:
Dr Case's Pavan (12)
Lachrimae (15) [= Flow, my tears, fall from your springs; also for consort; H1]
La mia Barbara (95)
Mr John Langton's Pavan (14) [= Sir John Langton his Pavan]
Mrs Brigide Fleetwood's Pavan (Solus sine sola) (11)
Piper's Pavan (8)
Resolution (13) [also for lute and b viol as Dowland's Adieu for Master Oliver Cromwell, 1600]
Semper Dowland semper dolens (9) [also for consort, H no.8]
Sir John Langton his Pavan (14a)
Solus cum sola (10)
The Lady Russell's Pavan (17)
5 untitled pavans: g (16), g (18), c (94), d, g, J.D. Mylius, Thesaurus gratiarum (1622)

Galliards:
Can she excuse (42) [= The Right Honourable Robert, Earl of Essex, his Galliard; also a secular song, and for consort, H no.12]
Captain Digorie Piper's Galliard (19) [= If my complaints could passions move; also for consort, H no.18]
Dowland's Bells (43a) [= The Lady Rich's Galliard]
Galliard to Lachrimae (46)
Giles Hoby's Galliard (29) [also for consort, H no.15]
Melancholy Galliard (25)
Mignarda (34) [= Shall I strive with words to move; Mr Henry Noel his Galliard, H no.14]
Mr Knight's Galliard (36)
Mr Langton's Galliard (33)
Mrs Vaux Galliard (32)
My Lord Chamberlain his Galliard [duet on one lute] (37)
Round Battle Galliard (39)
Suzanna Galliard (91) [variant of The Right Honourable the Lord Viscount Lisle, his Galliard]
Sir John Souch's Galliard (26) [= My thoughts are winged with hopes; also for consort, H no.13]
The Earl of Derby's Galliard (44, 44a)
The Frog Galliard (23, 23a) [= Now, O now, I needs must part]
The Lady Rich's Galliard (43a) [= Dowland's Bells]
The Most High and Mighty Christianus the Fourth, King of Denmark, his Galliard (40) [also for consort, H no.11]
The Most Sacred Queen Elizabeth, her Galliard (K. Darcy's Galliard) (41)
The Queen's Galliard (97)
The Right Honourable Robert, Earl of Essex, his Galliard) (42a) [= Can She Excuse]
The Right Honourable the Lady Clifton's Spirit (K. Darcy's Spirit) (45)
The Right Honourable the Lord Viscount Lisle, his Galliard (Sir Robert Sidney's Galliard) (38) [= Mr Bucton's Galliard, H no.19]
10 untitled galliards: 2 in c (28, 35), d (20), D (24) [= Awake sweet love, thou art returned]; f (27), 5 in g (21, 22, 30, 31, 104)

Almains etc.:
Lady Hunsdon's Puffe (Lady Hunsdon's Almain) (54)
Lady Laiton's Almain (48)
Mr Dowland's Midnight (99)
Mrs Clifton's Almain (53)
Mrs Nichols Almain (52) [also for consort, H no.20]
Mrs White's Thing (Mrs White's Choice) (50)
Sir John Smith, his Almain (47)
3 untitled almains: c (96), D (51), G (49)

Jigs etc.:
Coranto (100)
Mrs Vaux's Jig (57)
Mrs White's Nothing (56)
Mrs Winter's Jump (55)
Tarleton's Resurrection (59)
The Shoemaker's Wife, a Toy (58)

Arrangements of songs and popular tunes:
Aloe (68)
Come away (60) [= Come again, sweet love doth now invite] Complaint (Fortune my foe) (63) [probably 2p. of a duet]
Fortune my foe (62)
Go from my window (64)
Lord Strang's March (65)
Loth to depart (69)
Monsieur's Almain, GB-Cu, I-Gu, US-NH
My Lord Willoughby's Welcome Home [i, in d] (66)
My Lord Willoughby's Welcome Home [ii, in c], 2 lutes (66a) [2nd part doubtful]
Orlando Sleepeth (61)
Robin (70)
Walsingham (67)

CONSORT

For 5 viols/vns unless otherwise stated; 'mixed consort' = vn or tr viol, fl or rec, b viol, lute, cittern, bandora
Nos. in parentheses are those used in the edition [H]

Lachrimae or Seaven Teares, 5 viols/vns, lute (London, 1604/R) [1604]

Pavans:
Lachrimae amantis, 1604 (6)
Lachrimae antiquae, 1604 (1) [= Flow, my tears, fall from your springs; also for lute, PL no.15]
Lachrimae antiquae novae, 1604 (2)
Lachrimae coactae, 1604 (5)
Lachrimae gementes, 1604 (3)
Lachrimae tristes, 1604 (4)
Lachrimae verae, 1604 (7)
Mr John Langton's Pavan, 1604 (10) [also for lute, PL no.14]
Piper's Pavan, D-Kl [also for lute, PL no.8]
Semper Dowland semper dolens, 1604 (8) [also for lute, PL no.9]
Sir Henry Umpton's Funeral, 1604 (9)

Galliards:
Captain Piper his Galliard, 1604 (18) [= If my complaints could passions move; also for lute, PL no.19]
Mr Bucton's Galliard, 1604 (19) [= Suzanna Galliard, PL no.91; The Right Honourable the Lord Viscount Lisle, his Galliard, PL no.38]
Mr Giles Hobies Galliard, 1604 (15) [also for lute, PL no.29]
Mr Henry Noel his Galliard, 1604 (14) [= Shall I strive with words to move; Mignarda, PL no.34]
Mr Nicholas Gryffith his Galliard, 1604 (16)
Mr Thomas Collier his Galliard with 2 Trebles, 1604 (17)

Sir John Souch his Galliard, 1604 (13) [= My thoughts are winged with hopes; also for lute, PL no.26]
The Earl of Essex Galliard, 1604 (12) [= Can she excuse my wrongs; Can she excuse, PL no.42]
The King of Denmark's Galliard, 1604 (11) [also for lute, PL no.40]

Almains:
Mistress Nichols Almand, 1604 (20) [also for lute, PL no.52]
Mr George Whitehead his Almand, 1604 (21) almain, C, vn/tr viol, 6, GB-Lbl
Fuga, 2 tr, GB-Lbl

other consort settings published in Dowland's lifetime

2 pavans, 3 galliards, mixed consort, T. Morley: The First Booke of Consort Lessons (London, 1599, 2/1611[21]) [?arr. T. Morley]; ed. S. Beck (New York, 1959), nos.4–7, 10
1 almain, 1603[14] [?arr. V. Haussmann]; ed. in DDT, 1st ser., xvi (1904, 2/1958), no.26
1 galliard, 1607[28] (22)
3 pavans, 1610[22] [arr. T. Simpson] (23, appx 1, appx 2)
1 galliard, 1 courante, 4 vns/viols, 1612[16], ed. G. Oberst, Michael Praetorius: Werke, xv (Wolfenbüttel, 1929), nos.157, 300
2 pavans, 1 galliard, 4 vns/viols, 1616[24] [?arr. K. Hagius]
1 pavan, 3 lutes, tr, b viol, J.-B. Besard, Novus partus (Augsburg, 1617) [arr. Besard]
1 pavan (24), 1 courante (25), 1 aria (26), 1 volta (27), 4 vns/viols, bc, 1621[19] [?arr. T. Simpson]

WORKS OF UNCERTAIN AUTHORSHIP

lute

(numbers refer to edition [PL])

5 untitled fantasias: d (72), 2 in g (71, 101), 2 in G (73–4); 1 prelude, F (102)
Pavans: A Dream (75); 1 untitled pavan, B♭ (86); 1 by Moritz, Landgrave of Hesse, 1610[23], ?arr. by Dowland
Galliards: Can she excuse (89) [anon. arr. of Dowland's work (42)]; Galliard Fr. Cutting (92) [arr. of galliard in D (24)]; Hasellwood's Galliard (84) [arr. of consort work by A. Holborne]; My Lady Mildmay's Delight (83) [?by R. Johnson]; Piper's Galliard (88) [anon. arr. of Captain Digorie Piper's Galliard (19)]; The Frog Galliard (90) [anon. arr. of Dowland's work (23)]; 7 untitled galliards: 3 in f (76, 82, 87) [(87) is ?arr. of song or psalm tune], 1 in F/g (103), 3 in g (85, 104–5)
Sir Henry Guildford his Almain, 1610[23] [anon., probably by Dowland]
Jigs, etc.: A Coy Joy (80); Mrs Norrish's Delight (77); Tarleton's Jig (81); 1 (untitled) in c (78)
Arrangements of songs: [Une jeune filette] (93); What if a day (79)

consort

Pavans: Lachrimae, GB-Lbl [arr. of Dowland's work ?by W. Wigthorpe]; Lachrimae, inc., ?4 vns/viols, Eu, Lbl; Solus cum sola, mixed consort (cittern pt only), Cu; Solus cum sola, Lcm, inc.; Solus cum sola, US-LAuc, inc.
Galliards: Do. Re. Ha. Galliard, inc., mixed consort, GB-Cu [arr. of The Most Sacred Queen Elizabeth, her Galliard]; Lachrimae Galliard, mixed consort (bandora pt only), Lam [arr. of Sir John Souch's Galliard]; Lady Rich's Galliard (b pt only), Lbl; Round Battle Galliard, mixed consort, Cu, inc.
Almains, etc.: Dowland's Puffe, mixed consort (?rec pt only), Och [arr. of Lady Hunsdon's Puffe]; Lady Laiton's Almain, ?mixed consort (lute pt only) (PL no.48a); Smith's Almain, ?mixed consort (lute pt only) (PL no.47a)
Jigs, etc.: Mrs Nicholls Jumpe, inc. (vn/tr viol pt only), US-LAuc [arr. of Mrs Winter's Jump]; Tarleton's Jig [arr. of PL no.81, authorship uncertain], ed. in MB, xl (1977), no.23
Arrangements of popular tunes: Fortune my foe, mixed consort, ed. in MB, xl (1977), no.25; Orlando, ?mixed consort (tr lute, bandora pts), LT-Va [arr. of Orlando Sleepeth]

TRANSLATIONS

Andreas Ornithoparcus his Micrologus (London, 1609)
'Necessarie Observations Belonging to the Lute and Lute Playing, by John Baptisto Besardo of Visonti', Varietie of Lute-lessons (London, 1610/R1958) [possibly by R. Dowland]
'Other Necessary Observations Belonging to the Lute', ibid.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

AshbeeR, iii, iv, v; BDECM; BurneyH; DoddI; HawkinsH
T. Fuller: The History of the Worthies of England (London, 1662)
P. Warlock: The English Ayre (London, 1926/R)
M. Dowling: 'The Printing of John Dowland's Second Booke of Songs or Ayres', The Library, 4th ser., xii (1932), 365–80
O.H. Mies: 'Elizabethan Music Prints in an East-Prussian Castle', MD, iii (1949), 171–2
O.H. Mies: 'Dowland's Lachrimae Tune', MD, iv (1950), 59–64
T. Dart: 'Le rôle de la danse dans l' "ayre" anglais', Musique et poésie au XVIe siècle: Paris 1953, 203–9
D. Lumsden: The Sources of English Lute Music (diss., U. of Cambridge, 1955)
W.R. Davis: 'Melodic and Poetic Structure: the Examples of Campion and Dowland', Criticism, iv (1962), 89–107
R.J. McGrady: English Solo Song from William Byrd to Henry Lawes (diss., U. of Manchester, 1963)
U. Olshausen: Das lautenbegleitete Sololied in England um 1600 (Frankfurt, 1963)
D. Greer: 'The Part-Songs of the English Lutenists', PRMA, xciv (1967–8), 97–110
E. Doughtie: Lyrics from English Airs (Cambridge, MA, 1970)
L. Nordstrom: 'The Cambridge Consort Books', JLSA, v (1972), 70–103
D. Poulton: John Dowland (London, 1972, 2/1982)
R. Henning: 'A Possible Source of "Lachrimae"', LSJ, xvi (1974), 65–7
I. Spink: English Song: Dowland to Purcell (London, 1974, repr. 1986 with corrections)
A. Rooley: 'John Dowland and English Lute Music', EMc, iii (1975), 115–18
J.M. Ward: 'The So-Called "Dowland Lute Book" in the Folger Shakespeare Library', JLSA, ix (1976), 4–29
J.M. Ward: 'A Dowland Miscellany', JLSA, x (1977), 5–153
L. Nordstrom: 'A Lute Duet of John Dowland', JLSA, xii (1979), 43–7
R. Charteris: 'Manuscript Additions of Music by John Dowland and his Contemporaries in Two Sixteenth-Century Prints', The Consort, xxxvii (1981), 399–401
E.B. Jorgens: The Well-Tun'd Word: Musical Interpretations of English Poetry 1597–1651 (Minneapolis, 1982)
P. Frank: 'A New Dowland Document', MT, cxxiv (1983), 15–16
A. Rooley: 'New Light on John Dowland's Songs of Darkness', EMc, xi (1983), 6–21
E. Doughtie: English Renaissance Song (Boston, 1986)
L. Hulse: 'Hardwick MS 29: a New Source for Jacobean Lutenists', The Lute, xxvi/2 (1986), 62–72
K. Sparr: 'Some Unobserved Information about John Dowland, Thomas Campion and Philip Rosseter', The Lute, xxvii (1987), 35–7
D. Greer: 'A Dowland Curiosity', The Lute, xxvii (1987), 42–4
D. Leech-Wilkinson: 'My Lady's Tears: A Pair of Songs by John Dowland', EMc, xix (1991), 227–33
R. Spencer: 'Dowland's Dance Songs: those of his Compositions which Exist in Two Versions, Songs and Instrumental Dances', Concert des voix et des instruments à la Renaissance: Tours 1991, 587–99
D. Pinto: 'Dowland's Lachrymal Ayres', EMc, xx (1992), 525 only
A. Rooley: 'A Portrait of Sir Henry Unton', Companion to Medieval and Renaissance Music, ed. T. Knighton and D. Fallows (Oxford, 1992), 85–92
J.M. Ward: Music for Elizabethan Lutes (Oxford, 1992)
P. Holman: Four and Twenty Fiddlers: the Violin at the English Court 1540–1690 (Oxford, 1993, 2/1995)
R. Toft: Tune thy Musicke to thy Hart: the Art of Eloquent Singing in England 1597–1622 (Toronto, 1993)
J. Craig-McFeely: English Lute Manuscripts and Scribes 1530–1630 (diss., U. of Oxford, 1994)
R.H. Wells: Elizabethan Mythologies: Studies in Poetry, Drama and Music (Cambridge, 1994)
C. Knispel: 'The International Character of the Lute Music at the Court of Moritz, Landgrave of Hesse', The Lute, xxxvi (1996), 1–16
D. Pinto: 'Dowland's Tears: Aspects of Lachrimae', The Lute, xxxvii (1997), 44–75
P. Holman: Dowland: Lachrimae (1604) (Cambridge, 1999)
M. Spring: The Lute in Britain: a History of the Instrument and its Music (Oxford, forthcoming)

PETER HOLMAN (with PAUL O'DETTE)

Dowland, Robert (b ?London, *c*1591; d London, 28 Nov 1641). English anthologist, composer and lutenist, son of JOHN DOWLAND. From the dedicatory letter to Sir Robert Sidney in A Musicall Banquet (RISM 1610[20]) we learn that Sir Robert was Dowland's godfather. According to the dedication of his Varietie of Lute-Lessons (1610[23]), to Sir Thomas Mounson, he received part of his education in Mounson's household while his father was abroad. Between May 1612 and January 1616 Robert was employed by William Cavendish, Earl of Devonshire. In February 1613 he was still in England; his name appears among the lute players who were engaged to play in Chapman's Masque of the Inner Temple and Lincoln's Inn, given at Whitehall as part of the marriage celebrations of Princess Elizabeth and Frederick, Elector Palatine. At some time in the early 1620s he was travelling on the Continent with a group of English actors who sought permission on 30 August 1623 to return home from the Duke of Wolgast in Pomerania.

On 20 or 21 January 1626 Dowland succeeded to his father's post at court but the warrant confirming his appointment was not made out until 26 April 1626. Not long after his appointment he married Jane Smally. In his marriage documents, dated 11 October 1626, he declared himself to be 'aged about xxxv yeares'. The registers of St Anne, Blackfriars, show that their infant son, John, was buried on 22 December 1627, and a daughter, Mary, was baptized on 24 April 1629. In a warrant issued on 1 December 1641, John Mercure was sworn 'a musician to his majesty for the lutes and voices in ordinary in the place of Robert Dowland deceased'. Despite the surname spelling, an entry in the parish register of St Andrew's, Holborn almost certainly refers to Dowland: 'Robert Doling a man sometyme servant to the king died in his house in the New Buildings in Chancery Lane the 28th buried the 29th November 1641'.

Robert Dowland's main claim to fame lies in his editorship of two anthologies: A Musicall Banquet and Varietie of Lute-Lessons. They contain works of the highest order by both English and continental composers. Only four compositions bear his own name: Sir Thomas Monson his Pavin and The Honorable the Lady Cliftons Spirit, both in Varietie of Lute-Lessons, the three main strains of the latter being those of his father's K. Darcies Spirite (GB-Cu Dd.2.11); Katherine Darcy married Sir Gervase Clifton in 1591, so the earliest form of the piece must have been written at about the time of Robert's birth. The Margaret Board Lutebook (R. Spencer, private collection) contains a piece entitled Almande Ro: Dowlande written out in John Dowland's unmistakable script. The fourth piece bearing his name is a rather poor version of his father's The King of Denmark's Galliard ascribed to Robert in G.L. Fuhrmann's Testudo gallo-germanica (1615[24]), an obvious mistake on Fuhrmann's part. (BDECM)

DIANA POULTON/ROBERT SPENCER

'Dowland' Lutebook (US-Ws V.b.280 (olim 1610.1)). See SOURCES OF LUTE MUSIC, §7.

Downbeat (Fr. frappé). The explicit or implied impulse that coincides with the beginning of a bar in measured music, by analogy with the downstroke in conducting (the 'thesis' of ARSIS, THESIS). The term is mainly applied to music in a regular metre or articulated by metrical stress, where downbeats create a periodic occurrence and are usually given articulation through dynamic increase (i.e. ACCENT) or lengthening of durational value (i.e. AGOGIC accent). It is contrasted with UPBEAT, the name given to a relatively weak impulse at which a note or succession of notes anticipates the downbeat, and with OFF-BEAT, a term denoting a weaker impulse following the downbeat and usually applied to situations in which the downbeat is silent, tied over from the previous bar or otherwise understressed. For a discussion of the concept of downbeat in the 15th and 16th centuries, see TACTUS.

See also RHYTHM.

JULIAN RUSHTON

Down-bow. See BOW, §II.

Downes, Sir Edward (Thomas) (b Birmingham, 17 June 1924). English conductor. He studied at Birmingham University and the RCM and conducted his first opera (Le nozze di Figaro) while a music lecturer at Aberdeen University. After further studies assisting Hermann Scherchen in Europe, he joined the Carl Rosa Opera Company, 1950–52, then Covent Garden in 1952 as répétiteur. His début there as a conductor was with La bohème in 1953, and the next year he drew attention with a new production of Der Freischütz. During 17 years on the music staff he conducted almost every work in the repertory, including the first Western production of Shostakovich's Katerina Izmaylova (1963), for which he translated the libretto. In 1966 he was named assistant to the musical director, Solti, and in 1967 he was the first British conductor to conduct a Ring cycle at Covent Garden since Beecham in 1939.

After conducting the first British staging of Searle's Hamlet (1969), Downes left staff work but continued to make frequent appearances, conducting the premières of Bennett's Victory in 1970 and Peter Maxwell Davies's Taverner in 1972. He also directed the first performances of Birtwistle's Chorales for Orchestra (with the New Philharmonia, 1967) and Brian's Symphonies nos.14 and 21 (with the LSO, 1970). Downes went to Sydney as music director of Australian Opera, 1972–6, where he conducted Prokofiev's War and Peace (in his own translation) as the official first operatic performance in the new Sydney Opera House (1973). He first appeared with the WNO in 1975 with Der fliegende Holländer, and in 1976 broadcast newly prepared versions of Wagner's Rienzi, Die Feen and Das Liebesverbot for the BBC. In 1977 he conducted 26 Wagner performances at the Paris Opéra, and the next year made his South American début in Buenos Aires at the Colón with Don Giovanni, followed by a tour conducting in various North American cities.

In 1979 Downes gave the première of Prokofiev's unfinished opera Maddalena (in his own completed version) in a broadcast performance; he conducted its stage première at Graz two years later. From 1980 to 1991 he was principal conductor of the BBC Northern SO (later BBC Philharmonic), with which he conducted broadcasts of Rimsky-Korsakov's Legend of the Invisible City of Kitezh (1986), Christmas Eve (1987), and in 1990 the first modern performance of Tchaikovsky's Vakula the Smith in its original version, about which he wrote at length in Opera (xl, 1989, pp.1426–31). He also gave the first performances of Peter Maxwell Davies's Third Symphony (1985) and David Matthews's Chaconne (1988). He has published translations for Jenůfa, Khovanshchina and The Nose.

In 1991 Downes was appointed associate music director and principal conductor at Covent Garden, appearing first in Das Rheingold. In 1992 he conducted the Royal Opera's first production of Prokofiev's The Fiery Angel, and the next year conducted Stiffelio and Attila, the first in a projected cycle of all the Verdi operas. Not as ambitious as some, Downes took time to win eventual recognition as the foremost British conductor of Russian opera and of Verdi, combining detailed understanding of vocal technique with sensibility to musical line and texture. He was made a CBE in 1986 and knighted in 1991.

Edward Downes, 1990

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Higgins: 'Edward Downes', The Times (19 May 1971)
M. Loppert: 'The Product of Experience', Opera, xliv (1993), 26–39 [interview]

NOËL GOODWIN

Downes, Edward O(lin) D(avenport) (b Boston, 12 Aug 1911). American musicologist and music critic, son of Olin Downes. He attended Columbia University, the Manhattan School of Music and universities in Paris and Munich. From 1939 to 1941 he was music critic for the Boston Transcript. He taught at Wellesley College and the Longy School of Music (1948–9), and was assistant professor of music at the University of Minnesota (1950–55). After taking the doctorate in musicology at Harvard University in 1958 he was musicologist-in-residence at the Bayreuth Festival masterclasses until 1965. He was on the faculty of Queens College and the Graduate School, CUNY (1966–81), and New York University (1981–6), and in 1986 he was appointed professor at the Juilliard School of Music.

As a musicologist Downes has concentrated on opera of the early Classical period. In 1958 he became quizmaster for the Metropolitan Opera radio broadcasts, and he wrote programme notes for the New York PO from 1960 to 1974. His music criticisms were published in the New York Post (1935–8) and the New York Times (1955–8) and he has written numerous articles for journals such as Opera News and High Fidelity.

WRITINGS

ed.: Verdi: the Man in his Letters (New York, 1942/R) [enlarged Eng. trans. of F. Werfel and P. Stefan: Giuseppe Verdi: Briefe (Berlin, 1926)]
Adventures in Symphonic Music (New York, 1944/R)
The Operas of Johann Christian Bach as a Reflection of the Dominant Trends in 'Opera seria' 1750–1780 (diss., Harvard U., 1958)
'Secco Recitative in Early Classical Opera Seria (1720–1780)', JAMS, xiv (1961), 50–69
'The Taste Makers: Critics and Criticism', One Hundred Years of Music in America, ed. P.H. Lang (New York, 1961/R), 230–44
'The Music of Norman Dello Joio', MQ, xlviii (1962), 149–67
ed., with B.S. Brook and S.J. Van Solkema: Perspectives in Musicology (New York, 1972)
The New York Philharmonic Guide to the Symphony (New York, 1976)

PAULA MORGAN

Downes, (Edwin) Olin (b Evanston, IL, 27 Jan 1886; d New York, 22 Aug 1955). American music critic, father of Edward O.D. Downes. He studied the piano at the National Conservatory of Music, New York, and, at Boston, history and analysis with Louis Kelterborn, the piano with Carl Baermann, theory with Homer Norris and Clifford Heilman, and music criticism with John P. Marshall. His career was as music critic of the Boston Post (1906–24) and the New York Times (1924–55). He was chairman of the quiz programme broadcast during the intervals of the Metropolitan Opera's Saturday afternoon broadcasts, a role later taken by his son. The Cincinnati Conservatory of Music awarded him an honorary doctorate in 1939.

Downes's reviews strongly influenced contemporary popular musical opinion in the USA. Though the taste defined in them has dated, he recognized the value of new works by Richard Strauss, Stravinsky, Prokofiev and Shostakovich before their reputations were established in the USA. In particular he was a passionate advocate of Sibelius's music; he secured its American reputation, and in return Finland awarded him the order Commander of the White Rose (1937) and invited him to speak at Sibelius's 75th-birthday celebration (1940). Downes's papers, acquired by the University of Georgia, include about 50,000 letters to and from composers (Bloch, Prokofiev, Stravinsky, Varèse, Vaughan Williams), musicologists, performers and critics.

WRITINGS

'American Composer (Henry F. Gilbert)', MQ, iv (1918), 23–36
The Lure of Music (New York, 1918)
'J.A. Carpenter, American Craftsman', MQ, xvi (1930), 443–8
Symphonic Broadcasts (New York, 1931; enlarged 2/1935/R as Symphonic Masterpieces)
Sibelius (Helsinki, 1945) [selected writings on Sibelius in Finnish translation; incl. Y. Sjöblom: 'Sibeliuksen Apostoli', 7–14]
Sibelius the Symphonist (New York, 1956)
ed. I. Downes: Olin Downes on Music (New York, 1957/R) [selected writings]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DAB (F.R. Rossiter)
L. Weldy: Music Criticism of Olin Downes and Howard Taubman in 'The New York Times', Sunday Edition, 1924–29 and 1955–60 (diss., U. of Southern California, 1965)
J. Réti-Forbes: 'The Olin Downes Papers', Georgia Review, xxi/2 (1967), 165–71
G.D. Gross: Jean Sibelius and Olin Downes: Music, Friendship, Criticism (Boston, 1995)

JON NEWSOM

Downes, Ralph (William) (b Derby, 16 Aug 1904; d London, 24 Dec 1993). English organist. He entered the RCM, London, in 1922 as a pupil of Walter Alcock, Henry Ley and Edgar Cook, and became organ scholar of Keble College, Oxford, in 1925. After taking his degree he went to the USA in 1928 as musical director and organist of the new chapel of Princeton University, where he was much influenced by the reformist organ builder Donald Harrison, and by specialist Baroque performers such as the harpsichordist Ralph Kirkpatrick. He returned to London in 1936 as organist of Brompton Oratory, and soon earned a reputation as a recitalist and broadcaster uniquely well versed, for the time, in historical performance styles. He gave British premières of works by Milhaud, Hindemith and Schoenberg in the 1930s and 1940s, and his Bach recordings of the 1960s were widely praised. He was the only instrumentalist invited to appear at every Aldeburgh Festival during Britten's lifetime. While professor of the organ at the RCM (1954–75), he was regarded as the leading organ teacher of his day. His pupils included Gillian Weir, Nicholas Kynaston, Nicholas Danby and Thomas Trotter. He was made a CBE in 1969.

In 1948, as resident organist of the LPO, Downes was commissioned to design an organ for the new Royal Festival Hall, and his deep and long-standing interest in the organ reform movement was thereby given a practical outlet. Aiming at an instrument that could do justice to all the major organ schools, he broke with much contemporary English practice such as high wind pressures, demarcation of loud and soft stops, and quasi-orchestral tone families, and reverted to earlier, purer traditions based on tightly integrated ensembles and other concepts characteristic of the Baroque age. A source of controversy at the time, this project decisively changed the direction of English organ building. Downes left his imprint on many other notable instruments, including those of St Alban's Abbey (1963), Paisley Abbey (1968), Gloucester Cathedral (1972) and St David's Hall, Cardiff (1982). He described his organ design philosophy and major projects in his book Baroque Tricks (Oxford, 1983).

STANLEY WEBB/PATRICK RUSSILL

Dow Partbooks (GB-Och 984–8). See SOURCES OF INSTRUMENTAL ENSEMBLE MUSIC TO 1630, §7.

Doxology (Gk. and Lat. doxologia: 'giving of glory', from Gk. doxa: 'glory' and logos: 'word'). Liturgical formula of praise, usually occurring at the close of a prayer. Of Semitic origin, doxologies appear in the Old Testament texts. Each of the first four books of the Psalter ends with a doxology (xli.13, lxxii.18–19, lxxxix.52, cvi.48) and Psalms cxlvi–cl could be considered an extended doxology, concluding both the fifth book and the whole of the Psalter. The New Testament is filled with doxologies, many of them with no Christological reference (e.g. Luke ii.14 and Romans xi.36), which are at least based on Jewish precedents if not borrowed directly from Jewish practice of the period. At the same time Christian doxologies emerged that were specifically Christological (e.g. Romans xvi.27, Didache ix.4) or Trinitarian (e.g. the Oxyrhynchus hymn fragment). Most early Christian doxologies concluded with 'Amen', a pattern that continues to the present day.

While there is common agreement that doxological precedents in Judaism exist and that there are many doxologies in the New Testament, there is no unanimity as regards the definition of the form. Some contend that a true doxology must include the Greek doxa or its equivalent in another language (e.g. kavod in Hebrew), whereas others would include within the category any praise formula containing the idea of God's eternity (Heinemann, p.135). The former would admit to very few doxologies in Synagogue worship of any era, one exception being the qeddushah; the latter would allow other texts under the rubric of doxology, such as those eulogy-like phrases that are part of the qaddish.

In Christianity doxologies sealed orations and eucharistic prayers, as well as homilies and letters, particularly among Greek-speaking Christians. The 4th-century Arians were aware of the popularity of the genre, especially the form 'Glory to the Father through the Son in the Holy Spirit', which they used in support of their claim that the Son was subordinate to the Father. The orthodox party protested that the Arians had misinterpreted the mediatory position of the Son in this text, and to avoid future misinterpretation they adopted a doxological form based on the baptismal formula in Matthew xxviii.19, which clearly expressed the equality of the three persons of the Trinity: 'Glory to the Father and to the Son and to the Holy Spirit'.

The second phrase of this 'lesser' doxology or 'Gloria Patri' (in contradistinction to the 'greater' doxology or 'Gloria in excelsis Deo') asserts that God's glory will last forever; the history of this phrase is obscure, although a tendency to continue the doxology in such a manner is already evident in the New Testament (e.g. 1 Timothy i.17). While there was no strict uniformity in the East, common patterns for sealing the Trinitarian invocation emerged, such as 'now and always and unto the ages of ages', in the Byzantine tradition. A slight variant of this text already appeared in 215 CE in the Apostolic Tradition of Hippolytus. It is probable that a similar pattern was originally followed in the West. However, the Second Synod of Vaison of 529 provides some evidence (canon 5) that 'Sicut erat in principio' had become the common seal to the lesser doxology in Rome, Gaul and probably Africa. An exception to this usage occurred in Spain where the Fourth Council of Toledo of 633 (canon 15) imposed the form 'Gloria et honor Patri et Filio et Spiritui sancto in saecula saeculorum'.

In the Roman rite, Anglican and Lutheran worship and some other Protestant traditions, the lesser doxology ordinarily concludes all psalms and canticles in the Office and follows the opening versicle 'O God, come to our assistance' ('Deus in adjutorium'). In the Roman rite, from the time of Amalarius of Metz (*d c*850), the first part of this doxology is also employed in the Office responsories. In the Byzantine Office, the 'Glory be' (the term 'lesser doxology' is not used in the Orthodox tradition) serves as part of the opening and closing prayers and most frequently occurs after each antiphon (i.e. a series of psalm verses, each with a refrain of ecclesiastical composition).

The triple use of the lesser doxology in the Western medieval Mass (after the 'Judica me', as part of the introit and at the end of the lavabo) was eliminated in the Roman rite with the 1969 Missal, although the current rite and certain Protestant traditions maintain a doxology after the eucharistic prayer and the Lord's Prayer. Doxologies also punctuate the Eucharists of various Eastern rites. In the Byzantine liturgy, for example, the Eucharist begins with a doxology, and there are many others during the rite (e.g. after the litany of peace, the hymn Ho monogenēs huios, the ektenē (litany), the Cheroubikon, the anaphora and the Lord's Prayer).

Outside the Eucharist and the Offices, doxologies punctuated a wide variety of prayers and rituals, from their customary inclusion at the close of the Laudes regiae to their role in separating each decade of the rosary. Doxologies have occurred with such frequency in Christian worship that often the full text was not copied in liturgical books. The most common abbreviation for the lesser doxology in the West has been EVOVAE, derived from the last vowels of the text ('*s*e*c*ul*o*r*u*m. *A*m*e*n').

Since a doxology ordinarily concludes a psalm, hymn or other prayer, its musical setting (whether monophonic or, since the Notre Dame repertory, polyphonic) is generally determined by the music of the text with which it is associated. This also holds true for the metrical hymn which, from virtually its first appearance in Christianity, was sealed with a doxology (e.g. Aeterne rerum conditor of St Ambrose). Occasionally, however, a doxology will receive an independent musical setting (e.g. the chorus 'Worthy is the Lamb' from Handel's Messiah). Furthermore, some independent texts such as the Te decet laus and the Te Deum (both proscribed in the Rule of St Benedict from use in the Offices), each with its own music, may also be considered doxologies.

While there was virtually no textual modification of the lesser doxology within the Western Eucharist, considerable textual variation marked the doxologies of Office hymns, many of which might refer to a particular season, feast or saint (e.g. the doxology that seals Te splendor et virtus Patris for St Michael). As a result of the 16th-century Protestant Reformation, doxologies were devised for each metre used in the versification of psalms and hymns. All sanctoral references, however, were eliminated from the doxologies of Reformed Churches (some Churches abandoned the doxology altogether), and in recent reforms the Roman rite has removed many such references too.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F.E. Warren and J. Julian: 'Doxologies', A Dictionary of Hymnology, ed. J. Julian (London, 1892, 2/1907/R), 308–10
H. Leclercq: 'Doxologies', Dictionnaire d'archéologie chrétienne et de liturgie, ed. F. Cabrol and H. Leclercq, iv (1920), 1525–36
J. Jungmann: Die Stellung Christi im liturgischen Gebet (Münster, 1925, 2/1962; Eng. trans., 1965/R), esp. chap.11
M. Righetti: Manuale di storia liturgica, i (Milan, 1944, 3/1964), 235–45
A. Stuiber: 'Doxologie', Reallexikon für Antike und Christentum, ed. T. Klauser, iv (Stuttgart, 1959), 210–22
R. Deichgräber: Gotteshymnus und Christushymnus in der frühen Christenheit (Göttingen, 1967), 25–40
J. Heinemann: Prayer in the Talmud: Forms and Patterns (Berlin and New York, 1977)

EDWARD FOLEY

Doyagüe, Manuel José (b Salamanca, 17 Feb 1755; d Salamanca, 18 Dec 1842). Spanish composer. He was a choirboy in his native town, where he was taught music by Juan Martín, choirmaster at the cathedral. When Martín retired in 1781, Doyagüe provisionally took on his post and won it by competition after Martín's death in 1789. Previously he had been appointed professor of music at Salamanca University. He held both posts with brilliance until his death.

All Doyagüe's compositions are sacred – masses, motets, psalms and villancicos. Some of them, particularly some of the Miserere settings and Lamentations, have a notably dramatic character. The autograph score of one of his Magnificat settings, because it was considered his finest work, was buried with him. He was one of the best-known Spanish composers of his time, and although modest and retiring, he received honours that few can equal: for example, he was invited on various occasions to provide music for particular solemn ceremonies at the royal palace and to conduct them; he was often called upon by cathedrals to adjudicate competitions for the post of choirmaster; he was made honorary director of the Madrid Conservatory; Rossini himself once wrote to him of having been profoundly moved by one of his Miserere settings. But all this did nothing to alter his regulated way of life; he worked untiringly and meticulously, living only for his duties as choirmaster and for composition. The style of his works is typical of the period, but they are superior to those of many of his contemporaries, showing great nobility of melody, purity of technique and depth of inspiration. A large part of his output is in the archives of Salamanca Cathedral, and other works are in various Spanish cathedrals.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.J. Herrero: Tres músicos españoles: Juan del Encina, Lucas Fernández, Manuel Doyagüe, y la cultura artística de su tiempo (Madrid, 1912)
J. Artero: 'Oposiciones al magisterio de capilla en España durante el siglo XVIII', AnM, ii (1947), 191–202
J. López-Calo: Catálogo musical del archivo de la Santa Iglesia Catedral de Santiago (Cuenca, 1972, rev. 2/1992–3 as La música en la Catedral de Santiago), 250ff [with additional bibliography]
D. García Fraile: 'El maestro Doyagüe (1755–1842): lazo de unión entre la tradición universitaria salmantina y el Real Conservatario de Madrid', RdMd, xiv (1991), 77–83

JOSÉ LÓPEZ-CALO

Doyen, Jean (b Paris, 9 March 1907; d Versailles, 21 April 1982). French pianist and teacher. He studied the piano at the Paris Conservatoire with Sophie Chéné, Louis Diémer and Marguerite Long, receiving a premier prix in 1922. After his début in 1924 at the Concerts Colonne he returned to the Conservatoire to study counterpoint with Paul Vidal and composition with Henri Busser. From 1941 to 1977 he taught piano at the Conservatoire, where his students included Idil Biret, Philippe Entremont and Dominique Merlet. He was an ardent champion of the piano music of his French contemporaries, particularly Pierné, d'Indy, Hahn, Samazeuilh and Ropartz. His recordings of Ravel's concertos (with the Lamoureux Orchestra under Jean Fournet) and Chopin's complete waltzes are outstanding for their subtlety and esprit; he also made a pioneering but uneven recording of the complete piano works of Fauré. He composed a piano concerto, some chamber music and cadenzas for concertos of Mozart and Haydn.

CHARLES TIMBRELL

Doyle, Roger (b Dublin, 17 July 1949). Irish composer. He studied composition with A.J. Potter at the Royal Irish Academy of Music (1968–71) where he was awarded two composition scholarships. From 1974 to 1976 he studied at the Institut voor Sonologie, Utrecht (now located in The Hague). He also worked in electro-acoustic studios in Helsinki.

From the mid-1970s most of Doyle's music has been electro-acoustic, often involving tape recorded sounds. His first major work, Rapid Eye Movements (1980), uses acoustic material from nature, voices and radio sounds to evoke a dream-like portrait of the composer at work; it won a prize at the Bourges Festival (1981). After performing with the group Operating Theatre from 1983 to 1989, Doyle returned to composition with Charlotte Corday and the Lament of Louis XVI (1989), a commission from the Bourges Festival. He has worked intensively in music theatre, particularly with the performance group IContact. From 1990 to 1998 he worked on a large-scale musical structure called Babel. Composed 'room by room' this multi-media work employs music, dance, architecture, graphics and electronic communications media.

WORKS

DRAMATIC

Music theatre: Ignotum per Ignotius (J. Coleman), hmn, 1982; The Diamond Body (A. Matthews), tape, 1983; Switch (P. Morgan), tape, 1983; The Love of Don Perlimplin and Belisa in the Garden (F.G. Lorca), tape, 1984, rev. 1988; These Unsolved Mysteries (O. Fouéré), tape/orch, 1987; Salome Music (O. Wilde), pf, 1988

Film scores: Atlantean, tape, 1983; Budawanny, tape, 1986

INSTRUMENTAL

2 Movts, fl, str, 1968; 2 Movts, vn, pf, 1968; 6 Pieces for Pupils who don't like Exams, pf, 1968–73; Piano Suite no.2, 1969; 4 Sketches, orch, 1969; Theme from Emptigon, gui, perc, pf, 1972; Ceol Sidhe [Fairy Music], uíleann pipes, Irish hp, tin whistle, 1973; All the Rage, orch, 1974; Positive Disintegration, perc, pf, synth, 1980; Standby Waltz, small ens, 1989

VOCAL

3 Poems by Patrick McDonogh, 1v, pf, 1968; Me and They (A. Kajermo), 1v, wind qnt, 1970; Austrian (O. Fouéré), 1v, trbn, perc, pf, synth, 1980; Blue Light and Alpha-Waves (T. Mathews), 1v, trbn, perc, pf, synth, 1981; Rampwalk (Fouéré), vv, synth, 1981; Sir Geoffrey (Mathews), 1v, pf, 1981; There are Loves (E. Lopez), 1v, small ens, 1989; I may Never come Back (Lopez), 1v, small ens, 1989

ELECTRIC-ACOUSTIC

Tape: Obstinato, 1971; Why is Kilkenny so Good?, 1971; Solar Eyes, 1975; Thalia, 1976; Fin-estra, 1977; Rapid Eye Movements, 1980; Lucy Pieces (L. Vigne-Walsh), 1983, rev. 1985; Pilar (E. Lopez), 1983, rev. 1985; Seresa 1, 2 and 3, 1985; Sheet Music, 1985; Chinja Miniatures, 1986; Sidewards and Pinkways, 1986; Dracula Music, 1986; Oedipus Music, 1987; 2 Insect Pieces, 1988; 2 Sligo Pieces, 1988; Charlotte Corday and the Lament of Louis XVI, 1989; Vermont 9/8, 1989

Tape and insts: Oizzo no, fl, cl, vn, va, vc, perc, pf, tape, 1974; Under the Green Time, uíleann pipes, fl, synth, 1995; Babel, 1990–98

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Doyle: 'A Composer's Story', The Crane Bag, vi/1 (1982), 55–8

M. Cunningham: 'Work in Progress: Babel Bitmap – a Collaboration', Circa, no.69 (1994), aut., 35–42 [incl. CD]

A. Klein: Die Musik Irlands im 20. Jahrhundert (Hildesheim, 1996)

AXEL KLEIN

D'Oyly Carte, Richard. See CARTE, RICHARD D'OYLY.

Dozza, Evangelista (fl Bologna, 2nd half of the 17th century). Italian printer. He was active in Rome before transferring his business to Bologna in 1638. He apparently published no music himself, but the 'Eredi di Evangelista Dozza', namely Carlo Manolesi and Pietro Dozza, probably Dozza's son, issued music during 1663 and 1664, concentrating on Cazzati's work. They also published Cazzati's reply to a critical attack on his music made by Arresti. The firm's usual mark was a pine-cone in an elaborate frame.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

SartoriD

F. Vatielli: 'Editori musicali dei secoli XVII e XVIII', Arte e vita musicale a Bologna (Bologna, 1927/R), 239–56

L. Gottardi: La stampa musicale in Bologna dagli inizi fino al 1700 (diss., U. of Bologna, 1951)

ANNE SCHNOEBELEN

Draaiorgel (Dut.). Street organ. See FAIRGROUND ORGAN.

Draconi, Giovanni Andrea. See DRAGONI, GIOVANNI ANDREA.

Draeseke, Felix (August Bernhard) (b Coburg, 7 Oct 1835; d Dresden, 26 Feb 1913). German composer. He was born to a family of clerical background, and though expected to study for the ministry he decided on a career in music at the age of 17, and entered the Leipzig Conservatory where he studied with Julius Rietz. After hearing Lohengrin at Weimar, he affiliated himself to the New German school and began an opera, König Sigurd. He left the conservatory in 1855, having found it too conservative, but continued to study privately with Rietz. In 1856 his Jugendsinfonie was performed at Coburg (it was later destroyed by him along with other early works). In 1857 Draeseke met Liszt, who liked König Sigurd and wanted to stage it in Weimar. His meeting with Wagner in Lucerne in 1859 was among the most important encounters of his career; in 1861 Wagner witnessed and recorded Liszt's confrontation with a hostile Weimar audience demonstrating against Draeseke's Germania-Marsch.

In 1862 Draeseke moved to Switzerland, where he lived as a piano teacher in towns around Lake Geneva and also completed a number of works. Visiting Munich in 1865 to hear Tristan und Isolde, he sought medical advice for the hearing loss which was to lead to almost total deafness by the end of his life. In 1870 his father died, and his engagement to a French-speaking pupil was broken off, ostensibly because of anti-German sentiment during the Franco-Prussian War; by 1876 he was ready to return to Germany. Although Draeseke disparaged his time in Switzerland as lost years, he had during this period written the Sonata quasi fantasia op.6 for piano (1862–7), which Liszt considered the best such work since Schumann's G minor Sonata, as well as his First Symphony and other works.

Draeseke now settled permanently in Dresden. He was appointed to the conservatory in 1884, becoming a professor there in 1892 and Hofrat in 1898. He completed his second opera, Herrat, in 1879, but it was not performed in Dresden until 1892. Gudrun (1882), his third opera, was the first to be staged, but despite its success at Hanover in 1884 it failed to remain in the repertory. Three of Draeseke's most important orchestral works date from this time: the Symphonia tragica (Symphony no.3, 1885–6), the Serenade in D and the symphonic prelude Penthesilea (both 1888). His chamber works include three string quartets, two quintets for various instruments (the 'Stelzner-Quintett' of 1897 included a part for Alfred Stelzner's violotta) as well as instrumental sonatas, among them two for Hermann Ritter's unsuccessful viola alta.

In 1894 Draeseke married Frida Neuhaus, a former pupil. In the last two decades of his life he composed a number of substantial vocal works, including the operas Bertran de Born (1892–4), Fischer und Kalif (1894–5) and Merlin (1903–5) as well as large-scale sacred works: the Grosse Messe in F sharp minor (1890), and the Mysterium: Christus (1895–9), considered by some to be his greatest work. This consisted of a prelude, Die Geburt des Herrn, and three oratorios, Christi Weihe, Christus der Prophet and Tod und Sieg des Herrn. By contrast his late a cappella sacred works, the Grosse Messe in A minor (1908–9) and the Requiem in E minor (1909–10) appear stark in their arresting and original polyphony. Draeseke's final orchestral work, the Symphonia comica (Symphony no.4, 1912), was once thought to have been solely a musical jest because of its slow movement, Fliegenkrieg ('The battle of the flies'); it has now been shown that the symphony is equally a veiled continuation of Draeseke's criticism of the musical 'excesses' of Richard Strauss and his generation, a campaign begun in Draeseke's essay Die Konfusion in der Musik of 1906.

Early in his career Draeseke was among the most original of the composers associated with the New German school of Wagner and Liszt, but by the time of this essay he had become more conservative in style. He developed a distinct approach to harmony, and an idiosyncratic handling of voice leading which can sometimes appear perplexing. In 1931 a Felix Draeseke-Gesellschaft was founded in Dresden by Frida Draeseke and fomer students and colleagues; Erich Roeder, Draeseke's first biographer, sought to use his Nazi party membership to promote Draeseke's music but little was achieved. The Internationale Draeseke-Gesellschaft, however, founded in 1986, has reissued scores, published other works for the first time and supported recordings and research.

WORKS

printed works published in Leipzig unless otherwise stated

OPERAS

librettos by Draeseke

König Sigurd (3), 1853–7 (after E. Geibel: Sigurd) frag. perf. Meiningen, 1867; Herrat [Dietrich von Bern] (3), 1877–9, rev. 1885, Dresden, 1892, vs (1893); Gudrun (3), 1879–84, Hanover, 1884, vs (Leipzig, 1885); Bertran de Born, 1892–4, unperf.; Fischer und Kalif (comic op, 2), 1894–5, Prague, 1905; Merlin, 1903–5 (after K.L. Immermann: Mythe), Gotha, 1913, vs (1910)

OTHER VOCAL

Sacred: Lacrimosa, op.10, 1865; Adventlied, 4 solo vv, vv, orch, op.30, 1871–5 (1889); Requiem, b, 4 solo vv, vv, orch, op.22, vs (1883); Osterszene nach Goethes Faust, Bar, vv, orch, op.39, 1887, vs, 1889 (n.d.); Grosse Messe, f♯, solo vv, orch, op.60, 1890 (1893); Mysterium: Christus (Draeseke), orat trilogy, opp.70–73, 1895–9 (1900–03)) [incl. Vorspiel: Die Geburt des Herrn, and 3 orats: Christi Weihe, Christus der Prophet, Tod und Sieg des Herrn]; Grosse Messe, a, SATB, op.85, 1908–9 (1910); Requiem, e, 5vv, 1909–10; 3 psalms; works to Lat. and Ger. texts, SATB

Secular: Germania-Ode (H. von Kleist), S, vv, orch, 1859; Der Schwur im Rütli, S, vv, wind orch, 1862–3 (full orch, 1868); Columbus, cant., S, Bar, vv, orch, op.52 (1890); Sachsenhymne, vv, orch, 1893; incid music to Hermannsschlacht (Kleist), 1860, and Faust (J.W. von Goethe), 1907, vv, orch; further choral settings of Ger. texts, with and without orch, ballads, lieder and melodramas

ORCHESTRAL

Symphonies: Jugendsinfonie (destroyed), C; G, op.12, 1868–72 (1873); F, op.25, 1870–76 (1880); Symphonia tragica, op.40, 1885–6 (1887); Symphonia comica, e/G, 1912 (1996)

Symphonic poems: Julius Caesar, 1860, rev. 1865; Frithjof, 1865; Thunersee, 1903

Symphonic preludes: Das Leben ein Traum (after Calderón), op.45, 1868–88 (1894), Penthesilea (after Kleist), op.50, 1888 (1889), Der Traum ein Leben (after Grillparzer), 1904

Overtures: Jubelouvertüre, op.65 (1898); Ouvertüre zum Namenstag des Fürsten Constantin, 1862, Akademische Festouvertüre, 1890

Other: Serenade, D, op.49, 1888 (1889); Pf Conc., op.36, 1885–6 (1887); Vn Conc., 1881; marches, incl. Germania-Marsch, 1861

CHAMBER

String quartets: c, op.27, 1879–80 (1885); e, op.35, 1886 (1887); c♯, op.66, 1895 (1899)

Other: Qnt, B♭, pf, vn, va, vc, hn, op.48, 1888 (n.d.); 'Stelzner-Quintett', A, 2 vn, va, violotta, vc, 1897; Qnt, F, 2 vn, va, 2 vc, op.77, 1901 (Berlin, 1903); sonatas for cl, va and vc, all with pf; suites for eng hn/ob and for 2 vn; further single works for vn, vc and hn, all with pf; pf pieces, incl. Sonata quasi fantasia, c♯, op.6, waltzes, marches, fantasias, fugues etc.

WRITINGS

Anweisung zum kunstgerechten Moduliren (Freinwalde, 1876)

Die Lehre von der Harmonia in lustige Reimlein gebracht (Leipzig, 1883, enlarged 2/1887)

Der gebundene Styl: Lehrbuch für Kontrapunkt und Fuge (Hanover, 1902)

'Die Konfusion in der Musik', Neue Stuttgarter Musikzeitung, xxviii (1906); also pubd separately (Stuttgart, 1906)

M. Guttierez-Denhoff and H. Loos, eds.: Felix Draeseke: Schriften 1855–61 (Bonn, 1987)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (H. Stephani) [incl. list of works]

E. Roeder: Felix Draeseke (Dresden and Berlin, 1932–7)

H. Stephani: 'Felix Draeseke: 1835–1913', ZMw, xvii (1935), 426–50

H. Stephani, ed.: Festschrift Felix-Draeseke-Feier der Landeshauptstadt Dresden (Dresden, 1935)

A.H. Krueck: The Symphonies of Felix Draeseke (Roscoe, PA, 1967)

H. Loos and H. Lühning, eds.: Draeseke und Liszt. Draesekes Liedschaffen (Bad Honnef, 1988)

M. Gutierrez-Denhoff and H. Loos, eds.: Felix Draeseke: Chronik seines Lebens (Bonn, 1989)

S. Shigihara, ed.: Die Konfusion in der Musik: Felix Draesekes Kampfschrift und ihre Folgen (Bonn, 1990)

H. Loos: 'Felix Draeseke's Dresdner Opernschaffen nach den Lebenserinnerungen des Komponisten', Die Dresdner Oper im 19. Jahrhundert, ed. M. Heinemann (Dresden, 1995)

H. Loos, ed.: Zum Schaffen von Felix Draeseke: Instrumentalwerke und geistliche Musik (Bonn, 1995), 315–59

F. Streller, ed.: 10 Jahre Internationale Draeseke Gesellschaft Coburg: 1986–1996 (Coburg, 1996)

S. Döhring, H. John and H. Loos, eds.: Deutsche Oper zwischen Wagner und Strauss: Tagungsbericht Dresden 1993 mit einem Anhang von der Draeseke Tagung Coburg 1996 (Chemnitz, 1998)

ALAN H. KRUECK

Drag. An embellishment used in playing the side drum. See DRUM, §II, 2.

Dragatakis, Dimitris (b Platanoussa, Epirus, 22 Jan 1914). Greek composer. At the National Conservatory, Athens, he studied the violin with George Psyllas (graduating in 1939) and composition with L. Zoras and Kalomiris (graduating in 1955). His interest in new techniques, however, was developed independently, as he gradually emerged as a significant postwar figure in the development of Greek symphonic and chamber music. Setting out from a Shostakovich-like neo-classicism (Dokimio for orchestra, 1958; Symphony no.1, 1959), he evolved an increasingly personal, free atonal style, in which very disparate elements, often including fragments of Epirus folksong, were combined into homogeneous and solid formal blocks (Violin concerto no.1, 1969). After about 1970 his style became more direct and incisive, notably in Strophes I–X (1970–72) and Anadromés I (1976), reaching an emotional depth and measured restraint in works such as the Symphony no.5 (1979–80) and Mythologias III (1985). Subsequently his musical vocabulary has expanded, incorporating extended tonality and a greater sense of line (e.g. Viola Concerto, 1992). He was appointed to teach harmony, counterpoint, fugue and orchestration at the National Conservatory in Athens in 1977.

WORKS
(selective list)

STAGE

Zalouh, 4 insts, 4 actors, 1971; 9 incid scores, 1968–72

ORCHESTRAL

Syms.: no.1, 1959; no.2, 1960; no.3, 1964; no.4, 1966; no.5 'O peri ton Achéronta mythos' [The Legend about the Achéron River], 1979–80; no.6 'To chréos' [The Duty], 1989

Concs.: cl, str, 1962; hn, str, 1965; vn, orch, 1969; vc, orch, 1972; ob, str, 1973; pf, orch, 1975–7; 2 gui, orch, 1978; tuba, orch, 1983; santouri, orch, 1988; va, orch, 1992

5 ballet suites: 1963, 1964, 1964, 1969, 1970

Other: Dokimio, 1958; Skitsa, 4 sets, 3 str groups, 1966–8; Strophes I–X, 1970–72; Mnimes [Memories], 1981–2

CHAMBER

5 str qts: 1957, 1958, 1960, 1967, 1974

5 trios: 1960, 1962, 1963, 1965, 1969

Other: 2 sonatas, vn, pf, 1958, 1961; Afierossi [Dedication] 8 insts, 1963; Wind Qnt, 1964; Diafores, 7 insts, 1965; Lis-va, 2 gui, 1969; Epilogos, brass qnt, 1970; 3 Homilies, fl, 1973; Dialogues, 8 ww, 1974; Dromena, 2 hn, tpt, trbn, perc, str, 1974; Elegy, tuba, 1974; Anadromés I, fl, tuba, gui, pf, vc, db, 1976; Duo, cl, tuba, 1977, Anadromés III, pf, vn, vc, 1978; Praktiko 19 [Annal 19], cl, hn, tpt, vn, pf, 1979; Duo, cl, pf, 1981; Duo, va, pf, 1982; Duo vn, gui, 1984; Sonata, vc, pf, 1985; Trio, cl, pf, perc, 1986; Antilogos, 2 pf, 4 pfmrs, 1988; Horikou scholion [Commentary on a Chorale], fl, cl, hn, tpt, vn, vc, timp, perc, pf, 1993

Kbd: 2 Pf Sonatinas, 1961, 1963; Antiques, pf, 1972; Anadromés II, pf, 1977; Etude I and II, pf, 1981; Anadromés IV, 2 pf, 1983

VOCAL

Choral: 2 Songs (Y. Kotzioulas, D. Dragatakis), 1980; Mana [Mother] (V. Théodorou), female chorus, 1984; Lismonia [Forgetfulness] (H. Dragatakis), male chorus, 1986; T'oneiro . . . [The Dream] (C. Apostolatou), children's chorus, 1986; Efchi tis manas . . . [Mother's Blessing] (H. Dragatakis), 1986; T'oneiro tis manas [Mother's Dream] (D. Dragatakis), 1994

Solo: 3 songs (F. Agoules, Théodorou), S, pf, 1961; Reference to Electra (T. Roussos), S, hn, pf, va, 1968; 4 Songs (G. Drossinis), S, pf, 1970; Échei apopse éna fengari [Tonight the Moonlight] (K. Kondoulis), T, pf, 1979; 2 Songs (D. Dragatakis): no.1, B, pf, no.2, S, pf, 1980; Rhodia [Pomegranate Tree] (O. Elytis), 1981; 4 Songs (Théodorou), S, pf, 1982; Mythologias III (Euripides: Iphigenia in Tauris), S, 17 insts, 1985; Ode XIII (A. Calvos), S, fl, perc, pf, vn, vc, 1992

TAPE

Music for Koutouki Cave, 1972; Monologos (textless), 1v, tape, 1973; Mythologias I and II, 1973

Principal publishers: Greek Ministry of Culture, Philippos Nakas

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Leotsakos: 'Dragatakis, Dimitris', Pangosmio Viografiko Lexico [Universal biographical dictionary], iii (Athens, 1988), 306 only

GEORGE LEOTSAKOS

Dräger, Hans-Heinz (b Stralsund, 6 Dec 1909; d Austin, 9 Nov 1968). German musicologist, active also in the USA. He studied musicology with Blume, Hornbostel, Sachs, Schering and Schunemann at Berlin University (1931–7), taking the doctorate there in 1937 with a dissertation on the development of the bow and its use in Europe. Subsequently he held posts in Berlin, as assistant (1938) and administrative director (1939) of the State Museum of Musical Instruments, and as lecturer in organology at the Hochschule für Musik (1939). Having completed the Habilitation at Kiel in 1946 with an important work on the classification of instruments, he was concurrently professor of musicology at Greiswald (1947–9) and at Rostock (1948–9) and thereafter professor of systematic musicology in Berlin at the Humboldt University (1949–53) and the Free University (1953–61). He visited the USA initially as a Fulbright Scholar and visiting professor at Stanford University, California (1955), and returned there as professor of musicology at Austin, Texas (1961–6); he was naturalized in 1966. In the 1950s he turned to the theoretical and mathematical aspects of intonation and pitch and the relation between words and notes; before his death he had planned a book on the quantitative analysis of musical semantics. His publications are characterized by a gift for clarifying difficult concepts.

WRITINGS

Die Entwicklung des Streichbogens und seine Anwendung in Europa (bis zum Violenbogen des 16. Jahrhunderts) (diss., U. of Berlin, 1937; Kassel, 1937)

Prinzip einer Systematik der Musikinstrumente (Habilitationsschrift, U. of Kiel, 1946; Kassel, 1948)

ed., with K. Laux: Bach-Probleme: Festschrift zur Deutschen Bach-Feier (Leipzig, 1950) [incl. 'Der heutige Bach-Hörer und die gleichschwebende Temperatur', 52–66]

'Begriff des Tonkörpers', AMw, ix (1952), 68–77; Eng. trans. in S.K. Langer: Reflections on Art (Baltimore, 1958), 174–85

'Das Instrument als Träger und Ausdruck des musikalischen Bewusstseins', GfMKB: Bamberg 1953, 67–75

'Zur Frage des Wort-Ton-Verhältnisses in Hinblick auf Schuberts Strophenlied', AMw, xi (1954), 39–59

'Ästhetische Grundlagen', Stilkriterien der neuen Musik (Berlin, 1961, 2/1965), 34–43

'Die Verbindlichkeit der mathematischen Intervall-Definition', Musikalische Zeitfragen, x (1962), 27–44

'Curt Sachs as an Ethnomusicologist', The Commonwealth of Music, in Honor of Curt Sachs, ed. G. Reese and R. Brandel (New York, 1965), 10–25

'The Order of the Arts in the Catholic Service', Paul A. Pisk: Essays in his Honor, ed. J. Glowacki (Austin, 1966), 1–9

'A Quantitative Analysis of Music as Exemplified by Beethoven's Sketches for his Op.131', Festschrift für Walter Wiora, ed. L. Finscher and C.-H. Mahling (Kassel, 1967), 79–85

'The Relation of Music to Words during the German Baroque Era', The German Baroque: Literature, Music, Art, ed. G. Schulz-Behrend (Austin, 1972), 123–43

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H.-B. Dietz: 'In memoriam Hans-Heinz Draeger (1909–68)', Mf, xxii (1969), 1–2

Draghi, Antonio (b Rimini, probably between 17 Jan 1634 and 16 Jan 1635; d Vienna, 16 Jan 1700). Austrian composer, administrator and librettist of Italian birth, possibly a brother of Giovanni Battista Draghi. He was one of the most prominent musicians in Vienna during the last third of the 17th century and an exceptionally prolific composer of operas, oratorios and other theatre music.

1. Life. 2. Operas and other secular works. 3. Sacred works.

1. Life. Rimini is given as Draghi's place of descent not only in the first known biographical sources at Padua, but also in the marriage records of the Stephansdom, Vienna, in 1661. The death certificate dated 18 January 1700 gives his age as 65, so he seems to have been born in Rimini about 1634. In November 1645, aged about 11, he entered the service of the basilica of S Antonio, Padua, as a soprano singer, together with his uncle and probably music teacher Francesco Florido (a clergyman who seems to have been active at the cathedral of Urbania as maestro and organist from 1642 to 1644), who was engaged as a player of string instruments and the organ. Draghi was highly esteemed ('più che necessaria per l'honorevolezza della capella'): his salary was raised in 1646 to prevent his departure. In December 1647 he and his uncle were fired for having left their duties without license; Draghi alone was re-engaged in August 1648 as a contralto, and was paid from October 1649 to December 1651 as a bass singer. In the following year he moved to the Accademia della Morte, Ferrara, again as a singer, receiving his last salary in October 1657. During this time he also sang on a festive occasion in Padua in 1654, and in P.A. Ziani's opera Le fortune di Rodope e di Damira, performed in Carnival 1657 at the Teatro S Apollinare in Venice.

In 1658 Draghi began his long career at the imperial court in Vienna, first as a bass singer in the newly founded Kapelle of the dowager Empress Eleonora, the widow of Ferdinand III. His creative output began with the libretto for the opera L'Almonte, with music by Giuseppe Tricarico, which was performed in Vienna on 9 June 1661. He continued to be active as a librettist during his early years in Vienna and provided texts for dramatic works by such composers as Bertali and P.A. Ziani as well as for a number of his own works. The first music that can be assigned to him without doubt, the opera La Mascherata, dates from 1666. Draghi's gradual advance towards the highest musical posts at the Habsburg court indicates the recognition he won as a composer and administrator. He continued to serve the dowager empress, and in 1668 he became assistant Kapellmeister and in 1669 Kapellmeister at her court. (Her first choice for Kapellmeister was Legrenzi, but the Emperor Leopold I or his court persuaded her to accept Draghi.) During this period he also provided a number of dramatic works for performance at the emperor's court.

In recognition of these services and because of the continuing expansion of theatrical activities at the imperial court, Draghi was appointed director of dramatic music there in 1673. Despite his heavy duties in this post, he continued as Kapellmeister to the dowager empress until, on 1 January 1682, he succeeded

1. Draghi's 'Il fuoco eterno custodito dalle Vestali', Act 1 scenes xvii–xix (street in Rome at an embarkation point on the Tiber), Hoftheater auf der Cortina, Vienna, 30 October 1674: engraving by Matthäus Küsel after a design by Ludovico Burnacini

J.H. Schmelzer as Kapellmeister of the imperial court, a position he held for the rest of his life.

Draghi's son Carlo Domenico (b Vienna, 21 May 1669; d Vienna, 14 May 1711) was accepted into the Hofkapelle as a pupil of F.T. Richter in 1687. In recognition of his father's service to the court, a special stipend from the emperor enabled him to study in Italy from 1692 to 1693. From 1 October 1698 until his death he was one of the large number of court organists. He wrote several arias for some late secular works by his father, including the operas L'Arsace and La forza dell'amor filiale and the Terza accademia (all 1698), and for the 1697 revival of Sulpitia (all are in A-Wn).

2. Operas and other secular works. Of Draghi's about 170 secular works, some 120 are operas or other stage works, and the remaining 50 are vocal chamber works. In the stage works he collaborated especially with the court poet Nicolò Minato and the court theatre architect and stage designer Burnacini; they provided most of the dramatic works, sacred as well as secular, performed at the Habsburg court between 1668 and 1697 (fig.1; for further illustration see Burnacini, Ludovico Ottavio). The secular stage works range between one and four acts, but the vast majority belong to one of two types: the three-act dramma per musica and the one-act entertainment. There are 59 of the former, a few of which have other designations, such as componimento drammatico per musica. They were mostly performed either on birthdays of the imperial family or during Carnival, but a few were given on the emperor's name day. All of them, except those for Carnival, have a declaration of homage to the personage honoured, usually in the form of a licenza, occasionally in a prologue too. There are 60 one-act works. Generally, those designated festa teatrale or musicale were given on the empress's birthday and name day, those marked introduttione per un balletto on name days, and trattenimenti per musica during Carnival. The stage works include music for Italian, Spanish and Latin plays.

As was normal at the time, the subject matter of the operas is from Greek and Roman history and mythology; only Gundeberga treats events from German history. The usual love intrigue, involving many disguises, abounds. There are also comic scenes, and the acts end with ballets, for which other composers, notably Schmelzer and his son Andreas Anton, wrote the music. The Emperor Leopold I wrote arias and scenes for many of the operas. The style of the music is predominantly that of Venetian opera of the second half of the 17th century, though the arias contain extensive virtuoso coloratura passages. The ensembles and the choruses are carefully composed. Two stylistic developments can be seen: the increasing use in recitatives of the closing formula involving a falling 4th or 3rd in the vocal part and a cadence for continuo alone; and the replacement of strophic arias, including some with a brief da capo of a line or two, with single-strophe arias with full-scale da capos.

The chamber works, to texts which are almost without exception either mythological or allegorical, bear various designations. Some are serenatas. Others, marked (compositione per) musica di camera, were written for the Archduke Joseph's birthday. The other two categories are the same as the last two of the one-act stage works (see above); it is noteworthy that between Carnival 1682 and Carnival 1692, a time of war, Draghi's output consisted almost exclusively of one-act stage pieces and chamber works. His chamber works are different from the operas in that arias are at least as frequent as recitatives and are all in two strophes, separated by a ritornello. Some of the serenatas for outdoor performance have unusually full instrumental accompaniment.

The popular style of Draghi's own librettos seems to have been influenced by the commedia dell'arte.

3. Sacred works. Draghi's 41 sacred dramatic works, many produced in collaboration with the poet Minato and the designer Burnacini (see §2 above), are not only the largest number of such works by a single composer in the later 17th century but can also be considered representative of the repertory of sacred dramatic music at the court of Leopold I. According to the manner of performance, the nature of the texts, and the musical treatment, these works can be divided into two groups, oratorios and sepolcri. Oratorios, presented during Lent before Maundy Thursday, were executed in the traditional manner, i.e. without scenery, costumes or acting. Sepolcri were presented either on Maundy Thursday in the Kapelle of the dowager empress, with a costumed cast acting around a replica of the holy sepulchre, or on Good Friday in the Hofkapelle, with additional painted scenery, designed by Burnacini, as a backdrop (fig.2; see also Oratorio, fig.4). The selection of sources and themes for the texts also shows a marked difference between the two types. Only a minority of works by Draghi, all

2. Sacrifice of Isaac, backdrop design by Ludovico Burnacini for Draghi's sepolcro 'Il sagrificio non impedito', performed in the Vienna Hofkapelle, 4 April 1692

3. Manuscript of the opening of Draghi's sepolcro 'La vita nella morte', first performed in the Vienna Hofkapelle, 16 April 1688 (A-Wn Cod.18870, f.2v)

oratorios, draw on popular sources such as hagiography and dramatic episodes from the Old and New Testaments which are presented in a clearly defined chronology of events, emphasizing a conflict between the forces of good and evil. Most of the works, including all the sepolcri, treat one aspect of the Passion of Christ – the period between the burial and the Resurrection – and emphasize the laments of the followers of Christ as well as the relationship of the Passion to events related in the Old Testament. To some degree the contrast between the two types can also be seen in elements in the style of the music. Most of the oratorios, in two sections, are scored for two violins and continuo and have a relatively wide melodic range, with much coloratura writing. On the other hand, in the sepolcri, which are in a single section, Draghi favoured the low sonorities of violas and gambas (often in the archaic four- or five-part grouping; fig.3), affective, syllabic melodies and short aria-like and arioso sections.

The general style of Draghi's sacred dramatic music, like that of his secular works, clearly derives from that of the Venetian school of the mid-17th century. A special notable feature is the frequent use, as in the works of Cavalli and Cesti, of arioso sections within and following recitatives. The frequency, placing and melodic and harmonic style of these sections ensure that Draghi is seen at his best in his handling of recitative. Further Venetian traits can be seen in the instrumental pieces, choruses and slow arias: in the first two, chordal and imitative sections regularly alternate, and the last include laments (though there are very few chaconne basses). Distinct differences from the Venetian style can be seen in the absence of dance-like rhythms, especially in the fast movements of overtures and in arias, and in the small number of da capo arias.

Except for a gradual change in the structure of overtures, and the increasingly frequent use of instrumentally accompanied arias and more fully scored ritornellos – which may have been prompted by the greater resources available to him at Leopold's court compared with Eleonora's, and/or by the greater importance of Good Friday rather than Maundy Thursday celebrations – there is little stylistic development in Draghi's sacred dramatic output. This may have been owing to the fact that he had no contact with composers outside the Viennese circle, that his vast output did not leave him time for experiments and that he was aware of the emperor's preference for, and satisfaction with, the style of his music.

WORKS

Edition: A. Draghi: Kirchenwerke, ed. G. Adler, DTÖ, xlvi, Jg.xxiii/1 (1916/R) [A] librettos by N. Minato, works performed in Vienna, Hofburg, and MSS in A-Wn, unless otherwise stated

STAGE

dm – dramma per musica

La mascherata (compositione drammatica, 3, A. Draghi), Kleines Hof, 1 or 4 March 1666, Act 3 lost, 5 numbers ed. in Neuhaus, contribs. by Leopold I

Vero amor fà soave ogni fatica (introduzione a un ballo, 1, Draghi), 6 Feb 1667, music lost, lib Wn

Comedia ridicula (3, anon.), 11 or 13 Feb 1668, Act 3 lost

Gl'amori di Cefalo e Procri (rappresentazione drammatica, 1, Draghi), 9 June 1668

Achille riconosciuto (F. Ximenes), 12 June 1668, 7 numbers ed. in Neuhaus

Il Ciro vendicatore di se stesso (dm, 1, Ximenes), Amalienburg, 18 Nov 1668, pt 1 lost

Chi più sa manco l'intende, overo Gli amori di Clodio, e Pompea (dm, 3, Ximenes), Emperor's rooms, 21 Feb 1669, contribs. by Leopold I

Il Perseo (drama musicale 3, A. Amalteo), 15 July 1669, Act 2 lost

Atalanta (dm, 3), 18 Nov 1669, Acts 1 and 3 lost

Le rise di Democrito (trattenimento per musica, 3), 17 Feb 1670, Wn (1673 version), lib CZ-Pu; contribs. by Leopold I

Leonida in Tegea (dm, prol, 3), 9 June 1670, Act 3 lost; arr. M.A. Ziani, Venice, S Moisè, 9 Feb 1676; with rev. of Act 3, 11 Feb 1694, facs. in IOB, lxiv (1982), contribs. by Leopold I

Iphide Greca (dm, 3), 12 June 1670, music lost, lib A-Wgm; ?rev. version, 12 Jan 1696, Act 1 lost, contribs. by Leopold I

Penelope [La casta Penelope] (dm, 3), 18 Nov 1670

L'avidità di Mida (trattenimento per musica, 3), Ritterstube, 8 Feb 1671

La prosperità di Elia Sejano (dm, 3), 9 June 1671, contribs. by Leopold I

La gara dei genii (festa teatrale, 1), 14 July 1671, contribs. by Leopold I

Cidippe (dm, 3), 18 Nov 1671, Act 2 lost, contribs. by Leopold I

Gl'atomi d'Epicuro (dm, prol, 3), 9 June 1672

Gundeberga (dm, 3), 12 July 1672, Acts 1 and 3 lost, contribs. by Leopold I

Sulpitia (dm, 3), 21 Nov 1672, Act 1 lost, contribs. by Leopold I; with addns by C.D. Draghi, 27 Nov 1697, Act 1 lost

Il gioir della speranza (introduzione ad un balletto, 1), Emperor's rooms, 9 Feb 1673

Batto convertito in sasso (musica di camera, 1), Favorita, 9 June 1673

Provare per non recitare (composizione per musica, 1), Favorita, 15 Oct 1673, music lost, lib I-Rvat, Vnm

Gl'incantesimi disciolti (introduzione d'un balletto, 1), Karlau bei Graz, 17 Oct 1673, contribs. by Leopold I

La Tessalonica (dm, 3), rooms of Archduchess Maria Anna, 18 Nov 1673, music lost, lib D-W, I-Vnm

La lanterna di Diogene (dm, 3), 30 Jan 1674, Act 1 lost, contribs. by Leopold I
Le staggioni ossequiose (introduzione d'un balletto, 1), Stallburg, 12 April 1674
Il ratto delle Sabine (dm, 3), Cortina, 9–10 June 1674, Act 1 lost, contribs. by Leopold I
Il trionfatore de' centauri (festa musicale, 1), Schönbrunn, zoo, 13 Aug 1674
Il fuoco eterno custodito dalle Vestali (dm, 3), Cortina, 30 Oct 1674, contribs. by Leopold I La nascita di Minerva (festa musicale, 1), 18 Nov 1674, music lost, lib A-Wn
I pazzi Abderiti (dm, 3), Emperor's rooms, 23 Feb 1675, contribs. by Leopold I
Pirro (dm, 3), Laxenburg, zoo, 30 May 1675, Act 1 lost
Zaleuco [Seleuco] (dm, 3), ? 17 June 1675, music lost, lib Wn
Turia Lucretia (dm, 3), 18 Nov 1675, Act 3 lost
Sciegliere non potendo adoprare (prol, 1), 18 Nov 1676
Hercole acquistatore dell'immortalità (dm, 3), Linz, Landhaus, 7 Jan 1677
Chilonida (dm, 3), hall of Archduchess Maria Anna, 20 Feb 1677, contribs. by Leopold I
Il silentio di Harpocrate (dm, 3), 27 Feb 1677, music lost, lib Wn; ?rev. version, 22 Nov 1688, Act 3 lost
Adriano sul Monte Casio (dm, 3), 27 June 1677, contribs. by Leopold I
Le maghe di Tessaglia (festa musicale, 1), Schönbrunn, park, 22 July 1677
Rodogone (dm, 3), Amalienburg, 18 Nov 1677, Act 2 lost
La fortuna delle corti (introduzione d'un balletto, 1, anon.), Stallburg, 1677
La conquista del vello d'oro (festa teatrale, 3), Wiener Neustadt, palace great hall, 8 Feb 1678, Act 1 lost
Leucippe Phestia (dm, 3), 14 June 1678, contribs. by Leopold I
Il tempio di Diana in Taurica (festa musicale, 1), Schönbrunn, park, 1 Sept 1678
La monarchia latina trionfante (festa musicale, 1), Cortina, 8 Oct 1678, music lost, lib Wn
Enea in Italia (dm, 3), Wiener Neustadt, palace great hall, 29 Oct 1678, Act 2 lost, contribs. by Leopold I
Li favoriti dalla fortuna (festa musicale, 1), 22 Nov 1678
Baldracca (dm, 3), 22 Jan 1679, Act 1 lost
L'ossequio di Flora (introduzione a un balletto di giardinieri, 1), carn. 1679
La svogliata (trattenimento musicale, 1), carn. 1679
Curzio (dm, 3), intended for 10 Aug 1679, Acts 2 and 3 lost, contribs. by Leopold I
I vaticini di Tiresia Tebano (festa musicale, 1), Prague, royal ballroom, 11 Jan 1680, contribs. by Leopold I
La patienza di Socrate con due mogli (scherzo dramatico per musica, 3), Prague, royal ballroom, 29 Feb 1680, 1 scene ed. in GMB, contribs. by Leopold I
La forza dell'amicitia (dm, 3), Linz, palace, 13 Feb 1681, Act 1 lost; ?rev. version, 13 Jan 1694, lost, lib Wn
Temistocle in Persia (dm, 3), Wiener Neustadt, 30 June 1681, Acts 1 and 3 lost, contribs. by Leopold I
La rivalità nell'ossequio (trattenimento musicale, 1), Schloss Frohsdorf, park, 22 July 1681, music lost, lib Wn
Achille in Tessaglia (trattenimento musicale, 1, librettist not known), Mannersdorf, 26 July 1681, music lost, lib Wn
L'albero del ramo d'oro (introduzione d'un ballo, 1), Ödenburg, 15 Nov 1681, ov. ed. in H. Botstiber: Geschichte der Ouvertüre (Leipzig, 1913)
Gli stratagemi di Biante (dm, 3), 15 Jan 1682, contribs. by Leopold I
La Chimera (drama fantastico musicale, 3), 7 Feb 1682; rev. version, 14 Feb 1692, Act 2 lost
Il tempio d'Apollo in Delfo (introduzione d'un balletto, 1), Laxenburg, 14 July 1682
Il giardino della Virtù (1), Emperor's rooms, 7 Jan 1683
Lo smemorato (trattenimento musicale, 1), Emperor's rooms, 28 Feb 1683
La lira d'Orfeo (trattenimento musicale, 1), Laxenburg, park, 9 June 1683
Gl'elogii (1), Linz, palace, 16 Jan 1684, contribs. by Leopold I
Tullio Hostilio, aprendo il tempio di Giano (festa musicale, 1), Linz, 9 June 1684, music lost, lib Wn
I varii effetti d'amore (introduzione ad un balletto, 1), 16 Jan 1685, music lost, lib Wn
La più generosa Spartana (introduzione ad un balletto, 1), ? 10 June 1685
Il Palladio in Roma (dm, 3), 17 Sept 1685, contribs. by Leopold I
Il rissarcimento della ruota della Fortuna (introduzione ad un balletto, 1), ? 15 Nov 1685
Lo studio d'amore (introduzione ad un balletto, 1), Emperor's rooms, 13 Jan 1686, contribs. by Leopold I
Le scioccaggini degli Psilli (trattenimento musicale, 1), ? 24 Feb 1686
Il nodo gordiano (festa teatrale, 1), 11 June 1686, contribs. by Leopold I
Le ninfe ritrose (introduzione d'un balletto, 1), Hofburg, park, 22 July 1686, contribs. by Leopold I
Il ritorno di Teseo dal labirinto di Creta (introduzione d'un balletto, 1), ?7 Oct 1686
La grotta di Vulcano (introduzione d'un balletto, 1), ? 15 Nov 1686
La vendetta dell'Honestà (rappresentazione musicale, 1), 9 June 1687, music lost, lib Wn
La gemma Ceraunia d'Ulissipone hora Lisbona (dramma musicale, 3), Heidelberg, Elector's palace, 1 and 3 July 1687, music lost, lib BR-Rn, US-Wc
La vittoria della Fortezza (introduzione d'un balletto, 1), Bellaria, 22 July 1687, contribs. by Leopold I
La fama addormentata e risvegliata (introduzione d'un balletto, 1), Pressburg, ?19 Nov 1687
Il marito ama più (festa musicale, 1), Pressburg, Count Pálffy's palace, 17 Jan 1688, contribs. by Leopold I
Tanisia (dm, 3), 26 Feb 1688, contribs. by Leopold I
La moglie ama meglio (festa musicale, 1), 10 June 1688, contribs. by Leopold I
Pigmaleone in Cipro (festa musicale, 1), 13 Jan 1689, contribs. by Leopold I
La Rosaura, overo Amore, figlio della Gratitudine (dm, 3, O. Malvezzi), 19 Feb 1689, Act 3 lost, contribs. by Leopold I
Il Telemaco, overo Il valore coronato (composizione per musica, 1, Malvezzi), Augsburg, Fuggers' house, 21 Nov 1689, pt 1 lost, 23 arias D-Mbs
La regina de' Volsci (dm, 3), Augsburg, Fuggers' house, 12 Jan 1690, 32 arias Mbs, contribs. by Leopold I
Scipione preservatore di Roma (trattenimento musicale, 1), ? 26 July 1690, music lost, lib A-Wn
La chioma di Berenice (festa musicale, 1), intended for 28 Aug 1690, contribs. by Leopold I; rev. version, Favorita park, 4 Aug 1695, pt 2 lost, contribs. by Leopold I
Li tre stati del tempo: passato, presente, e venturo (introduzione d'un balletto, 1), Neuburg, ?June 1691, music lost, lib I-Fn, Vnm
Il ringiovenito (festa musicale, 1), Favorita, 18 June 1691, contribs. by Leopold I
Il pellegrinaggio delle Gratie all'Oracolo Dodoneo (invenzione per una serenata, 1), Favorita park, 23 July 1691
Le attioni fortunate di Perseo (festa, 4), 28 Nov 1691, music lost, lib A-Wn
Fedeltà e Generosità (festa teatrale, 1), 12 Jan 1692, contribs. by Leopold I
Le varietà di fortuna in Lucio Iunio Bruto, l'autore della libertà romana (festa per musica, 3), Favorita, 18 June 1692, Acts 1 and 3 lost, contribs. by Leopold I
Il merito uniforma i genii (introduzione d'un balletto, 1, ?Minato), Favorita park, 22 July 1692, music lost, lib Wn
Il vincitor magnanimo Tito Quintio Flaminio (dm, 3), 27 Nov 1692, contribs. by Leopold I L'amore in sogno, overo Le nozze d'Odati, e Zoriadre (dm, 3), Favorita, 29 June 1693, Acts 1 and 3 lost, contribs. by Leopold I
La madre degli dei (festa musicale, 1), Favorita park, 22 July 1693
L'imprese dell'Achille di Roma (festa per musica, 4, anon.), 22 Nov 1693, music lost, lib Wn
Pelopida Tebano in Tessaglia (festa teatrale, 1), 25 Nov 1694, pt 1 lost
L'industrie amorose in Filli di Tracia (dm, 3), 16 Jan 1695, contribs. by Leopold I
Amore dà senno, overo Le sciocchezze d'Hippoclide (dm, 3, D. Cupeda), 6–12 Feb 1695, Acts 1 and 2 lost, contribs. by Leopold I
La finta cecità di Antioco il grande (dm, 3, Cupeda), Favorita, 6 July 1695, Acts 2 and 3 lost, contribs. by Leopold I
La magnanimità di Marco Fabrizio (3, Cupeda), 22 Nov 1695, contribs. by Leopold I
Timone misantropo (dm, 3, anon.), carn. 1696, Act 1 lost, contribs. by Leopold I
Le piramidi d'Egitto (trattenimento musicale, 1), 6 Jan 1697

L'Adalberto, overo La forza dell' astuzia femminile (dm, 3, Cupeda), 12 Feb 1697, contribs. by Leopold I
L'amare per virtù (dm, 3, Cupeda), Favorita, 30 June 1697, Act 2 lost, contribs. by Leopold I
La tirannide abbatuta dalla virtù (festa musicale, 1), Favorita park, 11 Aug 1697, contribs. by Leopold I
L'Arsace, fondatore dell'imperio de' Parthi (dm, 3, Cupeda), Favorita, 3 July 1698, Acts 1 and 2 lost, collab. C.D. Draghi
Il delizioso ritiro di Lucullo (festa musicale, 1, anon.), Favorita park, 7 Aug 1698, music lost, lib Wn
La forza dell'amor filiale (dm, 3, Cupeda), 27 Nov 1698, Act 3 lost, collab. C.D. Draghi, contribs. by Leopold I
Le finezze dell'amicizia, e dell'amore (festa musicale, 1, anon.), 1 Aug 1699, music lost, lib Wn
L'Alceste (dm, 3, Cupeda), 28 Jan 1700, music lost, lib Wn

Music in: Ipermestra, Venice, spr. 1671, lost

VOCAL CHAMBER

librettos by N. Minato, works performed in Vienna, and MSS in A-Wn, unless otherwise stated

Serenata, 1669
La Semiramide (trattenimento musico, anon.), 22 Dec 1673, music lost, pubd lib I-Ma, Rvat, Vnm
Trattenimento musicale, 1674
Li sogni regij (serenata), 30 Oct 1675
L'ore postmeridiane di Parnasso (servizio di camera), June 1676
Lo specchio (cant., anon.), 22 Nov 1676
L'oracolo d'Amore (anon.), 26 ?Nov 1676
Gli dei concorrenti (epitalamio musicale), Augsburg, 15 Dec 1676
I desiderij d'Echo, e di Narcisso (serenata), 1677
Amor vittorioso (applauso per musica), Wiener Neustadt, Feb 1678
Le pompe dell'Istro (applauso per musica, anon.), Wiener Neustadt, Feb 1678
L'ingegno à sorte (serenata), Linz, 22 July 1680
Introduzione ad un ballo di Teutoni (anon.), Linz, 24 Nov 1680
Espero festeggiante (introduzione per una serenata, anon.), 9 June 1681
Gli aborti della fretta (musica di camera), Ödenburg, 18 Nov 1681
Gli Argonauti in viaggio (musica di camera), Laxenburg, 9 June 1682
Il sogno delle Gratie (introduzione d'un balletto), Laxenburg, 9 June 1682
Gli emblemi (compositione per musica di camera), 15 Nov 1682
Le gare degl'amanti (musica di camera), Laxenburg, 1682
Il trionfo del carnevale, carn. 1683
Il sagrificio d'Amore (serenata), 16 July 1685
Le recreazioni di Tempe (trattenimento musicale), 22 July 1685
Concerto musicale, 1685
Pische cercando Amore (serenata), 22 July 1688
Specchio historico (musica di camera), 26 July 1688
Le corone trionfali (compositione per musica per servitio di camera, anon.), 9 June 1689, music lost, lib A-Wn
Il riposo nelli disturbi (serenata), 24 July 1689
I doni heroici (ossequio poetico musicale al servitio di camera), 26 July 1689
I pianeti benigni (epitalamio musicale), Neuburg, 28 Aug 1689
Non si può (capriccio poetico), 12 June 1690, music lost, pubd lib Wn
L'ossequio delli sette rè di Roma alla maestà del nuovo rè de' romani Gioseffo I (compositione per musica), 26 July 1690, music lost, pubd lib Wn
Il teatro delle passioni humane (compositione), 15 Nov 1690
Amore accademico (trattenimento di musica e di accademia, anon.), 6 Jan 1691, music lost, pubd lib Wn
Gli augurii veracemente interpretati (compositione per musica di camera, anon.), Nikolsburg, 9 June 1691, music lost, lib Wn
La galeria della fortuna (compositione per musica di camera, anon.), 26 July 1691
Il tributo de' Savii (compositione per musica di camera), intended for 26 July 1692
Introduttione per musica e conclusione for Seconda accademia, 3 Feb 1693
Le piante della virtù, e della fortuna (capriccio per musica a servitio di camera), 26 July 1693, music lost, pubd lib Wn
Le sere dell'Aventino (musica di camera), 9 June 1694 (pt i), 22 July 1694 (pt ii), music lost, pubd lib Wn
L'ossequio della Poesia, e dell'Istoria alla maestà di Gioseffo (componimento per musica di camera) (?Cupeda), 26 July 1694, music lost, pubd lib Wn
Le virtù regie (trattenimento poetico per musica), 26 July 1695
L'ossequio nel fuggir l'otio (compositione per musica), 15 Nov 1696
Le più ricche gemme, e le più belle pietre delle corone (ossequio per musica di camera), 26 July 1697, music lost, pubd lib Wn
Intramezzo di musica e applauso musicale alla decisione in una accademia di dame, 15 Nov 1697
Introduzione per musica e conclusione for Terza accademia (anon.), 11 Feb 1698, collab. C.D. Draghi

Introduzione ad un balletto (anon.), 30 Dec, between ?1665 and 1677
L'ossequio fra gli amori (serenata, anon.), 26 July, between 1667 and 1672
Le veglie di Tempe (serenata), 9 June, between 1669 and 1697
Veglia di Parnasso, 9 June, between 1669 and 1697
Forza d'un bel volto (dialogo à 5 voci, anon.)
'Era l'Aurora' (cant. à 3 per camera, anon.)

Doubtful: Muzio Scevola (anon.), 1665, lost; Introduzione dramatica al gioco delle sorti (anon.), 1666, lost, pubd lib Wn; Prelude, sung sections, epilogue to Primero es la honra (A. Moreto), 18 Jan 1673; Per l'accademia (anon.), 10 Feb 1677; Flaminio (anon.), 1679, lost; Gli obblighi dell'universo (cant., anon.), Pardubice, 9 June 1680; Accademia (?Minato); Introduzione per l'accademia (anon.); Floridea (?G. Pancieri) performed in Vienna and MSS in A-Wn, unless otherwise stated

ORATORIOS

Oratorio di Giuditta, ?1668
La vedova generosa, 1668/9, music lost, pubd lib D-HEu
La potenza della croce (I. Savini), 6 March 1674, music lost, pubd lib I-Vnm
Il cuore appassionato (Savini), 19 March 1674, music lost, pubd lib A-Wn
La caduta di Salomone (D. Federici), 1674, music lost, pubd lib I-Vnm
S Agata (A. Ficieni), 1675
Debora e Jaele (G.B. de Santis), 1676, music lost, pubd lib Vnm
Il figlio prodigo (G.B. Rocca), 1678, music lost, pubd lib Vnm
Jephte (G.F. Apolloni), Prague, 1680
S Cecilia, Prague, 1680
S Wenceslao (N. Minato), Prague, 1680
All'ingresso di Christo nel deserto (?H. da Pergine), 1683
Entrata di Christo nel deserto (?Da Pergine), 15 Feb 1687
L'uscita di Christo dal deserto (?Da Pergine), 1688
Le cinque vergini prudenti, 1689
Il crocifisso per gratia, overo S Gaetano, 1691

SEPOLCRI

librettos by N. Minato, works performed in Vienna, and MSS in A-Wn, unless otherwise stated

L'humanità redenta (A. Draghi), 18 April 1669
Li sette dolori di Maria Vergine (G. Ferri), 3 April 1670
Epitafii sopra il sepolcro di Christo, 26 March 1671
Il limbo aperto (Ferri), 14 April 1672
La pietà contrastata (anon.), 30 March 1673
La corona di spine, 11 April 1675
Il sole ecclissato, 2 April 1676
Le cinque piaghe di Christo, 15 April 1677
Li trè chiodi di Christo, 7 April 1678
Il titolo posto sù la croce di Christo, 30 March 1679
La sacra lancia, Prague, 18 April 1680
Il terremoto, 26 March 1682
L'eternità sogetta al tempo, 16 April 1683
Il segno dell'humana salute, 31 March 1684
Il prezzo dell'humana redentione, 20 April 1685, music lost, pubd lib Wn
Il dono della vita eterna, 12 April 1686; ed. P.J. Halverson (diss., Stanford U., 1988)
La vita nella morte, 16 April 1688
L'esclamar à gran voce, 8 April 1689
I frutti dell'albero della croce, 13 April 1691, music lost, pubd lib Wn
Il sagrificio non impedito, 4 April 1692
Il sangue e l'acqua, 20 March 1693, music lost, pubd lib Wn
Il libro con sette sigilli, 9 April 1694
La trasfiguratione sù'l Calvario, 1 April 1695, music lost, pubd lib Wn
La passione di Christo, 20 April 1696, music lost, pubd lib Wn
La virtù della croce, 5 April 1697
Il secondo Adamo (?Cupeda), 17 April 1699, music lost, pubd lib Wn

OTHER SACRED VOCAL

Missa a 9, 5vv, 2 vn, 2 va, bc, 1684, A-KR; A
Missa assumptionis, 5vv, 2 tpt, 4 trbn, 2 vn, 4 va, bc, 1684, KR; A Stabat mater, 4vv, Wn; A
3 pss, 1, 4vv, bc, CZ-KRa; 2 hymns, 3vv, 2 vn, bc, A-Wn; hymns in A

LIBRETTOS

for other composers, performed in Vienna, published and in A-Wn, unless otherwise stated

L'Almonte (componimento drammatico), G. Tricarico, 1661; Oronisbe, P.A. Ziani, 1663; L'Invidia conculcata dalla Virtù, Merito, Valore della S. C. Mta di Leopoldo imperatore, Ziani, 1664, lib lost, score Wn; Cloridea, Ziani, 1665; L'Alcindo, A. Bertali, 1665; La Galatea, Ziani, 1667; Apollo deluso (dm), G.F. Sances and Leopold I, 1669; La fede trionfante (orat), Tricarico, 1662, pubd lib I-Lg; Maria Maddalena (orat), Bertali, 1663, lib lost; La morte debellata (sepolchri), Sances, 1669, pubd lib A-Gu, Wst

BIBLIOGRAPHY

KöchelKHM
A. von Weilen: Zur Wiener Theatergeschichte: die vom Jahre 1629 bis zum Jahre 1740 am Wiener Hofe zur Aufführung gelangten Werke theatralischen Charakters und Oratorien (Vienna, 1901)
M. Neuhaus: 'Antonio Draghi', SMw, i (1913), 104–92
F. Hadamowsky: 'Barocktheater am Wiener Kaiserhof, mit einem Spielplan (1625–1740)', Jb der Gesellschaft für Wiener Theaterforschung 1951–2, 7–117; pubd separately (Vienna, 1955)
H. Knaus: Die Musiker im Archivbestand des kaiserlichen Obersthofmeisteramtes (1637–1705) (Vienna, 1967–9)
R. Schnitzler: The Sacred-Dramatic Music of Antonio Draghi (diss., U. of North Carolina,1971)
N. Hiltl: Die Oper am Hofe Kaiser Leopolds I. mit besonderer Berücksichtigung der Tätigkeit von Minato und Draghi (diss., U. of Vienna, 1973)
G.P. Calessi: 'Richerche sull'Accademia della Morte di Ferrara', Quadrivium, xvi/2 (1975), 29–30
U. Hofmann: Die Serenata am Hofe Kaiser Leopold I. (1658–1705) (diss., U. of Vienna, 1975)
H. Seifert: Die Oper am Wiener Kaiserhof im 17. Jahrhundert (Tutzing, 1985)
M. Hager: 'La funzione del linguaggio poetica nelle opere comiche di Amalteo, Draghi e Minato', L'opera italiana a Vienna prima di Metastasio, ed. M.T. Muraro (Florence, 1989), 17–30
N. Pirrotta: 'Note su Minato', ibid., 127–63
J. Herczog: 'Tendenze letterarie e sviluppo musicale dell'oratorio italiano nel Settecento tra Vienna e il paese d'origine', NRMI, xxv (1991), 216–29
N. Billio: 'Contributo sugli inizi di carriera di Agostino Steffani, Antonio Draghi e Carlo Pallavicino, musicisti al Santo di Padova', Musica, scienza e idee nella serenissima durante il Seicento, ed. F. Pasadore and F. Rossi (Venice, 1996), 53–61
S. Monaldini: L'Orto dell'Esperidi: musici, attori e artisti nel patrocinio della famiglia Bentivoglio (1646–1685) (Lucca, forthcoming)

RUDOLF SCHNITZLER (with HERBERT SEIFERT)

Draghi, Bernardino [Bernardino di Pietro] (d Siena, 29 June 1592). Italian composer and singer. He was employed at the cathedral of Siena where he studied with the maestro di cappella Andrea Feliciani. The first record of his presence there is a payroll of June 1578, in which he is listed among the clergy as a member of the minor orders. By 1580 he was singing in the choir, first as soprano and later (from 1585) as contralto; a document of 31 May 1591 records that he was paid 20 lire as cappellano and 9 lire as singer. He died the following year and was buried in the cathedral.

Draghi's Primo libro delle villanelle a tre voci (Venice, 1591; 4 ed. A. Mazzeo, Villanelle e canzonette senesi del 1500 a tre voci, Siena, 1982) is dedicated to the Sienese noblewoman Isabella Mariscotti Ballati. The villanelle are attractive pieces in which largely homophonic settings are enlivened by the use of syncopation and expressive dissonances. He is also the composer of Confitebor tibi, in a collection of eight-part Vespers psalms (RISM 1590[9]).

K. BOSI MONTEATH

Draghi, Giovanni Battista (b ?Rimini, *c*1640; bur. London, 13 May 1708). Italian composer and keyboard player, active in England, possibly a brother of Antonio Draghi. He may have studied in Venice, as Antonio did, for it was the main operatic centre in Italy, and he came to England initially to join an Italian opera venture in London. Vincenzo and Bartolomeo Albrici, the leaders of the troupe, arrived from Dresden in November 1662, and Draghi may have joined them soon after. He is perhaps the musician that Sir Bernard Gascoigne, the English Resident in Venice, sent to London in 1664; he proved to be 'learned, and Civill; Civility being no vere ordinarye quality of a Musicien, but Preyde'. On 12 February 1667 Pepys heard him sing from memory an act of an Italian opera; Pepys liked the music, and reported that Draghi had also written the libretto. The opera seems not to have been performed, and does not survive. The Italians were active at court and in polite society until Vincenzo Albrici left England in about 1668. Most of the others left in 1673, when the Test Act debarred Catholics from court, but Draghi remained, replacing Sebenico and partially supplanting Locke as organist of the queen's Catholic chapel in Somerset House. Roger North wrote that the Italians in the chapel did not like Locke's 'manner of play', and wanted to be accompanied by 'more polite hands', and so Draghi 'was made cheif organist, and had the great organ, but Lock was not put out, having a chamber organ that stood by, which he accompanied with; so just are Kings and Queens sometimes'. Locke evidently did not hold it against Draghi, for both composers contributed instrumental music to Thomas Shadwell's operatic version of The Tempest (1674), and Draghi wrote the 'Instrumental Musick before and between the Acts and the Entries in the Acts' in Locke's semi-opera Psyche (1675). Draghi also wrote songs for Aphra Behn's The City Heiress (1682), the anonymous Romulus and Hersilia (1682), Nahum Tate's A Duke and No Duke (1684), William Mountfort's The Injured Lovers (1688) and Joseph Harris's The City Bride (1696). On 25 July 1696 he witnessed a legal agreement between Thomas Betterton and the dancer Sorin.

Draghi was particularly admired as a keyboard player. John Evelyn heard him on 25 July 1684 and thought 'few if any in Europe' exceeded him, while in the same year he was chosen to demonstrate Renatus Harris's instrument in the famous 'Battle of the Organs'. The satirist Tom Brown has Purcell writing to Blow in his Letters from the Dead to the Living (London, 5/1719) that in the 'infernal shades . . . a carpenter shall make better music upon an empty cupboard strung with five brass-wires, than Baptist can upon the harpsichord'. Draghi, evidently, had no equal on earth. At Christmas 1687 he was appointed organist of James II's Catholic chapel, and, according to a tradition reported by Hawkins, he taught the king's daughter, Princess Anne, and possibly also her sister Mary. In 1695 he was on the list of teachers for a projected royal academy. A keyboard manuscript, discovered in the early 1990s (now GB-Lbl Mus.1), with sections apparently copied by Purcell and Draghi in the 1690s, seems to be evidence of them both teaching members of the same, as yet unidentified, family. Also, some 'General Rules' for keyboard fingering attributed to Draghi were copied by Edward Finch (Ge R.d.39). Draghi was apparently one of the most sought-after music teachers in Restoration London.

His connection with the royal family continued to the end of his life. His song for Princess Anne's birthday was performed on 24 February 1697 at York Buildings, where benefit concerts were also given for him in 1698 and 1701. In 1698 William III awarded him a pension of £100 'in consideration of near 30 years service in the royal family [household] and of his being incapacitated by the gout'. Queen Anne confirmed it on her accession in 1702, and granted £25 on 28 July 1708 to his widow Sybille for the expenses of his funeral.

Unfortunately, only one of Draghi's large-scale works survives. The Song for St Cecilia's Day was the first major choral work written in England in the Italian style, with trumpet parts, massive contrapuntal choruses and florid, extended solos. Its influence can be heard in the anthems and odes Blow and Purcell wrote over the next few years. There are also fine things among Draghi's smaller-scale works. His trio sonata in G minor is the only one written in Restoration England apart from Blow's in A major that can stand comparison with Purcell, while 'Where art thou, God of Dreams' (The Theatre of Music, iii, RISM 1686[3]) from Romulus and Hersilia is a beautifully-conceived italianate recitative and aria using the passacaglia ground bass. Draghi was the most important Restoration keyboard composer after Blow; his suites are similar in style and content to those of Purcell, and are by no means inferior to them.

WORKS

VOCAL

24 Eng. songs, 1683[5], 1684[3], 1684[4], A Duke and no Duke (London, 1685), 1685[5], 1685[6], 1685[7], 1686[3], 1687[3], 1687[4], Quadratum Musicum (London, 1687), 1688[7], 1692[8], Gentleman's Journal (London, 1693), GB-Cfm, for further details see Day-MurrieESB

3 It. songs, 1679[6], Lbl, 1 'altered by Battista Draghi and B.M. Berenclow'

This is the day that the Lord hath made (anthem), lost, mentioned HawkinsH

Song for St Cecilia's Day (From harmony, from heav'nly harmony; J. Dryden), 1687, Chichester, West Sussex Record Office, GB-Lbl (inc.), Lcm, Ob

Bid the spring that's now a coming, song, music lost, text in 1683[6]

Dialogue, lost, mentioned in the text of J. Harris's comedy The City Bride (London, 1696)

Song for Princess Anne's birthday, perf. 24 Feb 1697, lost, see Tilmouth

INSTRUMENTAL

Sonata, g, 2 vn, b, GB-Lbl

Ground, d (The Italian Ground), rec, b, The Delightful Companion (London, 1686), 1695[15], The Second Part of the Division Flute (London, 1708/R), En

Six Select Sutes of Lessons, hpd (London, 1707), ed. in RRMBE, lvi (1986)

46 miscellaneous pieces, kbd, CDp, Cfm, En, Lbl, Ob, Och, US-LAuc, U, Wc, ed. in RRMBE, lvi (1986)

4 miscellaneous pieces, kbd, GB-Lbl, ed. in Price

Piece, kbd, ed. in RRMBE, lvi (1986), no.51, by H. Purcell, z574/6, US-Wc

The Tempest (semi-op, W. Davenant and J. Dryden, after W. Shakespeare, rev. T. Shadwell), 1674, collab. Locke, Humfrey, J. Banister (i), Reggio; dances by Draghi, lost

Inst music for Locke's Psyche, 1675, lost

BIBLIOGRAPHY

AshbeeR, v, viii; BDA; BurneyH; Day-MurrieESB; HawkinsH; SpinkES

E. Brennecke: 'Dryden's Odes and Draghi's Music', Proceedings of the Modern Language Association of America, xlix (1934), 1–36

J. Wilson, ed.: Roger North on Music (London, 1959), 301–2, 348

M. Tilmouth: 'A Calendar of References to Music in Newspapers Published in London and the Provinces (1660–1719)', RMARC, no.1 (1961/R), 1–107, esp. 19, 23, 37; no.2 (1962), 1–15

M. Mabbett: 'Italian Musicians in Restoration England (1660–90)', ML, lxvii (1986), 237–47

P. Holman: Four and Twenty Fiddlers: the Violin at the English Court 1540–1690 (Oxford, 1993, 2/1995)

P. Holman: Henry Purcell (Oxford, 1994)

C. Price: 'Newly Discovered Autograph Keyboard Music of Purcell and Draghi', JRMA, cxx (1995), 77–111

PETER HOLMAN

Dragma (It.). A double-stemmed semibreve. It is found in musical manuscripts of the late medieval period (see J. Wolf: Handbuch der Notationskunde, i, Leipzig, 1913/R, p.329) and mentioned by some theorists (F-Psg 1257, Philippus de Caserta, Anonymus 10 in CoussemakerS, iii, etc.). The term is presumably a theorist's invention, possibly from the Greek drachmē (It. dramma, a small coin, eventually 'dram'). The note may have more than one meaning even within the same composition. Its effect was usually that of reducing a semibreve to a value that could not ordinarily be expressed by a single symbol. In some sources it implies a pause (fermata) or indicates syncopation. The dragma should not be confused with double-stemmed notes in later German keyboard tablatures, where the downward stem indicates chromatic alteration or an ornament (Wolf, ii, 1919/R, p.12).

JOHN MOREHEN

Drăgoi, Sabin V(asile) (b Selişte, Arad district, 6/18 June 1894; d Bucharest, 31 Dec 1968). Romanian composer and ethnomusicologist. From 1918 to 1919 he studied harmony in Iaşi with Zirra; he attended the Dima Conservatory, Cluj (1919–20), as a pupil of Bena (theory) and Hermann Klee (counterpoint), and then studied composition with Novák, conducting with Ostrčil and history with Krupka at the Prague Conservatory (1920–22). After teaching music in Deva from 1922 to 1924, he was lecturer in harmony (1924–42) and director (1925–43) of the Timişoara Conservatory; he then taught harmony and composition at the Cluj Conservatory (1943–5), was rector of the Timişoara Institute of Arts (1949–50) and taught folk music at the Bucharest Conservatory (1950–52). In collaboration with Breazul he wrote a series of school textbooks in which music education was grounded in folksong. Drăgoi himself had been brought up in the country, and he often returned to collect folksongs, publishing several noted collections. Towards the end of his life, as director of the Folklore Institute of Bucharest (1950–64) and a member of the International Folk Music Council (1957–68), he made several analytical studies on the symmetry and harmony of folk music. He was vice-president of the Society of Romanian Composers (1940–45, 1952–60) and became a member of the Romanian Academy in 1955. He was awarded the Enescu Prize (1922, 1928) and the State Prize (1952, 1954).

Peasant music formed the source for a large part of Drăgoi's creative output; at first this consisted largely of choral music (he conducted several choirs in Timişoara during the period 1924–40), but he also composed extensively in other genres. Drăgoi was attracted above all to the most archaic Romanian folk music, the colinde, laments and wedding songs, although he also made use of peasant dances in his fast movements and in the many piano miniatures. His deep roots in folk music enabled him to achieve a rare degree of objectivity in expressing the shared sentiments of the Romanian people. Melody, always formally close to that of peasant models, is of principal importance in his work. A master of the small form, he generally cast his extended works as suites, with little development or variation. His opera Năpasta ('The Plague') was a major contribution to the formation of a Romanian repertory; it is a paradigm of Romanian music in the inter-war period.

WORKS
(selective list)

STAGE AND FILM

Năpasta [The Calamity] (musical drama, 3, Drăgoi, after I.L. Caragiale), 1927, Bucharest, 30 May 1928; rev. 1958, perf. Bucharest, 23 Dec 1961 (Bucharest, 1961)
Constantin Brâncoveanu (musical mystery, S. Tudor, after hymn of St Demetrius the New), 1929, Bucharest, 25 Oct 1935
Kir Ianulea (comic fantasy op, 5 scenes, R. Urlăţianu, after Caragiale), 1937, Cluj, 22 Dec 1939
Horea, 1945 (historical op, 7 scenes, Drăgoi)
Mitrea Cocor, film score, 1952
Păcală, 1956, rev. 1959 (comic op for children, 3, A.S. Drăgoi, after P. Dulfu), Braşov, 6 May 1962 (Bucharest, 1977)

OTHER

Orch: 3 tablouri simfonice, 1922; Divertisment rustic, 1928; Pf Conc., 1941; Rapsodia bănăţeană 'Dorică', 1942; Petrecere populară [Popular Feast], 1950; Concertino, taragot, orch, 1953; 7 dansuri populare, 1960; Suita de la ţară [Country Suite], 1961; Suita lipovană, 1962
Chbr and pf: Suita de dansuri poporale, pf, 1923; 21 cîntece populare, pf, 1923; 24 cîntece populare, pf, 1923; 25 doine, pf, 1923; 8 miniaturi, pf, 1923; Sonata, vn, pf, 1949; Dixtuor, wind, 1955; 50 colinde, pf, 1957; 10 miniaturi, pf, 1960; 12 miniaturi, pf, 1968
Choral: 6 coruri bărbăteşti pe teme populare [6 Male Choruses on Folk Themes], 1926; Liturghia, e, 1926; 11 coruri pentru copii pe teme populare [11 Children's Choruses on Folk Themes], 1935; 30 coruri din comuna Belinţ, 1935; Povestea neamului [The People's Story], 1936; Liturghia solemnă, 1937; Recviem românesc, 1943; Balada celor 4 mineri [The Ballad of the 4 Miners], 1950; Mai multă lumină [More Light] (cant.), 1951; Povestea bradului [The Fir Tree's Story] (orat), 1952; Cununa [The Wreath] (cant.), 1959; Coruri (1955, 1967)

Principal publishers: ESPLA, Jean Feder (Bucharest), Muzicală, Morawetz (Timişoara), Soc. Compozitorilor (Bucharest)

EDITIONS

303 colinde (Craiova, 1930)
122 melodii populare în Valea Almăjului (Bucharest, 1937)
Monografia muzicală a comunei Belinţ (Craiova, 1942)
'20 colinde din comuna Zam-Hunedoara', Revista de folclor, iii (1957), 55–74

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Surlaşiu: Poemul neamului de Sabin V. Drăgoi (Timişoara, 1936)
G. Popa: Viziunea muzicală a lui Sabin Drăgoi [Drăgoi's views on music] (Cluj, 1958)
G. Sbârcea: 'Năpasta' lui Sabin V. Drăgoi (Cluj, 1958)
O.L. Cosma: Opera românească (Bucharest, 1962), 32–50
V. Cosma: 'Sabin Drăgoi', SovM (1964), no.6, pp.122–5
D. Popovici: Muzica corală românească (Bucharest, 1966)
V. Cosma: Muzicieni români: lexicon (Bucharest, 1970), 173–7
N. Rădulescu: Sabin V. Drăgoi (Bucharest, 1971)
Z. Vancea: Creaţia muzicală românească, sec. XIX–XX, ii (Bucharest, 1978)
T. Moisescu, D. Popovici and V. Vasile: 'Centenar Sabin V. Drăgoi', Aradul cultural, no.2 (1994)

VIOREL COSMA

Dragonetti, Domenico (Carlo Maria) ['Il Drago'] (b Venice, 7 April 1763; d London, 16 April 1846). Italian double bass player and composer. A singularly talented musician with a characterful personality and considerable business acumen, he had an extraordinary career. He was also a passionate collector of instruments, music, paintings, snuff-boxes and dolls.

Dragonetti's parents, Pietro Dragonetti and Cattarina Calegari, also had a daughter, Marietta, for whom Domenico provided financial assistance after leaving Venice. Pietro may have been a musician and also a gondolier. Francesco Caffi's biography (1846) is the main source for Dragonetti's Venetian years. It is said that Dragonetti received instruction from Michele Berini, a bassist in the theatres and at S Marco. He practised assiduously, performed to popular acclaim in the streets of Venice, learnt from friendships with Sciarmadori (a shoemaker) and the violinist Nicola Mestrino and was a member of the Arte dei Suonatori. At the age of 24, three years after his first attempt to join the instrumentalists at S Marco, he was accepted as the fifth of five double bass players on 13 September 1787; by December he had become principal. In 1791 the procurators rewarded him for his rejection of offers from abroad with a payment of 310 lire. By autumn 1794, aged 31, Dragonetti could no longer be retained and on 16 September he left Venice for London with a two-year leave of absence, which was later extended by a further three years. Although he returned to Venice in 1799 in order to finalize his resignation, and visited the city again in 1809, the remainder of his life was based in London.

Dragonetti's career in England was remarkable. Not only did he irrevocably challenge and alter the reception and expectations of his instrument but he also carved out for himself a unique position in music-making in Britain which lasted for more than half a century. At a time when orchestral musicians commanded meagre incomes Dragonetti accumulated wealth and security: in June 1846 his balance at Coutts & Co. stood at £1006 12s. 2d. His popularity and skill formed a unique commodity which allowed him to negotiate suitable payment.

In the 1790s he performed his own compositions to widespread recognition. One critic remarked that Dragonetti 'by powers almost magical, invests an instrument, which seems to wage eternal war with melody, "rough as the storm, and as the thunder loud", with all the charms of soft harmonious sounds' (Bath Chronicle, 14 Nov 1799). Between 1808 and 1814 he was abroad, visiting both Vienna and Venice. After 1815 his income was derived mainly from orchestral work, and his appearances in chamber music, which included popular transcriptions of sonatas by Corelli, Handel and Giuseppe Sammartini, as well as original works by his contemporaries, maintained and consolidated his reputation.

Dragonetti's annual diary featured a fluctuating blend of engagements during the London season at the King's Theatre, the Ancient Concerts, the Philharmonic Society and Drury Lane, various subscription series, and benefit, public and private concerts. During the remaining months he was a familiar figure at provincial festivals and in the homes of the aristocracy. His fees were exceptionally high for an instrumentalist: protracted haggling with the Philharmonic Society led on the one hand to his absence from the London première of Beethoven's Symphony no.9 in 1825, and on the other to his status as the highest-paid orchestral player from 1831 to 1842.

As an alien Dragonetti could not own property – he lived in rented accommodation in Westminster – and was denied suffrage. Although he remained a bachelor, there is evidence that he had close female friends, at least in Venice. Among important friends in England were his pupil the 3rd Duke of Leinster, Vincent Novello, John Barnett, Thomas Greatorex, Samuel Wesley, the Cowden Clarkes, Edward Holmes and Cipriani Potter. Haydn, Beethoven, Cherubini and Spohr were among his many associates.

Dragonetti generally used a three-string double bass, and was particularly fond of the Gasparo da Salò instrument (see illustration) which he bequeathed to S Marco. He favoured tuning in 4ths (A′–D–G): writing to Rossini in 1827, he explained that this arrangement provided a strong, even sound and eased the negotiation of the instrument. He imported strings from Padua. His outwardly curved bow (a model popular until the 20th century in England) ensured a punctuating bass line and suited the rhythmic sequential patterns common in his own compositions.

He composed for his own use, and it is his manuscripts (bequeathed to Vincent Novello, who in turn left them to the British Museum in 1849) which display most clearly his facility as a player. The British Library holds 18 volumes of his works (GB-Lbl Add.17726–17833; for a summary of their contents see Palmer, 1997). They include concertos and concerto-like works (including potpourris) with orchestral accompaniment; quintets for solo bass, violin, two violas and 'basso'; a duo for cello and double bass; variations on popular operatic arias for solo double bass; obbligato double bass parts for operatic arias; and multi-movement pieces for double bass and piano. Other works include songs, piano pieces and caprices for violin. Composition provided Dragonetti with the means to demonstrate his virtuosity in the genres popular with his audience. His continuing output was crucial – it allowed him to vindicate his instrument – and he recycled and renamed his works. Both Potter and

Domenico Dragonetti with his three-string double bass: portrait attributed to George Richmond, watercolour, 1830s (collection of the late Rembert Wurlitzer)

Simon Sechter made adaptations and arrangements at his behest.

He died aged 83, basking in the affection of his many friends. The emotional tribute in The Musical World (9 May 1846) declared:

> Dragonetti was not only the greatest performer of his age on the double bass – possessing the finest instinct of true excellence in all that concerns his art – but he had moral qualities of a high order; a benevolent and generous disposition, and an inclination to friendship, which he exercised with judgment and discrimination in men and things.

Dragonetti's personal correspondence for the period 1796–1846 is held at the British Library (Add.17838). Other personal correspondence and papers are held at Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois; and a collection of letters, manuscripts and other documents concerning Dragonetti, compiled by Arthur W. Hill, is also held there (in the Moldenhauer archive).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

V. Novello: 'Orchestral Sketches', Musical World, i (1836), 8–16

F. Caffi: Biografia di Domenico Dragonetti (Venice, 1846); repr. in CaffiS [incl. bibliography to 1984]

'Funeral of Signor Dragonetti', Musical World, xxi (1846), 222–3

H. Phillips: Music and Personal Recollections during Half a Century (London, 1864)

A.C. White: 'The Double Bass', PMA, xiii (1886–7), 98–112

N. Medici di Marignano and R. Hughes, eds.: A Mozart Pilgrimage: Being the Travel Diaries of Vincent and Mary Novello in the Year 1829 (London, 1955/R)

R. Slatford: 'Domenico Dragonetti', PRMA, xcvii (1970–71), 21–8

A. Planyavsky: Geschichte des Kontrabasses (Tutzing, 2/1984)

C. Brown: 'Discovering Bows for the Double Bass', The Strad, ci (1990), 39–45

T. Bauman: 'Musicians in the Marketplace: the Venetian Guild of Instrumentalists in the Later 18th Century', EMc, xix (1991), 345–55

F.M. Palmer: 'Domenico Dragonetti and the Double Bass in London at the Turn of the Eighteenth Century', A Handbook for Studies in English Eighteenth Century Music, iv, ed. M. Burden and I. Cholij (Edinburgh, 1993), 35–57

F.M. Palmer: Domenico Dragonetti in England (1794–1846): the Career of a Double Bass Virtuoso (Oxford, 1997) [incl. list of MS sources]

FIONA M. PALMER

Dragoni [Draconi], Giovanni Andrea (b Meldola, nr Forlì, *c*1540; d Rome, Dec 1598). Italian composer. He spent most of his working life in Rome. That he studied with Palestrina can be established from the dedication of his first madrigal book of 1575, in which he paid tribute to his former teacher. From June 1576 until his death he was maestro di cappella at S Giovanni in Laterano. Except for a posthumously published book of motets his sacred output was primarily in the Lateran manuscripts, many of which have been lost. A list in manuscript 58, a collection of lamentations by Annibale Stabile and Dragoni, records those manuscripts that once formed the central core of the music archive. Among the volumes mentioned is an autograph collection of Magnificat settings by Dragoni. On f.69 of the Liber Introi. et Exit. Capp. Ann. 1582 is recorded a payment of 77 scudi in January of that year to 'Gio. Andrea' for the copying of six books of motets, five of which appear to have been lost. In addition to his duties at S Giovanni in Laterano, Dragoni was appointed by Cardinal del Monte, after Palestrina's death in 1594, to a commission charged with appraising the work already done on the revision of the liturgical chant.

In his early works clarity of declamation and the avoidance of extensive word-painting seem to have been Dragoni's chief artistic concerns. In this respect he showed himself a true student of the style of Palestrina. His later secular works, however, show the impact of Marenzio's motivic style of counterpoint and reflect the contemporary trend towards melodic concentration in the upper parts with the resultant polarity between soprano and bass. The two sections that he contributed to the Missa Cantantibus organis Caecilia, a collaborative setting by the maestri di cappella of the major Roman chapels during the last decade of the 16th century, use the increasingly fashionable polychoral style.

WORKS

all published in Venice

Il primo libro de madrigali, 5vv (1575)
Il secondo libro de madrigali, 5vv (1575)
Il terzo libro de madrigali, 5vv (1579)
Il primo libro de madrigali, 4vv (1581)
Il primo libro de madrigali, 6vv (1584)
Il primo libro delle villanelle, 5vv (1588[22])
Il quarto libro de madrigali, 5vv (1594) [incl. 1 madrigal by Palestrina]
11 madrigals, 4, 5vv, 1574[4], 1582[4], 1583[11], 1585[7], 1585[29], 1586[9], 1589[7], 1590[15], 1591[12], 1598[8]
2 spiritual canzonettas, 3vv, 1585[7], 1599[6]
1 latin contrafactum, 5vv, 1609[14]
2 lute intabulations, 1584[15], 1599[19]
24 motets, 1600[4]; 12 ed. R. Casimiri, Anthologia polyphonica auctorum saeculi XVI, ii (Rome, 1939)
Missa Cantantibus organis Caecilia, 12vv, I-Rvat [collab. other composers]; ed. R. Casimiri, Monumenta polyphoniae italicae, i (Rome, 1930)
Further sacred and secular works: D-Mbs, MÜu, I-Bc, Rsg, PL-Wu

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Molitor: Die nach-tridentinische Choral-Reform zu Rom, ii (Leipzig, 1902), 12, 21, 24–5, 45ff, 53–4, 57ff
R. Casimiri: Il 'Codice 59' dell'Archivio musicale lateranense: autografo di Giov. Pierluigi da Palestrina (Rome, 1919)
P.A. Myers: An Analytical Study of the Italian Cyclic Madrigals Published by Composers Working in Rome ca.1540–1614 (diss., U. of Illinois, 1971), 135ff, 180ff, 211ff

PATRICIA ANN MYERS

Dragostinov, Stefan (b Sofia, 11 April 1948). Bulgarian composer. From 1967 to 1970 he studied composition and the piano at the Sofia State Academy of Music; he continued his composition studies at the Leningrad Conservatory (1970–72) under Arapov. In 1982 he was awarded a fellowship to study in Cologne. From 1974 until 1994 he was conductor of the Philip Kutev state folksong and dance ensemble. Among the composition prizes he has been awarded are: first prize at the Gaudeamus International Competition for his canta Panair ('The Fair'); first prize at the Karlheinz Stockhausen Competition for Polytempi IV; second prize at the Simon Bolivar Competition in Venezuela for his Symphonie-Monument and the Arthur Honegger Award of the Fondation de France for his Polytempi III.

Dragostinov composes in a variety of genres from arrangements of folksongs to complex instrumental works. His style embraces integral serialism and has a theoretical basis that stems from wishing to explore the relationship between musical space and time. Within this framework principles of total organization are combined with elements drawn from modal, folk and other influences. His highly complex, metrical form of organization is a result of his collaboration with an engineer who created for him a device known as a Photopolymetronome. Using this apparatus the composer has devised a method, controlled 'polytempia', which he regards as the ultimate means of serializing sound, articulation, dynamics and tempo. His music shows a certain kinship to that of Elliott Carter and Stockhausen.

WORKS

(selective list)

Inst: Sinfonia piccola no.1, wind qnt, 1971; Sym. no.1 'Requiem', 1972; Poema, ballet, 1975; Sonata, vc, 1975; Sym. no.3, 1976; Sym. no.4, 1978; Music for Pf and Orch (Polytempi IV),1980; Symphonie-Monument, 1982; B Cl Conc., 1984
Choral: Panair [The Fair] (Polytempi I) (cant.), 1978; Polytempi III (cant.), 1980; 5 strofi po Leonardo [5 Verses after Leonardo] (cant.), chorus, orch, 1980; Simfonia za sveta [Sym. for the World], solo vv, chorus orch, 1985
Solo vocal: Apothegmi, 1v, fls, perc, 1971; Vodi [Waters], song cycle, 1973; Zemia [Earth], song cycle, 1974

Principal publishers: Ricordi, Victor

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Petrova: 'Postmoderni tendentsii v Bozhidar Spasov i Stefan Dragostinov v kraya na 70-te godini' [Postmodern tendencies in the works of Spasov and Dragostinov at the end of the 1970s], Balgarsko muzikoznanie, xvii/2 (1993), 67–80
B. Spasov: 'Traditionen in neuem Sinnzusammenhang: über einige Besonderheiten des kompositorischen Schaffens in der modernen bulgarischen Musik', MusikTexte, no.19 (1987), 34–6

ANNA LEVY, GREGORY MYERS

Dragoumis, Markos [Marc] (b Athens, 18 Dec 1934). Greek musicologist. He studied the piano at the Athens Conservatory and with Papaioannou at the Hellenic Conservatory where he graduated in 1962. He also studied Byzantine music privately with Simon Karas and at the Piraeus Odeon, where he graduated in 1961. From 1962 to 1964 he continued his Byzantine studies under Egon Wellesz at Lincoln College, Oxford. In 1960 he began working on Greek ethnomusicology at the Melpo Merlier Centre for Greek Folk Music Studies, where he later supervised a number of recordings of Greek folksongs (1980–97); from 1970 he has been professor of music history at the Athens Conservatory. Dragoumis has been chiefly occupied with modern Greek folk music, and Byzantine and neo-Byzantine ecclesiastical chant; in several of his publications he has attempted to show the interrelationship of these traditions. In 1991 he received an award from the Academy of Athens for his contributions to scholarship in Greek music.

WRITINGS

'The Survival of Byzantine Chant in the Monophonic Music of the Modern Greek Church', Studies in Eastern Chant, i (London, 1966), 9–36
'Ena prōtoporō kentro erevnis tēs dēmotikēs mas mousikēs' [A pioneering centre of research in Greek folk music], Technē, iv (1970), 5–15
'Some Remarks on the Traditional Music of the Greeks of Corsica', Studies in Eastern Chant, ii, ed. M. Velimirović (London, 1971), 28–34
'A Contribution to the Study of the Interpretation of Late Byzantine Notation', IMSCR XI: Copenhagen 1972, 751–7
'Ta eidē, oi morphes kai to uphos tēs dēmotikēs mas mousikēs' [The species, the shapes and the style of our demotic music], Chroniko, iv (1973), 266–75
Hellēnikē paradosiakē mousikē [Greek traditional music] (Athens, 1974)
'The Music of the Rebtes', Rebetika, ed. K. Butterworth and others (Athens, 1975), 16–25, 150–57
'Notre musique religieuse, de tendances occidentales, en Crête et dans les îles Ioniennes', Laographia, xxxi (1978), 272–93
'Some Remarks on the Modal Structure of the Eight Anastasima Apolytika as Sung on the Island of Zante', Apopsis, v (1989), 177–90
'Constantine A. Psachos (1869–1949): a Contribution to the Study of his Life and Work', Studies in Eastern Chant, v (1991), 77–88
Mia mousiki apostoli sti Samothraki to 1961 [A Musical Expedition to Samothrace in 1961] (Thessaloniki, 1991)

Ogdonda pende dimotikes melodies ap to katalipa tou Nikolaou Phardy [Eighty-Five Folksongs from the Manuscripts of Nicolaos Phardis] (Athens, 1991)
'An Anthology of Pachtikos: a Reevaluation', Apopsis, vi (1992), 511–24
'An Unknown Melody for the "Anarchos Theos" in a Seventeenth-Century Hirmologion from Mount Athos', RdMc, xvi (1993), 1712–22
'Berlioz's Cantatas for the "Grand Prix de Rome"', Apopsis, vii (1995), 562–7
'Depression and Great Composers', Mousikologia, ix (1997), 185–90

DIMITRI CONOMOS

Dragutinović, Branko (b Belgrade, 31 March 1903; d 25 Dec 1971). Serbian critic and writer on music. He studied at the Stanković Music School and with Milojević at the Belgrade Faculty of Philosophy. He taught music in a secondary school and was the choirmaster of the Obilić Academic Singer Society (1925–38). He worked at the Belgrade Opera as secretary (1938–40) and dramaturg (from 1950) and at the Belgrade Academy of Music as secretary and assistant professor (1945–50). A writer of broad intellect, he was of the generation that sought to popularize Serbian music among its citizens. He was one of the foremost critics in Belgrade for almost half a century. His criticism appeared in journals such as Letopis Matice srpske, Zvuk, Kulturni život and Pravda and he contributed an article on the history of Serbian opera and ballet to Jedan vek Narodnog pozorista u Beogradu, 1868–1968 [100 years of the National Theatre, Belgrade] (Belgrade, 1968).

ROKSANDA PEJOVIĆ

Drake, Alfred [Capurro, Alfredo] (b New York, 7 Oct 1914; d New York, 25 July 1992). American actor, singer, director and writer. One of the most versatile dramatic performers, Drake garnered numerous accolades for his performances in opera, musical theatre and legitimate stage roles. He began his Broadway career in 1935 in the chorus of several Gilbert and Sullivan operettas. His numerous Broadway roles included Marshall Blackstone and the High Priest in Babes in Arms (1937), Curly McLain in Oklahoma! (1943), Larry Foreman in The Cradle Will Rock (1947 revival), Fred Graham and Petruchio in Kiss Me, Kate (1948), and Hajj in Kismet (1953). He received the Variety New York Drama Critics Poll Award for Oklahoma!, the Donaldson award for Kiss Me, Kate, and the Variety New York Drama Critics Poll award, the Donaldson award and a Tony award for Kismet. Drake also starred in numerous American Shakespeare Festival productions and directed several plays. He also appeared on television and made numerous recordings of musical theatre works. He was known for the arresting, dramatic quality of his voice. His wide-ranging baritone and powerful, resonant sound necessitated the portrayal of strong and dominant characters.

WILLIAM A. EVERETT, LEE SNOOK

Drake, Erik (b Föllingsö, Östergötland, 8 Jan 1788; d Stockholm, 9 June 1870). Swedish composer and teacher. He studied at the University of Uppsala from 1804 to 1808, and subsequently worked there for two years as an amanuensis at the observatory. Later he passed an examination in law and entered government service, but he soon retired to his estate at Föllingsö where he devoted himself to the study of folklore and folk music, partly in close collaboration with Rääf. Of great importance to his development as a musician was his friendship with the composer Joachim Nicolas Eggert. In 1822 he was elected a member of the Swedish Royal Academy of Music; he became its inspector of education in 1834, its secretary in 1841 and its librarian in 1849. He taught theory at the conservatory (1826–59) and was promoted to professor in 1830; during his last years at the conservatory he wrote a number of pedagogical works. Owing to failing eyesight he retired in 1860; he was blind for his last eight years.

Drake was a skilled composer, whose works show the influences of the Viennese Classicists. He was especially important as a theorist and teacher, his pupils numbering about 2000; his Elementar-cours i Harmonie-läran (1839–40) was widely used. Among his translations of works from the German were C. Gollmick's Kritische Terminologie (1842) and C.H. Zöllner's Orgel-Schule (Stockholm, 1842). He also arranged the melodies in several collections of folksongs, including A.I. Arwidsson's Svenska fornsånger (1834–42) and A.A. Afzelius's Afsked af swenska folksharpan (1848), and with P.A. Sondén he edited Musik till Valda skrifter af C.M. Bellman (1837).

WORKS

Berggubben (op), 1817 or 1818, lost
Sappho (melodrama, G.A. Silverstolpe), 1v, chorus, orch, 1813
Works for unacc. chorus
*c*30 solo songs, incl. Siö-Quinnan, ballad (P.D.A. Atterbom), 1815; Blommorna [The Flowers], cycle of 12 songs (Atterbom), 1819–20
2 str qts; Vn sonata, 1816 [vn part lost]; Rondoletto, pf 4 hands; other pf pieces

BIBLIOGRAPHY

SBL (Å. Vretblad)
M. Tegen: 'Erik Drake', STMf, xxv (1943), 124–57 [with complete list of works]

KATHLEEN DALE/AXEL HELMER

Drake, William (b Baltimore, MD, 2 Oct 1943). English organ builder. After serving an apprenticeship in Austria with Rieger from 1963 to 1966 and a term as a journeyman in Germany he qualified as a master organ builder at Stuttgart and founded his firm at Buckfastleigh, Devon, in 1974. The work of the firm is historically informed, based primarily on the experience of researching, renovating and reconstructing English organs of the 18th and early 19th centuries. Among the renovations, carried out to European standards of conservation, are the Richard Seede organ (1780s) at Lulworth Castle Chapel, Dorset (1986–9), the 1847 Joseph Walker organ at St Olave's, Exeter (1985), the 1861 Henry Willis organ at St Mary's Priory Church, Totnes, Devon (1988) and the Lincoln instrument, originally in the Royal Pavilion, Brighton (*c*1820), now in the Ballroom, Buckingham Palace (1999). Many of Drake's new instruments reflect the actions, stop nomenclatures, tonal style, temperaments, casework and console furnishing of their period models. The two-manual instrument for the 1732 Abraham Jordan case at the Grosvenor Chapel, Mayfair, London, completed in 1991, and the entirely new organs for Jesus College Chapel, Oxford (1993) and the Palace of Westminster (1999), illustrate this approach. Other new instruments incorporate facilities to serve the needs of historically informed performance practice. These include Tierce and Quint Octave alternatives in mixture stops (St Elizabeth's Episcopal Church, Sudbury, Massachusetts, 1989), and transposition facilities in continuo organs.

WRITINGS

with Mark Lindley: 'The Grosvenor Chapel and the 18th-Century English Organ', JBIOS, xv (1991), 90–117

'Lulworth Castle Chapel Organ: the Reconstruction of the Organ', JBIOS, xvi (1992), 60–66
'Some Thoughts on Unbushed Key Actions', The Organbuilder, xii (1994), 12–13

CHRISTOPHER KENT

Drama per musica. See DRAMMA PER MUSICA.

Dramatic opera. See SEMI-OPERA.

Drame lyrique (Fr.: 'lyric drama'). In the late 18th and early 19th centuries the term designated an opéra or, more often, an opéra comique similar in subject and tone to the contemporary spoken drame. Unlike the tragédie, whose plots were generally drawn from classical history and mythology and whose leading characters were upper-class, drames had modern, usually European settings and featured among the cast bourgeois imbued with a Rousseau-like sensibilité. The tone, more serious than that of the comédie and related forms, was also strongly moralizing. Most drames revolved around a virtuous person threatened by a loss of wealth or social position or even life, and swift changes in fortune and melodramatic scenes were common. The earliest important example at the Comédie-Italienne was Monsigny's Le déserteur (libretto by Sedaine, 1769). The drame lyrique also permitted an extension of the theatre's repertory by the introduction of historical or pseudo-historical subjects as, for example, in J.-P.-G. Martini's Henri IV (1774). During the Revolution the number of drames lyriques greatly increased: Grétry, Le Sueur and Méhul wrote striking works in the genre. The term was rarer at the Opéra during this period; the principles of the drama lyrique, however, permeated works called 'opéra' or 'tragédie lyrique'. With the Consulate the Opéra-Comique turned to lighter fare, and drames lyriques gradually disappeared there, while at the Opéra the interest in European or modern historical subjects continued.

In the late 19th and early 20th centuries 'drame lyrique' was applied to French operas influenced by the aesthetic ideals of Wagner (whose own works were usually termed 'drame musical' in French translation). They featured a continuous action, a prominent, symphonically treated orchestral part and a rich harmonic vocabulary. Some composers experimented with obvious Wagnerian devices, such as leitmotif, but more important for the essence of French drame lyrique was the avoidance of the pomp of grand opéra in favour of an intense psychological study. Massenet's Werther (1892), Bruneau's Messidor (1897), Chabrier's Briséïs (1899, incomplete) and Saint-Saëns' Déjanire (1911), among others, were called 'drame lyrique', but scholars often extend the term to similar works designated by the more neutral 'opéra'.

See OPERA, §IV, 3(ii).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG2 (H. Schreider)
P.J.B. Nougaret: De l'art du théâtre (Paris, 1769)
B.F. de Rosoi: Dissertation sur le drame lyrique (The Hague and Paris, 1775 [1776])
E. Schuré: Le drame musical (Paris, 1875, 4/1930)
A. Bruneau: Musiques d'hier et de demain (Paris, 1900)
F.A. Gaiffe: Le drame en France au XVIIIe siècle (Paris, 1910)
O. Séré [J. Poueigh]: Musiciens français d'aujourd'hui (Paris, 1911, 8/1921)
V. d'Indy: Richard Wagner et son influence sur l'art musical français (Paris, 1930)
S. Wolff: L'Opéra au Palais Garnier, 1875–1962 (Paris, 1963)
J.B. Kopp: The Drame Lyrique: a Study in Esthetics of Opéra-Comique, 1762–1791 (diss., U. of Pennsylvania, 1982)
H. Geyer-Kiefl: Die heroïsch-komische Opera, ca. 1770-1820 (Tutzing, 1987)
F. Labussek: Zur Entwicklung des französischen Opernlibrettos im 19. Jahrhundert: Stationen des ästhetischen Wandels (Frankfurt, 1994)
H. Lacombe: Les voies de l'opéra français au XIXe siècle (Paris, 1997)
J.F. Fulcher: French Cultural Politics and Music from the Dreyfus Affair to the First World War (New York, 1999)
S. Huebner: French Opera at the fin de Siècle: Wagnerism, Nationalism and Style (Oxford, 1999)
D. Charlton: French Opera, 1730–1830: Meaning and Media (Aldershot, 2000)

M. ELIZABETH C. BARTLET

Dramma giocoso (It.: 'jocular drama'). Term used on Italian librettos in the second half of the 18th century to designate a comic opera. It was used as early as 1695, by G.C. Villifranchi (preface to L'ipocondriaco), and became established as a descriptive term when regularly used, from 1748 onwards, by CARLO GOLDONI. Its common use was for the type of libretto favoured by Goldoni and his followers in which character-types from serious opera (parti serie) appeared alongside the standard peasants, servants, elderly buffoons and others traditional to comic opera (parti buffe), often with intermediate characters (in mezzo carattere). Notable early examples are Goldoni's Il filosofo di campagna (set by Galuppi in 1754) and La buona figliuola (set by Egidio Duni in 1756 and by Niccolò Piccinni in 1760); Haydn set three Goldoni dramma giocoso texts, Il mondo della luna, Le pescatrici and Lo speziale. It is however unlikely that the dramma giocoso was considered a distinct musical genre, or indeed a musical genre at all, at the time. Certainly it was used interchangeably with other genre descriptions; Mozart's Don Giovanni, for example, is described on the libretto as a dramma giocoso and on the score as an opera buffa. There is reason to think that librettists favoured the term for their texts but that composers more often thought of their comic works simply as opere buffe.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. Heartz: 'Goldoni, Don Giovanni and the Dramma Giocoso', MT, cxx (1979), 993–8; repr. in Mozart's Operas (Berkeley, 1990), 195–205
D.N. Marinelli: Carlo Goldoni as Experimental Librettist: the Drammi giocosi of 1750 (diss., Rutgers U., 1988)
T. Emery: Goldoni as Librettist: Theatrical Reform and the Drammi giocosi per musica (New York, 1991)

□

Dramma [drama] per musica (It.: 'play for music'). A phrase found on the title-page of many Italian librettos; it refers to a text expressly written to be set by a composer (e.g. L'Erismena, drama per musica di Aurelio Aureli, Favola Seconda dedicata all'illustriss. Signor Giacomo Cavalli … M DC LV), and by extension also to the composition. The term was commonly used for serious Italian opera in the 18th century, and is in effect interchangeable with the primarily modern term opera seria. Variants such as dramma in musica (referring to the setting rather than to the verbal text) or dramma musicale are also found. Some later writers have misinterpreted the term in the sense 'drama through music' and applied it to musico-dramatic effects achieved by the composer.

Draper, Charles (b Odcombe, Somerset, 23 Oct 1869; d Surbiton, 21 Oct 1952). English clarinettist. He was brought up by his eldest brother Paul after the early death of their father Samuel, a cellist. His brother gave him his first clarinet lessons and in 1888 sent him to study with Henry Lazarus. After winning an open scholarship to the RCM, he continued with Lazarus until the latter retired, and then spent a year with Julian Egerton. The playing of Manuel Gomez inspired him to change from simple- to Boehm-system clarinets. His tone on these was rich, his tonguing brilliant and his phrases always beautifully shaped. Draper made more gramophone records at this early period than any other clarinettist, and his later recordings of Brahms (including the Clarinet Quintet with the Léner Quartet) are considered masterpieces.

Draper joined the Crystal Palace Orchestra in 1895. He played in Queen Victoria's private band, and had long associations with the Leeds and Three Choirs Festival orchestras, and also with the Philharmonic Society. He gave the first performance of Stanford's Clarinet Concerto in 1903 with the Bournemouth Municipal Orchestra. Stanford dedicated his Clarinet Sonata to Draper and Oscar Street (a talented amateur clarinettist). In 1905 Draper, with John Saunders and Eli Hudson, founded the New SO. Draper was a magnificent teacher and through his pupils (the most notable was Frederick Thurston) had a profound influence on English clarinet style. He taught at the GSM from 1895 to 1940, as well as at Trinity College and the RCM. His son Paul Beaumont Draper (1898–1971) was a distinguished bassoonist.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Weston: 'Charles Draper: the Grandfather of English Clarinettists', Music Teacher, xlviii/10 (1969), 13–14
P. Weston: Clarinet Virtuosi of the Past (London, 1971), 264–71
P. Weston: More Clarinet Virtuosi of the Past (London, 1977), 87–8

PAMELA WESTON

Draper, Haydn (Paul) (b Penarth, Glam., 21 Jan 1889; d London, 1 Nov 1934). English clarinettist, nephew of CHARLES DRAPER. Trained by his father Paul, he had already won prizes and played professionally when he gained an open scholarship to the RCM in 1908. Here he studied with Julian Egerton and with his uncle. Draper became first clarinet in the Queen's Hall Orchestra, and solo clarinet for the BBC Military Band, where his extraordinary virtuosity won admiration. He was a member of the London Wind Quintet, and made many fine solo recordings. From 1923 he taught at the RAM, where his pupils included Reginald Kell.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Weston: Clarinet Virtuosi of the Past (London, 1971), 268–70
P. Weston: More Clarinet Virtuosi of the Past (London, 1977), 88–9

PAMELA WESTON

Drassdorf, Heinrich. See TRAXDORF, HEINRICH.

Draudius [Draud, Draut], Georg (b Dauernheim, Hesse, 9 Jan 1573; d Butzbach, Hesse, ?1635). German scholar and bibliographer. After studying theology at Marburg, he was an editor for Nicolaus Bassé's publishing house, first in Frankfurt (1590–91) and later in Herborn. From 1592 to 1599 he worked for the Verlag-Sigmund-Feyerabend-Erben, in Frankfurt. He subsequently worked as a parish minister in Hesse, at Gross-Karben in der Wetterau (1599–1614) and Ortenberg (1614–25) and finally, as his father's successor, at Dauernheim (1625–35). Because of the Thirty Years War he left for Butzbach in 1635.

In his own day he was best known for his numerous theological tracts and writings on Aristotelian philosophy, but his importance for musicologists now lies in his bibliographies. These maintain the tradition of Frankfurt book fair and dealers' catalogues, whose purpose was to list all books currently available in the city. Draudius's sections on music are, however, much more extensive than those in earlier publications, though his citations are often unreliable. This is largely because of his sources of information which made him inconsistent about giving the publisher (the name of the Frankfurt dealer is sometimes substituted) and the date of publication, and led him to include ghosts and volumes listed under incorrect titles. His practice of abbreviating titles and, in the Bibliotheca classica, translating them into Latin lessens the value of his work. Nevertheless, his three huge bibliographies remain valuable sources of information about editions now lost and about the nature and extent of the international book trade based in Frankfurt, the most important centre for northern Europe.

WRITINGS

only those on music; all published in Frankfurt

Bibliotheca exotica, sive Catalogus officinalis librorum peregrinis linguis usualibus scriptorum . . . depuis l'an 1500 (1610, enlarged 2/1625)
Bibliotheca classica, sive Catalogus officinalis in quo singuli singularum facultatum ac professionum libri (1611, enlarged 2/1625)
Bibliotheca librorum germanicorum classica, das ist Verzeichnuss aller und jeder Bücher so fast bey dencklichen Jaren in teutscher Spraach . . . in Truck aussgegangen (1611, enlarged 2/1625); facs. extracts in Ameln

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F.W. Strieder: Grundlage zu einer hessischen Gelehrten- und Schriftsteller-Geschichte, iii (Göttingen, 1783), 213–21
K. Ameln, ed.: Verzeichnisse deutscher musikalischer Bücher 1611 und 1625 (Bonn, 1957) [incl. facs. of the sections on music from Bibliotheca librorum germanicorum classica, with introduction]
A. Taylor: Book Catalogues: their Varieties and Uses (Chicago, 1957, rev. 2/1987 by W.P. Barlow)
R. Blum: 'Vor- und Frühgeschichte der nationalen Allgemeinbibliographie', Archiv für Geschichte des Buchwesens, ii (1958), 233–303
A. Taylor: General Subject-Indexes since 1548 (Philadelphia, 1966)
D. Krummel: Bibliotheca Bolduaniana: a Renaissance Music Bibliography (Detroit, 1972)

M. ELIZABETH C. BARTLET

Drawn sound (Fr. son dessiné; Ger. graphische Tonerzeugung; It. suono disegnato). Sound that is created (or controlled) from graphic markings made directly onto film, or onto paper or cards, photographic images of which are assembled on film; these markings are played back using a film projector and a conventional sound system. The various approaches to drawn sound have included the construction of special electronic instruments based on similar principles.

1. History. 2. Techniques. 3. Drawn sound instruments.

1. HISTORY. Films with integral 'optical' soundtracks were introduced, in several countries, between 1927 and 1929, after nearly ten years of development; the fact that the sounds of music and speech were reproduced directly from outlines that could be seen on the soundtrack inspired a number of film makers (mostly animators) and composers to explore the creative possibilities of 'visible' sound. The earliest experiments in drawn sound took place at about the same time as film makers, especially in the Soviet Union, were starting to investigate the possibilities of sound collage. In Leningrad in 1929 ARSENY MIKHAYLOVICH AVRAAMOV and Yevgeny Sholpo drew directly onto film with a pin dipped in Indian ink. Finding this work too intricate (the width of an optical soundtrack is between 1·93 and 2·5 mm, depending on the system used), they turned to different methods, Avraamov working in Moscow and Sholpo in Leningrad. By photographing individual drawings Avraamov produced the first drawn film soundtracks in 1930 for the films Plan velikikh rabot ('Plan of great works') and Kem bit' ('Who to be'), followed by Gibel' sensatsii ('The end of a sensation') in 1931; later he used the technique to recreate the microtonal inflections of the traditional music that he had collected in various parts of the Soviet Union. In 1932–3 he directed a special drawn sound laboratory in Moscow, the Laboratoriya Risovannogo Zvuka. Sholpo's first independent project was to produce melodies assembled note by note from recordings of conventional instruments; he then explored a similar approach to that of Avraamov, which led him to develop his Variafon (a photoelectric composition machine) in 1932. Drawn sound was also used for part of the soundtrack of Romance sentimentale (1930), a short film made during a visit to Paris by two Russian film directors, Grigory Aleksandrov and Sergey Ėyzenshteyn [Eisenstein], neither of whom pursued the technique further. Other work carried out in the USSR in the early 1930s was done by the film animators Ivanov, Nikolay V. Voinov and Sazonov under the group name Ivvoston around 1933, and by N.Y. Zhelinsky; they were primarily concerned with realizing well-known pieces of music synthetically.

In Europe drawn sound experiments were made by the leading silent-film composer Edmund Meisel before his early death in 1929. Oskar Fischinger (1900–67), working at the Bauhaus in Dessau, experimented with hand-drawn sound in 1931 (only a demonstration film resulted); further work was done at the Bauhaus around 1932 by the composer Paul Arma. Perhaps as early as 1929 the Swiss Rudolf Pfenninger began work on similar lines in Munich, making a demonstration film Tönende Handschrift ('Sonorous handwriting') in 1932 and soundtracks for puppet and cartoon films soon afterwards. Also in 1932 Fischinger's former colleague at the Bauhaus, László Moholy-Nagy (1895–1946), made Tönendes ABC (now lost) in Berlin, in which the shapes drawn on the soundtrack were also shown as the visual element of the film. The Australian musician and film editor Jack Ellitt, working in London, experimented with drawing directly on film from around 1932. In 1933 Arthur Honegger and Arthur Hoerée included drawn sound in their film score Rapt, and Hoerée subsequently continued this work, calling it 'zaponage' (retouching).

In the USA Ub Iwerks (1901–71), one of Walt Disney's leading animators, used the medium for certain sound effects in a cartoon film, The Village Barber, which he made independently of Disney in 1930. The film director Rouben Mamoulian included a brief passage of drawn synthetic high and low frequencies in Dr Jekyll and Mr Hyde (1932). The best-known practitioner of drawn sound, the Canadian animator Norman McLaren, had his first drawn soundtrack – for his film Book Bargain in 1937 – turned down by his employers, the GPO Film Unit in London. In 1939–40 he worked in New York, where he made three short films with hand-drawn images and sound, and Rumba, which consisted of a soundtrack only. He then joined the National Film Board of Canada (NFBC) in Ottawa (from 1956 in Montreal), where he produced many award-winning films, some with drawn sound, including Synchromy (1971), in which the images are based on the patterns of the soundtrack. A single drawn sound of the notes of the overtone series, which produce a phantom fundamental, is featured in the score by Bernard Herrmann (1911–75) for The Devil and Daniel Webster (1941). In Hollywood from 1940 the brothers John and James Whitney carried out experimental work with a specially constructed system of 12 linked pendulums, which delineated waveforms that could be filmed; they used the system to create the soundtracks of their series of films, Five Film Exercises (1943–4).

After World War II McLaren was the major figure and influence in this area. Two NFBC staff composers who frequently collaborated with him, Maurice Blackburn (1914–88) and Eldon Rathburn (b 1916), each created drawn sound as part of a score for a McLaren film (Blackburn also used it in two other films), and a younger French-Canadian film maker at the NFBC, Pierre Hébert (b 1944), began to use the medium in 1966. The Italian film maker Cioni Carpi included hand-drawn sound in two short films which he made in Canada in 1960–61, and in Paris the composer Robert Cambier used it for several film scores from 1957. The Austrian film maker Kurt Kren used drawn sound in two films in the late 1950s, beginning with Versuch mit synthetischem Ton (1957).

Since the 1960s comparatively little use has been made of the technique, possibly because magnetic tape and the synthesizer offered increasingly flexible and sophisticated facilities. In Soundtrack (1970), by the American Barry Spinello, some of the images are identical with the hand-drawn soundtrack, and part of the soundtrack is created from fragments of patterned transparent self-adhesive plastic; during 1967–71 he also made Sonata for Pen, Brush and Ruler and Six Loop-Painting. Similar derivations of optical images from the soundtrack include Lis Rhodes's Lightmusic (1974), Pierre Rovère's Black and Light (1975) and Robert Russett's Primary Stimulus (1979). A reversal of this process is the production of a soundtrack from visual images, treating them as if they were drawn sound; this possibility was explored in Tony Conrad's Articulation of Boolean Algebra for Film Opticals (1974) and in two films made by Guy Sherwin in 1977, Musical Stairs and Speed and Sound, in which the soundtracks were created from the images of a flight of exterior metal steps and the changing pattern of railway lines filmed on a train journey.

2. Techniques. The images that appear on an optical film soundtrack are created by photographing a beam of light that is modulated by sound-waves. The soundtrack is played back by reversing the process: sound-waves are produced by the variations in the amount of light passing through the track and striking a photoelectric cell in the film projector. The two basic methods of recording sound optically on film employ respectively an image of variable area or width, and one of variable density. In the first the sound appears as a continuous irregular line forming the boundary between the areas of dark emulsion and transparent film, or as a double-edged symmetrical section defined by two such lines in the centre of the dark strip. In the second, which is less frequently used, the degree of shade affects the amount of light that reaches the photoelectric cell.

The exponents of drawn sound experimented with both these methods of recording sound on film. The variable area technique was often applied using not a continuous line but isolated images: Moholy-Nagy, Fischinger and Avraamov used geometric shapes (Avraamov restricted himself to triangles only); Moholy-Nagy also experimented with letters of the alphabet, facial profiles and fingerprints, and Avraamov with facial profiles; and McLaren and Spinello explored the use of repeated patterns of closely drawn lines or dots (fig.1). A few people have drawn directly onto that section of the filmstock on which the soundtrack is recorded, but since the maximum width of the track is 2·5 mm this process was explored mainly by animators such as McLaren who also drew the images for some of their films directly onto the stock. The same idea was essayed briefly by Avraamov and Sholpo in 1929, by Ellitt around 1932 and by Spinello from 1967. In most cases drawings made on paper or cards are photographed, often individually, and the images transferred frame by frame (as with cartoon animation) onto the filmstock to produce continuous

1. Three frames from Norman McLaren's film 'Loops' (1940); the sound is drawn on the narrow band of film to the right of the visual images sounds; normally the whole width of 35 mm film is used for the first stage of this process. Some experimenters assembled a whole library of sound-wave patterns on individual cards, each of which produces a semitone step in a wide range of pitch, with a set of cards for each timbre and sometimes additional cards for microtonal steps and glissandos, as well as masks to determine the dynamic level. Voinov created a card system of this type which had a range of 87 notes. Working on the basis of a technique devised by Pfenninger, McLaren used cards on which a basic sound-wave pattern measuring 30·5 by 5 cm, was repeated between four and 128 times to produce a range of five octaves, a sixth being obtainable by filming at double speed; 24 degrees of volume were possible. Pfenninger's card library had a similarly large pitch range and included speech waveforms.

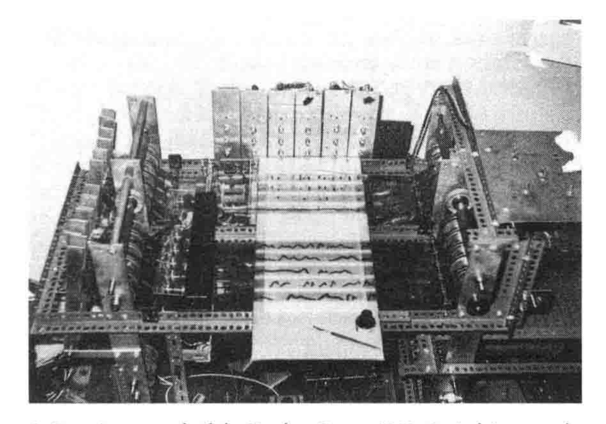
Variable density techniques were used primarily in the USSR by the early experimenters with the Shorin system, and by McLaren in his New York films (1939–40). McLaren refined this system by adding elements of variable area techniques such as a repeated shaped outline at one edge, and patterns of closely drawn lines, lighter in shade than their surroundings.

Some of the variables in filming a drawn soundtrack include the distance of the camera from the image, the camera speed, the exposure time and the possibility of superimposing different layers by means of multiple exposures; as an alternative to multiple exposures, parallel layers may be recorded by subdividing the width of the soundtrack into two or more separate channels, or an intermediate mixing stage may be used. These technical procedures may affect pitch, volume and timbre, depending on whether the system is one of variable area or variable density.

3. Drawn sound instruments. A number of musical instruments have been invented in which drawn sound and related techniques either generate notes or control their characteristics, but none has been manufactured commercially. In some cases inventors devised special machines or techniques for drawing sound. The first three of Sholpo's four Variafons, constructed between 1932 and 1946, still featured filmstock as the storage medium, while in Moscow in the mid-1930s (between assisting first Avraamov and later Sholpo) Boris A. Yankovsky developed a system of filming tone-wheels; a similar process was used in Ivan Eremeeff's 'universal recorder', devised around 1934 for the preparation of the wide film strips used as pitch and timbre masks in his Syntronic organ. In the Whitney brothers' pendulum system (early 1940s) the subsonic oscillations were filmed at a speed some 60 times slower than normal to produce the pitch range required. A related principle was used in the light-screen devised by Michel Waisvisz in the mid-1970s for use in exhibitions; a large 'torch' containing a photoelectric cell controls the frequency of an oscillator as it is moved (by hand) in front of a score consisting of several rows of soundtrack-like patterns. A more recent example of an application of film is in a mechanical musical instrument, the 'flute-playing machine' (1980) of Martin Riches, in which the pitches are drawn on a roll of film 15 cm wide.



Soundtrack-like masks (sometimes created by cut shapes of tape stuck onto clear film) were also used in devices developed for electronic music studios during the 1960s, for controlling complex functions such as dynamic envelopes and switching multiple oscillators or tape tracks on and off (as in a player piano roll). Examples include Hugh Le Caine's multi-channel Spectogram controller (in the studios of the National Research Council, Ottawa, the University of Toronto and McGill University, Montreal), Myron Schaeffer's Hamograph (University of Toronto), Fernando von Reichenbach's 'sound level photoprogrammer' (Instituto Torcuato di Tella, Buenos Aires), the Photoformer (NHK Electronic Music Studio, Tokyo) and an optically-controlled effects generator at the radio studios in Prague and Plzeň.

A number of keyboard instruments were based on rotating photoelectric tone-wheels – celluloid or glass discs on which photographed or hand-drawn waveforms were recorded; these interrupted a beam of light and affected its reception by a photoelectric cell, functioning in the same way as in the film projector. The idea was pioneered in 1916 by the South African Hendrik Johannes van der Bijl (1887–1948) at Western Electric in New York. The Hugoniot organ, built in 1921, the Cellulophone (*c*1927), the Superpiano (1927), the Photona (*c*1933–5), the Polytone (*c*1933) and the Radio Organ of a Trillion Tones (*c*1930) employed the principle, as did the photoelectric siren invented by J.F. Schouten at the Philips research laboratories in Holland (*c*1938). Since World War II, with the increasing sophistication and reliability of electronic circuitry, such instruments have been rare. Since 1984 Jacques Dudon has created 400 graphically elaborate 'photosonic' discs – many of which are computer-designed – for several specially constructed 'lumiphones'.

Following Sholpo's Variafon, several other composition machines were developed in which the sounds are 'programmed' or generated, or both, by photoelectric means. Transparent film 1·5 metres wide carries the notation in the fourth CROSS-GRAINGER FREE MUSIC MACHINE (1953–61). The Oramics system (1962–5; fig.2) has ten parallel tracks of 35 mm film, the full width of each of which is used for an individual aspect of the sound; this system was inspired by the idea of reversing the process of producing visual images from sound on the cathode ray tube (CRT) of an oscilloscope. The Composertron (*c*1948) is based on a CRT television screen on which sounds are drawn; it anticipated the use of screens in computer music, for example in conjunction with a light-pen (at the Bell Telephone Laboratories, Murray Hill, New Jersey, from around 1966, and, from 1979, as part of the Fairlight CMI system). Other composition machines that have used the principle of drawn sound are the ANS in Moscow (*c*1950–57), which developed aspects of Sholpo's work by having the composer scratch notations on a large blackened glass plate, controlling four photoelectric tone-wheels, and the Hanert Electrical Orchestra (1944–5), in which a scanning device reads markings in electrically conductive graphite on a set of cards by direct electrical contact. The Bildabtaster, which was used with the Siemens Synthesizer from about 1960, scanned hand-drawn slides.

Film soundtrack also inspired two optical recording systems marketed in the 1930s, the Selenophone (1931) and the better-known, variable-width Philips-Miller system, devised by J.A. Miller at Flushing, New York, in 1931 and manufactured in a modified version by Philips at Eindhoven from 1936 until the late 1940s; these were superseded by the tape recorder. A related approach is that of instruments that use optical methods for recording sounds from other sources, which are often visually indistinguishable from hand-drawn sound. This was the basis of the 'singing keyboard' (*c*1936), in which short lengths of pre-recorded film soundtrack were triggered when the player depressed keys on the keyboard; today it would be called an analogue SAMPLER, like the more effective recent magnetic tape-based Chamberlin Rhythmate, MELLOTRON and Birotron. Two electronic organs based on photoelectric tone-wheels containing 'sampled' pipe organ recordings were the Hardy-Goldthwaite organ (*c*1929–30) and the Welte Lichtton-Orgel (*c*1933) (see ELECTRONIC INSTRUMENTS, §I, 3, fig.2*c*). The domestic Optigan Music Maker (marketed in 1971–3 by the toy manufacturer Mattel) and the Orchestron, invented by David Van Koevering (after purchasing the Optigan designs) and manufactured by Vako in 1975, were also analogue samplers; both used a single tone-wheel for the complete pitch range in each timbre, which on the Optigan consisted of removable 30 cm flexible discs containing both timbres and automatic accompaniments (laser technology permitted greater storage capacity).

2. Oramics system built by Daphne Oram, 1962–5; pitch is notated digitally on the three rear tracks, and analogue notation on the front five tracks controls other components of the sound; the nearest of the rear group of tracks delivers control signals (the tenth track was not required for the music notated in this illustration)

Pre-recorded speech waveforms on photoelectric glass tone-wheels were used from the early 1930s to the 80s in the 'speaking clock' telephone information service in many countries, and photographically recorded sound waves were the basis of the Visible Speech machine developed at the Bell Laboratories in 1948 as an adjunct to the VOCODER. High-capacity digital photoelectric storage for both sound and computer systems is common today, in the form of the laser-based compact disc and optical computer disc.

Some instruments and sound installations involve human movement that affects a photoelectric cell in the manner of a mask, as in the Saraga Generator (*c*1931), Qubais Reed Ghazala's recent similar Photon clarinet and his Video Octavox synthesizer, several installations by Christopher Janney (including Soundstair, 1977, and the recent Harmonic Runway) and Jacques Serrano's Mur interactif spatio-temporel (1984) with 3072 photoelectric cells; infra-red beams are used in a similar manner in Donald Buchla's MIDI controller Lightning (1991), and in Interactive Light's Dimension Beam (1993), originally used in a video game, which was developed by Roland and incorporated as the 'D Beam' in several electronic keyboards from 1998.

A similar approach treats visual images as if they were drawn sound, using video cameras whose images are analysed digitally, as in the DIMI synthesizer (1971) and performance systems such as the Oculus Ranae developed by Douglas Collinge and Stephen Parkenson (*c*1985), Fred Kolman's Kolman Kube (1989), and Kristi Allik and Robert Mulder's Pentaprism (1989).

Finally several systems have employed drawn sound without the photoelectric element. Drawing movements on a large 'tablet' (80 × 72 cm) are electromagnetically sensed in the UPIC system devised by a team led by Xenakis; although originally demonstrated in 1977, it did not achieve a real-time capability until 1987. In the Technos Acxel Resynthesizer (*c*1988) a finger can 'draw' waveforms and envelopes across a touch-panel of 32 × 64 squares, and a touch-screen is featured on the Wersi Pegasus synthesizer workstation (1993).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Moholy-Nagy: 'Új filmkísérletek' [New film experiments], Korunk, viii (1933), 231–7; repr. in K. Passuth: Moholy-Nagy (Budapest, 1982); Eng. trans. (London, 1985), 319–23
H. Rosen: 'Synthetic Sound', Wireless World, xxxii (1933), 101 only
Z. Pešánek: Kinetismus: kinetika ve výtvarnictví – barevná hudba [Kineticism: kinetics in art – colour music] (Prague, 1941) [illustrations of early drawn sound images]
L. Becker: 'Synthetic Sound and Abstract Image', Hollywood Quarterly, i (1945–6), 95–6
R.K. Potter: 'Audivisual Music', Hollywood Quarterly, iii (1947–8), 66–78
R.E. Lewis and N.McLaren: 'Synthetic Sound on Film', Journal of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, l (1948), 233–47
W. Meyer-Eppler: Elektrische Klangerzeugung: elektronische Musik und synthetische Sprache (Bonn, 1949), 63–71, 111–14
N. McLaren: 'Notes on Animated Sound', Quarterly of Film, Radio and Television, vii (1952–3), 223–9
J. Whitney: 'Bewegungsbilder und elektronische Musik', Die Reihe, vii (1960), 62–72; Eng. trans., 'Moving Pictures and Electronic Music', Die Reihe, vii (1965), 61–71; excerpt from orig. Eng. version repr. in Experimental Animation: Origins of a New Art, ed. R. Russett and C. Starr (New York, 2/1988), 171–3
P. Ford: 'History of Sound Recording IV: Motion Picture and Television Sound Recording', Recorded Sound, no.12 (1963), 146–54
H.F. Olson: Music, Physics and Engineering (New York, 2/1967), 373–8
H. Davies: Répertoire international des musiques électroacoustiques/International Electronic Music Catalog (Cambridge, MA, 1968), 301–3 [first pubd as Electronic Music Review, nos.2–3 (1967)]
B. Spinello: 'Notes on Soundtrack', Source, no.7 (1970), 50–51; repr. in Experimental Animation: Origins of a New Art, ed. R. Russett and C. Starr (New York, 2/1988), 175–7
T.L. Rhea: The Evolution of Electronic Musical Instruments in the United States (diss., George Peabody College, 1972), 126–37, rev. as 'Photoelectric Acoustic-Sound Instruments', Contemporary Keyboard, iii/11 (1977), 62 only; repr. in The Art of Electronic Music, ed. T. Darter and G. Armbruster (New York, 1984), 14–15
J.H.M. Goddijn: Groot elektronisch orgelboek (Deventer, 1975), 220–24
R. Manvell and J. Huntley: The Technique of Film Music (London, 2/1975), 183–93 [incl. repr. of McLaren's article, 1953]
R. Russett and C. Starr, eds.: Experimental Animation: an Illustrated Anthology (New York, 1976, rev. 2/1988 as Experimental Animation: Origins of a New Art, 116–28, 163–77)
B. Schrader: Introduction to Electro-Acoustic Music (Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1982), 70–74
R.S. James: 'Avant-Garde Sound-on-Film Techniques and their Relationship to Electro-Acoustic Music', MQ, lxxii (1986), 74–89
R.M. Prendergast: Film Music: a Neglected Art: a Critical Study of Music in Films (New York, 2/1992), 198–205 [partly paraphrases McLaren's article, 1953]
J. Dudon: 'The Photosonic Disk', Experimental Musical Instruments, xiv/4 (1999), 36–46

HUGH DAVIES

Drawstop. See STOP (iv).

Dreaper. See RUSHWORTH & DREAPER.

Drechsel. See DRETZEL family.

Drechsler. See DRESSEL family.

Drechsler, Joseph (b Vlachovo Březí, nr Strakovice, 26 May 1782; d Vienna, 27 Feb 1852). Bohemian composer, conductor and organist active in Austria. After early musical training from his father, a Kantor and schoolmaster, he became a chorister in Passau and studied at the Benedictine monastery in Florenbach, later again in Passau and finally in Prague. In 1807 he moved to Vienna in response to an invitation to join the Theater in der Leopoldstadt, but he decided instead to maintain his independence by teaching, composing and studying. He became a répétiteur at the Court Opera in 1810, and in 1812 (or 1814) was appointed assistant Kapellmeister. The Court Opera's reduction in personnel obliged him to spend a period as conductor at Baden and Bratislava; following this 'gypsying about', as he called it, he was appointed organist at the Servitenkirche in Vienna in 1815. At the same time he opened a music school, where his pupils later included Johann Strauss (i). He became choirmaster at the Annakirche in 1816 and at the Kirche Am Hof in 1823; in 1844 he was appointed Kapellmeister of the Stephansdom.

In 1821 Drechsler was made a conductor at the Theater in der Josefstadt, where his score to Meisl's Das Bild des Fürsten, together with Beethoven's Die Weihe des Hauses, was performed on 3 October 1822 to celebrate the reopening of the theatre; in July of the following year, Beethoven recommended Drechsler to his pupil the Archduke Rudolph. From 1824 to 1830 Drechsler was chief conductor and composer at the Theater in der Leopoldstadt, for which he composed many scores. But although he continued to write the music for Singspiels and farces after 1830, he devoted himself mainly to his church duties and to teaching.

Highly regarded in his day for his theoretical works (which include an organ tutor, a harmony and thoroughbass course, a set of guidelines on the art of preluding and a revised edition of Pleyel's piano tutor), Drechsler is now best remembered for the music he wrote for three of Ferdinand Raimund's plays, in particular Das Mädchen aus der Feenwelt with its haunting duet 'Brüderlein fein', the melody of which is by Raimund himself.

WORKS

many MSS in A-Wgm, Wn, Wst

STAGE

unless otherwise stated, incidental music, first performed in Vienna, Theater in der Leopoldstadt

Die Feldmühle (Spl), Vienna, Kärtnertor, 29 Sept 1812
Pauline (grand military op, J. Ebersberg), Vienna, Theater an der Wien, 23 Feb 1821
Das Bild des Fürsten (K. Meisl), Vienna, Theater in der Josefstadt, 3 Oct 1822
Der Diamant des Geisterkönigs (F. Raimund), 17 Dec 1824
Gisperl und Fisperl (A. Bäuerle), 30 Sept 1825
Das Mädchen aus der Feenwelt, oder Der Bauer als Millionär (Raimund), 10 Nov 1826
Sylphide das Seefräulein (T. Krones), 15 Feb 1828
Die unheilbringende Zauberkrone (Raimund), 4 Dec 1829
*c*45 other works, some perf. at Theater in der Josefstadt

OTHER WORKS

Vocal: 16 masses, Requiem, TeD, 3 sacred cants., 2 settings of Veni sancte spiritus, hymns, grads, offs, lieder
Instrumental: pf sonatas, str qts

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveO (P. Branscombe) [with full list of stage works]; WurzbachL
Autobiography (MS, A-Wgm)
C. Preiss: Joseph Drechsler (Graz, 1910)
A. Orel, ed.: Ferdinand Raimund: sämtliche Werke, vi (Vienna, 1934)
O. Biba: 'Die Pflege der Kirchenmusik in der Piaristenkirche in Wien', Festschrift 250 Jahre Piaristenkirche Maria Treu (Vienna, 1969), 41–55
E. Seidel: 'Eine Wiener Harmonie- und Generalbasslehre der Beethoven- und Schubertzeit', Symbolae historiae musicae: Hellmut Federhofer zum 60. Geburtstag, ed. F.W. Riedel and H. Unverricht (Mainz, 1971), 217–28
A. Weinmann: 'Ein ins Leere gehender Fundbericht', Wiener Figaro, xlvi/2 (1979), 30–33
E. Kitzler: Joseph Drechsler und seine Kirchenmusik (diss., U. of Vienna, 1983)
F.Patzer, ed.: Ferdinand Raimund, 'Brüderlein fein': Faksimile des autographen Notenblattes (Vienna, 1986)

P. Grandenwitz: 'Ludwig van Beethoven und die hebräische Liturgie', Menora: Jb für deutsch-jüdische Geschichte (1991), 215–44

PETER BRANSCOMBE

Drehleier (Ger.). See HURDY-GURDY.

Drehorgel (Ger.). See BARREL ORGAN.

Dreiklang (Ger.). Literally, any three-note chord; the term is usually applied to a TRIAD.

Drei Masken Verlag. German firm of music publishers. It was founded on 24 November 1910 in Munich by the composer Ludwig Friedman. In 1912 it moved to Berlin, and was taken over in 1930 by Victor Alberti and A.L Robinson, except for the literature department, which had returned to Munich in 1920. Among the musicological works published by the Munich branch were Musikalische Stundenbücher, H.W. Waltershausen's Musikalische Stillehre in Einzeldarstellungen, Guido Adler's Richard Wagner, the Sammelbände für vergleichende Musikwissenschaft (ed. Stumpf and Hornbostel), the first two volumes of the Mozart-Jahrbuch (ed. Hermann Abert), Adolf Sandberger's Ausgewählte Aufsätze zur Musikgeschichte and Faksimiliedrücke berühmter Musiker-Handschriften, and Oskar von Riesemann's Monographien zur russischen Musik.

The main part of the firm's output was devoted to music, often in connection with premières of contemporary opera in Munich and operetta in Berlin. The Berlin branch published mainly operas, operettas and ballets as well as dance, popular and film music. Opera and ballet composers published by the firm included Eugen d'Albert, Walter Courvoisier, Robert Heger, J.G. Mraczek, Friedrich Klose, Franz Schmidt, Bernhard Sekles and H.W. Waltershausen; light music was represented by works of Paul Abraham, Ralph Benatzky, Leo Blech, Leo Fall, Jean Gilbert, Emmerich Kálmán, Walter Kollo, Eduard Künneke, Mischa Spoliansky, Robert Stolz and Oscar Straus. After the firm's liquidation in 1934 on racial grounds, the Dreiklang-Verlag took over the Drei Masken Verlag and its affiliated firms. During World War II the name Dreiklang-Dreimasken Bühnen- und Musikverlag was introduced. After the loss of the Berlin premises and much of the stock in 1943 due to war damage, the firm re-established itself in Wiesbaden on 1 January 1949; on 1 July 1957 it moved to Munich. It was bought by the publishing house of Bertelsmann in 1964 and incorporated into the UFA music publishing group (including the Wiener Bohème Verlag, Ufaton Verlag and Crescendo). These publishing houses are now part of the Bertelsmann Music Group (BMG), based in New York. The business is now part of an important publishing group which includes the UFA Music Press, the Wiener Bohème Press and the Ufaton Press (all based in Munich). The firm of Dreiklang-Dreimasken Verlag, still in existence, is no long active in publishing, but there is still a separate firm in Munich under the name Drei Masken Verlag which publishes plays.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W. Altmann, ed.: Kurzgefasstes Tonkünstler-Lexikon (Regensburg, 15/1971–8)

Musikverlage in der Bundesrepublik Deutschland und West-Berlin (Bonn, 1965)

EMIL KATZBICHLER/KARL ROBERT BRACHTEL

Dreiser, Paul. See DRESSER, PAUL.

Dreisig, Flemming (b Copenhagen, 4 April 1951). Danish organist. At age 14 he studied piano with Victor Schiøler at the Royal Danish Conservatory in Copenhagen, but later adopted the organ as his main instrument, graduating in 1970 in church music with a diploma in organ playing. A Carl Nielsen Scholarship enabled him to study the French organ repertory in Paris with Jean Langlais and Gaston Litaize (1970–71), after which he returned to Copenhagen and studied with Grethe Krogh. He made an acclaimed début in the concert hall of the Danish Broadcasting Corporation in 1972 and the same year was appointed organist of Maribo Cathedral. In 1973 he won first prize at the Nordic Association competition for young organists in Stockholm. He became organist at the Helligaandskirken in Copenhagen in 1977, and in 1995 organist at Rønne on the Baltic island of Bornholm. From 1973 to 1988 he taught at the Copenhagen Conservatory, becoming professor in 1983. Dreisig is a much-respected teacher and recitalist, whose recordings include works by Buxtehude and Rued Langgaard.

INGA HULGAARD

Dresden. City in Germany. Medieval Dresden developed from a fishing village on the right bank of the Elbe inhabited by Slavonic Sorbs (later known as Altendresden, and today as Dresden-Neustadt), which merged with several German settlements on the left bank of the river. They comprised the settlement around the imperial estate and the harbour of the Elbe; the stone basilica 'Zu unserer lieben Frau' (the Frauerkirche, *c*1150); the merchants' settlement with the Nikolaikirche (*c*1170); and the district administered by the burgraves of Dohna, which also defended the stone bridge built over the Elbe *c*1220 and the palace (*c*1265) of the margraves of Meissen. The margraves, territorial lords of the area, became electors of Saxony in 1423 and made Dresden their permanent residence in 1460. Altendresden acquired the status of a town in 1403 and became part of the city in 1549. Between 1485 (when Saxony was divided by the Leipzig Partition), and 1918 Dresden was the residence of the princes of the Albertine branch of the house of Wettin, who ruled as electors of Saxony until 1806 and then as kings of Saxony until 1918. Between 1919 and 1952, and again after 1990, Dresden was capital of the free state of Saxony, and the city was capital of the area under the German Democratic Republic between 1952 and 1990.

1. To 1694.

(i) Churches and schools. The Frauenkirche, Dresden's oldest ecclesiastical foundation, served a large area as parish church until the coming of the Reformation in 1539, but after the 13th century it was surpassed in size and magnificence by the Nikolaikirche, later known as the Kreuzkirche. The Frauenkirche (fig.1) lay outside the city walls. Documentary evidence shows that mass was celebrated there from the 14th century, sometimes with liturgical music. The church acquired a new organ in 1556 and again in 1616. Sacred music was sung between 1559 and 1896 by the pupils of the Kreuzschule, the choir school of the Kreuzkirche, often with the assistance of the town musicians and under the direction of the Kreuzkantor or one of the assistant masters at the school. The

1. Interior of the Frauenkirche, Dresden: organ by Gottfried Silbermann, 1726–34

Frauenkirche had its own Kantorat from 1896 to 1945, and a boys' choir continued to exist until the end of World War I, succeeded by a mixed choir after 1925. The church had its own organists from 1601.

The Kreuzkirche is the second oldest church in Dresden. It was founded around 1170 as the Nikolaikirche in the merchants' quarter, the present Altmarkt (fig.2). After 1234 Margrave Heinrich der Erlauchte donated a relic of the Cross, which was venerated in the Capellae Sanctae Crucis, probably added to the church around 1260. The veneration of this relic, first mentioned in the records in 1299, was associated with pilgrimages and indulgences. It is not known whether, as has previously been assumed, the resultant increase in liturgical services led to the founding of a choir school from which the Kreuzchor and Kreuzschule developed; the date 1216 usually given for the foundation of both institutions cannot be confirmed. The first known rector of the school, Cunradus, is mentioned in a document of 1300. In 1388 the church was reconsecrated, and its name was changed to the Kreuzkirche. The Dresden patrician Lorenz Busmann set up an endowment in 1398 for the pupils of the choir school to sing the Salve regina and O crux every evening; the latter was probably one of the antiphons *O crux benedicta*or O crux splendidior cunctis astris. These Vespers continued until 1539. The choir was directed first by the rector, then by his collaboratores and locati; no Kantor was officially appointed until 1539. The first notable rector of the Kreuzschule was Petrus Faulfisch, known as Petrus Dresdensis (1409–12), who came to Meissen from Prague. He was then expelled from Meissen again for Hussite heresy in 1412, and was burnt as a heretic at Regensburg in 1421. According to Johann Mathesius (Sarepta, Nuremburg, 1571) he wrote three-part introits. The theory that he wrote the German Latin hymns In dulci jubilo and Quem pastores laudavere was refuted in the 19th century.

The pupils of the Kreuzschule were already singing figural music before 1500. Records show that the court made payments to the choristers from 1470 to 1483, and they must also have performed polyphonic music in the Kreuzkirche, perhaps with the three wind players who according to the oldest Dresden municipal records (1420) were required to perform 29 times a year with the 'great organ'. At the consecration in 1499 of the late Gothic Kreuzkirche, built after the fire of 1491, they sang with '24 journeymen'; from about 1480 they performed for the great midsummer festival, and from 1498 acted a play of St Dorothea. From 1471 they sang O quam suavis es Domine and O magnum mysterium at the Corpus Christi procession. On 6 July 1539, at the first Lutheran service held in the Kreuzkirche, the boys of the Kreuzschule sang 'figured' settings of the Introit, Kyrie, Gloria, Alleluia and the Trinity sequence Benedicta semper sancta sit Trinita. The pupils were divided into several choirs which were also required to provide music for other Dresden churches. The pauperes, poor boys, earned their board and school fees by singing in the streets, a custom not abolished until 1848. The Kreuzchor continued to sing at divine service after the church became Lutheran in 1539, and it remains one of their main functions to this day. Singing at funerals was discontinued in the 19th century. Adult 'assistants' sang with the choirboys at church services after 1559, and the town musicians joined them at the same time.

An organist is first mentioned in the records in 1370, and there are mentions of organae in 1371, probably referring to the 'great organ' mentioned in connection with the wind players in 1420 and a smaller organ recorded in 1462. A new organ was installed by Casper Coler of Pirna in 1494, and enlarged in 1503. In 1512 Blasius Lehmann of Bautzen built another large organ, demolished in 1729. In 1642–4 Tobias Weller installed a further organ, which was destroyed in the fire of 1760. After its destruction in the Seven Years War, the Kreuzkirche was rebuilt in the late Baroque style by J.G. Schmidt and C.F. Exner; the work was completed between 1792 and 1800.

The Sophienkirche (fig.3), the third oldest church in Dresden, was the church of the Franciscan monastery founded by Margrave Heinrich der Erlauchte in 1265. Work on the building of the double-naved Gothic church began in 1351. Until the secularization of the monastery the only music heard in this church, apart from the organ, was Gregorian chant. After 1599, at the instigation of the Electress Sophie, municipal services were held in the church, which had stood unused since 1539. From 1601 to 1695 its organ was played by the organists of the Frauenkirche, using the newly installed instrument after 1622. Later the Sophienkirche had its own organists, who held the post as a municipal appointment until the destruction of the church in 1945. The choirboys of the Kreuzschule were required to provide music in the church from 1610 until 1923, when it acquired a Kantorat of its own. The palace Kapelle was closed down and secularized in 1737, and from then until 1918 the Sophienkirche was also the Protestant court church.

2. Kreuzkirche and the Altmarkt: painting by Bernardo Bellotto, 1754 (Gemäldegalerie Alte Meister, Dresden)

The Dreikönigskirche, first mentioned in 1421, was the parish church of Altendresden and had a school connected with it. A schoolmaster is first recorded in 1431, and in 1465 a foundation required him and his pupils to sing the Salve regina once a day, probably following the example of the Kreuzkirche Vespers. In 1489 Caspar Coler of Pirna installed an organ, which was enlarged in 1504–5 and rebuilt in 1606. An illuminated missal of around 1500 was preserved in the city library until 1945. Following the Reformation the parish school became a municipal Lateinschule (1539); from 1543 the teachers included a Kantor as well as the rector, and an organist after 1544. Of the school's rectors, Paul Preschner (*c*1538–86) was also a composer, as was the Kantor Joseph Schlegel (1529–93), who wrote a four-part Passio germanica and a series of motets printed as XII Psalme aus der Heiligen Schrift (Mülhausen, 1578). After the great city fire of 1685 Altendresden was renamed Neue Königs-Stadt and later Dresden-Neustadt; a new organ by J.H. Gräbner was installed in the rebuilt Dreikönigskirche. The church and its school burnt down on 13 February 1945. The church, rebuilt in a modified form, was consecrated in 1991.

The Heilig-Geist-Hospital, founded in the 13th century, acquired a chapel dedicated to St Bartholomew in the 14th century. It was replaced in 1519 by a new building with a singers' gallery and a positive organ. In 1563 the town council founded a 'German school' (as distinct from a 'Lateinschule' teaching Latin) associated with the hospital. The chapel, now too small, was replaced at the instigation of Electress Anna by a new building, known after her as the Annenkirche. The pupils of the Kreuzschule, together with the Stadtpfeifer, performed six-part motets by Clemens non Papa and Lassus at its consecration. The church was burnt down in 1760 when the Prussians turned their heavy artillery on Dresden, and was replaced by J.G. Schmidt's fine Baroque building of 1763–9, which underwent various modifications and survived World War II.

3. Organ by Gottfried Silbermann, 1718–20, in the Sophienkirche, Dresden: destroyed 1945

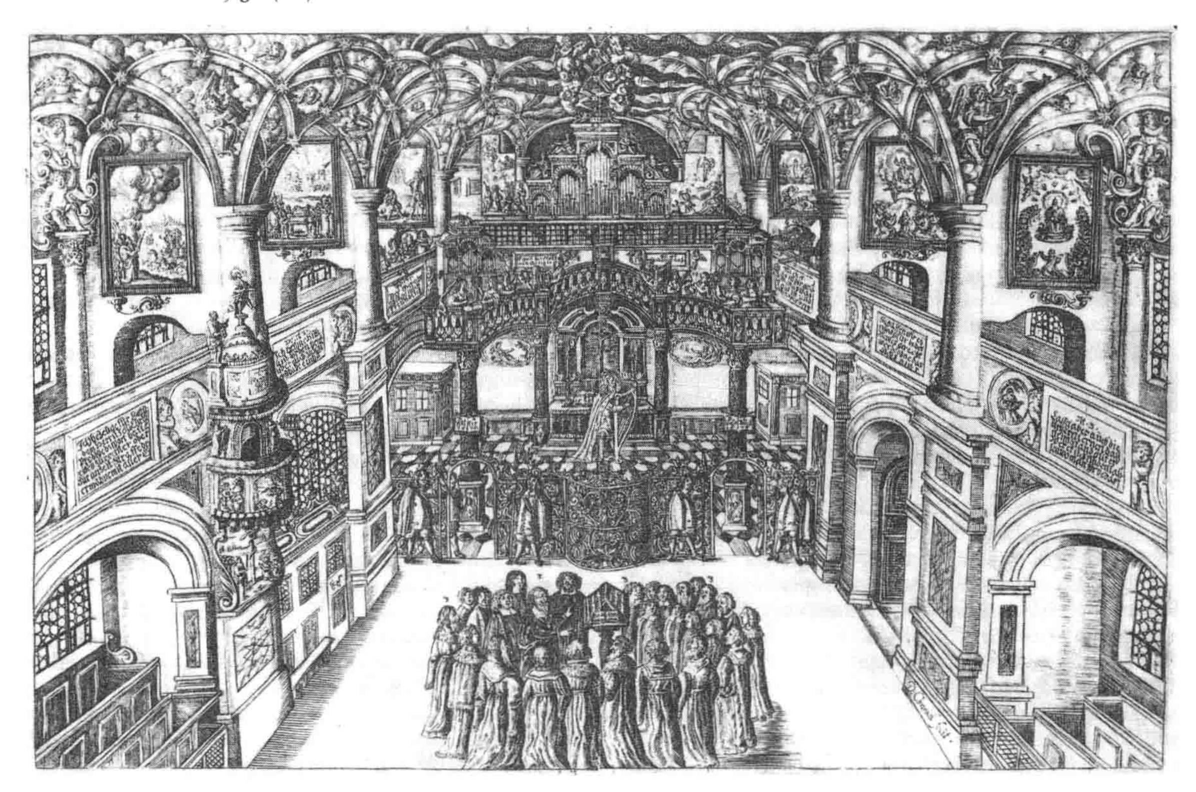
(ii) Municipal music and the Stadtkapelle. The early history of the Stadtpfeifer, the members of the Dresden Stadtpfeiferei, or town band, is obscure. The 'Türmer' or 'Hausmann' of the Kreuzkirche had the usual duties of that office: raising the alarm in case of fire or war, ringing the bells and acting as time-keeper, and blowing a horn at set times of day. It is difficult to be sure whether the three wind players mentioned in the municipal records of 1420 in connection with the 'great organ' of the Kreuzkirche were town or court musicians. The palace could not easily have dispensed with their services at court, particularly on days of church festivals, and it seems more likely that they were municipal employees. Curiously, the Stadtpfeifer of Leipzig were engaged to play in Dresden for the midsummer festivities of 1522; evidently their Dresden counterparts were not competent enough. The ensemble was reorganized in 1572, when four wind players were engaged to perform from the tower and 'strengthen and enhance' the choir of the Kreuzschule with their instruments on feast days and Sundays, at weddings and on other occasions 'when figural music is performed', as well as doing the usual guard duties.

The repertory of the Stadtpfeifer in the late 16th and early 17th centuries consisted of instrumental music, chorales and polyphonic sacred music, as well as the many madrigals they arranged for their instruments, which included crumhorns, pipes, dulcians, cornetts and trumpets. When Emperor Matthias visited the city in 1617, and at other great court festivities such as weddings and royal visits, the members of the Dresden ensemble played with musicians from the nearby towns of Meissen, Pirna and Freiberg. In Dresden, as elsewhere, the town musicians struggled to preserve their statutory rights (for instance, playing at weddings) in the face of competition from such other groups as court musicians, regimental bands, and 'town fiddlers'. Around 1620 there were five town musicians in Dresden (a master and his journeymen and apprentices), a figure rising to 12 at the end of the 18th century, 15 in 1810, between 24 and 30 after 1816, and 40 later in the century. A decree of 1606 required the Stadtpfeifer to assist when sacred music was performed, and from 1675 they had to play for half an hour with the Kreuzchor before the bells rang for divine service on the three great festivals of the church. They also had to help with the performance of sacred music in the Sophienkirche and Frauenkirche when the superintendent came to preach there, and they were required to play in the Dreikönigskirche once every six weeks.

(iii) Music at court. Under Margrave Dietrich der Bedrängte (ruled 1197–1221), son-in-law of Landgrave Hermann of Thuringia, who had organized the legendary Wartburg song contest, the citadel of Meissen not only had political and ecclesiastical importance but also gained a reputation as a centre of art and music. In the winter of 1210–11 Walther von der Vogelweide stayed in Meissen, and so for some time did Heinrich von Morungen, who may also have visited Dresden. Dietrich's son Margrave Heinrich III der Erlauchte reigned from 1221 to 1288, residing in Dresden from time to time after 1255 and making it his permanent residence after 1276. Heinrich wrote sacred songs and was also a Minnesinger. The Heidelberg Manesse Manuscript contains six of his songs (words only). In 1254 Pope Innocent IV approved settings of the Kyrie and Gloria written by Heinrich for liturgicial use. It is likely that Reinmar von Zweter and Frauenlob (born in Meissen, d 1316) spent some time at his court in Meissen, and perhaps visited Dresden too. Heinrich der Erlauchte and his sons Friedrich Clemme and Dietrich der Weise are thought to have commissioned Albrecht von Scharfenberg's Der jüngere Titurel, the continuation of Wolfram von Eschenbach's Titurel fragment. Heinrich probably had instrumentalists available at his court. The great tournaments of Nordhausen in 1263, Meissen in 1265 and Merseburg in 1268 are unlikely to have taken place without wind players.

The 14th century, with the Black Death of 1349 and dynastic struggles in Meissen, allowed little opportunity for artistic development. From 1368 to 1379 the brothers Friedrich der Strenge, Balthasar and Wilhelm I jointly ruled the Mark of Meissen; after 1382 Wilhelm ruled alone, and the records show that in 1386 he had fistulatores, vigellatores and tympanatores (pipers, fiddlers and drummers) at his court. This is the first evidence that musicians were permanently employed there.

After 1464 the palace of Dresden was the centre from which the brothers Elector Ernst and Duke Albrecht administered the Wettin territories. The existence of a musical ensemble at court for the years 1482–5 was established by Matthias Herrmann in 1987. After 1470 at the latest, figural church music was performed at court, directed by the cantor uf der schulen and sung by the koer schulern, probably with clerics who held court posts. According to the records, the future Kreuzchor was already singing polyphonic music around 1470. The court tailor's accounts for 1482 mention drey cantorii jungen and ein clein singer, and there were also pipers, usually a trumpeter, and a lutenist. After 1475 the palace Kapelle had a wooden pipe organ from Memmingen, and one Meister Anthonius later installed another organ. The Leipzig Partition of the Wettin territories ruled by the two brothers took place in 1485. The Hofkapelle probably moved to Torgau with Elector Ernst, and was gradually restructured after 1486 under Elector Friedrich der Weise. It reached its prime under Adam von Fulda, Adam Rener, Paul Hofhaimer and Johann Walter (i) before being dissolved by Elector Johann der Beständige about 1525. There seems to have been no figural music apart from organ playing at the Albertine court in Dresden under Duke Albrecht and (from 1500) Duke Georg der Bärtige. Johannes Cochlaeus, court chaplain and secretary to the duke from 1528 to 1535, was the author of several important works of music theory and a prominent opponent of the Lutheran Reformation.



The first composer from the Dresden area who produced a considerable number of works which are still extant, or preserved in part, was Matthias Eckel. He was probably less active as a practising musician while at the court of Duke Georg in Leipzig and Dresden than when he moved to the Freiberg court of Duke Heinrich der Fromme, who had converted to Lutheranism. Eckel remained at Freiberg until his death in 1537. The records show that there were court trumpeters, pipers and timpanists at the electoral court of Saxony after 1469; these received great acclaim at the famous Amberg wedding of 1474, which they attended in the retinue of the Saxon princes. Nothing like their clarino playing, 'as high as may be imagined', had ever been heard before (Herrmann, 1987, p.75).

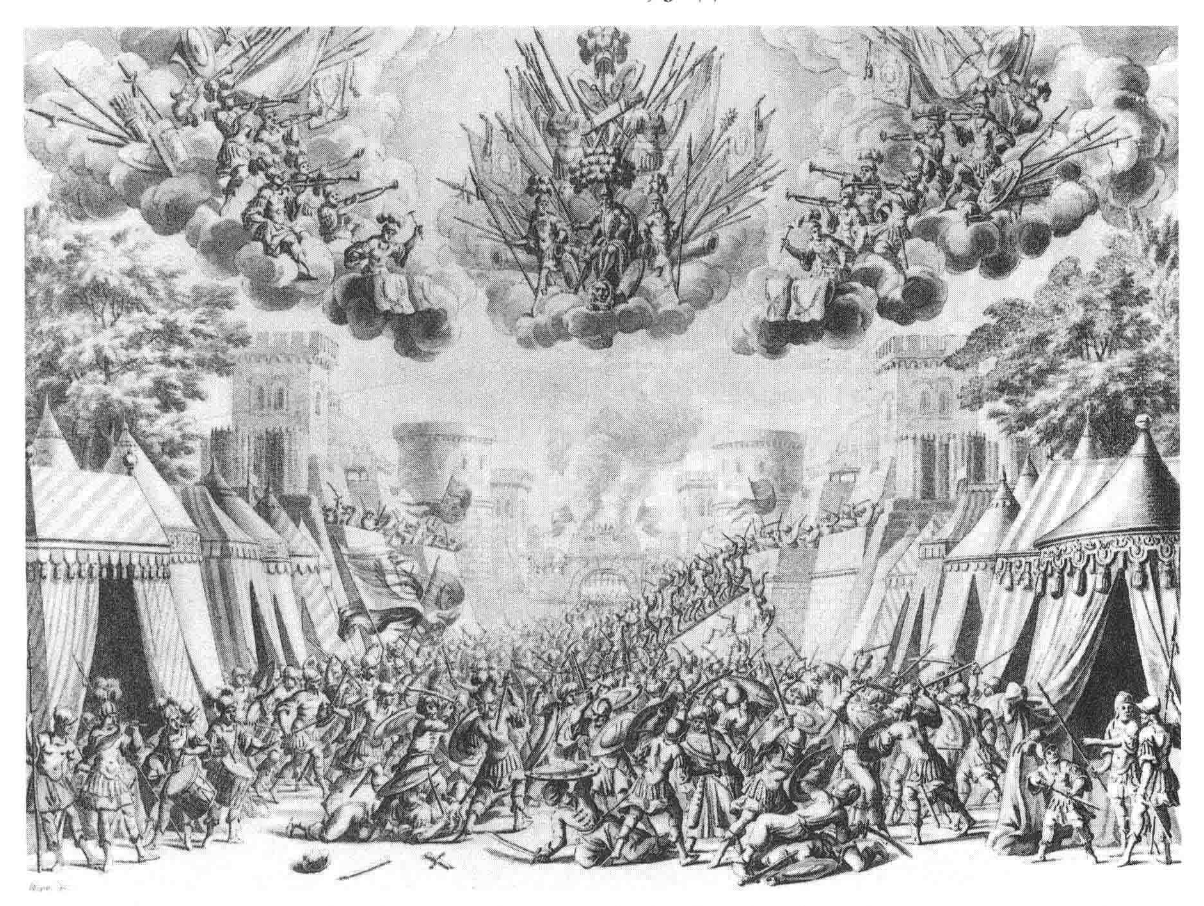
During his short reign (1539–41) Duke Heinrich officially introduced the Reformation into the duchy of Saxony. However, music did not achieve prominence at the Dresden court until the Hofkapelle was refounded in Dresden on 22 September 1548 by Elector Moritz (reigned 1541–53), who had attained electoral rank in 1547 during the reorganization of what was now the most important of the Wettin courts. The court trumpeters' ensemble was probably the oldest musical institution at court. Under Moritz it was enlarged into a body of eight or nine trumpeters and one timpanist, and under Elector August (1553–86) consisted of nine or ten trumpeters and one timpanist. From 1586, when Elector Christian I succeeded, until after 1800 the Saxon court trumpeters' 'Kameradschaft' consisted of one principal trumpeter, 12 court and field trumpeters, and one or two timpanists. It claimed to be the highest-ranking of all such trumpeters' ensembles in the Holy Roman Empire, and described itself as an 'Oberkameradschaft'. Its statutes were ratified or renewed at the Regensburg Reichstag in 1623, 1630 and 1646, and its constitution, extended in 1653 from 11 to 22 articles, remained in force until 1831 (the date of the first Saxon constitution and the repeal of compulsory guild membership). The Elector of Saxony, as 'Reichserzmarschall', was the highest representative of all German court trumpeters. In the 16th and 17th centuries musicians of the Hofkapelle were recruited to play figural music with trumpets (there were two 'musical trumpeters' in the time of Schütz). In 1816 musicians from the Hofkapelle are again mentioned as trumpeters. After 1834 the court trumpeters took part in few significant musical events; their duties were confined to blowing signals and performing in processions. The ancient body of court trumpeters was finally disbanded in 1918. Of the 30 valuable silver trumpets dating from the middle of the 18th century and still extant in 1911, eight have been preserved in Dresden, in the Kunstgewerbemuseum at Schloss Pillnitz, and two in the National Museum, Prague.

Johann Walter (i) was appointed Kapellmeister of the Hofkantorei when it was refounded in 1548. He had been a member of the old Ernestine Hofkapelle in Torgau until 1525/6, and with his Geystliches gesangk Buchleyn (1524) had laid the foundations for a new Evangelical repertory there, extending it further between 1528 and 1548 as Kantor of the first Evangelical civic Kantorei in Torgau, and bringing it to Dresden with him. It included works that had been part of the musical repertory of the Ernestine Hofkapelle. His important Magnificat cycle, not printed until 1557, was probably written in Dresden. Walter also laid the foundations for the tradition of setting and performing historiae to German Lutheran texts; this genre continued to flourish in the palace chapel until 1697, and in Evangelical central Germany as a whole until the 19th century. After Walter's Passions, settings were composed by Jacobus Haupt (mentioned in documentary records as a singer in the Dresden Kapelle in 1548 and 1555, and later as a pastor), who wrote a responsorial St Matthew Passion before 1560 (D-As); Antonio Scandello; Rogier Michael (two Passions, now lost); Christoph Bernhard (1663, lost); Schütz (all three Passions 1665–6), and Peranda (1668). The Resurrection historia by Jacobus Haupt (before 1560, As) was followed by settings by Scandello (after 1568); Schütz (1623); Johann Müller, a member of the Dresden Kapelle (1676); J.W. Furchheim (1677), and N.A. Strungk (1690); the last three works are no longer extant. Similarly, Michael's Christmas historia of 1602 was followed by other versions by Schütz (1660, printed in 1664) and Peranda (1668, now lost). Under Walter's successors Matthaeus Le Maistre, Scandello and G.B. Pinello di Ghirardi, the practice of performing vocal–instrumental works became increasingly important. The sacred works of these three Kapellmeister, as well as those by Michael, reveal a late Netherlandish and Italian polyphonic technique.



When the Kantorei was founded in 1548 it comprised 19 singers and an organist. Five Italian instrumentalists, Scandello among them, joined the ensemble in 1549. In 1554 it consisted of 25 singers and seven 'welsch' (Netherlandish) musicians, and in 1606 there were 47 singers and instrumentalists. The number had fallen to 27 by 1608, and in 1611 the Kapelle was reduced to a minimum (a frequent occurrence when a new ruler succeeded). In 1612 a protracted process of reconstruction began, concluding in 1615 with the appointment of Schütz. According to an inventory, in 1593 the Kapelle had a large number of all the instruments commonly used in art music at the time, including 13 trumpets, 12 viols, 11 cornetts, eight crumhorns, eight dulcians and five one-hand flutes (with three finger-holes). After the death in 1612 of Hassler, who had been court organist at Dresden since 1608, Michael Praetorius directed the Dresden Hofkapelle as de facto Kapellmeister in 1613 and 1614 to about 1616. Hassler, Praetorius and Schütz were all appointed to posts at the court of Dresden thanks to the negotiating skills of privy councillor Christoph vom Loss the Younger. The enormous output of Praetorius undoubtedly formed the basis of court church music during the early 17th century. His late works, for instance parts two and three of the Syntagma musicum (1619 and 1621), clearly reflect the composer's Dresden experiences. From the autumn of 1615 Schütz acted first as 'organist and director of the musicians'; he gained the actual title of Kapellmeister only later, and remained officially subordinate to Praetorius until the latter's death in 1621. Up to 1631 Schütz was extremely successful in his post; the quantity and quality of his works, together with the high standards of the singers and instrumentalists in the Kapelle, made Dresden the leading musical centre of northern and central Germany. As the Thirty Years War reached Saxony in 1631, the Kapelle of Elector Johann Georg I (ruled 1611–56) was adversely affected. A gradual recovery began only after 1654. The late works of Schütz (from the Christmas historia of 1660 to the Schwanengesang of 1671) were composed for the court of Dresden, but they must have seemed old-fashioned to the Kapelle now that styles were changing (fig.4). In 1666, when the court was in its prime under Johann Georg II (ruled 1656–80), the Kapelle had 53 musicians. After 1548 Italian and Dutch musicians joined the ensemble, and from 1560 to about 1630 there were also several English members, including John Price. Around the middle of the 17th century the Italians gained more influence, and after 1657 they came to dominate the Kapelle. The violinist

4. Schütz directing the Dresden Hofkapelle in the palace chapel: engraving by David Conrad from the 'Geistreiches Gesang-Buch', preface by Christoph Bernhard (Dresden, 1676); the engraving shows the chapel after the restoration of 1662, by which time Schütz was no longer Kapellmeister Carlo Farina was in Dresden from 1625 to about 1628, and published five large collections of instrumental music there. In 1656 Johann Georg II merged the Kapelle he had maintained since 1639 with the existing electoral Kapelle. Now that Schütz was living mainly in Weissenfels, the tone of the Dresden court Kapelle was set until about 1680 by G.A. Bontempi (the first castrato in Dresden, and a composer, theatrical technician and historian), V. Albrici and Peranda, whose works marked the beginnings of the musical Baroque in central Germany. All three were of the school of Carissimi in Rome, and they introduced to Germany the new genre of the concerto–aria cantata. In 1666, under the direction of C.C. Dedekind as Konzertmeister, a 'Kleine deutsche Music' ensemble was formed to sing at church services. Dedekind joined the Kapelle as a bass singer in 1654; his most important composition, Aelbianische Musen-Lust of 1657, has a significant counterpart in the Dresden Kirchen- und Hausbuch of 1694, based on the 1676 Hofgesangbuch edited by Bernhard; Dedekind's name is not mentioned as editor of this later version, but it contains many new texts and melodies for songs by him, particularly in the appendix entitled 'Anhang 100 ahnmutig und sonderbahr geistlicher Arien', where the texts show traces of the Pietistic influence of the principal Dresden court preacher, P.J. Spener. According to recent research, Dedekind was the true creator of the madrigalian church cantata, preceding Erdmann Neumeister. Texts for cantatas with recitatives, arias and chorus appear in the 'theatrical and poetic appendix' to his Neue geistliche Schauspiele bekwemet zur Musik (1670).

Members of the Dresden Kapelle who were important both as composers and as performing musicians included not only Farina and Dedekind, but J.J. Walther (a member of the Kapelle from 1673 to 1680), J.P. von Westhoff (1674–97) and Strungk (1688–97). Farina, Walther, Westhoff and Strungk constituted in effect a Dresden violin school that did much to develop virtuoso violin technique. Court organists who were also composers included August Nörmiger (1581–1613), whose Tabulaturbuch auff dem Instrumente dates from 1598, and Hassler, who in 1612 drew up the specification for a large new organ in the Schlosskapelle, replacing the organ of 1563. The new instrument, its design somewhat modified, was built by Gottfried Frische in 1613, and alterations were made to it under Schütz in 1628. Like J.H. Schein, Anton Colander (1590–1621), a cousin and pupil of Schütz and court organist from about 1616 to 1621, was among the first composers of 'Kleine geistliche Konzerte' to German texts of the type written by Viadana. They appeared posthumously in Dresden in 1643 in the Varii variorum ... concertus. Two later court organists, Matthias Weckmann (in Dresden in 1641 and from 1647 to 1654) and Adam Krieger (1657–66), were also significant composers. In the final decades of the 17th century the post of Kapellmeister at the Dresden court was held successively by Peranda (1672–5), important for his many sacred concertos and his cantatas, historiae and operas; Sebastiano Cherici (1675); Vincenzo Albrici (1676–80), a prolific composer of Latin motets; Bernhard (1681–92), equally prominent as a composer and a writer of works on music theory; and Strungk (1692–7), who made his name principally in Leipzig as an operatic Kapellmeister and composer.

5. Battle between Romans and Turks from the ballet 'Von der Zusammenkunfft und Würckung derer 7 Planeten', Act 2 scene iii, Dresden, 1678; design by Johann Oswald Harms for the 1679 repeat performance, pen and ink and colour wash (Kupferstichkabinett, Dresden)

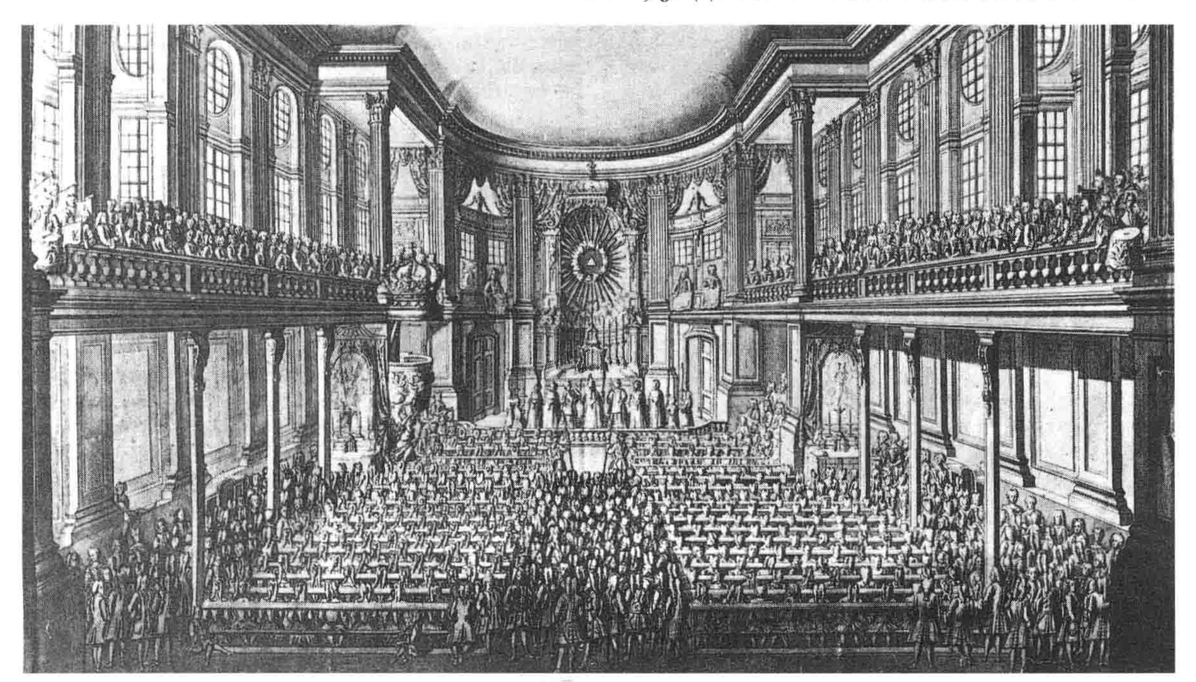
From 1548 the growth of music at court was confined to church services and banquets. However, from the 1570s onwards, an increasing number of court festivities called for all the available forces. During the 17th century the various separate events of a festival and the individual scenes (inventiones) of a ceremonial procession were grouped together on such occasions as princely baptisms, weddings, visits and birthdays, so that a Dresden court festival became a cyclical Gesamtkunstwerk involving sporting events, theatrical entertainments, hunting, fireworks, dance and ballet. Plays, often with musical interludes, were performed at court by touring companies including the 'English troop' of John Green, which visited Dresden and Torgau in 1626 and 1627. Works written in Dresden for the musical theatre in the 17th century tended to be hybrid forms such as plays with singing, sung ballet (based on the text of a play), comoedia, tragoedia and tragicomoedia, with or without songs. Schütz's Dafne of 1627, his sung ballet Orpheó und Euridice (1638), the anonymous ballet Paris und Helena (1650) and many other works were of this hybrid nature. Post-Monteverdi Venetian opera made its first appearance with Bontempi's Il Paride of 1662, and made its real breakthrough in Dresden with the 1667 production of P.A. Ziani's Il Teseo that opened the new Comödienhaus designed by Wolf Kaspar von Klengel. The great hall in the palace continued to be used for court festivities and ballets. In the mid-1680s Elector Johann Georg III engaged an ensemble of Italian singers for the Comödienhaus; these included Margherita Salicola of Mantua, Dresden's first prima donna, who scored a personal triumph in Carlo Pallavicino's La Gierusalemme liberata in 1687. Earlier productions included Bontempi and Peranda's Dafne (1671) and Jupiter und Io (1673, music now lost). In 1678 the ballet Von der Zusammenkunfft und Würckung derer 7 Planeten was performed on the occasion of the 'meeting of the Serene Highnesses' Johann Georg II and his three brothers, Augustus of Saxony-Weissenfels, Christian of Saxony-Merseburg and Moritz of Saxony-Zeitz (fig.5). This ballet, although attributed in 1931 to Bernhard, was in fact by one of the French dancing-masters at the Dresden court, perhaps François de la Marche, who was appointed to a post including duties as a composer in 1673. None of the music from other Dresden stage works of the period has been preserved.

2. 1694–1763.



(i) Music at court. The most glittering period in the history of music in Dresden began in 1694 with the accession of Elector Friedrich August I of Saxony (1670–1733), a member of the Wettin dynasty who converted to the Catholic faith in 1697 in order to acquire the Polish crown. As King August II (known as 'der Starke') of Poland, he became ruler of two domains, a

6. Banquet celebrating the 49th birthday of Elector Friedrich August I, 12 May 1718: drawing by Johann Friedrich Wentzel (Kupferstichkabinett, Dresden) situation that was to end abruptly in 1763 with Saxony's defeat in the Seven Years War and the deaths of his successors, the electors Friedrich August II (1696–1763, King August III of Poland) and Friedrich Christian (1722–63). However, during a period of some 70 years architecture, art and music were cultivated at the court of Dresden with a unique magnificence that cannot be accounted for solely by an absolute monarch's need for display. The phenomenon must also be seen as an expression of the personal artistic inclinations and interests of the princes, their wives and other members of their families.

Soon after converting to Catholicism, Friedrich August I dissolved the Hofkapelle and reorganized it into the Evangelische Hofkirchenmusik (which received relatively little royal support) and the main ensemble, the Churfürstlich Sächsische Capell- und Cammer-Musique, one of whose tasks was to participate in Catholic court services. The records of the Dresden Hofkapelle show that the Capell- und Cammer-Musique grew steadily, and around 1710 already had an orchestra equipped with the most up-to-date instruments of the time. The instrumentalists were highly qualified musicians who for the most part – in contrast to the usual practice of other Hofkapellen – specialized in a single instrument, so that the quality of performance was exceptionally high. Among the standard instruments available in the Kapelle were the 'modern' string instruments – violin, viola, cello and double bass – wind instruments including the transverse flute, oboe, bassoon and horn, and continuo instruments including lutes, pantaleon (an instrument resembling a dulcimer), harpsichord and organ (fig.6). The continuo players, who included such masters as L.S. Weiss and Pantaleon Hebestreit, were usually also chamber or church composers and responsible for providing the musical repertory. The court trumpeters and drummers formed an ensemble of their own, the highest-ranking of its kind in the Holy Roman Empire, but also played in the Hofkapelle when required. The standard instruments were on occasion supplemented by the recorder, chalumeau, oboe d'amore, viol and viola d'amore.

7. Te Deum in the Catholic court chapel, Dresden, following the marriage in Vienna of Crown Prince Friedrich August of Saxony and Archduchess Maria Josepha of Austria, 3 September 1719: drawing by Carl Heinrich Jacob Fehling (Kupferstichkabinett, Dresden)

The instrumental Kapelle was an international ensemble. Many wind players, for instance, were of the French school, while the Flemish-born J.B. Volumier (Woulmyer), who was leader of the orchestra from 1709, was also trained in France and brought his young orchestra to a remarkable level of technical accuracy, especially after the introduction of uniform bowing. The violin virtuoso J.G. Pisendel, who had been trained in the Italian style by Torelli in Ansbach, joined the Kapelle in 1712 and succeeded Volumier as leader in 1728, a post he held until his death in 1755. He had studied with Vivaldi in Venice in 1716–17, while accompanying the crown prince on his Grand Tour, an encounter that was to have a profound effect on the musical landscape of central and northern Germany in the following decades. Pisendel made Dresden and its Hofkapelle the major centre outside Italy for promoting the works, and above all the concertos, of the famous Venetian composer. The cultivation of Vivaldi's music in Dresden had a crucial influence on many native composers, including Bach, Fasch, Pisendel himself, Quantz and the Graun and Benda brothers.

During his stay in Venice in 1716–17 the crown prince, himself an ardent admirer of Italian music, engaged a number of famous instrumentalists and singers to form an Italian opera company in Dresden – a decision finally ratified by his father, although the elector's taste inclined much more towards French drama and music. Because of hostility from Volumier and the old Kapellmeister, J.C. Schmidt, it was not easy to integrate the Kapelle ensemble with the musicians engaged in Italy to perform in Dresden from September 1717. The newly recruited company, assembled by the composer Antonio Lotti (engaged up until 1719), included famous women singers such as the sopranos S.S. Lotti, M.C. Zani, known as Marucini, and Livia Constantini, known as La Polacchina, and the contralto Lucia Gaggi, known as Bavarini; and male singers including the castratos Francesco Bernardi, known as Senesino, Cajetano Berenstadt and Matteo Berselli; and the tenor Francesco Guicciardi; and the basses Lucrezio Borsari and G.M. Boschi, as well as the violin virtuoso F.M. Veracini and several violone players. The only German musician among them was J.D. Heinichen (1683–1729), who was also the only one of the musicians recruited in Italy to stay in Dresden for the rest of his life. Heinichen had originally been appointed as Lotti's deputy Kapellmeister with the opera, but his duties soon included the provision of serenatas and cantatas for court festivities. However, although he remained a Protestant, his principal task was to supervise and direct the Catholic Hofkirchenmusik (fig.7), to which he devoted himself as energetically as his poor health allowed. Outstanding among the many non-German musicians was the Bohemian J.D. Zelenka (1679–1745), who significantly enriched the repertories of the Dresden Kapelle and the court church. He was appointed to the Kapelle as a double bass player in about 1711, and after a few years spent studying composition (with Fux in Vienna, among others) he began writing sacred music of great originality. During the 1720s Zelenka had frequent opportunities to deputize for the ailing Heinichen in composing for the court church. However, neither the elector nor the crown prince cared particularly for his sacred compositions; and as a result Zelenka, an introverted and devout Catholic, never rose to the position of Kapellmeister, although he was acting Kapellmeister from Heinichen's death in 1729 until 1734. The title of Kirchen-Compositeur bestowed on him in 1735, without any rise in his salary, did nothing to mitigate his disappointment.

Other ensembles at the Saxon court included the court and hunt fifers, who were required to play for dramatic productions at mealtimes and at balls, and the so-called Kleine oder Pohlnische Cammer-Musique, who also performed music for King August II when he was in Poland and for the performances of the Comici Italiani, an Italian operatic company independent of the court opera. King August III, however, dismissed this 'troupe of travelling musicians' when he came to the throne, and in 1733 re-founded the royal Kapelle in Warsaw, which had been dissolved by his father.

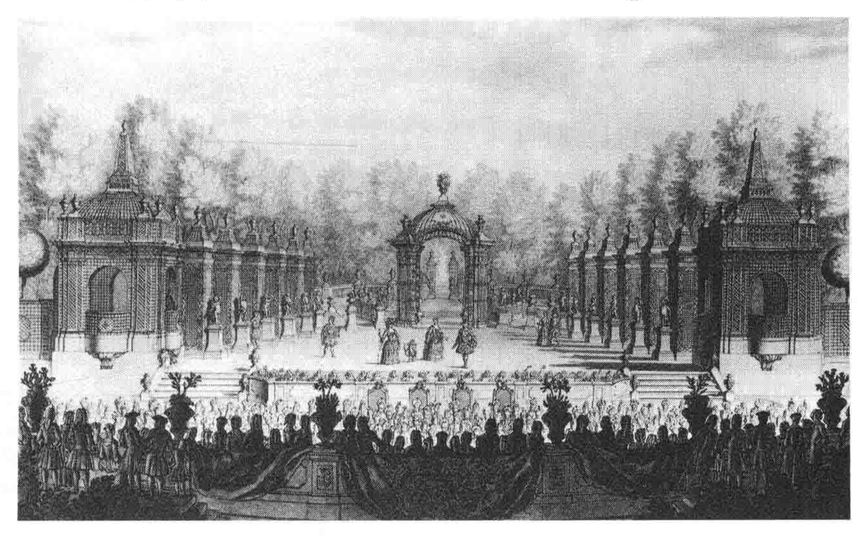
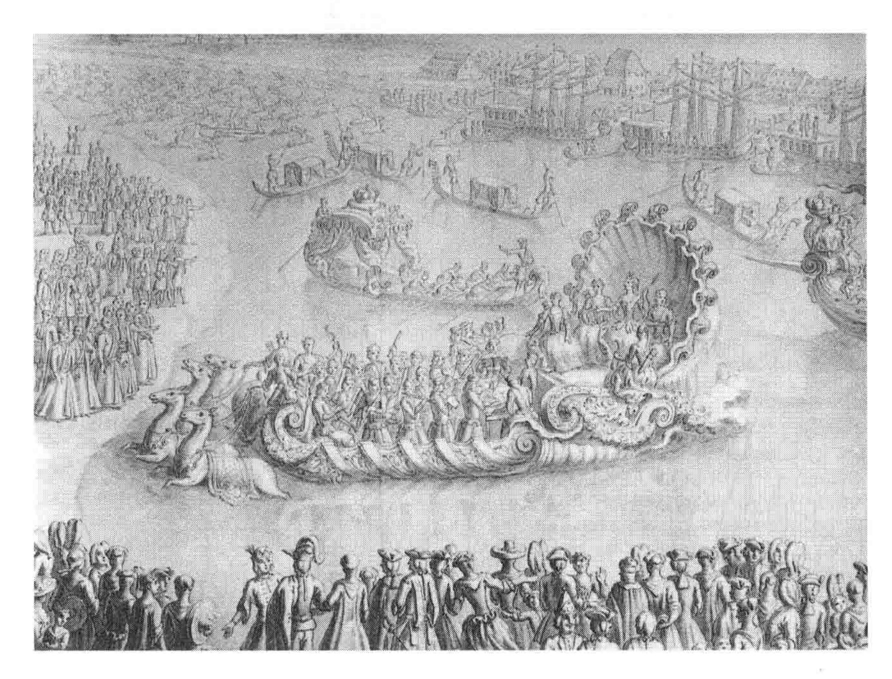
Among the most famous instrumentalists in the Dresden Kapelle during the period 1694 to 1763 were F.M. Cattaneo and J.G. Lehneiss (violin); Johann Adam (viola); J.P. de Tilloy and A.A. de Rossi (cello); C.F. Abel (viol); Girolamo Personè (double bass); the flautists Buffardin, Quantz and F.J. Götzel; the oboists François le Riche, J.C. Richter and Antonio Besozzi; and the horn players J.A. Fischer, F.A. Samm, the Schindler brothers and A.J. Hampel. Outstanding singers, in addition to those mentioned above, included the sopranos Margherita Durastani, Vittoria Tesi, Faustina Bordini (Hasse's wife), Regina Mingotti, and Teresa Albuzzi-Todeschini; the castratos Andrea Ruota, Nicola Pozzi, Giovanni Bindi, A.M. Monticelli and Felice Salimbeni; and the tenors and basses J.J. Götzel, Angelo Amorevoli and Joseph Schuster.

Until 1763 the large Hofkapelle comprised not only instrumental players but also the singers of the Italian opera and the Catholic Hofkirche (with the exception of the pupils in the boys' school of the Kapelle, founded in 1708). In effect, the Hofkapelle was divided into its three distinct components after 1717. The Italian opera, while involved in court festivities in the autumn and during the carnival season, attracted the most public attention, since anyone 'suitably dressed' could have free entry to its performances. At first the great majority of the Protestant population showed little interest in the music of the Hofkirche. However, it grew in reputation in the second half of the century, after the dedication of Chiaveri's new church in 1751, and eventually became a notable musical attraction in the city. The third element of the Hofkapelle, the court chamber or 'concert' music, comprising music for instrumental ensembles of various sizes and vocal music ranging from solo cantatas to serenatas for large numbers of singers, was exclusively for court society, and it was a great honour for foreign visitors to be allowed to listen to performances from a neighbouring room. The scale of its musical activity ensured the Hofkapelle a dominant position in the musical life of Dresden in the 18th century, and it is not surprising that it tended to eclipse other musical activities in the city.

The cosmopolitan nature of the Kapelle was a determining factor in Dresden's becoming a centre of what Quantz described as the 'mixed or German style'. This was not merely a synthesis of the Italian, French and German styles, but also included galant and folk elements, the latter derived from the popular comic intermezzos performed by French and Italian comedians, and the traditional music of Poland and Bohemia cultivated by musicians from those countries who were active at the Saxon court.



Handel and Telemann both visited Dresden in September 1719 for the festivities to celebrate the wedding of Crown Prince Friedrich August to Maria Josepha, eldest daughter of Joseph I of Austria (fig.8). The climax of the festivities was the production of three operas by Lotti, Giove in Argo, Ascanio and Teofane. These were given in the newly opened opera house on the Zwinger designed by Pöppelmann, which with a capacity of 2000 was one of the largest in Europe (fig.9). The predominantly Venetian operatic ensemble engaged by the crown prince scored a triumph in these performances. However, soon after the festivities the Italian opera company broke up. Its best singers were recruited by Handel for his London company, and Lotti returned to Venice in accordance with the terms of his contract. In 1726, however, the opera opened again with a new company of younger singers. Hasse and his wife Faustina Bordoni were brought from Venice in 1731. He achieved a great success with his opera Cleofide, which had its première on 13 September, but returned with Faustina to Italy shortly afterwards. However, in 1734, after the accession of Friedrich August II, Hasse and his wife were engaged at the Dresden court as Hofkapellmeister and prima donna. Two years later Bach was granted the title of court composer for which he had petitioned in 1733, presenting to the elector the Kyrie and Gloria of what was to become the B minor Mass.



Hasse had immense influence both as composer and Kapellmeister, and was notably adept at gauging and, in turn, forming the musical tastes of his court audiences. The productions of his opere serie increasingly became sophisticated syntheses of the arts, equally remarkable for the quality of singing and orchestral playing and for the lavish scenery created by such leading stage designers as Andrea Zucchi, Giuseppe Galli-Bibiena and G.N. Servandoni. The elector's birthday on 7 October was always celebrated by the première of a new opera by Hasse in the wooden theatre (destroyed in 1763) at the castle of Hubertsburg, near Wermsdorf.

After 1751, when Chiaveri's new Hofkirche was consecrated, church music increasingly came to rival opera in importance. Hasse composed his Mass in D minor, Te Deum and Regina coeli especially for the Hofkirche, and before leaving Dresden after the Seven Years War composed his Requiem for August III and Crown Prince Friedrich Christian. After 1764, when Hasse was discharged and moved to Vienna and later to Venice, he still retained the title of Oberkapellmeister of the Electorate of Saxony and maintained contact with Dresden; his last three masses (1779, 1780 and 1783) were all written for the city.

Saxony's defeat in the Seven Years War in 1763, and the deaths soon afterwards of two of its electors, brought to an end the political and economic dominance of the electorate. Dresden's brilliant Augustan Age was over, and the government's preoccupation with economic recovery and the rebuilding of the capital after the Prussian bombardment inevitably restricted interest in the arts for the next few years.

(ii) Church and municipal music. Throughout the Augustan Age, only the music of the city's three main Lutheran churches provided any counterweight to the dominance of music at court. The pupils of the Kreuzschule provided the sacred vocal music in the new Frauenkirche building designed by George Bähr, begun in 1726 and consecrated in 1734 (it was destroyed in 1945; work began on a new building in 1992). Since 1672 the Kreuzschule pupils performed figural music in the older building, the dilapidated medieval church dedicated to the Virgin, founded some time after 1142 and eventually demolished. (The old Frauenkirche had also been a favourite burial site; Schütz was laid to rest there in 1672.) The Kantor of the Kreuzkirche, T.C. Reinhold (1682–1755), who held office from 1720 until his death, composed festive cantatas (now lost) for the laying of the foundation stone in 1726, the consecration of the church in 1734, and the dedication of the great organ designed by Gottfried Silbermann and built in the years 1732 to 1736. On 1 December 1736 Bach gave a two-hour concert before representatives of the court and 'a great many other personages and artists, upon the new [Silbermann] organ' (Bach-Dokumente, II, no.389).

8. Festivities held in honour of the marriage of Crown Prince Friedrich August to Maria Josepha of Austria, 1719, including a performance of Johann Christoph Schmidt's divertissement 'Les quatre saisons' (23 September) at the theatre in the Grosser Garten (above), and the Festival of Diana on the Elbe (18 September), with Heinichen directing the orchestra of the Dresden Hofkapelle (below): drawings by an unknown artist, pen and ink with wash (Kupferstichkabinett, Dresden)

The Kreuzschule pupils performed mainly in the Kreuzkirche, formerly the Nikolaikirche but renamed in 1388 in honour of its relic, a splinter from the Cross of Christ. The school attached to the church maintained several choirs whose members, particularly the pauperes, earned money for their keep and education by singing for alms in the streets.

The choirs had performed polyphonic music even before the Reformation. During the first two thirds of the 18th century they performed both the older repertory (J.Z. Grundig, Kantor of the Kreuzkirche from 1713 to 1720, left manuscript versions of Schütz's three Passions and Peranda's Markuspassion) and cantatas and motets by T.C. Reinhold, Kantor of the Kreuzkirche, and his successor in that post, G.A. Homilius (1714–85). While none of Reinhold's musical works has survived, Homilius wrote a wealth of impressive cantatas and motets which he regularly performed from 1755 onwards with the Kreuzchor and the Dresden municipal musicians. After the Kreuzkirche and its organ (built by Tobias Weller, 1642–4) were destroyed by fire in 1760, the Frauenkirche became the temporary home of the Kreuzchor and its Kantor, Homilius, until the construction of the new Kreuzkirche.

The Sophienkirche (destroyed in 1945 and later demolished), a Gothic building with a double nave dating from 1351, was used for civic services after 1599, and after the closing of the Lutheran castle chapel in 1737 it also became the Lutheran court church. The Sophienkirche's own organists were employed by the city as early as 1695; among the most important organists here in the 18th century were Christian Pezold (1677–1733, also chamber organist and harpsichordist of the Hofkapelle) and his immediate successor W.F. Bach, who held the post until 1747 and was employed by the city alone. In 1720 the Gothic church acquired a fine organ built by Gottfried Silbermann.

9. Interior of the court theatre on the Zwinger, Dresden, designed by Matthäus Daniel Pöppelmann, interior decoration by Alessandro Mauro, opened 1719; drawing by Carl Heinrich Jacob Fehling, pen and ink with wash (Kupferstichkabinett, Dresden)

Other musicians working in Dresden in the late 17th and the 18th centuries included the instrumentalists of the Stadtmusik, several military bands and a large number of freelance musicians. From 1679 to 1698 Daniel Weber, who described himself as a master musician able to play all the wind and string instruments, was Stadtmusicus, i.e. leader and teacher of the Stadtpfeifer journeymen. Until about 1740 this post was still linked to that of Türmer, watchman of the Kreuzkirche tower. Weber was succeeded (until 1735) by Gottfried Heyne, who had studied in the imperial Kapelle in Vienna. Under the Stadtmusicus J.P. Weiss, active from 1735 to 1751, there was particularly close cooperation between the instrumentalists of the Stadtmusik and the Kreuzchor, whose Kantor Reinhold was appointed director musices. Weiss was succeeded as Stadtmusicus by G.H. Schnaucke, who was in turn succeeded in 1766 by J.F. Lange, the first in a line of retired military bandsmen who were to hold the post of Dresden Stadtmusicus in the future.

Theatrical and operatic companies were welcomed in Dresden, supplementing performances by the court opera, although their activities were always dependent on permission from court. The Mingotti brothers' famous opera company was particularly popular, and performed in Dresden in 1747–8 in its own wooden theatre on the Zwinger. The first opera buffa seen in Dresden, Galuppi's Il mondo alla roversa, was given in 1754 by G.B. Locatelli in the theatre on the Brühlsche Terrasse. Locatelli had a great success with this production, and returned in 1755–6 with further opere buffe by Galuppi and Domenico Fischietti. In 1755 Pietro Moretti built a small new theatre on the Zwinger, the Komödienhaus, where he staged plays and comic operas; he later held concerts there, and performed Italian intermezzos in 1762–3.

Little is known about musical life in the noblemen's houses and embassies of Dresden during the Augustan Age, since few archival records survive. Some great houses maintained their own private Kapelle, of which the most famous was the ensemble maintained by the prime minister Brühl from 1735 to 1763.

3. 1763–1815. The Seven Years War cost Saxony several hundred million Taler. Much of Dresden was destroyed by the Prussian bombardment of 1760; the former princes' palace was burnt down, with the loss of the court musical archives, including many works by Schütz. After 1763 an urgently needed programme of economic reform was implemented and expenditure on cultural life drastically reduced. The enforced economies inevitably affected Dresden's musical institutions. The large opera house on the Zwinger was closed (its last production was J.G. Naumann's La clemenza di Tito produced for the marriage of Elector Friedrich August III in 1769). Hasse, Faustina Bordoni and the Italian opera company were dismissed without pensions. The small Komödienhaus on the Zwinger, which had been rebuilt in 1761, was made available from 1763 to theatre companies subsidized by the court, and was a home to a newly constituted Italian opera company under the direction of Giuseppe Bustelli (1765–78), Antonio Bertoldi (1780–87) and Andrea Bertoldi (1787–1813). The theatre was also used for German and French plays. Friedrich August III's formal accession to power after he came of age in 1768 had a beneficial effect on musical life, partly because the elector himself was a distinguished connoisseur of music and an excellent keyboard player capable of playing from a full score. Under Friedrich August III the court orchestra, which as before fulfilled a threefold function in opera, church and chamber music, gradually revived. Successful Kapellmeister who worked with the orchestra during this period included J.G. Schürer, Domenico Fischietti, J.G. Naumann, Joseph Schuster, Franz Seydelmann, Ferdinando Paer and Francesco Morlacchi, while notable instrumentalists included the violinists J.B.G. Neruda, Franz Hunt and Cristoforo Babbi (Konzertmeister from 1781), the viola player Joseph Schubert, the cellists J.B. Tricklir and Friedrich Dotzauer, the double bass players J.C. Horn and F.A. Schubert, the flautist J.F. Printz and the oboist Carlo Besozzi. Naumann was the outstanding figure of the period; under his direction (1776–1801) the Kapelle regained its former reputation, while his numerous sacred compositions significantly enriched the repertory of church music at the Dresden court. Chamber music also began to flourish again under Schuster's direction. Unlike church music, which drew mainly on works by local composers, instrumental music became increasingly orientated towards Vienna. From the 1780s the repertory of the Kapelle included many of Haydn and Mozart's latest instrumental works (Mozart played his so-called Coronation Concerto, K537, at the Dresden court in 1789), as well as symphonies, concertos and chamber music by C.P.E. Bach, Clementi and others.

Many notable Italian singers sang at the court opera during this period, including Angiola Calori, Maddalena Allegranti, Domenico Guardasoni, Filippo Sassaroli, Francesco Ceccarelli, A.P. Benetti, Charlotte Haeser and Luigia Sandrini-Caravoglia. From the 1760s the emphasis shifted towards opera buffa and large-scale intermezzos, while at the end of the 18th century, following the general trend, opera semiseria became popular. Composers performed by the court opera included Anfossi, Galuppi, Cimarosa, Paisiello, Piccinni, Salieri and Paer (Kapellmeister from 1801 to 1807). Così fan tutte was given at the court theatre in 1791, but Don Giovanni and Le nozze di Figaro did not enter the repertory until 1813 and 1815 respectively.

From the 1770s the Dresden bourgeoisie developed an increasing interest in theatre- and concert-going. The production of Schuster's Singspiel Der Alchymist oder der Liebesteufel (to a libretto by A.G. Meissner) in March 1778 by a German troupe under Pasquale Bondini led to his forming a permanent Singspiel company in Dresden. Other theatre companies of the period, all of them enjoying financial support from the court, included those of J.G. Wäser (1770–72), C.T. Doebbelin (1774–5), A. Seyler (1775–7) and Franz Seconda (1793–1814). Singspiele by Hiller, Georg Benda, Schweitzer and others were performed in the Kleines Kurfürstliches Theater and in the Theater auf dem Linckeschen Bade. Richard Engländer's research indicates the encouragement that Seyler's company gave to German opera in the eyes not only of the public but of local composers. Schuster and Seydelmann both composed Singspiele and Naumann adapted several of his own works into German. From 1790 to 1817 the Gesellschaft der Deutscher Schauspieler of Joseph Seconda (brother of Franz) staged various operas in German for the Dresden public. These included several works by Mozart (Die Entführung aus dem Serail, 1791; Die Zauberflöte, 1793; Le nozze di Figaro, 1795; Don Giovanni, 1795; La clemenza di Tito, 1796), Gluck's Iphigénie en Tauride, Beethoven's Fidelio and Weber's Abu Hassan and Silvana. From 1813 to 1814 E.T.A. Hoffmann conducted the orchestra of Seconda's company.

Various concert activities were initiated in Dresden in the 1770s, including Schönberg's Donnerstags-Concerte about 1775, the Bassemann subscription concerts under Naumann's direction in 1779, and the Grosse Konzerte, which took place in the Hôtel de Pologne under Schuster's direction. Music was also privately encouraged in the homes of the bourgeoisie and aristocracy, and Naumann, Schuster, Seydelmann and other local composers wrote many accompanied songs for domestic performance. Numerous piano teachers worked in Dresden, of whom the most significant was Christoph Transchel, a pupil of J.S. Bach. The closing years of the 18th century also saw the beginnings of music publishing in the city. A Singekreis met at the home of a city councillor, C.G. Körner, from 1805, and two years later the court organist Anton Dreyssig founded a Singakademie (see §4).

Music flourished at the three main Protestant churches in the city, the Frauenkirche, Kreuzkirche and Sophienkirche. The choir of the Kreuzkirche, in particular, was renowned for its high standards; from 1755 its director was G.A. Homilius, several of whose sacred works remained popular into the 19th and 20th centuries. Homilius was succeeded by C.E. Weinlig (1785–1813) and his nephew, C.T. Weinlig (1814–17). The choir of the Kreuzkirche also sang at the opera, and took part in the first Dresden performance of Haydn's The Creation on 2 May 1800.

4. 1815–1914. At the turn of the 19th century there was a late flowering of Italian opera in Dresden, with the court Kapellmeister Ferdinando Paer (1802–6) and Francesco Morlacchi (1810–41) as its most prominent exponents. Italian opera was performed in the Kleines Hoftheater or Morettisches Theater, which ceased to be an independent institution in 1832. German Singspiel and French opéra comique (sung in German translation) were performed in the Theatre auf dem Linckeschen Bade. This theatre was taken over by the Hoftheater in 1816 and remained in use until 1858.

When the management of the Köngliche Kapelle and the Hoftheater decided to found a German opera company, Weber was appointed music director of the new 'Deutsches Department'. He took up the post in January 1817 and was promoted to Hofkapellmeister in September of that year. In 1817 the German opera had 16 solo singers and a chorus of 34. Morlacchi was Weber's colleague as Kapellmeister of the Italian opera, which numbered 13 solo singers in 1817. In the same year the Königliche Kapelle consisted of 63 musicians with permanent posts and some 15 trainees. In 1826 Morlacchi set up a benevolent fund for the widows and orphans of musicians, the money to be provided by concerts. The first was a performance of Haydn's The Creation on 29 December 1826, and from 1827 these concerts were regularly held on the Sunday before Easter.

Weber composed Der Freischütz, Euryanthe and most of Oberon in Dresden. His early death in 1826 was a severe setback to the further development of the German opera. In 1824 Heinrich Marschner was engaged as music director of the German opera, but tension between him and Weber caused him to leave Dresden in 1826. After Weber's death C.G. Reissiger was appointed music director of the Dresden Hofoper in November 1826, holding the post of second Kapellmeister from 1828 to 1851 and of principal Kapellmeister from 1851 to 1859. A highly accomplished musician, he staged works by Mozart, Weber and others, invited Berlioz to give concerts in Dresden, added Verdi's Nabucco and Ernani to the repertory and on 20 October 1842 conducted the première of Wagner's Rienzi. Reissiger was also prominent as a composer and produced several of his own operas, including Die Felsenmühle (1831).

The Dresden Hoftheater usually had two Kapellmeister and one music director who shared conducting duties and provided church music for services in the Catholic Hofkirche. The Königliches Sächsisches Hoftheater, designed by Gottfried Semper and sometimes known as the Semper Opernhaus, was opened on 12 April 1841 (fig.10). In 1842 the orchestra consisted of 56 permanent members and 17 trainees, and included some famous virtuosos, among them the principal Konzertmeister K.J. Lipiński. Among the 20-strong ensemble of solo singers were Wilhelmine Schröder-Devrient, Henriette Wüst, Joseph Tichatschek and Anton Mitterwurzer. The chorus numbered 43 singers, and there were 17 dancers.

Wagner was second Hofkapellmeister in Dresden from 1843 to 1849. After the successful première of Rienzi (fig.11), two further Wagner operas received their premières in Dresden: Der fliegende Holländer on 2 January 1843, and Tannhäuser on 19 October 1845. On 28 April 1848, while he was still in Dresden, Wagner completed the score of Lohengrin. However, his active participation in the Dresden May Rising of 1849 forced him to flee the city. After Wagner's departure Dresden continued to be one of the leading German operatic centres. The repertory of the Hoftheater consisted of 35 to 40 operas a year, with as many as 15 new productions each season. Wagner was succeeded as Hofkapellmeister by K.A. Krebs (1850–72).

In 1850 Reissiger founded the 'Aschermittwochs-Konzerte' and from 1858 organized subscription concerts given by the Hofkapelle. In addition, the Musicalische Academien of the Hofkapelle were held in the rooms of the Hôtel de Pologne and the Hôtel de Saxe. These concerts featured many of the most celebrated singers and instrumental virtuosos of the period. Among composers engaged to conduct their own works in Dresden were Berlioz, Mendelssohn, Schumann and Liszt. During the winter season of 1845–6 in the Hôtel de Saxe a series of six subscription concerts was given on the initiative of Ferdinand Hiller and Schumann, who lived in Dresden from 1844 to 1850. Joachim and Clara Schumann were among the soloists, and on 4 December 1845 Clara gave the première of her husband's Piano Concerto in A Minor at a concert conducted by Hiller.

10. Königliches Sächsisches Hoftheater, designed by Gottfried Semper: lithograph

11. Interior of the Dresden Hoftheater during the closing scene of Wagner's 'Rienzi', Act 4: engraving from the 'Illustrirte Zeitung' [Leipzig] (12 August 1843)

On 24 May 1854 musicians of the Hofkapelle formed the Dresden Tonkünstlerverein. The prime purpose of this society was to play contemporary chamber music. Regular quartet societies made up by members of the orchestra were formed as early as 1811, so that chamber music must have been publicly performed since that time. The deputy Kapellmeister Franz Schubert was first violin in a string quartet from 1836, and Lipiński founded another quartet. From 1846 to 1850 Schumann organized matinée performances of chamber music in the Coselsche Palais, the Hôtel de Saxe and at other locations.

In 1856 the Dresden Conservatory was founded on the initiative of the chamber musician Friedrich Tröstler. It soon began to prosper, with such teachers of composition as Felix Draeske (from 1884).

Summer open-air concerts were a particular feature of musical life in Dresden at this time. They were given in the Grosser Garten, the theatre on the Linckescher Bad and on the Brühlsche Terrasse by military and civil bands and the Stadtmusikkorps.

Catholic sacred music was performed in the Catholic Hofkirche. Until the 1870s it was characterized by the performance of masses with orchestral accompaniment; but with the appointment of Franz Wüllner in 1877 greater prominence was given to a cappella music. The singers were exclusively male until 1864, when women were admitted as soloists.

The three main Protestant churches of Dresden, the Kreuzkirche, the Frauenkirche and the Sophienkirche, always had excellent church musicians. The Kantor of the Kreuzkirche was also director musices, and in that post supervised the sacred music of all three churches. In addition, he directed the choir of the Kreuzschule, which provided choral music at the Kreuzkirche, and on certain Sundays and church festivals also performed sacred music at the Frauenkirche and the municipal Sophienkirche. Until 1886 the choir of the Kreuzschule had 32 pupils and 22 'Kurrendaner' (members of a youth choir who sang in the streets for alms). The whole choir performed at the principal services in the Dresden Kreuzkirche; the pupils alone sang at the other services. Julius Otto, Kantor of the Kreuzkirche from 1828 to 1875, composed both sacred and secular music. Under Kantor Oskar Wermann (1875–1906), the choir of the Kreuzschule was reinforced in 1886 by 12 further 'Kurrendaner'. Wermann gave particular prominence to the works of J.S. Bach and to a cappella music from Palestrina to Brahms. He himself composed some 150 works. His successor Otto Richter (1906–30) founded the mixed-voice Dresden Bachverein in 1911.

Several outstanding organists played the Silbermann organ in the Frauenkirche. The church's excellent acoustics and imposing size made it a frequent venue for concerts of sacred music, benefit concerts and memorial concerts. The Sophienkirche was both the Protestant court church and a municipal parish church. In its capacity as the Protestant court church, figural music was performed there by the Hofchor until 1828. From 1828 to 1874 this choir consisted of six choirboys and four trainees, as well as four tenors and basses who were studying at the Friedrichstadt teachers' seminary. From 1874 to 1882 the male choristers were temporarily replaced by eight members of the court opera chorus. In 1883 Wüllner recommended an increase in the number of choirboys and male choristers, and from 1895 the Protestant Kapellknabeninstitut had 48 choirboys, with an additional 12 trainees, while the number of seminary students in the men's choir rose to 36. The Kapellknaben institut continued in existence until 1923.

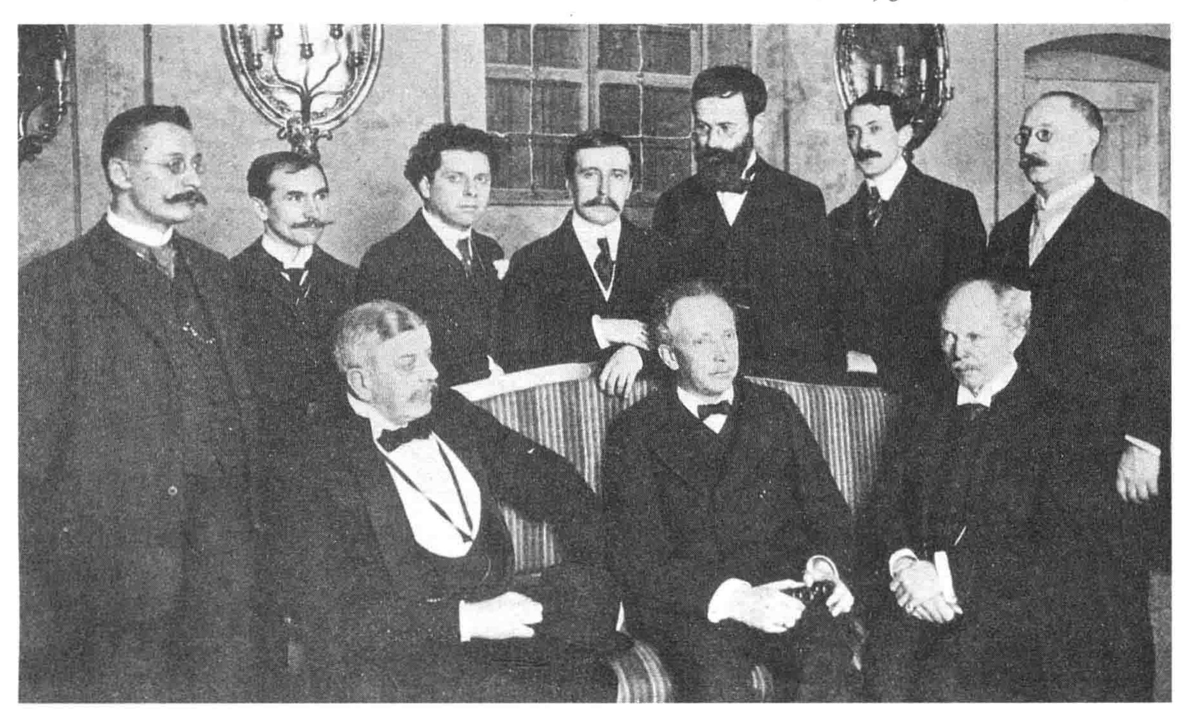
Dresden played a prominent role in the 19th-century German male-voice choir movement. Reissiger, Schumann and Julius Otto, among others, wrote many works for male chorus. In 1850 there were some 50 male-voice choirs in Dresden, the best known being the Orpheus, founded in 1834, and the Dresden Liedertafel, founded in 1839. The first major German male-voice choral festivals were held in Dresden in 1842 and 1843. Wagner, who was conductor of the Liedertafel from 1843 to 1845, conducted the première of his biblical scene Das Liebesmahl der Apostel in the Dresden Frauenkirche at the 1843 festival, with forces including 1200 singers from several Saxon male-voice choirs and 100 instrumentalists from the Dresden Hofkapelle. In July 1865 Dresden was also the location of the First German Sängerbundfest, in which 16,000 singers took part.



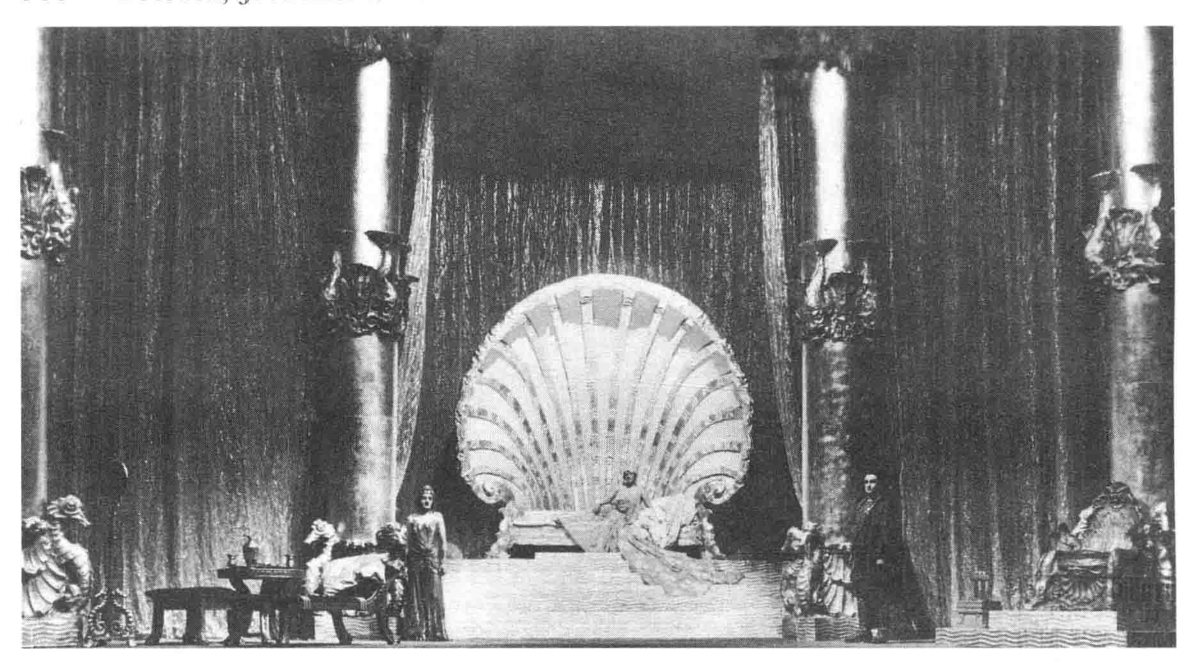
Following the example of the Berlin Sing-Akademie, the Dreyssigsche Singakademie was founded in Dresden on 5 March 1807 by Anton Dreyssig, organist at the Catholic Hofkirche. Sacred works and oratorios formed the nucleus of its repertory. The court organist J.G. Schneider, who directed the Dreyssigsche Singakademie from 1832 to 1857, was renowned for his performances of oratorio. He was also well known as organist of the Protestant court church, and shone as an organ virtuoso at the first World Exhibition in London in 1852. Another oustanding Dresden organist was G.A. Merkel (1827–85), a pupil of Schneider who held posts at the Kreuzkirche and the Catholic Hofkirche. He directed the Dreyssigsche Singakademie from 1867 to 1873 and composed many works for organ and piano. Schumann took over the musical direction of the Dresden Liedertafel from Hiller in 1847 and founded the Verein für Chorgesang the following year.

In 1860, the year after Reissiger's death, Julius Rietz became director of the Hofoper and orchestra; he was appointed the city's first Generalmusikdirektor in 1874. In 1872 Ernst von Schuch was appointed music director at the Dresden Hoftheater. He was promoted to Kapellmeister in 1873, and to principal Kapellmeister in 1879. As a consequence he had considerable influence on the shaping of the repertory and the choice of conductors. Franz Wüllner was appointed to Dresden in 1877 to succeed Rietz, but conflict soon developed between him and Schuch. Wüllner finally left the Dresden Hofoper in 1882 to concentrate on the music of the Catholic Hofkirche. On his departure Schuch reigned supreme. He was appointed Generalmusikdirektor in 1889 and built up an outstanding ensemble of soloists, restoring Dresden's status as one of the leading operatic cities of the world.

When Semper's famous round theatre was destroyed by fire in 1869, a wooden building served as a temporary stage for performances of opera and drama. It was used until Semper's second theatre was opened on 2 February 1878. Under Schuch many Italian operas had their first Dresden productions in the new theatre, among them works by Verdi, Puccini, Leoncavallo and Mascagni. Schuch also gave all of Wagner's 11 masterpieces, and sought to extend the repertory by staging the latest operas by Bungert and Draeseke, encouraging the production of operas by Slav composers, and conducting operas from earlier periods. In his concerts Schuch paid special attention not only to the Viennese Classical masters but also to his contemporaries Brahms, Bruckner, Mahler, Reger, Strauss and Skryabin. In 1900 he founded his famous Strauss ensemble (fig.12), and subsequently gave the premières of four Strauss operas: Feuersnot (1901), Salome (1905), Elektra (1909) and Der Rosenkavalier (1911). When Schuch died on 10 May 1914, a brilliant era in the history of music in Dresden came to a close.

In the first half of the 19th century the instrumentalists of the Stadtmusik were required to perform sacred music at the Kreuzkirche, Frauenkirche, Sophienkirche and Dreikönigskirche in turn, and from 1843 to 1861 these duties were extended to cover the Annenkirche and Matthäikirche as well. They played in oratorios and other performances by the choral societies of Dresden, and at outdoor concerts. Although the municipal ensemble, now known as the Stadtkapelle, had acquired an ideal hall in 1870 in the form of the newly opened Gewerbehaus, where they regularly gave symphony concerts, their director Erdmann Puffholdt resigned in 1872; the city council then abolished the post, and the Stadtkapelle ceased to exist as an institution. A successor, the Gewerbehaus Orchestra, was immediately formed, and eventually became the Dresden Philharmonic. Even in the 19th century the orchestra made tours of Russia, Poland, the Netherlands, Scandinavia and North America. Conductors included H.G. Mannsfeldt (1871–85), J.L. Nicodé (1885–8), Brahms, Strauss, Tchaikovsky, Dvořák, von Bülow, d'Albert, Mottl and Nikisch.

5. From 1914. In 1923 the orchestra, then under J.G. Mraczek, became known as the Dresdner Philharmonie. In 1924 it changed its constitution, becoming a cooperative instead of a private organization. Its earliest conductors were Eduard Mörike (1924–9), Paul Scheinpflug (1929–32) and Werner Ladwig (1932–4); in 1934 the Dutch Paul van Kempen took over, turning the orchestra into one of the most famous in the world. He performed both the Classical and Romantic repertories but concentrated particularly on contemporary music, establishing festivals of modern music (1935–42) and founding the tradition of a 'Dresden Musiksommer', in which the Staatsoper (as the court opera was called after World War I), the Kreuzchor and the conservatory also took part. In 1928 Erich Schneider, then Kantor at the Frauenkirche, had performed serenade concerts in the Zwingerhof, conducting the orchestra of the Dresdner Mozart-Verein; the practice was revived by the Philharmonie in 1935. Kempen was forced to leave in 1942 by the Nazi authorities. Otto Matzerath, Bernardino Molinari and, finally, Carl Schuricht, the new principal conductor, conducted the Philharmonie's concerts until the orchestra was disbanded following the declaration of total war in autumn 1944.



12. Richard Strauss with leading members of the Dresden Opera in 1910: (seated, left to right) Count Seebach (director general), Strauss, Ernst von Schuch (general music director); (standing, left to right) Max Hasait (technical director), Otto Altenkirch (scenic artist), Max Reinhardt, Hugo von Hofmannsthal (librettist), Alfred Roller (set designer), Leonhard Fanto (costume designer) and Georg Toller (director)

During and after World War I the Staatsoper had such eminent conductors as Hermann Kutzschbach (1898–1906, 1909–36), Kurt Striegler (1909–45, 1952–3) and Fritz Reiner (1914–21), who conducted the German première of Strauss's Die Frau ohne Schatten there in 1919. Fritz Busch became general musical director and director of the opera in 1922, remaining until driven from office by the Nazis in 1933. He further raised the orchestra's standards and in both the opera house and the concert hall gave particular encouragement to contemporary composers including Pfitzner, Busoni (Doktor Faust, 1925), Hindemith (Cardillac, 1926), Weill (Der Protagonist, 1926) and Schoeck (Penthesilea, 1927). He continued the Strauss tradition with the premères of Intermezzo (1924) and Die ägyptische Helena (1928; fig.13), the latter conducted by the composer; and with the general administrator Alfred Reucker he built up an ensemble of fine young singers, including Elisabeth Rethberg, Marta Fuchs, Maria Cebotari, Erna Berger and Paul Schöffler. After a brief interregnum, which witnessed the première of Strauss's Arabella (1933) under Clemens Krauss, Karl Böhm took over control of both the opera and the orchestra (1934–42). Strauss's Die schweigsame Frau, which had its première in 1935, was taken off by the authorities after four performances, because the librettist Stefan Zweig was a Jew. Böhm also conducted the premières of Der Günstling by Wagner-Régeny (1935), Strauss's Daphne (1938) and Sutermeister's Romeo und Julia (1940). Böhm's successor in 1943–4 was Karl Elmendorff, who conducted the première of Joseph Haas's Die Hochzeit des Jobs (1944) with Matthieu Ahlersmeyer and Elfride Trötschel in the leading roles. Semper's opera house, like all of the Dresden theatres, was destroyed by bombing in 1945.

The Tonkünstlerverein was presided over from 1914 to 1939 by Theo Bauer and then, until the 1944 ban, by Arthur Tröber, who was later the orchestra's manager for many years (1955–69) and who continued the society's traditions after the war with the Kammermusik der Staatskapelle Dresden in 1952. The leading chamber ensembles and soloists continue to shape this important aspect of Dresden's musical life, together with the chamber recitals of the Philharmonie players, as they did during the early decades of the 20th century. Particular mention should be made of the Gustav Havemann Quartet (1921) and those of Max Strub (1936) and Jan Dahmen. More recent chamber ensembles include the Dresden Piano Trio, the Ulbrich Quartet and the Siering Quartet.

In order to train a new generation of players in the traditions of the Dresden Staatskapelle the Orchesterschule der Sächsischen Staatskapelle (before World War I the Königliche Kapelle) was founded in 1923; its artistic control was entrusted to Fritz Busch and later to Karl Böhm. An opera school and seminary for music training were later incorporated with the orchestral school and the two bodies were amalgamated in 1937 as the Konservatorium der Landeshauptstadt Dresden, also known as the Akademie für Musik und Theater. After the war (as early as June 1945) teaching began again in the Staatliche Akademie für Musik und Theater; its rector from 1946 to 1951 was the Prague composer Fidelio F. Finke, who lived in Dresden until his death in 1968. The institute received university status in 1952, during the rectorship of the musicologist Karl Laux (1951–63), and was renamed the Staatliche Hochschule für Musik Carl Maria von Weber. A department of musicology under Gerd Schönfelder was established in 1974. Since 1992 musicology has also been taught at the Technische Universität. The Sächsische Landeskirchenmusikschule was founded in Dresden in 1949 (now the Hochschule für Kirchenmusik). In 1995 several music colleges in the city merged to form the Heinrich Schütz Konservatorium.

13. Closing scene of Act 1 from Richard Strauss's 'Die ägyptische Helena', Staatsoper, Dresden, 6 June 1928, set and costume designs by Leonhard Fanto, with Elisabeth Rethberg (Helen, centre), Maria Rajdl (Aithra, left) and Curt Taucher (Menelaus)

The Dresden Philharmonie began giving concerts again on 8 June 1945, within a month of the end of the war. From 1947 to 1964 its artistic manager was Heinz Bongartz, who secured the orchestra's financial future as a state institution in 1950 and who raised it to new heights of artistic excellence. He gave further emphasis to the cycles of concerts founded by Mörike in 1925 in order to educate audiences, and increased the amount of time spent on foreign tours, thereby adding to the orchestra's international reputation. In 1961 the Philharmonie was appointed a founder-member of the Prague Dvořák Society and in 1966 its services on behalf of Mahler's works were rewarded with a gold medal from the International Gustav Mahler Society of Vienna. Bongartz's successors were H. Förster (1964–7) and Kurt Masur (1967–72); during Masur's tenure the orchestra, considerably enlarged, moved to a new permanent home in Dresden's imposing Palace of Culture (1969; fig.14). From 1972 to 1977 the orchestra's principal conductor was Günther Herbig, whose successors have been Herbert Kegel, Jörg-Peter Weigle, Michel Plasson and, from 2001, Marek Janowski.

The Staatsoper and Staatskapelle also survived the city's destruction in 1945 and continued for a time to perform in temporary halls until 1948, when the former Schauspielhaus was reopened as the Grosses Haus of the state theatre complex. From 1945 to 1950 both opera and orchestral concerts were conducted by Joseph Keilberth, supported by the producer Heinz Arnold and a fine ensemble which included Elfriede Trötschel, Christel Goltz, Joseph Herrmann, Kurt Böhme and Gottlob Frick. Keilberth, along with Arnold and several leading singers, left Dresden as a result of political pressure following the first East German performance of Orff's Antigonae (1950). He was succeeded by Rudolf Kempe (1950–53) and Franz Konwitschny (1953–5). Notable Dresden premières in the immediate postwar period included Blacher's Die Flut (1947) and Robert Obussier's Amphytryon (1951). Rudolf Neuhaus began his long association with the Staatskapelle, first as its conductor and from 1955 as general musical director and assistant principal conductor. Since the 1950s the orchestra has maintained its outstanding reputation through guest appearances abroad and through its many recordings. Lovro von Matačić was principal conductor from 1956 to 1958, followed by Otmar Suitner (1960–64), Kurt Sanderling (1964–7) and Martin Turnovský (1967–8). The composer Siegfried Kurz was one of the conductors from 1961; he was appointed Generalmusikdirektor in 1971 and from 1975 to 1983 was executive musical director of the state theatres. In 1975 Herbert Blomstedt assumed control of both the opera and the orchestra; he was succeeded by Hans Vonk (1985–90). The widely acknowledged revival in the fortunes of the Staatsoper was due largely to Harry Kupfer, director of opera from 1972 to 1981, and to Horst Seeger, who was Intendant from 1973 to 1984. Leading members of the ensemble during the 1970s and 1980s included the Dresden-born singers Peter Schreier and Theo Adam.

In 1977 the foundation stone was laid for the rebuilding of Semper's opera house, which opened in 1985 with a production of Der Freischütz directed by Joachim Herz, director of productions from 1985 to 1990. In 1991 Christoph Albrecht was appointed Intendant and the company renamed the Sächsische Staatsoper. Giuseppe Sinopoli became musical director of the Staatskapelle in 1992, broadening its repertory to include many contemporary works; he has also conducted several important productions at the Staatsoper. The activities of the Staatsoper are complemented by those of Staatsoperette, performing operettas and musicals, and the Landesbühnen Sachsen, a touring company based in nearby Radebeul.

14. Interior of the Dresden Palace of Culture, designed by W. Hänsch and H. Löschau, opened 1969

Besides the choir of the Kreuzkirche, there are a number of large amateur choirs including the Philharmonischer Chor (which grew out of the Städtischer Chor), the Singakademie and the Mozart-Verein.

The Dresdner Musiktage was inaugurated in 1949 and continued into the 1960s as a summer festival. A Dixieland festival was established in 1970. More recent annual festivals include the Dresdner Musikfestspiele, founded in 1978, and the Tage der Zeitgenössischen Musik, set up in 1987 by the Dresden Centre for Contemporary Music under its founder, Udo Zimmermann.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A General. B To 1694. C 1694–1763. D 1763–1815. E Since 1815.

A: GENERAL

FürstenauG; MGG2 (W. Steude and others); MooserA

Sachsens Kirchengalerie [Dresden], i (1837)

M. Fürstenau: Beiträge zur Geschichte der königlich sächsischen musikalischen Kapelle (Dresden, 1849)

M. Fürstenau: 'Französische Sänger, Schauspieler und Tänzer am Hofe 1696–1733', Sachsengrün, i (1861), 46

M. Fürstenau: 'Zur Geschichte der Orgelbaukunst in Sachsen', Mitteilungen des Sächsischen Alterthumsvereins, xiii (1863), 35ff

A. Hantzsch: Geschichte der Neustädter Realschule in Dresden (Dresden, 1875)

A. Bernardt: Aus dem Dresdner Hoftheater (Dresden, 1882)

F. Oehme: Handbuch über ältere und neuere berühmte Orgelwerke im Königreich Sachsen (Dresden, 1888–97)

K. Held: Das Kreuzkantorat zu Dresden (Leipzig, 1894/R)

R. Vollhardt: Geschichte der Cantoren und Organisten von den Städten im Königreich Sachsen (Berlin, 1899, rev. 2/1978 by E. Stimmel)

O. Schmid: Das sächsische Königshaus in selbstschöpferischer musikalischer Bethätigung (Leipzig, 1900)

O. Schmid, ed.: Festschrift zur 50jährigen Jubelfeier des Tonkünstler-Vereins zu Dresden (1854–1904) (Dresden, 1904)

J. Techritz: 'Die Dresdner Stadtmusici von 1572–1872', Dresdner Anzeiger, Sonntagsbeilage no.39 (1905)

O. Schmid: Geschichte der Dreyssigschen Sing-Akademie zu Dresden (Dresden, 1907)

K. Kreiser: Geschichte der Dresdner Stadtmusici (Dresden, 1918)

K. Pembaur: Drei Jahrhunderte Kirchenmusik am sächsischen Hofe (Dresden, 1920)

Musik im alten Dresden: drei Abhandlungen (Dresden, 1921)

K. Pembaur: Drei Jahrhunderte Kirchenmusik in der katholischen (Hof-) Kirche in Dresden (Dresden, 1921)

O. Schmid: Die Kirchenmusik in der Katholischen (Hof-) Kirche zu Dresden (Dresden, 1921)

G.H. Müller: Die Kreuzschule zu Dresden vom 13. Jahrhundert bis 1926 (Leipzig, 1926)

Musik in der katholischen Hofkirche zu Dresden (Dresden, 1929)

O. Socher: 700 Jahre Dresdner Kreuzchor (Dresden, 1937)

G. Hausswald, ed.: Dresdner Kapellbuch (Dresden, 1948)

H. Schnoor: Dresden: vierhundert Jahre deutsche Musikkultur (Dresden, 1948)

I. Becker-Glauch: Die Bedeutung der Musik für der Dresdner Hoffeste bis in die Zeit Augusts des Starken (Kassel, 1951)

F. von Lepel: Kurzgefasstes Dresdner Musik-Lexicon (Berlin, 1952)

H. Löscher: 'Kreuzkantorat, Kreuzchor und Kreuzalumnat zu Dresden', Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, lxxii (1955), Kanonistische Abt., 184–270

K. Laux: 'Bausteine zu einer Dresdner Musikgeschichte', Wissenschaftliche Annalen, v (1956), 431–44

Dresdner Musiktradition: versunkene Erinnerungsstätten an Dresdner Künstler in alten Strassen und Gassen: Erlebnisse berühmter Musiker in Dresden (Frankfurt, 1960)

E.H. Hofmann: Der Dresdner Kreuzchor (Leipzig, 1962)

K. Laux: Die Dresdner Staatskapelle (Leipzig, 1963; Eng. trans., 1964)

W. Höntsch and U. Püschel, eds.: 300 Jahre Dresdner Staatstheater (Berlin, 1967)

S. Köhler: Musikstadt Dresden (Leipzig, 1976, enlarged 3/1981)

W. Steude, O. Landmann and D. Härtwig: Musikgeschichte Dresdens in Umrissen (Dresden, 1978)

G. Schmiedel: Der Kreuzchor zu Dresden (Leipzig, 1979, enlarged 2/1980)

F.-H. Gress: 'Dresden als Orgelstadt', Sächsische Heimatblätter, Jg.28 (1982), 279–82

H. John: Der Dresdner Kreuzchor und seine Kantoren (Berlin, 1982, 2/1987)

W. Steude: 'Bemerkungen zur Erforschung und Darstellung der Musikgeschichte Dresdens zwischen der Stadtgründung um 1200 und dem ausgehenden 17. Jahrhundert', Sächsische Heimatblätter, Jg.28 (1982), 259–64

H. Seeger, ed.: Oper in Dresden: Festschrift zur Wiedereröffnung der Semperoper (Berlin, 1985)

Die italienische Oper in Dresden von Johann Adolf Hasse bis Francesco Morlacchi: Dresden 1987
E. Steindorf: Die Staatskapelle Dresden (Leipzig, 1987)
H. Kunath: 'Die Organisten und ihre Orgeln in den evangelisch-lutherische Kirchen der Dresdner Innenstadt', Herbergen der Christenheit: Jb für deutsche Kirchengeschichte 1987–88, 121–40
E. Ulischberger: Schauspiel in Dresden von den Anfängen bis in die Gegenwart (Berlin, 1989)
Die Interpretation und Rezeption russischer und sowjetischer Opern: Dresden 1990
P.M. Young: 'Leipzig and Dresden: the Protestant Legacy', American Choral Review, xxxii/3–4 (1900), 7–76
K. Blaschke and others: Schola crucis, Schola lucis Dresden: Kreuzkirche, Kreuzschule, Kreuzchor: musikalische und humanistische Traditionen in 775 Jahren (Gütersloh, 1991)
D. Härtwig: Die Dresdner Philharmonie (Berlin, 1992)
H. John: 'Zur Musikpflege in der Dresdner Frauenkirche', Dresdner Hefte, no.32 (1992), 48–54
Die Frauenkirche im Musikleben der Stadt Dresden: Dresden 1994
F.-H. Gress: Die Orgeln der Frauenkirche zu Dresden (Freiberg, 1994)
M. Bartsch and U. Grüner: Dresdner Kreuzchor (Dresden, 1995)
K. Wagner and H.-J. Scholze: Musik in der katholischen Hofkirche Dresden (Dresden, 1995)
W. Höntsch: Opern- metropole Dresden (Dresden, 1996)

B: TO 1694

A. Weck: Der churfürstlichen Sächssischen weitberuffunen Residentz und Haupt-Vestung Dressden Beschreib- und Vorstellung (Nuremberg, 1680)
M. Fürstenau: Die Stiftungsurkunde der königlich Sächsischen musicalischen Kapelle (Dresden, 1848)
'Aphorismen zur Geschichte der Musik in Sachsen vor 1548', Sachsen-Chronik, ed. W. Schäfer, 1st ser. (Dresden, 1854), 284–320
M. Fürstenau: 'Die Cantoreiordnung Kurfürst Augusts von Sachsen aus dem Jahre 1555', Mitteilungen des Sächsischen Alterthumsvereins, xvii (1867), 51ff
O. Kade: 'Die Orgel der Schlosskirche zu Dresden im Jahre 1612 und die Hoforganisten der Dresdner Cantorei von 1548 bis circa 1700', Archiv für sächsische Geschichte, x (1876), 113–39
R. Kade: 'Das erste Dresdner lutherische Gesangbuch 1593', Dresdner Geschichtblätter, iii (1894), 145ff
T. Diestel: 'Aus einem Ballette am Dresdner Hofe (1672)', Zeitschrift für Kulturgeschichte (1896), 116ff
O. Doering: Des Augsburger Patriciers Philipp Hainhofer Reisen nach Innsbruck und Dresden (Vienna, 1901)
O. Richter: 'Dresdner Stadtmusikanten-Bestallung 1652', Dresdner Geschichtsblätter, xiv (1905), 23
J. Rautenstrauch: Luther und die Pflege der kirchlichen Musik in Sachsen (Leipzig, 1906)
K. Kreiser: Geschichte der Dresdner Stadtmusici (Dresden, 1918)
O. Mörtzsch: Musik im alten Dresden (Dresden, 1921), 35–98
W. Stieda: 'Die Anfänge der kurfürstlichen Kantorei von 1548', Neues Archiv für sächsische Geschichte, xlii (1921)
G. Pietzsch: 'Dresdener Hoffeste von 16.–18. Jahrhundert', Musik und Bild: Festschrift Max Seiffert, ed. H. Besseler (Kassel, 1938), 83–6
M. Ruhnke: Beiträge zu einer Geschichte der deutschen Hofmusikkollegien im 16. Jahrhundert (Berlin, 1963)
W. Richter: Geschichte der Dreikönigschule in Dresden-Neustadt bis 1685 (Dresden, 1969)
W. Steude: 'Bemerkungen zur Erforschung und Darstellung der Musikgeschichte Dresdens zwischen der Stadtgründung um 1200 und dem ausgehenden 17. Jahrhundert', Sächsische Heimatblätter, Jg.28 (1982), 259–64
A. Kobuch: 'Neue Aspekte zur Biographie von Heinrich Schütz und zur Geschichte der Dresdner Hofkapelle', Heinrich Schütz im Spannungsfeld seines und unseres Jahrhunderts: Dresden 1985 [Jb Peters 1985], 55–68
W. Steude and L. Güttler: 'Die kursächsischen Hoftrompeter der Schützzeit und ihre musikalischen Aufgaben', Heinrich Schütz im Spannungsfeld seines und unseres Jahrhunderts: Dresden 1985 [Jb Peters 1986–7], 33–52
M. Herrmann: Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der Dresdner Hofmusik zwischen 1464 und 1541 (diss., U. of Leipzig, 1987)
M. Herrmann: 'Die Rolle der Musik in der Festkultur der wettinischen Höfe von 1464–1548', Dresdner Hefte, no.21 (1990), 12–18
W. Steude: 'Die Rolle der Musik in der Festkultur des Wettiner-Hofes in Dresden von 1548 bis zur Mitte des 18. Jahrhunderts', Dresdner Hefte, no.21 (1990), 53–9
M. Herrmann: 'Bemerkungen zur Musikpflege unter Christian I', Dresdner Hefte, no.29 (1992), 57–62
W. Steude: 'Das Repertoire des Dresdner Kreuzchors von den Anfängen bis ins 17. Jahrhundert', Dresdner Hefte, no.30 (1992), 48ff
W. Steude: 'Zur Musik am sächsischen Hof in Dresden während der Regierung Kurfürst Johann Georgs II', Dresdner Hefte, no.33 (1993), 69–79
W. Steude: 'Der musikalische Anteil an den kursächsischen Aufzugsinventionen: zum Verhältnis von Realität und Darstellung', Rudolf Eller zum Achtzigsten, ed. K. Heller and A. Waczkat (Rostock, 1994), 21–32
W. Steude: 'Musik im Dresdner Residenzschloss', Dresdner Hefte, no.38 (1994), 59ff
W. Steude: 'Zur Frage nach einer deutschen Monteverdi-Rezeption im 17. Jahrhundert', In Teutschland noch gantz ohnbekandt: Monteverdi-Rezeption und frühes Musiktheater im deutschsprachigen Raum, ed. M. Engelhardt (Frankfurt, 1996), 227ff
W. Steude: 'Die Hofmusik unter Kurfürst Moritz', Dresdner Hefte, no.52 (1997), 57ff

C: 1694–1763

R. Prölss: Geschichte des Hoftheaters zu Dresden: von seinen Anfängen bis zum Jahr 1862 (Dresden, 1878)
R. Prölss: Beiträge zur Geschichte des Hoftheaters zu Dresden in actenmässiger Darstellung (Erfurt, 1879)
E.H. Müller von Asow: Angelo und Pietro Mingotti: ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der Oper im XVIII. Jahrhundert (Dresden, 1917)
E. Schmidt: Der Gottesdienst am Kurfürstlichen Hofe zu Dresden (Göttingen, 1961)
R. Steglich: 'Über das Dresdener Musizieren im 18. Jahrhundert', Zeitschrift der Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin, xv (1966), 415
O. Landmann: 'Zur Standortbestimmung Dresdens unter den Musikzentren in der ersten Hälfte des 18. Jahrhunderts', Musikzentren in den ersten Hälfte des 18. Jahrhunderts: Blankenberg, Harz, 1978, 47–56
K. Bauer: 'Böhmische Hornisten am Hofe zu Dresden', Das Waldhorn in der Geschichte und Gegenwart der tschechischen Musik: Brno 1981
O. Landmann: 'Französische Elemente in der Musizikpraxis des 18. Jahrhunderts am Dresdener Hof', Der Einfluss der französischen Musik auf die Komponisten der ersten Hälfte des 18. Jahrhunderts: Blankenburg, Harz, 1981, 48–56
O. Landmann: 'Einige Überlegungen zu den Konzerten "nebenamtlich" komponierender Dresdener Hofmusiker in der Zeit von etwa 1715 bis 1763', Die Entwicklung des Solokonzertes im 18. Jahrhundert: Blankenburg, Harz, 1982
O. Landmann: 'Marginalien zur Dresdner höfischen Kammermusik zwischen 1720 und 1763', Musikzentren: Konzertschaffen im 18. Jahrhundert: Blankenburg, Harz, 1983, 11–18
O. Landmann: 'Zur Pflege des Metastasianischen Passions-Oratoriums in der Katholischen Hofkirche zu Dresden', Muzyka oratoryjnja i kantatowa w aspekcie praktyki wykonawcej XI: Wrocław 1984
Dresdner Operntraditionen: Dresden 1985
H. Heyde: 'Blasinstrumente und Bläser der Dresdner Hofkapelle in der Zeit des Fux-Schülers Johann Dismas Zelenka (1710–1745)', Johann Joseph Fux und die barocke Bläsertradition: Graz 1985, 39–65
H. John: 'Die Dresdner Kirchenmusik in der ersten Hälfte der 17. Jahrhunderts', Heinrich Schütz und die Musik in Dänemark: Copenhagen 1985, 81–94
O. Landmann: 'Die komische italienische Oper am Dresdener Hof in ersten Hälfte des 18. Jahrhunderts', Dresdner Operntradition: Dresden 1985, 121–38
O. Landmann: 'Zur Dresdener Auszierungspraxis des 18. Jahrhunderts: Hinweise auf die Quellenüberlieferung', Zur vokalen und Instrumentalen Ornamentik in der ersten Hälfte des 18. Jahrhunderts: Blankenburg, Harz, 1986, 70–87
W. Horn: Die Dresdner Hofkirchenmusik 1720–1745: Studien zu ihren Voraussetzungen und ihrem Repertoire (Kassel, 1987)
T. Hiebert: The Horn in Early Eighteenth Century Dresden: the Players and their Repertory (diss., U. of Wisconsin, Madison, 1989)

O. Landmann: 'The Dresden Hofkapelle during the Lifetime of Johann Sebastian Bach', EMc, xvii (1989), 17–30
O. Landmann: 'Italienische Opernpraxis in Dresden', Il melodramma italiano in Italia e in Germania nell'età barocca: Como 1993, 21–30
M. Fechner: 'Anmerkungen zur Dresdner Hofmusik im ersten Drittel des 18. Jahrhunderts', August der Starke und seine Zeit: Königstein 1994 (Dresden, 1995)
H. John: 'Kirchenmusik in der Dresdner Frauenkirche im 18. Jahrhundert', Die Dresdner Frauenkirche: Jb zu ihrer Geschichte und zu ihrem archäologischen Wiederaufbau, ii (1996)

D: 1763–1815

H. Mannstein [H.F. Steinmann]: Denkwürdigkeiten der Churfürstlichen u. Königlichen Hofmusik zu Dresden im 18. u. 19. Jahrhundert (Leipzig, 1863)
M. Fürstenau: 'Die Theater in Dresden 1763 bis 1777', Mittheilungen des sächsischen Altertumsvereins, xxv (1875), 44–78
R.M. Haas: 'Beiträge zur Geschichte der Oper in Prag und Dresden', Neues Archiv für sächsische Geschichte und Altertumskunde, xxxvii (1916), 68–96
R. Engländer: 'Das Ende der Opera seria in Dresden: Naumanns Clemenza di Tito 1769', Neues Archiv für sächsische Geschichte und Altertumskunde, xxxix (1918), 311–24
R. Engländer: 'Dresden und die deutsche Oper im letzten Drittel des 18. Jahrhunderts', ZMw, iii (1920–21), 1–21
R. Engländer: 'Zur Musikgeschichte Dresdens gegen 1800', ZMw, iv (1921–2), 199–241
R. Engländer: 'Dresdner Musikleben und Dresdner Instrumentalpflege in der Zeit zwischen Hasse und Weber', ZMw, xiv (1931–2), 410–20
R. Engländer: 'Die Instrumentalmusik am sächsischen Hofe unter Friedrich August III. und ihr Repertoire', Neues Archiv für sächsische Geschichte und Altertumskunde, liv (1933), 75–84
R. Engländer: Die Dresdner Instrumentalmusik zur Zeit der Wiener Klassik (Uppsala, 1956)
W. Reich: 'Die gesellschaftlichen und musikalischen Grundlagen der Dresdner Opernkultur vor Johann Adolf Hasse', Opera w dawnej Polsce na dworze Władysława IV i królów saskich: Warsaw 1969, 87–95
O. Landmann: Quellenstudien zum Intermezzo comico per musica und zu seiner Geschichte in Dresden (diss., U. of Rostock, 1972)
O. Landmann: Die Dresdener italienische Oper zwischen Hasse und Weber: ein Daten- und Quellenverzeichnis für die Jahre 1765–1817 (Dresden, 1976)
O. Landmann: 'Die italienische Oper in Dresden nach Johann Adolf Hasse: Entwicklungszüge 1765–1832', Die italienische Oper in Dresden von Johann Adolf Hasse bis Francesco Morlacchi: Dresden 1987, 393–416
O. Landmann: 'Musik und Oper: Betrachtungen zu allgemeinen Entwicklungen und zur Dresdener Situation 1765–1800', Beiträge zur Kulturgeschichte, xvii (1988), 66–72
O. Landmann: 'Dresden und Mozart, Mozart und Dresden: eine Quellenbetrachtung', MJb 1991, 385–92
F. Nentwig: Christian Gottfried Körner: sein Wirken und Seine Bedeutung für die Entfaltung der bürgerlichen Musikkultur in Dresden während der Jahre 1785 bis 1815 (diss., U. of Dresden, 1992)
L.H. Ongley: Liturgical Music in Late 18th-Century Dresden: J.G. Naumann, J. Schuster and F. Seydelmann (diss., U. of New Haven, 1992)
O. Landmann: 'Die Entwicklung der Dresdner Hofkapelle zum klassischen Orchester', Basler Jb für historische Musikpraxis, xvii (1993), 175–90
O. Landmann: 'Marginalien zum "Stile di Dresda"', Rudolf Eller zum Achtzigsten, ed. K. Heller and A. Waczkat (Rostock, 1994), 51–7
H.-G. Ottenberg: 'Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach und Dresden', ibid., 59–66

E. SINCE 1815

C. Gurlitt: Das neue Königliche Hoftheater zu Dresden (Dresden, 1878/R)
'Tonkünstler-Verein zu Dresden 1854–1879', Festschrift zur 25jährigen Jubelfeier (Dresden, 1879)
M. Fürstenau: Das Conservatorium für Musik in Dresden 1856–1881 (Dresden, 1881)
A. Kohut: Das Dresdner Hoftheater in der Gegenwart (Dresden, 1888)
H. von Brescius: Die königliche sächsische musikalische Kapelle von Reissiger bis Schuch (1826–1898) (Dresden, 1898)
Gedenkbuch des Dresdner Männer-Gesangvereins 1876–1901 (Dresden, 1901)
F. Richter: 'Die Anfänge des Dresdner Realschulwesens', Jahresbericht der Drei-König-Schule zu Dresden Neustadt (1901), 3–42
A. Reichert: 50 Jahre Sinfoniekonzerte (Dresden, 1908)
H. Starcke: Dresdner Orpheus: Gedenkblätter zur Feier seines 75jährigen Bestehens 1834–1909 (Dresden, 1910)
A. Seidl: Die Hellerauer Schulfeste und die Bildungsanstalt Jacques-Dalcroze (Regensburg, 1912)
O. Schmid: Die Heimstätten der Sächsischen Landestheater (Dresden, 1919)
O. Schmid: Der Mozart-Verein zu Dresden 1896–1921 (Dresden, 1921)
O. Schmid: Die Sächsische Staatskapelle in Dresden, 1548–1923, und ihre Konzerttätigkeit (Dresden, 1923)
T. Bauer: Der Dresdner Tonkünstlerverein in den Jahren 1854–1924 (Dresden, 1924)
O. Erhardt, ed.: Opernfestspiele Dresden 1928: Gedenkbuch (Dresden, 1928)
T. Bauer, ed.: Festschrift zur 75jährigen Jubelfeier 1854–1929 des Tonkünstlervereins in Dresden (Dresden, 1929)
Festbuch des Reichsverbandes Deutscher Tonkünstler und Musiklehrer (Berlin, 1930)
K. Kreiser: 60 Jahre Dresdner Philharmonie (Dresden, 1930)
E. Müller von Asow: Dresdner Musikstätten (Dresden, 1931)
P. Adolf: Vom Hof- zum Staatstheater (Dresden, 1932)
O. Funke: Festschrift zur Jahrhundertfeier der Dresdner Oper 1834–1934 (Dresden, 1934)
R. Kötzschke: 1839–1939: 100 Jahre Dresdner Liedertafel (Dresden, 1934)
Festschrift F.-Draeseke-Feier der Landeshauptstadt Dresden anlässlich des 100. Geburtstages (Dresden, 1935)
G. Pietzsch: '125 Jahre Opernschaffen in Dresden', Die Musik, xxx (1937–8), 467–71
Gestaltung und Gestalten: Jb der Staatstheater Dresden (1945–)
750-Jahr-Feier der Stadt Dresden: Dresdner Musik- und Theaterfestwochen (1956)
Festschrift zum 100jährigen Bestehen musikalischer Bildungsanstalten in Dresden (Dresden, 1956)
W. Becker: Die deutsche Oper in Dresden unter der Leitung von Carl Maria von Weber, 1817–1826 (Berlin, 1962)
S. Poladian: 'Paul Aron and the New Music in Dresden', Bulletin of the New York Public Library, lxvi (1962), 297–315
H. Schnoor: Die Stunde des 'Rosenkavalier': dreihundert Jahre Dresdner Oper (Munich, 1968)
H. Böhm: 'Musikstadt Dresden: 25 Jahre nach der Zerstörung', Musikrat der DDR: Bulletin, ii (1970), 79–90
E. Steindorf and D. Uhrig, eds.: Staatskapelle Dresden (Berlin, 1973)
S. Köhler: Musikstadt Dresden (Leipzig, 1976)
G. Schmeidel: 'Dresdner Sängertraditionen', Musikbühne 77 (Berlin, 1977), 89–106
125 Jahre Kammermusik der Staatskapelle Dresden (Dresden, 1978)
V. Hahn, ed.: Komponisten im Bezirk Dresden: eine Dokumentation (Dresden, 1979)
H. John: 'Dresdner Musikgeschichte im 19. Jahrhundert: ein Überlick', Dresdner Hefte (1983), no.3, pp.20–29
O. Fambach: Das Repertoire des Kgl. Theaters und der italienischen Oper zu Dresden, 1814–32 (Bonn, 1985)
Carl Maria von Weber und der Gedanke der Nationaloper: Dresden 1986
H.-R. John: 'Oper als geistes Forum: der Regisseur Heinz Arnold erinnert sich', Oper heute: ein Almanach der Musikbühne, ix (1986), 291–307
D. Rheinhold: 'Aspekte faschistischer Spielplanpolitik im Musiktheater am Beispiel der Sächsischen Staatsoper Dresden', BMw, xxviii (1986), 1, 39–52
V. Hahn: Der Wertbildungsprozess in der Musik, dargestellt am Beispiel zeitgenössischer Instrumentalmusik Dresdner Komponisten (diss., U. of Zwickau, 1987)
Opern und Musikdramen Verdis und Wagners in Dresden: Dresden 1988
Höhepunkte der Dresdner Operngeschichte im 20. Jahrhundert: Dresden 1989
K. Bauer: Die Entwicklung der Arbeitermusikbewegung in Dresden von den Anfängen bis 1933 (diss., U. of Halle, 1990)

R. Mauersberger: 'Zum 100. Geburtstag des Kreuzkantors', Dresdner Hefte (1990), no.2 [Konferenzbericht]
H. Schetelich: Musikalische Erinnerungsstätten in Dresden (Dresden, 1990)
M. Herrmann: 'Zur Pflege Neuer Musik in Dresden nach dem 1. Weltkrieg', Dresdner Hefte, ix (1991), no.1, pp.4–14
M. Herrmann: 'Die Kreuzschule war bisher eine Insel der Seligen: zwei SED-Berichte über Kreuzschule und Kreuzchor nach 1961', Dresdner Hefte, x (1992), no.3, pp.67–77
H. John: 'Zum 10. Gründungsjubiläum der Singakademie Dresden', 1884–1994 Singakademie Dresden (Dresden, 1994), 7–17
50 Jahre Rampenlicht: Landesbühnen Sachsen 1945–1995 (Dresden, 1995)
M. Heinemann and H.John, eds.: Die Dresdner Oper im 19. Jahrhundert (Laaber, 1995)
F. Fröhlich: Bands in Dresden (Dresden, 4/1996)
F. Fröhlich, ed.: Diesseits der Semperoper (Dresden, 1996)
A. Zänsler: Die Dresdner Stadtmusik, Militärmusikkorps und Zivilkapellen im 19. Jahrhundert (Laaber, 1996)
H. John: 'Die Geschichte der Dresdner Liedertafel: ein Beitrag zum musikalischen Vereinswesen', Dresdner Geschichtesbuch, iv, ed. Stadtmuseum Dresden (Altenburg, 1998), 81–96
M. Herrmann, ed.: Die Dresdner Kirchenmusik im 19./20. Jahrhundert (Laaber, 1998)
M. Herrmann and H.-W. Heister, eds.: Dresden und die avancierte Musik im 20. Jahrhundert, 1900–1933 (Laaber, 1999)

WOLFRAM STEUDE (1), MANFRED FECHNER (2), HANS-GÜNTER OTTENBERG (3), HANS JOHN (4), DIETER HÄRTWIG/MATTHIAS HERRMANN (5)

Dresden, Sem (b Amsterdam, 20 April 1881; d The Hague, 30 July 1957). Dutch composer and teacher. The scion of a diamond-broking family, his father tried to suppress his musical interests; nevertheless he managed to study with Roeske and Zweers in Amsterdam. On the strength of a promising student piano piece, he was sent in 1903 to study composition and conducting under Pfitzner at the Stern Conservatory in Berlin. Pfitzner unexpectedly steered his compositional interests towards French Impressionism; he also encouraged Dresden to remain in Germany as an opera conductor. After two years, however, he returned to the Netherlands. There, aided by his wife Jacoba, a noted alto, he began a career as choral conductor; he also continued to compose. From 1914 to 1926 he directed the nine-member Madrigal Society, which earned international repute for its painstaking performances of Renaissance and contemporary choral music; it was succeeded, from 1928 to 1940, by a larger chamber choir in Haarlem. In 1919 he had been appointed head of composition at the Amsterdam Conservatory and was its director from 1924 to 1937. With Pijper in 1922 he established the Dutch ISCM chapter. His erudite articles in De Amsterdammer and De Telegraaf (1918–27) were a progressive influence in Dutch musical life.

Dresden was named director of the Royal Conservatory in The Hague in 1937 but served only three years before being dismissed, due to his Jewish ancestry, by German Occupation functionaries. He spent most of the war interned on an estate in Wassenaar; despite dangerous conditions he composed assiduously through these years. He resumed his post in The Hague after liberation, remaining until his retirement in 1949. Many noted Dutch musicians were his students, including Monnikendam, Godron, Smit, van Beinum, Felderhof, van Otterloo, Mul and Cor de Groot. Throughout his career Dresden served on numerous boards and committees, especially in choral education and music for youth. Such administrative functions together with composing occupied him after retirement. In his final hours, confirming the religious tendencies in his later works, he became a convert to Roman Catholicism.

The compositions written shortly after his return from Berlin show largely French influences, as in the four suites for wind and piano composed for the Amsterdam Concertgebouw Sextet. The impressionistic Sonata for Flute and Harp (1918), which emphasizes contrasting instrumental timbres, was acclaimed in both France and Holland. Dresden's later music is essentially tonal, but with modal twists and frequent added-note chords. An elastic use of metre may reflect his lifelong involvement with Renaissance polyphony. Long-arched, soaring melody is another hallmark, present in virtually every work from the Sonata for Flute and Harp onwards.

Through his choral experience he became fascinated with traditional Dutch songs, of which he made many popular arrangements. In addition, he used these tunes to generate themes in original compositions, either overtly (Quartet no.1) or as a form of musical punning or submerged quotation (Cello Sonata no.2, Piano Trio); Bizet and Wagner fragments are treated similarly in the Flute Concerto. This concern with motivic development carries over into the Dansflitsen, where a seven-movement dance suite grows out of one small motif. In the Chorus tragicus (1927), to a text by Vondel concerning the fall of Jerusalem, unusual choral techniques are used, with suggestive sound effects in the brass and percussion accompaniment. In this work, the Chorus symphonicus, St Antoine (written for an international congress of church music in Augsburg), Psalm 84 and St Joris, Dresden emerges as his country's leading twentieth-century composer of oratorios and festive choral music. The Chorus symphonicus, his most monumental composition, was written during World War II. The texts, from the penitential psalms, reflect the hardships and bitterness of everyday life in those years. By contrast, the operetta Toto, about a little dog concealed from licensing authorities, is a humorous representation of Dresden's own existence during the Occupation.

Dresden's last composition was the one-act opera François Villon, to his own text. His pupil Jan Mul prepared the orchestral score after the composer's death, and the work was first performed during the 1958 Holland Festival. It was praised as the most striking Dutch opera to date.

WORKS
(selective list)

STAGE

Toto (operetta, 3, Dresden), 1944–5, ?unperf.; Dsjengis Khan (incid music, van den Does de Willebois), 1951; François Villon (op, 1, Dresden, after F. Villon), 1956–7, orchd J. Mul, Amsterdam, Stadsschouwburg, 15 June 1958

ORCHESTRAL

Theme and Variations, 1913; Vn Conc. no.1, 1936; Sinfonietta, cl, orch, 1938; Ob Conc., 1939; Conc., pf, ob, str qt, 1942, rev. as Pf Conc., 1945–6; Vn Conc. no.2, 1942; Fl Conc., 1949; Dansflitsen [Dance Flashes], 1951, arr. 2 pf, 1953; Org Conc., 1952–3

CHORAL

Wachterlied (14th century), SATB, 1918; Boerenfeest [Peasant Festival] (G.A. Bredero), SATB, 1923, completed 1953; Meilied (16th century), SATB, 1925; Chorus tragicus (J. van den Vondel), SATB, 5 tpt, 2 bugles, perc, 1927; Memoria judaeorum (C. Tacitus), male chorus, 1932; Hymnus matutinus (6th century), SATB, 1935; Assumpta est Maria, SATB, 1943; Chorus symphonicus (Ps cxxxix, lxix, lvii, xxxiv, S, T, SATB, orch, 1943–56; Gelukkig is het land [Happy is the Land] (B. Aafjes), SATB, wind, 1948; Ps xcix, SATB, org, 4 trbn, 1950; Beatus vir, male chorus, 1951; Fabel: den aap en de katte [Fable: the Monkey and the Cat] (Vondel), male chorus, 1953; St Antoine (G. Flaubert), sym.-orat, solo vv, SATB, spkrs, orch, 1953; 3

Vocalises, SATB, 1954; Ps lxxxiv, S, T, SATB, orch, 1954; De wijnen van Bourgondië (Dresden, after wine adverts), SATB, orch, 1954; Carnavals Cantate, S, TTBB, orch, 1954–5; St Joris [St George] (Dresden), S, Bar, SATB, 2 pf, perc, 1955, rev. with spkr, orch, 1956

SOLO VOCAL

1v, pf unless otherwise stated

43 early songs, before 1908; 4 songs (J. Schürmann), 1917–19, orchd; Treurig, treurig (J.K. Rensburg), 1919; 4 Vocalises, Mez, chbr orch, 1935; 4 liederen (A. Donker), 1942–5; Ausonius ad uxorem (A. van Duinkerken), 1951; Catena musicale (Bible: Ecclesiastes), S, 7 insts, orch, 1956; Rembrandts 'Saul en David', S, orch, 1956

CHAMBER AND SOLO INSTRUMENTAL

5 Little Pf Pieces, 1903–15; Suite, ww qnt, pf, 1911; Praeludium, scherzo and finale, 2 pf, 1912; Trio, 2 ob, eng hn, 1912; Suite, ww qnt, pf, 1913; Rameau Suite, ww qnt, pf, 1916, rev. 1948; Sonata no.1, vc, pf, 1916; Sonata, fl, hp, 1918; Suite, ww qnt, pf, 1920; Str Qt no.1, 1924; Str Qt no.2, 1938; Toccata, Chorale and Fugue, org, 1941, rev. 1946; Sonata no.2, vc, pf, 1942; Pf Trio, 1942–3; Sonata, vn, 1943; Suite, vc, 1943–7; 3 Pf Pieces, 1945, rev. 1947; Hor ai dolor, pf, 1950; Come fu. . ., pf, 1953

ARRANGEMENTS

30 choral arrs. of old Dutch songs; O Kerstnacht [O Christmas Night] (Vondel), SATB, str, trbn, 1939

MSS in NL-DHgm

Principal publishers: Doremus, Alsbach, Breitkopf & Härtel, Serat, De Wolfe

WRITINGS

Het muziekleven in Nederland sinds 1880 (The Hague, 1923)

ed.: Algemene muziekleer (Groningen, 1931, 12/1972)

ed.: Gedenkboek uitgegeven ter gelegenheid van het 50 - jarig bestaan van het Amsterdamsch Conservatorium (1884–1934) (Amsterdam, 1934)

Stromingen en tegenstromingen in de muziek (Haarlem, 1953)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P.F. Sanders: 'Sem Dresden', Moderne Nederlandse componisten (The Hague, 1931), 44–71

W. Paap: 'Sem Dresden', Mens en melodie, i (1946), 73–9

W. Paap: 'Sem Dresden', Music in Holland (Amsterdam, 1960), 16–19

J. Wouters: 'Sem Dresden', Sonorum speculum, xxv (1965), 1–13

J. van der Veen: 'Sem Dresden', Biografisch Woordenboek van Nederland, ed. J. Charité (The Hague, 1979)

J. Kolsteeg: Sem Dresden en de harmonische vernieuwingen in de Nederlandse muziek rond 1920 (diss., U. of Utrecht, 1988)

HARRISON RYKER

Drese, Adam (b Thuringia, *c*1620; d Arnstadt, 1701). German composer, viol player and teacher. He was the outstanding member of a dynasty of Thuringian musicians. Drese is first heard of in Merseburg as collaborator and cathedral musician. By 1648 he was serving as director of music to Duke Wilhelm IV of Saxe-Weimar at Weimar and played a major part in rebuilding the court musical establishment there after the ravages of the Thirty Years War. The musical life at the court benefited from his visits to Warsaw before 1649 to study with Marco Scacchi (returning via Jena), to Dresden in 1652 and 1656 to study with Schütz and to examine the court musical establishment and in 1653 to Regensburg and Coburg. An inventory of the Weimar court music that he compiled in 1662 shows that he played an important part in transmitting Italian musical traditions in particular from region to region. Duke Wilhelm's death the same year led to the dismissal of the court musicians and after applying unsuccessfully for a post to the Landgrave of Hesse-Darmstadt, Drese referred to himself as being 'without a position for some time'. But already by 1663, he went, possibly via Darmstadt, to Jena, where he served the court of Duke Bernhard as Kapellmeister and private secretary and the town as mayor. He strengthened the court musical establishment with some of the musicians who had previously served under his direction at Weimar. He also maintained his connections with Weimar by working there as well as at Jena as a director of operatic and other theatre music. He also had connections with Jena University: for example, he wrote a work to celebrate the duke's installation as rector of the university, and in 1677 a 'sacred comedy' by him on Christ's resurrection caused a scandal at a student performance; both works are now lost. He was also active as a teacher; Christian Demelius was one of his numerous pupils.

After Duke Bernhard's death in 1678, Drese moved to Arnstadt to become Kapellmeister to the Count of Schwarzburg and he remained there until his death. There he came into close contact with musicians of the Bach family and others who, like himself, were outstanding viol players. This move caused a decisive change in his life. Whereas he had previously been concerned chiefly with secular music-making, including uninhibited theatre music, he now became a devout advocate of the Pietism of Philipp Jakob Spener. The conventicles of Pietist sympathizers that met in his house aroused the disfavour of their intolerant opponents, and so Drese (who described himself in 1697 as 'a loyal old Saxon servant approaching the grave') found that his last years were tinged with bitterness.

Most of Drese's music is lost, including many works listed in his inventory of 1662 (D-WRtl) and in the Erlebach catalogue (D-RUl). Most of his surviving music awaits proper investigation, as does his influence on his contemporaries; in this respect it is unfortunate that among his lost works is a treatise on music. The motet Wie seelig sind die Toten was composed 'as the result of Invention having given advantage to Music and to the Trumpet' (title-page). The trumpet invention was (according to Downey) the development of the single SLIDE TRUMPET. The musical invention was a form of dramatic dialogue that radically expanded techniques found in Schütz's Musicalische Exequien (1636). The Pietism of his last years is foreshadowed to some extent in the melodies that he contributed to collections of sacred verse in the 1650s. His chorale Seelenbräutigam, which was printed in a Darmstadt songbook of 1698, is very well known as Jesu, geh' voran: this text was later written to it by Zinzendorf.

WORKS

Erster Theil etlicher neuen Balletten, Capriccien, Couranten und Sarabanden, 1–3 va, bc (Jena, 1645)

Trauer- und Begräbnüslied (Wie seelig sind die Toten), 6vv, 5–6 slide tpt, timp, bc, 2 July 1648 (Erfurt, 1648)

Flos passiones oder geistliche Creutz-Bluhme (Jena, 1666)

Erster Theil etlicher Allemanden, Couranten, Sarabanden, Balletten, Intraden und Arien (Jena, 1672)

Several songs in M. Franck: Friedensdankfest (Coburg, 1650); 14 songs, 1v, bc, 1657[3]

Seelenbräutigam, chorale (Darmstadt, 1698)

Trauermusik auf Rat Michel. Wirth, D-STOm

Das Himmelreich ist gleich einen König, 4vv, 5 va, org, S-Uu

Allemande, courante, a 4, D-Kl

Lost: 10 concs., formerly NO; 12 motets, 4–5vv, listed in Erlebach catalogue, Rudolstadt; 14 motets, 4–13vv, some with 2 insts; funeral motets; 1 aria; 3 hunting songs; Theatralische Vorstellung; Adam und Eva (op), 1676; Die erhöhte Dienstbarkeit, Weimar, 1697; 7 dance movts, a 4; treatise on music theory: all listed in Drese catalogue, Weimar

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BlumeEK; WinterfeldEK

A. Aber: Die Pflege der Musik unter den Wettinern (Bückeburg and Leipzig, 1921)

E.W. Böhme: Die frühdeutsche Oper in Thüringen (Stadtroda, 1931/R)

H. Koch: 'Adam Drese, ein thüringischer Komponist', Thüringisch Fähnlein, iv/10 (1935)

P. Downey: 'Adam Drese's 1648 Funeral Music and the Invention of the Slide Trumpet', Irish Musical Studies, i, ed. G. Gillen and H.M. White (Dublin, 1990), 200–17

G. KRAFT/PETER DOWNEY

Dresher, Paul (Joseph) (b Los Angeles, 8 Jan 1951). American composer and performer. As a teenager he played the rock guitar and wrote songs. He studied at the University of California, first at Berkeley (BA 1977) and then at San Diego (MA 1979), where his teachers included Robert Erickson, Oliveros, Roger Reynolds and Rands. During his Berkeley years he came in contact with Steve Reich, Terry Riley and Lou Harrison; he also studied African drumming, Balinese gamelan and Indian sitār music, interests that were furthered by a trip to India and Indonesia (1979–80) funded by an NEA grant. He has built Javanese gamelans in Berkeley, San Diego and Seattle, where he taught at the Cornish Institute (1980–82). In 1984 he formed the Berkeley-based Paul Dresher Ensemble, which performs his own works and those of other composers (including the opera Ravenshead commissioned by the ensemble from Steven Mackey).

Much of Dresher's output is music for the theatre, including opera, music theatre, dance scores and incidental music. In the early 1980s he collaborated with the experimental director George Coates on a number of innovative theatre pieces, including The Way of How (1981) and Seahear (1984). These were followed by a varied operatic trilogy produced in partnership with Rinde Eckert, most notably Slow Fire (1985–8), a monodrama about a hired killer. He has also created evocative dance scores for such choreographers as Margaret Jenkins and Brenda Way. Other works include pieces for his own ensemble (a mix of electric and acoustic instruments) and commissions for traditional ensembles.

Dresher's music offers a hypnotic, rhythmically charged blend of minimalism, rock and the music of Africa and East Asia. Much of it is constructed from intricately layered repetitions of tonal harmonic patterns and euphonious, diatonic melodies; the works he has written for himself and/or his ensemble often involve the use of a real-time tape-delay of his own devising. In his stage works his style is often mediated by the nature of the project, resulting in greater rhythmic regularity in the dance scores, or a maniacally energetic performing style in works composed with Eckert. Some of his instrumental scores invoke non-Western traditions more explicitly, as in the gamelan-inspired Double Ikat (1989).

WORKS

Stage: The Way of How (music theatre), 1981, collab. G. Coates; Channels Passing (dance score, choreog. N. Carp), chbr ens, 1982; Wintergreen (dance score, choreog. W. Rogers), tape, 1982; are are (music theatre), 1983, collab. Coates; Seahear (music theatre), 1984, collab. Coates; Slow Fire (op, R. Eckert), 1985–8; Figaro Gets a Divorce (incid music), 1986; Home (Pt 2) (dance score, choreog. M. Jenkins), tape, 1986; Once it Touches the Rain (dance score, choreog. Jenkins), tape, 1987; Rhythmia (dance score, choreog. S. Mordine), tape, 1987; Shelf Life (dance score, choreog. Jenkins), 1987; Tamina (dance score, choreog. B. Way), tape, 1987; The Tempest (incid music, W. Shakespeare), 1987; Loose the Thread (dance score, choreog. Way), chbr ens, 1988; Power Failure (op, 2, Eckert), 1989; Pioneer (op, Eckert), 1990, collab. T. Allen, J. Harvey Allen, J. Duykers and R. Woodruff; Secret House (dance score), tape, 1990; Age of Unrest (dance score, choreog. Jenkins), elec str qt, 1991; Awed Behavior (op), 1992–3; The Gates (dance score, choreog. Jenkins), 1993; Outawak (dance score), 1997

Other works: Gui Qt, 1975; This Same Temple, 2 pf, 1976–7; Where We are Now, 2 gui, 1977; Night Songs, S, 2 T, chbr ens; Liquid and Stellar Music, elec gui, elecs, 1981; Casa Vecchia, str qt, 1982; Dark Blue Circumstance, elec gui, elecs, 1982; Destiny, elec ens, 1983; Other Fire, tape, 1984; re:act:ion, orch, 1984; Was Are/Will Be, elec ens, 1985; Water Deams, tape, 1986; Double Ikat, vn, pf, perc, 1989, rev. 1990; Mirrors, elec b gui, elecs, 1989; Opposites Attract, chbr ens, live elecs, 1989; Cornucopia, chbr orch, 1990; Fail Safe, elec gui, elecs, 1993; Din of Iniquity, elec ens, 1994; Blue Diamonds, pf, 1995; Stretch, chbr ens, 1995; Cage Machine and Chorale Times Two, vn, elec orch, 1996; Retrodisrespective, elec gui, elecs, 1997; Race, vn, pf, 1998

Recorded interviews in US-NHob

BIBLIOGRAPHY

K. Gann: American Music in the Twentieth Century (New York, 1997), 344–5

JOSHUA KOSMAN

Dressel [Dressler, Drechsler]. German family of organ builders. Tobias Dressel (bap. Falkenstein, Vogtland, 25 April 1635; d Buchholz [now Annaberg-Buchholz], 29 May 1717) left home at an early age after the death (1646) of his father, a baker and freeman of Falkenstein, and became a journeyman. In Kulmbach, Bavaria, he was assistant to the distinguished master organ builder Matthias Tretzscher, with whom he built the organ in the Petrikirche (1657). He also worked in Forchheim, Lanzendorf (near Bayreuth), Schweinfurt and at Strasbourg Cathedral. On 2 August 1680 he was married (for the second time) in Buchholz, where he took up permanent residence. He built about 15 organs; in addition he was a respected judge and councillor.

Christoph Dressel (b Falkenstein; d Falkenstein, 6 Aug 1686), Tobias's nephew, may have been apprenticed to him. On 14 May 1679 he married the daughter of the mayor of Leipzig. For the Leipzig Thomaskirche he built a harpsichord and rebuilt the organ. He also built an organ in the Johanneskirche, Zittau (1685).

Johann Tobias (b Buchholz, 18 March 1687; d Buchholz, 24 Nov 1758) and Johann Christian Dressel (b Buchholz, 18 March 1687), twin sons of Tobias, were apparently apprenticed to Gottfried Silbermann. In 1727 they tuned the Holbeck organ in the Michaeliskirche at Hof, Bavaria, to equal temperament. In 1715 they built an organ in Schmiedeberg whose attractive façade still survives; they also built organs in Grossolbersdorf, as well as in the Schlosskapelle, Weesenstein.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (H. Hofner)

A. Schering: Musikgeschichte Leipzigs, ii, von 1650 bis 1723 (Leipzig, 1926)

R. Hommel: Chronik von Oberlungwitz (Hohenstein-Ernstthal, 1935)

H. Hofner: 'Zur Orgelgeschichte des östlichen Frankenlandes und seiner Randgebiete', Kulturwarte (Sept 1966), 162

H. Fischer and T.Wohnhaas: 'Alte Orgeln im Coburger Land, II–III', Jb der Coburger Landesstiftung, xvi (1971), 97–128, esp. 101

WALTER HÜTTEL

Dressel, Erwin (b Berlin, 10 June 1909; d Berlin, 17 Dec 1972). German composer and pianist. He attended the Scharwenka-Klindworth Conservatory, where from 1919 he was a pupil of Klatte. In 1923 his incidental music to Much Ado about Nothing was used at the Berlin Staatstheater. He continued his studies with Juon at the Berlin Hochschule für Musik (1925) and at the Schule am Goetheanum, Dornach, Switzerland (1925–6). Returning to Germany, he began a long-lasting collaboration for the stage with the poet Arthur Zweiniger. Their first success was the satirical opera Der arme Columbus, composed after a period when Dressel had served as theatre conductor in Hanover (1927–8). Subsequently, apart from an interruption during the war, he worked as a freelance composer, pianist and arranger of music for the radio. He was also music director for the Hamburg Junge Bühne (1946–8) and vocal coach at the Deutsche Staatsoper, Berlin (1948–9).

WORKS
(selective list)

Ops: Der arme Columbus (A. Zweiniger), Kassel, 1928; Der Kuchentanz (Zweiniger), Kassel, 1929; Der Rosenbusch der Maria (Zweiniger), Leipzig, 1930; Die Zwillingsesel (Zweiniger), Dresden, 1932; Jery und Bätely (Dressel, after J.W. von Goethe), Berlin, 1932; Zweimal Karamazov (T. Burger and H. Elsner, after F.M. Dostoyevsky), Vienna, 1936; Die Laune der Verliebten (lyrische Oper, 1, after Goethe), Leipzig, 1949; Der Bär (after A.P. Chekhov), Berne, 1963

Orch: 4 syms., 1927, 1929, 1932, 1948; Conc., ob, cl, bn, orch, 1951; Divertimento, fl, hn, 2 pf, str, 1952; Cassation, 1961; Cl Conc., 1961; Variationen-Serenade, pf, orch, 1962; Caprice fantastique, 1963; Conc., s sax, a sax, orch, 1965; Südliche Serenade, 1969; Va Conc., 1969

Choral works, many songs, 2 str qts, other chbr music, pf pieces, arrs. for radio, popular music

JOSEPH CLARK

Dresser [Dreiser], (John) Paul (b Terre Haute, IN, 22 April 1858; d New York, 30 Jan 1906). American songwriter, lyricist, publisher and performer. He was the brother of the novelist Theodore Dreiser. He learned the guitar and piano, and at the age of 16 joined a travelling show, adopting the pseudonym Dresser. From 1885 he performed with the Billy Rose Minstrels, composed sentimental songs and wrote and acted in five plays. After his first successful songs, The Letter that Never Came (1886) and The Outcast Unknown (1887), he became one of the first American performers to enter music publishing, as a staff composer for Willis Woodward Co. He continued to write songs (e.g. The pardon came too late, 1891), and about 1894 helped found the George T. Worth Co. (eventually Howley, Haviland & Dresser, 1901). The company thrived, mostly on Dresser's tragic and sentimental ballads such as On the Banks of the Wabash (1897), the Indiana state song; some were prompted by his disintegrating marriage with the burlesque performer May Howard. A protégée, Louise Kerlin, who took his surname for her stage name, introduced many of his works on the vaudeville stage. From 1902 his songs were less popular and his publishing company failed in 1905 despite the success of his last and best-known song My Gal Sal.

Dresser was the leading American writer of sentimental ballads in the late 19th century, and he 'inaugurated and sustained the new school of weeping balladry' in Tin Pan Alley popular song (Goldberg). Though much of his work is maudlin or cloying, the best songs have a sensitive poetic feeling. Through them the popular sheet-music industry established a counterpart, readily accepted by the white, Christian middle and lower classes, to the more frolicsome styles of the 'Gay Nineties'. The songs have much the same melodic simplicity, nostalgic texts and naive, direct appeal as the songs of Stephen Foster earlier in the 19th century, though the harmonic language is slightly more complex, particularly in some of the chromatic passages at phrase endings (My Gal Sal has remained a favourite of barbershop quartets). A film biography of Dresser, My Gal Sal (1942), was written by Dreiser, with music composed and arranged by Ralph Rainger. Some of Dresser's letters and other papers are in the libraries of Indiana University and the University of Pennsylvania.

WORKS

Edition: The Songs of Paul Dresser, ed. T. Dreiser (New York, 1927)

all lyrics by Dresser; all printed works published in New York

*c*50 songs, incl. The Letter that Never Came (1886); The Outcast Unknown (1887); The pardon came too late (1891); Take a seat, old lady (1894); Just tell them that you saw me (1895); On the Banks of the Wabash (1897); Our country, may she always be right (1898); We are coming, Cuba, coming (1898); Come home, Dewey, we won't do a thing to you (1899); The Curse of the Dreamer (1899); The Blue and the Gray (1900); My heart still clings to the old first love (1901); The boys are coming home today (1903); My Gal Sal (1905)

Principal publisher: Howley, Haviland & Dresser

BIBLIOGRAPHY

T. Dreiser: 'My Brother Paul', Twelve Men (New York, 1919)
I. Goldberg: Tin Pan Alley: a Chronicle of the American Popular Music Racket (New York, 1930/R)
E.B. Marks: They All Sang: from Tony Pastor to Rudy Vallée (New York, 1934)
A.R. Markle: 'Some Light on Paul Dresser', Terre Haute Tribune and Terre Haute Star (14 April 1940)
D. Ewen: The Life and Death of Tin Pan Alley (New York, 1964)
V. Dreiser: My Uncle Theodore (New York, 1976)
C. Hamm: Yesterdays: Popular Song in America (New York, 1979)

DEANE L. ROOT

Dressler. See DRESSEL family.

Dressler, Ernst Christoph (b Greussen, nr Sondershausen, 1734; d Kassel, 6 April 1779). German writer on music, tenor and composer. He first studied theology in Halle and Jena (1751–3) and then law, poetry (under Gellert), the violin and singing in Leipzig. After the Margravine Sophie Wilhelmine of Bayreuth admired his singing he was able to complete his musical education under the singer Signora Turcotti and became the margrave's chamber secretary and a member of the Hofkapelle. In 1763 he went to Gotha as secretary and chamber musician to the Duke of Saxe-Gotha and later became director of the Prince of Fürstenberg's Hofkapelle in Wetzlar (1767). He lived in Vienna from 1771 to 1775, where he sang for the emperor, and he became an opera singer at the court in Kassel in 1775.

Although he was a respected singer, Dressler is best remembered for his writings on music, in which he outlined possible ways of improving German opera. His earlier publications, Fragmente einiger Gedanken des musikalischen Zuschauers (Gotha, 1767) and Gedanken, die Vorstellung der Alceste … betreffend (Frankfurt and Leipzig, 1774), led up to a comprehensive description of German opera, the Theater-Schule für die Deutschen, das ernsthafte Singe-Schauspiel betreffend (Hanover and Kassel, 1777, including a reprint of his Gedanken). This work reflects the spirit of Empfindsamkeit ('He who wants to move people with art must himself be moved'), and includes many practical suggestions, such as founding permanent opera troupes and music schools; he warned against the stiffness and exaggeration embodied in da capo arias and word-painting, and called for naturalness and correct declamation to intensify the plot without making the music obtrusive. Although he favoured strong accentuation of the text and relegation of music to a descriptive role (traits associated with melodrama), he advocated keeping songs in opera as a means of imparting fresh life to the expression of emotion on the stage. His only known compositions are vocal works (often settings of his own poetry), including a few lied collections (Melodische Lieder für das schöne Geschlecht, Frankfurt, 1771; Freundschaft und Liebe in melodischen Liedern, Nuremberg, 1774–7) and several separately published songs.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; GerberL; SchillingE

'Lebensumstände des im Jahr 1779 verstorbenen Hessen-Casselschen Kammermusikus Dressler', Miscellaneen artistischen Inhalts, ed. J.G. Meusel, xx (Erfurt, 1784), 67–74 [incl. list of writings and compositions]

M. Friedlaender: Das deutsche Lied im 18. Jahrhundert (Stuttgart and Berlin, 1902/R)

GERHARD ALLROGGEN

Dressler, Gallus (b Nebra, Thuringia, 16 Oct 1533; d Zerbst, Anhalt, between 1580 and 1589). German composer and theorist. He is first heard of in 1557 when he enrolled at the academy (later the university) at Jena. He must have attended school at Nebra, after which he probably spent some years in the Netherlands studying music, perhaps with Clemens non Papa, to whose compositions he frequently referred in his theoretical works. In 1558, after only one year's study at Jena where he got to know Leonhart Schröter and P.M. Schede, he became Kantor at the grammar school at Magdeburg. This school had an outstanding reputation for music as a result of the work of Martin Agricola, whose music for the reformed church was widely known. Dressler was Agricola's immediate successor, the post having been kept vacant during the two years following his death. Practically the whole of his extant work dates from his years there. In 1570 he took the master's degree at Wittenberg and in 1575 became a deacon at Zerbst. Wittenberg University was at the time dominated by the Philippists (i.e. followers of Philipp Melanchthon), who were engaged in heated debate with the orthodox Lutherans. Dressler wrote a number of occasional compositions while he was at Magdeburg which show that he was in close touch with the Philippists, and it is significant that when Wittenberg went over to the orthodox Lutheran cause about 1574–5, through the intervention of the Elector of Saxony, he should have accepted a position in Anhalt, which espoused the cause of the Philippists. Little is known of him after this, except that he acted as an adviser in various musical capacities and was well regarded at Zerbst.

Most of Dressler's works are polyphonic settings of Latin sacred texts in a Netherlandish idiom, freely composed without the use of cantus firmi. He is chiefly remembered, however, for his contribution to the early development of the German-language motet. He chose texts from the Old Testament, including complete psalms and extracts from psalms, and also from the Gospels, his settings of which proved to be the forerunners of later collections of settings of central passages from the Sunday gospels covering the church's year, by Melchior Franck, Melchior Vulpius and others. The style of his German motets is characterized by expressive treatment of the words, interesting contrasts of polyphony and homophony and, as with Lassus in his German settings, the repetition of words for emphatic purposes. Unlike most of his Protestant contemporaries, Dressler paid little attention to the Lutheran hymns. As a theorist he was particularly interested in the relationship of music to words and thus in the disciplines of the Trivium rather than in the numerically based Quadrivium. In this connection he adopted the term 'musica poetica', first used by Listenius in his Musica (1537), defined by Heinrich Faber in his Compendiolum musicae (1548) as 'ars fingendi musicum carmen', and treated it as a separate discipline within composition to be taught alongside those of musica theorica and musica practica. For discussion of his contribution to modal theory see Mode, §III, 2.

WORKS

Aliquot [7] psalmi latini et germanici, 4–6vv, 1560, D-HB

Zehen deudscher Psalmen, 4, 5, 8vv (Jena, 1562); 1 ed. in Cw, xxviii (1934/R); 1 ed. in Die Motette, no.631 (Stuttgart, 1983)

XVII cantiones sacrae, 4, 5vv (Wittenberg, 1565; 2/1567); ed. in PÄMw, xxiv (1903/R)

Epitaphium piissimae et honestissimae matronae Magdalenae conjugis . . . Christophori Petzelii (Wittenberg, 1566)

XVIII cantiones, 4 and more vv (Magdeburg, 1567); 1 ed. in Die Motette, no.630 (Stuttgart, 1982)

Das schöne Gebet, Herr Jesu Christ, 4vv (Magdeburg, 1569)

XIX cantiones, 4, 5vv (Magdeburg, 1569); 1 ed. in Cw, xxviii (1934/R)

XC cantiones, 4 and more vv (Magdeburg, 1570) [78 repr. as Sacrae cantiones (Nuremberg, 1574); rev. 2/1577 as Opus sacrarum cantionum, 3/1585]; 1 ed. in Cw, xxviii (1934/R); 8 ed. in Crockett

XVI Geseng, 4 and more vv (Magdeburg, 1570); 2 ed. in Cw, xxviii (1934/R)

Magnificat octo tonorum, 4vv (Magdeburg, 1571)

Ausserlesene teutsche Lieder, 4, 5vv, insts (Nuremberg, 1575; 2/1580)

THEORETICAL WORKS

Practica modorum explicatio (Jena, 1561)

Praecepta musicae poeticae (MS, D-MAl, 1563); pr. by B. Engelke, Geschichtsblätter für Stadt und Land Magdeburg, xlix–l (1914–15), 213–50

Musicae practicae elementa in usum scholae Magdeburgensis edita (Magdeburg, 1571, 4/1601)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (W.M. Luther)

B. Engelke: 'Einige Bemerkungen zu Dresslers "Praecepta musicae poeticae"', Geschichtsblätter für Stadt und Land Magdeburg, xlix–l (1914–15), 395

W.M. Luther: Gallus Dressler: ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des Schulkantorats im 16. Jahrhundert (Kassel, 1941)

W. Dehnhard: Die deutsche Psalmmotette in der Reformationszeit (Wiesbaden, 1971)

H. Schwämmlein: 'Die 14. Motette aus den Teutschen Sprüchen . . . 1595 von Andreas Raselius', Oberpfälzer Dokumente zur Musikgeschichte, ed. H. Beck (Regensburg, 1976), 67–106

E.S. Beebe: 'Text and Mode as Generators of Musical Structure in Clemens non Papa's Accesserunt ad Jesum', Music and Language, ed. E.S. Beebe and others (New York, 1983), 79–94

L. Zoppelli: '"Ut prudens et artifex orator": sulla consistenza di una "dottrina" retorico-musicale fra Controriforma e Illuminismo', RIM, xxiii (1988), 132–56

W. Werbeck: Studien zur deutschen Tonartenlehre in der ersten Hälfte des 16. Jahrhunderts (Kassel, 1989)

B.K.F. Wilson: Choral Pedagogy: Crossroads of Theory and Practice in Sixteenth-Century Germany (diss., Boston U., 1995)

WALTER BLANKENBURG/CLYTUS GOTTWALD

Dretzel [Dretzl, Tretzel, Drechsel, Trechsel]. German family of musicians. Appearing under various names (corresponding to the changing orthography of the times), they played an active part in the musical life of Nuremberg for four generations, from the very end of the 16th century to the second half of the 18th. They were organists and instrumentalists, and three of them – discussed separately below – were also composers. The family's progenitor, Valentin (i) (d 1599), lived in Nuremberg as a respected merchant. His sons, all born and dying there, were Michael, (1) Valentin (ii) and Wolfgang (i). Of the younger Valentin's five sons, also all born and dying at Nuremberg, three became known as musicians: the eldest, Hieronymus, the fourth, Georg (i), and the youngest, Johannes. Wolfgang (i) was himself the progenitor of a line of musicians extending over at least three generations. His sons (2) Georg (ii), Georg Wolf and Paul were among them, and the lutenist Wolfgang Dretzel (ii) may have been another. Georg (ii)'s son Georg Heinrich, also a musician, was the father of (3) Cornelius Heinrich, who was the most important musician of the entire dynasty.

(1) Valentin Dretzel (ii) (b Nuremberg, bap. 30 May 1578; d Nuremberg, bur. 23 March 1658). Composer, organist and instrumentalist. As early as 1599 he was a musician at the Frauenkirche, where he met many respected Nuremberg musicians, music lovers and patrons. He performed there as an instrumentalist and in 1604 also received a fee as an organist. Late in 1616 he was recruited to stand in as organist of the Spitalkirche for Caspar Hassler, who moved to St Sebaldus after his brother-in-law Hans Christoph Haiden had been summarily dismissed. When Johann Staden took over the position at St Sebaldus after Hassler's death in 1618, Dretzel succeeded him as organist of St Lorenz. After Staden died in 1634, Dretzel succeeded him at St Sebaldus; this was the highest position an organist could attain in Nuremberg, and Dretzel held it until his death. That he was able to acquire two houses during the ensuing years shows that he was financially well off. At various times the town council sought his expert advice at organ trials. It was in this way that in 1607 he came into conflict with Caspar Hassler, who also saw him as a rival because of his skill as an organist. Hans Leo Hassler tried in vain to smooth over disputes between the two organists over fees for playing at weddings. In what he said and did Caspar Hassler was easily led by his emotions, and it is evident that he was jealously concerned to maintain his professional reputation and his material advantage. At first Dretzel also had difficulties with Johann Staden; a stern admonition to him from the town council, however, was enough to iron them out. Later the two men became very friendly and even published some music together. These good relations also extended to Staden's son Sigmund Theophil, who in 1637 dedicated his new edition of H.L. Hassler's Kirchengesäng to Dretzel, among other Nuremberg organists, and five years later Dretzel sent his youngest son Johannes to S.T. Staden for instruction.

Dretzel must have been a virtuoso organist. His playing on Hans Haiden's celebrated Geigenwerk during the course of the Nuremberg peace banquet on 25 September 1649 was greatly admired: in the elaborate festival music directed by S.T. Staden he led the second of the four instrumental groups placed at the corners of the festival hall. He seems to have struck up a particularly close friendship with the Nuremberg town councillor Georg Volckamer and dedicated to him several of his compositions, among them his principal publication, Sertulum musicale (1620), which even includes Volckamer's portrait. In contrast to Renaissance collections it is not the motets for many voices but those for only three that are placed at the end, as a contribution to the new style of music. The volume includes two four-part ricercares and two canzonas, one in four parts and one in eight, which provide evidence of Dretzel's instrumental style. There are suggestions of the sacred concerto in an introductory symphonia and in occasional directions concerning the distribution of instruments. Between 1625 and 1630 Dretzel dedicated a musical greeting to Volckamer at the turn of each year. For the first two years the greeting took the form of simple, homophonic German songs in two and four parts. From 1627 on he added a Latin aria with continuo, thereby demonstrating his knowledge of the new monodic style. In 1630, with the Thirty Years War showing no signs of ending, the greeting consisted of a plea for peace in the form of a dialogue in 27 verses and a three-part fugue on the chorale Erhalt uns, Herr, bei deinem Wort.

WORKS

pubd in Nuremberg

4 teutsche geistliche Gesänglein, 4, 5vv (1618)
Magnificat oder Lobgesang, 8vv (1620) [with J. Staden]; ed. in DTB, xii, Jg.vii/1 (1906)
Sertulum musicale ex sacris flosculis contextum, 3–8vv, insts, bc (1620)
2 Geistliche Bet-Gesäng zu dem hl. Kindlein, 5vv (1621) [with J. Staden]
Ein schön new Gebet-Gesänglein, den Frieden zu erlangen, 4vv (1624)
Ein schön Neu Jahr-Gesänglein, 4vv (1625)
Lobsinget Gott: ein schön Neu-Jahr-Gesänglein, 4vv (1625)
2 schöne Neu-Jahr-Gesänglein, 2, 4vv (1626)
2 schöne Geistreiche Neue Jahrs Gesang, 2, 4vv, enlarged with bc (1627)
2 schöne Geistreiche Neue Jahrs-Gesang, 2, 4vv, bc (1628)
2 schöne Neu Jahr Gesänglein, 2, 4vv, bc (1629)
Dialogus oder Neu Jahr Gesänglein (1630)
Unser Leben wäret 70 Jahre, funeral song, 2vv, bc, in Leich-Sermon bey der Bestattung dess … Wilhelm Kressen … auch dess Jobst Kressen (1640)
Über dich, du theurer Mann, funeral song, 4vv, in Christliche Traur- und Leichpredigt … bey … Leichbestattung … Johannis Sauberti (1647)
Christlicher, tröstlicher Abschied dess Herrn Matthaei Lunssdorffers, 1647[6]
Trauergesänge über den seel Abschied 1651 den 7. September, 4vv (n.d.) [for Susannah Fussel; with S. Staden]

(2) Georg Dretzel (ii) (b Nuremberg, 1608–12; d after 1676). Organist and composer, nephew of (1) Valentin Dretzel (ii). In 1640 he became organist of St Michael, Schwäbisch Hall, in place of Kindermann, who was unable to take up the post because of ill-health. Early in 1651 he was dismissed, ostensibly on account of 'his wayward temperament and evil slander', and was succeeded by one of his pupils. In an unsuccessful application for a post as organist at Rothenburg ob der Tauber he described himself as a musician 'qualified in composition and well-practised and experienced in the organist's art'. He returned to his native Nuremberg, where by his own account he had in his younger days played the organ at St Sebaldus and St Lorenz, probably as a deputy. It is not known whether he can be identified with the Georg Dretzel who in 1660 was organist of St Michael, Fürth, since further research is needed to distinguish him from an instrumentalist of the same name (d 1683) who was also active in Nuremberg at that time. It is possible that the description of him as 'organist at Schwäbisch Hall' that appears in records relating to the birth of a child in 1656 and to a son's wedding in 1676 was intended simply as a means of distinguishing him from the other Georg Dretzel by reference to his former career, for there is no evidence of his having returned to Schwäbisch Hall during his later years. Of his music only two occasional works survive, a four-part funeral ode (Schwäbisch Hall, 1642) and a New Year song for two sopranos and continuo (Nuremberg, 1655).

(3) Cornelius Heinrich Dretzel (b Nuremberg, bap. 18 Sept 1697; d Nuremberg, 7 May 1775). Composer, organist and writer on music, grandson of (2) Georg Dretzel (ii). As well as by his father he may have been taught by Johann Pachelbel's eldest son, Wilhelm Hieronymus, whom he succeeded as organist of the Egidienkirche, Nuremberg, in 1619. He had already played the organ at the Frauenkirche at the age of 14. It is not certain whether C.F.D. Schubart's reference (in Ideen zu einer Ästhetik der Tonkunst, Vienna, 1806, p.207) to 'Drexel, a pupil of the great Sebastian Bach and indeed one of his best' is to be associated with him – Eitner related it to the Augsburg Cathedral Kapellmeister Drexel (d 1801). But it is possible that he studied with Bach at Weimar for a short period before 1717; that he schooled himself thoroughly in Bach's style is shown by the fact that his Harmonische Ergötzung was long considered to be by Bach. In Nuremberg he rose through the accustomed succession of organists' posts, from the Egidienkirche to St Lorenz in 1743 and thence to the most important of all, at St Sebaldus, where on 8 June 1764 he succeeded W.H. Pachelbel.

Dretzel's Divertimento armonico consistente in un concerto per il cembalo solo … Harmonische Ergötzung, bestehend in einem Concert, auf das Clavier gesetzt (Nuremberg, n.d.) was believed lost until Ahlgrimm discovered a copy, which had once belonged to Haydn (in H-Bn). The concerto, written, like Bach's Italian Concerto, for solo harpsichord, is likewise in three movements. The slow movement is the original of the Prelude in A minor BWV897 for keyboard (wrongly attributed to Bach). Since Dretzel described himself on the title-page as organist of the Egidienkirche, the work must have been printed between 1719 and 1743, probably after Bach's Italian Concerto (1735); that the Italian form of the title precedes the German points to the Italian taste popular at the time. This work at least has survived to support the high claims that his contemporaries made for Dretzel: for example, G.A. Will (Nürnbergisches Gelehrten-Lexikon) called him 'one of the greatest virtuosos of his time in playing and composition, so that his name and reputation are also very great outside his native country'. He was esteemed above all as a distinguished contrapuntist and composer of fugues, but besides the concerto the only evidence of this aspect of his activities known to survive is an imitative Alla breve that C.G. von Murr published in the issue dated 17 March 1763 of his weekly Nuremberg magazine Der Zufriedene.

Dretzel's Des evangelischen Zions musicalische Harmonie, oder Evangelisches Choralbuch (Nuremberg, 1731; examples in ZahnM) is of hymnological importance. It contains over 900 melodies with basso continuo, most of them appearing in print for the first time, in the various versions in which they were sung at Nuremberg, Bayreuth and Ansbach. For songs without a traditional melody Dretzel wrote new versions 'in the traditional manner' ('auf ordinaire Art'). His preface, in which he presented his work 'to the glory of God' and for 'the furtherance of true devotion' and 'the pleasure of gentlemen dilettantes', is a comprehensive historical discussion of the origin and development of the chorale; as a practising musician he took up positions on many questions of liturgical interest and ended the discussion with detailed instructions about thoroughbass.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; WaltherML; ZahnM
M. Seiffert: Preface to 'Nürnberger Meister der zweiten Hälfte des 17. Jahrhunderts', DTB, x, Jg.vi/1 (1905)
T. Norlind: 'Ein Musikfest zu Nürnberg im Jahre 1649', SIMG, vii (1905–6), 111–13
R. Wagner: 'Die Organisten der Kirche zum Heiligen Geist in Nürnberg', ZMw, xii (1929–30), 458–96, esp. 470
I. Ahlgrimm: 'Cornelius Heinrich Dretzel, der Autor des J.S. Bach zugeschriebenen Klavierwerkes BWV 897', BJb 1969, 67–77

LINI HÜBSCH-PFLEGER

Dreux (b mid-18th century; d 1805). French composer and keyboard player. He is sometimes listed as 'C. Dreux', but the 'C.' is probably merely an abbreviation for 'citoyen'. He may have been related to René-Joseph Dreux (b early 18th century; d 1787), who is cited in the Paris archives, 1787, as 'professeur de clavecin, deceased'. The two men have been treated as a single person (and have been confused with Jacques-Philippe) by many reference sources; both were freemasons, but they belonged to different Parisian lodges. Dreux's most important work is his Principes du clavecin ou du pianoforte (Paris, ?1796). Some of the works listed below may be by René-Joseph.

WORKS

all published in Paris

Vocal: Règne, amour, duo (1772); Ce matin dans une bruyère, in Journal hebdomadaire (1788)
Orch: Conc., hpd/pf solo (1777)
Kbd: 2me potpourri, pf (?1797) (3 other potpourris cited in FétisB); Les soirées agréables de la campagne, 7me recueil de contre danses, etc., arr. pf (?1798); La bataille de Marengo, pf (*c*1800); other works; arrs. in Journal hebdomadaire (1783–90)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB; MGG1 (R. Cotte)
A. Le Bihan: Francs-maçons parisiens du Grand Orient de France (Paris, 1966)

MICHAEL BARNARD

Dreux, Jacques-Philippe (b France, *c*1670; d Amsterdam, bur. 4 Feb 1722). Dutch composer of French extraction. He had moved to Amsterdam by 1690, perhaps as a consequence of his Huguenot faith, and in 1697 he edited Carl Rosier's Quatorze sonate for Estienne Roger. He was probably the first person to compose music specifically for the chalumeau and the clarinet. In his catalogue of 1704, Roger announced the sale of chalumeaux in connection with that of Dreux's first book of fanfares, a connection maintained in his 1708 catalogue but dropped in 1712. Dreux's Airs à deux clarinettes of 1715 may have been the first music to specify the clarinet as the first choice of instrument. It is possible that Dreux was the editor of anthologies published by Roger that contain music similar to his own, for example Airs anglais pour le chalumeau (1707–8; now lost) and Airs à deux chalumeaux, deux trompettes, deux clarinelles ou deux cors de chasse, livre premier, second (1715). The extant chalumeau parts show a range of from d′ to a″, with the D major triad predominating in the lower octave, thus allowing the music to be played on trumpets and horns as well as on oboes and chalumeaux.

WORKS

all published in Amsterdam

Fanfares pour les chalumeaux et les trompettes, livre 1e (1704), partially extant
Fanfares pour les chalumeaux et les trompettes, livre 2e (1706), partially extant

Fanfares et autres airs propres à jouer sur 2 chalumeaux ou 2 trompettes, livre 3e (1714), lost
Airs à 2 clarinettes ou 2 chalumeaux (1715), lost

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB
F.G. Rendall: The Clarinet (London, 1954, rev. 3/1971 by P. Bate)
F. Lesure: Bibliographie des éditions musicales publiés par Estienne Roger et Michel-Charles Le Cène (Amsterdam 1696–1743) (Paris, 1969)

RUDOLF A. RASCH

Dreves, Guido Maria [Uhlenhorst, Ulrich von] (b Hamburg, 27 Oct 1854; d Mitwitz bei Kronach, 1 June 1909). German hymnologist and poet. At the age of 15 he joined the Jesuit order, which in 1885 commissioned him to write a history of the Latin hymn. That was never finished, but the preparatory work for it survives in the form of the series Analecta Hymnica Medii Aevi (Leipzig, 1886–1922) in 55 volumes. From 1896 (vol.xxiv) he was joined in the editorship by his fellow Jesuit Clemens Blume, who continued the series independently from 1911 (vol.liii), after Dreves's death. From 1902 (vol.xl), H.M. Bannister was also involved in editing certain volumes, but was never named as an editor of the series. As an enormous collection of medieval sacred Latin verse, the Analecta Hymnica remains a basic tool for any student of medieval music, though few of the volumes contain notation.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (B. Stäblein [incl. list of writings]; also 'Analecta hymnica medii aevi', B. Stäblein [incl. overviews of contents])
M. Lütolf, ed.: Analecta hymnica medii aevi: Register (Berne and Munich, 1978) [2 vols.]

Drew, David (b London, 19 Sept 1930). English writer on music. He was educated at Harrow and Cambridge. From 1959 to 1967 he was music critic of the New Statesman, and in 1971 he became editor of Tempo. He has been particularly concerned with contemporary music: a series of three substantial and searching articles on Messiaen in Score (1954–5) did much to draw that composer's music to wider attention in Britain; he also contributed important articles to Score on Gerhard and Stravinsky and a penetrating chapter on French music to European Music in the Twentieth Century. Drew's main study, however, has been Kurt Weill: he has edited several of his works for publication, reconstructed his Divertimento for Chamber Orchestra (first performed in 1972), and in 1956 embarked on an extended survey of his life and works. He became director of publications at Boosey & Hawkes in 1975.

WRITINGS

'Messiaen: a Provisional Study', The Score, no.10 (1954), 33–49; no.13 (1955), 59–73; no.14 (1955), 41–61
'Roberto Gerhard: the Musical Character', The Score, no.17 (1956), 39–49 [incl. catalogue of works]
ed., with R. Boas and Q. Chavez: The Decca Book of Opera (London, 1956)
'Modern French Music', European Music in the Twentieth Century, ed. H. Hartog (London, 1957, 2/1961), 253–310
'Stravinsky's Revisions', The Score, no.20 (1957), 47–58
ed.: The Decca Book of Ballet (London, 1958)
'Topicality and the Universal: the Strange Case of Weill's "Die Bürgschaft"', ML, xxxix (1958), 242–55
'Brecht versus Opera: some Comments', The Score, no.23 (1958), 7–10
'Musical Theatre in the Weimar Republic', PRMA, lxxxviii (1961–2), 89–108
'Serielle Komponisten in England', Melos, xxix (1962), 142–5
ed.: Über Kurt Weill (Frankfurt, 1975)
'HK Gruber: a Formal Introduction from Two Sides', Tempo, no.126 (1978), 14–23
'Markevitch: the Early Works and Beyond', Tempo, nos.133–4 (1980), 24–38
'Reflections on the Last Years: Der Kuhhandel as a Key Work', A New Orpheus: Essays on Kurt Weill, ed. K.H. Kowalke (New Haven, CT, 1986), 217–68
Kurt Weill: a Handbook (London, 1987)
'Motifs, Tags, and Related Matters', Kurt Weill: The Threepenny Opera, ed. S. Hinton (Cambridge, 1990), 149–60
'The Bürgschaft Debate and the Timeliness of the Untimely', 'A Stranger Here Myself': Kurt Weill-Studien, ed. K.H. Kowalke and H. Edler (Hildesheim, 1993), 159–84
'Schoenberg and Weill', Sundry Sorts of Music Books: Essays on the British Library Collection presented to O.W. Neighbour, ed. C. Banks, A. Searle and M. Turner (London, 1993), 346–53
'Der Weg der Verheissung and the Prophecies of Jeremiah', Tempo, no.206 (1998), 12–20

STANLEY SADIE

Drexel, Johann Chrysostomus [Johann Evangelist] (b Epfenhausen, nr Landsberg, 24 Jan 1758; d Augsburg, 9 Feb 1801). German composer. He served at Augsburg cathedral from 1769, first as a treble, then from 1776 as a Marianer (chorister). At the same time he studied at the Jesuit Gymnasium of St Salvator, and he was ordained priest in 1790. After writing some early works for the cathedral and for the theatre of the Jesuit Gymnasium, he studied composition from 1786 to 1788 in Salzburg with Michael Haydn, who recommended him for further study in Italy, but the Augsburg chapter refused permission. Drexel became music director of the cathedral in 1790 and Kapellmeister in 1797.

Drexel's masses in symphonic style (including ten settings of the missa solemnis and five pastoral masses) show progressive features in their instrumentation and harmonies. His music was not widely distributed until after his death, but was then performed until the change of style brought about by the Cecilian movement.

WORKS

STAGE

Singspiele (all perf. at Augsburg, St Salvator; only libs extant): Pythias und Damon (2), in Der Patriotismus (Trauerspiel, 3), April 1781; Die kleinen Wagehälse (2), in Die Kinderzucht (Lustspiel, 3), May 1785; Cyrillus der Kappadozier (2), in Paulinus von Nola (Trauerspiel, 3), 2 Sept 1785; Joseph, der Unterkönig in Aegypten (2), in Georgius, der grosse heilige Martyrer (Trauerspiel, 3), 4 Sept 1786; Paulus in Banden (2), in Manasses, König in Juda (Trauerspiel, 5), 1 Sept 1789; Die kleinen Himmelsstürmer (2), in Die verbesserte Kinderzucht (Lustspiel, 3), 26 June 1797
Op arias, incl. 'No, che non ha la sorte . . . Vo solcando un mar crudele' (P. Metastasio: Artaserse), D-Rp

SACRED

Asperges me (Augsburg, n.d.); hymns in G.C. Carli, ed., Katholische Kirchengesänge (Augsburg, 1800) and other collections (see Ullrich); 31 masses, 3 requiem settings, 1 orat, 2 Passions, 4 grads, 6 offs, 4 Stabat mater, 5 Vespers settings, 2 ants, 2 Bs, 6 lits, 2 Mag, 7 psalm settings, 2 TeD, 3 Libera me, 2 Tantum ergo, 5 arias, 1 duet: A-KR, Wgm; CH-E; D-Ed, Il, Rp, private collection, Augsburg

INSTRUMENTAL

Str Qt, C, 1790, private collection, Augsburg; Melodien zu den katholischen Kirchengesängen von Georg Caspar Carli, org (Augsburg, 1800); Str Qt, B♭, D-Mbs; 3 Duos, vn, vc (Augsburg, n.d.)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Ullrich: Johann Chrysostomus Drexel (1758–1801): Leben und Werk (Augsburg, 1991)

HERMANN ULLRICH

Dreyer, Giovanni Filippo Maria ['il Tedeschino'] (b Florence, *c*1703; d Florence, 13 April 1772). Italian castrato soprano, maestro di cappella and composer. He was an opera singer in Italy between 1721 and 1726, after which he sang for four seasons in Breslau [now Wrocław], where he composed and served as impresario during the 1727–8 season. Following the 1729–30 season, when he was in Prague at the Sporck theatre, he was one of a group of singers recruited for the imperial theatre in Moscow. He remained in Russia until 1734, when he returned to Florence by way of Dresden and Vienna. On 6 October 1737 he joined the Servants of Mary in Florence, becoming a novice on 13 April 1738. From 31 January 1739 he was maestro di cappella for that order in SS Annunziata, their church.

Surviving works by Dreyer (in I-Fc and FA) include introits a 4, masses, offertories, a Miserere and a piece for three voices and instruments, Il ponte a Santa Trinità in tempo d'estate. A Missa a 4 with organ (in I-PS) may be by him or by the later Johann Melchior Dreyer. A violin sonata (in US-BEm) is attributed to 'Sigr. Tedeschino'.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MooserA
H.H. Borcherdt: 'Geschichte der italienischen Oper in Breslau', Zeitschrift für Geschichte Schlesiens, xliv (1910), 18–51
C. Fedeli: 'La cappella musicale della SS Annunziata di Firenze', Conferenze e prose varie (Siena, 1911), 242
D.E. Freeman: The Opera Theater of Count Franz Anton von Sporck in Prague (Stuyvesant, NY, 1992), 87–8

JOHN WALTER HILL

Dreyer, Johann Melchior (b Röttingen, Württemberg, bap. 24 June 1747; d Ellwangen (Jagst), 22 March 1824). German composer. The youngest son of a smith, he studied at the Jesuit Gymnasium in Ellwangen. Both courtly and sacred music flourished at the imperial collegiate church in Ellwangen, and Dreyer absorbed this tradition as he grew up. In 1767 he became a schoolmaster; he also composed music for performance by a variety of small ensembles (including children) at the parish church of St Maria; these works became equally popular in village churches, small convents and important centres of sacred music. He was appointed organist in the collegiate church in 1779; from 1790 he was also choirmaster and from 1802 Kantor. After the secularization of the foundation in 1802–3, Dreyer remained in his post as town organist and Kapellmeister. He was succeeded as organist by his son Heinrich Dreyer; another son, Johann Baptiste Dreyer, was Chorvikar at the Ellwangen church and later the town chaplain.

Dreyer was one of the most successful composers of sacred music of his time. His music was distributed throughout Europe and as far afield as North America and Russia; almost every south German Catholic music collection of the 18th and 19th centuries contains something by him. His only known a cappella composition is a sensitive homophonic Stabat mater; he also wrote chamber music and organ sonatas in the galant style, symphonies for both liturgical and concert performance, and music for Singspiele (now lost).

An oboe sonata ascribed to J.M. Dreyer (F-Pn) is probably by Giovanni Filippo Maria Dreyer (1703–72), who was active in Florence. After a period in which Dreyer's music went out of fashion as a result of the Cecilian movement and its after-effects, new interest is now being shown in his tuneful, lively and well-constructed compositions.

WORKS

printed works published in Augsburg, unless otherwise stated

STAGE

all performed at the Jesuit Gymnasium, Ellwangen; music lost, texts in D-NEhz

Prol to Gusmann (Trauerspiel), 3 Sept 1790
Die verfinsterte Sonne (Spl, 2), in Der Prinzenraub (Trauerspiel, 3), 4 Sept 1791
Paul, ein heiliger Blutzeug Jesu Christi aus Japon (Spl, 2), in Paulin, der heilige Bischof von Nola (Trauerspiel, 3), 2 Sept 1793
Der wahre Menschenfreund (Spl, 2), in Ein Gemählde von Schatten und Licht, oder Die kontrastirende Härte und Milde (Redespiel), 17 Oct 1793
Damon und Pythias (Spl, 3), in Martinez, oder Die besiegte Rachbegierde (Trauerspiel, 3), 1 Sept 1794
Der Weindieb (Spl, 2), in Der Obstdieb (Lustspiel, 2), 2 Sept 1795

VOCAL

for 4 voices and instruments unless otherwise stated

Sacred: 3 Salve regina, S, 2 vn, va, b (Speyer, 1782); 6 Tantum ergo (1782); 6 Missae breves et rurales, op.2 (1790); 6 Miserere, op.3 (1791); 28 Psalmi vespertini, op.4 (1791); 24 vesper hymns, op.5 (1791); 6 Missae . . . breves et rurales, op.6 (1792); 6 Requiem, 3 Libera me, op.7 (1792); 8 Missae rurales, 8 Offs, 1v, org obbl/1v, vn ad lib, op.8 (1793); Stabat mater, 4 vv, 1793, D-EW; 12 Tantum ergo, op.9 (1794); 6 Lytaniae lauretanae, op.10 (1796); 6 Missae breves ac rurales, op.11 (1796); 5 Vesperae, 4 Psalms, op.12 (1797); 12 Offs, op.14 (1800); TeD, op.16 (1800); 6 Missae breves ac rurales, op.17 (1802); 12 Tantum ergo, op.18 (1802); Deutsche Messe (1803); 6 Missae rurales, 6 Offs, 1v, org obbl/B, 2 vn ad lib, op.19 (1803); 6 Requiem, 3 Libera me, op.20 (1804), Bsb; 13 arias, Terzetto, Bsb
Secular: song, private collection

INSTRUMENTAL

3 Str Qts, op.1, also as Sonatas, clavecin/pf, vn, va (Mannheim, 1782); 6 symphoniae, op.13 (1799); 12 Sonatas, org, op.15 (1800); 12 Sonatas, org (1803); 6 symphoniae, op.21 (1808)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BrookB; GerberL; GerberNL; FétisB; EitnerQ
H. Pfeifer: 'Das Theater am Jesuitengymnasium in Ellwangen', Ellwangen 764–1964, ed. V. Burr (Ellwangen, 1964), 534–82
E. Häussinger: 'Johann Michael [sic] Dreyer als Instrumentalkomponist', Ellwanger Jb, xxii (1967–8), 174–86
E. Häussinger: 'Johann Melchior Dreyer: Verzeichnis der gedruckten Kompositionen und ihrer Verwahrungsorte', Ellwanger Jb, xxiii (1969–70), 315–20
G. Grünsteudel, E. Michler and H. Ullrich: Johann Melchior Dreyer: ein ostschwäbischer Kirchenmusiker um 1800 (Nördlingen, 1996)

HERMANN ULLRICH

Dreyfus, George (b Wuppertal, 22 July 1928). Australian composer of German origin. After fleeing Nazi persecution in 1939, he and his family settled in Melbourne. He trained as a bassoonist and began a career as an orchestral musician, playing in theatre orchestras and in the Victorian (now Melbourne) SO (1953–64). His uneasy relationship with the Australian Broadcasting Commission (now the Australian Broadcasting Corporation), which administered the Victorian SO, and with Clive Douglas, one of the ABC's conductor-composer-administrators, is referred to in the ironic title of his overture for concert band, You're Remember'd Well, Clive Douglas! (1998). He began to establish a reputation as a composer with the fizzy velocity and Françaix-like neatness of the Woodwind Trio (1956) and with his song settings. Galgenlieder (1957), a cycle on poems by Christian Morgenstern, matches in style and abruptness the sometimes ruthless and macabre fancies of the texts. From Within Looking Out (1962), based on an Annamese street song, shows the influence of advanced European styles and cool jazz. In the opera Garni Sands (1965–6), he explored modernism further, drawing particularly on German Expressionism and Henze's operatic scoring.

Upon the opera's completion, Dreyfus turned his back on advanced idioms and decided in 1965 to become a freelance composer. His First Symphony (1967) is already aggressive in its traditionalism. At the same time, he developed a vein of self-lacerating humour and irreverent comedy that unified his musical output and his public persona to an extent unique among Australian composers. His theatre pieces moved towards fable, comedy and revue; his account of the rejection of the opera The Gilt-Edged Kid (1970) became a set piece of the surrealistically entertaining, often musically punctuated, monologues that constituted part of his public identity. During the 1970s and 80s, Dreyfus was busy with music for films, television and theatre. His exuberant adaptation of a traditional 19th-century song for the title theme of Rush (1974), a television goldrush adventure series, became popular on both radio and recording. Australian Aboriginal tradition entered his concert music with the Sextet (1971) for didjeridu and wind quintet, which maintains the independence of a rhythmicized didjeridu drone within the activity of Western wind instruments. He also used a didjeridu, an Italian zampogna and a Chinese suona in the instrumentation of Rathenau (1991–2), a large operatic score. Based on a German language libretto by Volker Elis Pilgrim, the opera uses simultaneously sung texts to invoke a theatrical meditation on the career of a German industrialist (a surrogate for Dreyfus's own father) who became too patriotic for the good of his own German-Jewish identity. With this work, and its successor, Die Marx Sisters (1994–5), Dreyfus returned to his origins without neglecting the traits of his adopted homeland.

WORKS

STAGE

Garni Sands (op, 2, F. Kellaway), 1965–6, Sydney, 1972; The Takeover (school musical, 1, Kellaway), 1969, Canberra, 1969; The Gilt-Edged Kid (op, 1, L. Strahan), 1970, Melbourne, 1976; The Lamentable Reign of Charles the Last (pantopera, 1, T. Robertson), 1975, Adelaide, 1976; The Sentimental Bloke (musical, 2, G. Blundell, after C.J. Dennis), 1985, Melbourne, 1985; Rathenau (op, prol, 1, V.E. Pilgrim), 1991–2, Kassel, 1993; Die Marx Sisters (op, 1, Pilgrim), 1994–5, Bielefeld, 1996

INSTRUMENTAL

Orch: The Adventures of Sebastian the Fox, nar, small/str orch, 1963; The Illusionist (R. Reid), ballet suite, 1965; Serenade, small orch, 1967; Sym. no.1, 1967; Jingles, 5 pieces, 1968; Peace, hp, str, 1969; Reflections in a Glass-House 'An Image of Captain James Cook' (Strahan), spkr, children's vv, marching band, orch, 1969; ... and more Jingles, 5 pieces, 1972; The Grand Aurora Australis Now Shown (Strahan), spkr, orch, 1973; Marion, hp, str, 1973; A Steam Train Passes, hp, pf, str, 1974; Rush, orch/(fl, orch)/str; Break of Day, suite, 1976; Hallelujah for Handel, timp, cymbal, str, 1976; Let the Balloon Go, 1976; Nellie's Theme, str, 1976; Power Without Glory, 1976; Sym. no.2, 1976; Lawson's Mates, small orch, 1978; Symphonie concertante, bn, vn, va, vc, str, 1978; Dimboola Water Music and Waltz, 1979; Mary Gilmore Goes to Paraguay, brass, str, perc, 1979; We Belong, 1979; Grand Ridge Road, suite, small orch, 1980; Folk Music, 1982; Tender Mercies, hn, str, 1982; Waterfront, 1983; German Teddy, sym., mand orch, 1984; Euroa Horray!, ov., concert band [after R. King]; Great Expectations, 1986; Larino, Safe Haven, fl/ob, str, 1990; Sound Sculptures, 1991 [from Rathenau]; Lighthouse, 1993; Love Your Animal, small orch, 1996; Aufschrei/Outcry, small orch, 1998; Mr Lewis Comes to Wuppertal, didjeridu, orch, 1998; You're Remember'd Well, Clive Douglas!, ov., concert band, 1998

Brass: Expo 70, 1969; Rush, 1974; Hallelujah for Handel, 1976; Lawson's Mates, 1978; Roaring Days, 1982; Tender Mercies, 1982; Tree of Liberty, 1985; Great Expectations, 1986; Salutation on Australia Day, brass, perc, 1993; Festmusik der Stadt Wuppertal, brass, org, 1998

Chbr and solo inst: Trio, fl, cl, bn, 1956; The Adventures of Sebastian the Fox, suite, various, 1963; The Seasons, fl, va, 2 perc, 1963; Ned Kelly Ballads, fl, vc/bn, gui, 1964; Nullabor Hideout, fl, vc/bn, gui, 1965; Wind Qnt, 1965; Stant litore puppes, org, 1967; Wind Qnt, 1968 [after J.-G. Noverre]; Sextet, didjeridu, wind qnt, 1971; Marion, fl, vc/bn, gui, 1973; Old Melbourne, bn, gui, 1973; Rush, various, 1974; Lawson's Mates, fl, vc/bn, gui, 1978; Kyrie and Agnus Dei, hn, pf, 1979 [from Australian Folk Mass]; Tender Mercies, (hn, pf)/(fl, vc/bn, gui), 1982; In Memoriam Raoul Wallenberg, suite, cl, pf, 1984; For 4 Bn, 1988; Song and Dance for Gabor, cl, taganing, db, 1988; Sonata, vn, va, 1989; Larino, Safe Haven, (2 ob, eng hn)/(fl, vc/bn, gui), 1990; Odyssey, bn, 1990; There is Something of Don Quixote in All of Us, gui, 1990; Homage à Victor Bruns, bn qt, 1994

VOCAL

Choral: Homage to Igor Stravinsky, 10vv, 1968; Song of the Maypole (cant., Kellaway), children's choruses, orch, 1968; Under the Gum Trees at Sunrise, anthem, 4 solo vv, 2 5-pt choruses, 1968; Ballad of the Drover (H. Lawson), tr vv, acc., 1975; Terrigal (D. Stewart), (2-pt mixed chorus, orch)/(tr vv, gui, db, kbd), 1977; An Australian Folk Mass, unison vv, orch, 1979; Celebration, female vv, orch, 1981; Pss c, cl, unison vv, orch, 1981; Visions (Bible), unison vv, orch, 1983; Charles Rasp (M. Sainisch), ballad, pop singer, children's vv, male vv, concert band, 1984; The Box Hill Gloria (D. Adams, cant.), pop singer, children's vv, mixed vv, pipe band, brass band, concert band, str, 1985; Lifestyle (R. Otzen), tr vv, 1988; The Song of Brother Sun (St Francis), tr vv, hp/kbd, 1988; Auscapes (Otzen), tr vv, 1990; Else (Pilgrim), Ct/A, boys' vv, men's vv, 1993; Praise (from Pss xlvii, lxxxi, cxix), tr vv, 1993; arrs., incl. Advance Australia Fair, Song of the Republic; see also ORCH [Reflections in a Glass-House, 1969]

Other vocal: Galgenlieder (C. Morgenstern), 7 poems, Bar, fl, cl, vn, bn, 1957; Songs Comic and Curious (anon., W. de la Mare, L. Carroll), Bar, wind qnt, 1959; Music in the Air (R. McCuaig), Bar, fl, va, perc, 1961; From Within Looking Out (anon.), S, fl, va, vc, vib, 1962; Ned Kelly Ballads (T. Burstall), folk singers, 4 hn, rhythm section, opt. str, 1964; Mo, music hall songs, Bar, str, cont, 1972; Ein Kaffeekonzert (Ger. texts), S, pf trio, 1977; 4 Italian Songs (trad.), S, pf, 1983; Heidelberg 1890, S, fl, perc, 1990

Principal publisher: Allans

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Grove6 (E. Wood) [incl. further bibliography]; GroveO (C. Symons)

K. Lucas: 'George Dreyfus's Symphony no.1', Music Now, i/2 (1969), 26–9

K. Lucas: 'Dreyfus and the Didjeridu', Music Maker, xciii/3 (1972), 8–9

K. Lucas: 'George Dreyfus's Garni Sands: a Forward Step for Australian Opera', SMA, vii (1973), 78–87

E. Dobson: 'George Dreyfus', Australian Composition in the Twentieth Century, ed. F. Callaway and D. Tunley (Melbourne, 1978), 126–35

G. Dreyfus and others: Being George – and liking it! Reflections on the Life and Work of George Dreyfus on his 70th Birthday (Melbourne, 1998)

ROGER COVELL

Dreyfus, Huguette (b Mulhouse, 30 Nov 1928). French harpsichordist and fortepianist. After graduation from the Paris Conservatoire in 1953, she studied the harpsichord with Ruggero Gerlin in Siena until 1957. She made her début in Paris in 1960 and has since been active as a soloist and chamber musician in Europe, North and South America and Japan. In addition to the 18th-century harpsichord repertory, she has performed many 20th-century works. Her numerous recordings include the complete harpsichord music of Rameau, as well as much Bach, Couperin and Scarlatti. On the fortepiano she has recorded sonatas by C.P.E. Bach and Haydn trios. Dreyfus has taught at the Schola Cantorum in Paris and at the Institut de Musicologie at the Sorbonne, as well as at a number of other French conservatories. She has also given summer courses and masterclasses in France, Britain, Canada, Germany, Brazil and Japan. Her playing is characterized by rhythmic vitality, technical brilliance and elegance of phrasing.

HOWARD SCHOTT

Dreyfus, Laurence (b Boston, 28 July 1952). American cellist, viol player and musicologist. He studied the cello with Leonard Rose at the Juilliard School (1969–70), then took the BA in political science at Yeshiva University. Pursuing graduate studies in musicology at Columbia University, he received the MA in 1975, the MPhil in 1976 and the PhD in 1980 (with Christoph Wolff). From 1979 to 1981 Dreyfus studied the viol with Wieland Kuijken at the Brussels Conservatory; he graduated with the diplome supérieur in 1981. Dreyfus began his teaching career in 1979 as a lecturer at the University of Wisconsin, Madison. He was a Mellon Fellow in the Humanities at Columbia University (1979–81), then held appointments at Washington University, St Louis (1981–2), Yale University (1982–9), the University of Chicago (1989–90), and Stanford University (1990–93). In 1992 he moved to King's College, University of London, initially in association with the Royal Academy of Music. He was made professor of performance studies in music in 1992, head of the King's College music department in 1995, and Thurston Dart Professor of Performance Studies in Music in 1996.

Dreyfus has written extensively on J.S. Bach, particularly on performing practice, analysis and criticism. His other academic studies include the examination of the Early Music movement, Wagner and Jewish Wagnerism, Mozart and Schenker. As a cellist and viol player, Dreyfus has made numerous solo and chamber recordings of Baroque music, including works by Bach, Marais, Rameau, Byrd and Purcell. He has participated in recitals, masterclasses and festivals throughout Europe and North America, often appearing with the harpsichordist Ketil Haugsand and with Phantasm, a consort of viols which he founded in 1994.

WRITINGS

'J.S. Bach's Experiment in Differentiated Accompaniment: Tacet Indications in the Organ Parts to the Vocal Works', JAMS, xxxii (1979), 321–34

Basso continuo Practice in the Vocal Works of J.S. Bach: a Study of the Original Performance Parts (diss., Columbia U., 1980)

'Early Music Defended against its Devotees: a Theory of Historical Performance in the Twentieth Century', MQ, lxix (1983), 297–322

'The Articulation of Genre in Bach's Instrumental Music', The Universal Bach: Philadelphia 1985, 10–38

'J.S. Bach's Concerto Ritornellos and the Question of Invention', MQ, lxxi (1985), 327–58

'"The Metaphorical Soloist": Concerted Organ Parts in Bach's Cantatas', EMc, xiii (1985), 237–47; repr. in J.S. Bach as Organist: his Instruments, Music, and Performance Practices, ed. G. Stauffer and E. May (Bloomington, IN, 1986), 172–89

'J.S. Bach and the Status of Genre: Problems of Style in the G-minor Sonata, BWV1029', JM, v (1987), 55–78

Bach's Continuo Group: Players and Practices in his Vocal Works (Cambridge, MA, 1987)

'The Hermeneutics of Lament: a Neglected Paradigm in a Mozartian Trauermusik', Music Analysis, x (1991), 329–43

'Mozart as Early Music: a Romantic Antidote', EMc, xx (1992), 297–309

'Matters of Kind: Genre and Subgenre in Bach's Well-Tempered Clavier, Book I', A Bach Tribute: Essays in Honor of William H. Scheide, ed. P. Brainard and P. Robinson (Kassel and Chapel Hill, NC, 1993), 101–19

'Hermann Levi's Shame and Parsifal's Guilt: a Critique of Essentialism in Biography and Criticism,' COJ, vi (1994), 125–45

Bach and the Patterns of Invention (Cambridge, MA, 1996)

